

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

DL
ASI
CRT

DL AS CR

Handwritten initials

A ✓ TREATISE

ON THE

TRIAL OF TITLE TO LAND;

INCLUDING

EJECTMENT; TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE; WRITS OF ENTRY, AND STATUTORY REMEDIES FOR THE RECOVERY OF REAL PROPERTY;

EMBRACING

Legal and Equitable Titles and Defenses.

BY

ARTHUR G. SEDGWICK

AND

FREDERICK S. WAIT.

SECOND EDITION,
REVISED AND ENLARGED.

NEW YORK:
BAKER, VOORHIS & CO., LAW PUBLISHERS, 66 NASSAU STREET.
1886.

Copyright, 1886,
By ARTHUR G. SEDGWICK AND FREDERICK S. WAIT.

WILLIS McDONALD & CO., PRINTERS,
25 Park Row, N. Y.

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION.

THIS treatise has been out of print for a year, and the authors have expended much time and labor upon the present revised and enlarged edition. Four new and important chapters on Plaintiff's Title and Evidence, Defenses, Boundaries, and Ejectment in Federal Courts, have been written, the thirty chapters in the first edition have been carefully revised, a large number of new sections have been added, and some twenty-six hundred cases cited and discussed in addition to the thirty-six hundred contained in the first edition. It is hoped that the labor bestowed upon this edition may render the book more useful to the profession.

The authors desire to express their obligations to Messrs. CHARLES M. DA COSTA and FREDERICK H. MAN, of the New York Bar, and to the Hon. WILLIAM P. BALLINGER, of the Galveston Bar, for important suggestions and criticisms, which have proved of great value in the preparation of this edition.

NEW YORK, January, 1886.

PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION.

THE principles and practice regulating remedies for the trial of title and recovery of possession of real property are in the main uniform in this country. This may be explained, historically, by the fact that in most of our States the existing statutory remedies are based upon the common law action of ejectment. The system of real actions is practically extinct in America, excepting in parts of New England. It may be stated generally that our modern remedies constitute a single general system of procedure, disguised under a variety of names.

In the United States a number of causes have contributed to produce an immense amount of litigation in connection with titles to real property. Particularly in the Western States, where the recent settlement of the country and the advance of emigration produces continual changes in possession and ownership, the courts have been, and still are, continually occupied with controversies of this nature, in which a system partly derived from feudal times has to be applied under novel circumstances and conditions. Almost every volume of reports contains a considerable number of actions to try title, and we have found ourselves, in the preparation of this treatise, embarrassed by the abundance of authorities.

In the following pages the authors have endeavored, while making the citation of cases as complete as possible, to discuss, whenever occasion offered, the principles of law underlying them—principles which, in some of the newer States, are occasionally obscured or lost sight of.

Simplicity, and convenience for purposes of reference, have been aimed at in the plan of the book. The history of ejectment, of real actions, and of trespass to try title, has been traced; the nature of the interests and character of the wrongs which will support actions for the trial of title to land, or which are insufficient for that purpose, have been considered; and the forms of action which cannot be substituted for remedies in the nature of ejectment discussed.

The aim of the authors has been to present the questions involved in the action to try title in its various stages; the question of parties; the attorney's authority to institute the action; the complaint and answer (embracing a discussion of the rules which govern in pleading and asserting titles or defenses in the modern procedure); the description; the venue; the verdict; the effect of, and rights secured by, the judgment; and the practice under the writ of possession. To this have been added chapters on statutory new trials, provisional remedies, mesne profits, damages, and improvements.

The treatise is not confined, however, to a consideration of the practice governing actions in the nature of ejectment, as any proper discussion of these remedies necessarily involves a consideration of the titles of the different classes of owners of real property—e. g., the rights of co-tenants, vendor and vendee, mortgagee and mortgagor, landlord and tenant, and municipal corporations. Title by possession and adverse possession have been also discussed, and the vexed question of color of title considered at length; and in this branch of the work an attempt has been made, which the authors venture to hope may prove of some value, to reconcile the conflict in the decisions, and when this was impossible, to point out the principles which, as it seems to them, ought to govern. In this part of the work they have received invaluable assistance from Mr. FRANCIS H. OLMSTED, of the New York Bar.

Of the value of the work the authors must leave the profession to judge, and only desire to add that the preparation of the treatise has involved an amount of time and labor far beyond their original expectations.

They beg to acknowledge the kindness of professional friends in different States, in furnishing suggestions and aid during the progress of the work, especially the Hon. WILLIAM P. BALLINGER, of the Galveston Bar.

NEW YORK, October, 1882.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| HISTORY OF THE ACTION OF EJECTMENT, | 1 |

CHAPTER II.

| | |
|---|----|
| SKETCH OF REAL ACTIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.— | |
| TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE, | 33 |

CHAPTER III.

| | |
|--|----|
| NATURE OF THE RIGHTS UPON WHICH ACTIONS TO TRY | |
| TITLE ARE FOUNDED.—INTERESTS FOR WHICH EJECT- | |
| MENT LIES.—WRONGS TO REAL PROPERTY, | 48 |

CHAPTER IV.

| | |
|---|----|
| INTERESTS NOT RECOVERABLE IN EJECTMENT, | 82 |
|---|----|

CHAPTER V.

| | |
|---|----|
| RELIEF PECULIAR TO EJECTMENT NOT TO BE HAD IN | |
| OTHER ACTIONS, | 94 |

CHAPTER VI.

| | |
|------------------------------|-----|
| PARTIES PLAINTIFF, | 113 |
|------------------------------|-----|

CHAPTER VII.

| | |
|------------------------------|-----|
| PARTIES DEFENDANT, | 152 |
|------------------------------|-----|

CHAPTER VIII.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| EJECTMENT BY MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS FOR STREETS AND PUBLIC PLACES, | 185 |

CHAPTER IX.

| | |
|--|-----|
| EJECTMENT BETWEEN CO-TENANTS AND BY CO-TENANTS AGAINST THIRD PARTIES, | 191 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER X.

| | |
|--|-----|
| EJECTMENT BETWEEN VENDOR AND VENDEE, | 224 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XI.

| | |
|--|-----|
| EJECTMENT BETWEEN MORTGAGEE AND MORTGAGOR, | 238 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XII.

| | |
|--|-----|
| EJECTMENT BETWEEN LANDLORD AND TENANT, | 251 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XIII.

| | |
|--|-----|
| NOTICE TO QUIT AND DEMAND OF POSSESSION, | 268 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XIV.

| | |
|--|-----|
| ATTORNEY'S AUTHORITY TO PROCEED, | 293 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XV.

| | |
|-----------------------------|-----|
| OF THE COMPLAINT, | 298 |
|-----------------------------|-----|

CHAPTER XVI.

| | |
|--|-----|
| HOW THE LANDS ARE TO BE DESCRIBED, | 320 |
|--|-----|

CHAPTER XVII.

| | |
|--|-----|
| VENUE.—LOCAL AND TRANSITORY ACTIONS, | 330 |
|--|-----|

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ix

CHAPTER XVIII.

| | PAGE |
|---|--------------|
| OF THE PLEA OR ANSWER, | . 340 |

CHAPTER XIX.

| | |
|----------------------------------|--------------|
| OF THE VERDICT, | . 361 |
|----------------------------------|--------------|

CHAPTER XX.

| | |
|-----------------------------------|--------------|
| OF THE JUDGMENT, | . 369 |
|-----------------------------------|--------------|

CHAPTER XXI.

| | |
|--------------------------------------|--------------|
| WRIT OF POSSESSION, | . 398 |
|--------------------------------------|--------------|

CHAPTER XXII.

| | |
|--|--------------|
| STATUTORY NEW TRIALS, OR SECOND ACTIONS TO TRY TITLE, | . 417 |
|--|--------------|

CHAPTER XXIII.

| | |
|---|--------------|
| PROVISIONAL REMEDIES AND ANCILLARY RELIEF IN AC- TIONS TO TRY TITLE, | . 440 |
|---|--------------|

CHAPTER XXIV.

| | |
|---|--------------|
| TWO ACTIONS PENDING FOR THE SAME LAND.—CONSOLI- DATION OF EJECTMENTS.—JOINDER OF LEGAL AND EQUITABLE ACTIONS.—MISJOINDER OF ACTIONS—LIS PENDENS, | . 458 |
|---|--------------|

CHAPTER XXV.

| | |
|---|--------------|
| MESNE PROFITS AND DAMAGES, | . 470 |
|---|--------------|

CHAPTER XXVI.

| | |
|--------------------------------|--------------|
| IMPROVEMENTS, | . 517 |
|--------------------------------|--------------|

CHAPTER XXVII.

| | |
|--------------------|-------------|
| POSSESSION, | PAGE |
| | 545 |

CHAPTER XXVIII.

| | |
|--|------------|
| ADVERSE POSSESSION UNDER STATUTES OF LIMITATIONS, | 558 |
|--|------------|

CHAPTER XXIX.

| | |
|-----------------------------------|------------|
| INTENTION.—CLAIM OF RIGHT, | 614 |
|-----------------------------------|------------|

CHAPTER XXX.

| | |
|------------------------|------------|
| COLOR OF TITLE, | 628 |
|------------------------|------------|

CHAPTER XXXI.

| | |
|--|------------|
| PLAINTIFF'S TITLE AND EVIDENCE, | 664 |
|--|------------|

CHAPTER XXXII.

| | |
|------------------|------------|
| DEFENSES, | 698 |
|------------------|------------|

CHAPTER XXXIII.

| | |
|--------------------|------------|
| BOUNDARIES, | 719 |
|--------------------|------------|

CHAPTER XXXIV.

| | |
|-------------------------------------|------------|
| EJECTMENT IN FEDERAL COURTS, | 728 |
|-------------------------------------|------------|

| | |
|---------------|------------|
| INDEX, | 760 |
|---------------|------------|

TABLE OF CASES.

[References are to pages.]

-
-
- | | |
|--|--|
| Abbey v. Merrick, 520, 529. Abbott v. Abbott, 724. v. Cromartie, 259. v. Pratt, 133. Abeel v. Van Gelder, 155, 158, 181, 182, 621, 687. Abell v. Douglass, 383. Abercrombie v. Baldwin, 204, 580, 632. Aborn v. Smith, 725. Ackley v. Tarbox, 116. Acton v. Dooley, 727. Adair v. Adair, 225. Adam v. Ames Iron Co. 97, 199. v. Briggs Iron Co. 102. v. Inhabitants of Bristol, 516. v. Kerr, 693. Adams v. Alkire, 723. v. Brown, 248. v. Copper Co. 267. v. Emerson, 78. v. Frothingham, 365, 721. v. Goose, 28. v. McDonald, 296. v. Saratoga & W. R. R. Co. 72. v. Swansea, 688. v. Wilson, 423. v. Woods, 447. Addison v. Crow, 703. v. Dawson, 131. v. Otway, 25. Adkins v. Hudson, 505. Adriance v. Sanders, 118. Agate v. Lowenbein, 262. Agos v. Williams, 137. Agnew v. McElroy, 371. Agricultural Bank v. Rice, 735. Aguirre v. Alexander, 211. Ahern v. White, 239. Ahl v. Johnson, 237. Ah Lee, in re, 633. Aiken v. Benedict, 49, 89, 388. Ainslie v. Mayor, &c., of N. Y., 393, 467. Ainsworth v. Ritt, 68. Akerly v. Vilas, 228. Alabama v. Georgia, 749. Albergottie v. Chaplin, 97. Albertson v. Reding, 153. Alcorn v. Morgan, 272. | Alden v. Grove, 113. Alden's Case, 14. Alderson v. Miller, 257, 258. Aldrich v. Aldrich, 696. Alexander v. Ellison, 540. v. Gilliam, 46, 220. v. Herr, 493, 494. v. Kennedy, 203. v. Polk, 580, 599. v. Stewart, 599. v. Wheeler, 343. Alford v. Dewin, 218, 219. v. Vickery, 290. Allegheny Co. v. Gibson, 89. Alleley v. Colley, 297. Allen v. Bone, 293. v. Bowen, 696. v. Brown, 188. v. Chatfield, 254. v. City of Buffalo, 87. v. Davison, 427. v. Douglass, 351. v. Dunlap, 153, 154, 156. v. Gibson, 220. v. Green, 293. v. Hall, 192, 199, 202. v. Hawley, 143. v. Holding, 232. v. Holton, 586, 627. v. Jaquish, 272, 273, 274. v. Kellam, 660, 713. v. Morse, 699. v. Ormond, 83. v. Poole, 210. v. Ranson, 130. v. Rivington, 548. v. Smith, 502. v. Suseng, 548. v. Utica, I. & E. R. R. Co. 391. Allie v. Schmitz, 308, 387. Allin v. Robinson, 762. Allison v. C. & N. W. R. Co. 297. v. Elder, 350. Almond v. Bonnell, 306. Almony v. Hicks, 100. Alsop v. Peck, 496. Alston v. Collins, 610. v. Wingfield, 226, 508. |
|--|--|

- Altemas v. Campbell, 587.
 Altes v. Hinkle, 411, 509.
 Alton (City of) v. Illinois Transp. Co. 610.
 Alwood v. Mansfield, 258.
 American Co. v. Bradford, 357.
 Ins. Co. v. Oakley, 298.
 Union Tel. Co. v. Middleton, 380, 381, 382, 397.
 Ames v. Beckley, 680.
 v. Harper, 158.
 v. Hilton, 499.
 Amesti v. Castro, 23, 380, 391.
 Ammidown v. Granite Bank, 55.
 Amondson v. Severson, 55.
 Anderson ads. Darby, 128, 255.
 v. Fisk, 348, 356.
 v. Kent, 484.
 v. Smith, 153, 257, 668.
 v. Talbot, 100.
 Andrews v. Brown, 144.
 v. Hooper, 358, 359.
 v. Senter, 138.
 v. Whittingham, 59.
 Angel v. Smith, 175.
 Angier v. Agnew, 240.
 Annan v. Baker, 662.
 v. Merritt, 234.
 Anonymous (2 Abb. N. C. 56), 139.
 (2 B. & Dal. 95), 80.
 (1 Keble, 89), 297.
 (8 Leon. 210), 56, 821.
 (6 Mod. 16), 293.
 (7 Mod. 39), 194.
 (12 Mod. 211), 20.
 (1 Salk. 86), 293, 297.
 (1 Salk. 260), 25, 359.
 (2 Sid. 155), 400.
 Ansonia Brass, &c., Co. v. Babbitt, 91, 411.
 Apalachicola (City of) v. Apalachicola Land Co. 188, 484, 513.
 Apgar v. Christophers, 748.
 Applegarth v. Russell, 400.
 Argent v. Darrell, 417.
 Argotsinger v. Vines, 553.
 Arlington Case, 168.
 Armstrong v. City of St. Louis, 92, 174.
 v. DuBois, 55.
 v. Hinds, 306, 476, 482.
 v. Jackson, 541, 673.
 v. Morrill, 580, 582, 583, 596, 610.
 (d. Tinker) v. Peirce, 733.
 v. Risteau, 609.
 v. Wheeler, 260.
 v. Wilkinson, 288.
 Arnold v. Arnold, 370, 420.
 v. Stevens, 667.
 v. Styles, 338.
 Arnot v. Beadle, 199.
 Arnsby v. Woodward, 266.
 Arrington v. Liscom, 565.
 Arundel v. Springer, 508, 516.
 Ash v. McGill, 414.
 Asher v. Mitchell, 77.
 v. Whitlock, 548.
 Ashford v. Thornton, 3.
 Ashley v. Ashley, 643.
 Askew v. Patterson, 704.
 Aslin v. Parkin, 5, 27, 467, 472, 483, 502, 507.
 Aspinwall v. Balch, 88.
 Astor v. Hoyt, 240.
 Atcheson v. Broadhead, 243.
 Atherton v. Fowler, 510.
 Atkins v. Hendree, 62.
 v. Lewis, 700.
 Atkinson v. Morrissy, 539.
 v. Patterson, 686, 663.
 Atkison v. Henry, 484.
 Atlantic & P. Tel. Co. v. Balto. & O. R. R.
 Co. 330.
 Attorney General v. Balliol College, 522.
 v. Earl of Craven, 536.
 v. Hallett, 163.
 v. Kerr, 531.
 v. Parkhurst, 181.
 Attwood v. Fricot, 646, 650.
 Atwell v. McLure, 298.
 Atwood v. Atwood, 322.
 v. Bearss, 556.
 v. Weems, 168.
 Audley (Lord) v. Pollard, 17.
 Aurand v. Wilt, 534.
 Austin v. Ahearne, 257.
 v. Bailey, 132, 133, 595.
 v. Barrett, 210, 601.
 v. Cambridgeport Parish, 139.
 v. Goodrich, 301.
 v. Holt, 575, 584, 615.
 v. Rust, 576.
 v. Rutland R. R. Co. 68, 597.
 v. Schluyter, 309.
 v. Snow, 107.
 v. Stevens, 530.
 v. Wilson, 606.
 Avent v. Hord, 475, 512.
 v. Read, 44.
 Averett v. Brady, 494, 504.
 Averill v. Wilson, 716.
 Avery v. Hall, 202.
 Aycock v. Railroad, 697.
 Ayer v. Phillips, 72, 387.
 Ayers v. Watson, 723.
 Ayres v. Bensley, 699.
 v. Duprey, 349.
 v. McConnel, 299.
 Babcock v. Hoey, 606.
 v. Lamb, 73.
 Baca v. Ramos, 223.
 Backus v. Chapman, 540.
 Badeau v. Niles, 312.
 Bader v. Zeise, 626.
 Bagley v. Morrill, 724.
 Bagnell v. Broderick, 740, 744, 747.
 Bagot v. Williams, 370.

- Bailey v. Bailey, 153.
 v. Briggs, 95, 176.
 v. Carleton, 637.
 v. Fairplay, 375, 502.
 v. Hilton, 133.
 v. Hoppin, 715.
 v. Ryder, 396.
 v. Stewart, 133.
 Bailiffs, &c., of Litchfield v. Slater, 368.
 Bailly v. Trammell, 195.
 Bain v. Matteson, 136.
 Bainbrigge v. Baddeley, 441.
 Bains v. Perry, 513.
 Bakeman v. Talbot, 55.
 Baker v. Chastang, 307.
 v. Gittings, 227, 283.
 v. Hale, 594, 596.
 v. Howell, 104.
 v. Hunt, 314.
 v. Nall, 145.
 v. Ramey, 227.
 v. Roe, 55.
 v. Swan, 566, 630, 641, 652.
 v. Whiting, 193.
 Balbec v. Donaldson, 301.
 Balch v. Jones, 193.
 Balderidge v. Paterson, 30.
 Baldwin v. Brown, 726.
 v. Simpson, 558.
 v. Stark, 755.
 v. York, 450.
 Ball v. Cullimore, 276.
 v. Herbert, 79.
 v. Palmer, 203.
 v. Wyeth, 612.
 Ballance v. Flood, 610.
 Ballard v. Perry, 761.
 Balmain v. Shore, 223.
 Balto. Chem. Mfg. Co. v. Dobbin, 667.
 Balto. & O. R. R. Co. v. Chase, 67.
 v. Pittsburg, W. & Ky. R. R. Co.
 391.
 Bancroft v. Wardwell, 479.
 v. White, 547.
 Banister v. Scott, 503.
 Bank v. Robo, 362.
 v. Bridges, 395.
 v. Carrollton R. R. Co. 154.
 Bank of America v. Banks, 715.
 Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 124.
 Bank of Chenango v. Cox, 449.
 Bank of the Commonwealth v. Hopkins, 390.
 Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 715.
 Banker v. Banker, 425.
 Banks v. Carter, 291, 292.
 v. Ogden, 722.
 v. Parker, 407.
 Bannister v. Bull, 230.
 Banyer v. Empie, 153, 155, 303.
 Barbee v. Stinnett, 425.
 Barclay v. Howell, 73, 322, 325.
 v. Smith, 565.
 Barclay v. Yeomans, 305.
 Bard v. Nevin, 479.
 Bargamin v. Clarke, 605.
 Barger v. Hobbs, 386, 545, 637, 661.
 Barges v. Hogg, 148.
 Barker v. Bates, 722.
 v. Bell, 606.
 v. Dale, 61.
 v. Salmon, 40.
 v. Walbridge, 235.
 Barlow v. Bell, 527.
 Barnard v. Hart, 474.
 Barnes v. Peterson, 321.
 v. Wood, 234.
 Barney v. Baltimore City, 154, 761.
 v. Dolph, 747.
 v. Keokuk, 64, 188.
 Barnitz v. Casey, 194, 368.
 Barnstable (Inhabs.) v. Thacher, 548.
 Baron v. Abeel, 298, 483, 502, 507.
 Barr v. Gratz, 201, 610.
 Barret v. Coburn, 195.
 Barrett v. Allegheny Nat. Bank, 564.
 v. Cocke, 524.
 v. French, 220.
 v. Watts, 334.
 Barrow v. Nave, 213.
 Barrows v. Kindred, 395, 428, 436, 460, 729, 730, 731.
 Barrs v. Jackson, 370.
 Barry v. Sonoma Co. 174.
 Barstow v. Adams, 148.
 Bartholomew v. Edwards, 547.
 v. Lyon, 127.
 Bartlett v. Borden, 241, 246.
 v. Emerson, 683.
 v. Judd, 350.
 v. Secor, 347.
 Bartling v. Brasuhn, 556.
 Barton v. Erickson, 680.
 v. Hampshire, 84.
 v. Land Co. 522.
 v. Morris, 715.
 Barton Coal Co. v. Cox, 497, 504.
 Barwick v. Fenwood, 25.
 v. Thompson, 253, 254.
 v. Wood, 681.
 Basey v. Gallagher, 361.
 Bass v. Firmen, 428.
 v. Gilliland, 234.
 v. Mitchell, 46.
 v. Sevier, 691.
 Batchelder v. Moore, 403.
 Bates v. Austin, 281.
 v. Campbell, 546.
 v. Conrow, 259.
 v. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. 67.
 v. Ray, 333.
 v. Rosekrans, 350, 351, 352.
 v. Sparrell, 8.
 Bath (Comms.) v. Boyd, 185, 188.
 (Earl of) v. Sherwin, 24.

- Batterton v. Yoakum, 140.
 Battin v. Bigelow, 80, 472.
 Baucum v. George, 604, 629.
 Baugh v. Baugh, 372.
 Baumgarten v. Smith, 227.
 Baxter v. Drake, 440.
 v. Willey, 333.
 Bayard v. Colefax, 160, 405, 784.
 v. Inglis, 482.
 Bay County v. Bradley, 190.
 Baze v. Arper, 418.
 Bazemore v. Davis, 139, 539, 601.
 Beach v. Beach, 145.
 v. Sutton, 645.
 Beal v. Gordon, 723, 724.
 v. Harmon, 140.
 Beam v. Scroggin, 589.
 Bean v. Bachelder, 618.
 Bear v. Whisler, 137.
 Beard v. Federy, 800, 817, 822, 825, 828, 476, 744, 756, 757, 759.
 v. Hall, 112.
 Beardslee v. Beardslee, 138.
 v. French, 611.
 Beardsley v. Torrey, 762.
 Beatty v. Gregory, 85.
 v. Mason, 570.
 Beaupland v. McKeen, 575, 577.
 Bech v. Ruggles, 462.
 Becker v. Howard, 670.
 v. Sauter, 433.
 Beckley v. Newcomb, 176.
 Beckmann v. Henn, 314.
 Becnel v. Becnel, 539.
 Bedell v. Constable, 128.
 v. Shaw, 153, 523, 528, 529, 599,
 603, 615, 616.
 Bedford v. McElherron, 269, 272, 275.
 Beebe v. Elliott, 386, 388.
 Beecher v. Crouse, 123, 127.
 v. Wetherby, 123, 150, 665.
 Begg v. Begg, 341.
 Belfour v. Davis, 254, 256, 260.
 Bell v. Barnet, 506, 527.
 v. Coats, 660, 663.
 v. Denson, 573, 574, 582, 593.
 v. Longworth, 630, 645.
 v. Medford, 317, 491.
 Bellas v. Houtz, 330, 333.
 Bellinger v. Martindale, 430, 433.
 Bellis v. Bellis, 610.
 Bellows v. Copp, 523.
 v. Jewell, 662.
 Bender v. Pitzer, 687.
 Bendernagle v. Cocks, 370, 458.
 Benedict v. Gilman, 522, 539.
 Benefiel v. Aughe, 697.
 Benfey v. Congdon, 279.
 Benick v. Bowman, 715.
 Benner v. Benner, 427.
 Bennet v. Bullock, 201, 487.
 v. Jenkins, 501.
 Bennet v. Morris, 405.
 Bennett v. Clemence, 203.
 v. Criawell, 151.
 v. Horr, 700.
 v. Hunter, 168.
 v. Leach, 393.
 v. Robinson, 245.
 v. Walker, 123, 174.
 Bennington v. Goodtitle, 321.
 Benson v. Matadord, 475.
 v. Stewart, 225, 594, 607.
 Bentley v. Brownson, 387.
 Berkeley Peerage Case, 687, 689.
 Bernal v. Gleim, 630, 662.
 Bernard v. Elder, 341, 343.
 Bernstein v. Humes, 343, 344.
 Berridge v. Ward, 722.
 Berry v. Donley, 525.
 v. Keen, 444.
 v. Whitaker, 319.
 v. Wright, 724.
 Berry v. Goodman's Case, 722.
 Berthold v. Fox, 193.
 Bertles v. Nunan, 216.
 Bertram v. Cook, 253, 256.
 Best v. Allen, 499.
 v. Polk, 744.
 Bethell v. McCool, 194.
 Betz v. Mullin, 52, 153.
 Beverley v. Fogg, 325.
 Beverly v. Burke, 631, 659.
 Bickel v. Polk, 79.
 Bigelow v. Finch, 716.
 v. Forrest, 763.
 v. Jones, 104, 475.
 v. Winsor, 370.
 Biggers v. Bird, 245.
 Bigler v. Morgan, 229.
 Big Mountain Imp. Co.'s Appeal, 705.
 Billings v. Hall, 518, 542.
 Billington v. Welsh, 556.
 Binda v. Benbow, 181.
 Bindover v. Sindercombe, 57, 320, 321.
 Bingham v. Barley, 126.
 Binney v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. 299.
 Birch v. Wright, 239.
 Birchman v. Noright, 124.
 Bird v. Decker, 328.
 v. Defonvielle, 288.
 v. Montgomery, 425.
 v. Snell, 368.
 Birmingham Iron Foundry v. Hatfield, 337.
 Biebee v. Evans, 766.
 Bishop v. Lalouette, 253.
 Bissell v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co. 722.
 v. Penrose, 747.
 Bitting v. Ten Eyck, 441.
 Bixby v. Bent, 715.
 Black, Ex parte, 405.
 v. Black, 144.
 v. Hepburne, 52, 81, 82, 83, 84.

- Black v. Tricker, 341.
 Blackburn v. Crawfords, 690.
 Blackford v. Loveridge, 428, 427.
 Blackmore v. Gregg, 198.
 Blackwell v. Patton, 299.
 Blair v. Bartlett, 370.
 v. Blair, 237.
 v. Claxton, 350, 356.
 v. Pathkiller, 411, 415.
 v. Wallace, 108.
 Blake v. Dennett, 343.
 v. Foster, 259.
 v. Freeman, 330, 338.
 v. Ham, 72.
 v. National Banks, 121.
 v. Sawin, 175, 177.
 v. Tucker, 300, 715.
 Blakeney v. Ferguson, 202, 253, 254.
 Blanchard v. Brown, 379, 382, 486, 729.
 v. Chapman, 618.
 v. Powers, 112.
 Blauvelt v. Smith, 400.
 Bledsoe v. Little, 564.
 v. Simms, 143, 348, 546.
 Blessing v. Edmonson, 422.
 Blight v. Ewing, 475, 489.
 v. Rochester, 280, 716.
 Bliss v. Johnson, 50, 568.
 Bloodworth v. Stevens, 489.
 Bloomer v. Sturges, 372.
 Bloomstein v. Clee, 710.
 Blount v. Hornibla, 148.
 Blum v. Robertson, 277, 352.
 Blundell v. Catterall, 79.
 Blunt v. Aikin, 546.
 Boardman v. Beckwith, 311.
 v. Reed, 681, 744.
 Boatner v. Ventress, 744.
 Boatright v. Porter, 673.
 Bobb v. Woodward, 668.
 Bockes v. Lansing, 104, 106, 108, 109, 318, 464, 474, 475, 480, 485.
 Bodley v. Gaither, 541.
 Bogardus v. Parker, 354.
 Bogey v. Shute, 451.
 Boggess v. Meredith, 197, 200.
 Boggess v. Commonwealth, 79.
 v. Merced Min. Co. 710, 711, 744.
 Bogie v. Bogie, 137, 139.
 Bogue v. Bigelow, 301.
 v. Williams, 556.
 Bohall v. Diller, 228.
 Boland v. Gillett, 433.
 Bolard v. Mason, 389.
 Bolas v. Cohen, 159.
 v. Smith, 393.
 Rolling v. Lersner, 494, 501.
 v. Mayor. &c. 72, 73.
 v. Teel, 115.
 Bolton v. Hamilton, 207.
 v. Landers, 281.
 Bomberger v. Turner, 522.
 Boner v. Juner, 222.
 Bonithon v. Hockmore, 248.
 Bonner v. Greenlee, 158.
 v. Proprietors of Kennebeck Purchase, 97.
 v. Wiggins, 497, 517, 548.
 Bonsall v. McKay, 276, 499.
 Boogher v. Neece, 566.
 Bool v. Mix, 126.
 Boone v. Armstrong, 715.
 Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 67, 102, 319.
 Booth v. Adams, 202.
 v. Clark, 150, 396.
 v. Goodwin, 124.
 v. Van Arsdale, 536.
 Borland v. Box, 257.
 Bornheimer v. Baldwin, 209.
 Borough of Chambersburg v. Manko, 190.
 Harrisburg v. Crangle, 367.
 Borrets v. Turner, 610.
 Boskowitz v. Davis, 211.
 Bost v. Setzer, 556.
 Boston (City of) v. Richardson, 720, 721, 723.
 Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 683, 684, 692.
 Boston & W. R. R. Co. v. Sparhawk, 715, 726.
 Boswell v. Otis, 396.
 Bottorff v. Wise, 317, 476, 497.
 Botts v. Shields, 125, 375, 390.
 Boudette v. Pierce, 274, 275.
 Boulo v. New Orleans, M. & T.R.R.Co. 608.
 Bowdish v. Dubuque, 253.
 Bowen v. Guild, 574, 588, 592.
 v. Preston, 192, 348.
 Bowers v. Keesecker, 231.
 v. School Com'rs, 150.
 v. Smith, 95.
 Bowie v. Brahe, 91, 411.
 Bowman v. McLaughlin, 698.
 v. Wathen, 86.
 Bowne v. Potter, 230.
 Boyd v. Beck, 606.
 v. Cowan, 477.
 v. Dowie, 725.
 v. Olvey, 147.
 Boylan aka Meeker, 678.
 Boyle v. Zacharie, 732.
 Boynton v. Bodwell, 287, 288.
 Boyreau v. Campbell, 547, 762.
 Bozeman v. Browning, 332.
 Bracken v. Cooper, 211.
 v. Jones, 569.
 v. Preston, 104.
 Brackett v. Persons Unknown, 637.
 Bradbury v. Cony, 90.
 Bradford v. Bradford, 372, 375.
 v. Cressey, 722.
 Bradley v. Ewart, 670.
 v. Harkness, 97.
 v. McDaniel, 181, 475, 484, 485.
 v. West, 566, 568, 610, 615, 649, 651.

- Bradshaw v. Emory, 546.
 Bradstreet, Ex parte, 759.
 v. Huntington, 205, 231, 567.
 v. Supervisors, 148.
 Brady v. Hennion, 90.
 v. Huff, 633, 639, 640, 649.
 v. Weeks, 114.
 Brainard v. Boston & N. Y. Cent. R. R.
 Co. 722.
 Braintree v. Battles, 211.
 Brake v. Stewart, 326.
 Bramble v. Kingsbury, 727.
 Brandt v. Ogden, 600.
 Branson v. Wirth, 741, 745.
 Brant v. Va. Coal & Iron Co. 710, 712.
 Bratton v. Mitchell, 142, 341.
 Bray v. Marshall, 718.
 Breading v. Blocher, 415.
 Breed v. Osborne, 306.
 Breeding v. Stamper, 710.
 Breit v. Yeaton, 391, 529.
 Bresee v. Stiles, 308.
 Brevoort v. Brevoort, 391.
 Brewer v. Beckwith, 502.
 v. Boston & W. R. R. Co. 726.
 v. Browne, 223.
 Brewster v. Buckholts, 473, 490.
 Bride v. Watt, 663.
 Bridgeport Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 394.
 Bridger v. Pierson, 394.
 Bridges v. Cundiff, 46, 308, 309, 310.
 Bridgewater v. Brookfield, 134.
 Brigade v. Short, 28.
 Briggs v. French, 762.
 v. Light Boats, 163.
 v. Prosser, 225, 663.
 v. Wells, 386.
 Bright v. Boyd, 514, 520, 522, 523, 527, 529, 533, 541.
 Brimmer v. Prop'rs of Long Wharf, 610, 649.
 Brine v. Insurance Co. 333.
 Brinkerhoff v. Brinkerhoff, 358.
 Brinkley v. Brinkley, 372.
 Brinkman v. Jones, 241.
 Bristoe v. Evans, 523, 530.
 Bristol v. Carroll Co. 572.
 Brittin v. Handy, 211, 212, 214.
 Britton v. Thornton, 436.
 Broadwell v. Phillips, 715.
 Brobat v. Brock, 241, 250.
 Broderick Will Case, 100, 133.
 Broiestedt v. South Side R. R. Co. 99, 102, 104, 109, 110, 118, 383, 464.
 Brolaskey v. McClain, 583, 589, 620.
 Brondage v. Warner, 90.
 Bronson v. Adams, 613.
 v. Paynter, 132.
 Brooke v. Bridges, 507.
 Brookes (d. Mence) v. Baldwyn, 411.
 Brookhaven (Trustees) v. Strong, 79.
 Brookings v. Woodin, 546.
 Brooklyn (City of), Matter of, 64.
 Brooklyn Park Com'rs v. Armstrong, 706.
 Brooks v. Brooks, 130.
 v. Bruyn, 632, 651.
 Broome v. Beers, 107.
 Brothers v. Hurdle, 411, 510.
 Broughton v. Broughton, 326.
 Brown v. Anderson, 626.
 v. Bigley, 297.
 v. Bowen, 713.
 v. Brackett, 156.
 v. Bragg, 253.
 v. Brown, 680, 681.
 v. Caldwell, 510.
 v. Chadwick, 60, 85.
 v. Clifford, 244.
 v. Coble, 465.
 v. Cockerell, 622, 625, 626.
 v. Colson, 132, 503.
 v. Crim, 430, 433.
 v. Crump, 261.
 v. Galley, 72.
 v. Galloway, 485, 492.
 v. Homan, 209, 211.
 v. Huger, 166, 167.
 v. Keller, 281.
 v. Leete, 627.
 v. Leigh, 109.
 v. Mayor, &c. 372.
 v. McCloud, 136, 489.
 v. Metz, 301.
 v. Miltimore, 344.
 v. Rose, 573, 578.
 v. Smith, 250, 681.
 v. South Western R. R. Co. 500.
 v. State, 119.
 v. Strickland, 134.
 v. Supervisors, 607.
 v. Volkening, 556.
 v. Warren, 220.
 v. Wells, 657, 662.
 Browne v. Kennedy, 63.
 Browning v. Estes, 224.
 Brownsville v. Cavazos, 22, 423, 429.
 Bruce v. Kelly, 454.
 Bruck v. Tucker, 313, 341, 352.
 Bruckner v. Lawrence, 723.
 Bruckshaw v. Hopkins, 334.
 Bruen v. Hone, 371.
 Brumagin v. Bradshaw, 574, 580, 615, 620.
 Brumbalo v. Baxter, 700.
 Brundred v. Walker, 715.
 Brush v. Cook, 393.
 v. Mullen, 454.
 Bryan v. Atwater, 617, 619.
 v. Averett, 487.
 v. Forsyth, 747.
 v. Manning, 315.
 Bryce v. Lorillard F. I. Co. 351.
 Buchan v. Sumner, 223.
 Buchanan v. Alexander, 164.
 v. King, 209, 600, 602.
 v. Streper, 49, 304.

- Bucher v. Carroll, 422, 430.
 Buck v. Fischer, 312.
 v. Squiers, 131, 132, 133, 686, 644.
 Buckley v. Buckley, 144, 223.
 v. Taggart, 630.
 Bucknam v. Bucknam, 722.
 Budd v. Bingham, 49, 826, 465.
 v. Walker, 512.
 Buell v. Irwin, 359.
 Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. R. Co. v. Stigeler, 724.
 Bufford v. Holliman, 132.
 Buhne v. Chism, 669.
 Bullen v. Arnold, 703.
 Bullion Mining Co. v. Crossus Gold & S.
 M. Co. 62, 219.
 Bullock v. Wilson, 492.
 Bunce v. Gallagher, 102, 115, 315.
 Bunge v. Koop, 302.
 Bunker v. Locke, 453.
 v. Rand, 708.
 Buntin v. Doe d. Duchane, 141.
 Burbank v. Fay, 120, 567, 610, 611.
 v. Payne, 330, 332.
 Burbury v. Yeomans, 321.
 Burdell v. Blain, 640.
 v. Burdell, 443.
 Burden v. Stein, 453.
 v. Thayer, 260.
 Burdick v. Burdick, 117.
 v. Heivly, 627.
 Burdye v. Mackey, 184, 137.
 Burgess v. Gray, 547, 744, 718.
 v. Seligman, 729, 730.
 v. Wheate, 236.
 Burghardt v. Van Deusen, 390.
 Burhans v. Van Zandt, 209, 604.
 Burke v. Hammond, 553.
 v. Table Mountain Water Co. 343.
 v. Tregre, 673.
 Burkholder v. Casad, 311.
 Burkle v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 523, 528.
 Burlen v. Shannon, 372.
 Burlington (City of) v. B. & M. R. R. Co. 611.
 & M. R. R. Co. v. Harris, 718.
 Burnet v. Bookstaver, 130.
 Burnett v. Caldwell, 224, 225, 227, 231, 283.
 Burnley v. Stevenson, 396.
 Burns v. Bryant, 277.
 v. Byrne, 192.
 Burr v. Woodrow, 490.
 Burrows v. Gallup, 587.
 v. Miller, 430.
 Burt v. Panjaud, 217, 548, 549, 671.
 v. Sternburgh, 396.
 Burtner v. Keran, 714, 715.
 Burton v. Austin, 242.
 v. Burton, 67, 143, 148.
 v. Sherman, 294.
 Burwell v. Jackson, 228, 706.
 Busch v. Huston, 601.
 Busenius v. Coffee, 343.
 Bush v. Cooper, 715.
- Bush v. Glover, 309.
 v. Marshall, 231, 715.
 v. Phillips, 450.
 v. Treadwell, 331.
 Buszard v. Capel, 55.
 Butcher v. Rogers, 680.
 v. Stultz, 244.
 Butler v. Cowles, 479.
 v. Lawson, 605.
 v. Mason, 347.
 v. Mountgarret, 681.
 v. Stevens, 556.
 v. Young, 739.
 Butler & Baker's Case, 31.
 Butler University v. Conard, 464.
 Butman v. Vermont Cent. R. R. 391.
 Byrane v. Rogers, 291.
 Byrd v. Chase, 480.
 Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 127.
 Byrom v. Chapin, 453.
- Cadiz v. Majors, 350, 352.
 Cadwallader v. Harris, 392.
 Cady v. Fitzsimmons, 612.
 Cagger v. Lansing, 127, 375, 384, 388, 481.
 Cahn v. Barnes, 716.
 Cahoon v. Coe, 178.
 Cain v. Furlow, 204.
 Cairns v. Chabert, 140.
 Cairo & F. R. R. Co. v. Parks, 302, 311.
 Calderwood v. Brooks, 394, 557.
 v. Pyser, 410.
 Caldwell v. Copeland, 60, 577.
 v. Fulton, 61, 82.
 v. Neely, 203, 205, 630.
 v. Farmer, 223.
 v. Walters, 400, 475, 512.
 California v. McGlynn, 138.
 (City of) v. Howard, 187.
 Q. Min. Co. v. Redington, 416.
- Call v. Chase, 353.
 Callan v. McDaniel, 343.
 Callender v. Sherman, 659.
 Callis v. Cogbill, 232.
 Calvert v. Horsfall, 485.
 Calvert v. Aldrich, 540.
 Camarillo v. Fenlon, 257, 319, 397.
 Camden v. Haaskill, 158, 160, 316, 405.
 Camden & A. Land Co. v. Lippincott, 64, 67.
 Camell v. Clavering, 81.
 Cameron v. McRoberts, 760.
 v. Phillips, 145.
 Camley v. Stanfield, 259.
 Camp v. Camp, 259.
 v. Forrest, 375, 377.
 v. Homesley, 474, 487.
 Campau v. Campau, 192.
 v. Dubois, 207, 602.
 Campbell v. Arnold, 547.
 v. Boyreau, 547.
 v. Brown, 494.
 v. Campbell, 192.

- Campbell v. Fetterman, 556.
 v. Galbreath, 295.
 v. James, 165, 166.
 v. Johnson, 724.
 v. Kuhn, 134.
 v. Shipley, 265.
 v. Shivers, 192.
 v. Smith, 667.
 Canal Appraisers v. People, 722.
 Bank v. Hudson, 521, 523.
 Fund Commrs. v. Kempshall, 722.
 Canavan v. Gray, 96.
 Candee v. Burke, 151, 481, 482, 483.
 v. Hayward, 114.
 v. Haywood, 283, 286.
 Canfield v. Ford, 82.
 Cannon v. Brame, 371.
 v. Davies, 397, 483.
 v. Stockmon, 565.
 Cantelou v. Doe & Hood, 45.
 Cantey v. Whitaker, 696.
 Caperton v. Gregory, 198, 199.
 v. Schmidt, 21, 42.
 Caplen v. Drew, 548.
 Capner v. Flemington M. Co. 453.
 Carey v. Wilcox, 108.
 Carleton v. Darcy, 175, 421.
 Carlisle v. Cooper, 561, 585.
 Carman v. Beam, 475, 476, 482, 485.
 v. Johnson, 352.
 v. Pultz, 229.
 Carnall v. Wilson, 134.
 Carnes v. Platt, 694.
 Carpenter v. Allen, 294.
 v. Bowen, 241.
 v. Carpenter, 239, 242.
 v. Denoon, 139.
 v. Doe, 673.
 v. Gwynn, 448.
 v. Natoma W. & M. Co. 590, 591.
 v. Oswego & S. R. R. Co. 72, 74, 92, 174.
 v. Ottley, 235.
 v. Schermerhorn, 613.
 Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 198, 200, 368, 488.
 v. Mitchell, 487.
 v. Small, 543.
 Carr v. Carr, 244.
 v. United States, 164, 165, 166.
 Carrol v. Gillion, 570, 576.
 Carroll v. Ballance, 239, 242, 285.
 v. O'Conner, 50.
 Carrow v. Ferrior, 444.
 Carruthers v. Bailey, 131.
 Carson v. Baker, 283.
 v. Boudinot, 673, 734.
 v. Smart, 220.
 v. Smith, 484.
 Carter v. Carter, 509.
 v. Doe & Chaudron, 691.
 v. Hoffman, 440.
 Carter v. Hunt, 155.
 v. Montgomery, 688, 689.
 v. Robinett, 667.
 v. Roland, 144.
 v. Scaggs, 50, 377.
 v. Spencer, 744.
 Cartwell v. Menifee, 293.
 Cartwright v. Culver, 236.
 Cary v. Edmonds, 589, 591.
 v. Whitney, 610.
 Casborne v. Scarfe, 239, 241.
 Casey v. Adams, 171, 331, 396.
 v. Gregory, 259.
 v. Inloes, 63, 79, 667, 675, 692.
 Casselman v. Packard, 58.
 Cassidy v. Clark, 96.
 Castle v. Noyes, 371.
 v. Palmer, 77, 387.
 Castleberry v. Black, 565, 657, 661.
 Castleman v. Simpson, 248.
 Castree v. Kirby, 440.
 Castrique v. Imrie, 370.
 Castro v. Gill, 291, 325.
 v. Richardson, 309, 310.
 Caswell v. Johnson, 79.
 Cates v. Loftus, 301.
 Catlin v. Bennett, 349.
 v. Decker, 604.
 v. Kidder, 202.
 Caton v. Carter, 678.
 Catteris v. Cowper, 548, 553.
 Cauffman v. Cong. of Cedar Spring, 685.
 v. Sayre, 241.
 Caulkins v. Harris, 501.
 Cauly v. Blue, 672.
 Cavalli v. Allen, 235, 351, 353.
 Cavedo v. Billings, 99, 522.
 Cavender v. Smith, 486.
 Cazenove v. Cutler, 248.
 Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Benity, 70, 188.
 v. Mead, 613.
 v. Mudd, 224.
 Chalker v. Chalker, 266, 267, 314.
 Challefoux v. Ducharme, 191, 201, 204.
 Challenor v. Thomas, 63, 84.
 Chamberlain v. Dempsey, 181.
 v. Gaillard, 371.
 v. Taylor, 118.
 Chamberlin v. Donahue, 153, 276.
 v. McCarty, 421, 433.
 Chambers v. Furry, 73.
 v. Handley, 142, 222.
 v. Watson, 696.
 Chambersburg (Borough) v. Manko, 190.
 Chamblee v. Tarbox, 301.
 Chamier v. Clingo, 483.
 Champion v. Doughty, 331, 338.
 v. Vincent, 499.
 Champlain & St. L. R. R. Co. v. Valentine, 63.
 Chance v. Branch, 567.
 Chandler v. Keeler, 703.

- Chandler v. Kent, 291.
 v. McCard, 724.
 v. Ricker, 203, 204.
 v. Rushing, 594, 636, 641, 646.
 v. Simmons, 115, 126.
 v. Spear, 638, 647.
 Chant v. Reynolds, 394.
 Chapin v. First Univ. Society, 37, 145.
 v. Shafer, 127.
 v. Walker, 107.
 Chapman v. Armistead, 68, 375.
 v. Barger, 762.
 v. Dela. L. & W. R. R. Co. 240, 246, 307, 741.
 v. Edmonds, 685, 722.
 v. Holding, 365.
 v. Phoenix Nat. Bank, 143, 300.
 v. Pingree, 708.
 v. Sharpe, 68.
 v. Templeton, 636, 651.
 v. Towner, 273, 274.
 Charlton v. King, 508.
 Charman v. Charman, 147.
 Charter Oak L. I. Co. v. Cummings, 407.
 Chase v. Chase, 706.
 v. Irvin, 395.
 v. Peck, 244, 354.
 v. Second Ave. R. R. Co. 273.
 Chase's Case, 441.
 Chastien v. Phillips, 662.
 Chatard v. O'Donovan, 162.
 Chautauque Co. Bank v. White, 430, 435.
 Chautauque Co. Bank v. Risley, 149, 175, 396.
 Cheatham v. Plinke, 266.
 Cheesebrough v. Parker, 422.
 Cheetham v. Hampson, 261.
 Cheney v. Cheney, 114.
 Cherry v. State, 690.
 Chester v. Dickerson, 69.
 Chetham v. Williamson, 85, 86.
 Chew v. Chew, 136, 146.
 Chicago (City of) v. Wright, 185, 188.
 Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. Knox College, 174, 271, 272, 702.
 Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 702.
 Chicago & I. R. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 174.
 Child v. Chappell, 51, 83, 92, 153, 303.
 v. Kingsbury, 681.
 v. Starr, 720.
 Childress v. Monette, 243.
 Chiles v. Calk, 119.
 Chilson v. Buttolph, 155.
 Chilton v. Niblett, 285.
 Chiniquy v. Catholic Bishop, 162.
 Chipman v. Hastings, 220.
 v. Montgomery, 95.
 Chirac v. Reinicker, 467, 486, 502, 503.
 Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 52, 567.
 Chouteau v. Eckhart, 747.
 v. Gibson, 755.
 Christenbury v. King, 680.
 Christian v. Cabell, 228.
 Christie v. Bloomingdale, 426.
 v. Gage, 117, 118, 140, 605.
 Christy v. Pidgeon, 729.
 v. Scott, 548.
 Church v. Burghardt, 620.
 v. Meeker, 548.
 Church of North Greig v. Johnson, 203.
 Churchill v. Onderdonk, 152, 301, 556.
 Cincinnati (City of) v. White, 53, 70, 186.
 Circassian, (The) Matter of, 91, 411.
 City of Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co. 610.
 Apalachicola v. Apalachicola Land
 Co. 188, 484, 513.
 Boston v. Richardson, 720, 721, 723.
 Brooklyn, Matter of, 64.
 Burlington v. B. & M. R. R. Co. 611.
 California v. Howard, 187.
 Chicago v. Wright, 185, 188.
 Cincinnati v. White, 53, 70, 186.
 Dubuque v. Maloney, 71.
 East St. Louis v. Hackett, 362, 387.
 Hannibal v. Draper, 81, 188.
 Los Angeles v. Signorat, 312.
 Marietta v. Emerson, 433.
 Natchez v. Vandervelde, 415.
 Racine v. Crottsenberg, 75, 189.
 St. Louis v. Gorman, 643.
 v. Newman, 611.
 Savannah v. Steamboat Co. 185, 186.
 Winona v. Huff, 188.
 Clagett v. Kilbourne, 734, 737.
 Clapp v. Bromagham, 97, 201, 205, 391, 629, 653.
 Claridge v. Mackenzie, 260.
 Clark v. Baker, 715.
 v. Brazeau, 60.
 v. Byrean, 490.
 v. Chase, 594.
 v. Clark, 143, 324.
 v. Crego, 198, 201, 305.
 v. Dillon, 301, 302.
 v. Gilbert, 578, 579, 581.
 v. Graham, 333.
 v. Holton, 314.
 v. Keliher, 288.
 v. Lockwood, 669.
 v. Middlesworth, 140.
 v. Owens, 691.
 v. Parkinson, 410.
 v. Parr, 501.
 v. Potter, 593.
 v. Scudder, 331.
 v. Smith, 276.
 v. Thompson, 308.
 v. Tompkins, 513.
 v. Trinity Church, 691.
 v. Vaughan, 205, 222.
 v. Wheelock, 276.
 Clark's Appeal, 453.
 Clarke v. Clarke, 253, 259, 344, 549.
 v. Courtney, 640, 693.

- Clarke v. Cummings, 263.
 v. Diggs, 671, 697.
 v. Gibbons, 143.
 v. Huber, 717.
 v. McClure, 604, 615.
 v. Wagner, 574.
 Clason v. Rankin, 205.
 Claussen v. Rayburn, 542.
 Clay v. Edgerton, 302.
 v. Gurley, 95.
 v. Ransome, 54.
 Clayton v. Blakey, 272.
 v. Rose, 612.
 v. School District, 418.
 v. Yarrington, 418, 425.
 Clemens v. Clemens, 372.
 Clement v. Perry, 575.
 v. Youngman, 60, 82, 366.
 Clerke v. Rowell, 21.
 Cleverly v. Cleverly, 696.
 Clewis v. Hartman, 543.
 Cline v. Catron, 610, 692.
 Clopton v. Booker, 330, 332.
 Close v. Samm, 651.
 v. Vaux, 25.
 Clowser v. Joplin Min. Co. 504.
 Clymer v. Dawkins, 192, 205.
 v. Littler, 418.
 Cobb v. Biddle, 489.
 v. Kidd, 218.
 v. Lavalley, 678.
 v. Stokes, 270, 272.
 Coburn v. Ames, 64, 119, 531.
 v. Pacific L. & M. Co. 702.
 Cocheco Manfg. Co. v. Whittier, 348.
 Cochrane v. Farris, 597.
 Codding, in re, 144.
 Codman v. Evans, 722.
 v. Winslow, 610, 722.
 Cody v. Quartermen, 253, 276.
 Cofer v. Echerson, 444.
 Coffin v. Cooper, 228.
 Cohens v. Virginia, 163.
 Coiron v. Millaudon, 154.
 Coker v. Whitlock, 453.
 Colburn v. Mason, 202.
 Colby v. Kenniston, 556.
 Cold Spring Iron Works v. Inhabitants of Tolland, 722.
 Cole v. Aylott, 322.
 v. Gourlay, 704.
 v. Greene, 261.
 v. Irvine, 218, 219, 308.
 v. Johnson, 521, 523, 526, 527.
 v. Maxfield, 255.
 v. Parker, 622, 623, 624, 626.
 Coleman v. Billings, 297, 572, 630, 637, 660.
 v. Coleman, 212.
 v. Doe d. Tish-ho-mah, 150.
 v. Henderson, 365.
 v. Manhattan Beach Imp. Co. 118.
 v. Pearce, 718.
 Coleman's Appeal, 504.
 Coles v. Coles, 144, 223.
 Colgrove v. Koonce, 179.
 Colie v. Jamison, 147.
 Collart v. Fisk, 87.
 Collector v. Day, 163.
 College Corner & R. G. Road Co. v. Moss, 322, 323.
 Collier v. Sapp, 441, 446.
 Collins v. Benbury, 78.
 v. Hasbrouck, 263, 266, 291.
 v. Johnson, 606.
 v. Riley, 366.
 v. Robinson, 246.
 v. State, 339.
 Collins Mfg. Co. v. Marcy, 139.
 Collumb v. Read, 144.
 Colman v. Clements, 206, 312.
 v. Packard, 239.
 Colson v. Lewis, 753.
 Colston v. McVay, 54.
 Colvin v. Burnet, 567.
 v. McCune, 577, 660.
 Combs v. Cooper, 726.
 v. Jackson, 127, 128.
 Comm'rs of Bath v. Boyd, 185, 188.
 Canal Fund v. Kempshall, 722.
 Excise, &c. v. Purdy, 293.
 Georgetown v. Taylor, 190.
 Commonwealth v. Alburger, 611.
 v. Andre, 716.
 v. City of Roxbury, 54, 665, 721, 722.
 v. McDonald, 611.
 v. Moltz, 711.
 v. Pejepscut Prop'rs, 716.
 Comparet v. Hanna, 673.
 Compton v. Randolph, 697.
 Comyn v. Kyneto, 59, 67.
 v. Wheatly, 59.
 Congden v. Lee, 443.
 Conger v. Converse, 680.
 v. Duryee, 266.
 v. Parker, 351.
 Congregation S. H. M. v. Halladay, 229.
 Congregational Society v. Newington, 604.
 Conn v. Conn, 210.
 Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schwenk, 689.
 Conner v. Goodman, 556.
 v. Whitmore, 246.
 Connolly v. Hammond, 428.
 Connor v. Bradley, 266.
 v. West, 320, 322.
 Contreras v. Haynes, 221.
 Conway v. Starkweather, 273.
 Conyers v. Crosbie, 149.
 v. Davis, 97.
 Cooch v. Geery, 496.
 Cook v. Babcock, 579.
 v. Burnley, 337.
 v. C. B. & O. R. Co. 83.
 v. Creswell, 253, 287, 291.

- Cook v. Dennis, 585.
 v. Gerrard, 80.
 v. McClure, 64, 67.
 v. Rider, 548.
 v. St. Paul's Church, 116, 187, 138, 308.
 v. Toumbs, 533.
 v. Travis, 599.
 v. Wood, 693.
 Cook County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co. 71.
 Cooke v. Passage, 430.
 v. Woodrow, 693.
 Cooley v. O'Connor, 166, 167, 349.
 Coolidge v. Learned, 561.
 Cooper v. Austin, 726.
 v. Davis, 453.
 v. Galbraith, 673, 760.
 v. Lands, 148, 175.
 v. Ord, 598, 631, 644.
 v. Roberts, 744.
 v. Singleton, 180, 286.
 v. Smith, 70, 72, 76, 253, 254, 304.
 v. Stower, 262.
 v. Viera, 727.
 Cooter v. Baston, 391.
 Copeland v. Copeland, 711.
 v. Piedmont & A. L. I. Co. 96.
 v. Sauls, 680.
 Copley v. Riddle, 739.
 Copper Hill Min. Co. v. Spencer, 441.
 Coppinger v. Armstrong, 253.
 Corbett v. Laurens, 530.
 Corbleys v. Ripley, 685.
 Corcoran v. Doll, 447.
 v. Webster, 112.
 Corder v. Dolin, 231.
 Corkhill v. Landers, 726.
 Corley v. Pentz, 49, 106, 304.
 Coraelius v. Ivins, 139.
 Cornell v. Green, 135.
 Cornell University v. Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. 338.
 Cornes v. Minot, 90.
 Cornet v. Winton, 150, 764.
 Corning v. Smith, 107.
 v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 84, 104, 118, 388, 625, 627.
 Corporation of San Patricio v. Mathis, 425.
 Cortelyou v. Van Brundt, 79.
 Coryell v. Cain, 318.
 Coster v. Peters, 58.
 Costigan v. Wood, 227, 283.
 Cotheal ads. Moorehouse, 126.
 Cottingham v. King, 320, 405.
 Cottle v. Young, 721, 722.
 Cotton v. Gregory, 695.
 Couch v. Turner, 297.
 Coulter's Case, 520.
 County of Piatt v. Goodell, 659.
 Warren v. Marcy, 467.
 Courtney v. Turner, 551, 553.
 v. Woodworth, 228.
 Courtright v. Burnes, 297.
 Covell v. Dolloff, 247.
 Covington v. Stewart, 192, 203.
 Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co. 139.
 v. Springs Co. 139, 729.
 Cowenhoven v. City of Brooklyn, 72, 92, 174.
 Cowly v. Monson, 661.
 Cox v. Clift, 87.
 v. Cock, 679.
 v. Dawson, 130.
 v. Douglass, 449, 452.
 v. Louisville, &c., R. R. Co. 187.
 v. State, 681.
 v. Walker, 145.
 Craft v. Yeane, 400.
 Cragin v. Lovell, 381, 396.
 Craig v. Leslie, 148.
 v. Taylor, 222.
 v. Wells, 139.
 Cramer v. Benton, 351, 352, 353.
 Crandall v. Gallup, 6, 41.
 Crane v. Ghirardelli, 156.
 v. Guthrie, 489.
 v. Hyde Park, 138, 139, 314.
 v. Marshall, 691.
 v. Randolph, 94, 102.
 Crary v. Goodman, 116, 342, 351, 352, 627, 639, 654, 655, 699.
 v. Smith, 226, 229.
 Crawford v. Burnham, 759.
 v. Scovell, 130.
 Crea v. Hertzler, 434.
 Crease v. Barrett, 681.
 Crecelius v. Mann, 350.
 Creech v. Jones, 574.
 Creekmur v. Creekmur, 629.
 Creighton v. Proctor, 37, 344, 400.
 Creque v. Sears, 349, 717.
 Cresap v. Hutson, 28.
 Crest v. Jack, 712.
 Crews v. Burcham, 744.
 Crim v. Handley, 705.
 Crippen v. Morss, 192.
 Crispen v. Hannavan, 565, 592, 595, 596, 598, 610, 640, 643, 651.
 Criswell v. Altemus, 604.
 Critchfield v. Humbert, 487.
 Crocker v. Fothergill, 52, 54, 85, 388.
 Crockett v. Drew, 176.
 Cromwell v. County of Sac, 370, 382.
 v. Holliday, 221.
 Cronin v. Gore, 680, 726.
 Crook v. Vandevoot, 192, 220.
 Crooke v. Andrews, 87.
 Crosby v. Dowd, 612.
 v. Dracut, 536.
 Cross v. Carson, 138.
 v. Martin, 715.
 v. Robinson, 194.
 v. Sabin, 610.
 Crotty v. Collins, 411.
 Crouch v. Eveleth, 691.
 Cruger v. Dougherty, 700.

- Cruger v. Hudson River R. R. Co. 302.
 v. McClaughry, 220.
 v. McLaury, 133, 265.
 Crunkelton v. Evert, 132.
 Cryer v. Andrews, 205.
 Cuddy v. Brown, 687.
 Cudney v. Early, 723.
 Culberhouse v. Shirey, 212.
 Culley v. Doe & Taylerson, 563.
 Culver v. Rhodes, 191, 200, 205, 206, 601, 602.
 v. Rodgers, 102.
 v. Woodruff Co. 339.
 Cumming v. Butler, 343.
 Cummings v. McGehee, 499.
 v. Wyman, 198.
 Cunningham v. Bradley, 158, 161.
 v. City of Milwaukee, 435.
 v. Frandtzen, 636, 641.
 v. Macon & B. R. R. Co. 172, 173.
 v. McCollum, 323.
 v. Morris, 497.
 Curd v. Lackland, 463, 668.
 Curran v. Shattuck, 105.
 Currier v. Barker, 288.
 v. Esty, 384.
 v. Gale, 612.
 v. Perley, 287.
 Currin v. Spraul, 97.
 Curtis v. Fox, 109.
 v. Francis, 359.
 v. Gay, 515, 531.
 v. Sutter, 24.
 Cushing v. Adams, 83.
 Custard v. Musgrove, 311, 345, 355.
 Cutter v. Waddingham, 494, 502.
 Cutting v. Pike, 37.
 Cutts v. King, 194.
 Cythe v. La Fontain, 228, 236, 237.

 Dacres (Lady) Case, 321.
 Daggett v. Tracy, 524.
 Dalby v. Booth, 348.
 Dale v. Frisbie, 341.
 v. Hunneman, 333.
 v. Turner, 718.
 Dally v. King, 303.
 Dalton v. Janson, 368.
 Dalton v. Bank of St. Louis, 555, 661.
 Dame v. Dame, 57.
 Dangerfield v. Paschal, 46, 424.
 Daniel v. Green, 97.
 Daniels v. Bates, 543.
 Danner v. Brewer, 333.
 Darby v. Callaghan, 141, 143.
 v. McCarrol, 631.
 D'Arras v. Keyser, 233.
 Dart v. Dart, 715.
 v. Hercules, 326, 340.
 Dater v. Troy Turnpike, &c. Co. 173.
 Davant v. Cubbage, 220.

 Davenport v. Sebring, 606, 614, 616.
 v. Turpin, 726.
 Davidson v. Barclay, 237, 317.
 v. Lamprey, 428, 432.
 v. Phillips, 51.
 v. Seegar, 87.
 v. Wallace, 210.
 Davies' Case, 18.
 Daviess v. Myers, 212.
 Davis, The, 163, 146.
 Davis v. Bowmar, 566, 573, 599, 600, 614, 616, 620.
 v. Carpenter, 131.
 v. Christian, 144.
 v. Davis, 253, 679, 711, 717.
 v. Delpit, 472, 490.
 v. Easley, 576.
 v. Gray, 149, 167, 170.
 v. Higgins, 662.
 v. Judge, 392.
 v. King, 210.
 v. Lottich, 193.
 v. Louk, 505, 520, 528, 540.
 v. McArthur, 346, 565, 596.
 v. Murphy, 274, 277.
 v. Powell, 541.
 v. Smith, 727.
 v. Strobbridge, 236.
 v. Townsend, 727.
 v. Wilcoxon, 673.
 Dawley v. Brown, 22, 35, 117, 371, 386, 388, 395, 413, 416, 458, 459, 460.
 v. Van Court, 660.
 Dawson v. Hayden, 112.
 v. McGill, 476, 482, 491.
 v. Mills, 220.
 v. Shillock, 428, 429.
 v. Watkins, 303.
 Day v. Alverson, 546.
 v. Cochran, 604.
 v. Howard, 192, 194, 205.
 v. Solomon, 226, 284.
 v. Wilder, 598, 620.
 Dayton v. Dayton, 241.
 Deacon v. Shreve, 337.
 Dean v. Comstock, 283.
 v. Feeley, 516.
 v. Feely, 507.
 v. Tucker, 480, 491, 501.
 Debris Case, 219.
 Decharms v. Horwood, 222.
 Decker v. Adams, 270, 272.
 DeCourcy v. Stewart, 331, 397.
 Deep River Gold M. Co. v. Fox, 448.
 Deere v. Guest, 103.
 Deerfield (Inhabs.) v. Arms, 66.
 De Force v. Welch, 64.
 De Graw v. Taylor, 178.
 Delacroix v. Chamberlain, 734.
 De Lancey v. Ganong, 139, 253, 264, 265.
 Delano v. Bennett, 429, 433.
 Delaplaine v. Hitchcock, 711.

- Delavan v. Duncan, 229.
 De Laveaga v. Williams, 761.
 Demaret v. Bennett, 286.
 De Mill v. Lockwood, 114, 115.
 v. Moffat, 115, 594, 714.
 De Mott v. Hagerman, 510.
 Demuth v. Cutler, 335.
 Den v. Ashmore, 260.
 (d. Smallwood) v. Bilderback, 405.
 (d. Hankinson) v. Blair, 279.
 (d. Obert) v. Bordine, 145.
 (d. Farley) v. Craig, 52, 82.
 (d. Hopper) v. Demarest, 715.
 v. Dimon, 246.
 v. Drake, 270, 274.
 v. Fen, 180.
 (d. Howell) v. Howell, 276.
 (d. Saxton) v. Hunt, 641, 646, 652.
 v. Johnson, 405.
 (d. Stewart) v. Johnson, 463.
 v. Kimble, 462.
 v. Lunsford, 483.
 v. McShane, 299, 502.
 (d. Phillips) v. Phillips, 323, 329.
 (d. Price) v. Sanderson, 360.
 v. Sinnickson, 126.
 v. Snowhill, 68.
 (d. Snowhill) v. Snowhill, 274, 280.
 v. Steward, 177.
 v. Stockton, 239.
 v. Webster, 285.
 v. Westbrook, 284.
 v. Wright, 246, 759.
 Denham v. Cornell, 134.
 v. Hollman, 585.
 Denman v. Prince, 540.
 Denn (d. Delatouche) v. Chubb, 507.
 Dennis v. Kelso, 20.
 Dennison v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 429.
 v. Read, 253.
 Dent v. Simmons, 403, 403.
 Denton v. Noyes, 293, 297.
 Department of Parks, Matter of, 116, 225, 607.
 De Puy v. Strong, 219.
 v. Williams, 51, 193, 313, 701.
 Derby v. Jacques, 41.
 Dermott v. Wallach, 264.
 De Ruyter v. Trustees of St. Peter's Church, 556.
 Despard v. Churchill, 134.
 v. Walbridge, 259.
 Detroit & M. R. R. Co. v. Brown, 705.
 Devacht v. Newsam, 259.
 Deveney v. Gallagher, 725.
 Devens v. Bower, 343.
 Devereux v. Devereux, 95.
 Devonsher v. Newenham, 24.
 Devyr v. Schaefer, 225, 603, 613, 625.
 Dew v. Katz, 318.
 Dewees' Estate, 703.
 Dewey v. Bordwell, 726.
 Dewey v. Brown, 220, 221.
 v. Hoag, 350, 351.
 v. Lambier, 222.
 v. McLain, 605.
 v. Osborn, 474, 492, 499, 502.
 v. Williams, 188.
 Dewitt v. Village of Ithaca, 72.
 De Wolf v. Haydn, 715.
 v. Sprague Mfg. Co. 107, 239.
 Dexter v. Hall, 126, 131.
 De Young v. Buchanan, 479.
 Dezengremel v. Dezengremel, 347.
 Dial v. Reynolds, 107.
 Dibble v. Clapp, 166, 172.
 Dick v. Hamilton, 531.
 Dickens v. Miller, 697.
 Dickerson v. Colgrove, 528, 713, 740, 741.
 v. Hendryx, 304.
 v. Talbot, 715.
 Dickey v. Armstrong, 114.
 Dickinson v. Hayes, 372.
 Dietrick v. Noel, 612, 625.
 Diggle v. Boulden, 228, 235.
 Diggs v. Kirby, 236.
 Dillaye v. Wilson, 158, 358.
 Dillingham v. Brown, 661.
 Dillon v. Dougherty, 145.
 Dilworth v. Fee, 50.
 Dimick v. Campbell, 502.
 v. Deringer, 159.
 Dingey v. Paxton, 546.
 Diadale v. Iles, 276.
 Divine v. Mitchum, 144.
 Dixon v. Doe d. Porter, 744.
 v. Oliver, 229.
 Doak v. Wiswell, 372.
 Doan v. Sloan, 555.
 Dobbins v. Baker, 472.
 v. Commissioners, 163.
 Dobson v. Culpepper, 260.
 v. Dickson, 612.
 v. Murphy, 632.
 Dockray v. Milliken, 530.
 Dodge v. Colby, 331.
 v. Page, 485.
 v. Walley, 151.
 v. Wellman, 244.
 Doe (d. Moore) v. Abernathy, 126.
 (d. Earl of Falmouth) v. Alderson, 52, 60, 85.
 (d. Sheppard) v. Allen, 266.
 v. Alston, 126.
 v. Amey, 272.
 (d. Queen) v. Archbishop of York, 387.
 v. Archer, 287, 288.
 (d. Manton) v. Austin, 253.
 (d. Green) v. Baker, 144, 289.
 (d. Brayne) v. Bather, 396, 459, 460
 (d. Finlayson) v. Bayley, 276.
 (d. Patrick) v. Beaufort, 138.
 v. Bell, 272.
 v. Biggs, 292.

- Doe (d. Nash) v. Birch, 266.
 (d. Hellings) v. Bird, 200, 203.
 (d. Colnaghi) v. Bluck, 56.
 (d. Morgan) v. Bluck, 21, 84, 400.
 (d. Darlington) v. Bond, 262.
 (d. Harrison) v. Botts, 218.
v. Bradbury, 134.
 (d. Bather) v. Brayne, 679.
v. Brewer, 359.
 (d. Winnall) v. Broad, 323, 329.
 (d. Brumfield) v. Brown, 224.
v. Browne, 274, 289.
 (d. Freeland) v. Burt, 56, 57.
v. Butler, 115, 299.
 (d. Whayman) v. Chaplin, 222, 289, 290.
 (d. Clun) v. Clarke, 279.
 (d. Mills) v. Clayton, 546.
 (d. Darlington) v. Cock, 158.
v. Cockell, 272.
 (d. Harding) v. Cooke, 549.
v. Cooper, 180.
 (d. Minister, &c.) v. Cowley, 84.
 (d. Davies) v. Creed, 282.
 (d. Macartney) v. Crik, 288, 292.
v. Davis, 508.
 (d. Lloyd) v. Deakin, 691.
v. Durnford, 292.
 (d. Hughes) v. Dyeball, 548.
 (d. Davis) v. Elsam, 263, 264, 675.
 (d. Poole) v. Errington, 14, 218.
 (d. Farmer) v. Eslava, 593.
v. Fenn, 222.
v. Filliter, 508.
 (d. Watson) v. Fletcher, 26.
v. Forster, 292.
 (d. Bailey) v. Foster, 289.
v. Franklin, 182.
 (d. Pultney) v. Freeman, 462.
v. Frowd, 280.
 (d. Turner) v. Gee, 96.
 (d. Lyster) v. Goldwin, 287, 289.
 (d. Parker) v. Gregory, 605.
v. Griffin, 691.
 (d. Henry) v. Gustard, 460.
 (d. Saye) v. Guy, 133.
 (d. Hamilton) v. Hardy, 45.
v. Hare, 508, 509.
v. Harlow, 375.
 (d. Hickman) v. Hickman, 386.
v. Wawn) v. Horn, 49.
v. Huddart, 507.
v. Hughes, 290.
 (d. Godsell) v. Inglis, 272.
 (d. Hudgens) v. Jackson, 45.
 (d. Matthews) v. Jackson, 287.
 (d. Vickery) v. Jackson, 263.
 (d. Pritchard) v. Jauncey, 563.
v. Jesson, 691.
 (d. Dalton) v. Jones, 263.
 (d. Jones) v. Jones, 276.
 (d. Bish) v. Keeling, 263.
v. Keen, 192, 215.
- Doe (d. Bedford) v. Kightley, 287.
 (d. Cannon) v. Killon, 690.
 (d. Ibbetson) v. Land, 143.
 (d. Williams) v. Lloyd, 336.
 (d. Bennett) v. Long, 280.
 (d. Stephens) v. Lord, 401.
 (d. Roby) v. Maisey, 278, 285.
 (d. Palk) v. Marchetti, 675, 676.
 (d. Harris) v. Masters, 291.
 (d. Atkinson) v. McLeod, 128.
 (d. Davis) v. Minge, 45.
 (d. Manvers) v. Mizem, 289.
v. Morse, 275.
 (d. Harrison) v. Murrell, 142.
 (d. Butcher) v. Mugrave, 84.
 (d. Baylor) v. Neff, 319.
 (d. Miller) v. Nodex, 124, 275, 286.
v. Nutt, 68.
 (d. Garrod) v. Olley, 285.
v. Palmer, 291.
 (d. Dillon) v. Parker, 280.
 (d. Willams) v. Pasquali, 279, 280.
v. Pearson, 222.
 (d. Flower) v. Peck, 263.
 (d. Bristow) v. Pegge, 26, 733.
v. Perkins, 493, 507.
 (d. Birch) v. Phillips, 329.
 (d. Whitehead) v. Pittman, 280.
v. Porter, 185, 274, 286.
 (d. Phillips) v. Porter, 724.
 (d. Nixon) v. Potts, 218.
 (d. Price) v. Price, 276.
v. Pritchard, 680.
 (d. Griffith) v. Pritchard, 150.
 (d. Fishar) v. Prosser, 192, 193, 199, 202, 206.
 (d. Marsack) v. Read, 149, 222, 289.
v. Reade, 548.
v. Rees, 266.
 (d. Kennedy) v. Reynolds, 590, 591.
 (d. Rhodes) v. Robinson, 289.
 (d. William IV) v. Roberts, 119.
v. Robson, 676.
v. Roe (30 Ga. 553), 156.
v. Roe (31 Ga. 593), 691.
 (d. Barrett) v. Roe, 46.
 (d. Child) v. Roe, 329.
 (d. Cox) v. Roe, 287.
 (d. Darwent) v. Roe, 19.
 (d. Feldon) v. Roe, 26.
 (d. Gigner) v. Roe, 194.
 (d. Leigh) v. Roe, 163.
 (d. Lloyd) v. Roe, 182.
 (d. Pearson) v. Roe, 180.
 (d. Pitcher) v. Roe, 404.
 (d. Roberts) v. Roe, 323, 329.
 (d. Vernon) v. Roe, 329.
 (d. Williamson) v. Roe, 158.
v. Rosser, 108.
 (d. Pitt) v. Shewin, 263.
 (d. Clarke) v. Smaridge, 274, 275.
v. Smith, 286.

- Doe (d. Bailey) v. Smyth, 27.
 v. Smythe, 253, 255.
 v. Somerton, 292.
 (d. Strickland) v. Spence, 270.
 (d. Clark) v. Spencer, 148.
 v. Spiller, 287, 288.
 v. Spry, 263.
 (d. Gray) v. Stanion, 281.
 v. Staple, 3, 26, 733.
 v. Staunton, 162.
 (d. Hollingsworth) v. Stennett, 274.
 (d. Bright) v. Stevens, 591.
 (d. Tilt) v. Stratton, 272.
 v. Summersett, 290.
 (d. Reed) v. Taylor, 204.
 v. Terry, 272.
 (d. Davies) v. Thomas, 276.
 v. Turford, 292.
 (d. Saxton) v. Turner, 329.
 (d. Ogle) v. Vickers, 243.
 v. Walters, 289.
 (d. Forster) v. Wandlass, 411.
 v. Watt, 253.
 v. West, 547.
 (d. Stace) v. Wheeler, 135.
 v. Whitcomb, 483.
 (d. Jefferios) v. Whittick, 279.
 v. Williams, 280.
 (d. David) v. Williams, 291.
 (d. Egremont) v. Williams, 329.
 v. Wilson, 744.
 (d. Drapers Co.) v. Wilson, 405.
 (d. Upton) v. Witherwick, 411, 509.
 (d. Oldham) v. Wolley, 691.
 v. Wood, 85.
 v. Woodman, 291.
 v. Wright, 375.
 (d. Mathewson) v. Wrightman, 287.
 (d. Shewen) v. Wroot, 734.
 (d. Elle) v. Young, 146.
 Dogan v. Seekright, 723.
 Doggett v. Hart, 145, 146, 725.
 Dolby v. Miller, 154, 179.
 Dolde v. Vodicka, 726.
 Dolittle v. Eddy, 53, 225, 231, 283.
 Doll v. Feller, 324, 332.
 Dolph v. Barney, 220.
 Dolton v. Cain, 741.
 Dominy v. Miller, 546.
 Donahue v. Gallavan, 646.
 Donald v. McKinnon, 253.
 Donaldson v. Waters, 113.
 Donnelly v. Simonton, 244.
 Donovan v. Vandemark, 60, 156.
 Doolittle v. Greene, 302.
 v. Linsley, 155.
 Dorland v. Magilton, 606.
 Dormer v. Fortescue, 513.
 Dorn v. Beasley, 220.
 v. Dunham, 523, 525, 529.
 Dorr v. School District, 574.
 Dorrell v. Johnson, 272.
 Doscher v. Blackiston, 517.
 Doswell v. Buchanan, 715.
 v. De La Lanza, 594.
 Dothage v. Stuart, 527.
 Dothard v. Denson, 572.
 Doty v. Brown, 371.
 v. Gorham, 57.
 Doughty v. Conover, 79.
 Douglas v. Fulda, 258.
 Douglass v. Scott, 715.
 v. Tullock, 660.
 Doulson v. Matthews, 330.
 Dow v. McKenney, 625.
 Dowd v. Faucett, 529.
 v. Gilchrist, 132.
 Downer v. Smith, 352.
 Downs v. Cooper, 103, 255, 257.
 Dows v. Congdon, 539.
 Doyle v. Franklin, 397.
 v. Hallam, 22, 380.
 Drake v. Curtis, 721.
 v. Root, 715.
 Draper v. Draper, 69.
 v. Kirkland, 330.
 v. Shoot, 574.
 Dresel v. Jordan, 228.
 Dresser v. Dresser, 488.
 Dreux v. Kennedy, 167, 169.
 Drew v. Drew, 724.
 v. Swift, 554, 724.
 v. Valentine, 665.
 Drexel v. Man, 501, 502.
 Drury v. Conner, 513.
 v. Fitch, 130.
 Dube v. Smith, 218.
 Dubois v. Campau, 207, 210.
 v. Cassidy, 149.
 v. Newman, 739.
 Dubuque (City of) v. Maloney, 71.
 Duchane v. Goodtitle, 134, 136.
 Duchess of Kingston's Case, 370, 380.
 Dudley v. Chanfrau, 51.
 Duff v. Wilson, 211, 260.
 Duffy v. Donovan, 514, 516, 533.
 Dugan v. Colville, 235.
 v. Follett, 715.
 Duke v. Harper, 279, 297.
 Dummer v. Jersey City, 185, 188.
 Dumper v. Syms, 267.
 Duncan v. Campau, 447.
 v. Jackson, 503.
 Dunckel v. Wiles, 420.
 Dungan v. Von Phul, 506.
 Dunham v. Williams, 722.
 Dunlap v. Stetson, 722.
 v. Wright, 227.
 v. Yoakum, 504.
 Dunn v. Bagby, 524.
 v. Clarke, 339, 760.
 v. Large, 483.
 v. Miller, 22, 382, 546, 589.
 Dunning v. Fisher, 132, 240.

- Dupas v. Wassell, 716.
 Du Pont v. Davis, 351.
 v. Ervin, 411, 414
 Dupuy v. Leavenworth, 144.
 Durand v. Sage, 237.
 Duryee v. Mayor, &c., of N. Y. 500.
 Dusenbury v. Dusenbury, 317.
 v. Mutual Un. Tel. Co. 73.
 Duson v. Dupré, 297.
 Dutton v. Warschauer, 153, 182.
 Duty v. Graham, 241.
 Duvall v. Waters, 262.
 Dyer v. Toothaker, 250.

 Eagan v. Delaney, 308, 311.
 Eagle Fire Co. v. Lent, 107.
 Eagle Woolen Mills Co. v. Montielth, 680.
 Eakin v. Brewer, 546.
 Earl of Bath v. Sherwin, 24.
 Lonsdale v. Nelson, 89.
 Sussex v. Temple, 192.
 Earle v. Hale, 254.
 v. McVeigh, 292.
 Earley v. Euwer, 693.
 Early v. Friend, 487, 488, 502.
 Easterling v. Blythe, 47.
 Eastern R. R. v. Allen, 577.
 East Hampton (Trustees) v. Kirk, 64, 65, 592.
 Eastman v. Fletcher, 37.
 v. Linn, 426.
 East N. Y. & J. R. R. Co. v. Elmore, 370.
 Easton v. Salisbury, 744.
 East St. Louis (City of) v. Hackett, 362, 387.
 Eastwic v. Saylor, 486.
 Eaton v. Freeman, 508.
 v. George, 270, 272.
 v. Smith, 668.
 v. Trowbridge, 461.
 Ebbert's Appeal, 145.
 Ebbinghaus v. Killian, 605.
 Eberle v. Fisher, 148.
 Eberlein v. Abel, 276.
 Eberly v. Lehman, 676.
 Eberts v. Eberts, 524.
 Eberwine v. Cook, 270, 279.
 Echelkamp v. Schrader, 104.
 Edgar v. Galveston City Co. 423.
 Edgerton v. Bird, 630, 634, 660.
 v. Peckham, 237.
 v. Powell, 464.
 Edmonson v. Kite, 480.
 Edmunston v. State, 300.
 Edsall v. Merrill, 488.
 Edwards v. Bishop, 194, 197, 202, 203, 317.
 v. Clemons, 272.
 v. Fry, 235.
 v. Morgan, 677, 739.
 v. Roys, 392.
 v. Wray, 246.
 Edwardsville R. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 75, 174.

 Egan v. Walsh, 442.
 Ege v. Kille, 474, 504, 511, 530.
 v. Medlar, 574, 633, 638, 650.
 Ehle v. Haller, 466.
 Ehrhardt v. Hogeboom, 111.
 Eichart v. Bargas, 291.
 Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 292.
 Ela v. Pennock, 37.
 Elam v. Parkhill, 523, 536.
 Elder v. Allison, 350.
 v. Bradley, 564.
 v. Dwight Mfg. Co. 335.
 v. Hilzheim, 332.
 Eldred v. Oconto Co. 345.
 Eldridge v. Hill, 375.
 Elgin v. Marshall, 755.
 Ellen v. Eillen, 695.
 Ellicott v. Mosier, 57, 69, 153, 305.
 v. Pearl, 573, 638, 681.
 Elliott v. Gibbons, 354.
 Ellis v. Davis, 100, 138, 743.
 v. Jeans, 365.
 v. Murray, 346.
 v. Paige, 272, 274.
 Ellsworth v. Hale, 567.
 v. Potter, 499.
 Elmendorf v. Taylor, 766.
 Elwell v. Birmingham Canal Nav. 611.
 Ely v. Lowenstein (No. 2), 331.
 v. Supervisors of Niagara Co. 89.
 v. Wilcox, 556.
 Emeric v. Penniman, 37, 668.
 Emerson v. Emerson, 357.
 v. Sansome, 395.
 v. Spicer, 128.
 v. White, 691.
 Emerson & Wall's Appeal, 445.
 Emery v. Grocock, 705, 706.
 Emig v. Deihl, 366.
 Emlen v. Hoops, 182.
 Emmons v. Bishop, 418, 433.
 Emory v. Keighan, 246.
 Emrich v. Ireland, 317, 472, 477, 493, 496.
 Enders v. Sternbergh, 691.
 England v. Slade, 146, 260.
 English v. Breunann, 722.
 v. Johnson, 645.
 Ensign v. McKinney, 691, 692.
 v. Sherman, 309.
 Equator Co. v. Hall, 380, 419, 436, 729.
 Equator Min. & S. Co. v. Hall, 21.
 Erhart v. Bass, 47.
 Erickson v. Mich. Land & Iron Co. 85.
 Erwin v. Olmsted, 224, 262.
 Easley v. People, 293.
 Espy v. Fenton, 480.
 Estell v. Cole, 180, 236, 533.
 Estes v. Long, 604.
 Estrada v. Murphy, 352.
 Esty v. Baker, 276.
 Etcheborne v. Auzerals, 717.
 Etheridge v. Doe d. Malempre, 119.

- Etz v. Daily, 72, 74.
 Evans v. Ashby, 673.
 v. Bidwell, 257.
 v. Erie Co. 611.
 v. Haefner, 391.
 v. Millard, 431.
 v. Welch, 473, 516.
 v. Wornack, 302.
 Evansville H. & N. R. R. Co. v. Grady, 174.
 Evelyn v. Evelyn, 447.
 Evetts v. Tendick, 506.
 Evill v. Conwell, 51.
 Evitts v. Roth, 610.
 Ewald v. Corbett, 194, 414.
 Ewalt v. Gray, 474, 512, 520.
 Ewer v. Lovell, 202, 204.
 Ewing v. Burnet, 573, 574, 576, 577, 615.
 v. Ewing, 696.
 v. Handley, 236, 505, 536.
 Excise Comm'rs v. Purdy, 293.
 Eysaman v. Eysaman, 270.
 Eyton v. Jones, 263.

 Fagan v. Barnes, 465.
 v. Rosier, 639.
 Fain v. Garthright, 296.
 Fairchild v. Fairchild, 69, 144, 223.
 Fairclaim v. Shackleton, 192.
 (d. Fowler) v. Shamtitle, 20, 26, 180, 182.
 Faircloth v. Jordan, 680.
 Fairfield v. County of Gallatin, 729.
 Fales v. Thompson, 147.
 Falkner v. Beers, 292.
 v. Jones, 182.
 Farish v. Coon, 599, 615.
 Farley v. Craig, 161, 265.
 Farmers L. & T. Co. v. Kursch, 394.
 Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 467.
 Farnsworth v. Fowler, 406.
 Farnum v. Peterson, 117.
 Farrar v. Clark, 391.
 v. Fessenden, 694.
 Farris v. Hayes, 49, 97, 546.
 Farrow v. Bullock, 565.
 Farwell v. Rogers, 400.
 Fassett v. Tallmadge, 454.
 Fassit v. Richard, 405.
 Favour v. Sargent, 49, 152.
 Fay v. Taft, 41, 109.
 v. Valentine, 708.
 Feig v. Meyers, 685.
 Feimster v. McRorie, 680, 681.
 Feirbaugh v. Masterson, 546.
 Felger v. Coward, 234.
 Fellows v. Wise, 680.
 Felton v. Smith, 234.
 Fenn v. Holme, 737.
 Fenner v. Sanborn, 396.
 Fenwick v. Gravenor, 177.
 v. Grosvenor, 417.
 Ferguson v. Bartholomew, 589, 591.

 Ferguson v. Bobo, 705.
 v. Crawford, 294, 352.
 v. Kennedy, 662.
 v. Kumler, 109, 426.
 v. Miles, 345, 703.
 v. Peden, 574.
 Fernander v. Dunn, 501.
 Ferrer's Case, 22, 23, 35, 370.
 Ferris v. Brown, 52.
 v. Irving, 557.
 v. Wilcox, 240.
 Ferriss v. North Amer. F. I. Co. 301.
 Ferry Co. v. Barker, 86.
 Fetter's v. Humphreys, 55.
 Fidelity, The, 163, 164.
 Fiedler v. Carpenter, 344.
 Field v. Boynton, 661.
 v. Columbet, 476, 477, 493, 496, 512, 527.
 v. Hawley, 42, 49, 152.
 v. Jackson, 452.
 v. Lowndale, 762.
 v. Ripley, 150.
 v. Schieffelin, 128.
 Fielder v. Childs, 192.
 Fields v. Fowler, 180.
 v. Lamb, 762.
 Filbert v. Hoff, 206.
 Filbey v. Carrier, 131.
 Files v. Watt, 179.
 Finch v. Finch, 340, 354.
 v. Houghton, 447.
 v. Rhodes, 140.
 Findlay v. Artope, 145, 146.
 v. Keim, 459.
 Fink v. Allen, 184.
 Finlay v. Cook, 646, 660.
 Finn v. Sleight, 69.
 Finnegan v. Carragher, 29, 153, 181, 393, 394.
 First Bapt. Soc. v. Grant, 83.
 v. Hazen, 145.
 First Presb. Soc. v. Smithers, 150.
 Fischer v. Esalaman, 673.
 Fisher v. Hepburn, 159.
 v. Larick, 326.
 v. Smith, 722.
 Fisk v. Baker, 432.
 v. Flores, 46.
 v. Miller, 46, 432.
 Fitch v. Boyer, 593.
 v. Cornell, 312, 356, 357.
 Fitzgerald, in re, 130.
 v. Marshall, 321.
 v. Spain, 231.
 Fitzhugh v. Croghan, 667.
 Fitzpatrick v. Fitzgerald, 145.
 Flagg v. Mann, 211, 694.
 Flanagan v. Pearson, 256.
 Flanigen v. City of Philadelphia, 324.
 Flanniken v. Lee, 156.
 Fleet v. Youngs, 300.
 Fletcher v. Holmes, 241.

- Fletcher v. Wilson, 228.
 Flinn v. McKinley, 210.
 Flint v. Douglass, 514.
 v. Steadman, 502.
 Flock v. Wyatt, 206.
 Florence v. Hopkins, 97, 201, 602.
 v. Paschal, 87.
 Florida v. Georgia, 749, 750.
 Fogarty v. Horrigan, 345.
 v. Sparks, 410, 411.
 Fogg v. Hill, 503.
 v. Moulton, 697.
 Foley v. Kirk, 521.
 Follett v. Heath, 351.
 Folsom v. Clark, 530.
 Fonda v. Sage, 138, 314.
 v. Van Horne, 128.
 Foot v. Edwards, 339.
 Foots v. Colvin, 733.
 Forbes v. Balenseifer, 88.
 Ford v. Belmont, 547, 556.
 v. Doyle, 301, 410.
 v. Grey, 192.
 v. Harrington, 148.
 v. Holmes, 565, 606.
 v. Holton, 519, 529, 543.
 v. Knapp, 539.
 v. Olden, 248.
 v. Sampson, 342.
 v. Steele, 242.
 v. Wilson, 572, 616.
 Forder v. Davis, 97, 391.
 Forest v. Jackson, 581, 688, 662.
 Forsaith v. Clark, 694.
 Forsyth v. Rowell, 306.
 v. Wells, 504.
 Forsythe v. Van Winkle, 431, 436.
 Fortune v. Center, 184.
 Fort Wayne, M. & C.R.R. Co. v. Mellett, 175.
 Foscalina v. Doyle, 359.
 Fosgate v. Herkimer Mfg. Co. 158, 181, 358, 393, 691.
 Foster v. Elliott, 302.
 v. Evans, 372, 377, 386, 395.
 v. Mora, 737.
 v. Morris, 258.
 v. Perkins, 606.
 v. Townshend, 149.
 v. Wood, 371.
 Foster's Appeal, 144.
 Fouke v. Kemp, 325.
 Foulke v. Bond, 192, 193, 195, 204, 580, 601, 602, 603, 619, 636, 641, 653, 656.
 v. Stockdale, 625.
 Foust v. Trice, 282.
 Fowke v. Darnall, 548.
 Fowler v. Fowler, 540.
 v. Lindsey, 749.
 v. Miller, 749.
 v. Whiteman, 554.
 Fox v. Brissac, 91, 253.
 Fox v. Southack, 148.
 v. Widgey, 715.
 Fox's Appeal, 99.
 Foxcroft v. Barnes, 391.
 Frakes v. Brown, 673.
 Fraley v. Peters, 725.
 Franklin v. Merida, 257, 258, 402, 416.
 v. Palmer, 260.
 v. Talmadge, 300.
 Fraser v. Hunter, 662, 665.
 v. Weller, 435.
 Fraser Inst. v. Moore, 175.
 Frazier v. Crowell, 365.
 Frear v. Hardenbergh, 519.
 Frederick v. Gray, 203, 206.
 Freeholders of Gravesend v. Voorhis, 329.
 Freel v. Buckley, 216.
 Freeman v. Freeman, 234, 235, 677.
 v. Headley, 284.
 v. Sprague, 346.
 Freer v. Stotenbur, 465.
 Frelinghuysen v. Colden, 107, 400.
 Fremont v. Crippen, 411.
 French, Ex parte, 104.
 v. Burns, 244.
 v. Edwards, 220, 319.
 v. Grenet, 531.
 v. Lancaster, 716.
 v. Pearce, 615, 619, 623, 626.
 v. Spencer, 740, 747.
 Frentz v. Klotsch, 209, 212.
 Frey v. Ramsour, 680.
 Friend v. Wise, 759.
 Frink v. Branch, 107.
 Frisbee v. Timanus, 441, 445.
 Frisbee's Appeal, 99.
 Frisbie v. Whitney, 546, 746.
 Frisby v. Withers, 610.
 Frische v. Kramer, 243.
 Frost ads. Brown, 44, 418, 420.
 v. Cloutman, 37, 40.
 v. Duncan, 465.
 Fry v. Shehee, 242.
 Fugate v. Pierce, 579, 637, 640, 644, 648, 651.
 Fulcher v. Griffin, 130.
 Fulham v. McCarthy, 115, 315.
 Fulkerson v. Brownlee, 607.
 Fuller v. Carr, 724.
 v. Wadsworth, 239, 285.
 Fullerton v. Fitzgerald, 454.
 v. McCurdy, 244.
 Funk v. Haldeman, 61, 86.
 v. Newcomer, 209, 715.
 Furguson v. Coward, 112.
 Furlong v. Garrett, 616, 663.
 Fussell v. Gregg, 101.
 v. Hughes, 102.
 Gadsby v. Dyer, 610.
 Gage v. Pumpelly, 758.

- Gaillard v. Smart, 297.
 Gaines v. Buford, 218.
 v. City of New Orleans, 478, 487, 499.
 v. Kennedy, 581, 533.
 v. New Orleans, 680.
 Galbraith v. Gedge, 144.
 v. Zimmerman, 695.
 Galbreath v. Estes, 180.
 Gale v. Hines, 193, 194, 199, 203.
 Gallagher v. Bennett, 257, 258, 259.
 v. McNutt, 340, 341.
 Galletley v. Williams, 423.
 Galloway v. Finley, 231.
 v. Ogle, 253.
 Gamble v. Horr, 665.
 Games v. Stiles, 694.
 Gano v. Aldridge, 323.
 Garber v. State, 691.
 Gardiner v. Schuylkill Bridge Co. 402.
 v. Tisdale, 74.
 Gardner v. Collins, 436, 729.
 v. Gardner, 131.
 v. Granniss, 331, 490, 512.
 v. Heart, 557.
 v. Kersey, 509.
 v. Keteltas, 141.
 v. Ogden, 396, 466.
 Garner v. Hannah, 273.
 v. Jones, 476.
 v. Marshall, 153, 155, 156, 303.
 v. McCullough, 317.
 Garrett v. Adrain, 657, 661.
 v. Clark, 274.
 v. Lyle, 680.
 Garrison v. Savignac, 410.
 Gates v. Butler, 622.
 v. Green, 88.
 v. Preston, 370, 372.
 v. Smith, 235.
 Gatton v. Tolley, 512.
 Gaven v. Hagen, 224.
 Gay v. Hamilton, 244.
 v. Kingsley, 260.
 v. Mitchell, 162.
 v. Parpart, 98, 390.
 Gaylord v. Van Loan, 612.
 Geiger v. Braun, 273, 276.
 Gelpeke v. Mil. & H. R. R. Co. 410.
 Genin v. Ingersoll, 42.
 Georgetown (Comm'rs) v. Taylor, 190.
 Georgia v. Grant, 750.
 Gernet v. Lynn, 605.
 Gerring v. Barfield, 611.
 Gerrish v. Clough, 67.
 Gerry v. Holford, 205.
 Gibbons v. Dayton, 272.
 v. Martin, 159, 160, 161.
 Gibert v. Peteler, 139, 234, 236.
 Gibson v. Bishop of Bath, 297.
 v. Bogy, 724.
 v. Chouteau, 352, 377, 611.
 Gibson v. Manly, 435.
 v. Vaughn, 202.
 Gidney v. Earl, 73.
 Gilbert v. Thompson, 372.
 Gilchrist v. Ramsay, 194.
 Giles v. Ebsworth, 259.
 Gill v. Fauntleroy, 205.
 v. Gill, 503.
 v. Patten, 474.
 Gillaspie v. Osburn, 199.
 Gilleland v. Martin, 130, 732.
 Gillespie, Ex parte, 293.
 v. Bailey, 127.
 v. Sawyer, 696, 740.
 Gillett v. Bal'com, 411.
 v. Eaton, 246.
 v. Gaffney, 210, 216, 217, 546.
 v. Stanley, 115, 199, 342.
 v. Treganza, 146, 449, 668.
 Gilliam v. Bird, 56, 57, 158, 680, 681.
 Gillis v. Bailey, 139.
 Gilman v. Judge of Wayne Circuit, 427, 433, 437.
 Gilmer v. Poindexter, 670, 734.
 Girard, Ex parte, 762.
 Girdler v. Carter, 108.
 Gitt v. Watson, 301.
 Gittens v. Lowry, 631.
 Glass v. Doe, 176.
 Glen v. Gibson, 255.
 Gloucester Parish v. Beach, 611.
 Glover v. Manhattan Ry. Co. 118, 187.
 Goddard v. Foster, 500.
 v. Hall, 479.
 Godeffroy v. Caldwell, 537.
 Godwin v. Stebbins, 272.
 Goerges v. Hufschmidt, 410.
 Golden v. Snellen, 429.
 Golden Fleece Co. v. Cable Con. Co. 545.
 Goldham v. Edwards, 301.
 Golding v. Golding, 137.
 Goldsmith v. Jones, 89.
 Gomber v. Hackett, 266.
 Goodale v. Fifteenth Dist. Court, 447.
 Goodman v. Kine, 453.
 v. Winter, 113.
 Goodnough v. Sheppard, 407.
 Goodrich v. Jones, 56.
 Goodright v. Cordwent, 291.
 v. Rich, 153, 323, 329.
 v. Swymmer, 60.
 v. Vivian, 262.
 (d. Duke of Montague) v. Wrong, 20.
 Goodtitle v. Alker, 70, 72, 73, 90, 334, 337.
 (d. Parker) v. Baldwin, 667.
 v. Braham, 679.
 v. Clayton, 418.
 v. Jones, 145.
 (d. Hart) v. Knott, 146.
 v. Lammiman, 331.
 v. North, 492, 508.

- Goodtitle v. Tombs, 472, 483, 487, 491, 493.
 (d. Miller) v. Wilson, 53.
 v. Woodward, 290.
 Goodwin v. Appleton, 384.
 Goodwyn v. Myers, 497, 542.
 Gordinier's Appeal, 22.
 Gordon v. Pearson, 203.
 v. Sizer, 72.
 Gorham v. Arnold, 241.
 v. Gorham, 131.
 v. Jones, 334.
 Gosser v. Hickenlooper, 340.
 Gossom v. Donaldson, 211.
 Gotham v. Gotham, 715.
 Gough v. Bell, 715.
 Gould v. Bennett, 337.
 Goundie v. Northampton Water Co. 390.
 Gourley v. Kinley, 116, 178.
 Gouverneur v. Lynch, 556.
 Gower v. Quinlan, 195, 590.
 Grable v. McCulloh, 241.
 Graham v. Anderson, 112.
 v. Columbus & I. C. Ry. Co. 74.
 v. Moore, 254.
 v. Peat, 420, 545, 548, 553.
 v. Whitely, 329.
 Granby v. Amherst, 128.
 Grand Rapids v. Whittlesey, 189.
 Grand Surrey Canal Co. v. Hall, 611.
 Grant v. Birdsall, 300.
 v. Fowler, 614.
 v. McKee, 755.
 v. Van Schoonhoven, 115.
 v. White, 253.
 Grattan v. Wiggins, 606.
 Graves v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 34, 343, 671.
 v. Berdan, 88.
 v. Joice, 502.
 v. McKeon, 330.
 v. Walls, 264.
 v. White, 226.
 Gravesend (Freeholders) v. Voorhis, 329.
 Gravier v. Ivory, 97.
 Gray v. Bartlett, 611.
 v. Bates, 205.
 v. Blanchard, 139, 755, 758.
 v. Coan, 302.
 v. Givens, 219, 220.
 v. Johnson, 331.
 v. Payne, 668.
 v. Tyler, 99, 102.
 Graybeal v. Powers, 723.
 Graydon v. Ejector, 404.
 Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 684, 685.
 Greeley v. Thomas, 344.
 Green v. Armstrong, 56.
 v. Biddle, 396, 471, 473, 483, 513, 520, 522, 523, 525, 541, 542.
 v. Butler, 248.
 v. Chelsea, 133, 683, 721.
 v. Dixon, 526, 538.
 v. Finin, 235.
 Green v. Glynn, 391.
 v. Green, 126.
 v. Harman, 84.
 v. Lamb, 248.
 v. Liter, 40, 344, 760.
 v. Mizelle, 607.
 v. Neal, 436, 729, 730.
 v. Turner, 606.
 v. Watkins, 40.
 v. Winter, 149.
 Greene v. Greene, 69, 144.
 Greenfield v. Camden, 690, 695.
 Greenleaf v. Dubuque & S. C. R. R. Co. 690.
 Greenwalt v. Duncan, 87.
 v. Tucker, 761.
 Greenwich (Inhab.) v. Easton & A. R.
 R. Co. 188.
 Greer v. McClelland, 416.
 v. Mezes, 160, 161, 300, 734.
 v. Smith, 296.
 v. Tripp, 200, 209, 282.
 Gregg v. Sayre, 650.
 v. Tesson, 140, 142.
 v. Von Phul, 227, 229, 269, 272, 283.
 Gregory v. Crab, 259.
 v. Gregory, 441, 448.
 v. Haynes, 467.
 v. Jacksons, 366.
 v. Lincoln, 419.
 v. Tozier, 154, 179.
 Griffin v. Lovell, 244.
 v. Stamper, 661.
 Grim v. Dyar, 201.
 Grimes v. Wilson, 513.
 Grimm v. Curley, 623.
 Grimestone v. Burgers, 462.
 Grisar v. McDowell, 166, 167, 169.
 Griscom v. Evens, 696.
 Grisler v. Stuyvesant, 458.
 Griswold v. Bragg, 31, 520, 525, 528, 529, 535, 536, 542, 543.
 v. Sweet, 454.
 Groft v. Weakland, 583, 590, 592.
 Grogan v. Town of Hayward, 611.
 Grosholz v. Newman, 565, 716.
 Gross v. Welwood, 153, 247, 566.
 Grotz v. Lehigh & W. B. Coal Co. 59.
 Grout v. Cooper, 512.
 Grove v. City of Fort Wayne, 89.
 Groves v. Marks, 307.
 Grubb v. Bayard, 85.
 v. Grubb, 85, 279, 280.
 Grube v. Wells, 615, 622.
 Grandin v. Carter, 260.
 Gubbins v. Massey, 55.
 Gudgey v. Barnes, 231.
 v. Hensley, 584.
 Guernsey v. Powers, 442, 443.
 Guest v. City of Brooklyn, 87.
 Guild v. Richards, 137.
 Gulliver v. Burr, 286.
 Gunderson v. Cook, 106.

- Guthrie v. Pugsley, 501, 502.
 Gutzweiler v. Lackmann, 134.
 Guy v. Hanly, 343.
 Gwinn v. Smith, 248.
 Gynn v. Kirby, 295.
- Hackett v. Carter, 333.
 Hagar v. Brainerd, 242.
 Hagey v. Detweiler, 367, 726.
 Haggin v. Clark, 499, 530.
 Haigh v. Jaggard, 444, 451.
 v. Paris, 396, 460.
 Haight v. Lucia, 449.
 Haines v. Haines, 235.
 v. Thomson, 244.
 Halre v. Baker, 352.
 Hairston v. Jaudon, 228.
 Hale v. Darter, 724.
 v. Glidden, 627.
 v. Hord, 698.
 v. Wilkinson, 237.
 Halford v. Tetherow, 194, 208, 209.
 Hall v. Austin, 356, 734.
 v. Bell, 358, 359.
 v. Butler, 268.
 v. Dexter, 410, 411, 412.
 v. Dodge, 220, 371.
 v. Greenly, 100.
 v. Hall, 142.
 v. Law, 630.
 v. Mayo, 683.
 v. McLeod, 561.
 v. Myers, 274.
 v. Russell, 546.
 v. Savill, 606.
 v. Stevens, 201, 604.
 v. Wadsworth, 287.
 v. Wells, 415.
 v. White, 181.
 Hallett v. Eslava, 700.
 v. Hastie, 298.
 v. Wylie, 88.
 Halsey v. McCormick, 722.
 Ham v. Ham, 334, 715.
 Hamblin v. Bank of Cumberland, 230.
 Hamer v. Raymond, 330.
 Hamilton v. Boggess, 604.
 v. Cummings, 87.
 v. Third Ave. R. R. Co. 498, 499.
 v. Wentworth, 306.
 v. Wright, 117, 293, 297, 632, 633, 639, 660.
 Hammond v. Fuller, 84.
 v. Railroad Co. 138, 139.
 v. Stoy, 326.
 Hamond v. Toulman, 508.
 Hampson v. Fall, 179, 302.
 Hancock v. Walsh, 167.
 v. Wentworth, 72.
 Hanks v. Price, 182.
 Hanna v. Phillips, 492.
 v. Renfro, 132, 661.
- Hannah v. Collins, 715.
 Hannay v. Thompson, 245, 246.
 Hannibal (City of) v. Draper, 81, 188.
 & St. J. R. R. Co. v. Clark, 621, 646, 651, 661.
 & St. J. R. R. Co. v. Knudson, 812.
 Hanrick v. Thompson, 556.
 Hansel v. Mead, 347, 348.
 Hanson v. Armstrong, 155, 407, 413.
 v. Johnson, 563.
 Harden v. Hays, 537.
 Harder v. Harder, 262.
 Hardie v. Young, 504.
 Hardin v. Barrett, 662.
 v. Crate, 661, 662.
 v. Gouveneur, 651.
 v. Kirk, 308, 462.
 Harding v. Elzey, 696.
 v. Parshall, 234.
 Hardwick v. Jones, 246.
 Hardy v. DeLeon, 148.
 v. Johnson, 220, 359.
 Hare v. Fury, 487, 488.
 Harebottle v. Placock, 59.
 Hargrave v. Hargrave, 447.
 Harker v. Whitaker, 479, 480.
 Harkey v. Houston, 158.
 Harkness v. Hyde, 396.
 v. McIntire, 494.
 Harlan v. Haynie, 311.
 v. Howard, 691.
 Harland v. Eastman, 690.
 Harle v. McCoy, 228.
 Harlow v. Fisk, 722.
 v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 85.
 Harman v. Gartman, 202.
 Harmon v. James, 198.
 Harnage v. Berry, 621.
 Harney v. Lamborn, 299.
 v. Morton, 400.
 Harpur's Case, 81.
 Harral v. Levery, 601.
 v. Wright, 204.
 Harrall v. Gray, 476.
 Harrington v. Conolly, 501.
 v. Libby, 458.
 v. Slade, 181.
 v. Watson, 88.
 Harris v. Bannon, 453.
 v. Bell, 233.
 v. Catlin, 224.
 v. Dennie, 163.
 v. Elliott, 55.
 v. Equator M. & S. Co. 59, 577.
 v. Frink, 225, 278.
 v. Mason, 294.
 v. Smith, 180.
 v. Vinyard, 352, 354.
 v. Waite, 430.
 Harrisburg (Borough) v. Crangle, 367.
 Harrison v. Castner, 525.

- Harrison v. Harrison, 193, 210.
 v. Middleton, 276, 279.
 v. Parker, 73.
 v. Pool, 604.
 v. Stevens, 306, 307.
 v. Taylor, 208, 282.
 Harrison, N. T. &c. Turnpike Co. v. Roberts, 708.
 Hart v. Bostwick, 570, 600, 607.
 v. Fitzgerald, 193.
 v. Giles, 710.
 v. Gregg, 201.
 v. Lindley, 276.
 v. Robertson, 219, 220.
 Hartley v. Brown, 352, 669.
 v. Ferrell, 670, 672.
 Hartung v. Witte, 727.
 Hartz v. St. Paul & S. C. R. R. 105.
 Harvey v. Mitchell, 694.
 v. Morris, 231.
 v. Tyler, 155, 566, 570.
 Harvin v. Hodge, 194, 203.
 Hasbrouck v. Bunce, 219.
 Haskell v. Allen, 724.
 Haslett v. Crain, 533, 535.
 Hass v. Plautz, 727.
 Hassam v. Barrett, 244.
 v. Day, 97.
 Hassell v. Walker, 715.
 Hastings v. Livermore, 83.
 Hatch v. Bullock, 253.
 v. Dwight, 722.
 Hatcher v. Briggs, 520, 526, 527, 529.
 Hatchett v. Conner, 537.
 Hatfield v. Bushnell, 339, 760.
 Hathaway v. Valentine, 134.
 Hathorne v. Haines, 334, 335.
 Hauxhurst v. Lobrec, 278.
 Haverly v. Alcott, 469.
 Hawes v. Marchant, 711.
 v. Ryder, 301.
 v. Shaw, 253, 254.
 Hawesville (Trustees) v. Hawes, 76.
 Hawk v. Senseman, 201.
 Hawkins v. Brown, 494, 520.
 v. Hayes, 375.
 v. Hudson, 574.
 v. King, 505.
 v. Reichert, 153, 162, 303.
 Hawley v. James, 333.
 v. Simons, 396.
 v. Twyman, 364.
 Hawthorne, In re, 396.
 Hayden v. Merrill, 488.
 v. Stewart, 179.
 Hayes v. Bernard, 703.
 v. Harmony Grove Cemetery, 132.
 v. Livingston, 713.
 v. Mutual Prot. Ass'n, 718.
 v. Tabor, 715.
 Haynes v. Boardman, 594, 597.
 v. Onderdonk, 467.
 Haynes v. Young, 723.
 Hays v. Carr, 232, 391.
 Haythorn v. Margerem, 99, 142.
 Hayward v. Sedgley, 553.
 Headlam v. Hedley, 720.
 Headman v. Rose, 69.
 Heard v. City of Brooklyn, 74.
 Heaston v. Board of Comm'rs, &c. 814.
 Heath v. Ross, 675.
 v. Whidden, 335.
 v. Williams, 553.
 Heatherley v. Weston, 28, 218.
 Hebrard v. Jefferson Min. Co. 191.
 Hecht v. Boughton, 680.
 v. Colquhoun, 99, 476.
 Heck v. Fisher, 538.
 Hedgepeth v. Robertson, 499.
 Hedger v. Ward, 691.
 Heermans v. Robertson, 146.
 Hefner v. Downing, 726.
 Heft v. McGill, 124.
 Helfner v. Porter, 326.
 Helfenstein v. Leonard, 161.
 Hellreigel v. Manning, 705, 706.
 Hemphill v. Giles, 274, 275.
 Hems v. Stroud, 322.
 Henderson v. Dickey, 668.
 v. Eason, 488, 489.
 v. Griffin, 586, 729.
 v. Kenner, 434.
 v. McPike, 523.
 v. Morrill, 705.
 v. N. Y. Central R.R. Co. 92, 187.
 v. Ownby, 533, 534.
 v. Scott, 356.
 v. Tennessee, 341, 754.
 Hendrick v. Cannon, 272.
 v. Lindsay, 361.
 Hendricks v. Kelly, 713.
 v. Ranson, 159, 160, 608.
 v. Snediker, 630.
 Hendrickson v. Hunkley, 705.
 Hendy v. Stephenson, 310.
 Henley v. Branch Bank, Mobile, 123.
 v. Hotaling, 244.
 v. Wilson, 301, 325, 638, 663.
 Hennesy v. Farrell, 246.
 Henry v. Henry, 741.
 v. Reichert, 678, 680, 681, 699, 716.
 Henshaw v. Bissell, 711.
 Henwood v. Cheeseman, 331.
 Hepburn v. Dunlop, 228.
 Herbert v. Hanrick, 632.
 v. King, 671.
 v. Laughllyn, 77, 83.
 Herr v. Herr, 391.
 Herrell v. Sizeland, 270, 274, 276, 278, 279.
 Herrick v. Hopkins, 724.
 Herrington v. Santa Clara Co. 301.
 v. Williams, 349, 350.
 Hestres v. Brannan, 552.
 Hetzel v. Barber, 259.

- Hewlett v. Cock, 691.
 v. Wood, 133, 362, 391.
 Hewlins v. Shippam, 82, 83.
 Hiatt v. Kirkpatrick, 625, 626.
 Hibbard v. Foster, 220.
 Hickey v. Stewart, 735.
 Hickman v. Cooke, 100.
 v. Dale, 407, 468.
 Hicks v. Lovell, 224, 226.
 v. Marshall, 301.
 v. Rogers, 219.
 v. Sheppard, 351.
 Higbee v. Rice, 194, 343.
 Higginbotham v. Higginbotham, 406, 407.
 Higgins v. Highfield, 482.
 v. Turner, 257, 259.
 v. Woodward, 451.
 Higinbotham v. Stoddard, 116, 724.
 Hildreth v. Thompson, 405.
 Hill v. Allison, 301, 311.
 v. Bailey, 348.
 v. Billingsly, 705.
 v. Cooper, 513.
 v. Crosby, 561, 594.
 v. Draper, 216.
 v. Epley, 710, 711.
 v. Giles, 321.
 v. Hill, 56, 343.
 v. Kricke, 155.
 v. Meeker, 107.
 v. Meyers, 512.
 v. Payson, 250.
 v. Proctor, 725.
 v. Spear, 46, 525.
 v. Still, 234.
 v. United States, 163.
 v. West, 715.
 v. Winn, 226, 231, 235.
 Hillegass v. Hillegass, 176.
 Hiller v. Shattuck, 436, 729.
 Hillingsworth v. Brewster, 26, 81, 163.
 Hillman v. Baumbach, 46, 497.
 Hills v. Loomis, 244.
 v. Parker, 175.
 v. Sherwood, 370.
 Himes v. Keighblynger, 695.
 Hines v. Trantham, 220.
 Hinkley v. Greene, 205.
 v. Wheelwright, 248.
 Hinman v. Warren, 64.
 Hinton v. McNeil, 400.
 Hipp v. Babin, 101, 743.
 Hisecock v. Phelps, 223.
 Hitchin v. Campbell, 371.
 Hitchings v. Morrison, 627.
 Hit-tuk-ho-mi v. Watts, 744.
 Hlawacek v. Bohman, 447.
 Hoadley v. San Francisco, 611, 762.
 Hoag v. Hoag, 147, 246, 259.
 Hoboken Land & Imp. Co. v. Mayor, &c.
 75, 186, 187.
 Hobson v. McArthur, 312.
 Hodges v. Eddy, 610, 636, 641, 644.
 v. Perine, 104.
 Hodgkins v. Price, 39, 41, 51.
 Hodgson v. Gascoigne, 411, 509.
 Hodson v. Van Fossen, 177.
 Hoey v. Furman, 610.
 Hoffman v. Beard, 97.
 v. Riehl, 724.
 Hogan v. Kurtz, 300, 346, 379, 382, 612, 729, 730, 731.
 v. Page, 763.
 v. Smith, 22, 382.
 Hogans v. Carruth, 692.
 Hogg v. Link, 341.
 Holbrook v. Moore, 339.
 v. Nichol, 678.
 Holcomb v. Holcomb, 107.
 Holdfast v. Shepard, 582, 585.
 Holdridge v. Gillespie, 248.
 Holford v. Bailey, 78.
 v. Dunnett, 261.
 Holladay v. Littlepage, 612.
 Hollenbeck v. Rowley, 722.
 Holley v. Hawley, 198, 206, 570, 602, 604.
 Hollingsworth v. Holschousen, 356.
 v. Spaulding, 134.
 Hollinshead v. Nauman, 593.
 Hollis v. Burns, 276.
 Hollister v. Young, 616, 620.
 Holman v. Elliott, 343.
 Holmes v. Bell, 447.
 v. Bellingham, 722.
 v. City of Carondelet, 375, 377.
 v. Coryell, 691, 693.
 v. Davis, 317, 430, 475, 481, 495, 498.
 v. Holmes, 229.
 v. Seely, 127, 306, 307, 308, 387.
 v. Stout, 556.
 v. Williams, 465, 477.
 Holt v. Miers, 372.
 v. Rees, 246, 306, 314.
 Holton v. Whitney, 597.
 Holtzapple v. Phillibaum, 587, 588, 739.
 Holyoke v. Adams, 360.
 Home Manfg. Co. v. Gough, 226.
 Homestead Co. v. Valley R. R. 514, 533.
 Homer v. Cilley, 694.
 Hood v. Hood, 136.
 v. Palmer, 589.
 Hoofnagle v. Anderson, 744.
 Hooper v. Bridgewater, 353, 359.
 v. Cummings, 138.
 v. Hall, 220, 233.
 v. Scheimer, 737, 744.
 v. Winston, 149.
 Hopkins v. McLaren, 375.
 v. Myers, 365.
 v. Noyes, 220.
 v. Stephens, 145.
 v. Ward, 146.
 Hoppough v. Struble, 351, 352.
 Hord v. Baugh, 693.

- Hord v. Walker, 333.
 Horn v. Cole, 708.
 v. Keteltas, 244.
 Hornback v. Cincinnati & Z. R. R. Co. 139.
 Horncastle v. Charlesworth, 217, 547.
 Horne v. Howell, 204, 602.
 Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. 187, 139.
 v. Leeds, 259, 274.
 Horsefall v. Mather, 261, 262.
 Horsey v. Horsey, 271, 279.
 Horsley v. Garth, 384.
 Horton v. White, 446, 449.
 Hosford v. Ballard, 265, 291.
 Hostetter v. Hykas, 253.
 Hotaling v. Hotaling, 283.
 Hotchkiss v. Auburn & R. R. Co. 465, 476, 484, 489, 490.
 Hough v. Hammond, 395.
 Houghton Co. v. Comm'rs of State Land Office, 767.
 Houpes v. Alderson, 55, 78.
 House v. McCormick, 715.
 Houston v. Jordan, 37.
 Houston & T. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 336.
 & T. C. R. R. Co. v. McGehee, 422.
 Houx v. Batteen, 626.
 Howard v. Carpenter, 278.
 v. Fessenden, 57.
 v. Gosset, 301.
 v. Howard, 294, 295, 654.
 v. Kennedy, 407, 410, 468.
 v. Massengale, 526, 700.
 v. Moot, 123, 150.
 v. Railway Co. 151, 410.
 v. Rawson, 295.
 v. Reedy, 622.
 v. Shaw, 225.
 v. Throckmorton, 489.
 Howards v. Davis, 227.
 Howe v. Butterfield, 405.
 v. Rochester Iron Mfg. Co. 451.
 v. Russell, 480.
 v. Wildes, 306, 318.
 v. Willson, 332.
 Howell v. Eldridge, 415.
 v. Leavitt, 247, 432.
 Howland v. Needham, 454.
 v. Newark Assoc'n, 598, 654.
 Howse v. Moody, 110.
 Hoyle v. Stowe, 114, 218, 315.
 Hoyt, In re, 147.
 v. Dimon, 715.
 v. Sprague, 124.
 v. Wright, 761.
 Hubbard v. Little, 547.
 Hubbell v. Fowler, 357.
 v. Lerch, 115, 300, 315, 316, 464.
 v. Moulson, 247, 539.
 Hudgins v. Kemp, 487.
 Hudson v. Putney, 98, 200, 606.
 Huenermund v. Erie Ry. Co. 331.
 Huerstal v. Muir, 407.
 Huerstel v. Lorillard, 443.
 Hueston v. Eaton & H. R. R. Co. 391.
 Huff v. Walker, 128.
 Huffell v. Armitstead, 270.
 Huftalin v. Mianer, 499.
 Huggins v. Ketchum, 158.
 Hughes v. Devlin, 216, 546.
 v. Edwards, 240.
 v. Hazard, 553.
 v. Holliday, 362.
 v. Israel, 631, 640, 644, 662.
 v. Lane, 311, 313, 357.
 v. United States, 370, 748.
 v. Watt, 673.
 Hukill v. Page, 146.
 Hulce v. Thompson, 465.
 Hulett v. Nugent, 272.
 Hull & Selby Railway, In re, 65.
 Huls v. Buntin, 660.
 Hulsecamp v. Teel, 760.
 Humbert v. Trinity Church, 174, 175, 192, 203, 564, 615, 619, 629, 634, 635, 640, 654.
 Humble v. Spears, 700.
 Humphrey v. Hurd, 248.
 Humphreys v. Newman, 517.
 v. Taylor, 134.
 Humphries v. Huffman, 159, 572, 574, 638, 662.
 Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 610, 682.
 Hunt v. Beeson, 314.
 v. Campbell, 306, 307, 309, 310.
 v. Crawford, 146.
 v. Guilford, 592.
 v. Haven, 467.
 v. McClanahan, 297.
 v. McFarland, 327.
 v. O'Neill, 137, 396, 508.
 v. Pond, 496, 530.
 v. Thompson, 143, 176.
 v. Turner, 356.
 v. Wickliffe, 610, 766.
 Hunter v. Cochran, 700.
 v. Field, 119.
 v. Middleton, 75.
 v. Morse, 46, 328.
 v. Osterhoudt, 267.
 v. Rice, 108.
 v. Starin, 549, 554.
 v. Trustees of Sandy Hill, 53.
 Huntington v. Asher, 83, 85.
 v. Cotton, 241.
 Hurd v. Miller, 331.
 v. Tuttle, 156.
 Hurley v. Cox, 179.
 v. Street, 670.
 Hurah v. St. Paul & P. R. R. Co. 535.
 Hurst v. McNeil, 762.
 Hurt v. Blackburn, 345.
 v. Evans, 682.
 v. Hollingsworth, 743.

- Husband v. Aldrich, 539, 540.
 Huston v. Wickersham, 30, 493, 494, 496, 502.
 Hutchins v. Bacon, 46, 525, 543.
 Hutchinson v. Fuller, 57, 321.
 Hyde v. Hyde, 69.
 Hyndman v. Hyndman, 248.
 Hynes v. McDermott, 487.

 Ibrgrave v. Lee, 25.
 Icehour v. Rives, 685.
 Ihmsen v. Ormsby, 391.
 Indiana v. Milk, 716.
 Indianapolis, P. & C. R. R. Co. v. Ross, 617.
 & St. L. R. R. Co. v. Horst, 731.
 Ingalls v. Eaton, 314.
 Inge v. Garrett, 323.
 Inglis v. Trustees of Sailor's Snuff Harbor, 36, 40, 148.
 Ingraham v. Baldwin, 279.
 v. Wilkinson, 66.
 Inhabitants of Barnstable v. Thacher, 548.
 Deerfield v. Arms, 66.
 Greenwich v. Easton & A.
 R. R. Co. 188.
 North Brookfield v. Inhabitants of Warren, 688.
 Stockbridge v. Inhabitants of West Stockbridge, 693.
 Inloes v. Harvey, 181, 467.
 Inman v. Mead, 672.
 Insurance Co. v. Bangs, 176.
 Ipswich Petitioners, 722.
 Ireland v. Nichols, 266, 442, 444.
 Irish v. Scovil, 153.
 Irvine v. Adler, 624.
 v. Hanlin, 479.
 v. McRee, 100.
 Isham v. Schafer, 538.
 Isler v. Foy, 254.
 Israel v. Israel, 488.
 Ive v. Scott, 503.
 Ives v. Leet, 433.
 v. Sawyer, 680.
 Ivey v. Blum, 45, 46.
 Ison v. Gorton, 88.

 Jacks v. Chaffin, 565.
 v. Dyer, 490.
 v. Moore, 331.
 Jackson v. Allen, 153, 267.
 v. Ayers, 231, 232.
 v. Babcock, 180.
 v. Bard, 231, 675.
 v. Blanshan, 691.
 v. Boston & W. R. R. Co. 548, 722.
 v. Bradford, 715.
 v. Bradt, 218, 274, 278, 613.
 v. Brink, 201.
 v. Brownson, 261.
 (d. Livingston) v. Bryan, 274.

 Jackson v. Buel, 52, 53.
 v. Burton, 604.
 v. Carswell, 241.
 v. Chew, 436, 729.
 v. Christman, 691.
 v. Coe, 426, 427.
 v. Colden, 239.
 v. Dains, 338.
 v. Davenport, 485.
 v. Davis, 256, 260, 605, 691.
 v. Demont, 359.
 v. Denniston, 194.
 v. Dickenson, 418.
 v. Dieffendorf, 374, 375.
 v. Etz, 691.
 v. Flint, 180.
 v. Foster, 663.
 v. Frost, 680.
 v. Fuller, 270.
 v. Gager, 108.
 v. Graham, 708.
 v. Hakes, 304.
 v. Hammond, 693.
 v. Harder, 253.
 v. Harper, 253.
 v. Harrington, 678.
 v. Harrison, 264, 266.
 v. Hathaway, 55, 73, 722.
 v. Haviland, 31, 400, 590.
 v. Hawley, 402, 403.
 v. Hazen, 548.
 v. Hills, 486.
 v. Hinman, 254.
 v. Hotchkiss, 231.
 v. Hubble, 715.
 v. Hudson, 118, 123, 700.
 v. Johnson, 225.
 v. Laird, 418.
 v. Laughhead, 285.
 v. Lawton, 744.
 v. Leek, 142, 194, 258.
 v. Leggett, 358, 733.
 v. Leonard, 586, 594.
 v. Lodge, 336.
 v. Loomis, 474, 505, 529, 534.
 v. Ludeling, 236, 517, 518, 530.
 v. Luquere, 691.
 v. Lyons, 194.
 v. Matsdorf, 733.
 v. May, 52, 55, 89.
 v. McGinness, 281, 232, 235.
 v. McLeod, 253, 279.
 v. Miller, 227, 269, 278.
 v. Moncrief, 227, 283.
 v. Morse, 733.
 v. Nestles, 123.
 v. O'Donaghy, 68.
 v. Oltz, 59.
 v. Parker, 600.
 (d. Kemp) v. Parker, 693.
 (d. Van Cortlandt) v. Parkhurst, 279.

- Jackson v. Perkins, 695.
v. Pike, 49, 106.
 (d. Sparkman) v. Porter, 217, 546, 765.
v. Rainsay, 359.
v. Rathbone, 405, 411.
v. Richmond, 54.
v. Rightmyre, 546.
v. Robins, 112.
v. Rowland, 259.
v. Rumsey, 133.
v. Sample, 222, 291.
v. Schaubert, 462.
v. Sclover, 54.
v. Sheldon, 266.
v. Sidney, 68.
v. Stewart, 231, 293.
v. Stiles, 175, 182, 360, 415, 416, 462.
v. Stoetzel, 577.
v. Stone, 509.
v. Striker, 55.
v. Thomas, 567.
v. Thompson, 232.
v. Tibbits, 193, 201.
v. Tuttle, 375, 407, 467.
v. Van Antwerp, 394.
v. Vanderheyden, 68, 715.
v. Vredenberg, 600.
v. Waldron, 715.
v. Walker, 231, 232.
v. Waltermire, 547.
v. Warren, 239, 242, 285.
v. Wheat, 614.
 (d. Bradt; v. Whitbeck, 206.
v. Widger, 723.
v. Wilsey, 278.
v. Winslow, 119, 715.
v. Wood, 299, 473, 501, 512.
v. Woodruff, 628, 639, 647.
v. Woods, 68, 160.
 Jacobs v. Seward, 204.
 Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. v. Chandler, 722.
 James v. Beesly, 134.
v. Belding, 253.
v. Dean, 276.
v. Tait, 340.
 James River & Kan. Co. v. Thompson, 119.
 Jamison v. Petit, 727.
v. Smith, 305.
 Janes v. Patterson, 647.
 Jarboe v. Smith, 390.
 Jarvis v. Hamilton, 50.
v. Pike, 357.
 Jeffery v. Hursh, 245.
 Jeffries v. Zane, 486.
 Jemot v. Cooley, 142.
 Jenckes v. Cook, 257.
 Jenkins v. Bradford, 297.
v. Dalton, 348.
v. Fahey, 56, 228.
 Jenkins v. Means, 511.
v. Van Schaak, 97.
 Jenney v. Potts, 359.
 Jerome v. Ross, 104.
 Jesseer v. Gifford, 140.
 Jester v. Overseers, &c. 150.
 Jewell v. Porter, 715.
 Jewett v. Hamlin, 250.
 Jinkins v. Noel, 148.
 Johns v. McDaniel, 271.
v. Whitley, 266, 310.
 Johnson v. Adleman, 341, 346.
v. Albany & S. R. R. Co. 386.
v. Anderson, 722.
v. Britt, 390.
v. Brown, 627, 727.
v. Bryan, 537.
v. Byler, 349.
v. Chely, 257.
v. Cooper, 100.
v. Dixon, 262.
v. Elliot, 250.
v. Fullerton, 177, 407, 408.
v. Futch, 474, 483, 496, 511, 536, 546.
v. Gorham, 617, 620.
v. Gresham, 517, 529.
v. Gurley, 91, 253.
v. Harrelson, 533.
v. Hauser, 556.
v. Houston, 243, 246.
v. Long, 236.
v. McIlwain, 406.
v. McIntosh, 123, 665, 765.
v. McMillan, 723.
v. Monell, 762.
v. Nevill, 304, 320, 323, 327, 405.
v. Newman, 397.
v. Phillips, 606.
v. Simpson, 724.
v. Skillman, 83.
v. Tilden, 220.
v. Timmons, 691, 692, 700.
v. Toulmin, 206.
v. Towsley, 744.
v. Walter, 696.
v. Watts, 680.
v. Whitman, 440.
 Johnston v. Manns, 394.
 Jolly v. Ghering, 326.
 Jones v. Billstein, 131.
v. Bivins, 565.
v. Boston Mill Corp. 108.
v. Boyd, 97, 450.
v. Brinker, 350.
v. Burget, 410.
v. Burgett, 724.
v. Carwithen, 20.
v. Chiles, 468.
v. DeGraffenreid, 375.
v. Dove, 253, 254, 696.
v. Easley, 546.

- Jones v. Emery, 69.
 v. Fox, 99.
 v. Freed, 605.
 v. Hartley, 159.
 v. Hockman, 567.
 v. Hollopeter, 68.
 v. Hooper, 400.
 v. Johnson, 528.
 v. Jones, 565.
 v. League, 766.
 v. Manly, 350.
 (d. Griffiths) v. Marsh, 292.
 v. Massey, 487, 488.
 v. Parker, 307.
 v. Perkins, 194.
 v. Perry, 87, 100.
 v. Shackelford, 234.
 v. Smith, 627, 723.
 v. Soulard, 722.
 v. Sullivan, 700.
 v. Weathersbee, 84, 194, 203, 215, 216.
 v. Wilson, 605.
Jordan v. Deaton, 726, 727.
 v. Poillon, 96.
 v. Record, 309.
 v. Stevens, 343.
 v. Van Epps, 371.
 v. Ward, 236.
Jory v. Orchard, 292.
Joelyn v. Joelyn, 489.
Joy v. Berdell, 306.
Joyce v. Williams, 627, 726.
Judd v. Leonard, 82.
Judge v. Houston, 343.
Judson v. Macon Co. 760.

Kahn v. Old Telegraph Min. Co. 302, 341, 350, 352, 359, 699.
Kansas City Elevator Co. v. Union Pac. Ry. Co. 266.
Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. McBratney, 309, 668.
Karker v. Haverly, 229.
Karna v. Tanner, 61, 141.
Kathan v. Rockwell, 193, 601, 602.
Kaul v. Lawrence, 318, 327.
Kean v. Connelly, 488.
Keane v. Cannovan, 508.
Keay v. Goodwin, 202.
Keech v. Hall, 26, 239, 285.
Keeler v. Davis, 267.
Keen v. Jordan, 693.
Keenan v. Cavanaugh, 723.
Keene v. Angel, 428.
Keener v. Goodson, 630.
Keil v. Healey, 126.
Keith v. Johnson, 405.
 v. Keith, 545, 546, 605.
Kelgour v. Wood, 151.
Keller v. Auble, 209.
Kelley v. Meins, 115.
Kellogg v. Forsyth, 182, 394.

Kellogg v. Groves, 272.
 v. Kellogg, 308, 318.
 v. Mullen, 723.
 v. Smith, 726.
 v. Wood, 715.
Kellum, Matter of, 133.
 v. Smith, 727.
Kelly v. Fritz, 410.
 v. Hendricks, 713.
 v. Mack, 549.
 v. Owen, 69, 148.
 v. Sheehy, 50.
 v. Tate, 338.
Kelsey v. Ward, 371.
Kenada v. Gardner, 257.
Kendall v. Lawrence, 556.
Kenege v. Elliott, 91, 265.
Kennebunkport v. Smith, 611.
Kennedy v. Campbell, 43.
 v. Daniels, 307.
 v. Fury, 146.
 v. Green, 556.
 v. McCartney, 715.
Kenner v. Amer. Contract Co. 137.
Kenney v. Browne, 528.
 v. Phillipy, 686.
Kenniston v. Hannaford, 55, 71, 90, 356, 414.
Kent v. Agard, 244.
 v. Harcourt, 638.
 v. Lasley, 244, 393.
 v. Waite, 594.
Kentfield v. Hayes, 350, 351, 359.
Kentucky River Nav. Co. v. Commonwealth, 253, 264, 266.
Keon v. Keon, 336.
Kercheval v. Ambler, 405, 415.
Kerley v. Kerley, 37.
 v. Richardson, 501.
Kerr v. Hitt, 572.
 v. Merchants Exch. Co. 88, 160.
 v. Moon, 333.
Kerrains v. People, 162.
Kerrich v. Bransby, 133.
Kersey v. Garton, 297.
Kershaw v. Thompson, 399.
Kershner v. Kershner, 363.
Ketchum v. Schicketanz, 680.
Key v. Jennings, 236.
Keys v. Mason, 46.
Keyser v. Evans, 202.
Kibbe v. Ditto, 729.
Kidd v. Dennison, 447.
 v. Emmett, 366.
Kidder v. Barr, 235.
 v. Rixford, 540.
 v. Stevens, 304, 313.
Kiersted v. Orange & A. R. R. Co. 479.
Kilburn v. Adams, 594.
Kile v. Tubbs, 54.
Kilgour v. Gockley, 153.
Kille v. Ege, 327, 474, 494, 523, 695.

- Killen v. Compton, 344.
 Kimball v. Blaisdell, 715.
 v. Schoff, 715.
 Kimbrough v. Benton, 672.
 Kimmel v. Benca, 22, 375, 377, 382, 386.
 Kincaid v. Dorney, 726.
 v. Perkins, 605.
 King v. Bill, 466.
 v. Boyd, 131.
 v. Connolly, 277.
 v. Dickerman, 290.
 v. Fowler, 691.
 v. Fraser, 331.
 v. French, 557.
 v. Harris, 401.
 v. Hunt, 337.
 v. Inhabitants of Hollington, 80.
 v. Inhabitants of Mellor, 53.
 v. Inhabitants of Oakley, 127.
 v. Inhabitants of Old Alresford, 78.
 v. Inhabitants of Sedgley, 60.
 v. Inhabitants of Whixley, 80.
 v. Kent, 344.
 v. King, 140.
 v. La Grange, 167.
 v. Little, 489.
 v. Portis, 334.
 v. Rea, 715.
 v. Rowan, 212.
 v. St. Michael, 239.
 v. Stevens, 700.
 v. Warrington, 244.
 King of Spain v. Oliver, 118.
 Kings Co. Fire Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 721.
 Kingsdale v. Mann, 406.
 Kingston v. Lesley, 561, 667.
 Kingston's (Duchess of) Case, 370, 380.
 Kinna v. Smith, 239.
 Kinney v. Doe, 259.
 v. Farnsworth, 682.
 v. Harrett, 128.
 v. Slattery, 192, 204, 602, 603.
 v. Vinson, 342, 565, 619, 651.
 Kinsey v. Satterthwaite, 727.
 v. Sensbough, 296.
 Kipp v. Delamater, 462.
 Kirby v. Harrison, 228.
 Kirk v. Carr, 136.
 v. Hamilton, 713, 740, 741.
 v. Lynd, 763.
 Kirkland v. Cox, 145.
 v. Thompson, 156, 340.
 Kirtland v. Pounsett, 331.
 Kissell v. St. Louis Public Schools, 747.
 Kitchen v. Campbell, 35.
 v. Herring, 325.
 v. Wilson, 300, 610.
 Kittredge v. Locks & Canals, &c 204, 205.
 Klein v. Argenbright, 744.
 v. New Orleans, 164.
 Kline v. Beebe, 127.
 v. Johnston, 549, 552.
- Kline v. Moulton, 137.
 Klingensmith v. Faulkner, 327.
 Klinkener v. School Directors, 188.
 Klohs v. Reifsnyder, 130.
 Knapp v. Burton, 97, 391.
 Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Tolman, 336.
 Knight v. Heaton, 611.
 v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 718.
 v. Thayer, 714.
 Knipe v. Palmer, 130.
 Knolls v. Barnhart, 98, 178, 209, 211.
 Knouff v. Thompson, 712.
 Knowles v. Hull, 271.
 v. Toothaker, 627.
 Knowlton v. Smith, 626.
 Knox v. Cleveland, 178.
 v. Herod, 216, 546.
 v. Jones, 333.
 Koiner v. Rankin, 610.
 Koon v. Nichols, 392.
 Kortright v. Cady, 240, 606.
 Krause v. Means, 527.
 Krevet v. Meyer, 50.
 Kribbs v. Downing, 49, 153.
 Kron v. Dennis, 450.
 Krumm v. Beach, 226, 233.
 Kruse v. Wilson, 630, 660.
 Kuhns v. Bowman, 497, 502.
 Kunzie v. Wixom, 186, 279, 280.
 Kurkel v. Haley, 72, 90.
 Kyser v. Cannon, 848.
- Lacustrine Fertilizer Co. v. Lake Guano & F. Co. 104, 448, 452.
 Ladd v. Dubroca, 660.
 v. Hildebrandt, 434.
 Lady Dacres' Case, 321.
 Lady Windsor's Case, 104.
 Laffin v. Herrington, 418, 420.
 La Frombois v. Jackson, 614, 630, 634, 663.
 Lahiffe v. Hunter, 325.
 Lair v. Hunsicker, 548.
 Lamb v. Archer, 20.
 v. Davenport, 547.
 Lammers v. Nissen, 67.
 Lamont v. Cheshire, 351.
 Lamson v. Clarkson, 253, 254, 259.
 Lanahan v. Sears, 147, 244.
 Lancashire v. Mason, 260.
 Land Co. v. Saunders, 723.
 Landes v. Brant, 747.
 Lane v. Harrold, 487.
 v. Kennedy, 611.
 v. King, 411, 509.
 v. Schermerhorn, 130.
 v. Thompson, 140.
 Lang v. Ropke, 426, 430.
 Lange v. Jones, 107.
 Langendyck v. Burhans, 194, 487.
 Langford v. Love, 155.
 v. Poppe, 565.
 v. United States, 395.

- Langley v. Chapin, 139.
 v. Jones, 678.
 Lankford v. Green, 480.
 Lannay v. Wilson, 667.
 Lanning v. Dolph, 759.
 Lansing v. North River S. B. Co. 452.
 Lapeyre v. Paul, 601, 602, 603.
 Lapish v. Bangor Bank, 722.
 Larco v. Casanueva, 311.
 Larkin v. Avery, 274, 277.
 v. Saffarano, 114.
 v. Wilson, 434.
 Larman v. Huey, 205, 209.
 Larned v. Hudson, 277, 278, 317, 397, 480, 482, 483.
 Larrabee v. Lumbert, 479, 480, 482.
 Larreau v. Davignon, 120.
 Larriviere v. Madegan, 734.
 Larwell v. Stevens, 492, 614.
 Lattin v. McCarty, 99, 110, 463, 669.
 Laub v. Buckmiller, 100, 110, 463.
 Laverty v. Moore, 627, 726.
 Law v. Jackson, 462.
 v. Patterson, 205.
 Lawrence v. Ball, 607.
 v. Ballou, 157.
 v. Du Bois, 331.
 v. Hunt, 386.
 v. Kenney, 345.
 v. Webster, 209.
 Lawry v. Williams, 715.
 Lawson v. Cunningham, 198.
 Lay v. Lawson, 346.
 Lea v. Hernandez, 552.
 v. Polk County Copper Co. 662.
 v. Slatterly, 340.
 Leach v. Koenig, 256.
 v. Thomas, 262.
 League v. Egery, 729.
 Learned v. Copley, 527, 529, 543.
 Leary v. Langsdale, 322, 332.
 Lease v. Union Mut. L. I. Co. 124.
 Ledgerwood v. Pickett, 732.
 Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 63.
 Lee v. Bowman, 496, 527.
 v. Clary, 715.
 v. Cook, 700.
 v. Ejector, 404.
 v. Fox, 211.
 v. Kaufman, 168.
 v. Norris, 119.
 v. Simpson, 99, 305.
 Leeds v. Lockwood, 327.
 Leeper v. Baker, 572, 573, 574, 577.
 Leese v. Clark, 410, 411.
 Le Fevre v. Le Fevre, 82.
 v. Murdock, 143.
 Leffingwell v. Warren, 565, 730.
 Le Franc v. Richmond, 220.
 Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 371.
 Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. v. McFarlan, 560, 564.
 Lehmberg v. Biberstein, 331.
 Leitch v. Wells, 467.
 Leland v. Hathorne, 331.
 v. Tousey, 393, 467, 475, 480, 502, 508, 547.
 Lenox v. Clarke, 673.
 v. Notrebe, 441, 444.
 Lent v. Howard, 489.
 Leonard v. Leonard, 594.
 v. White, 55.
 Leport v. Todd, 260.
 Les Bois v. Bramell, 747.
 Lesher v. Sherwin, 231.
 Leslie v. Leslie, 358.
 Lessem v. Wilson, 301.
 Lestrade v. Barth, 352.
 Letchford v. Cary, 77, 387.
 Levi v. Engle, 304.
 Lewis v. Adams, 254.
 v. Brewster, 177.
 v. Cocks, 100, 522.
 v. Lewis, 723.
 v. McFarland, 136.
 v. Phillips, 673.
 v. Ringo, 134, 271.
 v. San Antonio, 190, 432.
 Lick v. Ray, 87.
 Lienow v. Ellis, 331.
 Lillianskyoldt v. Goss, 192, 216, 392.
 Lincoln v. French, 145.
 Lincoln & K. Bank v. Drummond, 314.
 Co. v. Magruder, 123, 174.
 Lindsey v. Danville, 500.
 v. Lindsey, 314.
 Linehan v. Anthony, 404.
 Linker v. Benson, 202, 206.
 Linthicum v. Ray, 55.
 v. Thomas, 523.
 Lion v. Burtis, 472, 483.
 Lippett v. Kelley, 497.
 Listowel v. Gibbings, 60.
 Litchfield (Baillifs, &c.) v. Slater, 368.
 Litter v. Green, 36, 344, 358.
 Littlejohn v. Attrill, 104.
 Littlewort v. Davis, 244.
 Livingston v. D'Orgenoy, 165.
 v. Hayes, 240, 242.
 v. Jefferson, 330, 331, 339.
 v. Livingston, 104, 448.
 v. Peru Iron Co. 618, 630, 638, 654.
 v. Reynolds, 262.
 v. Stickles, 264.
 v. Tanner, 269, 270, 271, 273, 279, 286, 317, 476, 480,
 482, 483.
 Lloyd v. Bunce, 612.
 v. Giddings, 700.
 v. Lynch, 210.
 v. Passingham, 443.
 v. Peell, 508.
 Locke v. Coleman, 708.

- Locke v. Motley, 79.
 Lockman v. Reilley, 96.
 Lockridge v. Daggett, 703.
 Lockwood v. Drake, 153, 303.
 v. Fox, 462.
 v. Mills, 295.
 Lodge v. Barnett, 723.
 Loeb v. Mathis, 330.
 Logan v. Goodall, 220, 221, 540.
 v. Jelks, 661.
 v. Moore, 715.
 v. Steele, 715.
 Loker v. Rolle, 99, 522.
 Lombard v. Cowham, 350, 351.
 London v. Greynne, 261.
 (Mayor of) v. Cole, 330, 331, 368.
 Londonderry v. Andover, 688.
 Long v. Colton, 683, 685, 687.
 v. Higginbotham, 640, 644.
 v. Kasebeer, 449.
 v. Linn, 364.
 v. Mast, 201, 604.
 v. Morton, 407.
 v. Neville, 374, 384, 411, 467.
 v. Stapp, 205.
 Longfellow v. Longfellow, 253.
 Longwell, v. Bentley, 97.
 Longworth v. Wolfington, 541.
 Lonsdale v. Rigg, 80.
 (Earl of) v. Nelson, 89.
 Lord v. Comm'rs of Sydney, 722.
 v. Dearing, 317, 476, 484.
 v. Sawyer, 610.
 v. Steamship Co. 64.
 Audley v. Pollard, 17.
 Lorillard v. Clyde, 302, 358.
 Lorymer v. Hollister, 297.
 Los Angeles (City of) v. Signoret, 312.
 Louisiana v. Jumel, 172.
 Louks v. Kenniston, 726.
 Lounsbery v. Snyder, 272.
 Love v. Edmonston, 142, 231, 233.
 v. Gates, 631.
 v. Law, 253, 260.
 v. Powell, 509.
 v. Shartzler, 491, 501, 527.
 v. Shields, 652.
 v. Simms, 29, 341, 342, 678, 754.
 v. Watkins, 235, 353.
 Lovell v. Frost, 585, 592, 613.
 Lovely v. Speisshoffer, 317.
 Low v. Elwell, 193, 278.
 v. Holmes, 447.
 v. Purdy, 493, 501.
 Lowe v. Emerson, 255, 256, 393.
 Lower v. Winters, 537.
 Lowes v. Lush, 706.
 Lownsdale v. Parrish, 758.
 Lowry v. Cady, 693.
 v. Jenkins, 402, 416.
 v. Tew, 234.
 Lozier v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co. 72.
 Lucas v. Brooks, 253.
 v. Johnson, 153, 155, 163, 174.
 v. King, 98.
 Luckett v. Williamson, 228.
 Lucy v. Lucy, 134.
 Ludlow v. Johnson, 134.
 v. McBride, 546.
 Lum v. Reed, 394, 549.
 Lunquest v. Ten Eyck, 517, 518, 527.
 Lunsford v. Turner, 258.
 Lunt v. Holland, 722.
 Lyell v. Kennedy, 329.
 v. Supervisors, &c. 174.
 Lyle v. Rollins, 153.
 Lyles v. Murphy, 253.
 Lyman v. Mower, 286.
 Lynch v. Bailey, 759.
 v. Bernal, 675.
 v. Withers, 43.
 Lynde v. Hough, 264.
 v. McGregor, 538.
 v. Williams, 580, 584, 646.
 Lyon v. Gormley, 73.
 v. Kain, 306.
 v. Mottuse, 36.
 Lyons v. Gregory, 693.
 Lytle v. Burgin, 179.
 v. State of Arkansas, 746.
 Macduncob v. Stafford, 320.
 Machin v. Geortner, 551, 553, 575.
 Mackall v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. 111, 676.
 Macklot v. Dubreuil, 566.
 Mactier v. Frith, 677.
 Maddon v. White, 124, 286.
 Madison Ave. Bapt. Ch. v. Oliver St. Bapt.
 Ch. 108, 240, 246, 247, 248.
 Madland v. Benland, 514.
 Magaw v. Cannon, 271.
 Magee v. Chadoin, 422, 426, 432.
 v. Magee, 567.
 Magruder v. Peter, 128.
 Magwire v. Labeaume, 496.
 v. Tyler, 668.
 Mahoney v. Middleton, 157, 160, 384.
 v. Van Winkle, 395.
 Main v. Killinger, 626, 727.
 v. Payne, 427.
 Makepeace v. Bancroft, 724.
 Malcolm v. Rogers, 218.
 Malin v. Rose, 425.
 Malins v. Brown, 234.
 Mallett v. Foxcroft, 390.
 Malloy v. Bruden, 583, 586.
 Malone v. Marriott, 181, 453.
 v. Stretch, 497, 542.
 Man v. Drexel, 374, 502.
 Manchester College v. Isherwood, 462.
 Mandeville v. Reynolds, 352.
 Mann v. Falcon, 241, 245, 349.

- Mann v. Rogers, 395.
 v. Young, 715.
Manning v. Dove, 364.
Manny v. Smith, 150.
Mansfield v. Dyer, 528.
Mantle v. Wollington, 28, 218.
Mapes v. Scott, 336, 444, 456.
Marable v. Jordan, 538.
Marble Co. v. Ripley, 85.
Marcy v. Darling, 57.
 v. Marcy, 201.
Marietta (City of) v. Emerson, 433.
Marion v. Ellis, 761.
Markal's Case, 34.
Marlow v. Adams, 520.
 v. Wiggins, 258.
Marquat v. Marquat, 317.
Marquez v. Frisbie, 744.
Marrett v. Murphy, 223.
Marriot v. Hamptcn, 372.
Marsh v. Brooks, 150, 754, 764, 765.
 v. Burt, 722.
 v. City of Brooklyn, 87.
Marshall v. Shafter, 306, 309, 380.
 v. Steam Nav. Co. 78, 79.
 v. Wing, 176.
 v. Wood, 316.
Marsteller v. McClean, 115.
Marston v. Hobbs, 314.
Martin v. Bonsack, 610.
 v. Brewster Iron Min. Co. 55.
 v. Davis, 163.
 v. Dwelly, 715.
 v. Fridley, 246.
 v. Judd, 572.
 v. Kennedy, 35, 370.
 v. Martin, 334, 367, 401, 544.
 v. O'Conner, 541.
 v. Porter, 499.
 v. Rector, 153, 416.
 v. Taylor, 760.
 v. Thompson, 511.
 v. Waddell, 63, 721.
 v. Wayman, 432, 435.
Marvin v. Dennison, 158, 180, 182, 183, 242, 392.
 v. Lewis, 514.
 v. Marvin, 427.
Marx v. McGlynn, 133, 149.
Mason v. Libbey, 693.
 v. Lord, 141.
 v. Walker, 132.
 v. Wallace, 235.
 v. Warner, 331.
Massey v. Trantham, 43.
Massie v. Long, 124, 218.
 v. Sebastian, 715.
Masten v. Olcott, 370, 386, 420.
Masters v. Eastis, 44.
Masterson v. Cheek, 700.
 v. Hagan, 483.
Mather v. Ministers of Trinity Church, 666.
- Mathews v. Horlbeck, 362.
Mathewson v. Thompson, 276.
Matson v. Cook, 553.
Matthews v. Bliss, 213.
 v. Ward, 145.
Mattox v. Helm, 407.
Mauck v. Mauck, 144.
Maul v. Rider, 210.
Maus v. Montgomery, 359.
Maxwell v. Levy, 761.
 v. Paine, 549.
May v. Calder, 128.
 v. Le Claire, 528.
 v. Slade, 219.
Mayer v. Ramsey, 349, 717, 718.
Mayhew v. Norton, 70, 721.
Maynard v. Cable, 227.
Mayne v. Jones, 407.
Mayor v. Coffin, 333, 462.
Mayor &c. v. Ewart, 380.
 v. Groshon, 104.
 v. North Shore S. I. F. Co. 87.
 v. Union Ferry Co. 86.
 v. Ward, 84.
 of London v. Cole, 330, 331, 368. of N. Y. v. Mabie, 86. of N. Y. v. Smith, 314.
Mays v. Lewis, 715.
 v. Rose, 441.
McAfferty v. Conover, 627.
McAlexander v. Wright, 293.
McAllen v. Woodcock, 116.
McAllister v. Devane, 609, 610.
McAlpin v. Lee, 237.
McArthur v. Henry, 726.
 v. Porter, 308.
McAulay v. Western Vt. R. R. Co. 702.
McBain v. McBain, 390.
McBee v. Johnson, 46.
McBurney v. Cutler, 681.
 v. Wellman, 244.
McCabe v. McCabe, 488, 489.
McCall v. Carpenter, 98.
 v. Neely, 632, 643, 650.
 v. Webb, 206.
McCallum v. Boswell, 209.
McCamy v. Higdon, 657, 661.
McCann v. Rathbone, 41.
McCauna v. Johnston, 272, 281, 291.
McCarman v. Cochran, 305.
McCarron v. Cassidy, 244.
McCarthy v. Mann, 715.
 v. Yale, 313.
McCarty v. Holman, 79.
 v. Roberts, 337.
McCaslin v. State, 269, 270.
McCaughal v. Ryan, 120.
McCauley v. Fulton, 223, 350.
 v. Gilmer, 303, 340, 354.
McCausland v. Fleming, 692.
McChesney v. Wainwright, 360.

- McChord v. McClintock, 410.
 McClain v. Todd, 533.
 McClanahan v. Barrow, 283.
 McClane v. White, 283, 342.
 McClellan v. Kellogg, 639.
 McClelland v. Dickenson, 137.
 McClennan v. McCleod, 343.
 McClintock v. Bryden, 59.
 McClinton v. Pittsburg, F. W. &c. Ry. Co.
 92.
 McClung v. Echols, 278, 285.
 v. Ross, 201, 204, 580.
 McClure v. McClure, 272, 390.
 McClurg v. Wilson, 145.
 McComb v. Wright, 691.
 McConnell v. Reed, 346.
 McConnell v. McConnell, 632, 659, 662.
 v. Wilcox, 167.
 McCool v. Smith, 113.
 McCoon v. Smith, 176.
 McCormick v. Barnum, 627.
 v. Nixon, 450, 451.
 v. Sullivant, 333.
 McCorry v. King, 605.
 McCourt v. Eckstein, 89, 204.
 McCown v. Hannah, 179.
 McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 615, 652.
 v. Clarke, 107.
 v. McCracken, 181.
 McCravey v. Remson, 254.
 McCrea v. Haraszthy, 133, 137.
 McCready v. Guardians, &c. 486.
 v. Virginia, 64, 79.
 McCreary v. Marston, 254, 258.
 McCreery v. Allender, 149.
 v. Duane, 347.
 v. Everding, 407, 573.
 v. Sawyer, 347.
 McCrubb v. Bray, 484, 491, 501.
 McCullough v. Guetner, 297.
 v. Wall, 66, 584.
 McDaniel v. Wailes, 299.
 McDearman v. McClure, 540.
 McDermott v. Davison, 294.
 McDevitt v. Sullivan, 259.
 McDonald v. Schneider, 700.
 v. Smalley, 761.
 McElmoyle v. Cohen, 564.
 McEntire v. Brown, 178.
 McEowen v. Lewis, 723, 724.
 McEvoy v. Loyd, 639.
 McFarland v. Goodman, 53.
 McFarlane v. Kerr, 611.
 McGary v. City of Lafayette, 499.
 McGlasson v. Bradford, 302.
 McGlynn v. Moore, 266.
 McGoon v. Scales, 330, 333.
 McGrath v. Sinclair, 144, 216, 546.
 McGregor v. Brown, 261, 262.
 McGuffie v. Carter, 260.
 McHan v. Stansell, 227, 283, 284.
 McIlwrath v. Hollander, 467, 469.
 McIndoe v. Morman, 235.
 McKay v. Freeman, 69.
 v. Speak, 300.
 McKee v. Lineberger, 672, 673, 678.
 v. Pfout, 140.
 McKeighan v. Hopkins, 662.
 McKenzie v. L'Amoureux, 114.
 McKillip v. McKillip, 130, 131.
 McKinlay v. Tuttle, 483.
 McKinly v. Holliday, 520, 528.
 McKinny v. Kenny, 627.
 McKnight v. Dunlop, 386.
 McLane v. Bovee, 359, 395.
 v. Spence, 372.
 McLaughlin v. Barnum, 522.
 v. Kelly, 342.
 McLaurin v. Wilson, 696.
 McLean v. Bovee, 411, 509.
 v. Macdonald, 136, 146.
 McLenan v. Chisholm, 697.
 McLendon v. West Point & A.R.R. Co. 465.
 McLeod v. Bullard, 248.
 McLeran v. McNamara, 407.
 McMahan v. Bowe, 117, 495.
 McMahan v. Russell, 241, 243.
 McMannus v. Smith, 309, 310.
 McManus v. O'Sullivan, 610.
 McMasters v. Carothers, 97.
 McMechan v. Griffing, 556.
 McMillan v. Richards, 241, 243.
 v. Solomon, 88.
 McMinn v. Mayes, 410, 611, 517.
 v. O'Connor, 355, 359.
 McMullin v. Erwin, 651.
 McMurray v. Oneal, 363.
 McNair v. Schwartz, 479.
 v. Toler, 175.
 McNamee v. Moreland, 615, 620.
 McNeely v. Langan, 545, 598.
 McNeil v. Bright, 400.
 McPherson v. Cox, 297.
 McPike v. Wells, 184.
 McQuade v. Emmons, 416.
 McQueen v. Ivey, 661, 663.
 McQuiddy v. Ware, 601.
 McRae v. McDonald, 137.
 McRea v. Central Nat. Bank, 56, 511.
 McSorley v. Larissa, 538.
 McStay v. Friedman, 755.
 McTeague v. Coulter, 99, 463.
 Meacham v. Dudley, 297.
 Mead v. Leffingwell, 629.
 v. Mitchell, 391.
 Meade v. Laws, 345.
 Meadow Val. Min. Co. v. Dodds, 452.
 Mecklem v. Blake, 314.
 Medbury v. Swan, 360.
 Medlicot v. Brunester, 462.
 Medlin v. Wilkins, 585, 726.
 Meegan v. Gunsollis, 176.
 Meehan v. Forrester, 244, 245.

- Meehan v. Williams, 556.
Meek v. Breckenridge, 184.
Meeker v. Place, 272.
 v. Wright, 216.
Meeks v. Kirby, 54.
Meigs v. McClung, 166, 167, 169, 170.
Meldrum v. Sarvis, 337.
Melenthin v. Keith, 234, 741.
Mellington v. Goodtitle, 81.
Melton v. Lambard, 59, 62, 220.
Melvin v. Prop'rs of Locks, &c. 586, 595.
 v. Waddell, 565, 605.
Menifee v. Hamilton, 428.
 v. Menifee, 137.
Menkens v. Blumenthal, 598.
Meraman v. Caldwell, 387.
Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 452.
Mercer v. Doe, 678.
 v. Selden, 612.
Merchants' Bank of St. L. v. Harrison, 681.
Mercier v. Mercier, 295.
Merest v. Harvey, 499.
Mericlo, Matter of, 133.
Meriden Britannia Co. v. Whedon, 306.
Merrell v. Smith, 28.
Merrill v. Bullock, 41, 109.
 v. Dearing, 303.
 v. Hilliard, 523.
Merriman v. Russell, 725.
Merritt v. Campbell, 389.
 v. Carpenter, 454.
 v. Lyon, 149.
 v. O'Neil, 486.
 v. Scott, 529, 530, 536.
 v. Thompson, 182.
Merry v. Hallet, 56.
Merryman v. Bourne, 256, 258, 391, 395.
Mersey, &c., Nav. Co. v. Douglas, 330.
Messenger v. Armstrong, 272.
Metcalfe v. Brandon, 695.
 v. McCutchen, 623.
Meth. Epis. Ch. v. Council of Hoboken, 187, 188.
 v. Stewart, 145.
 Home v. Thompson, 565.
Meth. Society v. Bennett, 145.
Metters v. Brown, 134.
Mexico v. Arrangois, 293.
Meyer v. Campbell, 246.
 v. Metzler, 89.
Mickey v. Stratton, 546, 680.
Mickles v. Dillaye, 522, 538, 539.
 v. Townsend, 715.
Middlebury College v. Cheney, 715.
Middleton v. Low, 767.
Middleton's Case, 20.
Miles v. Caldwell, 378, 382, 385, 419, 436, 729.
Mill v. Hill, 531.
Millard v. McMullin, 601.
Miller v. Adsit, 394.
 v. Ball, 225, 234, 676
Miller v. Bledsoe, 315.
 v. Bonsadon, 257.
 v. Brenham, 441.
 v. Brownson, 162, 537.
 v. Bryan, 724.
 v. Casselberry, 57, 364, 365.
 v. Chandler, 344.
 v. Covert, 372.
 v. Downing, 557, 671.
 v. Ewer, 670.
 v. Hardin, 680.
 v. Havens, 266.
 v. Henry, 502.
 v. Hoberg, 137.
 v. Ingram, 506.
 v. Jamison, 100.
 v. Lancaster Bank, 755.
 v. Lang, 260.
 v. Long Island R. R. Co. 551, 553, 557, 575, 642, 647.
 v. Manice, 370.
 v. Mann, 55.
 v. McBrier, 257.
 v. McIntyre, 357, 766.
 v. Melchor, 475, 484.
 v. Miller, 104, 205.
 v. Myers, 192, 200, 209, 488.
 v. Platt, 201.
 v. Sherry, 396.
 v. Shields, 261.
 v. Shriner, 305.
 v. Swift, 227, 232.
 v. Treta, 362.
 v. Wilson, 673.
Millhollin v. Jones, 350.
Milliner v. Robinson, 222.
Million v. Riley, 667.
Mills v. Graves, 358.
 v. Hamilton, 256.
 v. Peirce, 343, 344.
Milne v. Cummings, 222.
Milner v. Wilson, 50.
Milton v. Haden, 258.
Miner v. Clark, 394.
Minier v. Minier, 538.
Mining Co. v. Taylor, 62, 192, 234.
Minke v. McNamee, 374.
Minnesota v. Grant, 119.
Minot v. Brooks, 662.
Minto v. Delaney, 67.
Miss. & Mo. R. R. Co. v. Ward, 219, 331, 339.
 Tenn. R. R. Co. v. Devaney, 650, 660.
Missouri v. Iowa, 749.
 v. Kentucky, 339.
Mitchell v. Baratta, 182.
 v. Barnes, 130, 443, 463.
 v. Berry, 612.
 v. Bogan, 239.
 v. Carder, 546.
 v. Davis, 50.
 v. Freedley, 508.
 v. McMullen, 236.

- Mitchell v. Mitchell, 475.
 v. Shanley, 51.
 Mithoff v. Dewees, 678.
 Mizell v. Simmons, 724.
 Moak v. Bryant, 227, 288.
 Mobley v. Bruner, 220, 221, 222.
 Moffat v. Strong, 258.
 Mohr v. Porter, 116.
 Moingona Coal Co. v. Blair, 640.
 Molineux v. Molineux, 77.
 Mollan v. Torrance, 839.
 Molton v. Henderson, 659, 662.
 v. Mumford, 486.
 Monarque v. Monarque, 891.
 Montague v. Selb, 212.
 Montclair v. Dana, 361.
 Montgomery v. Carlton, 351.
 v. Craig, 280.
 v. Dorion, 148.
 v. Gorrell, 312.
 v. Spect, 244.
 v. Tutt, 400.
 v. Whiting, 395.
 Monumoi Beach v. Rogers, 849.
 Mooberry v. Marye, 343.
 Moody v. Farr, 37.
 v. Moody, 118.
 v. Seaman, 291.
 Mooers v. Bunker, 690.
 v. Wait, 447.
 Mooney v. Cooledge, 573, 574.
 v. Olsen, 546.
 Moor v. Seaton, 423.
 Moore v. Armstrong, 613.
 v. Burnet, 145.
 v. Cable, 248, 505, 539.
 v. Cord, 87.
 v. Esty, 138.
 v. Fursden, 28, 213.
 v. Goodright, 25.
 v. Griffin, 323, 722.
 v. Hawkins, 359.
 v. Kessler, 459.
 v. Lawder, 279.
 v. Morrow, 147.
 v. Pitts, 138.
 v. Rake, 715.
 v. Robbins, 744.
 v. Small, 677.
 v. Thompson, 573, 577, 580.
 v. Woodall, 210, 211.
 Moores v. Lehman, 302.
 v. National Bank, 730.
 Mooring v. Campbell, 503.
 Moran v. Jessup, 375.
 v. Palmer, 223.
 Morange v. Morris, 229.
 Mordecai v. Oliver, 155.
 More v. Deyoe, 127, 158.
 v. Massini, 446, 452.
 v. Smedburgh, 235.
 Moreau v. Detchemendy, 464.
 Morehead v. Watkyns, 272.
 Morenhaut v. Wilson, 851.
 Moreton's Case, 134.
 Morewood v. Wood, 681.
 Morgan v. Bishop, 355, 357.
 v. Casey, 610.
 v. Herrick, 210.
 v. Moore, 72, 75, 83.
 v. Morgan, 339, 760.
 v. Plumb, 371.
 v. Thorne, 125.
 v. Varick, 480, 484, 497, 509.
 Morrill v. Mackman, 82.
 v. Menifee, 134.
 Morris v. Beebe, 45, 303, 344, 475, 479, 486.
 v. Brooke, 66.
 v. Hayes, 548.
 v. McKay, 541.
 v. Tinker, 504, 532.
 Morrison v. Bassett, 253.
 v. Hays, 595.
 v. Robinson, 474, 491, 494, 496, 520, 523, 524, 527, 533, 535.
 v. Underwood, 715.
 Morrow v. Whitney, 666.
 Morse v. Emery, 692.
 v. Gilman, 302.
 v. Marshall, 420.
 v. Sleeper, 53.
 Morton v. Manhattan Beach Imp. Co. 66.
 v. Moore, 611.
 v. Nebraska, 744.
 v. Weir, 263.
 Moseley v. Moseley, 681.
 Mosely v. Miller, 524.
 Moser v. Cochrane, 132.
 Mosher v. Yoast, 134.
 Moes v. Hanson, 228.
 v. Scott, 585.
 v. Shear, 359, 543.
 Mostyn v. Fabrigas, 171, 331, 332.
 Mott v. Palmer, 56.
 Mountnoy v. Collier, 257.
 Mowry v. Wood, 238.
 Moyer v. Hinman, 556.
 Muldrow v. Muldrow, 227.
 Mulry v. Norton, 64, 67, 448.
 Mumford v. Wardwell, 64.
 v. Whitney, 53, 225.
 Mundy v. Jolliffe, 234.
 v. Monroe, 242.
 Munro v. Merchant, 619, 647, 654, 660.
 Munroe v. Luke, 104.
 Munson v. Munson, 192, 194, 328.
 Murdock v. Little, 338.
 v. Ratcliff, 134.
 Murphy v. Barnett, 681.
 v. Campan, 159.
 v. Guion, 484.
 v. Loomis, 234, 240, 546.
 v. Norton, 64, 104.
 v. Orr, 115, 308.

- Murphy v. Welder, 566.
 v. Williamson, 272, 279.
 Murray v. Ballou, 468.
 v. Blackledge, 668.
 v. Fitchburg R. R. Co. 174, 474.
 v. Gouverneur, 474.
 v. Harway, 266, 267.
 v. Hay, 114.
 v. N. Y. L. & W. R. R. Co. 696.
 v. Spencer, 685, 723.
 v. Walker, 244, 352.
 Muskett v. Hill, 85.
 Mutual L. I. Co. v. Balch, 88.
 v. Bigler, 446, 453.
 Myers v. Koenig, 50.
 v. Phillips, 421, 429, 433.
 v. Reed, 212.
 v. Sanders, 502.

 Nagle v. Macy, 112, 549.
 v. Power, 126.
 Napton v. Leaton, 514.
 Nash v. Cutler, 390.
 v. Spofford, 715.
 v. Wilmington & W. R. R. Co. 723.
 Natchez (City of) v. Vandervelde, 415.
 Nation v. Cameron, 301.
 National Bank v. Matthews, 111, 123.
 Natoma Water & M. Co. v. Clarkin, 111, 123, 450.
 Nave v. Berry, 261.
 Neal v. Gregory, 712.
 Neale v. Cripps, 449.
 v. Hagthorp, 505, 538.
 Neatherly v. Ripley, 235.
 Neave v. Avery, 349.
 Neddy v. State, 247.
 Needham v. Branson, 316.
 Neely v. Neely, 203, 603.
 Neill v. Keese, 350.
 Nellis v. Munson, 83.
 Nelson v. Allen, 484.
 v. Brodhack, 348.
 v. Clay, 540.
 v. Couch, 370.
 v. Davis, 348.
 v. Pinegar, 453.
 Nepean v. Doe & Knight, 563.
 Neves v. Scott, 730, 732.
 Nevitt v. Gillespie, 449, 452.
 Newark Sav. Inst. v. Jones, 228.
 Newbegin v. Langley, 344.
 Newbold v. Brown, 262.
 v. Smart, 488.
 Newby v. Jackson, 227, 284.
 Newell v. McLarney, 697.
 v. Newell, 109.
 v. Sanford, 418.
 v. Woodruff, 42, 195, 199, 282.
 New Eng. Jewelry Co. v. Merriam, 247.
 Newhall v. Ireson, 722.

 New Jersey v. New York, 749.
 Newman v. Holdmyfast, 54, 81.
 v. Newton, 357, 389.
 Newmarket Mfg. Co. v. Pendergast, 662.
 New Orleans v. Gaines, 475, 491, 496, 501, 512, 513, 522.
 Newport Bridge Co. v. Douglass, 241.
 Newsom v. Pryor, 723.
 Newsome v. Williams, 350.
 Newton v. Bronson, 331, 337, 396.
 v. Hook, 372.
 v. McKay, 248.
 New York v. Connecticut, 750.
 N. Y. Dry Dock v. Hicks, 124.
 N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. v. Kip, 74.
 Nicely v. Boyles, 390.
 Nichols v. Kingdom Iron Ore Co. 693.
 v. Lewis, 52, 63.
 v. Todd, 548.
 v. Turney, 724.
 Nicholson v. Caress, 317, 348.
 Nicloson v. Wordsworth, 235.
 Nicoll v. Fash, 355.
 v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co. 138, 139, 265, 314.
 v. Walworth, 145, 147.
 Niles v. Patch, 722.
 Nims v. Sherman, 256, 714.
 Ninety-nine Plaintiffs v. Vanderbilt, 293.
 Nivin v. Stevens, 723.
 Nixon v. Porter, 505, 592.
 Noble v. Biddle, 532.
 v. McFarland, 194, 209.
 Nobles v. McCarty, 231.
 Noe v. Card, 156, 344.
 Nolan v. Skelly, 98.
 v. Sweeny, 367.
 Nolen v. Royston, 253.
 Noonan v. Lee, 117, 236, 732.
 Norcross v. Widgery, 556.
 Norcum v. Gaty, 715.
 Norfleet v. Hutchins, 641.
 Norris v. Dunn, 195.
 v. Hoyt, 149, 537.
 v. Russell, 609.
 v. Sullivan, 194, 202.
 Norris' Appeal, 605, 724, 725.
 North v. Henneberry, 715.
 North Brookfield (Inhabs.) v. Inhabitants of Warren, 688.
 Northern Cent. Ry. Co. v. Canton Co. 54.
 Northern Ind. R. R. Co. v. Mich. Cent. R.
 Co. 330, 339.
 Northern Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 82, 83, 84.
 North Noonday Min. Co. v. Orient Min.
 Co. 546, 547.
 North Penna. Coal Co. v. Snowden, 99.
 North v. Wright, 206.
 Northrup v. Romary, 425.
 Northy v. Northy, 606.
 Norvell v. Camm, 744.
 Norway v. Rowe, 447.

- Norwood v. Marrow, 681.
 Nowler v. Coit, 538.
 Nowlin v. Reynolds, 607.
 Nudd v. Burrows, 781.
 Nutting v. Herbert, 724.

 Oaksmith v. Johnston, 546, 666, 748.
 Oates v. Brydon, 154.
 Oatman v. Fowler, 548, 663.
 Oberich v. Gilman, 519, 537.
 O'Blinskie v. Judge of Kent Co. 434, 435.
 O'Brien v. Joyce, 538.
 v. Wetherell, 232.
 O'Byrne v. Feeley, 124.
 O'Connor v. Bernard, 126.
 Odell v. Montross, 241, 244, 246, 248.
 Odingsal v. Jackson, 322.
 Odle v. Odle, 102.
 O'Donnell v. Kelsey, 725.
 O'Dougherty v. Aldrich, 97.
 Oetgen v. Ross, 181, 376, 393, 413, 428, 429.
 Ogden v. Jennings, 55.
 v. Lee, 123.
 O'Gorman v. Arnoux, 358.
 O'Halloran v. Fitzgerald, 253.
 O'Hara v. Richardson, 588.
 Oh Chow v. Hallett, 312.
 Okeson v. Patterson, 595.
 Olcott v. Bynum, 333.
 v. Carroll, 302.
 v. Wood, 108.
 Oldham v. Pfleger, 239, 242, 246.
 Olendorf v. Cook, 134, 141, 328.
 Olevine v. Holman, 583.
 Olinger v. Shepherd, 50.
 Olive v. Adams, 45.
 v. Bevil, 594.
 Oliver v. Loye, 331.
 v. Platt, 528.
 Olmsted v. Elder, 241.
 v. Harvey, 151.
 Olney v. Sawyer, 209.
 Onderdonk v. Ackerman, 136.
 O'Neal v. Boone, 660.
 O'Neill v. Capelle, 244.
 Opdyke v. Stephens, 724.
 Oram v. Rothermel, 696.
 Ord v. Chester, 282.
 v. De La Guerra, 198.
 Oregon Cus. R. R. Co. v. Oregon Steam Nav. Co. 549.
 Ormond v. Martin, 607.
 Orr v. Hadley, 727.
 Ortiz v. De Benavides, 693.
 Ortleby v. Messere, 131.
 Orton v. Noonan, 345, 387, 401.
 Osborn v. Bank of the U. S. 167, 170.
 v. Storms, 584.
 Osbourn v. Osbourn, 472.
 v. Rider, 28.
 Osgood v. Abbott, 137.

 Osgood v. Pollard, 247.
 Ostrander v. Hasbrouck, 416.
 v. Kneeland, 329.
 Otis v. McMillan, 253, 259.
 v. Smith, 57.
 v. Spencer, 695.
 Ould v. Stoddard, 240.
 Outcalt v. Ludlow, 607.
 Outram v. Morewood, 35, 373, 380.
 Overing v. Russell, 148, 175, 348.
 Overton v. Woolfolk, 98.
 Owen v. Cooper, 132.
 v. Fowler, 153.
 v. Homan, 441.
 Oxnard v. Prop'rs, Kennebeck Purchase, 115.
 Oxton v. Groves, 722, 723.

 Pace v. Chadderdon, 246.
 Pacific Coast Min. & M. Co. v. Spargo, 744, 747.
 Packard v. Agawam Mut. F. I. Co. 715.
 v. Johnson, 198, 205.
 Packer v. Roch. & S. R. R. Co. 240.
 Packet Co. v. Sickles, 372, 386.
 Pacquette v. Pickness, 497, 541.
 Padgett v. Lawrence, 300, 704.
 Padwick v. Platt, 115.
 Page v. Foster, 108.
 v. Tucker, 137.
 v. Waring, 147, 467.
 v. Webster, 210.
 Palmer v. Anderson, 727.
 v. Bowker, 254.
 v. Mead, 107.
 v. Parkhurst, 131.
 v. Wright, 691.
 Pangburn v. Miles, 727.
 Park Dept., Matter of, 116, 225, 607.
 Parker v. Banks, 599, 606.
 v. Constable, 276, 286.
 v. McCluer, 703.
 v. Prop'rs of Locks, &c., 204, 641.
 v. Shackelford, 499.
 v. Staniland, 80.
 Parkinson v. McQuaid, 727.
 Parkison v. Bracken, 744.
 Parks v. Barkley, 340.
 v. Hardey, 69.
 Parmelee v. Oswego & S. R. R. Co. 268.
 Parr v. Van Horn, 304, 309.
 Parrill v. McKinley, 705.
 Parrott v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 500.
 Parsons v. Brown, 50.
 v. Moses, 517, 518.
 v. Welles, 250.
 v. Winslow, 530.
 Partheriche v. Mason, 78.
 Partridge v. Ball, 123.
 v. Luce, 722.
 Paschal v. Acklin, 396.
 Paschall v. Hinderer, 605.

- Pashley v. Mayor, &c., of Birmingham, 337.
 Patch v. Keeler, 180.
 Patrick v. Roach, 236.
 v. Ruffners, 86.
 v. Sherwood, 139, 140.
 v. Young, 366.
 Patten v. Moore, 556.
 v. Patten, 185.
 Patterson v. Brown, 534.
 v. Ely, 159, 342, 476.
 v. Kreig, 341.
 v. Stewart, 502.
 v. Tatum, 744.
 v. United States, 362.
 v. Winn, 744.
 v. Yeaton, 248.
 Paul v. Fries, 675.
 Paull v. Eldred, 91, 530, 548.
 Pawlet (Town of) v. Clark, 753.
 Payne v. Atterbury, 444.
 v. Becker, 69.
 v. Blackshear, 660.
 v. Harris, 184.
 v. Hook, 219.
 v. Treadwell, 17, 300, 303, 313.
 Payne's Case, 119.
 Peaceable v. Read, 192.
 Pearce v. Colden, 316.
 v. Ferris, 158, 159, 316.
 Pearsall v. Mayers, 350.
 Pease v. Hannah, 311, 356.
 v. Pilot Knob Iron Co. 243.
 Peck v. Carmichael, 418, 700.
 v. Cary, 131.
 v. Elder, 114.
 v. Newton, 37, 307.
 v. Smith, 71, 73.
 v. Ward, 202, 204.
 Pederick v. Searle, 586, 590.
 Pell v. Ulmar, 241.
 Pelletreau v. Jackson, 715.
 Peltz v. Clarke, 246.
 Pember v. Congdon, 696.
 Pemble v. Sterne, 81, 83.
 Penn v. Hayward, 396.
 v. Klyne, 415, 739.
 Penniman v. Rodman, 108.
 Pennoyer v. Neff, 396.
 Penna. Coal Co. v. Central Iron Works, 181.
 Penny v. Cook, 342, 699.
 v. Walker, 171.
 Penny Pot Landing Case, 611.
 Pentz v. Kuester, 259.
 People v. Alberty, 261, 450.
 v. Ambrecht, 153, 162, 164, 166, 172.
 v. Arnold, 120.
 v. Batchelder, 554.
 v. Board of Assessors, 58.
 v. Burdock, 693.
 v. Central R.R. Co. 330.
 v. Comm'rs of Highways, 300.
 People v. Conklin, 119.
 v. Cook, 300.
 v. Cooper, 21, 400, 402, 405, 406, 413.
 v. Darling, 273.
 v. Davidson, 64.
 v. Denison, 119, 120.
 v. Dennison, 163.
 v. Dwinelle, 403.
 v. Folsom, 148, 149.
 v. Fulton Fire Ins. Co. 691.
 v. Gilbert, 558.
 v. Herbel, 715.
 v. Kerr, 75.
 v. Livingston, 119, 744.
 v. Mauran, 63.
 v. Maynard, 716.
 v. Mayor, &c. of N. Y. 116, 173, 305, 309, 442, 466.
 v. McAdam, 134.
 v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co. 51.
 v. N. Y. & M. B. Ry. Co. 121.
 v. Paulding, 274.
 v. Pope, 611.
 v. Reed, 51.
 v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 428.
 v. Schackno, 274, 276.
 v. Snyder, 122.
 v. Society, &c. 716.
 v. Trinity Church, 119, 120, 547, 665, 678.
 v. Van Nostrand, 50.
 v. Van Rensselaer, 119, 120.
 Pepper v. O'Dowd, 615, 636, 648.
 Perkins v. Oxford, 722.
 v. Raitt, 343.
 v. Towle, 499, 686.
 Perrine v. Bergen, 84, 415.
 Perry v. Dickerson, 370.
 v. Ensley, 427.
 v. Hall, 708.
 v. New Orleans &c. R. R. Co. 188.
 v. Pratt, 725.
 v. Weeks, 549, 557.
 Pershing v. Canfield, 231, 236.
 Pers n v. Warren, 130.
 Peter v. Hargrave, 476.
 Peters v. Clements, 227.
 v. Jones, 613.
 v. Porter, 696.
 Peterson v. Laik, 208.
 v. McCullough, 574.
 v. Orr, 232.
 Petrie v. Shoemaker, 130, 131.
 Pettibone v. Hamilton, 114.
 Petts v. Gaw, 724.
 Petty v. Graham, 284.
 Peytoe's Case, 134.
 Peyton v. Rose, 99, 100, 463, 668.
 Pfiffner v. Stillwater & St. P. R. R. Co. 235.
 Phelan v. Kelly, 201, 209, 546.
 Phelps v. McDonald, 396.
 Phila. W. & B. R. R. Co. v. Howard, 717.

- Phillips v. Bank of Lewistown, 606.
 Phillippi v. Thompson, 356, 687.
 Phillips v. Blair, 717.
 v. Bowers, 722.
 v. Chamberlain, 506.
 v. Covert, 262, 278.
 v. Croft, 244.
 v. DeGroat, 547.
 v. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. R. Co. 75.
 v. Gorham, 99, 350, 351, 463, 669.
 v. Gregg, 192, 202.
 v. Rollings, 280.
 v. Van Schaick, 718.
 Phillpotts v. Blasdel, 22, 389.
 Philly v. Saunders, 715.
 Philpot v. Bingham, 126.
 Phinney v. Watts, 722.
 Phipps v. Kent, 99.
 v. Mansfield, 336.
 Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Doster, 361.
 Phoenix Lead Min. & C. Co. v. Sydnor, 540.
 Phyfe v. Masterson, 418, 430.
 v. Riley, 246.
 Physio-Medical College v. Wilkinson, 423.
 Piatt v. Oliver, 144.
 Piatt Co. v. Goodell, 659.
 Pickering v. Pickering, 696.
 Pickett v. Doe, 326.
 v. Doe & Pope, 327, 567, 605.
 v. Legerwood, 732.
 Pico v. Columbet, 488, 489.
 v. Gallardo, 245.
 Picot v. Page, 211.
 Pierce v. Brown, 239, 242, 286.
 v. Burroughs, 140.
 v. Ferris, 181.
 v. Jaquith, 5.
 v. Keator, 82.
 v. Nichols, 228.
 v. Oliver, 390.
 v. Pierce, 479.
 v. Strickland, 482.
 v. Tuttle, 226, 235, 283, 353.
 v. Wanett, 368.
 Piercy v. Crandall, 723.
 Pignolet v. Bushe, 448.
 Pike v. Galvin, 715.
 v. Munroe, 722.
 v. Robertson, 573.
 Pilford's Case, 33, 399.
 Pilling v. Armitage, 519.
 Pillow v. Roberts, 635, 661.
 Pillsworth v. Hopton, 452.
 Pinckney v. Burrage, 605.
 Pindell v. Maydwell, 298.
 Pipkin v. James, 228.
 Pitcher v. Livingston, 501.
 Pitkin v. Yaw, 306.
 Pitts v. Booth, 537.
 v. Wilder, 620.
 Pixley v. Huggins, 87.
 v. Rockwell, 87, 178, 397.
 Platto v. Janta, 304, 305.
 Plimpton v. Plimpton, 528.
 Plumb v. Fluitt, 556.
 v. Tubbs, 139.
 Plume v. Seward, 552.
 Plummer v. Walker, 303.
 Plympton v. Baker, 34.
 v. Boston Dispensary, 140.
 Poffenberger v. Blackstone, 341, 346.
 Poignand v. Smith, 606.
 Poillon v. Lawrence, 357.
 Poindexter v. Cherry, 479, 480.
 Polack v. Mansfield, 162, 167, 169.
 v. McGrath, 555.
 v. Shafer, 415.
 Polk v. Wendal, 436, 729, 744.
 Pollard v. Baylors, 375.
 v. Hagan, 64.
 v. Hanrick, 359.
 v. Melvin, 694.
 v. Shively, 723.
 v. Tait, 596.
 Pollen v. Brewer, 50, 276.
 Pomeroy v. Mills, 71, 72, 150, 185.
 Poole v. Fleeger, 219.
 Poor v. Carleton, 453.
 v. Larrabee, 605.
 Pope v. Allen, 556, 696.
 v. Cole, 350.
 v. Hammer, 627, 639.
 v. Harkins, 253.
 v. Macon, 541.
 Poppe v. Langford, 755.
 Porter v. Bleiler, 129, 218.
 v. Garrissino, 179.
 v. Lazear, 148.
 v. McGrath, 154, 177, 557.
 v. Robinson, 178.
 v. Welle, 319.
 v. Williams, 149.
 Posey v. James, 67.
 Post v. Hover, 95.
 v. Moran, 430, 443.
 v. Post, 277.
 Postens v. Postens, 502.
 Poston v. Henry, 484.
 Potter v. Baker, 41.
 v. City of New Haven, 49, 106.
 v. Gracie, 533.
 v. Jacobs, 237.
 v. Kitchen, 314.
 v. Knowles, 547.
 Potts v. Coleman, 225, 569.
 v. Cullum, 523.
 v. Gilbert, 582, 585.
 Powell v. Davis, 523, 543, 537, 648.
 v. Lawson, 410, 413.
 Power v. Hollman, 147.
 v. Lester, 240.
 Powers v. Armstrong, 349, 350.
 Pownal v. Myers, 145.
 Powys v. Blagrove, 460.

| | |
|---|---|
| Pralus v. Jefferson G. & S. Min. Co. 557. | Railroad & B. Co. v. District of Columbia, 54. |
| Pratt v. Bank of Bennington, 242. v. Pratt, 605, 715. | Railsback v. Walke, 428. |
| Pray v. Pierce, 570. | Railway Co. v. McShane, 746. v. Whitton, 762. |
| Prentice v. Wilson, 227, 283. | Rainer v. Huddleston, 536. |
| Presbrey v. Presbrey, 51. | Raines v. Walker, 694. |
| Presbyterian Congregation v. Williams, 181. | Raley v. Ross, 232. |
| Presbyterian Soc'y, &c. v. Smithers, 112. | Ralph v. Ejector, 26. |
| Prescott v. Jones, 142. v. Nevers, 195, 201, 205. | Randolph v. Carlton, 259. |
| Presley v. Holmes, 46, 220. | Rank v. Levinus, 158. |
| Presstman v. Sillocks, 260. | Rannels v. Rannels, 631, 643. |
| Preston v. Bowmar, 546, 723. v. Evans, 715. v. Walsh, 167. | Ransom, In re , 144. v. Anderson, 342. v. Lewis, 588. v. Stanberry, 718. |
| Prevot v. Lawrence, 253, 258. | Ratcliff's Case, 128. |
| Price v. Blount, 236. v. Karnes, 244. v. Osborne, 54. v. Strange, 706. | Ratcliffe v. Cary, 726. |
| Prickhardt v. Robertson, 300, 312. | Raw v. Stevenson, 410. |
| Prindle v. Anderson, 267, 291. | Rawley v. Brown, 545. |
| Pringle v. Gaw, 68, 116. | Rawlings v. Bailey, 309, 364, 662. |
| Prior v. Ongley, 292. | Rawson v. Fox, 660, 662. v. Maynard, 57, 321. v. Taylor, 306. |
| Pritchard v. Young, 727. | Ray v. Ayers, 140. v. Gardner, 510. |
| Proctor v. Pool, 325. | Rayburn v. Elrod, 326. |
| Proprietors of Liverpool Wharf v. Prescott, 726. | Raymond v. Andrews, 481, 494. v. Coffey, 724. |
| Proprietors of Locks, &c. v. Nassau & L. R. R. Co. 55, 82. | Raynor v. Timerson, 342, 717. |
| Prout v. Roby, 266. | Reade v. Kennedy, 125. v. Reade, 145. |
| Prouty v. Mather, 715. | Reading's Case, 201. |
| Provident Inst. v. Burnham, 55, 82, 344, 388, 481. | Reavis v. Reavis, 705. |
| Provolt v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. R. Co. 702. | Reckhow v. Schanck, 142, 278. |
| Pryor v. Madigan, 354. | Reddick v. Gressman, 242. |
| Pryzbylowicz v. Mo. River R. R. Co. 174, 702. | Redfield v. Utica & S. R. R. Co. 84, 153, 173, 303. |
| Pugh v. Bell, 484. v. Reat, 433. v. Youngblood, 660. | Reece v. Allen, 112, 145. v. Roush, 350. |
| Pulaski Co. v. State, 528, 567, 599. | Reed v. Calderwood, 159, 395. v. Crapo, 358. v. Farr, 726. v. Jones, 488. v. Loucks, 426. v. McCourt, 625, 726. v. Newton, 357. v. Reed, 278, 531. v. Tyler, 153. |
| Pullen v. Bell, 57. v. Hopkins, 576. | Reeder v. Purdy, 50, 499. v. Sayre, 272, 289, 291. |
| Purcell v. Wilson, 198. | Rees v. City of Chicago, 435. v. Lawless, 86. v. Perrot, 288. |
| Putnam v. Bond, 330. v. Ritchie, 520, 522, 528. | Reeside v. Walker, 163. |
| Free School v. Fisher, 49, 637. | Reformed Church v. Schoolcraft, 54, 72, 387, 414, 598. |
| Quadrang v. Downs, 127. | Reg. v. Bedfordshire, 681, 684. v. Board of Works, 722. v. Hartington, 372. |
| Queen's College v. Hallett, 140. | Rehoboth v. Hunt, 81, 116. |
| Quicksilver Min. Co. v. Hicks, 155, 553. | Reichart v. Felps, 755. |
| Quimby v. Uill, 139, 140. | |
| Quinn v. Eagleston, 686. v. Quinn, 461, 637. | |
| Racine (City of) v. Crotsenberg, 75, 189. | |
| Radford v. Folsom, 458, 459. | |
| Ragan v. McCoy, 488, 489. | |
| Ragedale v. Gohlke, 349, 523, 543. | |
| Railroad Co. v. Robbins, 106. | |

- Reid v. Stanley, 484.
 Reily v. Lancaster, 359.
 Reimer v. Johnke, 449.
 Reinheimer v. Carter, 148.
 Reinholdt v. Alberti, 297.
 Remington Paper Co. v. O'Dougherty, 87.
 Renick v. Boyd, 510.
 Renison v. Ashley, 99.
 Renneker v. Warren, 610.
 Renner v. Muller, 442.
 Renasselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 500.
 Republic of Mexico v. Arrangois, 298.
 Requa v. Guggenheim, 301.
 Revere v. Leonard, 722.
 Rex v. Harris, 387.
 v. Hudson, 561.
 v. Newman, 300.
 v. Unitt, 298.
 Reynolds, Ex parte, 405, 416.
 v. Darling, 136.
 v. Pitt, 283.
 Rhine v. Robinson, 694.
 Rhoades v. Selin, 339.
 Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 610, 749.
 Rhodes v. Crutchfield, 490, 516.
 Ricard v. Williams, 217, 546, 549.
 Rice v. Auditor General, 375.
 v. Bixler, 428.
 v. County of Worcester, 722.
 v. King, 370.
 Rich v. Baker, 510.
 v. Bolton, 274.
 v. Keyser, 272.
 v. Maples, 473.
 Richards v. Elwell, 235, 358.
 v. Manson, 223.
 v. Richards, 691.
 Richardson v. Harvey, 253, 255.
 v. McNulty, 670, 701.
 v. Richardson, 128, 480.
 v. Thornton, 142, 233.
 v. Welcome, 335.
 Richmond v. Bronson, 500.
 v. City of Milwaukee, 756.
 Riddle v. Bickerstaff, 700.
 v. Murphy, 680.
 Ridgely v. Stillwell, 274.
 Ridler v. Ridler, 131.
 Riehl v. Bingenheimer, 308.
 Riemer v. Johnke, 449.
 Rigg v. Cook, 715.
 Riggs v. Fuller, 583, 594, 596, 602, 659.
 v. Tayloe, 693.
 Right v. Beard, 227, 278, 283, 284.
 (d. Fisher) v. Cuthell, 288, 289.
 v. Darby, 269, 270, 272, 274.
 Rigler v. Cloud, 695.
 Rigor v. Frye, 663.
 Ring v. McCoun, 331.
 Ringhouse v. Keener, 465, 475, 482, 491, 512, 514.
 Ringo v. Woodruff, 588.
 Rippetoe v. Dwyer, 212, 349.
 Ritter v. Barrett, 325.
 v. Worth, 460.
 Rivas v. Solary, 55.
 Rivers v. Foote, 311, 353, 700.
 v. Thompson, 576.
 Rivier v. Pugh, 364.
 Roach v. Damron, 330.
 Robbins v. Bunn, 744.
 Roberti v. Atwater, 868, 544.
 Roberts v. Cooper, 117.
 v. Heim, 372.
 v. Moore, 200.
 v. Morgan, 198, 205.
 v. Stanton, 691.
 v. Sutherlin, 246.
 v. Thorn, 212.
 Robertson v. Gaines, 715.
 v. Hayne, 336.
 v. Pickrell, 333, 716.
 v. Robertson, 51.
 v. Sharpton, 715.
 v. Wilson, 715.
 Robidoux v. Cassileg, 192, 199, 206.
 Robie v. Smith, 276.
 Robinson v. Campbell, 730, 731, 738, 740.
 v. Ferguson, 693.
 v. Gunnis, 90.
 v. Kime, 262, 724.
 v. Lake, 568.
 v. McDonald, 539.
 v. Miller, 139, 140.
 v. Phillips, 593.
 v. Pittsburg R. R. Co. 174.
 v. Ridley, 522.
 v. Roberts, 144, 220.
 v. White, 722.
 v. Willoughby, 108.
 Robson v. Osborn, 537.
 Roch v. Plumpton, 20.
 Rochdale Canal Co. v. Radcliffe, 611.
 Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. R. Co. v. Cop pinger, 336.
 Rockwell v. Bradley, 239, 285.
 v. Saunders, 225.
 Rodgers v. Bell, 153, 303, 413.
 v. Rodgers, 140.
 Roe v. Dawson, 400.
 v. Doe d. Neal, 688.
 (d. Leak) v. Doe, 20.
 (d. Gregson) v. Harrison, 266.
 v. Harvey, 670.
 (d. Wrangham) v. Hersey, 132.
 v. Kersey, 631.
 (d. Raper) v. Lonsdale, 222.
 v. Pierce, 288, 290.
 (d. Burlton) v. Roe, 462.
 (d. Langdon) v. Rowliston, 192.
 (d. Blair) v. Street, 411.
 (d. Bendall) v. Summerset, 135.
 v. Ward, 272.
 Rogers v. Boynton, 255, 256.

- Rogers v. Bracken, 537.
 v. Marshall, 444.
 v. Moore, 139.
 v. Parish, 410.
 v. Park, 293.
 v. Shannon, 301.
 v. Sinsheimer, 77, 90, 309, 364, 387, 392.
 v. Turley, 218.
 v. Walker, 130, 530.
 Rollins v. Bishop, 182.
 v. Henry, 306, 307, 350.
 v. Moody, 277.
 v. Rollins, 179.
 Romero v. Munos, 102, 403, 404.
 Romie v. Casanova, 755.
 Roome v. Phillips, 136.
 Roosevelt v. Hungate, 680.
 Root v. McFerrin, 614, 636.
 Roper v. Holland, 146.
 Rose v. Bell, 176.
 v. Brown, 538.
 v. Davis, 254.
 v. Watson, 236.
 Roseboom v. Roseboom, 488.
 Rosierz v. Van Dam, 350.
 Ross v. Adams, 715.
 v. Cobb, 128, 217, 547.
 v. Doe d. Barland, 740, 742, 747, 755.
 v. Ejector, 329.
 v. Gould, 621.
 v. Henderson, 223.
 v. Irving, 541.
 v. McJunkin, 147.
 v. Pleasants, 433, 461.
 v. Van Aulen, 284.
 v. Wood, 371.
 Rothery v. N. Y. Rubber Co. 84.
 Rothschild v. Hatch, 662.
 Rothwell v. Dewees, 211.
 Rountree v. Talbot, 429, 433.
 Rowan v. Kelsey, 51, 54, 57, 87, 88.
 v. Lytle, 273.
 Rowe v. Beckett, 307.
 v. Thompson, 612.
 Rowell v. Mitchell, 250.
 Royston v. Eccleston, 321.
 Ruch v. Rock Island, 137, 138, 139.
 Ruckman v. Astor, 247.
 Ruggles v. Sands, 582.
 Rung v. Shoneberger, 611.
 Runyan v. Mercereau, 240.
 Rupert v. Mark, 306.
 Russell v. Allard, 259.
 v. Allen, 193.
 v. Blake, 410, 517, 539.
 v. Conn, 327.
 v. Davis, 599.
 v. DeFrance, 544.
 v. Ely, 240, 247, 248.
 v. Erwin, 137, 328.
 v. Fabyan, 279.
 Russell v. Mallon, 394.
 v. Maloney, 365.
 v. Mandell, 657.
 v. Mann, 355.
 v. Marks, 215.
 v. Nelson, 423.
 v. Prat, 134.
 v. Southard, 248.
 v. Stansell, 755.
 Rust v. Boston Mill Corp. 722.
 v. Rust, 200.
 Rutherford v. Aiken, 497.
 v. Jones, 447.
 v. Raburn, 672.
 v. Tracy, 726.
 Ryan v. Bindley, 730.
 v. Carter, 666.
 v. Jackson, 335.
 v. Kilpatrick, 610.
 Ryder v. Mansell, 259.
 Ryerss v. Rippey, 389, 392, 393.
 Rynd v. Rynd Farm Oil Co. 61.
 Sacia v. O'Connor, 431.
 Sacket v. Wheaton, 56.
 Sacramento Val. R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 105.
 Sadler v. Evans, 104.
 Safford v. Hynds, 352.
 Sage v. Sherman, 223.
 Sahler v. Signer, 246.
 Sailor v. Hertzogg, 564, 569, 620.
 St. Clair Co. v. Livingston, 67.
 St. Croix v. Sands, 40.
 St. John v. Commyn, 320.
 v. Northrup, 131, 326.
 v. Pierce, 115, 316, 464.
 v. Quitzow, 260.
 St. Johnsbury v. Morrill, 547.
 St. Louis (City of) v. Gorman, 643.
 v. Newman, 611.
 St. Louis Smelting & Refg Co. v. Green, 741.
 St. Louis A. & T. H. R. R. Co. v. Karnes, 699.
 St. Louis J. & C. R. R. Co. v. Thomas, 334.
 St. Luke's Hospital v. Barclay, 146.
 St. Vincent Orphan Asylum v. City of Troy, 610.
 Sale v. Crutchfield, 522.
 Salisbury v. Moss, 181.
 Salmon v. Claggett, 453.
 Saltmarsh v. Crommelin, 632.
 Saltonstall v. Prop'rs of Long Wharf, 721, 722.
 Sample v. Robb, 327.
 Sampson v. Henry, 50.
 v. Ohleyer, 413.
 v. Shaeffer, 104, 480.
 Samson v. Rose, 509.
 Samuels v. Borrowscale, 580.
 Sanchez v. Hart, 137.
 Sanderlin v. Baxter, 83.

- Sanders v. Patridge*, 67.
Sandford v. Ballard, 447.
 v. Tucker, 848.
Sands v. Davis, 541.
 v. Hughes, 53, 117, 603, 605, 653, 655.
 v. St. John, 347.
 v. Smith, 762.
Sandys v. Sandys, 691.
Sanford v. Cloud, 231.
 v. Ellithorp, 696.
 v. Sanford, 221.
San Francisco v. Calderwood, 83.
 v. Fulde, 584, 586, 595.
 v. Randall, 300.
 v. Sullivan, 188.
Sankey v. Noyes, 551, 552.
San Patricio (Corporation) v. Mathis, 425.
Santler v. Heard, 334.
Sapphire, The, 118.
Sapsford v. Fletcher, 509.
Saratoga, The, 121.
Sargent v. Ballard, 595.
Sartain v. Hamilton, 525.
Sartwell v. Field, 440.
Sasser v. Herring, 682.
Satterlee v. Bliss, 407.
 v. Mathewson, 258.
Satterwhite v. Rossar, 583.
Saulet v. Shepherd, 67.
Saumarez v. Saumarez, 115.
Saunders v. Moore, 258.
 v. Robinson, 51.
 v. Wilson, 529.
Saunderson v. Ballance, 708.
Savage v. Allen, 705.
Savannah (City of) v. Steamboat Co. 185, 186.
Sawyer v. Chambers, 159, 353.
 v. Kendall, 592, 595, 596, 597.
 v. Newland, 155.
 v. Skowhegan, 145.
Scales v. Anderson, 479, 480.
 v. Cockrill, 596, 640.
Scanlan v. Wright, 694.
Schaeffner's Appeal, 95.
Schaffer v. Lavretta, 147.
Schauber v. Jackson, 342.
Schenck v. Kelley, 248.
Schermerhorn v. Buell, 262.
Schmitt v. Schmitt, 428.
Schneider v. Botsch, 623.
Schofield v. Iowa Homestead Co. 314.
Schomp v. Schenck, 297.
School Directors of St. Charles v. Goerges, 611.
School District v. Lynch, 579. of Winthrop v. Benson, 565.
Schrack v. Zubler, 594.
Schuff v. Ransom, 130.
Schulenberg v. Harriman, 138.
Schultz v. Arnot, 257, 549.
Schuyler v. Leggett, 272.
Schuyler v. Marsh, 153, 308.
 v. Smith, 273.
Scilly v. Dalby, 310.
Scoffins v. Grandstaff, 715.
Scotfield v. Whitelegge, 482.
Scorpion S. M. Co. v. Marsano, 557.
Scott v. Battle, 143, 522.
 v. Delany, 576, 646, 648.
 v. Elkins, 645.
 v. Elmore, 149.
 v. Guernsey, 488, 539.
 v. Mather, 529, 541.
 v. McLeod, 209.
 v. Onderdonk, 87.
 v. Reese, 544.
Scruggs v. Blair, 144.
Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 441.
Seabury v. Stewart, 225, 231.
Seaman v. Hogeboom, 723, 724.
 v. Vawdrey, 706.
Searcy v. Reardon, 513.
Sears v. Eastburn, 731.
 v. Munson, 539.
 v. Taylor, 62, 153, 305, 546.
Seaton v. Davis, 125, 127, 129, 286, 482.
 v. Son, 205, 307.
Secombe v. Railroad Co. 891.
Second Nat. Bank of Titusville's Appeal, 145.
Secretary v. McGarrahan, 767.
Secrist v. Zimmerman, 390.
Seeley v. Manning, 607.
Segelken v. Meyer, 129.
Sellers v. Hayes, 227.
 v. Sellers, 95.
Sellick v. Addams, 108.
Semayne's Case, 405.
Semmes v. United States, 277.
Semple v. Bank of British Columbia, 514.
 v. Cook, 609, 610.
 v. Hagar, 755.
Seneca Nation v. Knight, 722.
Seneca Road Co. v. Auburn & R. R. Co. 83.
Sepulveda v. Sepulveda, 557.
Serrano v. United States, 610.
Sessions v. Jones, 87.
Seward v. Jackson, 324.
Seymour v. Carli, 627.
 v. Creswell, 548, 627.
 v. De Lancey, 565.
Shackleford v. Bailey, 638, 662.
Shadwick v. McDonald, 483.
Shaffer v. Whelpley, 557.
Shaler v. Magin, 541.
Shand v. Hanley, 534.
Shanks v. Klein, 144, 223.
 v. White, 296.
Sharon v. Davidson, 220.
Sharp v. Blankenship, 565.
 v. Daugney, 342, 347.
 v. Ingraham, 194, 199.

- Sharpe v. Kelly, 604.
 v. St. Louis & S. E. Ry. Co. 74.
Shattuck v. Tucker, 299.
Shaver v. McGraw, 154, 162.
Shaw v. Bayard, 405, 415.
 v. Lindsey, 375.
 v. McMaren, 428.
 v. Millsaps, 353.
 v. Wise, 37.
Shawhan v. Long, 342.
Shawmut Nat. Bank v. Boston, 88.
Sheafe v. Gerry, 606.
Shearer v. Shearer, 223.
 v. Winston, 97.
Shearon v. Henderson, 467.
Sheean v. Shaw, 210.
Sheehan v. Hamilton, 669.
Sheets v. Seldon, 138.
Sheffield v. Griffin, 715.
Sheirburn v. Cordova, 737.
 v. Hunter, 356, 700.
Shelby v. Guy, 436, 729.
Sheldon v. Rice, 134.
Shellhammer v. Ashbaugh, 677.
Shelton v. Alcox, 108.
Shepard v. Ryers, 193.
Shepherd v. Orchard, 297.
 v. Thompson, 684.
 v. Young, 752.
Shepley v. Cowan, 744, 746.
 v. Rangely, 24.
Sheridan v. Andrews, 388, 389, 393, 467.
 v. Jackson, 482.
 v. Linden, 388, 389.
Sherman v. Abbot, 246.
 v. Buick, 744.
 v. Champlain Transp. Co. 605.
 v. Clark, 760.
 v. Dilley, 375, 380, 386, 395.
 v. Kane, 185, 601, 604, 606, 611, 715.
 v. Savery, 225, 516.
 v. Wright, 127.
Sherrid v. Southwick, 279.
Sherrill v. Sherrill, 708.
Sherry v. Denn, 703.
 v. Frecking, 89.
 v. State Bank, 542.
Sherwood v. St. Paul & C. Ry. Co. 535.
Shewalter v. Pirner, 724.
Shields v. Barrow, 154.
 v. Hunt, 355, 700.
Shiels v. Lamar, 662.
 v. Stark, 488.
Shipp v. Miller, 436, 729.
Shoemaker v. Shoemaker, 195.
Shook v. Pate, 681.
Shopland v. Ryoler, 127.
Shriver v. Shriver, 565, 705, 706.
Shucraft v. Davidson, 423.
Shuffleton v. Nelson, 594.
Shuman v. Gavin, 423.
Shumway v. Phillips, 549.
 v. Shumway, 420, 424, 427.
Shutte v. Thompson, 681, 684, 685.
Sibley v. Holden, 722.
Sicard v. Davis, 318, 327.
Siglar v. Van Riper, 194, 200, 201, 203.
Silloway v. Brown, 202, 540.
Silly v. Dally, 309, 310.
Silsby v. Allen, 276.
Silver Mining Co. v. Fall, 693.
Silvey v. Summer, 253, 254, 259.
Simar v. Canaday, 464.
Simers v. Saltus, 260.
Simmons v. Brown, 243, 359.
 v. Lane, 663.
 v. Lillystone, 368.
 v. Ogle, 546, 737, 738, 744, 748.
 v. Robertson, 256.
 v. St. Paul & C. Ry. Co. 336.
 v. Wagner, 742, 746.
Simms v. Richardson, 153, 242.
Simplot v. City of Dubuque, 611.
Simpson v. Dix, 155, 234, 300, 315.
 v. Downing, 599.
 v. Hawkins, 180.
 v. Robinson, 523.
Sims v. Everhardt, 127, 612.
 v. Irvine, 736, 739.
 v. Kelsay, 519.
 v. Meacham, 610.
 v. Thompson, 326.
Singer v. Scott, 460.
Singleton v. Touchard, 734.
Sinnard v. McBride, 479.
Siren, The, 164.
Sisk v. Almon, 134.
Skinner v. Crawford, 622.
 v. Starnes, 715.
Slade's Case, 134.
Slater v. Rawson, 547.
Slaughter v. Glenn, 143.
 v. Swift, 223.
Sledge v. Swift, 344.
Slevin v. Brown, 377.
Sloan v. Biemiller, 51.
 v. Martin, 572.
Slocum v. Clark, 301.
Sloper v. Cottrell, 146.
Smales v. Dale, 192.
Small v. Haskins, 420.
 v. Proctor, 230.
Smart v. Portsmouth & C. R. R. 703.
Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 744.
Smiley v. Dixon, 213.
Smilie v. Biffle, 612.
Smith, Matter of, 673.
 v. Anderson, 435.
 v. Barrett, 67.
 v. Benson, 58.
 v. Blaisdell, 253.
 v. Burtis, 42, 201, 554, 610.
 v. Chapin, 582, 595, 598, 603.

- Smith v. Chicago, A. & St. L. R. R. Co. 174, 702.
 v. City Council of Rome, 71.
 v. Coffin, 148.
 v. Countryman, 302.
 v. Cox, 309.
 v. Crabb, 462.
 v. Death, 706.
 v. Dodds, 134.
 v. Doe d. Carson, 45.
 v. Forrest, 684, 685.
 v. Gardner, 112.
 v. Gayle, 394, 413.
 v. Hamilton, 727.
 v. Hemstreet, 370.
 v. Hollenback, 50.
 v. Hornback, 400, 402.
 v. Hutchinson, 679.
 v. Jenks, 367.
 v. Kernochen, 762.
 v. Lawrence, 671, 697.
 v. Littlefield, 269, 272, 279.
 v. Long, 118, 296, 318.
 v. Lorillard, 528, 546, 598.
 v. Low, 325.
 v. Mayor, &c., 54, 55.
 v. McAllister, 627.
 v. McCann, 37, 145, 735.
 v. McCluskey, 88.
 v. McKay, 625, 626.
 v. McNeal, 370.
 v. Morrow, 627.
 v. Mosier, 740.
 v. Osborne, 211.
 v. Pipe, 112.
 v. Pretty, 410, 415.
 v. Roberts, 619, 649.
 v. Robertson, 128, 131, 533.
 v. Sherwood, 375, 376.
 v. Slocomb, 722.
 v. Smith, 703.
 v. State of Maryland, 64, 79.
 v. Tome, 350.
 v. Trabue, 410, 467, 591, 756.
 v. Vaughan, 299, 318.
 v. Walker, 156.
 v. Webster, 232.
 v. Whitbeck, 266.
 v. White, 406.
 v. Wiggin, 82, 92, 174.
 v. Wilson, 449.
 Smoot v. Smoot, 236.
 Snapp v. Spengler, 325.
 Snedeker v. Warring, 54.
 Sneed v. Ewing, 333.
 Snook, Petition of, 300.
 v. Sutton, 128.
 Snyder v. Canal R. R. Co. 322.
 v. Hopkins, 449, 450.
 v. Warford, 83.
 Society, &c. v. Town of Pawlet, 231, 615.
 v. Wheeler, 123.
 Sohler v. Eldredge, 530.
 Somerset v. Fogwell, 78.
 Somerville v. Donaldson, 424, 427.
 Sones v. Skinner, 4.
 Sopp v. Winpenny, 501, 502.
 Soto v. Kroder, 132.
 Soule v. Barlow, 570, 579, 627.
 Souter v. Codman, 193.
 v. La Crosse R. R. 240, 241.
 Southard v. Sutton, 708.
 South Beach Land Ass'n v. Christy, 410, 415.
 Southmayd v. Henley, 553.
 South & North Ala. R. R. Co. v. Henlein, 870.
 Sowder v. McMillan, 333.
 Sower v. Weaver, 350.
 Sowers v. Peterson, 221.
 Spafford v. Woodruff, 359.
 Spalding v. Chelmsford, 536.
 Sparhawk v. Allen, 489.
 v. Bullard, 547.
 Sparrow v. Hovey, 571.
 v. Kingman, 69, 230, 547, 716.
 v. Strong, 758.
 Sparry's Case, 85.
 Spear v. Cutter, 453.
 v. Downing, 302.
 Spears v. Mayor, &c. 360.
 Spect v. Gregg, 326.
 Spellman v. Curtenius, 663.
 Spence v. McGowan, 46, 380, 419, 422, 425, 439.
 Spencer v. Carr, 710.
 v. Tobey, 224, 225.
 Sperling v. Isaacs, 96.
 Sperry v. Pond, 139.
 Spigener v. Cooner, 43.
 Spiller v. Scribner, 726.
 Spitts v. Wells, 176.
 Splahn v. Gillespie, 673.
 Spratt v. Price, 346, 350, 359, 675.
 Spring v. Sandford, 132.
 Spurlock v. Dougherty, 555.
 Squires v. Clark, 208.
 v. Huff, 277.
 Staats v. Bristow, 69.
 v. Ten Eyck, 501.
 Stackhouse v. Reynolds, 283.
 Stackpole v. Healy, 72, 73.
 Stafford v. Clark, 372.
 v. King, 723.
 Staffordshire & W. Canal Nav. v. Birmingham Canal Nav. 611.
 Stagg v. Eureka Tanning Co. 254.
 Stall v. Wilbur, 489.
 Stalnaker v. Morrison, 350.
 Stamm v. Bostwick, 449.
 Stamper v. Griffin, 614, 661, 662, 663.
 Stancel v. Calvert, 140.
 Stancill v. Calvert, 484.
 Stanford v. Lyon, 55.
 Stansbury v. Taggart, 225.
 Stanton v. Embrey, 450.

- Stanwood v. McLellan, 726.
 Stark v. Barrett, 220, 304.
 v. Brown, 246, 344.
 v. Burr, 330.
 v. Starr, 356, 513, 515, 516, 523, 529, 532, 632, 633.
 v. Starrs, 21, 24, 436, 557, 746.
 Starke v. Smith, 145.
 State v. Arledge, 119.
 v. Bacheider, 744.
 v. Bailey, 716.
 v. Canterbury, 722.
 v. Jackson, 334.
 v. Martin, 300.
 v. Meagher, 352.
 v. Newark, 112.
 v. Stark, 119.
 v. Wilson, 86.
 of Alabama v. State of Georgia, 749. of California v. McGlynn, 133. of Georgia v. Grant, 750. of Indiana v. Milk, 716.
 of Minnesota v. Grant, 119.
 of New Jersey v. State of New York, 749.
 of New York v. State of Connecticut, 750. of Rhode Island v. State of Massachusetts, 749.
 Staton v. Bryant, 708.
 Stearn Stone Cutter Co. v. Jones, 102, 742.
 Stearns v. Palmer, 145, 146.
 Stebbins v. Duncan, 301, 693.
 v. Miller, 77, 387.
 Stedman v. Gassett, 278, 285.
 v. McIntosh, 269, 274.
 v. Smith, 90, 204.
 Steel v. Gold Lead M. Co. 351.
 v. Smelting Co. 111, 523, 712.
 Steeple v. Downing, 117.
 Steffens v. Earl, 270, 276.
 Steinbach v. Relief F. I. Co. 370, 371.
 Steinback v. Fitzpatrick, 306, 553.
 Steinbeck v. Stone, 46.
 Steinhauser v. Kuhn, 280.
 Steinkuhl v. York, 100, 730, 762.
 Steinruck's Appeal, 244.
 Stephani v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 513.
 Stephens v. Leach, 579.
 v. Mattox, 295.
 v. Westwood, 366.
 Stephens & C. Transp. Co. v. Central R. R.
 Co. 301.
 Stephenson v. Doe d. Wait, 663.
 Stepney v. Biddulph, 526.
 Stevens v. Brooks, 636, 637.
 v. Church, 425.
 v. Dennett, 82.
 v. Erie Ry. Co. 103.
 v. Griffith, 343.
 v. Hauser, 347, 557.
 v. Hollingsworth, 77.
 Stevens v. Hollister, 610.
 v. Hughes, 373, 375, 380, 382, 385.
 v. Reed, 694.
 v. Ruggles, 221.
 v. Thompson, 539, 540.
 v. Webb, 327.
 v. Whistler, 720.
 Stewart v. Beck, 718.
 v. Carleton, 726.
 v. Crosby, 243.
 v. Davis, 246.
 v. Patrick, 158, 177.
 v. Speer, 366.
 v. Stewart, 293, 294.
 Stiles v. Curtis, 70.
 v. Jackson, 176.
 Stinson v. Dousman, 755.
 v. Stinson, 489.
 Stitwell v. Williams, 441.
 Stockbridge v. West Stockbridge, 691.
 (Inhabs.) v. Inhabitants of West Stockbridge, 693.
 Stockham v. Browning, 86, 725.
 Stockwell v. Hunter, 88, 160.
 v. Marks, 272.
 v. Phelps, 510.
 Stoddard v. Chambers, 677, 707, 740, 744, 747.
 Stokes v. Morrow, 414.
 Stone v. Grubham, 141.
 v. Sprague, 351.
 Stonestreet v. Doyle, 198, 199.
 Storch v. Carr, 400, 483.
 Storer v. Freeman, 722.
 Storey v. Flanagan, 692.
 Storm v. Mann, 452.
 Storrs v. Barker, 709, 710.
 Story v. Bishop, 694.
 v. N. Y. Elevated R. R. Co. 187.
 v. Saunders, 194.
 Stott v. Rutherford, 253.
 Stoughton v. Baker, 610.
 Stoughton's Appeal, 61, 129.
 Stout v. McPheeters, 306, 307.
 v. Merrill, 256.
 v. Woodward, 108.
 Stovall v. Carmichael, 192, 221.
 Stover v. Cory, 210.
 Stow v. Russell, 699.
 Stowell v. Buswell, 696.
 v. Chamberlain, 35, 370, 371, 459.
 Strang v. Moog, 370.
 Stratton v. Lyons, 56.
 Strauss v. Meertief, 386.
 Street v. Anderton, 447.
 Strepey v. Stark, 670.
 Strettell v. Ballou, 217, 547, 730, 732.
 Stribling v. Prettyman, 182.
 Strickland v. Draughan, 697.
 v. Kirk, 227.
 Strike v. Dikes, 20.
 Stringer v. Young, 744.
 Stringfellow v. Alderson, 358.

- Strode v. Swim, 411.
 Strong v. City of Brooklyn, 72, 74, 92, 153, 174.
 v. Garfield, 497.
 v. Hunt, 540.
 v. Waddell, 281.
 v. Waterman, 123.
 Strother v. Lucas, 24, 375, 738, 768.
 Stroud v. Springfield, 343, 349, 682.
 Stuart v. Coalter, 107, 316.
 Stubblefield v. Borders, 346, 657, 659, 660.
 Stump v. Hornbeck, 536.
 Sturdevant v. Murrell, 44.
 Sturdy v. Jackaway, 22, 370, 379, 382, 436, 729.
 Sturgeon v. Douglas, 149.
 Sturgis v. Holliday, 538.
 Stuyvesant v. Davis, 263.
 v. Tompkins, 547.
 Styles v. Gray, 342.
 Suffern v. Townsend, 224, 225, 262.
 Sullivan v. Davis, 151.
 v. Sullivan, 97, 391.
 Sullivane v. Seagrave, 57, 321.
 Sulphine v. Dunbar, 708.
 Summers v. Brady, 329.
 Sumner v. Hampson, 69, 223.
 v. Stevens, 631, 643.
 Supervisors v. Herrington, 258, 260.
 Sussex (Earl of) v. Temple, 192.
 Sutlive v. Jones, 144.
 Suttle v. Richmond, F. & P. R. R. Co. 349, 350, 669, 717.
 Sutton v. Aiken, 307.
 v. Casseleggi, 605.
 v. Mason, 245.
 v. McLeod, 700.
 Swafford v. Whipple, 314.
 Swamscott Machine Co. v. Perry, 92.
 Swan v. Stephens, 77, 343, 387.
 Swann v. Lindsey, 610.
 Swartzel v. Rogers, 425, 427.
 Swasey v. North Carolina R. R. Co. 167, 170, 171.
 Swayze v. Burke, 737, 739.
 Swett v. Patrick, 219.
 Swettenham v. Leary, 621, 623, 627, 639, 687.
 Swift v. Dean, 257.
 v. Livingstone, 40.
 Swink v. French, 690.
 Sydnor v. Palmer, 427, 637.
 Sykes v. Hayes, 161.
 Sylvester v. Ralston, 479.
 Symonds v. Page, 507.

 Table Mountain Tunnel Co. v. Stranahan, 234.
 Tabler v. Wiseman, 390.
 Tabor v. Richardson, 89.
 Tacey v. Irwin, 168.
 Talbot v. Scott, 444, 451.
 Taliaferro v. Gay, 241.

 Tamm v. Kellogg, 626.
 Tanner v. Hicks, 227.
 Tappan v. Tappan, 344.
 Tapscott v. Cobbs, 131.
 Tarbel v. Bradley, 223.
 Tarbell v. West, 144.
 Tarver v. Smith, 116, 135, 220.
 Tate v. Southard, 631.
 Tatum v. McLellan, 505, 523, 524.
 Tayloe v. Dugger, 225.
 Taylor v. Armstrong, 71.
 v. Baldwin, 539.
 v. Barnes, 233, 394.
 v. Castle, 371.
 v. Crane, 153, 304, 305.
 v. Davis, 695.
 v. Gerrish, 566.
 v. Gladwin, 55, 82, 83, 388.
 v. Hill, 194, 198, 368.
 v. Horde, 54, 345, 374, 375, 400
 v. Stockdale, 191.
 v. Sutton, 418.
 v. Taylor, 114, 315, 513.
 v. Trask, 297.
 v. Whiting, 315, 533.
 v. Zamira, 509.
 Taylors v. Huston, 301.
 Teabout v. Daniels, 216, 546, 632.
 Teal v. Collins, 87.
 v. Terrell, 114, 315.
 Tebbets v. Estes, 672.
 Tefft v. Munson, 715.
 Tegarden v. Carpenter, 341, 346.
 Ten Broeck v. Orchard, 350, 353.
 Ten Eyck v. Craig, 248.
 Tenn. & Coosa R. R. Co. v. East Ala. Ry. Co. 138, 696.
 Terre Haute & S. E. R. R. Co. v. Rodel, 70, 74, 187, 189.
 Terrell v. Allison, 399, 410.
 v. Cunningham, 488.
 Territory v. Lee, 148.
 Territt v. Cowenhoven, 253.
 Tesmond v. Johnson, 28.
 Tessier v. Wyse, 176.
 Tetherow v. Chambers, 304.
 Tervis v. Ellis, 410, 416.
 v. Hicks, 409, 414.
 Tewksbury v. Magraff, 253, 255.
 Texas Land Co. v. Turman, 50, 259.
 v. Williams, 646, 651
 Thacker v. Henderson, 128.
 Thatcher v. Powell, 436, 729.
 Thayer v. Bacon, 726.
 v. McLellan, 640.
 Thomas, Ex parte, 530.
 v. Babb, 622.
 v. Garvan, 97.
 v. Geiger, 423.
 v. Hatch, 722.
 v. Kelly, 680.
 v. Malcom, 536

- Thomas v. Marshfield, 568, 608, 611.
 v. Newton, 760.
 v. Orrell, 343.*
 v. Pickering, 208.
 v. Sanford S. S. Co. 277.
 v. Scott, 223.
 v. Thomas, 527.
 v. Wright, 274, 275.
Thompson v. Bower, 478, 479.
 v. Burhans, 545, 550, 555, 573, 638, 639, 646, 647, 660.
 v. Clark, 393, 467, 502.
 v. Cragg, 632.
 v. Crocker, 331.
 v. Green, 142.
 v. Kendrick, 753.
 v. Maberly, 275.
 v. McCay, 359.
 v. Mylne, 372.
 v. O'Sullivan, 260.
 v. Pioche, 569, 579.
 v. Red, 359, 360.
 v. Reynolds, 297.
 v. Schuyler, 153.
 v. Sherrard, 442.
 v. Thompson, 523, 524.
 v. Williams, 451.
 v. Wolf, 50.
 v. Woolf, 690.
Thomson v. Wooster, 732.
Thornton v. Dixon, 223.
 v. Grant, 725.
 v. Ramsden, 705.
 v. York Bank, 192.
Thorp v. Raymond, 612.
Thouvenin v. Lea, 537.
Thrale v. Cornwall, 334.
Thrall v. Omaha Hotel Co. 259.
Thrash v. Johnson, 44.
Throckmorton v. Burr, 218.
Thropp v. Field, 266.
Thrustout v. Troublesome, 459.
Thunder v. Belcher, 239, 285.
Thurber v. Conners, 51, 141.
 v. Dwyer, 272, 274.
Thurman v. Anderson, 361.
Thyn v. Thyn, 81.
Tibbs v. Clarkson, 126.
Tibeau v. Tibeau, 235, 353.
Tice v. School Dist. No. 18, 730.
Tichenor v. Knapp, 557.
Tilghman v. Little, 259.
Tillman v. Spann, 225.
Tillmes v. Marsh, 70, 76, 99, 101, 387, 725.
Tillotson v. Doe d. Kennedy, 281.
Tilton v. Beecher, 328.
 v. Cofield, 181, 371, 466.
Timmins v. Rowlinson, 288.
Timon v. Whitehead, 710.
Tintsman v. National Bank, 755.
Tioga R. R. v. Blossburg & C. R. 729.
Tisdale v. Tisdale, 211, 212.
Tisher v. Beckwith, 695.
Tison v. Yawn, 257.
Titsworth v. Stout, 211.
Todd v. Davis, 242.
Toles v. Gardner, 370.
Tolson v. Mainor, 697.
Tompkins v. Snow, 253, 254.
 v. White, 466.
 v. Williams, 226.
Tonnele v. Hall, 121.
Toole v. Peterson, 681.
Toomey v. Kay, 566.
Tormey v. Pierce, 315.
Torrey v. Torrey, 286.
Torriano v. Young, 262.
Torry v. Black, 127.
Touchard v. Crow, 219.
Towle v. Ayer, 42, 49, 152.
 v. Dewitt, 424.
 v. Remsen, 138.
Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 753.
 Venice v. Breed, 342.
Towne v. Butterfield, 254.
 v. Campbell, 270.
Townsend v. Davis, 253, 254.
 v. Downer, 342.
 v. Little, 556.
 v. Mayor, &c. 87.
 v. Shipp, 518, 522, 523.
Townsend & Pastor's Case, 204.
Tracy v. Atherton, 595.
 v. Kelley, 341.
 v. Newton, 627.
 v. Norwich & W. R. R. Co. 66
Trammell v. Simmons, 233.
Traphagen v. Traphagen, 235, 351.
Trapnall v. Hill, 194.
Traver v. Baker, 390, 716.
Treaster v. Fleisher, 232.
Treat v. McMahon, 4.
Treftz v. Pitts, 386.
Trego v. Lewis, 327.
Tremain v. Sands, 84.
Trenouth v. Gilbert, 195.
 v. Gordon, 700.
Trenton Banking Co. v. Duncan, 710.
Tribble v. Anderson, 258.
Trim v. Marsh, 240, 241.
Tripp v. Ide, 239.
Triscaony v. Orr, 301.
Tritt v. Roberts, 648.
Trittip v. Morgan, 391.
Troost v. Davis, 522.
Trotter v. Cassaday, 585.
 v. Simpson, 90.
Trousdale v. Maxwell, 705.
Troy & B. R. R. Co. v. Boston, H. T. & W. Ry. Co. 92, 104, 174.
Trubee v. Miller, 474, 475, 483, 485, 508.
Truehart v. McMichael, 220.
Truitt v. Truitt, 423, 427.
Trull v. Granger, 141.

- Trull v. Skinner, 248.
 Truss v. Old, 127, 553.
 Trussel v. Lewis, 627, 727.
 Trustees of Brookhaven v. Strong, 79.
 Church of North Greig v. Johnson, 203.
 East Hampton v. Kirk, 64, 65, 592.
 Hawesville v. Hawes, 76.
 Meth. Ep. Ch. v. Council of Hoboken, 187, 188.
 Wadsworthville School v. Meetze, 280.
 Tryon v. Carlin, 366.
 v. Munson, 243, 246.
 Tucker v. Hamilton, 342.
 v. Moreland, 126.
 v. Vance, 114, 142, 315.
 v. Whitehead, 256.
 Tufts v. Charlestown, 577.
 Tulloch v. Worrall, 203.
 Tully v. Bauer, 703.
 Tupper v. Wise, 759.
 Turberville v. Long, 368.
 Turner, Ex parte, 762.
 v. Davis, 294.
 v. Doe d. Bennett, 276.
 v. Duchman, 159, 179, 462.
 v. Ferguson, 311.
 v. Hall, 572, 573, 574, 578, 581.
 v. Marriott, 286.
 v. Reynolds, 59.
 v. Thomas, 256.
 Turney v. Chamberlain, 646.
 Turnipseed v. Fitzpatrick, 332, 518.
 v. Hudson, 718.
 Turpin v. Brannon, 631.
 v. Saunders, 257, 579, 580.
 Turrell v. Warren, 241.
 Tuttle v. Reynolds, 281.
 Tutwiler v. Munford, 695.
 Twyman v. Hawley, 227, 283, 284.
 Tyler v. Canaday, 360.
 v. Fickett, 236.
 v. Hammond, 722.
 v. Heidorn, 265.
 Tyson v. Britton, 612.
 Ufford v. Wells, 310.
 Uhling v. Garrison, 716.
 Uhrich v. Beck, 131.
 Ulsh v. Strode, 343.
 Underhill v. Saratoga & W. R. R. Co. 138.
 Underwood v. Sims, 43.
 Unger v. Mooney, 192, 571.
 Union Canal Co. v. Young, 82.
 College v. Wheeler, 240.
 House v. Rowell, 83.
 Petroleum Co. v. Blivin Petroleum Co. 61, 85.
 R. R. & T. Co. v. Traube, 371.
 Sav. Bank v. Taber, 601.
 United States v. Athens Armory, 241.
 v. Beebee, 547.
 v. Bostwick, 261.
 v. Castillero, 59.
 v. Central Pacific R. R. Co. 154.
 v. City of Alexandria, 610.
 v. Clarke, 163.
 v. Commissioner, 767.
 v. Cook, 123, 150, 665.
 v. Crosby, 333.
 v. Dawson, 339.
 v. Eckford, 163.
 v. Fox, 119, 333, 729.
 v. Gear, 453.
 v. Hart, 171.
 v. Hoar, 610.
 v. Howland, 732.
 v. Kirby, 171.
 v. Kirkpatrick, 610.
 v. Lee, 170, 173.
 v. Lowry, 405.
 v. Parrott, 453.
 v. Schurz, 767.
 v. Slaymaker, 402.
 v. Spiel, 610.
 v. Stone, 744.
 v. Thompson, 558, 610.
 v. Throckmorton, 371.
 v. Union Pacific R. R. Co. 121.
 v. Williams, 610.
 University of Vermont v. Reynolds, 666, 667.
 Unversaw v. Myers, 327.
 Updegraff v. Trask, 131, 132.
 Upton v. McLaughlin, 348.
 Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 612.
 Utterback v. Terhune, 390.
 Utterson v. Vernon, 473.
 Valentine v. Belden, 136.
 v. Mahoney, 394.
 v. Piper, 667, 721.
 Valle v. Fleming, 527.
 Van Alen v. Rogers, 483, 490.
 Van Alstine v. McCarty, 104, 480.
 Van Alstyne v. Spraker, 307.
 Vanatta v. Brewer, 91, 253.
 Van Auker v. Decker, 77.
 Van Bibber v. Frazier, 199.
 Van Brunt v. Applegate, 69.
 Vance v. Olinger, 460.
 v. Schroyer, 113, 304.
 Vandergriff v. Piercy, 693.
 Vanderpoel v. Smith, 88.
 v. Van Valkenburgh, 133.
 Vanderslice v. Knapp, 453.
 Vanderwerker v. People, 334.
 Van Deusen v. Sweet, 99, 110, 180, 443, 463.
 v. Young, 224, 225.

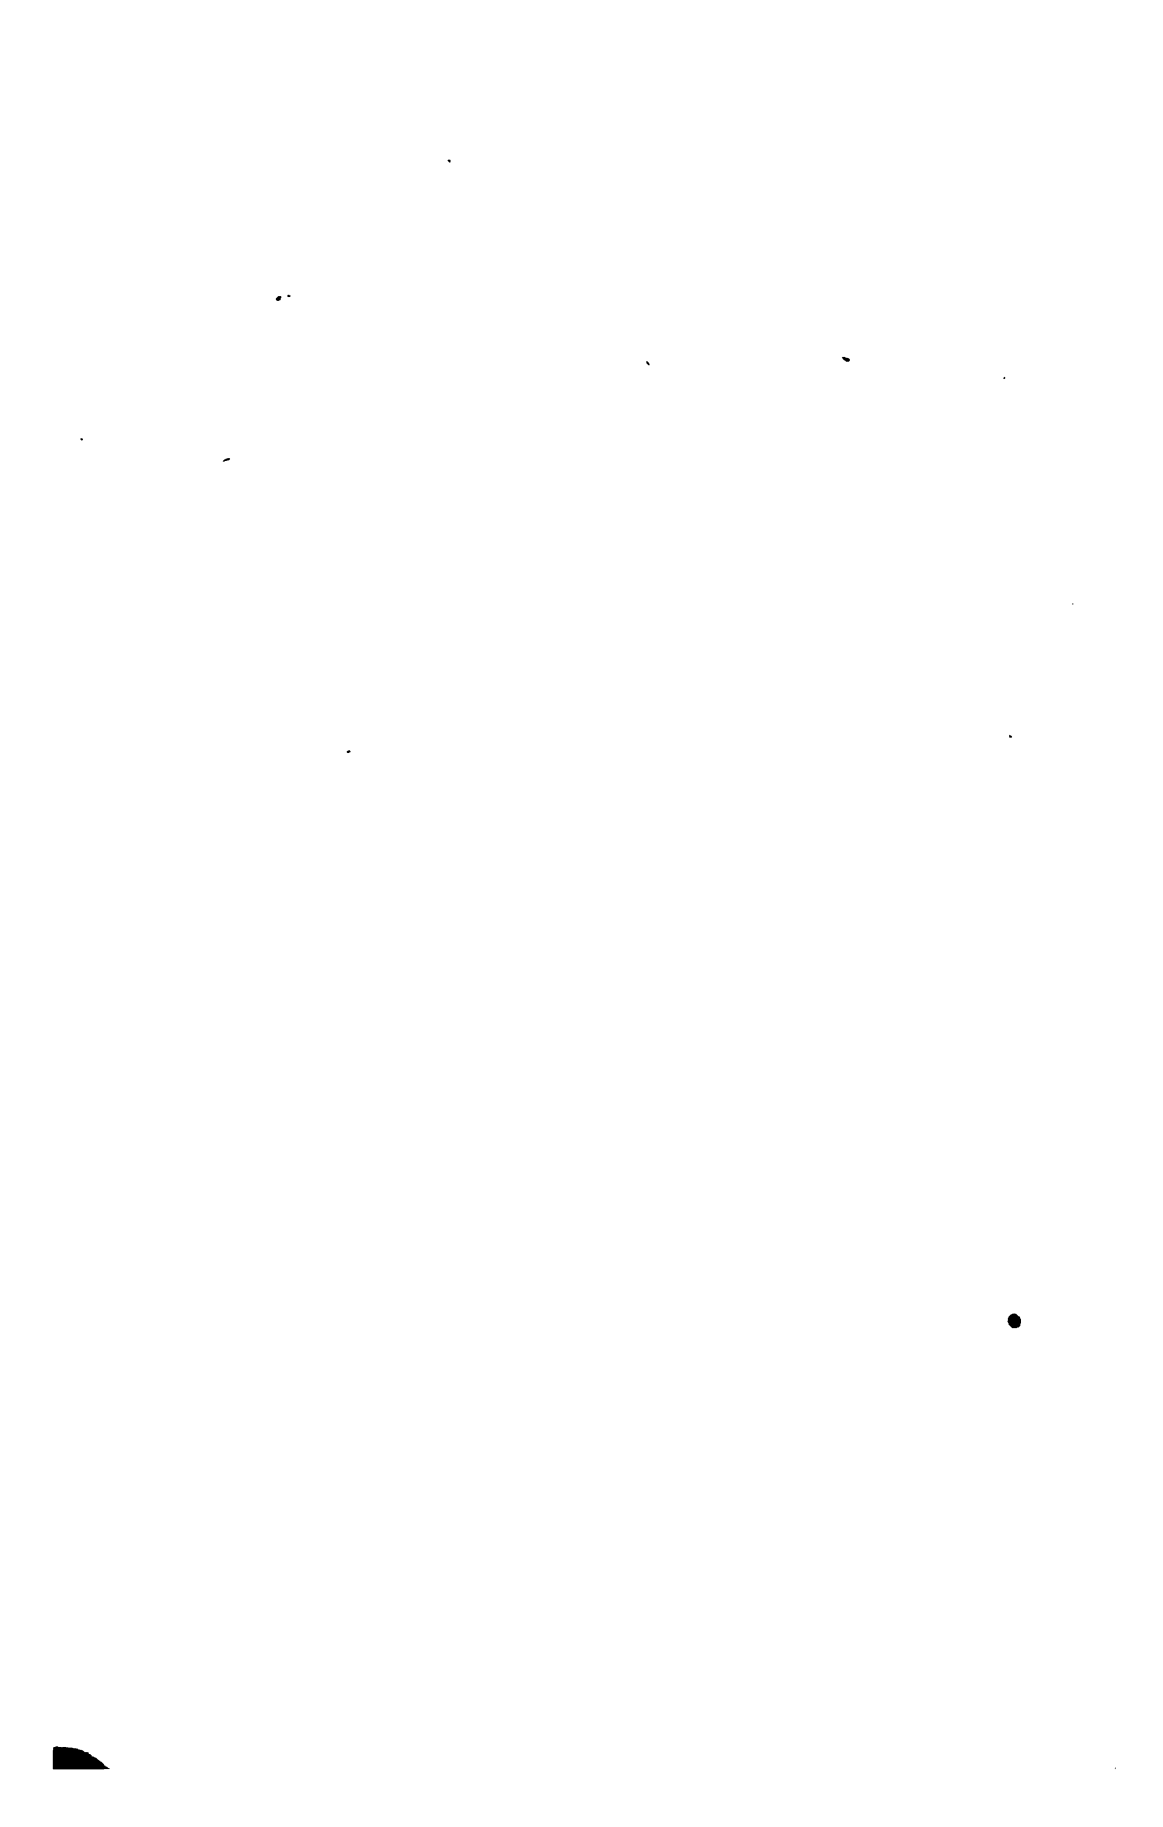

- Van Denzen v. Trustees, &c. 81.
 Vandever v. Freeman, 331.
 Vandevoort v. Gould, 317, 476, 476, 477, 491, 495, 501.
 Van Dyck v. Van Beuren, 206, 207.
 Van Fossen v. Pearson, 364.
 Vanhorn v. Chesnut, 739.
 Van Horne v. Everson, 153.
 v. Fonda, 211, 212.
 Van Name v. Van Name, 69.
 Van Ness v. Bank of the U. S. 732.
 Van Pelt v. McGraw, 453.
 Van Rensselaer v. Ball, 91, 265.
 v. Barringer, 133.
 v. Hayes, 135.
 v. Hays, 265.
 v. Jewett, 91, 253, 265, 266.
 v. Owen, 485.
 v. Slingerland, 265.
 v. Witbeck, 403.
 Van Schuyver v. Mulford, 97.
 Van Valkenburgh v. Den d. Rahway Bank, 284.
 Van Valkenburg v. Huff, 192.
 Van Vliet v. Olin, 370.
 Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 69.
 v. Budd, 300.
 Van Winkle v. Hinckle, 279.
 Van Wyck v. Braasher, 131.
 Varney v. Stevens, 212.
 Vasquez v. Ewing, 350.
 Vaughan v. Bacon, 192.
 Vause v. Woods, 441, 443, 444.
 Veal v. Robinson, 630.
 Venable v. Beauchamp, 211.
 Venice (Town of) v. Breed, 342.
 Venner v. Underwood, 360.
 Vermilya v. Beatty, 334.
 Vermont & M. R. R. Co. v. Orcutt, 331.
 Vernam v. Smith, 253.
 Verplanck v. Verplanck, 448.
 v. Wright, 262.
 Verplank v. Caines, 441.
 Very v. Watkins, 240.
 Vice v. Thomas, 60.
 Vickers v. Sisson, 235.
 Vicksburg v. Marshall, 611.
 Viele v. Judson, 712.
 v. Troy & B. R. R. Co. 235.
 Villa v. Rodriguez, 244.
 Vincent v. Corbin, 274, 279.
 v. Parker, 448.
 Virginia v. West Virginia, 749.
 Vischer v. Conant, 329.
 Von Schrader v. Taylor, 176, 177.
 Voorhees v. Burchard, 55, 338.
 Voorhies v. Voorhies, 126, 316.
 Vosburgh v. Teator, 726, 727.
 Vreeland v. Blauvelt, 705.
 Vrooman v. Jackson, 49, 89, 109, 388.
 v. Weed, 115.
 Waddy v. Newton, 77.
 Wade v. Baker, 127.
 v. Doyle, 342, 346.
 v. Lindsey, 715.
 v. Malloy, 140, 262.
 Wadsworthville School v. Meetze, 280.
 Wager v. Schuyler, 501.
 v. Troy Union R. R. Co. 72, 465.
 v. Wager, 133, 391.
 Waggener v. Lyles, 231.
 Wagner v. Railway Co. 104.
 Wait v. Richardson, 202.
 Wake v. Tinkler, 145.
 Wakeley v. Nicholas, 355.
 Wakeman v. Banks, 239.
 Walbrunn v. Ballen, 626.
 Walcop v. McKinney, 286.
 Walden v. Bodley, 253, 370.
 v. Craig, 27, 299.
 v. Gratz, 560.
 Waldron v. Waldron, 696.
 Wales v. Coffin, 523, 528.
 Walker v. Armour, 420.
 v. Cox, 427.
 v. Emerson, 227.
 v. Greenlee, 693.
 v. Hitchcock, 497.
 v. Howard, 47.
 v. Humbert, 488, 520, 540, 541.
 v. Millard, 228.
 v. Mitchell, 476.
 v. Powers, 115, 315.
 v. Quigg, 524.
 v. Sharpe, 51, 291, 292.
 v. Sherman, 56.
 v. Zorn, 444.
 Walkup v. Zehring, 461.
 Wallace v. Harris, 98.
 v. McConuell, 359.
 v. Swinton, 670.
 Wallen v. Huff, 181, 407, 411, 413.
 Walls v. McGee, 610.
 v. Smith, 631, 641.
 Waln v. Shearman, 178.
 Walrath v. Redfield, 500.
 Wals v. Grosvenor, 87.
 Walsh v. Wilson, 530, 543.
 Walter v. Greenwood, 539.
 v. Lockwood, 305, 308, 309.
 Walton v. Johnson, 453.
 v. Jordan, 510.
 Ward v. Chamberlain, 742.
 v. Dewey, 87.
 v. Drouthlett, 423.
 v. Herrin, 584.
 v. McIntosh, 230, 547.
 v. Parks, 156, 303, 553.
 v. Petifer, 80.
 v. Swift, 149.
 v. Ward, 427.
 v. Warren, 192.
 Warden v. Eichbaum, 131.

- Warden's Case, 322.
 Warder v. Baldwin, 718.
 Ware v. Jackson, 227.
 v. Percival, 371.
 Warfield v. Lindell, 195, 197, 198, 199, 200, 206.
 Waring v. Crow, 62.
 v. Somborn, 351.
 Warner v. Bennett, 139.
 v. Hardy, 28, 678.
 v. Southworth, 722.
 v. Turner, 319.
 Warren v. Chambers, 67.
 v. Kelly, 336.
 v. Tobey, 137.
 v. Wakeley, 321.
 v. Webb, 330, 331.
 Warren Co. v. Marcy, 467.
 Warwick v. Mayo, 72.
 Washabaugh v. Entriken, 584, 715.
 Washburn v. Burnham, 87.
 v. Cutter, 576, 615, 633, 636, 641, 660.
 v. Great Western Ins. Co. 371.
 Washington v. Conrad, 210, 258, 261.
 Washington Bank v. Brown, 343.
 Washington Co. v. Matteson, 725.
 Waterhouse v. Martin, 652.
 Waterman v. Andrews, 114, 198.
 v. Johnson, 724.
 v. Smith, 391.
 Waters v. Butler, 270.
 v. Perkins, 353.
 v. Stewart, 240.
 Wathen v. English, 213.
 Watkins v. Brunt, 312.
 v. Holman, 26, 231, 732, 734, 735.
 v. Peck, 129.
 Watrous v. McGrew, 692.
 Watson v. Brainard, 479, 480.
 v. Fletcher, 266.
 v. Hunter, 449.
 v. Jones, 459.
 v. Sutherland, 449.
 v. Tindal, 649.
 v. Wilcox, 328.
 Watts v. Kinney, 330, 332, 397.
 v. Owens, 211, 637, 652.
 Wattson v. Dowling, 407.
 Weakly (d. Yea) v. Bucknell, 26.
 Weaver v. Crenshaw, 68.
 v. Field, 459.
 v. Norwood, 522.
 v. Wible, 209, 415.
 Webb v. Buckelew, 372.
 v. Goddard, 331, 335.
 v. Richardson, 584.
 Webber v. Eastern R. R. Co. 722.
 v. Lee, 77, 85.
 v. Williams College, 612.
 Weber v. Anderson, 598, 618, 629.
 Webster v. Bond, 153, 159, 179, 350, 351, 352, 353.
 v. Mann, 227.
 v. Stewart, 542.
 v. Vandeventer, 217.
 v. Webster, 132.
 Weed v. Root, 95.
 Weems v. Mackall, 124, 125.
 Weese v. Barker, 220.
 Weichselbaum v. Curlett, 259.
 Weide v. Gehl, 244.
 Weidersun v. Naumann, 102, 126.
 Weisbrod v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. 74.
 Weisinger v. Murphy, 205.
 Weiskoph v. Dibble, 346.
 Weiss v. Jackson Co. 104.
 Welborn v. Anderson, 633, 636, 646, 650, 660.
 Welch v. Winterburn, 454.
 Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 718.
 Wellborn v. Finley, 715.
 Wells v. Atkinson, 159.
 v. Iron Co. 574, 637, 640, 646, 661, 693, 694.
 v. Mason, 259.
 v. Morrow, 244.
 v. Rice, 243, 246.
 v. Riley, 525.
 Wendell v. Moulton, 536, 543.
 v. People, 119, 120, 723.
 v. Van Rensselaer, 710.
 Wentworth v. Barnum, 458.
 Wernke v. Hazen, 543.
 West v. Fitz, 333.
 West Covington v. Freking, 189.
 Western R. R. Co. v. Nolan, 145.
 Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 757.
 West Hartford Eccles. Soc. v. First Bap.
 Church, 725.
 West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 104, 448, 450, 452.
 Wetherbee v. Dunn, 724.
 v. Green, 245.
 Wetmore v. Tracy, 114.
 Whaley v. Dawson, 390.
 Wharton v. Moore, 522.
 Whatley v. Newsom, 672.
 Wheelan v. Fish, 96.
 Wheeler v. Ladd, 546, 613, 670.
 v. Moody, 594.
 v. Spinola, 554, 584.
 v. Standley, 236.
 v. Toulson, 80.
 v. Tracy, 228, 706.
 Wheelock v. Warschauer, 259, 303.
 Wheelwright v. Freeman, 179.
 Whipple v. Shewalter, 288.
 Whissenhunt v. Jones, 254, 282, 491, 501, 680.
 Whitaker v. Bramson, 372.
 v. Hawley, 88.
 v. McClung, 426.
 White v. Brooks, 219.

- White v. Clack, 507.
 v. Coatsworth, 370.
 v. Cronkhite, 673.
 v. Damon, 706.
 v. Den d. Woodruff, 326, 362.
 v. Hapeman, 366.
 v. Kyle, 375.
 v. Luning, 724.
 v. Patten, 715.
 v. Pickering, 160, 218, 316.
 v. Poorman, 418.
 v. Reid, 584.
 v. Rittenmyer, 243.
 v. Rowland, 474.
 v. Sabariego, 148.
 v. St. Guirons, 44.
 v. Sanborn, 331.
 v. Tucker, 501.
 v. White, 56.
 v. Williams, 723.
 v. Wilson, 425.
White's Bank of Buffalo v. Nichols, 64, 722.
Whitehall Transp. Co. v. N.J. S.B. Co. 500.
Whiteside v. Haselton, 180.
 v. Jackson, 231.
 v. Singleton, 662.
Whiting v. Edmunds, 253, 256, 569, 603.
 v. Taylor, 604.
 v. Wellington, 729.
Whitledge v. Wait, 497, 531.
Whitlock v. Willard, 137.
Whitman v. Fisher, 95.
 v. Willis, 705.
Whitney v. Buckman, 325, 447.
 v. Cotten, 144.
 v. Gordon, 237.
 v. Kirtland, 297.
 v. Marshall, 178.
 v. Nelson, 395.
 v. Richardson, 523, 526.
 v. Wright, 548.
Whittemore v. Shaw, 391.
Whittier v. Stege, 228.
Whittingham v. Andrews, 59, 60.
Whittington v. Flint, 604.
 v. Wright, 610.
Whittuck v. Waters, 688.
Wickham v. Freeman, 547.
Wicks v. Smith, 342, 346, 356.
Widdowson v. Earl of Harrington, 303.
Wigg v. Wigg, 253.
Wiggin v. Wiggin, 254, 259.
Wiggins v. Holley, 615.
Wight v. Shaw, 715.
Wilbur v. Ripley, 37.
Wilcox v. City of Oakland, 105.
 v. Jackson, 166, 167, 742, 747.
 v. Moody, 334.
 v. Wilcox, 144, 468.
Wilcoxon v. Osborn, 716.
Wild v. Holt, 499.
Wilder v. Wheeldon, 614.
Wiles v. Peck, 108.
Wille v. Brooks, 523, 533, 536.
Wilkes v. Lion, 485.
Wilkins v. French, 235.
Wilkinson v. Colley, 289.
 v. Flowers, 607.
 v. Pearson, 534.
 v. Wilkinson, 262, 447.
Wilkow v. Lane, 82, 84, 92.
Williams v. Ackerman, 272.
 v. Ayrault, 396.
 v. Barnett, 349.
 v. Cash, 280, 604.
 v. Currie, 499.
 v. Deriar, 275.
 v. Fitzhugh, 396.
 v. Garrison, 256.
 v. Gibbes, 521.
 v. Hartshorn, 45.
 v. Higgins, 599.
 v. Kenney, 73.
 v. Kitland, 729.
 v. McAliley, 254.
 v. McMichael, 256.
 v. Murphy, 235, 354.
 v. Nelson, 594.
 v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co. 187.
 v. Rawlins, 116, 461.
 v. Robinson, 140.
 v. Sherman, 503.
 v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 335.
 v. Sutton, 192, 219.
 v. Talliaferro, 100.
 v. Wallace, 575, 582, 584.
 v. Wiggand, 217, 547.
Williamson v. Doe d. Crawford, 156.
 v. Fontain, 144.
 v. Paxton, 227, 284, 460.
 v. Williams, 686.
Willingham v. Long, 181, 486, 535, 536.
Willink v. Miles, 736.
Wills v. Corlies, 441, 443.
 v. Matthews, 677.
 v. Row, 147.
Willison v. Watkins, 231, 279, 281, 580.
Willoughby v. Jenks, 73.
Wills v. Dillinger, 423.
 v. Noyes, 193.
 v. Stradling, 234.
Willson v. Betta, 691.
Wilmington v. Burlington, 688.
Wilmont v. Meserole, 467.
Wilson v. Allen, 147.
 v. Arentz, 142.
 v. Chandler, 221.
 v. Collishaw, 206.
 v. Cox, 234.
 v. Garaghty, 143, 176.
 v. Glenn, 546, 548, 591.
 v. Guthrie, 158.
 v. Hall, 414.
 v. Henry, 22.

- Wilson v. Hodges, 691.
 v. Hooper, 239, 242, 285, 286.
 v. Inloes, 724.
 v. James, 253, 255.
 v. Jarvis, 461.
 v. Kilcannon, 631, 652.
 v. McEwan, 574, 715.
 v. Merrill, 277.
 v. Palmer, 546, 549.
 v. Polk, 400.
 v. Ring, 250.
 v. Spring, 672, 673, 674, 694.
 v. Stoner, 666.
 v. Williams, 636.
 v. Woddel, 16.
 Wilton v. Tazwell, 211.
 Wimmer v. Ficklin, 713.
 Winchester v. Cain, 670.
 v. Gleaves, 433.
 Windham v. Chisholm, 150.
 Windsor's (Lady) Case, 104.
 Wing v. Disse, 149.
 v. Hall, 570, 579, 587, 636, 645, 649.
 Wingler v. Simpeon, 627.
 Winona (City of) v. Huff, 188.
 Winona & St. P. R. R. Co. v. Denman, 535.
 Winpenny v. Winpenny, 676.
 Winship v. Pitts, 261.
 Winslow v. Cooper, 713.
 v. King, 722.
 v. Newell, 535.
 v. Patten, 721.
 Winter v. Eckert, 69, 144.
 v. Quarles, 301.
 Winterink v. Maynard, 257.
 Wintermute v. Montgomery, 348.
 Winthrop v. Auburn, 565.
 v. Grimes, 220.
 Winton v. Cornish, 88, 160.
 Wirth v. Branson, 741, 745, 746.
 Wisdom v. Williams, 359.
 Wise v. Metcalfe, 262.
 v. Wheeler, 182.
 Wiseman v. Penland, 304.
 Wiswall v. Sampson, 175.
 Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, 21, 400, 402, 403, 406.
 Witham v. Witham, 193.
 Witherinton v. McDonald, 744.
 Withers v. Burkett, 516.
 Withrow v. Biggerstaff, 208, 414.
 Witmer's Appeal, 453.
 Witt v. Mayor, &c. 269.
 v. Trustees of Grand Grove, 524.
 Wittkowski v. Watkins, 242.
 Wolcott v. Robbins, 724.
 v. Townsend, 506.
 Wolf v. Goddard, 290.
 v. Johnson, 259.
 Wolfe v. Doe d. Dowell, 680.
 v. Scarborough, 725.
 Wolfe v. Wolff, 273.
 Wood v. Coghill, 401.
 v. Drouthett, 578.
 v. Foster, 687.
 v. Jackson, 386.
 v. Leadbitter, 88.
 v. McGuire, 161, 358, 362.
 v. Morton, 281, 306.
 v. Ostram, 717, 718.
 v. Phillips, 193, 278, 702.
 v. Truckee Turnpike Co. 82, 84.
 v. Wilcox, 479.
 v. Wood, 140, 143, 270, 271, 520,
 523, 528, 538.
 Woodbridge v. Banning, 133.
 Woodbury v. Swan, 494.
 Wooden Ware Co. v. United States, 496.
 Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 52, 68, 317, 415, 475, 485, 491, 496, 498, 511, 520, 522,
 523, 524, 528, 529, 533.
 Woodman v. Coolbroth, 694.
 Woodruff v. Garner, 497.
 v. Garnor, 341.
 Woods v. Banks, 549, 550, 555.
 v. Hilderbrand, 246.
 v. Lane, 546.
 v. Woods, 250.
 Woodward v. Blanchard, 631, 659, 660.
 v. Brown, 37, 253, 270, 304.
 v. Phillips, 531, 539.
 v. Rodgers, 236.
 v. Sloan, 358.
 Woolever v. Knapp, 488.
 Woolley v. Newcombe, 314, 676.
 Woolsey v. Morss, 206, 602.
 Worcester v. Clark, 148.
 v. Lord, 622.
 Workman v. Guthrie, 591.
 Worrall v. Beck, 68.
 v. Munn, 465, 497, 498, 501, 513.
 Worthington v. Etcheson, 271.
 Wray v. Chicago, I. & Q. R. R. Co. 662, 663.
 Wright v. Atkyns, 453.
 v. Carter, 72.
 v. Doe d. Tatham, 375.
 v. Hollingsworth, 732.
 v. Howard, 720.
 v. Jackson, 696.
 v. Mattison, 630, 631.
 v. McCormick, 301.
 v. Milbank, 418, 430, 433.
 v. Moore, 225, 227, 283.
 v. Saddler, 148.
 v. Sperry, 212.
 v. Thompson, 233.
 v. Wallbaum, 112.
 v. Wheatley, 25.
 v. Wood, 556.
 v. Young, 234.
 Wrotesley v. Adams, 26.
 Wyman v. Brown, 154, 303.
 v. Kilgore, 328.
 Wynn v. Cory, 668.

| | |
|---------------------------------------|---|
| Wynne v. Lord Newborough, 149. | Young v. Porter, 99, 101, 522. |
| Wythe v. Myers, 357, 543, 766. | v. Rummell, 386. |
| Yancey v. Greenlee, 220. | v. Smith, 272. |
| Yates v. Yates, 546, 549. | v. Young, 466. |
| Yetzer v. Thoman, 627. | Younge v. Guilbeau, 679, 696. |
| Yocum v. Morice, 700. | Yount v. Howell, 304, 520, 528. |
| York Buildings Co. v. Mackenzie, 531. | |
| York Co. Sav. Bank v. Roberts, 244. | Zeigler v. Fisher, 340, 346. |
| Yosemite Valley Case, 746. | Zellin v. Rogers, 346. |
| Youmans v. Youmans, 95. | Zeller v. Eckert, 197, 198, 200, 201, 601, 604. |
| Young v. De Bruhl, 192, 194. | Zimmerman v. Eshbach, 474, 484. |
| v. Dunn, 734, 737. | v. Marchland, 423. |
| v. Griffith, 192. | v. Shreeve, 140. |
| v. Holmes, 133. | Zinc Co. v. Franklinite Co. 57, 59, 452. |
| v. Irwin, 225. | Zouch v. Parsons, 124. |
| v. Montgomery, 235, 353. | Zuchtman v. Roberts, 711. |

Trial of Title to Land.

CHAPTER I.

HISTORY OF THE ACTION OF EJECTMENT.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 1. Origin of the action. 2. Real writs and personal actions. 3. Practice in real actions. 4. Influence of the statute concerning forcible entries. 5. Strictness of pleading. 6. Abuses in practice under real writs. 7. Advantages of personal actions. 8. Abandonment of real writs. 9. Influences leading to the change 10. Advantages of ejectment. 11. Influence of practice in trover and assumpsit. 12. Ejectione Firma. 13. Freehold estates. 14. Imperfect remedies of tenant for years. 15. Quare ejetit infra terminum. 16. Provisions of the writ. 17. Against whom the writ lay. 18. Additional remedies of tenants for years. 19. Sketch of ejectione firma. 20. Requisites of the writ. 21. Defined by Blackstone. 22. When it issued. 23. Recovery in ejectione firma. 24. Term not recoverable in early practice. 25. Extension of recovery to the term. 26. Adoption of ejectment and disuse of real actions. 27. Early practice in ejectment. 28. A valid lease necessary. 29. Actual ouster not requisite. 30. Injustice of the rule. 31. Abuses in early practice in ejectment. 32. Notice to the tenant in possession. | § 33. Inconvenience attending the formalities. 34. Title, lease, entry, and ouster. 35. Practice introduced by Chief Justice Rolle. 36. Consent rule. 37. Practice while fictions prevailed. 38. Nonsuit. 39. Judgment by default. 40. Writ of habere facias possessionem. 41. Effect of the judgment. 42. Judgment not conclusive. 43. { Policy in America as to the judg- 44. { ment. 45. Lord Coke's opposition to ejectment. 46. Injunctions against further ejectments. 47. Strother v. Lucas. 48. Establishment of ejectment. 49. Practice as to abatement. 50. Confusion resulting from caprice of the judges. 51. Introduction of equitable principles by Lord Mansfield. 52. Lord Kenyon's influence. 53. Liberal view of fictions by the courts. 54. Rules governing personal actions retained. 55. Legislative changes. 56. Requisites of the complaint. 57. General principles. 58. Legal title must prevail. 59. Judgment. 60. Writ of possession. 61. Damages. 62. Mesne profits. 63. Improvements. 63a. Utility of fictions. |
|--|---|

§ 1. Origin of the action.—The action of ejectment, the legal proceeding by which the title to land in most of the United States is now usually tried, was originally an action of trespass brought by a lessee or tenant for years to redress the injury inflicted upon him by ouster or amotion of possession. The lessee merely recovered damages for the loss of the term and of the possession, the measure of these being usually the mesne profits of the land from which he had been evicted. It was a purely personal action, in which neither lands nor tenements were recoverable, as opposed to a real action, in which a freehold interest in land was recovered or possession awarded.

The remedy of ejectment, as subserving the uses of a real action, in which important character we are about to consider it, has been termed "a modified action of trespass," but more accurately speaking, the change effected was an enlargement of the original remedy rather than a modification of it.

§ 2. Real writs and personal actions.—The common law furnished an endless number of real writs to determine the rights of property in, or possession of, a freehold estate.¹ The highest technical skill and learning were requisite to comprehend and define the nature and purposes of these various writs, the distinctions between which were refined, abstruse, and often scarcely perceptible.² In personal actions, however, there were never many writs at common law. This very scarcity made personal actions attractive in early times, the pleader being seldom at a loss to know which writ to choose; while in real actions the most experienced practitioner, exercising the utmost care, frequently sued out a real writ of the wrong degree, class, or nature, thereby rendering the proceeding of no avail, and frequently imperiling the demandant's right to the proper writ or remedy. Not only were the distinctions between real writs very technical, and the selection of the proper writ a delicate task, but the proceedings under them were so inconveniently long, tedious, and costly, and the resources for delays so numerous, that the judgment when obtained was often a tardy and inadequate remedy.³

¹ See chap. II.

² See §§ 3, 5, 6.

³ See § 45. Booth on Real Actions, p. 159.

Trial by battle.—A few centuries ago title to and right of possession of land was still determined through the instrumentality of "trial by battle." See 3 Bla. Com.

§ 3. Practice in real actions.—In real actions the practice required the demandant to set forth upon the record, with the utmost exactness and precision of statement, his legal title.¹ Great technical skill and ingenuity were requisite to select, frame, and adopt the count to the nature and circumstances of each particular case. A variance of scarcely a hair-breadth between the writ and the count (or pleading), or between the count and the evidence, was frequently fatal to the demandant. Equal precision and nicety of statement were required to interpose a meritorious plea, or to defend or defeat the action; while the power of amendment as understood and permitted in modern times was wholly unknown, and even the limited power which the courts possessed was exercised with reluctance. “At common law,” says Baron Gilbert, “there was very little room for amendments.”²

§ 4. Influence of the statute concerning forcible entries.—The Statute of 8 Henry VI, ch. 9, rendering more effectual Stat. 15 Rich. II, ch. 2, furnished a writ of forcible entry to recover possession of land,³ which is one of the causes assigned by Sir Matthew Hale for the scarcity of real actions, or assizes, in the reports during the reigns of Edward IV, Richard III, and Henry VII.⁴ It is the gen-

338. Booth on Real Actions, 99, 100. The last proceeding in which trial by wager of battle was sought in England was instituted in 1817, but though the right was conceded by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., to still exist, the case never went to judgment; Ashford v. Thornton, 1 Barn. & Ald. 405, 460, and the following year Parliament abolished wager of battle in writs of right. 59 Geo. III, c. 46. Trials by battle upon writs of right were abolished in New York, February 6, 1786. 1 Rev. Laws, N. Y. 50.

The issue of battle in controversies over land prevailed in the law of the Bavarians, in the Saxon law, also in the Riparian law, and among the Alamanni, the Lombards, and other German peoples. See Early History of Land-holding among the Germans, by Denman W. Ross, Ph. D. “The possession of land was, in the early time, secured by appropriation and maintained by force.”—Id. p. 23.

¹ Doe d. Hodsdon v. Staple, 2 T. R. 684, per Lord Kenyon. See Stearns on Real Actions, p. 149; Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. 4, p. 241. Mr. Reeves says: “The precision of the proceeding in real actions, where the matter in question was thoroughly canvassed in pleading, and reduced to a simple point before it was trusted to a jury, is thought to be ill changed for the present course, (by ejectment,) where the whole question is at once sent in the gross to trial upon the general issue, without any previous attempt to simplify or decide it with less circuitry and expense.” Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, vol. 4, p. 241.

² Gilbert's Hist. and Prac. Common Pleas, p. 107.

³ See § 94.

⁴ Hale's Common Law (ed. 1794), p. 301.

eral belief that the idea of giving ejectment the effect of a real action originated from the practice and procedure under this statute concerning forcible entries. We may observe that prior to the use of ejectment by tenants for years to recover unexpired terms, the technical learning as to the management of real actions began to be less known and understood, and was speedily becoming a lost art.

§ 5. Strictness of pleading in real actions.—The same distinguished writer observes, concerning the pleadings at this period (1422 to 1509), that “the pleaders, yea, and the judges too, became somewhat too curious therein, so that that art or dexterity of pleading, which, in its use, nature and design, was only to render the fact plain and intelligible, and to bring the matter to judgment with a convenient certainty, began to degenerate from its primitive simplicity, and the true use and end thereof, and to become a piece of nicety and curiosity.”¹ Much prolixity and repetition in pleading, and the miscarriage of important causes resulted by reason of small mistakes or trivial refinements and subtleties in practice. The rules of pleading were so severe that the action abated if the same thing was twice demanded in the writ;² or if by mistake too many demandants had been joined;³ or if the tenant pleaded non-tenure where the demandant claimed more land than the tenant was possessed of;⁴ or if the demandant had by mistake declared on the seizin of his father instead of his grandfather.⁵ Nor could the demandant abridge his demand,⁶ though he might enter a nolle prosequi as to a distinct part of the claim.⁷ The substantial merits or justice of the cause were frequently overlooked or disregarded by the judges, and the action or defense

¹ Hale's Common Law, p. 301.

² Stearns on Real Actions (2d ed.), pp. 86-134; Booth on Real Actions (Am. ed., 1808), p. 2.

³ See Treat v. McMahon, 2 Greenl. (Me) 120.

⁴ See Stearns on Real Actions (2d ed.), p. 181 [208].

⁵ Ibid., p. 186 [215].

⁶ Com. D., title Abridgment A, 2.

⁷ Somes v. Skinner, 16 Mass. 348, 357 wrecked by some frivolous variance or captious objection bearing no relation to the merits of the controversy.

It must be remembered that some real actions "were to be brought in a particular court; some lay only between particular persons; others, for and against those only who had particular estates, with various other circumstances that were requisite antecedent to bringing the action."¹ It was an era of critical precision in pleading and practice, substance being sacrificed to form. This is what led Lord Mansfield to observe that the modern action of ejectment was "invented under the control and power of the court, for the advancement of justice in many respects; and to force the parties to go to trial on the merits, without being entangled in the nicety of pleadings on either side."²

§ 6. Abuses in practice under real writs.—Parliament did not interpose to reform these evils, or attempt to rid real actions of the intolerable abuses which sprang from them. The duty devolved upon the courts to correct, without legislative aid, the evils which they had themselves created and fostered. Real writs became not only a source of oppression and injustice to suitors, but of scandal and reproach to the system of remedial law of which they formed a part. By vouching over,³ demanding view,⁴ and praying aid,⁵ a skilful practitioner could prevent the joinder of issue term after term for years, and the trial of the action was frequently delayed until one of the parties died, whereupon the whole proceeding abated, and a new writ became necessary.⁶

§ 7. Advantages of personal actions.—We can, therefore, easily imagine with what eagerness both court and counsel availed themselves of the loophole which was at length

¹ Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, vol. 4, p. 69.

² Aslin v. Parkin, 2 Burr. 665, 668.

³ Calling in a grantor who had warranted the title to defend the action.

⁴ This consisted in the issuance of a writ requiring the sheriff to cause the tenant to have view of the land in dispute, which the demandant was required to point out to the tenant, indicating the metes and bounds.

⁵ This was a petition for help, as, for instance, calling in a reversioner or other interested party, to aid in the defense of the writ.

⁶ See Pierce v. Jaquith, 48 N. H. 231.

discovered, by means of which the questions ordinarily raised in a real action could be brought up and decided in a personal action, and, at least so far as possession was concerned, the results of a real action attained in a simple action of trespass. By this means the title to real estate was tried in a proceeding "shaped and moulded by the court in such a manner as to relieve it from many of the technical difficulties which encumbered the ancient real actions."¹ The change was probably too radical and went too far. While it relieved the plaintiff of many embarrassments it sent the unfortunate tenant to trial without specific knowledge of the character of the title which was to be proved against him.

§ 8. Abandonment of real writs.—It is impossible to trace with precision, at this late day, the immediate circumstances which led to the sudden abandonment of real writs. The reasons assigned by the early writers are fragmentary and imperfect. Mr. Sergeant Adams, who wrote early in the century, says,² that "neither the causes which led to this important change, nor the principles upon which it was founded, are recorded in any of the legal authorities of those times." All the other writers upon ejectment are singularly silent upon the subject.

The history of procedure nowhere presents a more curious fact, than that the owners of the soil should have suddenly relinquished a system of remedies which had been matured by the experience of centuries, and have consented to try titles to the freehold in a personal action, originally devised to protect the precarious estates of the inferior tenantry.

¹ See Crandall v. Gallup, 12 Conn. 366, 371.

² Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed. 1854, by Waterman), p. 10, *9. We have, in writing this chapter, made use of Mr. Adams' excellent work on Ejectment. This book is the highest authority as to the early practice and procedure in the remarkable action of which it treats, but its usefulness has been superseded in America by the radical changes effected by modern legislation in our system of remedial law, more especially by the abolition of the fictions. Cole on Ejectment (Sweet, London), appeared in 1857. The learned author observes in his preface, that "the Common Law Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1854, and the New Rules, have rendered all previous Treatises of Ejectment of little or no value" in England. Longfield on Ejectment 2d ed. Dublin, 1846, treats of the remedy in the Superior Courts of Ireland. These books are of very little practical value in this country.

§ 9. Influences leading to the change.—The controlling influence undoubtedly was, as we have said, that the forms and pleadings in real actions were minutely varied, according to the source and quality of the demandant's title, or the nature of the alleged disseizin, deforcement, or injury. But this very fact had been the boast of the early writers, who maintained that the assortment of real writs was so varied and complete that a demandant could suffer no injury and sustain no wrong, which there was not a real writ exactly suited to redress. Blackstone says that the provision, Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I, c. 24, for framing new writs, when wanted, was almost rendered needless by the very great perfection of the ancient forms. "And, indeed," he continues, "I know not whether it is a greater credit to our laws to have such a provision contained in them, or not to have occasion, or at least very rarely, to use it."¹ There is no doubt, however, that this supposed merit came, in process of time, to be a crying evil.

§ 10. Advantages of ejectment.—In ejectment the form of the action was always the same, without regard to the source or nature of the lessor's title, or the character of the disseizin, deforcement, or ouster.

This dispensed with the delicate task of selecting a writ exactly suited to the nature of each particular case, and the necessity of tracing or disclosing the demandant's title, or specifying the character of the ouster. To fully understand the historical causes which led to the substitution of ejectment for real actions, the change must be regarded as part of the general struggle for supremacy going on at about the same period between exact and general forms of procedure, specific and general pleading.

§ 11. Influence of practice in trover and assumpsit.—In the personal actions of trover and assumpsit, both of which assumed their modern form about the time that ejectments came into common use, a system of general pleading prevailed. This fact undoubtedly had an important influence in forming and popularizing ejectments.

¹ 3 Bla. Com. p. 184.

Suitors quickly discovered the advantages to a complainant of a remedy which enabled him to prove any title that he could produce at the trial, without the dangers incident to a variance, and which practically deprived the defendant of the right to vouch over, demand view, or pray aid.¹

§ 12. Ejectione firmæ.—The writ of ejectione firmæ (probably modeled after ejectione custodiæ), out of which the modern action of ejectment has gradually grown into its present form, is not of any great antiquity.² In this action every fiction by which questions of title to land could be raised and decided, was encouraged and adopted.

The Court of Common Pleas had exclusive jurisdiction of real actions while ejectment could be brought in all three of the great common law courts. This fact contributed in no slight degree to the great favor with which the fictions in ejectment were received and encouraged by the judges of the King's Bench, for that court thereby acquired jurisdiction over real property concurrently with the Common Pleas. The practitioners in the King's Bench also encouraged ejectment, for it enabled them to share in the lucrative practice of the Common Pleas.³ § 13. Freehold Estates.—In feudal times a freehold estate was the only acknowledged title to land. Estates for years were unknown. A demise of the possession of land for a term of years was not considered as conveying to the grantee any title to the land, but was construed merely as a covenant, contract,⁴ or agreement between the lord and the tenant. The termor was considered as a bailiff to the

¹ See § 6.

² See § 19.

³ It seems an anomalous condition of affairs that jealousies existing between the different courts and their respective practitioners should have exerted any influence in formulating remedies. Mr. Baron Gilbert observes that in 14 H. 7 "it began to be resolved that an habere facias possessionem would lie to recover the term itself. It seems that about this time long terms had their beginning; and that since lessees for years could not by law recover the land itself, they used, when molested, to go into equity against the lessors for a specific performance; and against strangers, for perpetual injunctions, to quiet their possessions. This, drawing the business into the courts of equity, induced the courts of law to resolve, that they should recover the land itself by an habere facias possessionem." Gilbert on Ejec. pp. 3, 4. See § 18.

⁴ See Bates v. Sparrell, 10 Mass. 323; 2 Bla. Com. p. 140.

freeholder or reversioner, or mere pernor of the profits,¹ and his term was regarded merely as a chattel.

§ 14. Imperfect remedies of tenant for years.—The tenant was not made a party to controversies over the title to the freehold, and if a recovery was had against his lord, whether bona fide or covinous, the freehold was discharged of the term.² The lessee was remediless³ until the statute of 21 Henry VIII, c. 15, allowed him to falsify fraudulent recoveries.⁴ If the tenant was evicted by his lessor, he had a writ of covenant against him by which, under the old practice, he recovered the term as well as damages;⁵ but, if ousted of his possession by a stranger, he was, prior to the time of Henry III, without remedy. He had, indeed, his writ of covenant against his lessor, but his only recovery was damages. He did not regain the term or possession.⁶ Such a remedy was obviously inadequate, and the lessee frequently recovered nothing on his judgment.⁷

§ 15. Quare ejecit infra terminum.—During the reign of Henry III, however, a writ was introduced by Walter de Merton or William Moreton,⁸ chancellor of that king, which furnished the lessee, or termor, a remedy against any one who, claiming from his lessor, evicted him. By this writ, which was called "Quare ejecit infra terminum," the plaintiff recovered damages for the loss of so much of the term as the defendant had wrongfully withheld, and the sheriff put the lessee in possession for the unexpired portion of the term.

§ 16. Provisions of the writ.—This writ required the defendant to show wherefore he deforced the plaintiff of

¹ See Dorsey on Ejectment, p. 9.

² See Stearns on Real Actions (2nd ed.), p. 116; Dorsey on Ejectment, p. 9.

³ Stearns on Real Actions, p. 116.

⁴ Reeves' Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. 4, p. 349.

⁵ 3 Bla. Com. p. 200.

⁶ Ibid, p. 200; Reg. Brev. p. 227.

⁷ Baron Gilbert, after observing that formerly estates for years were only "a precarious possession," says of the tenants that "if they were ousted by strangers, they could only have recovered damages for the loss of their possessions; and if they were ousted by their lessors, they could only seek a remedy from their covenants." Gilbert on Ejectment, by Runnington, p. 3.

⁸ Reg. Brev. p. 227. "Provision was made," says Bracton, "de consilio curie." (Bracton, f. 220).

certain premises which C. had demised to plaintiff for a term not yet expired, within which term the said C. sold the lands to the defendant, by reason of which sale the defendant had ejected the plaintiff.¹

The writ was drawn either as a præcipe or a si te fecerit securum. When first introduced the former was considered the better form,² but in the time of Edward III the latter was universally adopted.³

§ 17. Against whom the writ lay.—It is to be noted that the writ ran, “by reason of which sale the defendant, etc.” According to the authorities, it was a very essential part of the lessee’s case that he should show that the defendant claimed under the lessor, for the writ would not lie against a stranger who ejected the lessee, and who, in so doing, did not rely upon any privity of title or estate with the lessor.⁴

Mr. Reeves⁵ quotes Bracton as authority for the statement that the writ lay against any person who ejected the lessee, but a careful examination of Bracton’s language has shown that he did not consider it so large a remedy.⁶ The ancient authorities seem to be overwhelming in support of the view that the lessee must show that the defendant claimed under the lessor.⁷

¹ Reg. Brev. p. 227; F. N. B. p. 197.

² Bracton, f. 220; Reeves’ Hist. Eng. Law (Am. ed. 1880), vol. 2, p. 137.

³ Reeves’ Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. 3, p. 232.

⁴ 18 Edw. II, f. 599.

⁵ Reeves’ Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. 2, p. 136; Bracton, f. 220.

⁶ See Adams on Ej. (4th ed. 1854) p. 7, *4, where Mr. Reeves’ interpretation of Bracton is shown to be erroneous.

⁷ See Stat. Abr. Title “Quare Ejecit.” “In quare ejecit plaintiff shall recover his term, and damages by him sustained by reason of the sale.” Reg. Brev. p. 227: “Sciendum est quod breve (sc. Quare Ejecit), . . . habet fieri quando A, dimisit B, decem acras terræ ad terminum decem annorum, & idē A, durante termino illo vendit eandem terram C, in feodo, occasione cujus venditionis durante adhuc termino prædicto, idem C, ipsum B, de prædicta terra ejecit. . . . Fuit hoc breve inventum per discretum virum Wilhelmum de Merton ut terminarius recuperet catalla sua versus feoffatum.” See, also, 18 Edw. II, f. 599; Hil. Term, 46 Edw. III, f. 4, pl. 12; Gilbert on Ejectment (2nd ed.), p. 123; also, Roscoe on Actions Relating to Real Property, p. [98]: Quare ejecit, &c., only lies where the ejector claims title under the lessor, and not against a mere stranger, for, in the latter case, the remedy was by ejectione firmæ. F. N. B. II, p. 197; 19 Henry VI, p. 56, f. 19; 21 Edw. IV, pp. 10, 30, per Choke, J.: “Quare Ejecit, &c., lieth where one is in by title, ejectione firmæ, where one is in by wrong.” See Reeves’ Hist. Eng. Law (1880), vol. 3, p. 232, note (a).

Furthermore, it is difficult to imagine any reason for the introduction of the writ of ejectione firmæ more than half a century after quare ejecit was devised, if the latter writ would run against a stranger.

§ 18. Additional remedies of tenants for years.—The title of a lessee or tenant for years was not, as yet, of sufficient importance to receive any consideration from the courts in actions affecting real property, nor was the lessee allowed to make his precarious estate the basis on which to raise or discuss questions of title to land with a stranger. That duty devolved upon the freeholder or lord, and the lessee's redress, as against a stranger, was to induce the lord to institute a real action to regain the freehold. If the lord or freeholder neglected to institute the action, or, as frequently occurred, was in collusion with the stranger, the unfortunate tenant for years next applied to a court of equity, to compel a specific performance of the lease or contract by the lessor,¹ and as against strangers for a perpetual injunction to quiet the possession.²

§ 19. Sketch of ejectione firmæ.—During the reign of Edward II, or the early part of the reign of Edward III, a new writ made its appearance, which gave the termor or tenant for years a remedy against strangers, who, not claiming under the lessor, entered and evicted the lessee. This new remedy was in its nature a writ of trespass. The first mention of it in the reports refers to it simply as a writ of trespass.³ Later it acquired the name of ejectione firmæ. The purpose of the writ was to give the plaintiff damages for the injuries inflicted upon him in being evicted from his possession by the defendant.⁴

§ 20. Requisites of the writ.—The writ required the defendant to show wherefore, with force and arms, he entered

¹ Gilbert on Ejectment, p. 2; Stearns on Real Actions (2nd ed.), p. 56 [54]; Runnington on Ejectment, p. 5.

² See § 12, note.

³ "A certain Adam brings writ of trespass against R. of S., and K. of D., for that with force and arms he ejected him from a manor, which he holds for a term under the lease of one B." 44 Edw. III, f. 22, pl. 26.

⁴ See § 12.

upon certain lands which C. has demised to plaintiff for a term not yet expired, and ejected the said plaintiff from his farm. There was usually a clause, charging that the defendant had carried off the plaintiff's goods and chattels, and often a clause declaring that he had occupied the premises for a long time.¹ The process, as upon all writs of trespass, was by attachment, distress, and outlawry.

§ 21. Defined by Blackstone.—Blackstone says, that, "For this injury (i. e., ouster or amotion of possession from an estate for years) the law has provided him [the lessee] with two remedies, according to the circumstances and situation of the wrong-doer: the writ of ejectione firmæ, which lies against any one—the lessor, reversioner, remainderman, or any stranger, who is himself the wrong-doer and has committed the injury complained of; and the writ of quare ejecit infra terminum, which lies not against the wrong-doer or ejector himself, but his feoffee or other person claiming under him."² This distinction is not warranted by the authorities, and the commentator's position is not sustained by the form of the writ quare ejecit infra terminum, which alleges an ejectment by the defendant. The entry and wrongful act of the defendant created the cause of action against him, not any act of his lessor. It would be extraordinary if an alienee of a wrong-doer was liable in damages for the torts committed by his alienor. Damages always constituted a part of the recovery, and when the term had expired the only recovery in quare ejecit.³

§ 22. When it issued.—The writ of ejectione firmæ issued in all cases except that where the ejector claimed under the lessor resort was usually had to the older writ of quare ejecit infra terminum. Even the grantor was liable to be sued on this writ, notwithstanding the old doctrine that a man could not enter, vi et armis, into his own freehold.⁴

¹ Reg. Brev. f. 227, 228.

² 3 Bla. Com. p. 199.

³ Mr. Reeves falls into the same error. "The second (sc. quare ejecit infra terminum) lay only against the alienee of the ejector." Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law (1880), vol. 4, p. 237. See Bel. p. 159.

⁴ Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. 3, p. 233.

§ 23. Recovery in ejectione firmæ.—In the action of ejectione firmæ, the plaintiff at first only recovered damages, as in any other action of trespass. The remedy of damages was, however, often inadequate. The courts, consequently following, it is said, in the footsteps of the courts of equity,¹ and probably by analogy with the form of recovery in quare ejecit, introduced into this action a species of relief not warranted by the original writ, nor included in the prayer of the declaration, which sounded for damages only, and was silent as to any restitution—viz., a judgment to recover the term, and a writ of possession thereupon. Possibly the change was inspired by jealousy of the chancery courts.²

§ 24. Term not recoverable in early practice.—It cannot be stated precisely when this change took place. In 1383 it was conceded by the full court that in ejectione firmæ the plaintiff could no more recover his term than in trespass he could recover damages for a trespass to be done.³ The decision shows that the point was then debated. The same doctrine was held in 1455 by one of the judges.⁴

§ 25. Extension of recovery to the term.—But in 1468 it was agreed by opposing counsel that the term could be recovered, as well as damages.⁵ The earliest reported decision to this effect was in 1499,⁶ and is referred to by Mr. Reeves as the most important adjudication rendered

¹ Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. 4, pp. 237, 238; 3 Bla. Com. p. 200. The nature of this equitable jurisdiction cannot be clearly defined. The authorities usually cited are Lill. Prac. Reg. p. 496, quoting 27 Henry VIII, p. 15; Litt. Rep. p. 166; 3 Bulst. p. 34 (Court of Marches), where it was held that the chancellor and the Counsell del Marches could quiet possessions, but had not the power to determine the title. The same equitable jurisdiction is exercised in some of the courts of the United States.

² See Dorsey on Ejectment, p. 10; Gilbert on Eject. p. 4. See § 12.

³ Bel. p. 159.

⁴ Mich. 33, Henry VI, f. 42, pl. 19.

⁵ 7 Edw. IV, f. 5-10. Per Fairfax: si home port ejectione firmæ, le Plaintiff recouvrera son terme qui est arriere, si bien come in quare ejecit infra terminum; et, ci nul soit arriere, donques tout m. Damages. (Bro. Abr. tit. Quare ejecit infra terminum, pl. 6.) See Gilbert on Eject. p. 4. See, also, 21 Edw. IV, f. 11; Jenk. Cent. p. 67, case 26.

⁶ 14 Henry VII; Rast. Ent. f. 252.

during the reign of Henry VII,¹ for it changed the whole system of remedies for the trial of controverted titles to land, and the recovery of real property.

§ 26. Adoption of ejectment and disuse of real actions.—The result was not foreseen at once, but in the next reign the action of ejectment came to be commonly applied to the trial of titles. Real actions disappeared save in a few cases where ejectments would not lie, and in the reign of Elizabeth were practically supplanted by the action of ejectment.² Real writs gradually sank into disrepute, and at length were chiefly resorted to by speculators and unprincipled practitioners of the law to defraud persons of low condition of their substance under pretense of recovering for them large estates to which they had no color of title.³

The Massachusetts Commissioners observe, (1834),⁴ that “the real actions provided by the common law have been very little used in England for the last three centuries. Hence it has followed that the law relating to these actions has long ceased to be familiar to the members of the profession; and was to be sought for when wanted, in books which at first view appeared to many readers uninteresting and even repulsive.”

§ 27. Early practice in ejectment.—Blackstone describes the practice under this new writ as follows:⁵ “The better

¹ Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. 4, p. 235. Mr. Gilbert observes that it “is a question, which has been much agitated, whether the term was recoverable in ejectment, prior to the reign of Henry VII. . . . Ejectment was NEVER laid with a continuando; consequently the plaintiff in such action could NEVER recover damages for the mesne profits. Hence it may be inferred that the term was recoverable in ejectment, even prior to the reign of Hen. VII; for else, the plaintiff not recovering damages, the action must have been nugatory.” Gilbert on Eject. p. 4.

² Alden's Case, 6 Rep. 105 (1601). Plea to a writ of ejectione firma was ancient demesne. It was answered and resolved that the plea was good, because the common intentment is, that the title and rights of the land will come in debate. “And forasmuch as at this day all titles of lands are for the greatest part tried in actions of ejectments, if in them ancient demesne should not be a good plea, the ancient privileges . . . would be utterly taken away and defeated.” See Doe d. Poole v. Errington, 1 Ad. & El. 750; especially the learned note at page 756.

³ Report of the English Real Property Commissioners, p. 42.

⁴ Report of the Commissioners to Revise the General Statutes of Mass., part 3, p. 154, n.

⁵ 3 Bla. Com. p. 201.

to apprehend the contrivance whereby this end is effected, we must recollect that the remedy by ejectment is in its original an action brought by one who hath a lease for years, to repair the injury done him by dispossession. . . . When . . . a person who hath right of entry into lands, determines to acquire that possession, which is wrongfully withheld by the present tenant, he makes (as by law he may) a formal entry on the premises; and being so in possession of the soil, he there, upon the land, seals and delivers a lease for years to some third person or lessee; and, having thus given him entry, leaves him in possession of the premises. This lessee is to stay upon the land till the prior tenant, or he who had the previous possession, enters thereon afresh and ousts him; or till some other person (either by accident or by agreement beforehand) comes upon the land and turns him out or ejects him. For this injury the lessee is entitled to his action of ejectment against the tenant, or this casual ejector, whichever it was that ousted him, to recover back his term and damages."

§ 28. A valid lease necessary.—The plaintiff was required to show that he was on the land rightfully, and that his lessor had executed a valid lease. The title of the lessor, therefore, became an essential part of the plaintiff's case. An actual and formal entry by the lessor was necessary, for, by the old law, one conveying an interest in land, when out of possession, was guilty of maintenance, a penal offense. Indeed, it was doubted at first whether this occasional possession, taken merely for the purpose of conveying the title, excused the lessor from the legal guilt of maintenance.¹

§ 29. Actual ouster not requisite.—An actual ouster, by the tenant in possession was not requisite, for, if, after the lessee's entry under the lease, the tenant remained on the land, he was deemed, without any other act, to have ousted the lessee.¹

¹ 3 Bla. Com. p. 201; 1 Chanc. Rep. App. p. 39 [*76]; see Stat. 32 Henry VIII, c. 9, s. 2. Mr. Gilbert says: "The ancient practice was, that leases of ejectment, to try the title, should be actually sealed and delivered; because otherwise the plaintiff could maintain no title to the term; and they were also to be sealed on the land itself, it being maintenance to convey out of possession." Gilbert on Ejectment, p. 7.

§ 30. Injustice of the rule.—It is matter of deep regret that the courts did not require proof that the ouster had been committed by the tenant in possession of the premises, for he was, of course the person most interested in opposing a change of possession. It was held in 1608, that the servant of the tenant in possession was a sufficient ejector;² but the line was not drawn even here. Any one who came upon the land by chance after the sealing and delivery of the lease, with no intention of disturbing the possession of the lessee, was considered a sufficient ejector to be made defendant.³

§ 31. Abuses in early practice in ejectment.—The action as thus regulated was liable to great abuse, for the tenant could be turned out of possession without any notice of the suit, or opportunity of asserting or defending his title, on a judgment rendered by default against an ejector with whom he had no interests in common. The ejector was, in many instances, not affected by the judgment, and being, as a rule, friendly to the plaintiff, he frequently suppressed or concealed from the party in possession all knowledge of the suit.

§ 32. Notice to the tenant in possession.—The abuses resulting from these "clandestine ejectments" led to the establishment of a rule that no plaintiff should proceed in ejectment to recover the land against a casual ejector, unless notice of the suit was first given to the tenant in possession, if any there were.⁴ The courts refused to sign judgment against the casual ejector unless proof of such notice was produced.⁵ The tenant in possession was uniformly admitted to defend upon his undertaking to indem-

¹ Lill. Prac. Reg. p. 674.

² Wilson v. Woddel, 1 Brownl. 143; Yelv. p. 144.

³ Lill. Prac. Reg. p. 673.

⁴ 3 Bla. Com. p. 202.

⁵ Rules B. R. Trin. 14 Car. II; Cooke's Rules and Orders.

nify the defendant against the cost of the suit. The delivery to the tenant of the declaration, being the process for summoning the interested party into court, resembled the service of a writ, and as it constituted the only warning of the claimant's proceedings which the tenant in possession received, the courts were careful to see that a proper service or delivery was made.¹

§ 33. Inconvenience attending the formalities.—Much trouble and inconvenience, however, attended the observance of the different formalities. If several persons were in possession of the disputed lands it was considered necessary to execute separate leases upon the premises of the different tenants, and to commence a separate action upon each lease.² The remedy was as yet scarcely so simple and expeditious as to fully satisfy practitioners who were seeking relief from the entanglements of real writs.

§ 34. Title, lease, entry, and ouster.—If a defense was interposed, the plaintiff was obliged to establish four points to maintain the action, viz., title, lease, entry,³ and ouster.⁴ First, he was compelled to show a good title in his lessor. Secondly, that his lessor, having such title, made a lease to him for a term not yet expired. Thirdly, that the plaintiff took possession under the lease. Fourthly, that the defendant ejected him.

§ 35. Practice introduced by Chief Justice Rolle.—To put the question of title to land solely in issue, and to eliminate all other controversies which might arise under this practice, a new feature was ingrafted upon the action by Lord Chief Justice Rolle, who presided in the court of the Upper Bench in the time of the Protectorate. We have seen that permission was granted by the court to the tenant in possession to defend the ejectment suit only as a matter of favor. The courts could, therefore, couple with

¹ See Longfield on Ejectment, p. 33.

² Adams on Ejectment (4th ed.), p. 17 [*14].

³ An actual entry was necessary to avoid a fine. Lord Audley v. Pollard, Cro. Eliz. 561; see 4 H. VII, c. 24.

⁴ See Payne v. Treadwell, 5 Cal. 310.

the granting of this favor any equitable conditions that seemed proper.

§ 36. Consent rule.—Accordingly the practice invented by the Chief Justice, and afterwards generally adopted by the courts, was to require the tenant, as a condition of making him a party, to enter into a rule, called the consent rule, by which he agreed to confess at the trial the lease, entry, and ouster, and to insist and rely solely upon his title. A further condition was imposed that if the defendant broke this engagement at the trial he should pay the costs of the suit, and allow judgment to be entered against the casual ejector. This rule was considered highly reasonable because when the plaintiff had sealed the lease upon the land any person who came thereon animo possidendi, was, in strictness of law an ejector, and, therefore, when any other ejector was placed in his stead it was proper that the courts should not allow him to exact proof of an actual entry, demise, and ouster; these being nothing more than mere forms devised to bring up the question of title, and which it would have been unnecessary for the plaintiff to establish against the casual ejector who would have allowed judgment by default.¹ It is the general belief that this novel practice was introduced about the year 1656, but we find it referred to in a case in Styles' Reports,² decided in 1652 in C. B., and as the practice was first established in the Upper Bench the proper date must be somewhat earlier.

§ 37. Practice while fictions prevailed.—The introduction of imaginary or fictitious persons as parties followed,³ and was finally adopted as the universal practice, though rep-

¹ See Gilbert on Ejec. p. 8.

² Styles' Reports, p. 368. "If one move that the title of land doth belong unto him, and that the plaintiff hath made an ejector of his own, and thereupon prays that, giving security to the ejector to save him harmless, he may defend the title, this court will grant it." &c. The practice is mentioned in the Court Rules in 1662; Cooke's Rules and Orders, B. R. Trin. 14 Car. II, and was continued under Charles II; See Davies' Case, 1 Keb. 28, P. 13, Car. II.

³ See Cooke's Rules and Orders, B. R. Mich. 1654. We find a rule forbidding any attorney from acting as lessee in an ejectment, which shows that the lessee was not then an imaginary person.

robated by Blackstone,¹ chiefly on the trivial ground that the defendant could not collect his costs from an imaginary person. This objection was overcome by framing the consent rule so that in the event of judgment for defendant the plaintiff's lessor should pay the costs. The practice was briefly as follows: A., the claimant of the title, delivered to B., the tenant in possession, a declaration in ejectment, in which John Doe (or Goodtitle) and Richard Roe (or Badtitle) were respectively plaintiff and defendant. John Doe declared on a fictitious lease or demise of the lands from A. to himself for a term of years, and alleged that during the continuance of the term he was ousted from possession by Richard Roe. The title of the action then stood John Doe in the demise of A. against Richard Roe. To the declaration was annexed a notice signed by Richard Roe and directed to B., informing him as "a loving friend" that he (Roe) had been sued as a casual ejector, and advising B. to appear and cause himself to be made a defendant in his stead, otherwise he, Richard Roe, would suffer judgment to be entered by default, and B. would be turned out of possession.² The latter part of the notice, to the effect that unless the tenant defended his title he would be turned out of possession, was considered material,³ for if the notice did not sufficiently apprise him of the consequences of his default the courts would probably have restored the tenant to the possession if he had been irregularly deprived of it by such a proceeding. As under the former practice, proof of service of the declaration and notice on B. was an essential prerequisite to the entry of judgment against the casual ejector. If there was no tenant in possession judgment could not be entered. Consequently in cases of vacant possession the old practice was followed, under which notice was required only in cases where there was a tenant. The plaintiff, on resorting to the old practice, was of course compelled to prove an actual lease, entry, and ouster.

¹ 3 Bla. Com. p. 203. The parties were imaginary in many cases in 1678. See Addison v. Otway, 1 Mod. 250-252.

² See Archbold's Practical Forms (N. Y. 1828), p. 363.

³ Doe d. Darwent v. Roe, 3 Dowl. 336.

§ 38. Nonsuit.—If B. failed to appear, judgment was entered by default against the casual ejector. But, on appearing and entering into the consent rule, B. was substituted as defendant in place of the casual ejector, and could plead the general issue. If B. failed to appear on the trial and confess lease, entry, and ouster, the plaintiff was necessarily nonsuited, because the fictitious lease, entry, and ouster were not susceptible of proof.

§ 39. Judgment by default.—By indorsing this cause of nonsuit on the postea the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the casual ejector,¹ according to the condition imposed upon the tenant when he entered into the consent rule. A judgment against the casual ejector would be stricken out even after the lapse of several terms, upon the application of the real defendant if the latter was guiltless of laches, and made the application as soon as he had actual notice of the suit.² Though the declaration was served only on the tenant in possession, the landlord was admitted to defend³ with the tenant, and not in his stead.⁴ After the statute, 11 Geo. II, c. 19, § 13, the landlord was admitted to defend instead of, as well as with, the tenant in possession. Who was a landlord so as to be entitled to defend, was a subject of much contention in the courts,⁵ though the term was ultimately held to include every person whose title was connected and consistent with the possession of the occupier.⁶

§ 40. Writ of habere facias possessionem.—If the plaintiff recovered judgment either by default or after contest and

¹ Middleton's Case, 1 Keb. 246.

² Dennis' Lessee v. Kelso, 28 Md. 337.

³ Styles' Rep. 368; Roch v. Plumpton, 1 Keb. 706; Anon., 12 Mod. 211; Roe d. Leak v. Doe, Barnes, 193.

⁴ Balderidge v. Paterson, Barnes, 172; Goodright d. Duke of Montague v. Wrong, Barnes, 175; see Fairclaim d. Fowler v. Shamtitle, 3 Burr. 1290, especially the learned argument of Mr. Harvey, one of the counsel, and Lord Mansfield's admirable statement of the nature of ejectment.

⁵ See Lamb v. Archer, Comb. 208 (5 W. & M.); Jones v. Carwithen, Comb. 339 (7 Will. III); Strike and Dikes, Comb. 332.

⁶ See Fairclaim d. Fowler v. Shamtitle, 3 Burr. 1290, per Lord Mansfield.

verdict, a writ habere facias possessionem was issued to the sheriff to put him in possession. This writ subserved in ejectment somewhat similar functions to an habere facias seisinam in a real action, or a writ of assistance in equity.¹

§ 41. Effect of the judgment.—The judgment, however, did not establish the title or right of property of the plaintiff to the land. He recovered the possession but not the seizin. He became possessed “according to his right.” If he had a title in fee simple, he became thereby seized in fee simple; if he had a chattel interest he was in as a termor, but if he had no title he was in as a trespasser,² except that he was not liable in trespass for such an entry.

§ 42. Judgment not conclusive.—The judgment was not conclusive upon the title or right of property, even between the parties.³ The action could be repeated and the same questions retried indefinitely,⁴ because there was no privity between the successive fictitious plaintiffs, and the record and judgment, unlike a real action, did not reveal the nature of the title that had been established upon the former trial. Each successive ejectment was founded upon a new lease, entry, and ouster. The title was never formally or directly in issue, but was tried collaterally, or brought in question obliquely.⁵ The gist of the action was the trespass of the defendant and the plaintiff’s right of possession. Every fresh trespass was a fresh cause of action. As the right of property might be in one person, the right of possession in a second, and the actual possession in a third, a judgment for the possession did not necessarily conclude the title. Under the feudal system a peculiar sanctity attached to a man’s right of possession of land, and when ejectments were introduced the courts

¹ See Chap. XXI.

² See Jackson v. Haviland, 13 Johns. (N. Y.), 229-234; Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, 64 N. Y. 27-31; People ex rel. Scudder v. Cooper, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 486; Doe d. Morgan v. Bluck, 3 Campb. 447; Equator Mining & Smelting Co. v. Hall, 106 U. S. 86; s. c. 5 Mor. Trans. 92.

³ Clerke v. Rowell, 1 Mod. 10.

⁴ Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 409. See Chap. XX.

⁵ See Caperton v. Schmidt, 26 Cal. 500.

were reluctant to hold that he must stake his possession upon the results of a single trial, but inclined to afford him ample and repeated opportunity to exhibit his title and prove his rights.

§ 43. Policy in America as to the judgment.—When this question of the conclusiveness of the judgment in ejectment came up in the Supreme Court of the United States, it was decided that, where the fictitious scaffolding of lease, entry, and ouster had been demolished, and the parties made the issue in their own names, the judgment was conclusive without being made so by statute.¹ Evidently the conclusion the court reached was that the inconclusiveness of the judgment was attributable to the fictions. The principles of this case, though undoubtedly sound, have not been universally acknowledged.²

§ 44. The general policy in America has been to make the judgment in ejectment conclusive upon the title by statute, the defeated party being allowed one new trial as of right, and in some States still another trial in the discretion of the court for cause shown. This latter feature is peculiar to ejectment, and may be traced back to the old feudal idea of the sanctity of the tenure of real property. The policy is attributable either to distrust of the certainty of absolute justice in the courts, or to a disinclination to force the owner of land to risk his rights to his possessions upon a single trial.³

§ 45. Lord Coke's opposition to ejectment.—Lord Coke strenuously opposed the adoption of ejectments,⁴ because they introduced “infiniteness of verdicts, recoveries, and judgments,” and “sometimes contrarieties of verdicts and judgments, one against the other,” in one and the same

¹ Sturdy v. Jackaway, 4 Wall. 174. This subject is discussed at length in Chapter XX, on the Judgment. See, further, Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 390; Doyle v. Hallam, 21 Minn. 515; Wilson v. Henry, 40 Wis. 594; Phillpotts v. Blasdel, 10 Nev. 19; Brownsville v. Cavazos, 100 U. S. 138; Gordinier's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 528; Amesti v. Castro, 49 Cal. 325.

² Kimmel v. Benna, 70 Mo. 52; Hogan v. Smith, 11 Mo. App. 314; Dunn v. Miller, 8 Mo. App. 467.

³ See Chap. XXII.

⁴ Ferrer's Case, 3 Coke, 274.

suit; and because the suits could be repeated for thirty or forty years, to the utter impoverishment of the parties, all of which tended "to the dishonor of the common law, which utterly abhors infiniteness and delaying of suits, wherein is to be observed the excellency of the common law, for the receding from the true institution of it introduces many inconveniences, and the observation thereof is always accompanied with rest and quietness, the end of all human laws." Yet in real actions, to which this great lawyer clung so tenaciously, the judgments were not always conclusive, and, as was decided in the case just cited,¹ did not bar new actions of a higher degree or nature. If ejectments could be repeated infinitely, a single real action could be prolonged for a lifetime. That the excessive technicalities incident to real writs tended to merge the end in the means, can be well illustrated by an extract from an accurate and highly respectable writer on real actions. Speaking of writs of formedon, Mr. Booth said, "I shall here at least give some light how long these actions may be regularly delayed before any judgment can be given in them, which is much for the advantage of the tenant, who ordinarily desires to keep the possession as long as he can."² The learned writer keeps his promise by a recital of the dilatory methods employed, and then states that "if there be many tenants and vouchers to be vouched over, it makes the delay possibly as long as the parties live, though the suit continue many years."³

Even the opinion of so distinguished and able a lawyer as Coke concerning the transcendent merits of real writs cannot be accepted against this unfavorable recital of the abuses connected with the system.

§ 46. Injunctions against further ejectments.—After a suitor in ejectment had prevailed in several trials, he applied to a court of chancery for a perpetual injunction against further ejectments, which that court, as a rule, seems to have been reluctant to grant, because every new ejectment supposes a new demise, and the costs were a recompense for the trouble and expense to which the possessor had been put.¹ The House of Lords, upon appeal, granted an injunction in the case of Earl of Bath v. Sherwin,² against further ejectments after five verdicts, in as many successive ejectments, had been rendered in three different counties in favor of the defendants.

¹ Ferrer's Case, 3 Coke, 274.

² Booth on Real Actions, p. 156; See Humphrey's Observations on Real Property, p. 134.

³ Booth on Real Actions, p. 159.

§ 47. Strother v. Lucas.—An instructive and curious case in our own reports bearing upon this subject is Strother v. Lucas,³ decided in the Supreme Court of the United States in 1838. The controversy was before the same court in 1832.⁴ The court refers to the former decision and reaffirms the doctrine that a judgment in ejectment is not conclusive upon the right either of possession or of property, and says that the case now presents new features which the court deems it proper to pass upon and settle, otherwise a court of chancery might not think it proper to enjoin further suits “so long as new or material facts could be developed, or pertinent points of law remained unsettled.” The court then proceeds to clear the way for a perpetual injunction against further ejectments by discussing and deciding in all their bearings the various questions involved. This decision, it should be observed, was made before the question was raised as to the conclusiveness of the judgment, where the issue is between the real parties in interest, in their own names.

§ 48. Establishment of ejectment.—Though the general form of proceeding in ejectment was settled in the time of

¹ Runnington on Ejectment (ed. 1806), p. 12.

² 4 Bro. P. C. 373.

Suits to quiet title.—The statutes in force in many States permitting persons in possession to maintain a suit in equity, against any party claiming an interest in the land, adverse to the possessor, for the purpose of determining such claim and quieting the title, confer “a jurisdiction beyond that ordinarily exercised by courts of equity, to afford relief in the quieting of title and possession of real property. By the ordinary jurisdiction of those courts a suit would not lie for that purpose, unless the possession of the plaintiff had been previously disturbed by legal proceedings on the part of the defendant, and the right of the plaintiff had been sustained by successive judgments in his favor.” Field, J., in Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 409, citing Shepley v. Rangely, Daveis, 242; Devonsher v. Newenham, 2 Schoales & Lef. 208; Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 259.

³ 12 Peters, 410.

⁴ See 6 Peters, 763.

Charles the Second, yet the nature of the action was not clearly understood, nor the rules governing it definitely established until the beginning of this century. The changes which the remedy has undergone both at the hands of the courts and of the legislatures demonstrate that it never could have been regarded as an entirely satisfactory form of procedure.

§ 49. Practice as to abatement.—The courts adopted an arbitrary system of regulating the action by permitting persons who had not been made parties to become defendants, and continued to exercise this jurisdiction by adopting whatever rules were thought to best accomplish the ends of justice. Thus, when the plaintiff was an actual person, it was held that his death did not abate the action, for the lessor was really the interested party, and the absurd suggestion that there lived a man of the same name in the county was considered sufficient.¹ The plaintiff was not allowed to release the costs, and was held in contempt for so doing;² and an attorney who assigned for error the death of the plaintiff in ejectment was adjudged in contempt.³

§ 50. Confusion resulting from caprice of the judges.—There was a wide divergence between the decisions, the natural result of regulating the action by the mere will or caprice of the judges, who differed frequently as to what decisions in particular instances best accomplished the ends of justice. Some cases were decided upon the theory that the action was, in its nature as well as origin, an action of trespass; that the damages constituted the principal recovery, the restoration of the term and possession being merely an incident.⁴ Other cases were decided by analogy to real actions.⁵ Thus it was held that the subject of the action must be demisable, and that the plaintiff

¹ Addison v. Otway, 1 Mod. 250-252.

² Anon. Salk. 260. Such release was void. Close v. Vaux, Comb. 8.

³ Moore v. Goodright, Stra. 899.

⁴ Wright v. Wheatley, Cro. Eliz. 854; Ibgrave v. Lee, Dyer, 116, b. (71).

⁵ Barwick v. Fenwood, Comb. 250.

must have power to demise.¹ On the other hand again an ejectment for a rectory was upheld.²

§ 51. Introduction of equitable principles by Lord Mansfield.—The action underwent important changes in the time of Lord Mansfield, who declared³ “that he had it at heart to have the practice upon ejectments clearly settled upon large and liberal grounds for advancement of the remedy.” But he brought equitable principles into the trial of this action, as he did into other branches of the law, and favored and encouraged ejectment as an equitable remedy, calculated to subserve the ends of individual justice, rather than as a legal action governed by fixed and positive rules and principles. The judges in his time probably felt at liberty to exercise an equitable jurisdiction over the remedy as applied to land controversies because it was peculiarly their own creation. Thus a fresh ejectment for the same lands would be stayed until the costs of a former unsuccessful action had been paid.⁴ A mortgagee was permitted to maintain ejectment against a tenant claiming under a lease granted prior to the mortgage, where he gave notice to the tenant that he did not intend to disturb the possession, but only to reach the rents and profits of the estate.⁵ Nor could the legal estate of a trustee be set up against the cestui que trust,⁶ and an agreement for a lease was held tantamount to a lease as a defense in ejectment.⁷ These cases have been overruled in England and in the United States.⁸

The principles and practice which the Court of King’s Bench, during the career of this illustrious judge, sought to impress upon the remedy have been, in some instances

¹ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 20 [18.]

² Doe d. Watson v. Fletcher, 8 B. & C. 25; Hillingsworth v. Brewster, Salk. 256. See Wrotesley v. Adams, Plowd. 187, 199.

³ Fairclaim d. Fowler v. Shamtitle, 3 Burr. 1290, 1295.

⁴ Doe d. Feldon v. Roe, 8 T. R. 646; Ralph, Lessee, v. Ejector, 3 Ir. Law Rec. N. S. 141.

⁵ See note to Keech v. Hall, Doug. 21, 23.

⁶ Bull. N. P. 110; Doe d. Bristow v. Pegge, 1 T. R. 758 n.

⁷ Weakly d. Yea v. Bucknell, Cowp. 473.

⁸ See Doe d. Hodsdon v. Staple, 2 T. R. 684, per Kenyon, Ch. J.; Watkins v. Holman, 16 Peters 25, 58.

since his time, introduced by statute. The common law has gained fresh vitality and enriched qualities from the transfusion of equitable principles into it. This is especially true with reference to the remedy of ejectment.

§ 52. Lord Kenyon's influence.—Lord Kenyon established the action upon what the common law student would consider a sounder basis. Since his day, when not otherwise controlled by statute, the courts have generally held that the plaintiff's lessor must establish a legal title. The claimant must have a right of entry, for if he made the lease without entering on the land, it was maintenance, and though in the modern practice an actual entry is unnecessary, yet the right of entry must exist, for that is the question to be tried.

§ 53. Liberal view of fictions by the courts.—The courts have generally looked beyond the fictitious form of the action, and have taken judicial notice that the real controversy is between adverse claimants to the possession of land; that the plaintiff's lessor and the tenant in possession (or landlord, if he be made defendant) are the real parties in interest;¹ that the legal title must prevail, and that, as the fictions were "fabricated for the mere purposes of justice," the plaintiff ought not to be defeated in his recovery by technical or captious objections founded on the peculiar and somewhat technical form of the action. It was unnecessary to allege the day of the ouster.² The practice became common to allow amendments enlarging the term laid in the declaration when it expired pending the action, Chief Justice Marshall in granting such a motion remarking that there was "every reason for allowing amendments in matters of mere form."³ The courts, recognizing the fictions as necessary to this form of action, were careful to see that no wrong or prejudice to the parties resulted from the novel character of the procedure.¹ Though ejectment actions were in point of form pure fictions, yet in substance and effect they were "serious realities."² Even in the time of James I a liberal spirit guided the courts, and minute technical objections to the entry and ouster were disregarded.³

¹ Aslin v. Parkin, 2 Burr. 665, per Lord Mansfield. See note to Doe d. Bailey v. Smyth, Anthon's Nisi Prius, 242, 244.

² Woodward v. Brown, 13 Peters 1.

³ Walden v. Craig, 9 Wheat. 576. "Amendments are allowed rather more liberally in ejectments than in other actions." Longfield on Ejectment, p. 96.

§ 54. Rules governing personal actions retained.—In many respects the rules applicable to real actions have been adopted,⁴ yet the principles and practice governing personal actions have been in some instances retained unmodified, though apparently not suited to the new issue raised. Thus, unless some statute controls, the description of the premises need not be much more certain than in an ordinary action of trespass. The plaintiff may also recover a part, and in some cases an undivided portion, of the premises for which he declares.

§ 55. Legislative changes.—The action is now divested by statute of all its useless forms. The fictitious lease and ouster have been abolished, and the real parties in interest appear in the action as the nominal parties; the defendant being the tenant or person in possession, or the landlord; sometimes even a claimant to the land or one exercising acts of ownership over it.

§ 56. Requisites of the complaint.—An accurate description of the premises is also generally required in the declaration, both to inform the sheriff of what he is to deliver possession, and to apprise the defendant of the extent of the plaintiff's claim. The nature of the estate or interest in the land which the plaintiff demands, whether in fee, for life, or for years, must generally be specified in the complaint, and whether he claims the entire estate or an undivided share or interest.

¹ Cresap's Lessee v. Hutson, 9 Gill (Md.) 274; Warner v. Hardy, 6 Md. 525.

² Cole on Ejectment, p. 1.

³ Longfield on Ejectment, p. 25; citing Adams v. Goose, Cro. Jac. 96; Tesmond v. Johnson, Cro. Jac. 428; Osbourn v. Rider, Cro. Jac. 135; Brigate v. Short, Cro. Jac. 154; Merrell v. Smith, Cro. Jac. 311.

⁴ Heatherley d. Worthington v. Weston, 2 Wils. 232; Moore v. Fursden, 1 Show 342; Mantle v. Wollington, Cro. Jac. 166.

§ 57. General principles.—It is also a fundamental rule that the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness or imperfections of the defendant's title. He must ordinarily show a legal title, with a present right of possession, paramount to the title of the defendant. The defendant may avail himself of any imperfections in the plaintiff's title, or may, unless estopped, defeat the action by proving an outstanding title in a third person with which the defendant is wholly unconnected.¹

§ 58. Legal title must prevail.—In some States where the distinctions between legal and equitable redress do not exist, or the jurisdictions have been blended, the defendant can, by statute, succeed with a superior equitable title; but the general rule is that the legal title must prevail, the holder of the equitable title being remitted to a court of chancery for redress. As against a naked trespasser, having neither claim nor color of title, proof of prior undisturbed possession is sufficient. Nor can a trespasser show an outstanding title in a third person. The principles of the action remain essentially unchanged. In form it is still one to recover the possession of land, in which the plaintiff must show a present legal right of possession, though in fact it is an action for the determination of the title.² As the action retains many of its ancient characteristics, it is important to study its origin and to remember that in its early form the question of title to land came before the court incidentally and collaterally, the trespass and ouster being the main issue.

§ 59. Judgment.—The judgment is, as formerly, that the sheriff put the plaintiff in quiet and peaceable possession of the land, and maintain him therein, though it now generally specifies the nature of the controverted title, and closely resembles the final adjudication upon an ancient writ of right. Some of the valuable features of the system of real writs have been ingrafted into the modern remedy.

¹ Love v. Simms, 9 Wheat. 515.

² Finnegan v. Carraher, 47 N. Y. 493.

§ 60. Writ of possession.—The courts exercise a species of equitable jurisdiction over the execution of the writ of possession, and sometimes award a writ of restitution where the judgment has been reversed, or the defendant, or even a stranger, has been wrongfully evicted under the writ. The duties of the officer and the rights of the respective parties, as regards the enforcement of this important writ or final process, by which the fruits of the judgment are secured to the successful party, are elsewhere fully considered.¹

§ 61. Damages.—The damages given for the injury suffered by the loss of the term, which originally constituted the only recovery and later an important part of the relief in ejectment, necessarily became nominal when the fictions were introduced, and the practice of making others than the tenants ejectors prevailed.² It has been decided in some of the cases, however, that even while the fictions were continued the plaintiff might recover his real damages by giving notice of his intention to proceed therefor,³ but this practice was much questioned,⁴ for the reasons stated, and on the further ground that the defendant signed the consent rule for the purpose of trying only the right of possession.⁵

§ 62. Mesne profits.—The successful plaintiff in ejectment formerly brought an action of trespass for mesne profits against the person who had withheld the possession. The claims for damages and mesne profits are now generally made by statute part of the recovery in the ejectment suit, though in some States a separate action is still necessary or may be brought at the election of the plaintiff. The mesne profits are measured by the rental or annual value of the land.⁶

§ 63. Improvements.—The defendant is permitted in some States to set off against the mesne profits the value

¹ See § 40, and Chap. XXI.

² Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. 4, p. 241.

³ Battin v. Bigelow, 1 Peters' C. C. 452.

⁴ Huston v. Wickersham, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 308.

⁵ See Chap. XXV.

of permanent and useful improvements made in good faith.¹ In other States a bona fide occupant can recover for improvements even in excess of the mesne profits. The constitutionality of the statutes allowing an occupant the value of improvements has been assailed, but the right so to do is now generally conceded both upon legal and equitable grounds. What are to be considered improvements upon land has also provoked much controversy, and the subject is deemed worthy of treatment in a separate chapter.²

§ 63a. Utility of fictions.—We have thus carefully traced the history of ejectment through its many changes. It is manifestly a remedy of the highest importance. In no other single form of action have so many valuable rights been adjudicated. The sudden introduction and continued popularity of the remedy, and the remarkable revolution wrought by its adoption, which swept away the cumbersome network of real actions, constituting over one-third of the ancient learning of the law, demonstrates that fictions accomplished highly beneficial results as applied to this form of action. Bentham, it is true, assailed the use of a fiction of law with great bitterness and impatience as “a willful falsehood, having for its object the stealing legislative power, by and for hands which could not, or durst not, openly claim it; and, but for the delusion thus produced, could not exercise it.”³

Blackstone, on the other hand, considers fictions “highly beneficial and useful,”⁴ while Lord Coke observes that “the law will never make any fiction but for necessity, and in avoidance of a mischief.”⁵

So eminent an authority as Professor Maine⁶ declares that at a particular stage of social progress fictions “are invaluable expedients for overcoming the rigidity of law.” Again he observes, “to revile them as merely fraudulent

¹ See Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Bla. C. C. 202, and cases cited.

² See Chap. XXVI.

³ Fragment on Government, Bentham's Works, Vol. 1, (Ed. Bowring), p. 243.

⁴ 3 Bla. Com. 43.

⁵ Butler v. Baker's Case, 2 Coke, 79 (3 Rep. 30, a.)

⁶ Maine's Ancient Law, pp. 25, 26.

is to betray ignorance of their peculiar office in the historical development of law."

Mr. Adams observes,¹ that the action of ejectment stands prominently forward among legal fictions, and that "in tracing this remedy through its several gradations, it will be found continually moulding itself to the condition of the times, and extending its uses and powers as the progress of civil society rendered necessary or convenient." In studying the rise and progress of the remedy of ejectment we can discover no trace of the great evils which Bentham considered inhered in the use of fictions. Modern writers must, we think, concur in the judgment² that the development of ejectment by the aid of fictions conferred a substantial and permanent benefit upon mankind.

¹ Adams on Ejectment, p. 3.

² See The Origin and Use of Legal Fictions, by W. D. Lewis, Esq., Juridical Society Papers, Vol. I, p. 360.

CHAPTER II.

SKETCH OF REAL ACTIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.— TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE.

- | | |
|---|--|
| § 64. Real actions. 64a. Real and personal actions distinguished. 65. How real actions are classified. 66. Characteristics. 67. Judgment in real actions. 68. In personal actions. 69. Writs of right. 70. Writs of entry. 71. Writs of formedon. 72. Real actions in England. 73. Ejectment in New England. 74. Unpopularity of the remedy. 75. Objections to real writs. 76. } Their adoption in New England. 77. } 78. Unpopularity in England. 79. Modern changes. | § 80. Classes of injuries affecting realty. 81. Trespass to try title. Its introduction in South Carolina. 82. What plaintiff must prove. 83. Nature of trespass to try title. 84. Statutory changes. 85. Reason for the change. 86. Aversion to real actions. 87. Trespass to try title abolished in South Carolina. 88. Trespass to try title in Alabama. 89. Statutory changes in that State. 90. Fictions in ejectment retained in Alabama and Delaware. 91. Trespass to try title in Texas. 92. General principles the same in the various actions. |
|---|--|

§ 64. Real actions.—Real or feudal actions were the ancient remedies by which the right of property, or of possession, in freehold estates or hereditaments was determined, and the seizin recovered or possession restored.¹ The complainant, or party deforced, was called the demandant; the defendant, or party in possession the tenant. The name real action was used in contradistinction to personal actions, founded upon tort or contract, such as trover, assumpsit, or debt. At common law, in purely real actions, the demandant counted for and recovered the seizin of land, or an interest in realty, and rarely proceeded for compensation in damages or for personal property.² The right to recover damages in real writs was, in some instances, added by statute.

The foundation of a real action is the alleged wrongful

¹ See §§ 2, 3, 5, 6.

² Booth on Real Actions, pp. 74, 75; Pilford's Case, 10 Rep. 115, b. (5 Coke, 459); Stearns on Real Actions (2d ed.), pp. 346 (389), 90 (94); Jackson on Real Actions, p. 99.

occupation and withholding of the demandant's land by the tenant.¹

§ 64a. Real and personal actions distinguished.—In real actions the demandant claims title to lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in fee simple, fee tail, or for a term of life,² by writ of right, entry, etc., hence they are said by Blackstone to “concern real property only.” Chief Justice Shaw considered that the terms real and personal actions were not used in the statute of Massachusetts regulating costs in the sense contemplated by the common law, and as defined by Blackstone. He said: “The broad distinction which runs throughout the statute, is that between actions in which rights to real estate may be brought in question and tried, and those which affect personal rights.”³

§ 65. How real actions are classified.—Real actions were classified according to the nature of the demandant's title, into actions droitural, based upon the demandant's mere right of title—that of possession being lost—and actions possessory, which involved the right of possession. The former class was subdivided into writs droitural, founded upon the demandant's own seizin, and writs ancestral droit-ural, founded upon the demandant's claim in respect of a mere right which had descended to him from an ancestor. Possessory actions were likewise subdivided into actions founded upon the demandant's own seizin, and actions predicated upon the seizin of an ancestor.⁴

§ 66. Characteristics.—The system of real writs had many distinguishing peculiarities. In personal actions, such as trover, assumpsit, or debt, the judgment operated as an estoppel upon fresh suits, involving the same matter in controversy. Unless the plaintiff submitted to a nonsuit, withdrew a juror, or obtained leave to discontinue the

¹ Graves v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 44 N. H. 462.

² 3 Bla. Com. 117.

³ Plympton v. Baker, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 474. See §§ 1, 64.

⁴ Roscoe on Actions Relating to Real Property, p. 2; Stearns on Real Actions (2d ed.), p. 83 [84]; Markal's Case, 6 Rep. 3 b. (3 Coke, 264.)

action the only redress for the defeated party was by writ of error, appeal, or motion for a new trial in the same action. It has been supposed that a different rule prevailed in real actions, because if the demandant was barred by judgment on a verdict or demurrer rendered upon an inferior writ, he could avoid the estoppel by suing out a real writ of a higher class or nature; for real actions were of different grades, and a judgment upon the merits, founded upon an inferior writ, did not constitute a bar or an estoppel to an action between the same parties brought upon a writ of a higher degree.¹

§ 67. Judgment in real actions.—Lord Coke² is responsible for the once prevalent notion that the same title and precise question of right involved in and adjudicated upon an inferior writ could be retried in the second action upon the higher writ; but this was not true. Each writ, as was shown by Lord Ellenborough in the case of Outram v. Morewood,³ was final for its own purpose and object, and the judgment was conclusive as to the injury complained of, or the particular right claimed. Possessory writs settled disputed questions of possession. The higher writs, while including all that was adjudicated on the trial under the possessory writs, went further and established the whole right to the land, both of property and of possession. “Placitum per breve de recto utrumque; jus, tam possessionis quam proprietatis comprehendat.”⁴

§ 68. In personal actions.—When the same evidence is required to support two different personal actions a judgment in one action constitutes a bar to the other.⁵ Thus a judgment in assumpsit bars an action of debt for the same demand. This important principle of the common

¹ Ferrer's Case, 6 Rep. 7 b. (3 Coke, 271); Stearns on Real Actions, p. 84; Booth on Real Actions, p. 1. See § 509.

² Ferrer's Case, 6 Rep. 7 b.

³ 3 East, 346, and cases cited.

⁴ Bracton, f. 328.

⁵ Kitchen v. Campbell, 3 Wils. 304; s. c. 2 W. Bla. 827; Martin v. Kennedy, 2 Bos. & P. 71, per Lord Eldon. See Sperry's Case, 5 Rep. 61 (3 Coke, 124); Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 390; Stowell v. Chamberlain, 60 N. Y. 272, and cases cited. See Chap. XX law was not violated by the practice in real actions, for a judgment upon a writ of right, the highest real writ, established rights different from and additional to those conferred by the judgment under a possessory writ.

§ 69. Writs of right.—The most important of the real writs was the Writ of Right.¹ This writ was resorted to in the time of the Saxons to recover the right of property in land; the jus proprietatis, or jus morum.² It would not lie for incorporeal hereditaments, or for any estate less than a fee simple,³ and was the exclusive remedy available to the owner of land who had lost the right to recover it by a possessory action. The judgment was final, and could be pleaded in bar of a fresh suit involving the same controversy, because no other writ could establish any different higher or additional rights. For this reason a writ of right was rarely selected by a demandant who was entitled to prosecute one of an inferior grade.⁴ The tenant in this writ might give in evidence the title of a third person for the purpose of disproving the demandant's seizin; and the demandant was permitted to recover a less quantity than the entirety.⁵

§ 70. Writs of entry.—Of the possessory actions writs of entry only were adopted in Massachusetts.⁶ These were of various kinds, according to the nature of the injuries intended to be redressed,⁷ and were supposed by Blackstone to be the most ancient of possessory actions. Whether or not all the writs of entry were ingrafted into the law of that Commonwealth is a moot question which it is unnecessary now to discuss.⁸ Mr. Justice Jackson says,⁹ that writs of entry, as conducted in the courts of his State, were

¹ 3 Bla. Com. p. 193; Fitz. N. B. i.

² Gil. Ten. [47]. See Roscoe on Actions Relating to Real Property, p. 19.

³ Jackson on Real Actions, p. 276; Lyon v. Mottuse, 19 Ala. 463.

⁴ Booth on Real Actions, p. 1. For distinction between a writ of right patent and a writ of right close, see Liter v. Green, 2 Wheat. 311.

⁵ Inglis v. Trustees of Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. 99. See § 509.

⁶ Jackson on Real Actions, p. 2.

⁷ Roscoe on Actions Relating to Real Property, p. 88.

⁸ See Judge Jackson's article on this subject, 2 Am. Jur. p. 65.

⁹ Jackson on Real Actions, p. 12.

considered more simple, convenient and effectual than the action of ejectment; the writ and declaration were shorter; there were no mysterious fictions to incumber the record, and the judgment effectually settled the right of possession. This opinion was subsequently approved by the Massachusetts Commissioners.¹

An equitable estate, we may here observe, will not support a writ of entry;² and consequently a party sued in this writ cannot defend against the legal title of the plaintiff by showing that he has purchased and paid for the land, and is entitled to a conveyance of the legal estate.³ The remedy for the protection of an equitable interest in land is by bill in equity and not by writ of entry,⁴ or action at law. In Massachusetts this writ may issue in the form of an original summons or in that of a summons and attachment,⁵ and can only be maintained against a tenant of the freehold.⁶

§ 71. Writs of formedon.—Writs of formedon, the ancient remedies provided for any one having a right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail,⁷ were not infrequent in some States. A writ of formedon was sometimes characterized as a writ of right of an inferior character. As late as 1834 a decision was rendered in an action of formedon in remainder in New Hampshire, in which the defense of a common recovery, levied in 1819, was learnedly discussed by court and counsel.⁸ Writs of this character are, however, wholly unsuited to try titles in this

¹ Report of the Comrs. to Revise the General Statutes of Mass.; Part 3, p. 154 n.

² Chapin v. First Universalist Soc., 8 Gray (Mass.), 580, per Shaw, C. J.; Eastman v. Fletcher, 45 Me. 302. Compare s. p. in Ejectment, Smith v. McCann, 24 How. 398; Emeric v. Penniman, 26 Cal. 119; Peck v. Newton, 46 Barb. (N.Y.) 173.

³ Ela v. Pennock, 38 N. H. 154; s. p. Moody v. Farr, 33 Miss. 192; but compare Cutting v. Pike, 21 N. H. 347. See Chap. XVIII.

⁴ Eastman v. Fletcher, 45 Me. 305; s. p. Houston v. Jordan, 35 Me. 520; Shaw v. Wise, 10 Me. 113.

⁵ Wilbur v. Ripley, 124 Mass. 468.

⁶ Kerley v. Kerley, 13 Allen (Mass.), 286. See Creighton v. Proctor, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 438.

⁷ Stearns on Real Actions, p. 321; Booth on Real Actions (1st Am. ed.), p. 138.

⁸ Frost v. Cloutman, 7 N. H. 9 country. The delays and abuses produced by these writs have already been noticed.¹

§ 72. Real actions in England.—The system of real actions is now extinct in England. But an inquiry into the condition of the remedial law of England, at or prior to the time of the Revolution is nevertheless important to American jurists, because that law has been adopted in many of our States by statute or constitutional provision, and modern legislation is often framed to perfect or supersede it. Indeed without some acquaintance with ancient real writs it would be impossible to thoroughly comprehend the modern actions which have supplied their places. We can afford here only the slightest reference to this curious and obsolete branch of our ancient remedial law, and discuss so much of the learning affecting the system as will illustrate the principles governing modern actions in States where dismembered fragments of the old system are still to be found. The influences which led to the disuse and abandonment of these ancient remedies have been considered in part in tracing the history of the action of ejectment.²

§ 73. Ejectment in New England.—Ejectment was already firmly established in England, as the most simple and expeditious method of trying controverted titles, when our Atlantic seaboard was colonized. Yet the New England colonists seem to have been disinclined to transplant and foster the remedy.³ Possibly this is attributable to the fact that every word of the declaration by which the action was commenced was untrue. The stern integrity and simplicity of the Puritans did not relish fictions. Professor Stearns says: ⁴ “We should hardly expect them to resort to the indirect method of making a lease of their lands in order to try the title. And as to the confessing a lease, ¹ See § 45. The writ of assize once so popular in England was probably introduced during the reign of Henry II. Its history is of little practical value with us.

² See §§ 5, 6, 8, 10.

³ Ejectment did not flourish in Virginia. New York was then under control of the Dutch.

⁴ Stearns on Real Actions (2d ed. 1831), p. 352 [396] n.

an entry, and an ouster, which never had any existence in fact, they seem (as we should naturally expect) to have regarded it as a violation of truth, and therefore wholly inadmissible."

This feeling of aversion to ejectments was not confined to this country, for we find it written in an English work of reputation,¹ that this ingenious and dexterously contrived proceeding "was objectionable, on the ground that fictions and unintelligible forms should not be used in courts of justice; especially when the necessity for them might be avoided by a simple writ so framed as to raise precisely the same question in a true, concise, and intelligible form."

§ 74. Unpopularity of the remedy.—The inconclusiveness of the judgment² also tended to render ejectment unsatisfactory. Lands in the new world were of little value, and scarcely worth the trouble and expense of a sufficient number of trials to justify a perpetual injunction against fresh ejectments. Furthermore equity jurisprudence had scarcely any existence in colonial times,³ and has only been introduced into some of our States by legislation of recent date. Hence, according to eminent authority, only two fictitious actions of ejectment upon the English model are to be found in the court records of Massachusetts.⁴ The commissioners⁵ even assert that "the action of ejectment has never been in use" in that State "for the trial of titles."

§ 75. Objections to real writs.—But the adoption of the intricate system of real actions as practiced in England was wholly impracticable. The sources of information available to the colonists concerning the practice were few and imperfect; many of the real writs were wholly unsuited to try the titles by which the colonial lands were held, and

¹ Cole on Ejectment, p. 2.

² See Chap. XX.

³ 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 56 and note.

⁴ Stearns on Real Actions (2nd ed. 1831), p. 352 [396].

⁵ Report of the Commissioners to Revise the General Statutes of Mass., Part 3, p. 154. But see Hodgkins v. Price, 137 Mass. 15.

few of the early settlers possessed the critical skill and precision in practice which the successful management of the writs exacted.¹ Mistakes and vexatious delays were consequently not infrequent. The colonists were not, however, "bigoted to legal forms." They abruptly departed from the ancient precedents (intentionally, however, rather than from ignorance, as the result shows) and introduced a loose and irregular system of pleading in real writs, altering and adapting the process and writs so as to satisfy the needs and requirements of settlers in a new country. The English system of real actions was transplanted into the colonies practically divested of aid prayers, vouchers, protections, parol demurrers, and essoins, the cumbersome appendages which destroyed it in England. Hence we have in our jurisprudence the remarkable anomaly of a system of feudal remedies which the mother country abandoned as outgrown, impracticable and useless, "rooted in soils that never felt the fabric of the feudal system."

§ 76. Their adoption in New England.—The attempt was made to retain what was valuable and useful of the system and to reject what was useless and pernicious.² The ancient process and forms were very little regarded, and all real actions were called by the general name of actions of ejectment.³ Little or no distinction was made either in the declaration or the pleadings between the different writs of entry, or between possessory writs and the writ of right.⁴

§ 77. Though this loose and irregular practice was undoubtedly the cause of many mistakes which the colonists

¹ We do not intend to imply that American lawyers did not become familiar with real writs. The following cases among others attest the skill that was early acquired in this branch of law in the new world. Green v. Lister, 8 Cranch, 229; Green v. Watkins, 7 Wheat. 27; Inglis v. Trustees of Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Peters, 133; Barker v. Salmon, 2 Met. (Mass.) 32; St. Croix v. Sands, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 328; Swift v. Livingstone, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.), 112; Frost v. Cloutman, 7 N. H. 9.

² Stearns on Real Actions (2d ed.), p. 92 [97].

³ Jackson on Real Actions, p. 194. Prof. Pomeroy says of our modern statutory ejectment that "it does not bear the slightest resemblance to the action of 'ejectment' as that was contrived by the old judges and lawyers, and only confusion and misconception result from applying to it that name." Pomeroy's Remedies, etc., § 294.

⁴ Jackson on Real Actions, p. 162.

made in determining the rights of litigants, yet had they clung to the established forms, and sought to apply, in their practice, the mass of ancient learning relating to real writs, the system would necessarily have become as vexatious, oppressive, and unpopular as in England.

§ 78. Unpopularity in England.—The feeling in England toward the system of real actions is reflected in the report of the English real property commissioners, in which they conclude that “it would have been beneficial to the community if real actions had been abolished from the time when the modern action of ejectment was devised.”¹

§ 79. Modern changes.—Statutory real actions in various forms are employed in Maine and New Hampshire. A writ of entry, sur disseizin, was recognized as a proper form of action in the latter State.² Writs of right and of formedon have been swept away in Massachusetts and a statutory writ of entry adopted as the remedy for trying titles in that State. The final judgment rendered on this statutory writ is a complete bar to a writ of right for the same lands subsequently prosecuted in the federal courts.³ The common law remedy of ejectment for the recovery of a term, though rarely used, has never been abolished in that commonwealth.⁴ The entire system of real actions is superseded in New York by a statutory action of ejectment. In Rhode Island any party having a right of entry may bring ejectment.⁵ In Connecticut the writ of disseizin is not a fictitious remedy, and is the only real action known to their law, and comprehends “all the actions in England, by writ of right, writ of entry and ejectment, with all the multifarious divisions into which they are branched.”⁶ In California they have technically “no action of ejectment.” There is said to be as much propriety in calling the action

¹ Report of English Real Property Commissioners, Vol. 1, p. 42.

² Potter v. Baker, 19 N. H. 166.

³ Derby v. Jacques, 1 Cliff. 425.

⁴ Hodgkins v. Price, 137 Mass. 13; Fay v. Taft, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 448; Merrill v. Bullock, 105 Mass. 493.

⁵ McCann v. Rathbone, 8 R. I. 297.

⁶ Crandall v. Gallup, 12 Conn. 371.

in that State "a writ of entry or an assize, as an ejectment."¹ In Virginia writs of right, of entry, and of formedon, have been abolished, and ejectment, as reformed and corrected by statute, retained. In that State, as in New York and West Virginia, the statutory ejectment may be maintained in the same cases in which a writ of right could have been brought. A controversy over a title in West Virginia, in which the parties proceeded by a writ of right, was decided in 1868,² but the system of real actions has, since that date, been superseded in that State by statutory ejectment. The influence of the old system is occasionally reflected in the opinions of our courts, and exerts some effect in framing legislative changes in our remedial law, but the general system, with most of its peculiarities, is obsolete.

§ 80. Classes of injuries affecting realty.—Injuries affecting real property are chiefly of two classes. First. Those that divest the owner of the possession, and usurp his right of dominion over the property. Secondly. Those that injure the land, or diminish its value, or disturb or impair the owner's enjoyment of it, without divesting the possession. Trespass, waste and nuisance are examples of the latter class. The former injury, which is attended with amotion from or deprivation of possession, is denominated an ouster, and has been defined to be "a wrongful dispossession or exclusion of a party from real property, who is entitled to the possession."³ This elementary principle must not be overlooked in considering the form of remedy for the trial of title to land which will next be noticed.

§ 81. Trespass to try title. Its introduction in South Carolina.—Trespass to try title was substituted for ejectment in South Carolina as early as 1791.⁴ It was in form an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, except that a notice

¹ Caperton v. Schmidt, 26 Cal. 479, 496.

² Genin v. Ingersoll, 2 W. Va. 558.

³ Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 497. See Field v. Hawley, 126 Mass. 327; Towle v. Ayer, 8 N. H. 57; Smith v. Burtis, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 217. See § 93.

⁴ Stat. at Large, S. C. vol. V, p. 170; since repealed. See Chapter 147, Revised Statutes, 1873, p. 801.

was indorsed upon the writ to the effect that the action was brought to try the title as well as for damages. This remedy was subject to the principles of law relating to ejectment which, down to that time, had been the action for trying titles to land in that State.¹ There were, of course, no fictions in this new action, and the names of the real parties appeared as plaintiff and defendant.²

§ 82. What plaintiff must prove.—The plaintiff was compelled to prove a trespass committed by the defendant no matter how trifling. A bare threat made on a rock, the title to which was in controversy, to prevent the plaintiff from fishing there; or obstructing a canoe from landing upon it, was said to be enough evidence to support the action.³ Even the cutting or blazing of a tree was held sufficient.⁴ The judgment was in form for damages, but the plaintiff, if successful, was entitled to a writ habere facias possessionem. The reader will at once discover, aside from the question of ouster, the close resemblance this form of procedure bore to ejectment both in its nature and uses.⁵

§ 83. Nature of trespass to try title.—Manifestly trespass quare clausum fregit was a form of action calculated to redress injuries to real property not amounting to an ouster. This remedy as enlarged by statute in South Carolina under the name of trespass to try title usurped the functions and subserved the purposes of a real action. While evidence of a slight trespass would suffice to raise a controversy over the title, yet mesne profits could not be recovered of the defendant if no actual eviction took place, but only a technical trespass was proved.

§ 84. Statutory change.—The result achieved by the use of fictions in ejectment in England, after many years of effort, was accomplished summarily in South Carolina by a

¹ Kennedy v. Campbell, 2 Const. Rep. (S. C.) 760.

² Lynch v. Withers, 2 Bay (S. C.), 115-119, in notis.

³ Massey v. Trantham, 2 Bay (S. C.), 421; Underwood v. Sims, 2 Bailey (S. C.), Law, 81.

⁴ Spigener v. Cooner, 8 Rich. (S. C.), Law, 301.

⁵ See §§ 15, 19, 39, 40.

simple statutory enactment. Why the English Parliament and the legislatures of other States of our Union did not enact statutes somewhat similar in character, substituting ouster for trespass, and at a single stroke demolish real writs and the fictions in ejectment is a mystery.

§ 85. Reason for the change.—The Legislature of South Carolina solemnly resolved,¹ as a justification for the change, that “since the disuse of real actions, the common method of trying the title to lands has been by action of ejectment, which, depending upon a variety of legal fictions, is rarely understood but by professors of the law.” Still, the name of the new remedy, and the practice requiring proof of a trespass, which certainly had no logical or necessary connection with the trial of the title, occasioned some confusion.

§ 86. Aversion to real actions.—The writ of right was never employed in South Carolina,² and the profession seem to have shunned the whole system of real actions. If the “variety of legal fictions” in ejectment was incomprehensible to the profession in South Carolina, it is certainly easily understood why no effort was made to utilize real writs.

§ 87. Trespass to try title abolished in South Carolina.—Trespass to try title has at length been swept away in South Carolina, and an action for the recovery of real property substituted in its stead.³ This dispenses with the necessity of further discussion concerning the procedure in this novel form of action in that State.

§ 88. Trespass to try title in Alabama.—Trespass to try title was introduced in Alabama, in 1821,⁴ as a substitute for the fictitious proceedings in the action of ejectment.⁵ The act provides that “the mode of trying the right and

¹ Stat. at Large, S. C. vol. V, p. 170, § 4.

² Frost ads. Brown, 2 Bay (S. C.), 133-144.

³ Revised Statutes South Carolina (ed. 1873), p. 586; Ibid, chap. 147, p. 801.

⁴ Session Acts of Alabama, 1821, p. 23 (approved December 17, 1821).

⁵ White v. St. Guirons, Minor (Ala.), 331; Avent v. Read, 2 Porter (Ala.), 480; Masters v. Eastis, 3 Ib. 368; Thrash v. Johnson, 6 Ib. 458; Sturdevant v. Murrell, 8 Ib. 317.

title to lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall be by the action of trespass, in which the plaintiff shall endorse on his writ and copy writ, that the action is brought as well to try titles as to recover damages." All the principles and rules relating to ejectment at common law, except the fictitious proceedings, which were abolished, were made applicable to this action.

§ 89. Statutory changes in that State.—In 1835,¹ the General Assembly of Alabama passed an act restoring the remedy of ejectment with the exception of the fictions, and conferring upon the plaintiff the right to elect between trespass to try title and ejectment, damages being added to the recovery in the latter action. Both these remedies were superseded by the Code of 1852,² which established a statutory proceeding "in the nature of an action of ejectment." In 1863³ the action of ejectment as established at common law was restored, and in all actions to recover land the plaintiff was allowed to elect between a writ of ejectment and a writ in the nature of an action of ejectment. This act was embodied in the Code of 1867,⁴ and was transferred to the Code of 1876.⁵

§ 90. Fictions in ejectment retained in Alabama and Delaware.—Hence two remedies may now be invoked in that State: the action in the nature of ejectment,⁶ and the fictitious ejectment at common law.⁷ John Doe, the litigious lessee, appears in his old role in an ejectment instituted in that State, as late as 1874 and decided in 1876,⁸ but the common law writ of ejectment is now but little resorted to except by the older practitioners, and the statutory action

¹ Clay's Digest (Ala.), p. 320, § 46.

² See Code of 1852, § 2209; also § 10; Ib. 1867, § 2610. See Williams v. Hartsorn, 30 Ala. 211.

³ Acts of Alabama, 1863, p. 58, No. 54.

⁴ Code of 1867, § 2621.

⁵ Code of 1876, § 2970.

⁶ Morris v. Beebe, 54 Ala. 300; Olive v. Adams, 50 Ala. 373; Ivey v. Blum, 53 Ala. 172.

⁷ Doe d. Hudgens v. Jackson, 51 Ala. 514; Doe d. Hamilton v. Hardy, 52 Ala. 291; Smith v. Doe d. Carson, 56 Ala. 456; Cantelou v. Doe d. Hood, 56 Ala. 519.

⁸ Doe d. Davis v. Minge, 56 Ala. 121.

in the nature of ejectment is the remedy generally in use. The writ of right has not been in use in Alabama since 1852.¹ An important ejectment founded upon a fictitious demise was brought in Delaware in 1878, and went to judgment.²

§ 91. Trespass to try title in Texas.—Ejectment, with or without its fictions, has never been in use in Texas,³ trespass to try title being the exclusive action given for the trial of controverted titles in that State.⁴ By a proper indorsement on the petition the action may be brought both to try the title and to recover mesne profits and damages.⁵ This remedy very closely resembles if indeed it is not the exact counterpart of the common statutory ejectment. Thus the complaint should allege that the plaintiff was in possession or is entitled to the possession;⁶ the premises should be so described as to be capable of identification with reasonable certainty;⁷ a survey though not necessarily conclusive may be ordered;⁸ the tenant may disclaim;⁹ the pleadings may be amended so as to include a different tract of land;¹⁰ improvements may be claimed;¹¹ and the suit may be prosecuted by one tenant in common without joining his cotenant.¹² The plaintiff must prove title in himself to overcome the presumption of title arising from the defendant's possession. This is usually done by deraigning title from the sovereign,¹³ though better title

¹ See Ivey v. Blum, 53 Ala. 172.

² John Doe, on the demise of Barrett v. Richard Roe, casual ejector, and Jefferson, tenant in possession, 5 Hous. (Del.) 477.

³ Fisk v. Miller, 20 Texas, 572-578.

⁴ Dangerfield v. Paschal, 20 Texas, 552; Paschal's Digest, Art. 5292.

⁵ See Spence v. McGowan, 53 Texas, 30. This case discusses the distinctions between trespass to try title, as practiced in that State, and the fictitious action of ejectment. See Hillman v. Baumbach, 21 Texas, 203.

⁶ Bridges v. Cundiff, 45 Texas, 440.

⁷ Steinbeck v. Stone, 53 Texas, 382.

⁸ Bass v. Mitchell, 22 Texas, 293.

⁹ McBee v. Johnson, 45 Texas, 634.

¹⁰ Hunter v. Morse, 49 Texas, 219.

¹¹ Hill v. Spear, 48 Texas, 583.

¹² Hutchins v. Bacon, 46 Texas, 408-414; Alexander v. Gilliam, 39 Texas, 227; Fisk v. Flores, 43 Texas, 340, 342; Presley v. Holmes, 33 Texas, 476.

¹³ Kays v. Mason, 44 Texas, 140.

from a common source, or title out of the State and prior possession may suffice. The action is maintainable upon an equitable title.¹

§ 92. General principles the same in the various actions.—The decisions rendered while the remedy of trespass to try title was in force in South Carolina and Alabama are, notwithstanding the statutory changes, still important, as illustrating the general principles governing ejectment, and the statutory remedies in other States, especially in Texas; the change being one chiefly of form.

The essential principles governing real actions, ejectment, and trespass to try title, are uniform in this country as to the interests for which the actions will lie, the titles that will support them, the pleadings, evidence,² defenses, judgments, writs of possession, and new trials. They constitute practically one general method of procedure disguised under a variety of names. For this reason cases decided under the different systems will generally be cited side by side in this treatise.

¹ Easterling v. Blythe, 7 Texas, 210; Walker v. Howard, 34 Texas, 478; Erhart v. Bass, 54 Texas, 97.

² Greenl. on Ev. vol. 2, § 303, p. 286.

CHAPTER III.

NATURE OF THE RIGHTS UPON WHICH ACTIONS TO TRY TITLE ARE FOUNDED.—INTERESTS FOR WHICH EJECT- MENT LIES.—WRONGS TO REAL PROPERTY.

- | | |
|---|---|
| § 93. Distinction between ejectment and trespass. 94. Between ejectment and forcible entry. 95. Ejectment maintainable for corporeal hereditaments only. 96. Early practice. 97. Nature of the interest sought to be recovered. 98. Plaintiff's title and interest. 99. Reservation of right of entry in a deed. 100. Right of possession essential. 101. True test as to when ejectment lies. 102. Rights and privileges appurtenant. 103. Annexation to the soil. 104. Fixtures. 105. Ejectment for a room, chamber, or portion of a building. 106. Theory of the decisions. 106a. Horizontal divisions of land. 107. Vaults. 108. Mining rights and interests. 109. Coal mine. 110. Tin bound. 111. Quarry. 112. Oil wells. 113. Right and privilege of boring for oil. 114. Oil regarded as a mineral. 115. Vein or lode. 116. Possessory mining claims. 117. Land under water. 118. Made lands. 119. Lands under water granted by land office. | § 120. Rivulet or pool. 121. Bed of the ocean. 122. Tide lands. Ocean boundaries. 123. Land swallowed by the sea. 124. New islands. 125. Accretions. 126. Salt boilery. 127. Inaccessible lands. 128. Distinct tracts of land. 129. Dower. 130. Land subject to an easement, servitude or public use. 131. Cincinnati v. White discussed. 132. Ownership of the soil and the right to an easement independent. 133. Character of defendant's occupation. 134. Rights of the owner of the fee. 135. Ejectment for lands applied to unauthorized use. 136. Wrongful use for public purposes not protected. 137. Rule in Illinois. 138. Rule when fee is granted for public use. 139. Municipal corporations. 140. Attempted distinction between public and private easements. 141. Land subject to homestead rights. 142. Ejectment for fishery. 143. Pasturage and herbage. 144. Church property. 145. Common appendant and tithes. |
|---|---|

§ 93. Distinction between ejectment and trespass.—Ejectment is a remedy designed to redress wrongs amounting to a disseizin or an ouster. The action will not lie for a mere trespass on land; the plaintiff must furnish proof of eviction or amotion of possession. In other words, there must be some usurpation of dominion over the property, for an ouster is a wrong that carries with it a change of possession.¹ We may observe in passing, that the proof of disseizin must be something more than the evidence of mere words, or the taking of a deed of the lands without entry under it.² "There is," say the Supreme Court of Connecticut, "a clear landmark between them (trespass and ejectment), which should not be broken down by permitting a plaintiff in ejectment, if he fails to prove an ouster, to prove a mere trespass, however trifling, and recover."³ This feature, it will be noticed, marked the distinction between trespass to try title as originally practiced in South Carolina, and the remedy of ejectment.⁴

The action of ejectment cannot be sustained upon proof of an unlawful interference with a right incident to property in possession,⁵—e. g., projecting a cornice, a gutter, or the eaves of a building over plaintiff's lands. Then a plaintiff in possession will not be permitted to maintain an ejectment against a person who inconveniences or incommodes him, or interferes with the enjoyment of the premises by insisting upon remaining in the house with him;⁶ or who enters upon the land to cut timber under a claim of contract right so to do.⁷ To uphold the action in such cases would be in violation of the settled principle that a party in possession cannot invoke the remedy of ejectment.⁸

§ 94. Between ejectment and forcible entry.—An important distinction must be noticed between an ejectment and the statutory action of forcible entry and unlawful detainer,⁹

¹ See § 80; Farris v. Hayes, 9 Oregon, 85.

² Field v. Hawley, 126 Mass. 327; Favour v. Sargent, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 5; Towle v. Ayer, 8 N. H. 57; Putnam Free School v. Fisher, 38 Me. 324. Pulling down houses and constructing a railway on the land constitutes an ouster. Doe d. Wawn v. Horn, 5 M. & W. 564.

³ Potter v. City of New Haven, 35 Conn. 520, 522.

⁴ See § 82.

⁵ Vrooman v. Jackson, 6 Hun (N. Y.), 326. See Jackson v. Pike, 9 Cowen (N. Y.), 69; Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 400. Ejectment cannot be employed as a substitute for trespass quare clausum fregit: per Sharswood, J. Corley v. Pentz, 76 Pa. St. 57. Neither can trespass quare clausum fregit and ejectment be united in the same complaint. Budd v. Bingham, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 494.

⁶ Buchanan v. Streper, 35 Leg. Int. 274.

⁷ Corley v. Pentz, 76 Pa. St. 57. See § 231.

⁸ Kribbs v. Downing, 25 Pa. St. 404.

⁹ See § 4.

which will, perhaps, serve to illustrate more clearly the nature of the remedy. The title or right of possession is always involved in the trial of an action of ejectment. The party who seeks to change the possession by ejectment must first establish a legal title to it. But the remedy for a forcible or unlawful entry is designed to protect the actual possession, whether rightful or wrongful, against unlawful invasion, and to afford summary redress and restitution. The forcible entry even of the owner himself, and still more the entry of any other person, whether forcible or not, is unlawful.¹ The title cannot be drawn in question in forcible entry proceedings, which are frequently conducted in tribunals having no jurisdiction to determine titles to real property.² In the one case the question of the unlawful invasion of an actual possession only is involved; in the other the absolute right of possession is to be tried and determined.³ A forcible entry and detainer proceeding may be supported independent of, and opposed to, the title and legal right of possession.⁴ It must be remembered that the right of property merely, not joined with the possession, will not justify the true owner in committing an assault and battery upon the person in possession with the design of regaining the property.⁵ This rule is founded upon considerations of public policy to prevent parties from disturbing the public peace by attempts to gain their rights by force, instead of resorting to the remedy by action.⁶

As to the character of the acts which will bring the parties within the statute, we may state that a mere tem-

¹ Olinger v. Shepherd, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 462. See Thompson v. Wolf, 6 Oregon, 308; Bliss v. Johnson, 73 N. Y. 534.

² Myers v. Koenig, 5 Neb. 419; Mitchell v. Davis, 23 Cal. 381; Carroll v. O'Conner, 25 Ohio St. 617; Jarvis v. Hamilton, 16 Wis. 574; Texas Land Co. v. Turman, 53 Texas, 619; Kelly v. Sheehy, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 439.

³ Carter v. Scaggs, 38 Mo. 302.

⁴ Smith v. Hollenback, 51 Ill. 223; Milner v. Wilson, 45 Ala. 478; Krevet v. Meyer, 24 Mo. 107; Dilworth v. Fee, 52 Mo. 130; People v. Van Nostrand, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 50.

⁵ Bliss v. Johnson, 73 N. Y. 533; Pollen v. Brewer, 7 C. B. [N. S.] 371; Parsons v. Brown, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 590; Sampson v. Henry, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 387.

⁶ S. P. Reeder v. Purdy, 41 Ill. 279.

porary trespass¹ is not sufficient to maintain a forcible entry proceeding. There must be circumstances of violence, numbers and the strong hand.² The method in which the disturbed possession was acquired is also important. Savage, Ch. J., said: "A mere intruder or trespasser could not institute proceedings under this statute, and be restored to the possession which he held unlawfully."³ A possession acquired by violence cannot be protected by forcible entry proceedings.⁴ A corporation may be liable in these proceedings. Forcible entry by servants of a railroad company, followed by possession by the company, was considered presumably the act of the corporation, its possession being looked upon as a ratification.⁵

But this remedy is outside the scope of our work as it does not involve title.⁶

§ 95. Ejectment maintainable for corporeal hereditaments only.—At common law, ejectment was maintainable only for corporeal hereditaments,⁷ which consist wholly of sub-

¹ See Sloan v. Biemiller, 34 O. S. 517.

² Dudley v. Chanfrau, 2 Edmonds (N. Y.), 128. For a collection of authorities concerning "Force as a Defense of Real Estate," see 28 Alb. L. J. 145.

³ People v. Reed, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 159; s. p. Hodgkins v. Price, 132 Mass. 199.

⁴ Hodgkins v. Price, 132 Mass. 199.

⁵ People ex rel. McBride v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 51 N. Y. 623.

⁶ Forcible entry and detention.—The Massachusetts statutes provide that "no person shall make an entry into lands or tenements except in cases where his entry is allowed by law, and in such cases he shall not enter by force, but in a peaceable manner." Pub. Stat. Mass. c. 126, § 15. Chief Justice Shaw said in Saunders v. Robinson, 5 Met. (Mass.) 343: "A mere unlawful entry into lands, though it would justify the common averment of vi et armis, or force and arms, is not the forcible entry contemplated by the statute. It must be something more, either an original entry or subsequent detainer, with strong hand; and this may be by the use of actual force and violence, or by menace of force, accompanied by arms and a manifest intent to carry such threat into effect, or by a show of force, calculated to create terror and alarm, by an exhibition of arms, a display of numbers, or other means manifesting an open and visible determination forcibly to make the entry, or forcibly to resist the entry of another." "This process," says Mason (Mass. Prac. p. 89), "can be maintained by one tenant in common against a cotenant who has forcibly ejected him; (Presbrey v. Presbrey, 13 Allen [Mass.], 281, 284) by a mortgagee in possession after an entry to foreclose against one who has entered in a peaceable manner, but without right, and afterwards holds possession by force; (Mitchell v. Shanley, 15 Gray [Mass.], 319) by a tenant at will against one who forcibly enters and ejects him. (Walker v. Sharpe, 14 Allen [Mass.], 43)." The cases relating to forcible entries will be found collated in notes to Davidson v. Phillips, 30 Am. Dec. 393; Evill v. Conwell, 18 Am. Dec. 139; Robertson v. Robertson, 38 Am. Dec. 148. In Texas a party in whose favor an action of forcible entry would lie, may bring trespass to try title. Thurber v. Conners, 57 Texas, 96. But a party having a right of possession who has entered by force or fraud cannot be turned out by ejectment. Depuy v. Williams, 26 Cal. 309.

⁷ Child v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 246; 3 Bla. Com. p. 206; Rowan v. Kelsey, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 484; 3 Bac. Abr. (ed. 1860), p. 272, Eject. D.

stantial and permanent objects;¹ and the remedy was a substitute for the assize in cases where the thing sought to be recovered was of a corporeal nature.²

§ 96. Early practice.—In its original form, as already shown, damages constituted the exclusive recovery in this action, but the increase in length of terms for years, and their growth in importance, induced the courts to allow the writ habere facias possessionem, so that the tenant for years might regain his unexpired term and be restored to the possession itself. From this change arose the necessity of confining the action to such things as the sheriff might with certainty have recourse to for the purpose of delivering possession after judgment.³

§ 97. Nature of the interest sought to be recovered.—The thing sought to be recovered must be visible and tangible,⁴ something which in early times would have been capable of livery of seizin, and upon which an entry can be made;⁵ something capable of physical possession,⁶ and of which the owner can be disseized,⁷ and of which possession can be delivered by the sheriff to the plaintiff.⁸

§ 98. Plaintiff's title and interest.—The plaintiff, as will presently appear, must be vested with a present subsisting title, or corporeal estate in the premises,⁹ or with an unrestricted right to the immediate possession,¹⁰ which must be of some duration and exclusive; and the action cannot be maintained unless the interest or estate be more substantial than a mere license to use the land, or the right to

¹ 2 Bla. Com. p. 17.

² Den d. Farley v. Craig, 15 N. J. L. 191.

³ Runn. on Eject. (Am. ed.) p. 121.

⁴ Den d. Farley v. Craig, 15 N. J. L. 191.

⁵ Jackson v. Buel, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 298; Nichols v. Lewis, 15 Conn. 137.

⁶ Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382.

⁷ See Marquis Cholmondeley v. Lord Clinton, 2 Meriv. 361.

⁸ Black v. Hepburne, 2 Yeates (Pa.), 331; Den d. Farley v. Craig, 15 N. J. L. 192; Jackson v. May, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 184; Doe d. Earl of Falmouth v. Alderson, 1 M. & W. 210; Crocker v. Fothergill, 2 B. & Ald. 652; Nichols v. Lewis, 15 Conn. 137.

⁹ Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382. See Ferris v. Brown, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 105.

¹⁰ Betz v. Mullin, 62 Ala. 365. "Ejectment is a possessory action to the extent

a standing place thereon.¹ On examining many of the older cases apparently involving the question as to whether ejectment could be supported for the property contained in the demise, it will be found that they really turned largely upon the proper description of the subject matter of the action.²

§ 99. Reservation of right of entry in a deed.—In the case of Jackson v. Buel,³ a grantor had made a reservation in a deed to himself, his heirs, and assigns, of “the right and privilege, without any fee or reward, of erecting and building a dam” at a certain place within the granted premises, “to occupy and possess the aforesaid premises without any let, hindrance, or molestation” from the grantee, his heirs, and assigns, “agreeably to the express condition contained in the foregoing clause and reservation.” The Supreme Court of New York, in a per curiam opinion held that this reservation created an interest sufficient to support ejectment. The first reason assigned by the court is that the interest would be considered a tenement within the decisions under the English settlement law; this test, though sometimes applied in England, can hardly, as we shall presently see, be considered a safe criterion. Another ground suggested—that the grantor possessed a right of entry, and that the interest was tangible—is that upon which the case must probably be supported.

§ 100. Right of possession essential. — Whatever takes away the right of possession in presenti is fatal, and constitutes a complete defense to the action.⁴ The plaintiff must that the right of possession to the premises, on the part of the plaintiff, at the commencement of the suit, is essential to a recovery.” McFarland v. Goodman, 6 Biss. 112.

¹ See King v. Inhabitants of Mellor, 2 East, 190. See Goodtitle d. Miller v. Wilson, 11 East, 334-345. It is provided by statute in Maine that in certain cases an officer levying on land may convey to his grantee a momentary seizin sufficient to support an action in his own name. Morse v. Sleeper, 58 Me. 329. Savage, C. J., said that a license is an authority to enter on the lands of another without possessing an interest in the land. Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 380. It differs from an easement which is an interest in lands. Doolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 78.

² See Longfield on Eject. p. 12.

³ 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 298.

⁴ Hunter v. Trustees of Sandy Hill, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 407; City of Cincinnati v. White, 6 Peters, 431; Sands v. Hughes, 7 Alb. L. J. 43. “An ejectment being a have a right of entry in virtue of or incident to some corporeal estate or interest in the premises,¹ for the right to take actual possession of the land is the question to be tried, and constitutes the foundation of the action, whatever may be the character or source of the claimant's title.² Chitty says: "A party having a right of entry, whether his title be in fee simple, fee tail, in copyhold, for life, or years, may support an action of ejectment."³

§ 101. True test as to when ejectment lies.—"The true test of this action," says the New York Supreme Court, "seems to be, that the thing claimed should be a corporeal hereditament, that a right of entry should exist at the time of the commencement of the action, and that the interest be visible and tangible, so that the sheriff may deliver the possession to the plaintiff in execution of the judgment of the court."⁴ Hence rights or interests in land which lie in grant, being invisible and incorporeal, are not, at common law, the subject of this action.

§ 102. Rights and privileges appurtenant.—But though ejectment will not lie for a right or privilege which is a mere incorporeal hereditament, yet, when an ejectment is brought for lands the better rule seems to be that the rights and privileges appurtenant to the lands may be recovered therewith.⁵ It seems to be settled that land not mentioned possessory remedy, the lessor of the plaintiff must have a right of entry when this action is brought; for if his entry be taken away he cannot legally enter to make a lease to try the title; and he cannot be allowed to prosecute his right by an unlawful act." Gilbert on Eject., p. 11.

¹ Taylor v. Horde, 1 Burr. 60, 119; Price v. Osborne, 12 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 26; Jackson v. Schlover, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 368; Jackson v. Richmond, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 483; Reformed Church v. Schoolcraft, 65 N. Y. 134, 150; Kile v. Tubbs, 32 Cal. 332; Meeks v. Kirby, 47 Cal. 168. The easement of drainage is no defense to an information by the commonwealth to assert title to lands. Commonwealth v. City of Roxbury, 9 Gray (Mass.), 451.

² Colston v. McVay, 1 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 250; Clay v. Ransome, 1 Munf. (Va.) 455.

³ 1 Chitty on Pleadings, p. 211.

⁴ Rowan v. Kelsey, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 484, 488. For purposes of taxation, a pier in a river has been held to be real estate. Smith v. The Mayor, 68 N. Y. 554. See Railroad and Bridge Co. v. District of Columbia, 1 Mackey (D. C.), 227. Rails fastened to a roadbed are real estate. Northern Central Ry. Co. v. Canton Co., 30 Md. 354. A statue placed upon a pedestal built some distance in the earth, and not secured to the pedestal except by its own gravity, is real estate which will pass under a conveyance of the land. Snedeker v. Warring, 12 N. Y. 170.

⁵ Crocker v. Fothergill, 2 B. & Ald. 652-661; Newman v. Holdmyfast, 1 Str. 54;

in a deed does not pass as an appurtenant to another distinct parcel of land.¹ A description including "adjoining" land does not embrace a small island.² The word appurtenances will not pass any corporeal real property but merely incorporeal easements or rights and privileges. It will not include a strip of land adjacent to that granted.³ A grant of an easement only carries with it whatever is requisite for its fair and reasonable enjoyment,⁴ but the fee of the land remains undisturbed.⁵

§ 103. Annexation to the soil.—It is frequently said that ejectment will lie for anything attached to the soil,⁶ but this test cannot by any means be regarded as conclusive. It is probably derived from the common law principle with regard to fixtures, that, as between grantor and grantee, anything which was attached to the soil would pass with the realty as a part of it. This is no longer treated as conclusive, however, with regard to fixtures, as to which three criteria are now generally applied: first, annexation to the Longfield on Ejectment, p. 11; Baker v. Roe, Hardw. 119. Compare Gubbins v. Massy, 3 Irish L. R. 239. See Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232, in which case the declaration claimed and the judgment recited as included in the recovery, the right to use an adjacent alley. This recital was declared to be nugatory, as the easement in the alley was an incorporeal and intangible interest, and therefore not the proper subject of an ejectment. The point actually decided was that the recital of such a right did not impair or affect the validity of the judgment as to the land itself, to which the easement was adjacent. In Provident Institution for Savings v. Burnham, 128 Mass. 462, Gray, C. J., said: "Easements and restrictions cannot be recovered or enforced, and need not be set forth, in a writ of entry," citing Stearns on Real Actions, 150; Proprietors of Locks, &c. v. Nassau & Lowell R. R., 104 Mass. 1. Compare Leonard v. White, 7 Mass. 6; Kenniston v. Hannaford, 58 N. H. 28. See § 527.

¹ Harris v. Elliott, 10 Peters, 54; Rivas v. Solary, 18 Fla. 122-127; Ammidown v. Granite Bank, 8 Allen (Mass.), 292; Ogden v. Jennings, 62 N. Y. 526. See Linthicum v. Ray, 9 Wall. 241.

² Miller v. Mann, 55 Vt. 475. See Armstrong v. Du Bois, 90 N. Y. 102.

³ Ogden v. Jennings, 62 N. Y. 531. See Jackson v. Striker, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 284; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 447; Buszard v. Capel, 8 B. & C. 141. As to what passes as an incident, see Voorhees v. Burchard, 55 N. Y. 98; Marvin v. Brewster Iron Mining Co., 55 N. Y. 549; Smith v. The Mayor, 68 N. Y. 552. The owner of lands can have no easements in or over his adjoining lands; and when he sells one parcel, the right to enjoy privileges and conveniences which he when owner of both enjoyed in the other does not pass to the purchaser. Stanford v. Lyon, 22 N. J. Eq. 34. See Fetters v. Humphreys, 19 N. J. Eq. 471. One who purchases land at a tax sale takes all the easements and incidents attached or pertaining to the land. Hence the right to wharfage passes to the purchaser on a tax sale of a pier. Smith v. Mayor, 68 N. Y. 557.

⁴ See Bakeman v. Talbot, 31 N. Y. 366.

⁵ Amondson v. Severson, 37 Iowa, 606. See Houpes v. Alderson, 22 Iowa, 160.

⁶ Jackson v. May, 16 Johns. 184.

realty ; second, adaptability to the use or purpose to which the realty is appropriated, and third, the intention of the party making the annexation.¹ It is obvious, therefore, that while ejectment will lie for anything that is a fixture, annexation to the soil is no longer sufficient to settle the question.

§ 104. Fixtures.—It has been held by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania that where a boiler, engine and stack were erected upon the lands of the plaintiff, at the joint expense of himself and the defendant, under an agreement to use the same as a common source of power, without limitation as to time, the interests thereby created in the fixtures were in the nature of an estate in lands,² and that if one of the tenants in common excluded the other from the use and possession of the fixtures an action of ejectment could be maintained.³

§ 105. Ejectment for a room, chamber, or portion of a building.—It was contended at one time that the common law definition of land as extending *usque ad cælum*⁴ et ad infernos,⁵ was fatal to the prosecution of ejectment in the case of rooms, chambers or portions of buildings. The land itself including these by definition it was supposed that the possibility of partial ejectment was excluded ; but it is now settled that interests in realty may be created sufficient to support ejectment which fall far short of this comprehensive measure of ownership.⁶ Thus the action will lie to recover a room or chamber in a house,⁷ even

¹ McRea v. Central Nat'l Bk. of Troy, 66 N. Y. 489.

² See Mott v. Palmer, 1 N. Y. 569. Ruggles, J., said : " The word land, when used in a deed, includes not only the naked earth, but everything within it, and the buildings, trees, fixtures and fences upon it," citing Goodrich v. Jones, 2 Hill. (N. Y.) 143; Walker v. Sherman, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 639, 646; Green v. Armstrong, 1 Denio (N. Y.), 554. The meaning of the term " real estate " is considered in Merry v. Hallet, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 497; Jenkins v. Fahey, 73 N. Y. 362. Tenement signifies land as well as house or building. Sacket v. Wheaton, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 103.

³ Hill v. Hill, 43 Pa. St. 521.

⁴ See Broom's Maxims, 396.

⁵ As to the application of this principle to a clay-bed in an action of trespass on the freehold, see Stratton v. Lyons, 53 Vt. 641.

⁶ Doe d. Freeland v. Burt, 1 T. R. 701.

⁷ White v. White, 16 N. J. L. 202; Anon, 3 Leon. 210, de una rooma; Runn. on Eject. pp. 122, 123; Gilliam v. Bird, 8 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 280; Doe d. Col-without any grant or devise of land,¹ for possession may be delivered of a portion of a building and there is clearly enough to direct the sheriff in execution.²

§ 106. Theory of the decisions.—These decisions are founded upon the necessity of the case. In crowded cities different persons sometimes have several freeholds over the same spot. The cellar may belong to one person and the upper rooms to another.³ “It is manifest,” says Mr. Justice Brown of the New York Supreme Court, “that the common law signification of land, which embraces all above as well as all below, to an indefinite extent, cannot be applied to such interests.”⁴ A man may have an inheritance in an upper chamber,⁵ and a house may be held separate from the land on which it stands,⁶ when placed there by permission of the owner of the soil, and it may be attached or sold on execution as personal property, and the owner will not be liable in trespass for such removal.⁷ In Pennsylvania, a verdict for the use of a brick-house and store-room has been sustained.⁸ So ejectment lies for a “passage-room,”⁹ for a part of a house known by the name of the “Three Kings in A,”¹⁰ for a vestry,¹¹ and for the fourth part of a house in N.¹² Different horizontal strata may be naghi v. Bluck, 8 C. & P. 464; Ellicott v. Mosier, 7 N. Y. 201. “There may be within the same territorial limits distinct estates of inheritance. The different stories of the same dwelling may be held in fee by different owners. The title to the surface of the soil may be in one person, the title to the mines, or different strata under the surface, may be in others.” Zinc Co. v. Franklinite Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 341.

¹ Per Parker, C. J., Otis v. Smith, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 293. See Rowan v. Kelsey, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 484; 3 Kent’s Com. (12th ed.) p. *401 [529], note c.

² Bacon’s Abr. Eject. D.

³ Doe d. Freeland v. Burt, 1 T. R. 701; Rowan v. Kelsey, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 484.

⁴ Rowan v. Kelsey, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 484, 489.

⁵ Coke on Litt. 48 b.

⁶ Pullen v. Bell, 40 Me. 314; Dame v. Dame, 38 N. H. 429; Howard v. Fessenden, 14 Allen (Mass.) 124; Doty v. Gorham, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 487; Marcy v. Darling, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 283.

⁷ Ibid. See Gilliam v. Bird, 8 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 280.

⁸ Miller v. Casselberry, 47 Penn. St. 376.

⁹ Bindover v. Sindercombe, 2 Ld. Raymond, 1470.

¹⁰ Sullivan v. Seagrave, 2 Str. 695.

¹¹ Hutchinson v. Fuller, 3 Lev. 96.

¹² Rawson v. Maynard, Cro. Eliz. 286.

owned by different people.¹ The title and ownership of permanent erections made by one person upon the lands of another generally accrues to the holder of the title to the land, but it is considered perfectly competent for parties to so regulate their respective interests by contract that one may be the owner of the buildings and another of the land.²

§ 106a. Horizontal divisions of land.—It has been said that the term land “includes not only the surface of the ground, but the substance or body of the soil, usque ad mediam terræ, and all accessions to the soil, with the water and open space or air over them, usque ad cælum.”³ While prima facie when a man owns the surface he owns all accessions to it, such as trees, houses and other structures, and his proprietorship extended from the centre of the earth to the clouds, yet this is only a presumption and not the result of any “legal impossibility of severing the house from the land, or one story of it from another, or mines from the surface. . . . Different proprietorships of land may be bounded or defined by horizontal as well as perpendicular lines.”⁴

§ 107. Vaults.—A controversy arose, in Coster v. Peters,⁵ over the right of possession of a vault beneath the street in front of certain demised premises. The vault had been made by the tenant under a personal license or grant of permission from the city of New York, the fee of the street being in the city. It was held that the space in which the vault in question was built was in possession of the tenant as part of the soil or land as much as if it had been a room in the building; that the right to the possession of the vault was not a mere easement; and that “ownership of soil extends downwards and upwards from the surface as much as it does over the mere superficial area, and may be subdivided horizontally as well as

¹ See Casselman v. Packard, 16 Wis. 117.

² People ex. rel. Muller v. Board of Assessors, 93 N. Y. 311; Smith v. Benson, 1 Hill. (N. Y.) 176.

³ 1 Am. Law. Reg., [N. S.] p. 577.

⁴ Ibid., p. 578.

⁵ 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 192-202.

perpendicularly;" that being land in itself the vault carried with it all the rights of dominion, and not a mere right to a temporary or permanent use of the vault as an incident to the occupation of another adjoining piece of land, and that it was not such an appurtenant as to pass by a mere conveyance of the latter.

§ 108. Mining rights and interests.—That ejectment may be maintained for the recovery of the possession of a mine is held in many cases. This may seem singular when it is remembered that a mine forms an estate of inheritance distinct from that of the surface. The action of ejectment, too, is possessory, and the subject of contention in the action must be capable of actual delivery of possession by the sheriff. The rights of the owner in the excavated parts of a mine would seem to be of an incorporeal nature, and all the portions which are severed instantly lose the character of land and become mere personal chattels. The application of ejectment to such interests would certainly not seem to correspond with the exact definition of the purpose of the action. "But in this, as in some other instances, the action of ejectment has been carried beyond its original limits."¹

§ 109. Coal mine.—A coal mine or a coal pit may be recovered in ejectment,² because it is not to be considered a profit a prendre, for the mine comprehends the ground or soil itself which is capable of being delivered in execution. In the King's Bench, as early as 1692, a declaration in ejectment "de mineris carbonum," was considered sufficient

¹ Bainbridge Law of Mines (4th edition, London), p. 333. See Harris v. The Equator M. & S. Co., 3 McCra. 14; United States v. Castillero, 2 Black, 221; Jackson v. Oltz, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 440; Zinc Co v. Franklinite Co., 13 N. J. Ch. 341. A gold mine is real estate, and can only be transferred by an instrument in writing. Melton v. Lambard, 51 Cal. 258. Concerning the right to mine, &c., consult note to McClintock v. Bryden, in 63 Am. Dec. p. 91.

² Comyn v. Kyneto, Cro. Jac. 150; Comyn v. Wheatly, Noy, 121; Bac. Abr. Eject. D. See Turner v. Reynolds, 23 Penn. St. 199; Jenk. Cent., 313; Harebottle v. Placock, Cro. Jac. 21; Andrews v. Whittingham, Carthew, 277; Whittingham v. Andrews, 1 Show. 364; s. c. 4 Mod. 143; 1 Salk. 255; 5 Morrison Min. Rep. 198; Grotz v. Lehigh & W. B. Coal Co., 1 Luz. Leg. Reg. Rep. 53. Comyn v. Kyneto is also reported by Noy (p. 121) under the name of Comyn v. Wheatly, the following words, which our modern reporters might well imitate, constituting the entire report: "Upon error, it was resolv'd that an Ejectione firm. lies, of a Cole-mine. 43 E. 3, 35. An assize lies and was brought for a Cole-mine."

without specifying the number of mines.¹ An ejectment brought by a cestui que trust for a lead mine was defeated, not because of its nature, but for the reason that "nothing but a legal estate can be recovered by ejectment."²

§ 110. Tin bound.—In England the interest of an owner of tin bounds in Cornwall was held not to be a mere easement or incorporeal hereditament, and was declared to be the subject of an action of ejectment, and this where the claimant was not in actual possession at the time of the defendant's wrongful entry;³ but ejectment will not lie for tin bounds eo nomine; they should be described as a mine lying within certain bounds called tin bounds,⁴ the tin bound itself being a mere liberty of entry and marking out certain bounds within which the party entering acquires the right to work a tin mine.

§ 111. Quarry.—In Ireland a distinction has been suggested between a mine and a quarry; the former being defined as a place where the substratum is excavated but the surface left unbroken, whereas, in a quarry, the surface is opened; and it was intimated by the Irish Court of Common Pleas that ejectment would not lie for a quarry.⁵ Again, the word "mine" is defined to import a cavern or subterranean place containing metals or minerals. This definition does not include a quarry.⁶ The distinction, however, is sometimes difficult of application. The question whether a quarry is or is not a mine has been said to be rather a question of fact, to be determined by the method of working.⁷

§ 112. Oil wells.—The decisions in Pennsylvania with regard to oil wells do not seem to be altogether reconcila-

¹ Whittingham v. Andrews, 4 Mod. 143. See Caldwell v. Copeland, 37 Pa. St. 427.

² Goodright v. Swymmer, 1 Kenyon, 385; s. c. 5 Morrison's Mining Rep. 200. See § 223.

³ Vice v. Thomas, 4 Y. & C. 538.

⁴ Doe d. Earl of Falmouth v. Alderson, Tyrw. & G. 543; s. c. 1 M. & W. 210.

⁵ Brown v. Chadwick, 7 Irish C. L. 101. See Clement v. Youngman, 40 Penn. St. 341; Clark v. Brazeau, 1 Mo. 290.

⁶ Listowel v. Gibbins, 9 Irish C. L. 223.

⁷ The King v. Inhabitants of Sedgley, 2 B. & Ad. 65, and note. Compare Donovan v. Vandemark, 88 N. Y. 668.

ble with the general principles which govern actions of ejectment, or with each other. A lease granted "for the sole and only purpose of mining and excavating for petroleum, coal, rock or carbon oil, or other valuable mineral or volatile substances," was held to vest a corporeal interest which would support ejectment.¹ On the other hand it was held, in the same State, that ejectment was the proper remedy for the wrongful ouster of a tenant of an oil well, notwithstanding the grant under the lease may have been of an incorporeal nature.² But where R. granted W. the exclusive right to bore for oil, reserving a one-fourth interest, with an agreement that, in the event of profitable results, after a reasonable time for experiment, the lease was to become perpetual, otherwise the land to revert to R.; and R. brought ejectment for a part of the land, alleging that the working of that portion had not proved profitable—it was held that ejectment would not lie to test the right to bore for oil.³

§ 113. Right and privilege of boring for oil.—An agreement conferring "the exclusive right and privilege of boring for salt, oil or minerals," was held by Judge Sharswood to grant the right to experiment for oil, and, if found, to sever it from the land and take it, as a chattel, but not as any part of the realty. The court said that this was a grant of an incorporeal hereditament only, and that the remedy for any disturbance of the rights of the grantee was by action on the case and not ejectment.⁴ The case is distinguished by the court from Caldwell v. Fulton,⁵ where the conveyance in controversy was of the full right title and privilege of digging and taking away stone coal to whatever extent the grantee might think proper. This was held to be a conveyance of the entire ownership of the coal in place.

§ 114. Oil regarded as a mineral.—In Stoughton's Appeal ⁶

¹ Barker v. Dale, 3 Pittsb. (Pa.) 190.

² Karns v. Tanner, 66 Penn. St. 297.

³ Rynd v. Rynd Farm Oil Co., 63 Penn. St. 397. See § 618a.

⁴ Union Petroleum Co. v. Blivin Petroleum Co., 72 Penn. St. 173. See Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Penn. St. 229.

⁵ 31 Penn. St. 475; s. c. 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 238.

⁶ 88 Penn. St. 198 (decided in 1878).

oil was declared to be a mineral like coal or any other natural product which, in situ, forms part of the land. The point of contention was the validity of a lease, made by a guardian, of his ward's lands, which purported to confer the exclusive right to bore and dig for oil, and gather and collect the same. The guardian's power to lease any property of his ward, of such character as to be the proper subject of a lease was recognized, but oil, being a mineral, was treated as realty, and the lease was held to be a grant of a part of the corpus of the estate, and not of a mere incorporeal right. The guardian having no power to dispose of any portion of the realty, the lease was adjudged void. This decision of the highest court of Pennsylvania, rendered subsequent to the cases already discussed, tends strongly to confirm such of those cases, construing oil deeds or leases, as hold that the rights of grantees or lessees are corporeal, and hence the proper subject of an ejectment.

§ 115. Vein or lode.—We have seen already that the ancient common law doctrine that the ownership of land necessarily includes everything above and below it is now obsolete. This is illustrated in the case of veins and lodes no less than in that of rooms or portions of a building. Thus ejectment lies for a vein or lode beneath the surface; but the plaintiff, if successful, acquires no right to the hoisting works erected for the purpose of taking ore from the vein recovered, unless the surface upon which the hoisting works stand is also recovered.¹

§ 116. Possessory mining claims.—And ejectment will lie to recover possessory as well as patented mining claims or interests,² and for an undivided interest in a mining claim and lode.³ In California an owner of an undivided interest in a mining claim is entitled to the exclusive possession against parties who show no title.⁴

¹ Bullion Mining Co. v. Cæsus Gold & S. M. Co., 2 Nevada, 168. See §§ 105, 106.

² Sears v. Taylor, 4 Col. 39; Atkins v. Hendree, 1 Idaho, 107.

³ Mining Company v. Taylor, 100 U. S. 37; Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 366; s. c. 5 Morrison's Mining Rep. 204.

⁴ Melton v. Lambard, 51 Cal. 258. See §§ 300, 301.

§ 117. Land under water.—Land under water may be made the subject of an action of ejectment,¹ and where it was originally below high-water mark in navigable waters or arms of the sea, and has been transformed by human labor or artificial means into dry land, it is subject to all the rights incident to ownership of other land, and recoverable in this form of action.²

§ 118. Made lands.—In Vermont it has been held that land made by a stranger by filling in earth in front of lands owned by plaintiff, bordering on the waters of Lake Champlain cannot be recovered in ejectment, because riparian owners have no title to the soil below low-water mark.³ But this it may be observed involves purely a question of title rather than a consideration of the subject matter for which ejectment may be brought.

§ 119. Lands under water granted by land office.—In New York ejectment is maintainable for land under water, the title to which has been granted by the commissioners of the land office for the purpose of erecting docks for commercial use.⁴ And in Connecticut the rights of a riparian proprietor to land below high-water may be vindicated in this action.⁵

§ 120. Rivulet or pool.—A rivulet may be recovered by laying the ejectment for so many acres of land covered by water;⁶ and so of a pool or pit of water—the words comprehending both land and water.⁷ We have already observed that cases such as these turn largely upon the question of what constitutes a proper description of the subject matter of the action.

§ 121. Bed of the ocean.—In California the title to the bed of the ocean is vested in the State, and it is said that

¹ Martin v. Waddell, 16 Peters, 367; Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill (Md.), 430. See Browne v. Kennedy, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.), 195.

² People v. Mauran, 5 Denio (N. Y.), 389.

³ Austin v. Rutland R. R. Co., 45 Vt. 215; but see Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 102.

⁴ Champlain & St. L. R. R. Co. v. Valentine, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 484.

⁵ Nichols v. Lewis, 15 Conn. 137.

⁶ Challenor v. Thomas, Yelv. 143; s. c. 1 Brownl. 142.

⁷ Ibid.; see, also, Co. Litt. 5 b.

the latter may maintain ejectment for a wharf constructed beyond low-water mark by defendant without authority.¹

"The Pacific Ocean belongs to no one nation, but is the common property of all;"² and each State owns the beds of all tide-waters within its jurisdiction unless they have been granted away.³

§ 122. Tide lands.—Ocean boundaries.—In Oregon tide lands on the Columbia river, which are covered and uncovered by the ebb and flow of the sea, belong to the State by virtue of its sovereignty, and may be recovered by ejectment.⁴ The purchasers of tide lands from adjoining owners are given by statute the right to acquire the title of the State.⁵ Incidentally it may be observed that the proprietor of lands bounded on the sea-shore takes no fixed freehold, but one that shifts with the changes that gradually take place, and subject to the common incidents that may increase or diminish the extent of his boundaries.⁶

§ 123. Land swallowed by the sea.—In *Murphy v. Norton*⁷ an interesting question as to the title to lands which had emerged from the sea by natural means was considered by the Supreme Court of New York. The action was instituted to test the ownership of four miles of sand beach extending from Rockaway Beach to Long Beach, on the shore of Long Island. The plaintiff claimed that those through whom he derived title had at all times owned, and had been in undisputed possession of, the land bordering upon and extending down to the ocean; that as far back as 1797 the shore or line of the ocean extended outside of the present sea front; that, in 1860, the plaintiff's shore was cut off, washed away, and swallowed by the sea; that since 1870 the

¹ Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 385. See People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 389.

² Lord v. Steamship Co. 102 U. S. 544

³ McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 394. See Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 212; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. 74; Mumford v. Wardwell, 6 Wall. 436.

⁴ Hinman v. Warren, 6 Oregon, 408. See Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324.

⁵ De Force v. Welch, 10 Oregon, 507.

⁶ Camden & A. Land Co. v. Lippincott, 45 N. J. Law, 417. Compare Matter of City of Brooklyn, 73 N. Y. 184; White's Bank of Buffalo v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 65; Trustees of East Hampton v. Kirk, 68 N. Y. 459; Cook v. McClure, 58 N. Y. 437.

⁷ 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 197. Affirmed sub nomine Mulry v. Norton, 29 Hun (N. Y.), 660.

beach had emerged from the sea, and reformed outside the mainland, divided from it by a bay of navigable water, but within the plaintiff's original boundaries. The owner of the mainland took possession of the newly formed beach for the reason that it had formed within the limits of his ancient boundaries ; while the town of Hempstead, in which the lands were located, claimed the whole of the new beach by right of sovereignty as an accretion upon Long Beach. The court held that the title of the original owner attached to the restored beach. The doctrine of accretion was held not to apply in favor of the town because the change was not gradual and imperceptible, but was brought about by sudden convulsions of nature. *In re Hull & Selby Railway*¹ was relied upon by the parties claiming under the town of Hempstead adversely to the original proprietor. That case establishes the doctrine that where the sea encroaches upon private land by gradual and imperceptible progress, the title to the land thereby covered with water becomes vested in the sovereign power. The Supreme Court of New York decided, however, in Murphy v. Norton that this principle applied only for the period during which the land remained submerged, and that when it reappeared, or emerged from the water by natural means, within the ancient boundaries, the title of the original owner was revested and restored. This decision rests upon the authority of Lord Chief Justice Hale :² "If a subject hath land adjoining the sea, and the violence of the sea swallow it up, but so that yet there be reasonable marks to continue the notice of it ; or though the marks be defaced, yet if by situation and extent of quantity, and bounding upon the firm land, the same can be known, though the sea leave this land again, or it be by art or industry regained, the subject doth not lose his property ; and accordingly it was held by Cooke and Foster,³ though the inundation continue forty years."

§ 124. New islands.—A similar question was decided by

¹ 5 M. & W. 327. Compare Trustees of East Hampton v. Kirk, 84 N. Y. 215.

² De Jure Maris Hargrave's Law Tracts, p. 15. See pp. 16, 30, 31, 36, 37; 2 Bla. Com. pp. 261, 262.

³ M. 7, Jac. C. B.

the Court of Common Pleas of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, as early as 1815.¹ It appeared that the surface of the lower part of Little Tinicum Island had been washed away by the force of the winds and waves, and consequently overflowed by the water of the river. Subsequently, a bar began to form by the deposit of alluvion, and appeared above the water in the same place which had formerly been occupied by the part of Little Tinicum Island swallowed up by the river. The bar began forming below the island, and was for a long time entirely distinct from it, but at length became united with the old island by its own extension upwards through gradual accretions. The defendant procured a grant of the bar or new island from the Commonwealth, but the former proprietor claimed, and the court decided, that the latter did not lose his property in the soil covered by water if it was regained either by natural or artificial means, but that it continued to belong to him, and was not the subject of a new grant from the Commonwealth. In a case in the Supreme Court of Connecticut² it appeared that the plaintiff's ancestor had sunk an old scow filled with stones in a navigable river, on a flat between two channels, and had used it for the purpose of fishing when it was bare at low water. The scow was overflowed, and completely submerged at high water. By gradual accretion of sand an island had finally formed over the scow, and emerged above the water. Plaintiff and his ancestor continued to use the island for fishing purposes, and each year mowed the grass growing upon it, but it appeared that a large number of people had used the island for fishing, without license from any one, and without paying for its occupation, and that the plaintiff's claim was not generally known or recognized. It was held to be settled law, in Connecticut, that the title to an island emerging, as this did, in navi-

¹ Morris v. Brooke, 25 Albany Law Journal, 90. See Morton v. Manhattan Beach Imp. Co., 29 Hun (N. Y.), 266.

² Tracy v. Norwich & W. R. R. Co., 39 Conn. 382. Compare McCullough v. Wall, 4 Rich. Law (S. C.), 66; s. c. 53 Am. Dec. 715. Islands that form in an unnavigable river belong to the adjoining owners who have a property in the bed to the middle. Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 268; s. c. 16 Am. Dec. 342. If the island forms or lies in the thread of the river it will be divided between the riparian proprietors on the opposite sides according to the original thread. Inhabitants of Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41; s. c. 28 Am. Dec. 276.

gable waters, vested in the State, and that a grant from the State could be presumed from long continued and adverse possession, but that the plaintiff's possession was not sufficiently exclusive to give him title against the State, or any one else, the island having been treated as common or public property.

§ 125. Accretions.—Alluvion has been described by the Supreme Court of the United States as “an addition to riparian land, gradually and imperceptibly made by the water to which the land is contiguous. It is different from reliction, and is the opposite of avulsion. The test as to what is gradual and imperceptible in the sense of the rule is, that though the witnesses may see from time to time that progress has been made, they could not perceive it while the process was going on. Whether it is the effect of natural or artificial causes makes no difference. The result as to the ownership in either case is the same. The riparian right to future alluvion is a vested right. It is an inherent and essential attribute of the original property. The title to the increment rests in the law of nature.”¹ These accretions constitute a part of the realty, and may be enjoyed and protected as such. Before the proprietor can set up his claim to accretions, he must, however, establish title to the shore; otherwise, inquiries concerning his rights would be mere abstractions.²

§ 126. Salt boilery.—Ejectment for a boilery of salt has been upheld, although the claimant was only entitled to a certain number of buckets of salt water drawn out of a well.³ By the grant of a boilery of salt it is said that the soil passes, for it is the whole profit of the soil,⁴ and the

¹ County of St. Clair v. Lovington, 23 Wall. 46-68. See Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Chase, 43 Md. 23; Cook v. McClure, 58 N. Y. 437; Gerrish v. Clough, 48 N. H. 9; Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 233; Mulry v. Norton, 29 Hun (N. Y.), 660; Camden and A. L. Co. v. Lippincott, 45 N. J. Law, 405; Lammers v. Nissen, 4 Neb. 245; Posey v. James, 7 Lea (Tenn.), 101; Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120; Minto v. Delaney, 7 Oregon, 337; Saulet v. Shepherd, 4 Wall. 502.

² Bates v. Illinois Central R. R., 1 Black, 208.

³ Sanders v. Patridge, Noy, 132; Smith v. Barrett, 1 Sid. 161; s. c. 1 Lev. 114.

⁴ See Comyn v. Kyneto, Cro. Jac. 150; Co. Litt. 4 b.

water being fixed in a certain place within the bounds and compass of the well is considered a part of the soil.¹

§ 127. Inaccessible lands.—It was objected in New York to a recovery in ejectment that the lands in controversy, which did not touch upon any road or street, were inaccessible at the time of trial, so that the sheriff could not deliver possession, but the Commission of Appeals held that this was a misconception of a well known rule of law that where the property is not, in its own nature, capable of physical possession, an action of ejectment would not lie, and that the cases lend no countenance to the idea that land itself cannot be recovered in ejectment because it happens to be inaccessible at the time the judgment is entered, or during the trial.²

§ 128. Distinct tracts of land.—Plaintiff may recover in a single action several distinct tracts of land claimed under different titles if he has been unlawfully ejected from them all by the same defendant.³ To require the bringing of separate actions in such cases would be unmeaning and useless, for manifestly all the various titles could be as fully investigated in a single proceeding as in several actions.

§ 129. Dower.—At common law a widow cannot maintain ejectment for dower until it has been admeasured or set off to her, because she is not seized of any part of the land, and has no right of entry, or of present possession, before assignment;⁴ nor is her grantee before admeasurement in any better position.⁵ And when ejectment is brought, after admeasurement, the validity of the widow's

¹ Gilbert on Eject. (2d ed.) p. 62.

² Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382, per Dwight, C. See §§ 96-101, 572.

³ Den v. Snowhill, 13 N. J. L. 23. See Worrall v. Beck, cited in 1 Wils. 1; Jackson v. Woods, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 278, per Kent, Ch. J.; Jackson v. Sidney, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 185.

⁴ Doe v. Nutt, 2 Car. & P. 430; Jackson v. Vanderheyden, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 67, per Spencer, Ch. J.; Weaver v. Crenshaw, 6 Ala. 873; Chapman v. Sharpe, 2 Show. 184; Pringle v. Gaw, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 536; Jackson v. O'Donaghy, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 247; Chapman v. Armistead, 4 Munf. (Va.) 382; 4 Kent's Com. 62; Dorsey on Ejectment, 43.

⁵ Jones v. Hopper, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 326.

claim to dower, the title of her husband¹ his seizin, and her marriage,² may all be controverted and tried, notwithstanding the admeasurement.³

The many rules applicable to this highly favored interest cannot be fully considered in this work, but we may observe that the widow's complaint in ejectment for dower is sufficient if it alleges seizin and death of the husband and wrongful possession by the defendant.⁴ In New York the widow's action must be brought against the actual occupant,⁵ and there must be a jury trial.⁶ Her interest may also be reached by her creditors.⁷

Novel questions often arise as to what person may claim dower and from what properties it may be claimed. It may be noted that a foreign born widow of a naturalized citizen may have dower.⁸ Partnership lands are in equity subject to the lien of the partnership's creditors, and the better rule seems to be that the widow's right of dower is subordinate to this lien,⁹ and to the final adjustment of the partnership affairs.¹⁰

§ 130. *Land subject to an easement, servitude, or public use.*¹¹

—In general, ejectment lies to recover the possession of the soil subject to either a public or private easement over

¹ The defendant, though having a deed of the fee, may show that the husband had only a leasehold estate. Finn v. Sleight, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 401.

² The validity of the marriage is determined by the law of the State where it was entered into. Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 22.

³ Parks v. Hardey, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 15; Hyde v. Hyde, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 630; and see Sparrow v. Kingman, 1 N. Y. 242, and cases cited.

⁴ Draper v. Draper, 11 Hun (N. Y.), 616. Compare McKay v. Freeman, 6 Oregon, 449. The heirs at law are proper parties in an action to secure an assignment of dower. Van Name v. Van Name, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 247.

⁵ Ellicott v. Mosier, 7 N. Y. 201.

⁶ Jones v. Emery, 1 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 338.

⁷ Payne v. Becker, 87 N. Y. 153.

⁸ Burton v. Burton, 1 Keyes (N. Y.), 359. See Headman v. Rose, 63 Ga. 465; Kelley v. Owen, 7 Wall. 496.

⁹ Sumner v. Hampson, 8 Ohio, 365. See Greene v. Greene, 1 Ohio, 535; s. c. 13 Am. Dec. 642, and note.

¹⁰ Winter v. Eckert, N. Y. Daily Reg., April 7, 1883. See Fairchild v. Fairchild, 64 N. Y. 471; Chester v. Dickerson, 54 N. Y. 1; Van Brunt v. Applegate, 44 N. Y. 544; Staats v. Bristow, 73 N. Y. 264.

¹¹ For a consideration of the right of municipal corporations to maintain ejectment for the possession of public streets or places, see Chap. VIII.

it.¹ In the leading case of Goodtitle v. Alker,² Lord Mansfield decided, after exhaustive argument, that the action might be maintained by the owner of the soil for land which was part of the King's highway. In the argument of counsel in this case, reference was made to a ruling, attributed to Lord Hardwicke, that, as no possession could be delivered of the soil of a highway, therefore no ejectment would lie for it; but the judges of the King's Bench seem to have been doubtful whether any such ruling had ever been made by Lord Hardwicke. If made at all it was clearly overruled by Lord Mansfield's decision.³

§ 131. City of Cincinnati v. White discussed.—The Supreme Court of the United States, however, in City of Cincinnati v. White,⁴ intimated the opinion that the supposed ruling of Lord Hardwicke was sound in principle, and that ejectment was not maintainable for lands dedicated to a public use, for the reason that the plaintiff by invoking that remedy seeks to be put in actual possession of the land, and this would subject him to an indictment for a nuisance, the private right of possession being in direct hostility with the easement or use to which the public are entitled; and taking possession subject to the easement being utterly impracticable. This action it is to be observed was brought to test the right of the public to an easement in land, and the remarks of Mr. Justice Thompson on the question of a recovery subject to an easement must therefore be considered, and indeed have generally been treated, as entirely obiter.⁵ In addition to the ruling attributed to Lord Hardwicke the court cite only two cases as authority for the proposition that ejectment is not maintainable for land subject to a public use. In Stiles v. Curtis,⁶ the first case

¹ Tillmes v. Marsh, 67 Penn. St. 507, per Sharswood, J.; Cooper v. Smith, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 26. See §§ 526, 571, 492a.

² 1 Burr. 133.

³ See Terre Haute and S. E. Ry. Co. v. Rodel, 89 Ind. 128; s. c. 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cases, 284, also notes to Mayhew v. Norton, 28 Am. Dec. 304.

⁴ 6 Peters, 431, per Thompson, J.

⁵ Hillyer, J., inadvertently observed in the case of the Central Pacific Railroad Company v. Benity, 5 Sawyer, 120, that Cincinnati v. White, 6 Peters, 431 "does away with the idea that the owner of the fee may recover possession of land dedicated to a public use, subject to the easement."

⁶ 4 Day (Conn.), 328.

cited, certain proprietors of an ancient township had appropriated common lands for a public highway, by laying out the land adjoining thereto and selling the same as being bounded on the highway. At the time of the trial this land had been used as a highway for a century, but was no longer needed for that purpose. One of the adjoining owners inclosed and took possession of a portion of it, and the Supreme Court of Connecticut held that ejectment could not be maintained against him by the township proprietors. The grounds of the decision do not clearly appear from the opinions of the judges, but it seems to have been considered a sufficient reason for refusing to maintain the action that the plaintiff by laying out the highway had parted with all his title as proprietor. Peck v. Smith,¹ the second case relied upon, was an action of trespass by the owner of the fee in a highway, against a defendant who had obstructed it by maintaining a shop upon it, and the plaintiff's right to support the action was upheld. The remarks of the court concerning his right to bring ejectment are obiter. The bearing of these cases is, however, in conflict with the universal current of modern authority, the easement being now regarded as a mere liberty, privilege, or advantage existing distinct from the ownership of the soil,² and not in any sense an obstruction to the remedies usually invoked by the owner of the fee.³

§ 132. Ownership of the soil and the right to an easement independent.—The grantee of an easement is not the owner or occupant of the estate over which the right extends,⁴ but the right to the fee and the right to an easement in the same estate⁵ are rights independent of each other, and may well subsist together when vested in different persons.

¹ 1 Conn. 103.

² City of Dubuque v. Maloney, 9 Iowa, 450; Pomeroy v. Mills, 3 Vt. 279.

³ S. F. Taylor v. Armstrong, 24 Ark. 102; Kenniston v. Hannaford, 58 N. H. 28, and cases cited.

⁴ Cook Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co., 35 Ill. 460.

⁵ The gift of a right of way is not a gift of the rock and other materials within the boundaries of the way. Smith v. City Council of Rome, 19 Ga. 89; s. c. 7 Morrison's Mining Rep. 306.

Each can maintain an action to vindicate and establish his rights; the former to protect and enforce his seizin of the fee; the latter to prevent a disturbance of his easement.¹ It may, therefore, be considered settled that the owner of the fee of a highway, over which the public have an easement for travel, may recover the land within the limits of the highway, in ejectment against one who has illegally appropriated it to a purpose not authorized by the easement or servitude.² And the rule is the same with regard to a private way, e. g., an alley,³ a passage way;⁴ and so of a ferry right.⁵ The sheriff in such cases delivers possession of land subject to the easement.⁶

§ 133. Character of defendant's occupation.—To sustain the action, however, the occupation of the land by the defendant must be wholly inconsistent with the public easement;⁷ hence, proof that at the time of the commencement of the action the locus in quo was in use by the defendant as one of the public streets of a city, was, in a very questionable case, considered insufficient to sustain ejectment; such use, it was argued, not affording evidence of any claim of title to or interest in the land itself, and being a mere claim of an easement not incompatible with the title or possession of the plaintiff.⁸ The rule embodied in this case will be discussed presently.⁹ Ejectment may

¹ Morgan v. Moore, 3 Gray (Mass.), 319.

² Reformed Church v. Schoolcraft, 65 N. Y. 134; Wager v. Troy Union R. R. Co., 25 N. Y. 526; Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133; Etz v. Daily, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 32; Lozier v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 465; Carpenter v. Oswego & S. R. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 655; Cooper v. Smith, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 26; Warwick v. Mayo, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 528; Bolling v. The Mayor, &c., 3 Rand. (Va.) 563; Wright v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 76; Pomeroy v. Mills, 3 Vt. 279; Blake v. Ham, 53 Me. 430; Ayer v. Phillips, 69 Me. 50; Bac. Abr. Tit. Highways B.; Brown v. Galley, Lator's Sup. (N. Y.) 308; Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 35. Writs of Entry.—Hancock v. Wentworth, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 446; Morgan v. Moore, 3 Gray (Mass.), 319.

³ Gordon v. Sizer, 39 Miss. 805.

⁴ Morgan v. Moore, 3 Gray (Mass.), 319.

⁵ Cooper v. Smith, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 26.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Adams v. Saratoga & W. R. R. Co., 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 414. Reversed on another point, 10 N. Y. 328; Dewitt v. Village of Ithaca, 15 Hun (N. Y.), 568. See § 135.

⁸ Cowenhoven v. City of Brooklyn, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 9. But see Strong v. City of Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1; Kurkel v. Haley, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.), 75; Dewitt v. Village of Ithaca, 15 Hun (N. Y.), 568.

⁹ See § 161.

be maintained by the owner of the fee of a highway which is subject to the public easement of travel, for the purpose of ridding the highway of telegraph poles improperly maintained thereon.¹

§ 134. Rights of the owner of the fee.—The right of the owner of the fee to maintain ejectment is founded on his right to continue to use the land in any manner not inconsistent with the public right, or that does not impair the use of the easement.² Reasonable facilities for the enjoyment of the easement must be accorded.³ He may maintain trespass for any injury done to the soil not incidental to the public right of passage;⁴ as where the defendant continues a shop thereon;⁵ or plows the road, unless it be done merely to make repairs; or keeps goods continuously in the street for the purpose of sale: for the freehold and the profits, the trees upon the land, the right to take the herbage,⁶ to remove the soil or sand,⁷ to carry water in pipes,⁸ to work the mines under the surface, and to utilize the quarries, springs of water, and timber,⁹ belong to the owner of the soil. He has a right to all the remedies for the protection of the freehold, subject to the easement.¹⁰ In a case which arose in New York, plaintiff conveyed a farm to defendant, excepting from it land embraced in its boundaries which formed part of a highway. The defendant dug up the road and ran a water pipe across it, set out fruit and shade trees, piled stones, lumber and

¹ Dusenbury v. Mutual Union Tel. Co. 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 206.

² Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 447; Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 104-130; Babcock v. Lamb, 1 Cowen (N. Y.) 238; Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 35.

³ Bakeman v. Talbot, 31 N. Y. 366; Houpes v. Alderson, 22 Iowa, 160.

⁴ Chambers v. Furry, 1 Yeates (Pa.), 167; Barclay v. Howell, 6 Peters, 498; Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 35; Harrison v. Parker, 6 East, 154; Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 104; Babcock v. Lamb, 1 Cowen (N. Y.), 238; Gidney v. Earl, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 98; Willoughby v. Jenks, 20 Wend. (N. Y.), 96.

⁵ Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 103.

⁶ Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 33; Adams v. Emerson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 57.

⁷ Williams v. Kenney, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 629.

⁸ Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133-144.

⁹ Lyon v. Gormley, 53 Penn. St. 261.

¹⁰ Bolling v. The Mayor, &c., 3 Rand. (Va.) 563; Chambers v. Furry, 1 Yeates (Pa.), 167.

manure within its boundaries, and used a portion of it for farming purposes, claiming, as against the plaintiff, the right to appropriate the highway to the uses described. Under these circumstances the right to maintain ejectment was sustained by the Supreme Court of that State.¹

§ 135. Ejectment for lands applied to unauthorized use.—It appeared in another action in the same State that a railroad corporation had acquired land under its charter for railroad purposes, and having subsequently discontinued its railroad deeded the land to a municipal corporation to be used as a street. Ejectment was sustained against the city by the owner of the fee on the ground that he had a reversionary interest, and was entitled to resume possession on the discontinuance of the use for which the land had been taken by the railroad; and that it was not lawful to appropriate the land to a new additional use without fresh condemnation and additional compensation.² So an action may be maintained by the owner of the fee of a street charged with a public easement, against a railroad company which had laid tracks in the street, though the tracks had not been used or connected with the other portions of the railroad.³ A fortiori this must be the rule where a railroad occupies any part of a street for actual use as its roadway.⁴

§ 136. Wrongful use for public purposes not protected.—The wrongful possession of land by a railroad company in any such case will not be protected by the courts merely because the lands are devoted to a public use, nor will the owner be remitted to a vexatious litigation to recover compensation.⁵

§ 137. Rule in Illinois.—A different rule, however, seems

¹ Etz v. Daily, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 32.

² Strong v. City of Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1; s. c. first appeal sub. nom. Heard v. City of Brooklyn, 60 N. Y. 242. See, however, N. Y. & H. R. R. Co. v. Kip, 46 N. Y. 546. See § 133.

³ Carpenter v. Oswego & S. R. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 655. See § 133.

⁴ Weisbrod v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 21 Wis. 602; Gardiner v. Tisdale, 2 Wis. 153.

⁵ Graham v. Columbus & I. C. Ry. Co., 27 Ind. 260; s. p. Terre Haute & S. E. R. R. Co. v. Rodell, 89 Ind. 128; s. c. 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cases, 284; Sharpe v. St. Louis & S. E. Ry. Co., 49 Ind. 296.

to prevail in Illinois. In ejectment by the owner of the fee of a country road against a railway corporation which had laid its tracks on the road, it was decided that the public authorities, who had the superintendence and control of the public roads, might authorize and permit travel over them by means of a railway, and that the plaintiff could not recover the possession in ejectment against the railroad company.¹

§ 138. Rule when fee is granted for public use.—Where the owner parts with the fee of the land to a municipal corporation, or other public body entitled to hold it for public use, he cannot maintain ejectment while the fee continues in the grantee, but must wait until the title reverts. He has no title to be assailed and no possession that can be invaded. This differs from the case of an ordinary highway; in the latter case the public have only a right of way or passage.² Ejectment may be maintained for a road-bed abandoned by a railroad company which had originally acquired only an easement over the land.³

§ 139. Municipal corporations.—It was contended by counsel, in a recent case in New Jersey, that a municipal corporation had not sufficient title to its streets to maintain ejectment. But the court held that where the public easement was such that exclusive possession was essential for its enjoyment, ejectment was the only appropriate action to obtain the possession, and the corporation might defend ejectment at the suit of the owner of the fee by setting up the right of possession of the street acquired by dedication to the public use.⁴ This subject is considered elsewhere.⁵

§ 140. Attempted distinction between public and private easements.—In a recent case already cited,⁶ the Supreme

¹ Edwardsville R. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 92 Ill. 377.

² Hunter v. Middleton, 13 Ill. 50. See People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188.

³ Phillips v. Dunkirk W. & P. R. R. Co. 78 Penn. St. 177.

⁴ Hoboken Land & Improvement Co. v. Mayor, &c., of Hoboken, 36 N. J. L. 540. Compare Morgan v. Moore, 3 Gray (Mass.), 319. See contra City of Racine v. Crottsenberg, 61 Wis. 481.

⁵ See Chap. VIII.

⁶ Hoboken L. & I. Co. v. The Mayor, &c., 36 N. J. L. 540.

Court of New Jersey intimated its opinion, that while the existence of a private easement constituted no defense to the action of ejectment by the owner of the fee, the rule was otherwise with regard to a public easement, and that in the latter case, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Cincinnati v. White, ubi sup., the owner of the easement could interpose a valid defense. This distinction seems to have been suggested by the fact that in the case of many public easements, such as streets in cities, the possession, exclusive of all interference by the owner of the fee, is essential for its use, regulation and enjoyment, and that ejectment, being based upon a right to be put in possession, is not maintainable. But the distinction cannot be entirely supported on principle, for the owner, as we have seen, is still entitled to the use, enjoyment, and possession of the fee in so far as it does not detract from, or interfere with, the use of the easement. He may still own, even in a public street in a city, trees and herbage, and he owns the soil under the street as well. He may, as we have already seen, maintain ejectment for a mine, and in such a case—a by no means improbable contingency in a mining community—supposing a street to pass over the mine, the public easement could not be any objection to his recovery.¹ As already stated, the general current of modern authority is to the effect that the two interests are entirely independent of each other, and there is no difficulty in the sheriff's delivering possession of the land subject to the easement.²

§ 141. Land subject to homestead rights.—On a writ of entry in Massachusetts, against a married woman alone, to recover possession of land in which she has a homestead interest, a qualified judgment may, by statute, be rendered for the possession of the land subject to the right of homestead.¹ In that State the owner of land impressed with this burden, in favor of a tenant and his family, may maintain a writ of entry, and recover the land except in so far as the homestead title may exclude him.² In Letchford v. Cary, the Supreme Court of Mississippi held that a purchaser of land at execution sale, subject to homestead, could recover it in ejectment, but was entitled to a judgment to the extent of his title only, and could not dispossess the occupants, or affect their rights under the homestead statute.³ The decisions upon this subject, however, are not uniform. Thus it has been held in Illinois that where the homestead of a debtor was sold under execution without division, although the land was worth over $1,000, the statutory limit, the purchaser acquired no title to any part of it, which was available in ejectment to either a plaintiff or defendant. The judgment was held to be a lien upon that portion of the land exceeding $1,000 in value, but the court said that the creditor's remedy was to proceed under the statute.⁴ In a later case in the same State, it was decided that when the homestead was not released in the mortgage it did not pass under a foreclosure sale and no rights were acquired under such a sale which could be enforced in ejectment where the owner of the homestead right was occupying the land at the time of the sale.⁵

¹ In cases where the absolute title to a street, as distinguished from a mere easement, is vested in trustees of a town for the public use, the trustees own the coal under the surface of the street. Trustees of Hawesville v. Hawes 6 Bush (Ky.), 232.

² Tillmes v. Marsh, 67 Penn. St. 507; Cooper v. Smith, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 26. See § 132.

§ 142. Ejectment for fishery.—In England, in an early case which arose in the King's Bench, a doubt was expressed by the judges whether ejectment could be maintained for a piscary,⁶ and this was followed by decisions that the action would not lie, on the ground that the right was only a *profit a prendre*⁷ and incorporeal in its nature.⁸ Much confusion has been introduced into

¹ Castle v. Palmer, 6 Allen (Mass.), 401; Stebbins v. Miller, 12 Allen (Mass.), 591. Compare Rogers v. Sinsheimer, 50 N. Y. 646. See § 526.

² Swan v. Stephens, 99 Mass. 7.

³ Letchford v. Cary, 52 Miss. 791.

⁴ Stevens v. Hollingsworth, 74 Ill. 202.

⁵ Asher v. Mitchell, 92 Ill. 480.

⁶ Molineux v. Molineux, Cro. Jac. 144. Forcible entry proceedings are not maintainable for a fishery. Van Auken v. Decker, 2 N. J. L. 108.

⁷ The right of shooting is a profit a prendre. Webber v. Lee, 26 Alb. L. J. 453.

⁸ Herbert v. Laughlun, Cro. Car. 492; Waddy v. Newton, 8 Mod. 278.

this subject, however, in part through a later decision of the same court,¹ distinguishing between a mere common of piscary as incorporeal, and a several fishery united with the right to the soil.² This latter case was not an action of ejectment, but turned upon the question whether a pauper had, by the demise of a fishery, taken a tenement within the meaning of a statute relating to settlements. Buller, J., rested the decision of the court expressly on the ground that it was necessary to presume in letting a fishery that the soil passed with it, while Ashhurst, J., said: "There is no doubt but that a fishery is a tenement. Trespass will lie for an injury to it; and it may be recovered in ejectment."³ It is obvious that this latter statement can hardly be regarded as anything more than an obiter dictum, but the presumption referred to, that the owner of a fishery must be taken in the absence of negative proof to be the owner of the soil, has an important bearing on the action of ejectment. Wherever such a presumption is admitted to exist, the owner of a fishery, independent of the soil, would seem to have the right to maintain ejectment against any one who cannot prove the negative fact that he was not the owner of the soil. In England this presumption has been recognized in several cases,⁴ in the last of which Lord Cockburn, though strongly contending on grounds of principle against its existence, admitted that the doctrine was settled law. In this country, however, these precedents can hardly be considered binding, and the dissenting opinion of Lord Cockburn, in the case last cited, may, probably, be taken as placing the matter in its true light. In all these recent cases the only question really involved was whether trespass could be maintained by the owner of a fishery, and as ownership of the soil is not essential to maintain trespass, it was unnecessary for the judges to invoke the presump-

¹ The King v. Inhabitants of Old Alresford, 1 T. R. 358.

² A right of several fishery, not founded upon a grant or prescription, cannot exist independently of the right to the soil. Collins v. Benbury, 5 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 118; a. c. 42 Am. Dec. 155, and notes.

³ The King v. Inhabitants of Old Alresford, 1 T. R. 358, 361.

⁴ Partheriche v. Mason, 2 Chitt. 658; Somerset v. Fogwell, 5 B. & C. 875; Holford v. Bailey, 8 Q. B. 1000; s. c. in Error, 13 Q. B. 426; Marshall v. Steam Nav. Co., 3 B. & S. 732.

tion in aid of the decision, and their remarks on this head were not called for by the facts before them. Such a presumption is clearly entirely out of place in an action of ejectment. The plaintiff does not rely on any presumptions, but on the strength of his own title, and his allegation of an incorporeal hereditament cannot be supposed to imply a corporeal hereditament in support of it. The general conclusion to which these considerations all point is, that where the right to the soil and the fishery are united, the owner of the former can, by bringing ejectment for the one, recover the other; but that where the right to fish is separated from the ownership of the land the action is not maintainable, but resort must be had to other remedies.¹

§ 143. Pasturage and herbage.—The early cases, decided in England, with regard to the right to bring ejectment for pasturage and herbage, are of little value at the present day. They seem to have turned chiefly on questions of evidence and pleading. These rights somewhat resemble fishery rights. With regard to both, it is clear that they may exist separate from the interest in the soil. Lord Coke says² that the grantee of herbagium terræ has a “particular right in the land, and shall have an action quare clausum fregit; but by grant thereof and livery made,

¹ In this discussion we have not thought it worth while to go into the distinctions between free, common, and several fisheries, nor to consider the question, once the subject of much controversy, whether the grant of a fishery necessarily carried with it, as accessory, the right to the soil. Whatever may have been the authority at one time in support of this proposition it must now be considered disposed of. See Angell on Watercourses, § 72; Butler & Hargrave's Co. Litt. 122a, note 7; Woolrych's Law of Waters, 111; and the dissenting opinion of Cockburn, C. J., in Marshall v. Steam Nav. Co. ubi sup. The presumption of a united ownership in the absence of negative proof is, of course, something entirely different. It may be observed here that, as a general rule, the right to fish in any waters gives no rights in the adjoining lands. Cortelyou v. Van Brundt, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 357; Ball v. Herbert, 3 T. R. 256; Bickel v. Polk, 5 Harr. (Del.) 325; Locke v. Motley, 2 Gray (Mass.), 265. See Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & Ald. 268; Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill (Md.), 430. The State government has the right to regulate fisheries and oyster beds within the territorial limits of the State. Boggs v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 989; Smith v. State of Maryland, 18 How. 71. See McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 394; Doughty v. Conover, 42 N. J. Law, 193. Oysters are considered to be fish,—Caswell v. Johnson, 58 Me. 166—and parties planting them will be protected. McCarty v. Holman, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 53. The right of fishery in navigable waters and arms of the sea is presumptively free,—Trustees of Brookhaven v. Strong, 60 N. Y. 56—though it may become exclusive by grant or prescription.

² Coke Litt. 46.

the soile shall not passe." Where the right to the soil and the herbage are in the same person, the recovery of the one in ejectment would carry the other with it; but that the owner of the separate herbage or pasturage rights would now be permitted to maintain ejectment may well be doubted. In an early case in the King's Bench, often cited, it was held that ejectione firmæ would lie for the pasturage of one hundred sheep,¹ but it does not appear from the report what the interest of the plaintiff in the soil was, and the question may have been only that of the proper description of the subject of the action; and in a later case in the Exchequer,² where ejectione firmæ was brought upon a demise de herbagio et pannagio of so many acres, the court stated as a reason for inclining against the plaintiff, that "herbage does not include all the profit of the soil, but only a part of it," referring to the passage from Coke above cited.³ In Ward v. Petifer, and in Parker v. Staniland, in the King's Bench,⁴ it was said that ejectment would lie for the first crop growing upon land, but in the second case the remark was entirely obiter, while in the first it was not needed for the actual decision of the question presented to the court, for the jury were told that if they believed that the plaintiffs had only the first crop (and not the entire profits through the year), they should return a special verdict to that effect "and leave it to the law whether an ejectment lies in this manner." The case is chiefly remarkable for containing a suggestion, similar to that above noted as having been advanced with regard to fisheries, that the owner of the first crop will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be the owner of the

¹ Anon. 2 B. & Dal. 95.

² Wheeler v. Toulson, Hardres, 330.

³ English cases turning on the meaning of the word "tenement" in statutes relating to the settlement of paupers, though sometimes cited in connection with ejectment, have really no bearing upon it whatever. These statutes have been very liberally construed, the judges going so far in one case as to hold the renting of cows to create a "tenement"—an interest which obviously could not support an action to try title to land. See Williams' Right of Common, pp. 81, 82, 83; The King v. Inhabitants of Whixley, 1 T. R. 137; The King v. Inhabitants of Hollington, 3 East, 114; but compare Lonsdale v. Rigg, 11 Exch. 654; aff'd 1 H. & N. 923.

⁴ Ward v. Petifer, Cro. Car. 362. See Parker v. Staniland, 11 East, 362, 366; Dorsey on Ejectment, p. 17; Cook v. Gerrard, 1 Saund. 186.

freehold. These decisions certainly cannot be regarded as sufficient to uphold ejectment for herbage or pasturage, when separated from the general ownership of the soil, and existing as a mere right to the profits of the land. Pannage, or the right to gather mast, which, in the nature of the interest, cannot be distinguished from pasturage or herbage, has been held insufficient to support ejectment.¹ The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided² that the grantee of the "herbage or feeding" of land cannot maintain a writ of entry, and this decision, it seems to us, should be regarded as an authority in any State in which the action of ejectment prevails.

§ 144. Church property.—When ejectment was first introduced it was held that a church or chapel could not be recovered in the action, because it was not a temporal inheritance and not demisable, but was res sacra. This doctrine was soon exploded and the practice of demanding and recovering church property as messuages was introduced.³ Ejectment for a church ground has been upheld.⁴ With us, church property being held by religious corporations which, like other corporations, may maintain and defend actions for the possession of their real property, the early cases and practice have ceased to be of any practical importance.⁵

§ 145. Common appendant and tithes.—In England ejectment has been sustained for common appendant and appurtenant⁶ and for tithes.⁷ These decisions are of little value with us.

¹ Pemble v. Sterne, 1 Lev. 213.

² Rehoboth v. Hunt, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 224.

³ Hillingsworth v. Brewster, Salk. 256; Thyn v. Thyn, Style, 101; Harpur's Case, 11 Rep. 256 (6 Coke, 45).

⁴ City of Hannibal v. Draper, 15 Mo. 634.

⁵ See article entitled "Property Relations of Religious Societies," 17 Am. Law Rev. p. 186; Van Deuzen v. Trustees, &c., 4 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 465.

⁶ Black v. Hepburne, 2 Yeates (Pa.), 331; Mellington v. Goodtitle, Andrews, 107; Newman v. Holdmyfast, 1 Strange, 54.

⁷ 2 Wms. Saund. 304, n. 12; Camell v. Clavering, 2 Ld. Raymond, 789.

CHAPTER IV.

INTERESTS NOT RECOVERABLE IN EJECTMENT.

| | |
|---|--|
| § 146. Not maintainable for incorporeal hereditaments. 147. Remedies affecting incorporeal rights. 148. Interests not recoverable in ejectment. 149. Water-courses and overflowed lands. 150. Mining rights and privileges. 151. Shore lines. 152. Ferry right or franchise. | § 153. Wharfage. 154. Cloud on title. 155. Room or chamber.—Effect of destruction. 156. Projecting eaves or cornices. 157. Projecting foundation. 158. Party-walls. 159. Claim for improvement. 160. Rent reserved. 161. Claim of easement. |
|---|--|

§ 146. Not maintainable for incorporeal hereditaments.—Ejectment is not maintainable for incorporeal hereditaments,¹ which consist of rights and profits issuing out of and annexed to real property, such as rights of way, of common, etc.,² nor can a writ of entry be supported where the demandant possesses no higher interest in the soil than a mere easement,³ because there can be no seizin of an incorporeal hereditament; no ouster can be committed with reference to such an interest: it cannot be delivered in execution by the sheriff, and is not subject to entry. The right to enjoy an easement cannot be vindicated in this action because an easement “lyeth in grant and not in livery;” the owner, as we have said, cannot be disseized or evicted from it, and is not vested with the title to the soil.⁴ There cannot be actual dispossession for the subject itself

¹ Den d. Farley v. Craig, 15 N. J. L. 191; Black v. Hepburne, 2 Yeates (Penn.), 331; Wilclow v. Lane, 37 Barbour (N. Y.), 244; Caldwell v. Fulton, 31 Penn. St. 475; Clement v. Youngman, 40 Penn. St. 341; Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232; Union Canal Co. v. Young, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 410; s. c. 30 Am. Dec. 212, and note. See Smith v. Wiggin, 48 N. H. 105; Le Fevre v. Le Fevre, 4 S. & R. (Penn.) 243. See § 527.

² See Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 421; Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 330; Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 284; Canfield v. Ford, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 340.

³ Provident Institution v. Burnham, 128 Mass. 458; see Proprietors of Locks, &c. v. Nashua & L. R. R. Co., 104 Mass. 1.

⁴ Judd v. Leonard, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 204; Wood v. Truckee Turnpike Co., 24 Cal. 474; Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 B. & C. 221; Northern Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 355.

is neither capable of actual bodily possession nor dispossession.¹ Thus the action cannot be sustained to recover, as an easement to a mill, the right to use a wharf along a canal basin, for the purpose of loading and unloading boats carrying wheat to and from the mill of the claimant adjoining the wharf, which right the claimant had occasionally used or exercised in common with a similar right in others.²

§ 147. Remedies affecting incorporeal rights.—The right to the fee and the right to an easement in the same estate are, as we have seen, rights independent of each other;³ the easement or servitude not being an estate in land.⁴ The most effective remedy for an interruption of the enjoyment of an incorporeal right is by action of trespass on the case rather than a simple action of trespass,⁵ though an action of nuisance is sometimes brought or an injunction procured in appropriate cases.⁶

§ 148. Interests not recoverable in ejectment.—Ejectment does not lie for a mere profit a prendre, as pannage,⁷ nor for rent,⁸ nor for a privilege of a landing-place held in common with other citizens of a town.⁹ The right to the use of an alley adjacent to the land in controversy cannot be recovered in ejectment, and the recital of such a right in the judgment is nugatory.¹⁰ Ejectment is not maintainable for

¹ 3 Bla. Com. pp. 169, 170

² Child v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 246.

³ Morgan v. Moore, 3 Gray (Mass.), 319. See § 132.

⁴ Nellis v. Munson, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 575; San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 585; First Baptist Society v. Grant, 59 Me. 245; See Union House v. Rowell, 66 Me. 400; Snyder v. Warford, 11 Mo. 513; Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 B. & C. 221. A license unlike an easement is not an interest in the land, but a mere privilege of going upon it revocable at the will of the owner. Forbes v. Balenseifer, 74 Ill. 185; See Cook v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 40 Iowa, 456; Johnson v. Skillman, 29 Minn. 95. License and grant distinguished. Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 M. & W. 843. See Snyder's Great Opinions by Great Judges, p. 424.

⁵ Allen v. Ormond, 8 East, 4; Cushing v. Adams, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 110; Hastings v. Livermore, 7 Gray (Mass.), 194; Northern Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 355; Seneca Road Co. v. Auburn & R. R. Co., 5 Hill (N. Y.), 170.

⁶ See Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 299.

⁷ Pemble v. Sterne, 1 Lev. 212; S. C. 1 Sid. 416. Compare Huntington v. Asher, 96 N. Y. 604.

⁸ Herbert v. Laughlun, Cro. Car. 492.

⁹ Black v. Hepburne, 2 Yeates (Penn.), 331

¹⁰ Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232. See § 102, and note.

a mere right of way,¹ nor for a right to a road,² nor for setting up a stall in a street,³ nor, in England, for glebe after sequestration,⁴ nor for an advowson,⁵ nor, as was held by Chief Justice Tindal, for a canonry or ecclesiastical office,⁶ nor for a right of common by itself,⁷ nor for a free warren.⁸

§ 149. Water-courses and overflowed lands.—Ejectment cannot be brought against one who merely claims an easement or right to flow land with water, the plaintiff being otherwise in full possession.⁹ Such overflow does not confer possession upon the party causing it, nor does it constitute an ouster of the owner.¹⁰ It has been said, however, in South Carolina, that where one joint tenant overflowed the lands of the joint estate, thereby appropriating it to his own use, it constituted an ouster which would justify an action on the case against him by his companion.¹¹ Ejectment cannot be brought for diverting a water-course.¹² The most effectual remedy for this wrong is by mandatory injunction, which will be granted to compel the restoration of running water to its natural channel,¹³ or to require the lowering of a dam to prevent an overflow.¹⁴ A water-course or rivulet, though mentioned by name, cannot be recovered in ejectment, because it is impossible to give execution of a thing which is transient and always running.¹⁵ But if the

¹ Northern Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 355.

² Wood v. Truckee Turnpike Co., 24 Cal. 474.

³ Doe d. Minister, &c., v. Cowley, 1 C. & P. 123. See The Mayor, &c., v. Ward, 2 Strange, 1238.

⁴ Doe d. Morgan v. Bluck, 3 Camp. 447.

⁵ Adams on Eject. p. 18.

⁶ Doe d. Butcher v. Musgrave, 1 Scott N. R. 451.

⁷ Barton v. Hamshire, 3 Keb. 738; s. c. Freeman, 447.

⁸ Tremain v. Sands, 1 Keb. 500.

⁹ Wilklow v. Lane, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 244. See Redfield v. Utica & Syracuse R. Co., 25 Id. 54.

¹⁰ Perrine v. Bergen, 14 N. J. L. 355, 356; Green v. Harman, 4 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 158.

¹¹ Jones v. Weathersbee, 4 Strob. (S. C.) Law, 50.

¹² Black v. Hepburne, 2 Yeates (Penn.), 331.

¹³ Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 191.

¹⁴ Rothery v. New York Rubber Co., 90 N. Y. 32; Hammond v. Fuller, 1 Paige (N. Y.), 197.

¹⁵ Runn. on Eject. p. 131; Challenor v. Thomas, Yelv. 143; Black v. Hepburne, 2 Yeates (Penn.), 331.

ground over which the rivulet runs belongs to the claimant, the rivulet may be recovered by laying the action for so many acres of land covered with water.¹

§ 150. Mining rights and privileges.—It has been held in England, that one who had a mere liberty, license or power to dig, prospect, mine or search for metals or minerals could not maintain ejectment, for such license was no more than a mere right to a personal chattel, and did not confer any interest or estate, and was widely different from a grant or demise of the mines, metals or minerals in the land.² The action will not lie for a mere license to mine,³ nor for a privilege to dig in mines,⁴ nor for the parts of land necessarily occupied by shafts or other mining excavations or erections made and used solely for mining purposes,⁵ nor, possibly for a quarry,⁶ nor a tin bound eo nomine.⁷ “A right or privilege,” says Judge Grier, “to dig and carry ore from the land of another, is an incorporeal hereditament.”⁸ The question whether the soil and minerals or only a mere liberty or privilege pass by a grant, conveyance, or contract, is often one of much difficulty, and a comparison of the cases in which mining rights have been held insufficient to support ejectment, with those before considered, in which the action has been sustained, shows that it generally depends upon the particular facts attending each case, the character of the subject-matter, and the language employed in the instrument by which the transfer is effected.⁹

¹ See Adams on Eject. (4th ed.) p. [*21] 22. As to “Oral License to Flow Land” see 28 Alb. L. J. 144.

² Doe v. Wood, 2 B. & Ald. 724. See Chetham v. Williamson, 4 East, 469-476, per Lord Ellenborough. See Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 362.

³ Crocker v. Fothergill, 2 B. & Ald. 652; see Harlow v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 36 Mich. 105. A license to hunt is an interest in lands within the statute of frauds. Webber v. Lee, 47 L. T. [N. S.] 215; s. c. 26 Alb. L. J. 453.

⁴ Beatty v. Gregory, 17 Iowa, 109; Union Petroleum Co. v. Bliven Petroleum Co., 72 Penn. St. 173. Compare Huntington v. Asher, 96 N. Y. 612.

⁵ Erickson v. Mich. Land & Iron Co., 50 Mich. 610.

⁶ Brown v. Chadwick, 7 Irish C. L. 101.

⁷ Doe d. Falmouth v. Alderson, 1 Gale, 441; s. c. 1 M. & W. 210; s. c. Tyrw. & G. 543.

⁸ Grubb v. Bayard, 2 Wall. Jr. 81; see Grubb v. Grubb, 74 Penn. St. 25.

⁹ See Doe v. Wood, 2 B. & Ald. 724; Muskett v. Hill, 5 Bing. N. C. 694; Chet-

§ 151. Shore lines.—In New Jersey ejectment will not lie to settle shore line divisions, the remedy being in equity.¹ The owner of land along tide water is considered to have an easement in the shore in front of his land, and an inchoate right of appropriating it to his exclusive use. Until reclaimed and inclosed the fee of the shore is in the State, but the adjoining owner will be protected in equity prior to reclamation.

§ 152. Ferry right or franchise.—A ferry right is incorporeal, and, in legal consideration, not tangible property. Like a right of way or common, or other incorporeal right,² no entry in point of fact can, in strict propriety, be said to be possible with regard to it, nor could the sheriff in case of judgment of restitution deliver possession. In such a case an ejectment would not lie; and upon the same principle a warrant of forcible entry would not.³ A ferry is nothing more than a continuation of a road;⁴ “a liberty to have a boat for passage upon a river.”⁵

§ 153. Wharfage.—A demise by a municipal corporation to an individual of the right to collect wharfage conveys an incorporeal right,⁶ and any interference with the enjoyment of such a right must be redressed by some remedy other than ejectment.

§ 154. Cloud on title.—It has been held in a case which arose in New York, that a party holding a tax title covering the locus in quo with other property, but who was not in possession of, and had made no overt claim to, the property in dispute, was not a necessary or proper party defendant in ejectment. A party desiring to quiet the title to ham v. Williamson, 4 East, 469; See Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Penn. St., 229-243, where this distinction is discussed. See §§ 108-113, 116.

¹ Stockham v. Browning, 18 N. J. Eq. 390.

² Patrick v. Ruffners, 2 Robinson (Va.), 209; s. c. 40 Am. Dec. 740.

³ Rees v. Lawless, Litt. Sel. Cases (Ky.), 184; s. c. 12 Am. Dec. 295, and note; The Mayor v. Union Ferry Co., 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 138; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McL. 376; s. c. on appeal, 1 How. 189; State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9.

⁴ See Ferry Co. v. Barker, 2 Exch. 149.

⁵ State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 20.

⁶ Mayor, &c., of N. Y. v. Mabie, 13 N. Y. 151.

land must proceed, in New York, under the statute regulating such proceedings, or by bill in equity; that result cannot be accomplished in ejectment, nor can the alleged cloud upon the title be cleared or foreclosed in that action.¹

§ 155. Room or chamber.—Effect of destruction.—Though, as we have seen, ejectment will lie for a room or portion of a building, yet, if the building is destroyed or torn down by order of the public authorities, and the identity of the room or portion claimed is lost, the lessee's right of entry is gone, for his interest is no longer visible or tangible, nor could it be delivered in execution by the sheriff, and hence ejectment will not lie for it.² But the New

¹ Pixley v. Rockwell, 1 Sheldon (N. Y.), 267. See The Mayor v. North Shore S. I. F. Co., 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 154.

Cloud on title.—Bills filed for the purpose of removing "clouds upon title" are in the nature of bills quia timet. See 11 Cent. L. J. p. 261. Relief in these cases is accorded in conformity with an established exception to the usual rule that the owner of real estate must wait until the title is assailed or his possession disturbed before invoking the protection of the court. Townsend v. The Mayor, 77 N. Y. 545. The task of defining a cloud upon a title is not always free from difficulty. It has been said that "when such claim appears to be valid upon the face of the record, and the defect can only be made to appear by extrinsic evidence, particularly if that evidence depends upon oral testimony to establish it, it presents a case for invoking the aid of a court of equity to remove it as a cloud upon title." Ward v. Dewey, 16 N. Y. 529; s. p. Allen v. City of Buffalo, 39 N. Y. 390; Marsh v. City of Brooklyn, 59 N. Y. 283; Townsend v. The Mayor, 77 N. Y. 545; Moore v. Cord, 14 Wis. 213; 11 Cent. L. J. pp. 262, 263. Chief Justice Field, in stating the test for determining whether a cloud exists upon the title, said: "Would the owner of the property, in an action of ejectment brought by the adverse party, founded upon the deed, be required to offer evidence to defeat a recovery? If such proof would be necessary the cloud would exist; if the proof would be unnecessary no shade would be cast by the presence of the deed. If the action would fall of its own weight, without proof in rebuttal, no occasion could arise for the equitable interposition of the court, as in the case of a deed void upon its face, or which was the result of proceedings void upon their face, requiring no extrinsic evidence to disprove their illegality." Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 133; s. p. Lick v. Ray, 43 Cal. 83; Davidson v. Seegar, 15 Fla. 671; 11 Cent. L. J. pp. 262, 263. The weight of authority seems to be to the effect that equity will not interfere to cancel a deed void upon its face. Cox v. Clift, 2 N. Y. 122; Scott v. Onderdonk, 14 N. Y. 14; Crooke v. Andrews, 40 N. Y. 547; Guest v. City of Brooklyn, 69 N. Y. 513; Florence v. Paschal, 50 Ala. 28; Washburn v. Burnham, 63 N. Y. 134. Contra, Hamilton v. Cummings, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 517; Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59; Sessions v. Jones, 7 Miss. 123. A forged deed may be canceled. Remington Paper Co. v. O'Dougherty, 81 N. Y. 483. The facts which show the apparent validity and actual invalidity of the instrument should be stated in the complaint. Teal v. Collins, 9 Oregon, 89; Wals v. Grosvenor, 31 Wis. 684; Collart v. Fisk, 38 Wis. 243. A suit to remove a cloud upon a title cannot be maintained in a court of equity when the plaintiff has a full, complete, and adequate remedy at law. Greenwalt v. Duncan, 16 Fed. Rep. 35.

² Rowan v. Kelsey, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 484. See, however, s. c. on appeal, 2 Keys (N. Y.), 594. See §§ 105, 106.

York Court of Appeals, if the report of the case of Rowan v. Kelsey on appeal is correct, seem to hold that where the landlord had erected a new and entirely different structure upon the property, not containing rooms corresponding with those previously hired by the lessee of an unexpired term, a recovery in ejectment might nevertheless be had. It is difficult to reconcile this decision with the argument of Hunt, J., who wrote the prevailing opinion, or to understand what could be awarded by the judgment, or of what the sheriff could deliver possession.¹ In another case the lessee of a cellar, after the destruction of the building by fire, refused to surrender possession, and himself constructed a small house over the cellar, which occupied about the space of the room leased by him. The landlord brought ejectment, and recovered judgment, but the case went off chiefly on the point that no title to the land passed by the lease, and that after the destruction of the building by fire the lessee's interest was gone.² The common law rule undoubtedly was to the effect that the destruction of the leased premises by fire did not discharge a covenant to pay rent,³ though the rule seems to have been different where the lease was of a room or portion of a building.⁴ This point is now generally covered by express provisions in the lease, or regulated by statute. A vendee may avoid payment of the purchase money where before delivery of possession the buildings upon the property are destroyed.⁵

§ 156. Projecting eaves or cornices.—Where one of the owners of a party wall places a cornice thereon which pro-

¹ See Rowan v. Kelsey, 2 Keyes (N. Y.), 594.

² Winton v. Cornish, 5 Ohio, 477; Kerr v. Merchant's Exchange Co., 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 316; but see Rowan v. Kelsey, 2 Keyes (N. Y.), 594.

³ Harrington v. Watson, 1 West Coast Rep. 59; Hallett v. Wylie, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 44; Gates v. Green, 4 Paige's Ch. (N. Y.) 355; Izon v. Gorton, 5 Bing. (N. C.) 501.

⁴ Harrington v. Watson, 11 Ore. 143, s. c. 1 West Coast Rep. 59; Graves v. Berdan, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 100; aff'd 26 N. Y. 498; Shawmut Nat. Bank v. Boston, 118 Mass. 128. See McMillan v. Solomon, 42 Ala. 356; Whitaker v. Hawley, 25 Kans. 674; Stockwell v. Hunter, 11 Met. (Mass.) 448; Ainsworth v. Ritt, 38 Cal. 89; Vanderpoel v. Smith, 2 Daly (N. Y.), 135.

⁵ See Smith v. McCluskey, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 610; Aspinwall v. Balch, 4 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 198; Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Balch, 4 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.)

jects slightly over the lot of the adjoining owner, this constitutes an unlawful interference with a right incident to property in possession, for which ejectment will not lie.¹ Of course no one can undermine or overhang another's land without violating his rights.² A leaning wall³ and an overhanging cornice⁴ constitute nuisances which may be abated by action, or by act of the party.⁵ So the branches of a tree which extend over the premises of another may be cut off by him;⁶ but ejectment is not an appropriate remedy to redress such wrongs. If one erect a building, upon the line of his own property, so that the eaves or gutters project over the land of his neighbor, this is not such an encroachment as will sustain ejectment.⁷ These cases proceed upon the theory that the defendant has taken possession of nothing but an open space of air over the material land of plaintiff. The sheriff could not put the plaintiff in possession of that space: an entry could not be made thereon; nor is the thing sought to be recovered attached to the soil.⁸ The proper redress for wrongs of this character has been said to be an action of trespass on the case for the nuisance.⁹

§ 157. Projecting foundation.—On the other hand, where some of the stones of defendant's foundation wall projected eight inches over plaintiff's land, it was held with some hesitation, in Wisconsin, that plaintiff might treat this as a disseizin and maintain ejectment.¹⁰ In Stedman

200. Compare Tabor v. Robinson, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 483.

¹ Vrooman v. Jackson, 6 Hun (N. Y.), 326.

² 2 Bla. Com. p. 18.

³ Meyer v. Metzler, 51 Cal. 142.

⁴ Grove v. City of Fort Wayne, 45 Ind. 429; s. c. 15 Am. Rep. 262.

⁵ The keeping of a bawdy house and a rendezvous for thieves and murderers is a nuisance, but does not justify for its abatement the destruction of the building and furniture by a mob. Ely v. Supervisors of Niagara Co., 36 N. Y. 297. See County of Allegheny v. Gibson, 90 Pa. St. 415. Compare Goldsmith v. Jones, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 415.

⁶ Earl of Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 B. & C. 302-311.

⁷ Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 400; overruling Sherry v. Frecking, 4 Duer (N. Y.), 452.

⁸ Ibid.; also, Jackson v. May, 16 John. (N. Y.) 184.

⁹ Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 400.

¹⁰ McCourt v. Eckstein, 22 Wis. 153. See a novel English case where the defendant, under an agreement with a mortgagor, erected a large street advertise-

v. Smith,¹ the plaintiff and defendant occupied adjacent plots of ground, divided by a wall, of which they were owners in common. There was a shed on defendant's ground, contiguous to the wall, the roof of which rested on the top of the wall across its whole width. Defendant took the coping stones off the top of the wall, heightened the wall, replaced the coping stones on the top, and built a wash-house contiguous to the wall, where the shed had stood, the roof of the wash-house occupying the whole width of the top of the wall; and he let a stone into the wall with an inscription on it stating that the wall and the land on which it stood belonged to him. The action being trespass by one tenant in common against another, in which an actual ouster must be shown, the Court of Queen's Bench held that a jury might find an actual ouster from these facts.

§ 158. Party-walls.—It seems that in England ejectment is a proper remedy for recovering the ownership of land covered by a party-wall.² It was held in Pennsylvania, on the other hand, that actual possession of a party-wall, including the strip of plaintiff's land on which it was built, and excluding the strip of defendant's land over which it extended, could not be recovered in an action of ejectment.³ In New York it is doubtful whether ejectment will lie for land burdened with the servitude of a party-wall;⁴ but in Maine the action has been sustained.⁵ At all events, the only interest the plaintiff could recover would be the fee subject to the easement, and in New York the nature or extent of his interest should be specified in the verdict or finding.⁶ We have already seen that ment on the wall of a house, and the tenant brought ejectment to recover possession of the part of the wall thus occupied, and for mesne profits. The action was sustained, although the defendants contended that they had only an easement or license. Cited in 1 West. Coast Rep. 80.

¹ 8 E. & B. 1.

² Trotter v. Simpson, 5 C. & P. 51.

³ Robinson v. Gunnis, 2 W. N. C. (Penn.) 224.

⁴ Kurkel v. Haley, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 75; Rogers v. Sinsheimer, 50 N. Y. 646; Brondage v. Warner, 2 Hill (N. Y.), 145.

⁵ Bradbury v. Cony, 59 Me. 494.

⁶ Rogers v. Sinsheimer, 50 N. Y. 646. See Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133, Kenniston v. Hannaford, 58 N. H. 28; Cornes v. Minot, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 60; Brady v. Hennion, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 529.

the current of modern authority, in the case of easements of right of way or passage, is strongly in favor of upholding the right to recover in ejectment the land subject to the easement.¹ Where, however, the easement consists in the right to maintain or use a party-wall, although the fee is in the owner of the servient tenement, there is a practical difficulty in the way of putting the claimant in possession of the locus without disturbing the enjoyment of the easement which is somewhat greater than in the case of land over which a mere right of way exists. Indeed, in Bowie v. Brahe,² the court refused to instruct the sheriff to remove so much of the wall of defendant's building as stood upon the strip of land recovered, which was one and seven-eighths inches wide, though the ruling was upon the theory that the sheriff must act on his own responsibility in the execution of process.³

§ 159. Claim for improvement.—In Pennsylvania, the defendant in ejectment proceedings is entitled to compensation in the same action for any improvements erected by him during his unlawful possession; but this claim for improvements is an equitable lien, and cannot be made the subject of an independent ejectment.⁴ The circumstances under which allowances for improvements are made and the rules pertaining to the general subject will be presently considered.

§ 160. Rent reserved.—The right to recover possession of lands for non-payment of rent cannot be enforced by ejectment unless the right of re-entry is reserved.⁵

§ 161. Claim of easement.—It has been held by the New York Supreme Court that ejectment will not lie against a corporation which uses the land in controversy for the purposes of a street only, and asserts no other claim or in-

¹ See §§ 130-132.

² 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 161; s. c. 4 Duer (N. Y.), 676.

³ See Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. v. Babbitt, 74 N. Y. 403; Matter of Steamship "Circassian", 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 500. See § 565.

⁴ Paull's Ex'rs v. Eldred, 29 Penn. St. 415.

⁵ Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. 141. See Van Rensselaer v. Ball, 19 N. Y. 100; Kenege v. Elliott, 9 Watts (Penn.), 258; Johnson v. Gurley, 52 Texas, 222; Vanatta v. Brewer, 32 N. J. Eq. 268; Fox v. Brissac, 15 Cal. 223.

terest than the mere right to enjoy an easement, or right of passage.¹ The principles of this case must, however, be accepted with great caution if indeed the case is not positively wrong in principle.² Undoubtedly the defendant's claim of title must, ordinarily, be such that if reduced to possession or enjoyment it would constitute an actual occupation of the premises, and where only a private right of way is exercised over land, and the existence of the owner's fee in the soil, and his right to the immediate possession and use, subject to the easement, is acknowledged, ejectment is not the proper form of action.³ Although, as we have seen, this rule, on principle, ought to apply in cases where a municipal corporation assumes to treat private property as a street,⁴ the current of authority is, nevertheless, to the effect that a public easement of such a character embraces so many of the elements of absolute ownership that possession of the land over which the easement exists, exclusive of any interference by the owner of the fee, is essential for its proper regulation and enjoyment. We shall presently show that the public easement itself can be made the basis of an ejectment by a municipal corporation, and it would certainly seem strange if proof of the assertion of so important and exclusive an interest upon or over the land by the defendant as the right to maintain a street would not suffice to support an action of ejectment.⁵ It should be clearly understood that the doctrine with regard to ejectment in the case of streets in cities constitutes an exception to the general principles governing the action. In McClinton v. Pittsburg, F. W., &c., Ry. Co.,⁶ the defendant corporation had occupied the

¹ Cowenhoven v. City of Brooklyn, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 9. See §§ 132, 133, 135-140, 158.

² See Carpenter v. Oswego & Syracuse R. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 655; Henderson v. New York Central R. R. Co., 17 Hun (N. Y.), 349, Aff'd 78 N. Y. 423; Troy & B. R. R. Co. v. Boston H. T. & W. Ry. Co., 86 N. Y. 127.

³ Child v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 246; Strong v. City of Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1; Smith v. Wiggin, 48 N. H. 105; Wilklow v. Lane, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 244. See §§ 133, 135, 158.

⁴ See §§ 139, 140.

⁵ See Armstrong v. City of St. Louis, 69 Mo. 309, and cases cited; Strong v. City of Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1.

⁶ 66 Pa. St. 408.

plaintiff's land with a railroad. Agnew, J., said : " Ejectment is the proper remedy in such a case. The owner is not bound to suffer an unlawful intrusion, and afterward fight an unequal battle for compensation. The argument that ejectment will not lie against one using a mere easement does not apply here ; because actual possession has been taken by the trespassing company, by building and fastening its structures upon the soil, and by daily and hourly use of them ; and also because no easement has ever been acquired ; it is simply an unlawful entry upon and taking of the roadbed and using it to the exclusion of the owner. It is not the case of fleeting and occasional footsteps, which print no trace upon the earth."

CHAPTER V.

RELIEF PECULIAR TO EJECTMENT NOT TO BE HAD IN OTHER ACTIONS.

- | | |
|---|--|
| § 162. Character and scope of ejectment. 163. When ejectment, and not a suit to obtain construction of a will, the appropriate remedy. 164. Summary and forcible detainer proceedings not proper where the title is involved. 165. When specific performance cannot be maintained. 166. Partition not a substitute for ejectment. 167. Defect in title or adverse title must be disclosed to defeat partition. 168. Bill in equity to recover possession, when not allowed. 169. Ejectment bills. 170. Ejectment not maintainable in the form of a bill in chancery. 171. Equitable title will not support ejectment bill. 172. Party vested with legal and equitable estate cannot proceed in equity. 173. Jurisdiction in equity when remedy at law is incomplete. 174. Injunction not granted when remedy by ejectment is adequate. | § 175. When mandamus not allowed in aid of judgment in ejectment. 176. Title cannot be tried in assumpsit. 177. Trial of title in condemnation proceedings. 177a. Action for value of land. • 178. Distinction between trespass quare clausum fregit and ejectment. 179. When ejectment and not action to remove cloud on title proper remedy. 179a. Trial of title in foreclosure proceedings. 179b. Trial of title by arbitration. 180. Ejectment converted into action to redeem and foreclose mortgages. 181. Action to determine conflicting claims to land changed by amendment into ejectment. 182. Equitable relief not awarded in ejectment. 183. Writs of entry, and forcible entry proceedings, changed by amendment to ejectment. 184. Reasons for mistakes in selecting remedies. 184a. Issues that cannot be determined in ejectment. |
|---|--|

§ 162. Character and scope of ejectment.—The selection of the remedy appropriate to the character of the injury to real property for which redress is sought, is often a difficult and delicate task. The fundamental rule that ejectment can be maintained only for corporeal estates or interests has already been fully considered, and should never be overlooked. The cases in which the relief peculiar to ejectment has been refused in other actions¹ or forms of procedure will now be discussed. A review of these cases, and of the reasons upon which the decisions are based, will illustrate more clearly the character of ejectment, and its statutory substitutes, and show the extent to which the remedy is favored by the courts.

¹ See Crane v. Randolph, 30 Ark. 579.

§ 163. When ejectment, and not a suit to obtain construction of a will, the appropriate remedy.—In Post v. Hover,¹ the New York Court of Appeals held that the heirs at law of a testator did not possess the right to institute a suit to settle the construction of a will; that if the provisions of the instrument are void, the proper remedy of the heirs is to bring a direct action, in the nature of ejectment, to recover the shares to which they claim to be entitled. This case follows the opinion of Chancellor Walworth in Bowers v. Smith,² which holds that an heir at law of a testator, or a devisee who claims a mere legal estate in real property, unconnected with any trust, will not be allowed to come into a court of equity merely for the purpose of obtaining a judicial construction of the provisions of a will. The decision of such legal questions belongs exclusively to courts of law, unless they arise incidentally in a court of equity in the exercise of its legitimate powers, as where trustees seek instructions or directions as to the proper execution of the trust. In Bailey v. Briggs,³ the action was brought to obtain the judicial construction of a clause in a will devising real estate. The complaint averred an interest in the lands; set forth the will under which the interest was claimed; stated that some of the defendants claimed an estate in the same land under the same will, and that a diversity of opinion existed between the plaintiff and the defendants in relation to the construction of the devise, and the testator's intention in respect to it, and concluded with a prayer for the construction of the will, and for a judgment declaring the plaintiff to be vested with the fee of the land. The court held that the complaint did not state facts conferring jurisdiction upon a court of equity to entertain the case as one asking for the construction of a will. Folger, J., said: "It is when the court is moved in behalf of an executor, trustee or cestui que trust, and to ensure a correct administration of the power conferred by a will, that jurisdiction is had to give a construction to a doubtful or disputed clause in a will. The jurisdiction is incidental to that over trusts. There is nothing of that sort here. The title and possession of the plaintiff is purely a legal one. The title of the defendants, if they have any, is of the same kind. There is no trust to be enforced, nor a trustee to be directed."

¹ 33 N. Y. 593-602; Aff'd s. c. 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 312; s. p. Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 221.

² 10 Paige's Ch. (N. Y.) 193.

³ 56 N. Y. 407. See Weed v. Root, 14 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 90; Pomeroy's Eq. Jur., § 1156; Sellers v. Sellers, 35 Ala. 235; Whitman v. Fisher, 74 Ill. 147; Youmans v. Youmans, 26 N. J. Eq. 149; Clay v. Gurley, 62 Ala. 14; Devereux v. Devereux, 81 N. C. 12; Appeal of Schaeffner, 41 Wis. 260.

§ 164. Summary and forcible detainer proceedings not proper where the title is involved.—In a comparatively recent case decided in the Supreme Court of Georgia, it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate had formerly owned the premises, and had resided on them with the defendant; that she died leaving the defendant in possession, and that her administrator sued out summary proceedings to dispossess him. The defendant set up that he had been lawfully married to the plaintiff's intestate, and claimed to hold as her heir. The court decided that the proper method of settling this question of title, which involved the validity of the marriage, was an action of ejectment, and not summary proceedings.¹ The purchaser at a tax sale must assert his right to possession by action of ejectment and cannot resort to summary proceedings.² So the validity of a title cannot be tried in forcible detainer proceedings,³ or on a motion.⁴ We may observe that where a statute gives a person unlawfully in possession a right of action for a forcible entry by the true owner that remedy is exclusive, and he cannot maintain trespass for damages caused by such entry.⁵

§ 165. When specific performance cannot be maintained.—In

¹ Cassidy v. Clark, 62 Ga. 412.

² Sperling v. Isaacs, 28 N. Y. Daily Reg. (July 14, 1885), 81.

³ Wheelan v. Fish, 2 Bradw. (Ill.) 447.

⁴ Copeland v. Piedmont and A. Life Ins. Co., 17 S. C. 116. Compare Jordan v. Poillon, 77 N. Y. 518; Lockman v. Reilley, 10 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 351; Doe v. Turner v. Gee, 9 Dowl. 612.

⁵ Canavan v. Gray, 64 Cal. 5; s. c. 22 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 718, and note.

Jones v. Boyd,¹ in the Supreme Court of North Carolina, the vendor of real property, before the last installment of the purchase money was due, brought a suit for specific performance against a vendee in possession, who had defaulted in some of the installments of the purchase money. It was decided that the remedy was prematurely sought, and ancillary relief in the action was denied, the court saying, however, that the vendor could have maintained ejectment, and protected the property from waste or destruction by any appropriate provisional remedy.

§ 166. Partition not a substitute for ejectment.—The Court of Appeals of New York have decided that an action for partition cannot be made a substitute for the remedy of ejectment, or other action to establish the legal title of adverse claimants to real property. The title of the parties should be first established by a proper action before partition proceedings are instituted.² The complaint should allege possession in the plaintiff.³ The doctrine of these cases commends itself as sound; the right to partition is based upon a common and not a disputed title or ownership, and the remedy of partition is not adapted to the trial of questions of title.⁴ The same rule of procedure prevails in other States.⁵ A partition under the established chancery practice system “does not deal with or decide questions of controverted title. Its purpose is to make division among the parties before the court, of real estate in which they had interests or estates that were not

¹ 80 N. C. 258.

² Van Schuyver v. Mulford, 59 N. Y. 426; Florence v. Hopkins, 46 N. Y. 182. Under the New York Code of Civil Procedure, § 1543, questions of title in certain cases, may now be determined in partition proceedings. Knapp v. Burton, 7 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 448.

³ Farris v. Hayes, 9 Oregon, 86. See Bradley v. Harkness, 26 Cal. 69.

⁴ Sullivan v. Sullivan, 66 N. Y. 37.

⁵ Longwell v. Bentley, 2 Phila. (Penn.) 157 [284]; Thomas v. Garvan, 4 Dev. Law (N. C.), 223; Jenkins v. Van Schaak, 3 Paige (N. Y.), 243; Longwell v. Bentley, 3 Grant's Cases (Penn.), 177; Adam v. Ames Iron Co., 24 Conn. 230; O'Dougherty v. Aldrich, 5 Denio (N. Y.), 385; Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cowen (N. Y.), 530; Bonner v. Propr's Kennebeck Purchase, 7 Mass. 475; Albergottie v. Chaplin, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 428; Forder v. Davis, 38 Mo. 107; Gravier v. Ivory, 34 Mo. 522; McMasters v. Carothers, 1 Penn. St. 324; Conyers v. Davis, 11 R. I. 527; Currin v. Spraul, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 145; Daniel v. Green, 42 Ill. 471; Hoffman v. Beard, 22 Mich. 59; Hassam v. Day, 39 Miss. 392; Shearer v. Winston, 33 Miss. 149. As to receivership for tenants in common, see § 621a.

in controversy as among themselves.”¹ It has been said, however, in Wallace v. Harris,² that the reason for remitting the investigation of conflicting questions of title to a common law court was one of policy and fitness, and did not arise from any want of inherent power in a court of equity; and where the title had been adjudicated in an action of partition the judgment should be allowed to stand, especially if the specific objection to the investigation had been waived by a failure to urge it in the court of original jurisdiction.

§ 167. Defect in title or adverse title must be disclosed to defeat partition.—But the jurisdiction of equity to make partition of lands cannot be defeated by the simple allegation that defendant holds adverse possession, when, in point of fact he does not, for if this were allowed equity could be defeated at any time, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, by false allegations in the answer.³ An answer which denies “that the rights, shares, and interests of the parties hereto are correctly alleged in the complaint” is a nullity.⁴ If the defendant sets up an adverse title, or disputes the complainant’s title, he must discover his own title or show wherein the complainant’s title is defective. And when the titles are spread before the court upon the pleadings, if the court can see that there is no valid legal objection to the complainant’s title it may proceed to decree partition.⁵

And where heirs at law brought partition against the widow and other heirs, and the defendants set up an old deed made by plaintiff’s ancestor to a third person without connecting themselves with it, this was held to be no defense.⁶

§ 168. Bill in equity to recover possession, when not allowed.

¹ Gay v. Parpart, 106 U. S. 689. See Lessee of McCall v. Carpenter, 18 How. 302.

² 32 Mich. 380-390.

³ Hudson v. Putney, 14 W. Va. 561.

⁴ Nolan v. Skelly, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 102.

⁵ Lucas v. King, 10 N. J. Eq. 277; Overton v. Woolfolk, 6 Dana (Ky.), 371.

⁶ Knolls v. Barnhart, 71 N. Y. 474.

—In the case of Cavedo v. Billings,¹ in the Supreme Court of Florida, it was decided that a bill in equity to recover the possession of lands claimed under a legal title, and for mesne profits, and to set aside certain tax deeds and certificates as illegal and fraudulent, could not be entertained, as the remedy at law was full and adequate. The proper redress was held to be an action of ejectment, in which the illegal and fraudulent character of the deeds or muniments of title could be shown, and the entire relief sought in the bill secured.

§ 169. Ejectment bills.—Attempts have frequently been made to obtain the relief peculiar to ejectment by means of a bill in equity commonly called an ejectment bill. Such a pleading is demurrable, for the proper redress is at law.² This is especially so if, upon the face of the bill, the plaintiff's right to draw a declaration in ejectment is clear. The same principle applies where a party attempts to maintain a bill in cases where a writ of entry would lie.³ And a court of equity has no jurisdiction to entertain a bill in equity, brought by one tenant in common against an alleged co-tenant, to obtain the possession and enjoyment of mining rights and privileges, founded on a legal title, until those rights have been established at law.⁴ So a widow cannot maintain a bill to determine who are the legal heirs of her husband, and asking to be put into possession if she establishes title as sole heir.⁵ Under our modern Code practice, however, as we shall presently see, legal and equitable relief may, in some States, be had in the same action.⁶ Thus, in New York, it has been held to be settled practice to allow a plaintiff in an action to recover real ¹ 16 Fla. 261. See Haythorn v. Margerem, 7 N. J. Eq. 324; Lee v. Simpson, 29 Wis. 333; Gray v. Tyler, 40 Wis. 579; Peyton v. Rose, 41 Mo. 257.

² Loker v. Rolle, 3 Ves. Jr. 4, and note; Renison v. Ashley, 2 Ib. 459-461. See Tillmes v. Marsh, 67 Penn St. 507, per Sharswood, J.; Young v. Porter, 3 Woods C. C. 342; Phipps v. Kent, 1 Chester Co. Rep. (Pa.) 158; Hecht v. Colquhoun, 57 Md. 563. Compare Fox's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 385.

³ Swamscott Machine Co. v. Perry, 119 Mass. 123, and cases cited.

⁴ North Penn. Coal Co. v. Snowden, 42 Penn. St. 488; Frisbee's Appeal, 88 Penn. St. 144.

⁵ Jones v. Fox, 20 W. Va. 370.

⁶ Lattin v. McCarty, 41 N. Y. 107; Broiestedt v. South Side R. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 220; Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 378; Phillips v. Gorham, 17 N. Y. 270. See McTeague v. Coulter, 6 J. & S. (N. Y.) 208. See § 639.

property, claiming under a defective deed, and showing sufficient grounds for its reformation, to secure the same relief as if he had brought two actions: one to reform the instrument, the other to enforce it as reformed.¹

So, also, it is settled law in Tennessee that an adverse claimant of land out of possession, although he may bring an action of ejectment for the land, may also go into equity and file a bill to remove the deeds which may stand in his way as clouds on his title; and the courts having jurisdiction for that purpose will, having canceled the deeds, put the complainant in possession.² This doctrine is the result of judicial legislation.³

The method of procedure, by means of which possible shadows and encumbrances upon a title are judicially annulled, and the possession also restored to the owner, possesses advantages over the remedy of ejectment; it is more logical and effectual in its results, removing the apparent sources of contention and the embarrassments incident to mistaken litigation, and dissipating the clouds that hang over the title.

§ 170. Ejectment not maintainable in the form of a bill in chancery.—In Lewis v. Cocks,⁴ the Supreme Court of the United States decided that an action of ejectment could not be maintained in the form of a bill in Chancery.⁵ This principle in English equity jurisprudence was declared to be as old as the earliest period in its recorded history.⁶ And though the objection was not made by demurrer, plea, or answer, nor was it suggested by counsel, nevertheless,

¹ Laub v. Buckmiller, 17 N. Y. 626. Where the bill, in addition to the general demand for relief contained a prayer that a deed be set aside, it was held that merely because of a prayer, that defendant be decreed to give the complainant possession of the land, the bill should not be treated as a bill for possession, nor dismissed on the ground that ejectment was the proper remedy. Miller v. Jamison, 24 N. J. Eq. 41.

² Johnson v. Cooper, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 524; Jones v. Perry, 10 Id. 59; Almony v. Hicks, 3 Head (Tenn.), 39; Anderson v. Talbot, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 407; Williams v. Talliaferro, 1 Coldw. 39; Steinkuhl v. York, 2 Flippin, 376-378.

³ Hickman v. Cooke, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 640.

⁴ 23 Wall. 466. But see Almony v. Hicks, 3 Head (Tenn.), 39; Irvine v. McRee, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 554.

⁵ S. P. Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485. Compare case of Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503; Hall v. Greenly, 1 Del. Ch. 274; Peyton v. Rose, 41 Mo. 257.

⁶ Spence's Jurisdiction of Courts of Chancery, 408, note b; Ib. 420, note a.

if it clearly existed, it was the duty of the court sua sponte to recognize it, and give it effect.¹ In such cases the adverse party has a constitutional and common law right to a trial by jury, of which he will not be deprived in cases where the redress at law is complete.² Furthermore questions affecting the title can be better tried at law than in equity, and if it is desired to have any rulings of the court below brought to the Supreme Court for review, such questions can be more effectually presented by bills of exception and a writ of error, than by depositions and an appeal in equity.

§ 171. Equitable title will not support ejectment bill.—Young v. Porter,³ decided by Mr. Justice Bradley of the United States Supreme Court, sitting at circuit, was a bill in equity to recover land of which the defendants were in possession. Complainants admitted that they did not have the legal title, and claimed only the equitable title, and this constituted their sole ground for coming into a court of equity. There was no allegation that the defendants had the legal title, nor were any facts stated tending to show that they were affected by the equities set up by complainants, the bill merely charging that defendants had wrongfully possessed themselves of the land, and were cutting timber and committing other waste thereon. The bill was characterized as being a mere ejectment bill, the only pretense for bringing which in a court of equity, was that the complainants could not maintain an action at law. The court, conceding this proposition, held that it did not prove that a suit in equity could be maintained for that purpose. Complainants could not maintain a suit which was the equivalent of an ejectment merely because their title was only an equitable one. In addition, some connection must be shown between the parties; facts proving that defendants had procured the legal title with notice of complainants' equities, or were in some respect guilty of fraud, or want of equity towards complainants, in with-

¹ Ib., citing Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 278.

² Ib.; Tillmes v. Marsh, 67 Penn. St. 507; Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 278.

³ 3 Woods C. C. 342. S. P. Fussell v. Gregg, 113 U. S. 550, and cases cited.

L.H. Johnson.

holding the possession, before relief in equity could be afforded. In Fussell v. Hughes,¹ decided by Justice Matthews of the United States Supreme Court, sitting at circuit, it was held, that a bill could not be maintained for the recovery of possession of land which asserted no equity against the defendants in possession, but alleged that they were in possession of the premises, which in equity belonged to the complainant, and the legal title to which was in the United States. The proper remedy of the complainant, the court said, was to clothe the equity with the legal title, by a proper application to the public officers of the government for a patent, and then to proceed at law to recover the possession.

§ 172. Party vested with legal and equitable estate cannot proceed in equity—waiver.—If the plaintiff holds both the legal and equitable title he can, of course, assert his rights in ejectment, and will not be permitted to resort to equity.² It seems to follow, from a general consideration of the cases, that, where the plaintiff has a remedy at law (ejectment) to determine his title to land, an equitable action to quiet title cannot be supported,³ though the objection to the maintenance of this latter form of action in such a case may, under the Code practice, be waived if not taken by demurrer or answer.⁴

§ 173. Jurisdiction in equity when remedy at law is incomplete.—Romero v. Munos,⁵ decided in the Territorial Court of New Mexico, and recently reported, furnishes a curious contrast to the case of Cavedo v. Billings above cited.⁶ The plaintiff had successfully prosecuted an ejectment against defendant, and the sheriff had placed her in pos-

¹ 8 Fed. Rep. 384; affirmed 113 U. S. 565, note. S. P. Adam v. Briggs Iron Co., 7 Cush. (Mass.) 361. Compare Steam Stone Cutter Co. v. Jones, 13 Fed. Rep. 567. Equity will annul a forged deed though the grantor named in it is out of possession, Bunce v. Gallagher, 5 Blatchf. 481.

² Odle v. Odle, 73 Mo. 289. See Crane v. Randolph, 30 Ark. 579.

³ Gray v. Tyler, 40 Wis. 579.

⁴ Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 235; Culver v. Rodgers, 33 O. S. 537. Where property has been sold under void proceedings the remedy is by ejectment and not by action to set aside the proceedings. Weidersum v. Naumann, 10 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 149.

⁵ 1 New Mexico, 314. See Broiestedt v. South Side R. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 220.

⁶ See § 168.

session of the premises. Subsequently the defendant, in contempt and disregard of the judgment in ejectment, entered upon and took possession of the land, and pulled up and destroyed the complainant's crops planted and growing upon it. Complainant filed a bill praying for an injunction enjoining the defendant from molesting, disturbing, harassing, or driving complainant away from the possession of her lands, and also asking that she be restored to the possession, and secured against future disturbance. The court held that equity obtained jurisdiction where the remedy at law was not plain, adequate, and complete; that it was not always a sufficient reason for denying jurisdiction in equity that there was a remedy at law; and that if the remedy at law failed in some essential quality the aid of equity might be invoked. The complainant had, it was said, pursued her remedy by ejectment, and all that could be accomplished for her in that action had been done; complete execution had been had, and the cause ended. Equity, it was declared, would not leave the complainant to repeat the ejectment, nor remit her to the doubtful redress of a forcible entry proceeding, but on the contrary, as jurisdiction in equity was often exercised to restrain the commission of threatened trespasses, the facts of this case were ample to sustain an injunction. In some of the States, as will be shown presently, an alias writ of possession is awarded to cover cases of this character.¹

§ 174. Injunction not granted when remedy by ejectment is adequate.—Though an injunction is occasionally issued to restrain constantly repeated trespasses, requiring a succession of actions, yet this remedy cannot be resorted to in cases where ejectment would restore the complainant to all his rights.² Hence, where the defendant was a railroad corporation, the court declined to restrain the daily running of its trains, as the injunction would cause great inconvenience to the public, but remitted the complainant to his remedy at law, by ejectment and for mesne profits.

¹ See Chapter XXI.

² Stevens v. Erie Railway Co., 21 N. J. Eq. 259-264. See Deere v. Guest, 1 M. & C. 516. As to the jurisdiction of equity to restrain trespasses, see § 175. When mandamus not allowed in aid of judgment in ejectment.—In ex parte French,¹ it appeared that judgment in ejectment and for mesne profits, aggregating $6,000, was rendered against a number of defendants who were respectively in the separate possession of specific parcels of land. A writ of error was sued out by all the defendants. Two of the defendants, to render it a supersedeas of the judgment, severally gave a bond. The plaintiff applied for a mandamus to have the judgment carried into effect on the ground that if the defendants were entitled to a stay, independently of each other, each must sue out a separate writ of error. The Supreme Court of the United States decided that there was no reason why all the defendants might not join in the writ, and make separate applications when they asked for a stay. But, even if the writ was informal, the remedy was by motion to vacate the writ, and not by mandamus to have the judgment carried into execution.

§ 176. Title cannot be tried in assumpsit.—In Richardson v. Richardson,² recently decided in the Supreme Court of Echelkamp v. Schrader, 45 Mo. 505; Hodges v. Perine, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 516; Weiss v. Jackson Co., 9 Oregon, 470; Bracken v. Preston, 1 Pinney (Wis.), 365; Troy & B. R. Co. v. Boston, H. T. & W. Ry. Co. 86 N. Y. 107; Mayor, &c., v. Groshon, 30 Md. 436; Wagner v. Railway Co., 38 O. S. 32; s. c. 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cases, 380; Livingston v. Livingston, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 497, per Chancellor Kent. See, also, Murphy v. Norton, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 197. A trespasser upon real estate cannot invoke the aid of equity to preserve to him the fruit of his wrong, by restraining the party who was in possession from resuming the lawful occupation of which he had been deprived by the trespasser. Littlejohn v. Attrill, 94 N. Y. 619. In Lacustrine Fertilizer Co. v. Lake G. & F. Co., 82 N. Y. 476-486, the court say: "We do not understand that it is indispensably necessary, under our present blended system of procedure, that in case of a disputed title to land, the title must be determined by a legal action before the court will interfere by injunction to restrain alleged trespasses by one of the parties." Citing Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 191; West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 703; Broiestedt v. South Side R. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 220. It is pertinent to note here that trespass will be enjoined where its frequency makes it equivalent to a nuisance. An injunction is often granted to restrain nuisances, but is rarely allowed for mere simple trespass. This difference grows out of the fact that a nuisance is ordinarily continuous, while a trespass commonly consists of a single act. For a discussion of the subject of injunctions against trespass see Jerome v. Ross, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 315; s. c. 11 Am. Dec. 498, and notes. This was the last decision rendered by Chancellor Kent. See § 622.

¹ 100 U. S. 1. See Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 390.

² 72 Me. 403. See Bigelow v. Jones, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 161; Munroe v. Luke, 1 Met. (Mass.) 459-465; Miller v. Miller, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 133; Baker v. Howell, 6 S. & R. (Penn.) 476; Sadler v. Evans (Lady Windsor's Case), 4 Burr. 1985; Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 196, and cases cited; Bockes v. Lansing, 74 N. Y. 437; Van Alstine v. McCarty, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 326.

Maine, the principle is reaffirmed, that where the relation of tenants in common is claimed to exist, and one tenant has evicted his companion, the disseizee cannot maintain assumpsit against the disseizor for rents claimed to have accrued during the period of the disseizin. Possession under an adverse claim of title negatives the idea of a promise to pay rent. The disseizor is a wrong-doer against whom a writ of entry or trespass for mesne profits in proper cases will lie, but the disseizee does not have the freehold or possession, on which he must rely in order to prove a promise to pay rent to him. The disseizor is a trespasser and cannot be treated as a tenant. The tort cannot be waived for the purpose of trying title to land in an action of assumpsit, the general rule being that the right of inheritance, or questions of conflicting titles, must be settled in appropriate actions devised for that purpose.

§ 177. Trial of title in condemnation proceedings.—It has been held, in the Supreme Court of California, that conflicting titles to land cannot be tried in condemnation proceedings, and that the parties in actual possession, claiming title, are presumed to be the owners of the land, and are entitled to compensation before the lands can be taken for public use.¹ This subject, however, is largely regulated by statute, or by the varying practice of the courts in the different States.² We may note that the recovery of a judgment in trespass or ejectment, and the payment of the mesne profits or damages does not operate to pass the title. The damages paid are not compensation for the land, but for the injuries up to the time of bringing suit.³

§ 177a. Action for value of land.—It may be observed that the unlawful or wrongful use of land, against the will of the owner, but under such circumstances as not to estop or prevent him from recovering possession, will not en-

¹ Sacramento Valley R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 7 Cal. 577. See Wilcox v. City of Oakland, 49 Cal. 29; Curran v. Shattuck, 24 Cal. 427.

² See Mills on Eminent Domain, § 160, and succeeding sections. Also §§ 88, 90, 141.

³ See Hartz v. St. Paul & S. C. R. R., 21 Minn. 361.

title the owner while the title remains in him to maintain an action to recover a judgment for the value of the land, or for a sale of the same to pay the judgment.¹

§ 178. Distinction between trespass quare clausum fregit and ejectment.—The distinction between trespass and ejectment has already been noticed, and it seems to be clearly established that trespass quare clausum fregit cannot be employed as a substitute for ejectment.² The injury to support an ejectment must be something more than a trespass; it must amount to a disseizin.

§ 179. When ejectment and not action to remove cloud on title proper remedy.—In Bockes v. Lansing,³ it appeared that one George Webster, in 1846, made a general assignment of his property, including the lands in dispute, to one Russell, who, in 1847, conveyed the same to Simeon D. Webster. In 1859, George Webster and his wife also executed a conveyance of the same premises to Simeon D. Webster, and plaintiffs claimed to have acquired this title. In 1861, a receiver, appointed in supplementary proceedings instituted by a judgment creditor of George Webster, sold the lands to one Humphrey, through whom the defendants, who were in possession, claimed title. Plaintiffs brought an action to have the receiver's deed set aside and canceled, as being irregular and a cloud upon his title, and for possession and an accounting as to the rents and profits. It was held that the action could not be maintained, as the receiver's sale and deed were subsequent to the conveyance under which plaintiffs claimed, and that only an instrument or proceeding which, on its face, purported to create or convey a title or estate paramount to that of the party seeking relief, or to constitute an apparently prior incumbrance thereon, could be set aside as a cloud upon the title of a plaintiff in possession.⁴ The argument was advanced by counsel that, as all the facts appeared, the court should disregard the form of the

¹ Railroad Co. v. Robbins, 35 O. S. 531.

² Corley v. Pentz, 76 Penn. St. 57. See Jackson v. Pike, 9 Cowen (N. Y.), 69; Potter v. City of New Haven, 35 Conn. 520, 522. See § 93.

³ 13 Hun (N. Y.), 38; aff'd 74 N. Y. 437.

⁴ See Gunderson v. Cook, 33 Wis. 551; and § 154. and note.

pleadings, and adjudge the proper relief; but it was decided that this remedial rule could not be carried to that extent, and that neither the court nor referee had the power to amend the complaint so as to change the cause of action from one for equitable relief to one in ejectment.

§ 179a. Trial of title in foreclosure proceedings.—The doctrine has been laid down though it does not seem to be securely established that adverse claimants cannot be made parties to a foreclosure suit for the purpose of litigating their titles, as no privity exists between such claimants and the mortgagee, and the adverse interests can be in no way affected by the suit.¹ Chancellor Walworth said, in Eagle Fire Co. v. Lent,² that “so far as mere legal rights are concerned, upon a bill of foreclosure, the only proper parties to the suit are the mortgagor and the mortgagee, and those who have acquired rights or interests under them subsequent to the mortgage. And the mortgagee has no right to make one who claims adversely to the title of the mortgagor, and prior to the mortgage, a party defendant, for the purpose of trying the validity of his adverse claim of title in this court.”³ This doctrine is reiterated by Mr. Justice Swayne, who said: “It is well settled that in a foreclosure proceeding the complainant cannot make a person who claims adversely to both the mortgagor and mortgagee a party, and litigate and settle his rights in that case.”⁴ A second mortgagee may, however, intervene and set up the statute of limitations; and judgment creditors may also come in and contest the validity of the mortgage.⁵

§ 179b. Trial of title by arbitration.—An ejectment suit may be submitted to arbitration,⁶ and so may controver-

¹ Jones on Mortgages, § 1440; Broome v. Beers, 6 Conn. 207; Palmer v. Mead, 7 Conn. 149.

² 6 Paige (N. Y.), 637, followed in Corning v. Smith, 6 N. Y. 84.

³ See, also, Lange v. Jones, 5 Leigh (Va.), 192; Stuart v. Coalter, 4 Rand. (Va.) 74; Frelinghuysen v. Colden, 4 Paige (N. Y.), 203; Holcomb v. Holcomb, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 23.

⁴ Dial v. Reynolds, 96 U. S. 340; s. p. Hill v. Meeker, 23 Conn. 594; Chapin v. Walker, 2 McCra. 175.

⁵ 2 Jones on Mortgages, § 1441. Examine especially, De Wolf v. Sprague Mfg. Co., 49 Conn. 305; Frink v. Branch, 16 Conn. 260.

⁶ McCracken v. Clarke, 31 Penn. St. 498; Austin v. Snow, 2 Dallas, 157.

sies concerning boundary lines.¹ Both in England² and in the United States,³ many cases may be found sustaining the validity of submissions of real property controversies to arbitration. In New York no submission to arbitration shall be made "where the controversy arises respecting a claim to an estate in real property, in fee or for life."⁴ An attempted arbitration made in defiance of the statute is considered to be absolutely void and incapable of ratification;⁵ but the statute is considered to relate only to the legal title, and hence it is held that a claim to an equitable estate in lands may be the subject of arbitration,⁶ aside from the statute. An award, it seems, does not actually pass the title to land,⁷ though it may operate by way of estoppel, and may be used to sustain an action of ejectment.⁸

§ 180. Ejectment converted into action to redeem and foreclose mortgages.—The suggestion in Bockes v. Lansing, ante, was not unprecedented, for in the case of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church against the Oliver Street Baptist Church,⁹ an action of ejectment was brought against a mortgagee in possession, but by the answer, supplemental pleadings and subsequent proceedings, the title was admitted to be in the plaintiff, and the action was substantially turned into an action on the part of the plaintiff to redeem from the mortgages, and on the part of the defendant to foreclose them. In North Carolina ejectment was converted into a foreclosure suit;¹⁰ and in Kan-

¹ Page v. Foster, 7 N. H. 392; Jones v. Boston Mill Corp., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 148; Stout v. Woodward, 5 Hun (N. Y.), 340, aff'd, 71 N. Y. 590.

² Hunter v. Rice, 15 East, 100; Downs v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. 256; Doe v. Rosser, 3 East, 15.

³ Carey v. Wilcox, 6 N. H. 177; Jones v. Boston Mill Corp., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 507; Blair v. Wallace, 21 Cal. 317; Penniman v. Rodman, 13 Met. (Mass.) 382; Page v. Foster, 7 N. H. 392.

⁴ See N. Y. Code Civil Procedure, § 2365.

⁵ Wiles v. Peck, 26 N. Y. 42.

⁶ Ofcott v. Wood, 14 N. Y. 32, aff'g, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 644.

⁷ Sellick v. Addams, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 197; Jackson v. Gager, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 383; Shelton v. Alcox, 11 Conn. 240; Girdler v. Carter, 47 N. H. 305.

⁸ Sellick v. Addams, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 197.

⁹ 73 N. Y. 82-95.

¹⁰ Robinson v. Willoughby, 67 N. C. 84.

as a suit for specific performance was amended so as to become an action to quiet title.¹

§ 181. Action to determine conflicting claims to land changed by amendment into ejectment.—In Brown v. Leigh,² in the New York Court of Appeals, it was decided that a plaintiff could, as a matter of right, under the practice in that State, amend his complaint, which was framed to compel the determination of conflicting claims to real property, so as to set forth a cause of action in ejectment. The power to amend from purely equitable relief to ejectment has been denied in the same court.³ It has also been held that a suit brought to cancel, as fraudulent, a conveyance by the debtor to his wife could not result in a judgment for an interest in the land acquired by the husband upon the death of his wife pending the action.⁴

§ 182. Equitable relief not awarded in ejectment.—In Vrooman v. Jackson,⁵ in the New York Supreme Court, on the other hand, it was decided, that where the complaint was ejectment, the plaintiff could not be allowed to amend upon the trial and proceed with the same effect as though the action had been brought to restrain an alleged unlawful interference with a right incident to property in possession.

§ 183. Writs of entry, and forcible entry proceedings, changed by amendment to ejectment.—In Fay v. Taft,⁶ decided in the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, it appeared that the demandant was entitled to a legal estate in the premises, but only for a term for years. As the estate was less than a freehold, it was held that a writ of entry would not lie. Leave was granted to amend the writ by changing it into an action of ejectment for a term. The later case of *Merrill v. Bullock*⁷ was a proceeding under the forcible

¹ Newell v. Newell, 14 Kans. 202.

² 49 N. Y. 78.

³ Bockes v. Lansing, 74 N. Y. 442.

⁴ Curtis v. Fox, 47 N. Y. 299.

⁵ 6 Hun (N. Y.), 326. See Broiestedt v. South Side R. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 220.

⁶ 12 Cush. (Mass.) 448. See Merrill v. Bullock, 105 Mass. 486.

⁷ 105 Mass. 486. See Ferguson v. Kumler, 25 Minn. 183.

entry and detainer statutes of Massachusetts,¹ and was submitted upon an agreed state of facts. It was decided that, as a cause of action under these statutes, the court had no jurisdiction of the proceeding, but upon the authority of Fay v. Taft, above cited, the plaintiff was allowed to change the writ into an action of ejectment, and to recover the term to which, by the agreed state of facts, he was held to be entitled.

§ 184. Reasons for mistakes in selecting remedies.—It is, perhaps, unnecessary to further multiply this collection of blunders in the selection of the forms of action suitable to test the title to land. Radical changes, such as have been adopted to secure the modern system of civil procedure, are certain to result, at first, in confusion and mistakes in pleading, both in stating causes of action and framing prayers for relief. These errors result in part from the habit of ignoring the landmarks between legal and equitable rights and interests, and overlooking the importance of substantially preserving the ancient and necessary distinctions as to the manner of pleading and asserting equitable rights and titles. While it is true that legal and equitable rights can, in many States, be adjudicated in the same forum and in one action,² it by no means results that the distinctions in pleading and in the nature of the relief afforded have been abrogated. No infallible rules can be formulated to govern in selecting the appropriate remedy. We suggest, in addition to the tests already furnished, that when the facts render the selection of the form of action doubtful, and when the title to a corporeal estate in land is involved, it is safer to adopt a remedy in the nature of ejectment, in preference to other less comprehensive and less favored forms of procedure.

§ 184a. Issues that cannot be determined in ejectment.—Having thus considered many of the authorities which held ejectment to be an exclusive remedy as to certain questions we may very briefly notice a few of the issues that cannot be tried in this action. Thus the question of the forfeiture by a corporation of its right to hold real estate free from taxation by reason of non user can be determined only in a direct proceeding instituted by the public authorities. No such issue can be raised for the first time in ejectment between the corporation and an individual.¹ This may be explained by an extract from the opinion of Mr. Justice Swayne, in National Bank v. Matthews,² who said: "Where a corporation is incompetent by its charter to take a title to real estate, a conveyance to it is not void, but only voidable, and the sovereign alone can object. It is valid until assailed in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose."³

¹ Gen. Stats. of Mass. c. 137.

² See Laub v. Buckmiller, 17 N. Y. 626; Lattin v. McCarty, 41 N. Y. 107; Broiestedt v. South Side R. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 220; Howse v. Moody, 14 Fla. 59. Compare Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 378.

A patent issued by the proper officers for a certain portion of the public domain is conclusive in ejectment.⁴

Ejectment being an action at law, equitable titles will not in the absence of statutory authority sustain a recovery upon the trial. This is especially true in Federal tribunals where the distinction between law and equity remains clearly defined. In the reformed procedure in some States the holder of an equitable title may, as we shall see, assert his rights by answer,⁵ in the nature of a cross bill, and in this way the legal and the equitable titles are examined and compared, the question of ownership worked out, and the appropriate relief extended. In other States and in the Federal tribunals the equitable owner files a bill in equity and enjoins the action at law until the equities are determined. In either case the equitable title is considered practically in equitable proceedings and on equitable proofs, and is not, strictly speaking, determined in the ejectment.

In Illinois where a trustee vested with the legal estate executes a conveyance, the question as to whether or not

¹ Mackall v. Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co., 94 U. S. 308.

² 98 U. S. 628.

³ See Morawetz on Corporations, § 117: Natoma Water & Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 552. See § 195.

⁴ Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 447; Ehrhardt v. Hogaboom, 115 U. S. 67

⁵ See §§ 485, 486, 487, 488. Chap. XXXI.

it conforms to the trust deed is not a subject of inquiry in ejectment.¹ Any relief desired must be sought in equity.²

In New York a widow, having a right to redeem because she was omitted as a defendant in foreclosure, cannot bring ejectment against the purchaser.³ The remedy is by action to redeem. The title of a purchaser under a foreclosure decree cannot be impeached collaterally in ejectment for irregularity;⁴ the right of a party to enter upon premises to remove personal property therefrom does not bring up a question of title to land;⁵ the regularity of the appointment of an administrator who is shown to be at least a de facto administrator cannot be collaterally questioned in this action;⁶ nor will the courts undertake to decide in ejectment who are the de jure officers of a corporation; the inquiry must be by quo warranto.⁷ A tax title cannot be attacked in ejectment in New Jersey.⁸ The remedy is by certiorari.⁹ These illustrations might be indefinitely multiplied, but we apprehend the collection is sufficiently complete.

¹ Dawson v. Hayden, 67 Ill. 54. See Smith v. Pipe, 3 Col. 187.

² Graham v. Anderson, 42 Ill. 517; Reece v. Allen, 10 Ill. 236. See Ferguson v. Coward, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 572; Beard v. Hall, 63 N. C. 39.

³ Smith v. Gardner, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 356.

⁴ Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 429; Jacksons v. Robins, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 576.

⁵ Corcoran v. Webster, 50 Wis. 125.

⁶ Wight v. Wallbaum, 39 Ill. 554.

⁷ Presbyterian Society, &c. v. Smithers, 12 O. S. 248.

⁸ S. P. Blanchard v. Powers, 42 Mich. 619.

⁹ State v. Newark, 40 N. J. Law, 92.

CHAPTER VI.

PARTIES PLAINTIFF.

- | | |
|---|--|
| § 185. Who may maintain actions in the nature of ejectment. 186. Statutory remedies cumulative. 187. Joinder of plaintiffs. 188. Hostile claimants cannot join. 189. Other cases of misjoinder. — Amendments. 190. Grantee suing in grantor's name. 191. Ejectment by the king. 192. Ejectment by the State or people. 193. When the people cannot recover. 194. Outstanding Indian title. 195. Corporations. 196. Infants. 197. Security for costs. 198. Disaffirmance of infant's deed. 199. Guardian in socage and general guardian. 200. Guardians for nurture and by nature. 201. Ejectment by both infant and guardian. 202. Guardian's powers and duties. 203. Committee of a lunatic. 204. Committee may maintain equitable action. 205. Heirs at law. | § 206. Devisees. 207. Personal representatives. 208. May recover estates for years. 209. Freehold terms or leases. 210. When executors or administrators may sue. 211. Statutory changes. 212. } Reversioners—conditions subse- 213. } quent. 214. Forfeiture of life estate. 215. Life tenant. 216. Tenant for years. 217. Tenant at will. 218. Tenant at sufferance. 219. Tenant by the curtesy. 220. Married women. 221. Partners. 222. Trustees. 223. Cestuis que trustent. 224. Insolvent, or bankrupt. 225. Assignee of bankrupt or insolvent debtor. 226. Aliens. 227. Receivers. 228. Indians. 229. Felons. 230. Additional illustrations. |
|---|--|

§ 185. Who may maintain actions in the nature of ejectment.
 —The character of the estate which will support the class of actions which we are discussing is, in some States, a matter of statutory regulation. As a general rule, any person owning an estate in lands in fee, for life, or for years, having a present right of entry, or any person vested with a right to the immediate possession¹ incident to some corporeal estate or interest in lands, can maintain an action in the nature of ejectment. The title and right of possession acquired after the commencement of the action will not usually authorize a recovery.² Mr. Longfield observes concerning the early practice;¹ "All persons who in a politic or natural capacity have an interest in land, sufficient to enable them to make an actual lease, may maintain an ejectment on a feigned lease."

¹ Vance v. Schroyer, 82 Ind. 114.

² Goodman v. Winter, 64 Ala. 437; McCool v. Smith, 1 Black, 459; Alden v. Grove, 18 Pa. St. 377; Donaldson v. Waters, 30 Ala. 175.

§ 186. Statutory remedies cumulative.—When the common law furnishes a remedy, and another is provided by statute, the latter is cumulative unless made exclusive by the statute;² and as the pleadings are not usually published in the reports of cases, it is often difficult to determine whether the action was framed under the statute, or brought at common law, the word ejectment being sometimes applied indiscriminately. A general tendency to uniformity exists in the legislation and decisions in the several States, but it is impossible to formulate any rule to govern in determining what persons may prosecute actions in the nature of ejectment, which will not be subject to frequent exceptions, modifications, and limitations. A classification of the particular parties who can maintain these actions, accompanied by a statement of the reasons controlling the decisions in particular cases, is therefore essential.

§ 187. Joinder of plaintiffs.—The general rule is that only persons may join in bringing an action at law whose interests are joint or united.³ Hence, on a joint demise, the title proved must be joint, or the plaintiffs cannot recover.⁴ To sustain an ejectment, as already shown, the plaintiff must establish a right of possession in presenti to the premises described in the complaint. If several plaintiffs count upon a joint title and right of possession, the same principle applies. The right of possession must exist in each and all of the plaintiffs, or they cannot recover.⁵ If one of the

¹ Longfield on Ejectment, p. 12.

² Candee v. Hayward, 37 N. Y. 653; Wetmore v. Tracy, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 250, and cases cited. Remedial statutes may be given a retrospective effect. Larkin v. Saffarans, 15 Fed. Rep. 147, and cases cited.

³ See McKenzie v. L'Amoureux, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 516; Pomeroy's Remedies and Remedial Rights, §§ 190-203. Owners of distinct parcels of land may unite in equity to repress a wrong or nuisance common to all. Peck v. Elder, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 126; Murray v. Hay, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 59; Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 157; Pettibone v. Hamilton, 40 Wis. 402.

⁴ Taylor v. Taylor, 3 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 18; Hoyle v. Stowe, 2 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 318; Tucker v. Vance, 2 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 458; Teal v. Terrell, 48 Tex. 491.

⁵ Cheney v. Cheney, 26 Vt. 606. See Dickey v. Armstrong, 1 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 39; De Mill v. Lockwood, 3 Bla. C. C. 56-61; Waterman v. Andrews, 14 R. I. 589.

plaintiffs has no title, the coplaintiffs cannot recover, though they may be vested with the whole title,¹ for the joinder of too many plaintiffs is ground for nonsuit on the trial, whether the action be for a tort or on contract.² In trespass by joint tenants, Judge Story declared it to be a settled rule that all the plaintiffs must be competent to sue, otherwise the action could not be supported.³ So it was decided in Michigan, that where a joint title is laid in several plaintiffs a title in a less number is not provable.⁴ In Massachusetts it has been held, on a writ of entry brought by tenants in common under the statute, that if the right of either joint demandant proved defective the action must fail,⁵ unless an amendment was allowed before verdict, striking out the name of the demandant who was not entitled to recover. In Virginia, where several plaintiffs aliened pending a suit, it was held that the action could be continued for the benefit of the alienee.⁶

§ 188. Hostile claimants cannot join.—It has been decided in New York that two persons, each claiming the whole of a parcel of land, by titles derived from different sources, hostile to each other, cannot unite as plaintiffs, and set forth their separate titles in ejectment against a third party in possession.⁷ Those whose interests are in harmony, and only those, should be joined as plaintiffs.⁸ The Code of New York has abolished the early practice of naming several lessors and setting forth various and hostile demises in separate and distinct counts.

¹ De Mill v. Lockwood, 3 Bla. C. C. 56-61; Murphy v. Orr, 32 Ill. 489.

² Murphy v. Orr, 32 Ill. 489.

³ Marsteller v. M'Clean, 7 Cranch, 156.

⁴ De Mill v. Moffat, 40 Mich. 128. See Doe v. Butler, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 149; Gillett v. Stanley, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 121, questioned, Vrooman v. Weed, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 330.

⁵ Chandler v. Simmons, 97 Mass. 508; Prop'rs. Oxnard v. Kennebeck Purchase, 10 Mass. 179; s. p. Kelley, v. Meins, 135 Mass. 235.

⁶ Bolling v. Teel, 76 Va. 487. See Chap. XXIV.

⁷ Hubbell v. Lerch, 58 N. Y. 237; s. c. below, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 295. See St. John v. Pierce, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 362; aff'd in Court of Appeals, 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 140; s. p. in equity, Walker v. Powers, 104 U. S. 245; Grant v. Van Schoonhoven, 9 Paige (N. Y.), 255; Fulham v. McCarthy, 1 H. L. Cas. 703; Padwick v. Platt, 11 Beav. 503.

⁸ Bunce v. Gallagher, 5 Blatchf. 489; Saumarez v. Saumarez, 4 M. & C. 331. See §§ 450, 640.

§ 189. Other cases of misjoinder.—Amendments.—An executor cannot join with the devisees under the will to recover lands of the testator;¹ nor can the widow join with the heirs in ejectment, and if she is joined the latter cannot recover alone.² Towns claiming as tenants in common cannot join in a writ of entry.³ It is error to order a person to be joined as plaintiff who has no interest in the land except as mortgagee to secure payment for his professional services in the litigation.⁴ In New York the people and certain individuals claiming to be their tenants cannot unite in an action to recover land.⁵ Reversioners must all join.⁶ The general principles which underlie these cases seem to be that hostile claimants cannot be coplaintiffs, and the absence of a joint or common interest in all the plaintiffs is fatal to a recovery by those who are properly joined. The difficulties resulting from a joinder of too many plaintiffs may be averted, in some cases, by invoking the power of amendment so liberally provided by the modern codes of procedure and systems of practice. Thus, where a wife should have sued alone in an action for damages affecting her separate estate, but her husband was joined as a nominal plaintiff, it was held that his name could be stricken out either before or after judgment.⁷

§ 190. Grantee suing in grantor's name.—Statutes rendering void for champerty deeds executed by a party out of possession, of lands held adversely by a third party, are in force in many of our States. The adverse possession to avoid a deed upon this ground must generally be under a claim of some specific title, and not a mere general assertion of ownership,⁸ and must be actual as distinguished

¹ Tarver v. Smith, 38 Ala. 135.

² Pringle v. Gaw, 5 S. & R. (Penn.) 536; Gourley v. Kinley, 66 Penn. St. 270.

³ Rehoboth v. Hunt, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 224. See Chap. IX.

⁴ Mohr v. Porter, 55 Wis. 150.

⁵ People v. Mayor, &c., 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 111.

⁶ Cook v. St. Paul's Church, 5 Hun (N. Y.), 293; aff'd, 67 N. Y. 594. Parties refusing to join as plaintiffs, may generally, under the modern systems of procedure, be made defendants. McAllen v. Woodcock, 60 Mo. 174. See Bliss on Code Pleadings, §§ 77, 78.

⁷ Ackley v. Tarbox, 31 N. Y. 564.

⁸ Crary v. Goodman, 22 N. Y. 170; Matter of Department of Parks, 73 N. Y. 560; Higinbotham v. Stoddard, 72 N. Y. 94; Williams v. Rawlins, 33 Ga. 117.

from constructive possession.¹ These statutes have certainly outlived their usefulness, and are practically the only restraints left upon the alienation of land, and no substantial reason can be assigned for their further retention as a part of the statute law of this country.² They were originally introduced partly upon the theory that it would be dangerous to permit the transfer of disputed or "fighting" titles, lest powerful and influential persons might purchase and use such titles as a means of oppressing poor people.³ There is, however, at the present day, but little reason to apprehend evils of this character; it may be safely asserted that the influence of litigants exerts but little weight in controlling the decisions of our courts. Because a party vested with the title to land is deforced of the possession by the illegal act of a wrong-doer the law should not supplement this wrong by further depriving him of the power to sell or convey the title. But stronger reasons can be assigned in favor of the general repeal of these statutes. They are almost a dead letter, for, under the decisions, the deed is not held to be void as a contract between the parties, or at least is enforced by applying the doctrine of estoppel, and is construed to be a power of attorney authorizing the grantee to use the grantor's name, as plaintiff in ejectment, to recover the lands even against the will of the latter; so that the only practical result attained by the statutes is a variation of the form of the action as regards the parties.⁴ The grantee and not the

¹ Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 390; Christie v. Gage, 71 N. Y. 191; Sands v. Hughes, 53 N. Y. 296.

² See Noonan v. Lee, 2 Black, 507.

³ In Roberts v. Cooper, 20 How. 483, Grier, J., said: "In this country, where lands are an article of commerce, passing from one to another with such rapidity, the ancient doctrine of maintenance, which makes void a conveyance for lands held adversely, is in many States entirely rejected. In some it has been treated as obsolete by the courts; in others it has been abolished by statute; while with some it appears to have found more favor. The ancient policy, which prohibited the sale of pretended titles, and held the conveyance to a third person of lands held adversely at the time to be an act of maintenance, was founded upon a state of society which does not exist in this country. The repeated statutes which were passed in the reigns of Edw. I and Edw. III against champerty and maintenance, arose from the embarrassments which attended the administration of justice in those turbulent times, from the dangerous influence and oppression of men in power."

⁴ Hamilton v. Wright, 37 N. Y. 502; Steeple v. Downing, 60 Ind. 478; Farnum v. Peterson, 111 Mass. 148; McMahan v. Bowe, 114 Mass. 140. Compare contra Burdick v. Burdick, 14 R. I. 574.

grantor is in such cases regarded as the real party in interest.¹ These statutes do not apply to rights appurtenant, nor to licenses;² nor to possession by Indians;³ nor to a confirmatory deed;⁴ nor to possession under a deed procured through fraud;⁵ nor to a conveyance by a reversioner.⁶ In New York the statute⁷ making it a misdemeanor to accept a conveyance of lands which the grantee knows are held adversely, and the title to which is in litigation, does not affect the previous title of the grantor in a deed executed in violation of the statute, and the conveyance is no defense to an ejectment brought by him.⁸ The New York Court of Appeals, in a singular case, never officially reported,⁹ promulgated the doctrine that a statute which permits a grantee of land, held adversely at the time of the conveyance, to maintain an action in the name of his grantor, is limited in its effect to the first grantee, and does not include a remote grantee of the premises. This manifestly is a decision which in effect revives the operation of these obsolete statutes in a numerous class of cases. We deprecate the conclusion of the court, and cannot believe that the case will be accepted or followed as a safe precedent.

§ 191. Ejectment by the king.—Ejectment at common law was a method of redressing injuries not considered "consistent with the royal prerogative and dignity." "As, therefore," says Blackstone, "the king, by reason of his legal ubiquity, cannot be disseized or dispossessed of any real property which is once vested in him, he can maintain no action which supposes a dispossession of the plaintiff; such as an assize or an ejectment."¹⁰ The constitutional

¹ Adriance v. Sanders, 2 McC. Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 262.

² Corning v. Troy Iron and Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 191; Broiestedt v. South Side R. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 220; Glover v. Manhattan Railway Co., 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 85.

³ Jackson v. Hudson, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 375.

⁴ Coleman v. Manhattan Beach Imp. Co., 26 Hun (N. Y.), 525.

⁵ Moody v. Moody, 16 Hun (N. Y.), 189.

⁶ Christie v. Gage, 71 N. Y. 193.

⁷ R. S., Part 4, ch. 1, t. 6, § 5.

⁸ Chamberlain v. Taylor, 92 N. Y. 348.

⁹ Smith v. Long, 12 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 113, reversing 9 Daly (N. Y.), 429.

¹⁰ 3 Bla. Com. *257. A foreign sovereign may bring suit in the courts of the United States. The Sapphire, 11 Wall. 164; King of Spain v. Oliver, 2 Wash. 431.

court of South Carolina, following this principle, held that the State of South Carolina having succeeded to the prerogatives of the King of Great Britain, the analogy between the State and the king held good, and that the State could not maintain trespass to try title. The court further declared that it would seem inconsistent to prosecute the tenant in possession, as he constituted one of the artificial body which sued as plaintiff.¹ This rule was enforced in England only when the king himself was plaintiff.² Ejectione firmæ was given to the king's lessee to punish a trespass, and recover the possession of which the lessee had been deforced.³ The royal prerogative, it was said, did not pertain to the lessee, and hence the reason of the rule failed.

§ 192. Ejectment by the State or people.—Chancellor Kent, in the early case of Jackson v. Winslow,⁴ in the New York Supreme Court, said, in a dissenting opinion, that “the State cannot be disseized;” but the right of a State, or of its people, to recover in ejectment lands of which it is possessed by virtue of its sovereignty, or which have reverted or escheated⁵ to it from defect of heirs, is, in this country, generally conferred by constitutional provision or statute, and has been sustained in many cases.⁶ The State may sue independently of any statutory provision.⁷ When the State, as sovereign, possesses the original and ultimate property in all lands within its jurisdiction, it occupies, in ¹ State v. Stark, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 101; See State v. Arledge, 1 Bailey (S. C.) Law, 551; See People v. Livingston, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 253.

² Doe d. William IV v. Roberts (13 M. & W. 520), seems to have been an ejectment by the sovereign.

³ Lee v. Norris, Cro. Eliz. 331. See Payne's Case, 2 Leon. 205.

⁴ Jackson v. Winslow, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 81, 83. See Chiles v. Calk, 4 Bibb (Ky.), 554.

⁵ The State, and not the United States, takes escheated lands. Etheridge v. Doe d. Malempre, 18 Ala. 565.

⁶ People v. Trinity Church, 22 N. Y. 44; People v. Van Rensselaer, 9 N. Y. 319; Wendell v. People, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 183; Hunter v. Field, 20 Ohio, 340; State of Minnesota v. Grant, 10 Minn. 39; People v. Livingston, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 253; People v. Conklin, 2 Hill (N. Y.), 67, per Nelson, J.; People v. Denison, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 312. See James River & Kan. Co. v. Thompson, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 270; Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 385. A devise to the United States of real property situated in the State of New York is void. United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 321.

⁷ Brown v. The State, 5 Col. 496.

ejectment proceedings, a position somewhat more advantageous than that of an ordinary plaintiff, for it has only to show that within a period necessary to constitute an adverse possession against the State, the disputed lands were vacant and unoccupied, and that the defendant subsequently entered or made claim to them.¹ Indeed the proposition was strenuously contended for by counsel, in the case of The People v. Rector, &c., of Trinity Church,² that the State is presumptively the owner of all the land within its borders, and consequently, in an action of ejectment, is always entitled to recover, on proving the defendant to be in possession, unless the latter repels the presumption by showing that it does not own the particular premises in controversy. This proposition was based: First, upon the Constitution of the State of New York, which declares that the people, in their right of sovereignty, are deemed to possess the original and ultimate property, in and to all lands within the jurisdiction of the State; and, second, upon the admitted principle that in ejectment between private parties, where the plaintiff has been shown to have been once the owner, the defendant must prove where and how the title has become divested, or establish title by adverse possession. The New York Court of Appeals held, however, in an able opinion written by Chief Justice Comstock, that the provision of the Constitution above cited, was a mere declaration of political sovereignty, and was not to be regarded as a rule of evidence, and that the people, when they sue in ejectment, are not wholly relieved from the operation of the rule that the person in possession is supposed to have acquired the title which the people, or the sovereign, once held. This presumption is shifted only by showing that the lands have been vacant within forty years.³

¹ People v. Van Rensselaer, 9 N. Y. 291-319; Wendell v. The People, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 183; People v. Denison, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 312. See People v. Arnold, 4 N. Y. 508; People v. Trinity Church, 22 N. Y. 44.

² 22 N. Y. 44.

³ When one State holds lands within the limits of another State it acquires its estate subject to all the incidents of ordinary ownership. Burbank v. Fay, 65 N. Y. 62. It may be here noted that the State may convey escheated lands before actual entry or inquisition. McCaughal v. Ryan, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 376; but see Larreau v. Davignon, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 369.

§ 193. When the people cannot recover.—In the case of The People v. The New York and Manhattan Beach Railway Company,¹ a curious question as to the right of the people to maintain ejectment was considered by the New York Court of Appeals. By statute in that State,² a right of action was given to the people in cases “where any money, funds, credits or property . . . held or owned, officially or otherwise, for or on behalf of any public or governmental interest, by any municipal or other public corporation, board . . . [or] village . . . has heretofore, without right, been obtained, received, converted or disposed of, and not actually recovered back and restored, prior to the passage of this act.” The statute in question, it may be observed, was enacted in view of the fact that the city of New York had been grossly defrauded by the acts of municipal officers, and others acting in collusion with them, and that large sums of money had been taken from the municipal treasury in the perpetration of the frauds thus committed. These sums the city or county had the right to recover, but resort to this method of redress was embarrassed by the fact that the city and county governments were under the control of the guilty participants in the frauds. Hence arose the necessity for the enactment of the statute. It was held, in the case under consideration, that the circumstances which led to the enactment of a statute might properly be considered in aid of its interpretation.³ The complaint in the action set forth that the defendant railway company had wrongfully acquired possession of the lands in controversy, and subsequently by wrongful interference, by its servants and agents, with the action of the town meeting of the town of Gravesend, and by obtaining control of the meeting by the aid and action of persons not legal or qualified voters, procured a vote to be passed authorizing the lands to be conveyed to the defendants, by the town land commissioners, for a grossly inadequate consideration, and that a conveyance had been executed in pursuance of the action of the town meeting. The complaint, among other things, demanded that the defendants be adjudged to surrender possession of the premises. The court held that an action for the recovery of real property was not within the purview of the act above cited, as the word property in the statute followed the enumeration of specific kinds of personal property. The words employed were "money, funds, credits or property." If it had been the intention of the legislature to apply the statute to all property, real and personal, obtained without right, some general and comprehensive words would naturally have been used. The word property, associated as it is with the preceding words of specific description, is to be construed as referring to property of the same general kind with that previously enumerated, upon the maxim noscitur a sociis. The court considered that it would be a strained construction of the statute to extend it to the recovery of real estate belonging to a municipality, the possession of which had been wrongfully acquired, or was wrongfully withheld. Further, as the deed in question purported to be the formal act of the town, executed by its accredited authorities, pursuant to a vote of a town meeting, regularly called and held, having authority to direct the alienation of the lands, the court held that the statute in question was not intended to confer jurisdiction to review, revise, or set aside the proceedings of towns, in town meetings, upon allegations that the action of a town meeting was induced by corruption, intimidation or violence.

¹ 84 N. Y. 565.

² Laws of New York, 1875, ch. 49.

³ Citing Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140. See s. p. Blake v. National Banks, 23 Wall. 307; The Saratoga, 9 Fed. Rep. 330; United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 91 U. S. 74.

§ 194. Outstanding Indian title.—In the case of The People v. Snyder,¹ which was ejectment by the people for lands claimed to have escheated to the State by reason of alienage, the court, in answer to the suggestion of counsel for the people, that the fee of the locus in quo was still in the Six Nations of Indians, said that if that were true it was difficult to see why it was not entirely fatal to the plaintiff's right of recovery in the action. Clearly, the fact that the title is still in the Indians constitutes no ground of recovery by the people, and the Indians, or one occupying with their consent, could not be dispossessed from lands the title to which had never been acquired by the State.

¹ 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 589; aff'd 41 N. Y. 397.

We do not readily see how the fee could have been vested in the Indians, for it seems to have been established that the exclusive title to the lands in this country vested in the respective sovereigns of the old world, whose subjects discovered the same.¹ The Indians were conceded only a right of occupancy² in the nature of an easement, and this right attached itself to the fee and vested in the government without further grant when the Indians abandoned the land.³

§ 195. Corporations.—At common law, in the absence of charter restrictions, or statutory prohibitions, corporations, whether created by prescription or by legislative act, possess the power to purchase, hold, and convey lands, so far as may be necessary to effectuate the object of their creation. The character and amount of real property which a corporation may acquire is usually limited by its charter or by statute, and its capacity to hold real property can only be questioned by the sovereign.⁴ A corporation vested with the power, and having the capacity to purchase land, may maintain ejectment to recover possession of it.⁵ “The modern method of trying the title of land by ejectment,” says Kyd,⁶ “extends to corporations of every kind, whether in the character of plaintiffs or defendants.” Corporations, it has been held, may, by comity, bring ejectment in States other than those which granted their char-

¹ Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 574.

² United States v. Cook, 19 Wall. 592; Strong v. Waterman, 11 Paige (N. Y.), 607.

³ See Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 271; Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S. 525; Jackson v. Hudson, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 375. Compare Ogden v. Lec, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 546; aff'd 5 Denio (N. Y.) 628.

⁴ National Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 628, and cases cited; Morawetz on Corporations, § 117; Natoma Water and Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 552.

⁵ Henley v. Branch Bk. Mobile, 16 Ala. 552. See Jackson v. Nestles, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 115; Bennett v. Walker, 64 Ga. 326; Partridge v. Ball, 1 Ld. Raym. 136; Lincoln Co. v. Magruder, 3 Mo. App. 314.

⁶ Kyd on Corporations, vol. 1, p. 187. See Angell & Ames on Corporations, §§ 370, 631; Society, &c., v. Wheeler, 2 Gallison, 105.

ters, unless expressly prohibited by the statute of such other State from so doing.¹ In Leasure v. Union Mutual Life Insurance Company,² it was decided that a foreign corporation could sue in the courts of Pennsylvania, to enforce the payment of a loan of money secured by mortgage on real estate within that State. The court remarked that the principle that a foreign corporation could contract with a citizen of that State, and enforce its contract by suit in its courts, had never been controverted.³ But it was further said that should a foreign corporation resort to the remedy of ejectment, or become a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, a different question would arise. Even that condition of affairs could not release the debt, or destroy the validity of the title, except as against the commonwealth. By the common law alien friends could always sue, and there was no distinction in this respect between natural and artificial persons; and in so far as the opinion of the learned court intimates a doubt of ejectment by a foreign corporation being sustained, it must be regarded as in conflict with the prevailing practice.

§ 196. Infants.—Numerous cases hold that ejectment may be brought by an infant plaintiff, who, under the early practice, was entitled to make a lease, and try the title to his lands.⁴ In Pennsylvania an infant has been permitted to maintain an action of ejectment in the name of his next friend;⁵ but the Supreme Court in Ohio decided that the next friend of an infant could not make a demise to sustain an ejectment, as he was neither attorney nor guardian, and had no power to lease the lands of the infant.⁶ Ejectment was, however, upheld in Maryland upon the demise of a husband and wife, although the wife was under twenty-one

¹ New York Dry Dock v. Hicks, 5 McL. 111.

² 91 Penn. St. 491.

³ See Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519.

⁴ Birchman v. Norright, Hardw. 51; O'Byrne v. Feeley, 61 Ga. 77; Weems v. Mackall, 4 H. & M'H. (Md.) 484; Zouch v. Parsons, 3 Burr. 1806; Maddon v. White, 2 T. R. 159; Booth v. Goodwin, 29 Ark. 633. See MacPherson on Infancy, ch. xxx, pp. 352-354; Doe d. Miller v. Noden, 2 Esp. 530. The property of minors equally with that of adults is subject to the lex rei sitæ. Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 613.

⁵ Heft v. McGill, 3 Penn. St. 256.

⁶ Massie v. Long, 2 Ohio, 287.

years of age at the time of the demise laid.¹ Of course, in States where the right of an infant to maintain an action in the nature of ejectment is recognized, a guardian ad litem must be appointed, so that some person may be before the court who can be held responsible for costs. A mother of an infant cannot, without being appointed his guardian, serve a notice to quit on behalf of the infant so as to maintain ejectment;² but where a father secures himself to be appointed guardian of his son, the proceedings will be assumed to be correct even though it is shown that at the time of the appointment the son was beyond the seas.³ The right of both the infant and his guardian to maintain ejectment for the same lands will be presently discussed. This double right of action was repudiated by the New York Supreme Court in the case of Seaton v. Davis.⁴ This action was instituted in the infant's name by her guardian ad litem, to recover possession of lands from the tenant for the life of another holding over his term, and for damages. The court held that the action could only be brought by a guardian in socage, or general guardian, and said that a minor who had a guardian in socage had no right of action to recover the possession of his lands, or the rents and profits thereof. This opinion is evidently based upon the theory that rights of action are not divisible, and cannot as a rule be vested in and enforced by different persons at the same time.⁵ The court held, however, that the defendant, under the then existing practice in that State, by failing to demur, had waived the objection. So it was held in New York, that an action would not lie by infants, in their own names, by a next friend, against a defendant, for intermeddling with the rents and profits of the infant's real estate. The action must be brought in the name of the guardian in socage or general guardian.⁶ The New York

¹ Weems v. Mackall, 4 Har. & McH. (Md.) 484.

² Reade v. Kennedy, 12 Irish L. R. 565.

³ Morgan v. Thorne, 7 M. & W. 400.

⁴ 1 T. & C. (N. Y.) 91. See MacPherson on Infancy, pp. 28-35. See § 201.

⁵ "There can exist at the same time but one title of entry." Botts v. Shields, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 35. See § 728.

⁶ Beecher v. Crouse, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 307.

Code of Civil Procedure, recently enacted, allows an infant to maintain a real action in its own name.¹ The remedy of infants whose real estate has been sold under a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is by ejectment against the purchasers and not by proceedings to set the judgment aside.²

§ 197. Security for costs.—The rule laid down in Doe v. Alston,³ that where an infant sues the court will require the prochein ami, or guardian, to give security for costs, was declared in New Jersey to be peculiar to the action of ejectment.⁴ Under the early practice, however, where the lessor of the plaintiff resided outside the jurisdiction of the court, security for costs could be exacted.⁵ This is the rule in some of our States.⁶

§ 198. Disaffirmance of infant's deed.—An infant who has executed a conveyance of lands during his minority, may, on coming of age, recover the lands back in ejectment, but, before bringing the action, he must disaffirm the conveyance by some notorious act, such as an actual entry, demand of possession, or notice of his election to repudiate the deed.⁷ The question as to whether or not the infant must tender back the consideration to render the disaffirmance effectual is involved in doubt,⁸ but the better doctrine seems to be that where the infant has squandered the money, restitution will not be ordered as a condition of disaffirmance.⁹

¹ New York Code of Civil Procedure, § 1686.

² Wiedersum v. Naumann, 10 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 149; s. c. 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 369.

³ 1 T. R. 491. See Longfield on Ejectment, pp. 92, 93.

⁴ Cotheal adx. Moorehouse, 21 N. J. L. 335.

⁵ Nagle v. Power, 1 Jones, 420; O'Connor v. Bernard, 1 Jones, 175.

⁶ See Tibbs v. Clarkson, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 34. The proceedings in a second ejectment could be stayed till the costs of a former action had been paid. Den v. Sinnickson, 14 N. J. Law, 193.

⁷ Voorhies v. Voorhies, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 150; Bool v. Mix, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 119; Doe d. Moore v. Abernathy, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 442. An infant's power of attorney is absolutely void. Philpot v. Bingham, 55 Ala. 435; Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 26. Wait on Fraud. Convs. & Void & Voidable Acts, § 454.

⁸ See Bingham v. Barley, 55 Texas, 281; s. c. 40 Am. Rep. 801; Green v. Green, 69 N. Y. 553; s. c. 25 Am. Rep. 233.

⁹ Wait on Fraud. Convs. & Void & Voidable Acts, § 507, and cases cited. Chandler v. Simmons, 97 Mass. 514; Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Peters, 74; Keil v.

An infant cannot be estopped from asserting title to his property.¹

§ 199. Guardian in socage and general guardian.—A guardian in socage may bring ejectment in his own name as guardian for the lands of his ward.² Judge Nelson in a case in the New York Supreme Court, said: "A guardian in socage has the custody of the land of the infant, and is entitled to the profits for his benefit; he has an interest in the estate, and may lease it, and avow in his own name, and bring trespass. He is in possession by right, and may, of course maintain the action of trespass or ejectment against any person entering upon him without right."³ Such a guardian, in the language of Lord Ellenborough, "has not a mere office or authority, but an interest in the ward's estate."⁴ He may maintain actions for injuries to his ward's realty. Being clothed with the duty of managing and protecting the ward's property for his benefit the law gives him all the necessary legal remedies to accomplish these purposes.⁵ Guardianship in socage has gone into disuse,⁶ and is practically unknown to our law,⁷ for a guardian in socage must be some relative by blood who cannot possibly inherit, and in this country such a case can rarely exist.⁸ The common law right of a guardian in socage to maintain trespass and ejectment in his own name, for the possession of his ward's lands, applies to a general guardian at the present day,⁹ who possesses Healey, 84 Ill. 105. See Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 309; Gillespie v. Bailey, 12 W. Va. 70; S. C. 29 Am. Rep. 445; Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 494.

¹ See Sherman v. Wright, 49 N. Y. 227; Chapin v. Shafer, 49 N. Y. 407.

² Holmes v. Seely, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 75; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 66; Seaton v. Davis, 1 T. & C. (N. Y.) 91; MacPherson on Infants, pp. 28, 35; Truss v. Old, 6 Rand. (Va.) 556; Wade v. Baker, 1 Ld. Raym. 130; Cagger v. Lansing, 4 Hun (N. Y.), 812, aff'd 64 N. Y. 417, approving Holmes v. Seely, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 75. More v. Deyoe, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 208-216; Shopland v. Ryoler, Cro. Jac. 98; See Beecher v. Crouse, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 306; Cole on Eject. p. 582.

³ Holmes v. Seely, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 75; See Quadrang v. Downs, 2 Mod. 176.

⁴ The King v. Inhabitants of Oakley, 10 East, 491.

⁵ Torry v. Black, 58 N. Y. 185; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 66.

⁶ 2 Kent's Com. p. 224. See, however, N. Y. R. S. (7th ed.) p. 2162, § 5; Bartholomew v. Lyon, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 86.

⁷ Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 153.

⁸ 2 Kent's Com. p. 224.

⁹ 2 Kent's Com. p. 228.

similar powers,¹ and may bring ejectment.² The right of a guardian in socage,³ general guardian,⁴ or of a chancery guardian,⁵ to lease his ward's real estate, is abundantly established.⁶ In Michigan a guardian cannot maintain ejectment for the lands of his ward, for his powers in that State are purely statutory, and his control over the real property is limited to leasing it, and to the reception of rents and profits.⁷

§ 200. Guardians for nurture and by nature.—A guardian for nurture has neither the right of property nor of possession, and, it is clear, cannot maintain the action,⁸ that privilege not being extended to those guardians to whom belong the custody of the infant's person only.⁹ The same principle applies to a guardian by nature.¹⁰

§ 201. Ejectment by both infant and guardian.—In Canada, under the statute 8 Geo. IV, chap. 6, which provides that guardians shall have the charge and management of the estates of their wards, real and personal, and shall appear and prosecute or defend any action in his or her name, it has been held that the guardian might maintain ejectment for the ward's lands, though the court was of opinion that the infant might also have brought the action independent of the guardian.¹¹ Mr. Adams says: "It is difficult to discover any principle upon which both infant and guardian

¹ Thacker v. Henderson, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 271. See Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 150.

² Smith v. Robertson, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 210, aff'd 89 N. Y. 555.

³ Emerson v. Spicer, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 428; s. c. aff'd 46 N. Y. 594; Snook v. Sutton, 10 N. J. L. 133.

⁴ Richardson v. Richardson, 49 Mo. 29; Granby v. Amherst, 7 Mass. 1-6; see Huff v. Walker, 1 Ind. 193.

⁵ Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 150.

⁶ Thacker v. Henderson, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 271.

⁷ Kinney v. Harrett, 46 Mich. 87; s. c. 24 Alb. L. J. 216.

⁸ Anderson ads. Darby, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 369; May v. Calder, 2 Mass. 55; Ross v. Cobb, 9 Verg. (Tenn.) 463; Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 153; Magruder v. Peter, 4 G. & J. (Md.) 323; Bedell v. Constable, Vaughan, 177. See Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631.

⁹ See note to Ratcliff's Case, 3 Rep. 37 (2 Coke, 99); Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 153; Kinney v. Harrett, 46 Mich. 87; opinion per Cooley, J., s. c. 24 Alb. L. J. 216.

¹⁰ Ibid. See Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631.

¹¹ Doe d. Atkinson v. McLeod, 8 U. C. Q. B. 344.

can have the right of maintaining ejectment for the same lands.”¹ The existence of this double authority to sue for and recover the infant’s lands is certainly somewhat anomalous. Possibly, if both infant and guardian institute an ejectment at the same time, the courts can restrain one by injunction, and if both are vested with the same title and right of entry, an adjudication for or against one may be considered as controlling upon the other. Still, as already stated, there can exist but one right of entry on land at the same time, and, therefore, the case of Seaton v. Davis,² above discussed, holding that where the guardian is vested with the estate the infant cannot maintain the action, seems to embody the logical and correct rule.

§ 202. Guardian’s powers and duties.—The rights and duties of guardians have been declared and limited with so much minuteness by statute, in most of our States, that clearly defined questions affecting the nature of their powers at common law rarely arise, and common law guardianship is comparatively obsolete. The tendency of modern legislation, and of the decisions of the courts, in matters affecting the ward’s real estate, is to clothe the guardian with only the naked authority of an agent, not coupled with any interest in the property. In Pennsylvania, a guardian ordinarily has power to lease but not to sell his ward’s real property. Oil, as we have seen, is held in that State to be a mineral, and hence a part of the realty. When a deed or conveyance of the right to bore for and collect oil on the infant’s lands is made by the guardian, whether the instrument be called a lease or a deed, it is considered to be in effect the grant of a part of the corpus of the estate, and not of a mere incorporeal right, and, without the intervention and approval of the Orphan’s Court, the conveyance is void.³ Nor is a guardian authorized to grant an incorporeal hereditament out of the lands of his ward.⁴

¹ Adams on Ejectment (4th ed.), pp. 115, [*67.]

² 1 T. & C. (N. Y.) 91. See § 196. Compare Segelken v. Meyer, 14 Hun (N. Y.), 593; Porter v. Bleiler, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 149.

³ Stoughton’s Appeal, 88 Penn. St. 198. See § 114.

⁴ Watkins v. Peck, 13 N. H. 360; s. c. 40 Am. Dec. 156.

§ 203. Committee of a lunatic.—A committee of a lunatic cannot maintain an action of ejectment in his own name for lands of the lunatic, for the reason that the committee is not clothed or vested with an estate in the lands.¹ “No rule of law,” says the Supreme Court of New York, “is better settled than that a lunatic, by the appointment of a committee, loses none of his estate, rights of property, or rights of action.”² In North Carolina the guardian of an insane person cannot bring the action.³ It has been held in New York that a committee of a lunatic is not the trustee of an express trust within the meaning of the Code of that State, and cannot maintain ejectment in that capacity, for lands alleged to have belonged to the lunatic prior to the appointment of the committee.⁴ “The committee,” says Judge Bronson, “is a mere bailiff or servant, and the interest and right of action remain in the lunatic.”⁵ In Missouri, in an ejectment by an insane person in his own name, the court held that it could proceed with the action without the appointment of a guardian.⁶

The usual practice is to bring the action in the name of the lunatic by his committee or by a guardian.

§ 204. Committee may maintain equitable action.—Though the committee cannot prosecute a purely legal action, he may maintain a suit in equity in his own name, to which the lunatic is not a necessary party, to set aside a deed executed by the lunatic when insane.⁷ This doctrine has

¹ Petrie v. Shoemaker, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 85; Knipe v. Palmer, 2 Wils. 130; Drury v. Fitch, Hutton, 16; In re Fitzgerald, 2 Sch. & Lef. 437; Burnet v. Bookstaver, 10 Hun (N. Y.), 481; Cox v. Dawson, Noy, 27; s. c. Hob. 215; Fulcher v. Griffin, Popham, 140; Gilleland v. Martin, 3 McL. 490.

² McKillip v. McKillip, 8 Barb. (N. Y.), 552. A disaffirmance of the lunatic's deed must be shown; Schuff v. Ransom, 79 Ind. 465; and an offer of restitution is not necessary. Crawford v. Scovell, 94 Pa. St. 48; s. c. 39 Am. Rep. 766; Rogers v. Walker, 6 Pa. St. 371.

³ Brooks v. Brooks, 3 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 389. See Knipe v. Palmer, 2 Wils. 130; Buswell on Insanity, § 118. Compare Klohs v. Reifsnnyder, 61 Pa. St. 240.

⁴ Burnet v. Bookstaver, 10 Hun (N. Y.), 481.

⁵ Lane v. Schermerhorn, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 97. The mental incapacity may be shown in an action of ejectment; it is not necessary to bring a direct action to annul the deed. Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 378. See Mitchell v. Barnes, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 199, 200.

⁶ Allen v. Ranson, 44 Mo. 263.

⁷ Fields v. Fowler, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 400; Person v. Warren, 14 Barb. (N. Y.)

received the sanction of Kent¹ and Walworth,² and is based upon an early case which maintains the principle that the lunatic should not be compelled to stultify himself, and therefore ought not to be joined in an action to cancel his own deed.³ Though the reason from which this rule originated is an exploded doctrine, the rule survives and the practice still prevails. Even at common law, however, the committee sometimes united the lunatic with him in suits to cancel conveyances of this character;⁴ and it has been held in Pennsylvania that ejectment for lands belonging to a lunatic may be brought in the name of the lunatic, as owner, or in the name of the committee alone.⁵ The powers and duties of a committee closely resemble those of a general guardian of an infant. Our statutory policy tends to clothe him with complete control over the personalty, while his power over the realty is usually limited to leasing and the perception of profits.

A drunkard is not incompetent like an idiot or one generally insane. He is simply incompetent upon proof that, at the time of the act challenged, his understanding was clouded, or his reason dethroned by actual intoxication.⁶

§ 205. Heirs at law.—An heir at law may bring ejectment for lands of which his ancestor died seized.⁷ So may pretermitted heirs;⁸ and a child born after a will was made but who is not mentioned in it, by its guardian.⁹ Under the old practice the demise was laid on the day the ancestor died, 488. See McKillip v. McKillip, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 552; Petrie v. Shoemaker, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 85; Davis v. Carpenter, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 287.

¹ Ortley v. Messere, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 139.

² Gorham v. Gorham, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 24.

³ Palmer, Attorney General, v. Parkhurst, 1 Cas. in Ch. 112. See Ridler v. Ridler, 1 Eq. Cases, Abr. 279; Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 21.

⁴ Addison v. Dawson, 2 Vern. 678; Ortley v. Messere, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 139.

⁵ Warden v. Eichbaum, 14 Penn. St. 121.

⁶ Van Wyck v. Brasher, 81 N. Y. 262; Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9; Gardner v. Gardner, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 526.

⁷ Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484; Uhrich v. Beck, 13 Penn. St. 639; Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 172; Updegraff v. Trask, 18 Cal. 458; Carruthers v. Bailey, 3 Ga. 105; King v. Boyd, 4 Oregon, 326; Filbey v. Carrier, 45 Wis. 469; Jones v. Billstein, 28 Wis. 221; St. John v. Northrup, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 26. See § 573.

⁸ McCracken v. McCracken, 67 Mo. 590.

⁹ Smith v. Robertson, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 210; aff'd 89 N. Y. 555.

for, if the ancestor died at five o'clock, the heir might enter at six and make a valid lease at seven.¹ The heir may have the action though the ancestor died out of possession,² or was holding by adverse possession;³ and a writ of right by the heir may be supported though the ancestor was dis-seized at the time of his death.⁴ The heirs may convey without waiting for the discovery of a will or the proof of claims to establish the certainty of the title.⁵ The heirs of a trustee may maintain ejectment, the action not being adverse to the interests of the cestui que trust.⁶ After the death of the widow, the heirs may bring an action, in the nature of ejectment, for lands of which the ancestor died seized and which were assigned to the widow as dower.⁷ Where the interest claimed was subject to a life estate, the complaint must show that such estate has ceased.⁸ Heirs at law hold as tenants in common, and one of several heirs can recover in ejectment, though the others entitled equally with him do not join in the action.⁹ In California the heir has the right of entry upon the real estate left by his ancestor, subject only to the administrator's statutory right of possession, and where a considerable period has elapsed, and there has been no administration, the heir may bring ejectment.¹⁰ No entry is necessary; it is sufficient to prove his title as heir.¹¹ One of six heirs of an owner of a rent charge, with condition of re-entry, may, upon non-payment of rent, maintain an action of ejectment to recover an undivided sixth part of the demised prem-

¹ Roe d. Wrangham v. Hersey, 3 Wils. 274.

² Webster v. Webster, 53 Penn. St. 161.

³ Hanna v. Renfro, 32 Miss. 125.

⁴ Mason v. Walker, 14 Me. 163.

⁵ Moser v. Cochrane, 25 N. Y. Daily Reg. 253; Spring v. Sandford, 7 Paige (N. Y.), 550; Hayes v. Harmony Grove Cemetery, 108 Mass. 400.

⁶ Crunkelton v. Evert, 3 Yeates (Pa.), 570. Heirs of a mortgagor cannot maintain ejectment against a party standing in the position of a mortgagee in possession. Dunning v. Fisher, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 178, reversed on other features, 85 N. Y. 30.

⁷ Brown v. Colson, 41 Ga. 42.

⁸ Owen v. Cooper, 46 Ind. 524.

⁹ Dowd v. Gilchrist, 1 Jones (N. C.), Law, 353; Bronson v. Paynter, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 393. See Chap. IX.

¹⁰ Updegraff v. Trask, 18 Cal. 458. See Bufford v. Holliman, 10 Texas, 564.

¹¹ Soto v. Kroder, 19 Cal. 87. See Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484; Austin v. Bailey, 37 Vt. 219.

ises.¹ The death of the owner, and the descent by operation of law to several heirs, effects a transfer to each, and, as already stated, they hold as tenants in common.²

§ 206. Devisees.—A devisee may maintain ejectment.³ Reference will be presently made to the statutory policy, peculiar to several States, which permits executors or administrators to retain possession and control over the real property of the deceased, during the settlement of the estate, and to protect and recover the possession from even the heir or devisee. In Vermont, where the statute restricted the right to ejectment by heirs or devisees until the estate had been set off to them by the Probate Court, it was held that when it was obvious that no action of the Probate Court could become necessary, and so long a time had elapsed that the executor's lien would be presumed to be satisfied, the devisee might bring ejectment.⁴ The same principle applies in that State to heirs, if no administrator has been appointed; or if administration has been had, the debts will be presumed to be satisfied after the lapse of nine years, and the heirs may then sue.⁵ A devisee has by operation of law, without actual entry, such a seizin as will enable him to bring a writ of entry.⁶

§ 207. Personal representatives.—As a general rule, an

¹ Cruger v. McLaury, 41 N. Y. 219, and cases cited. See §§ 160, 370.

² Illegitimate children cannot inherit real estate of the ancestor of their deceased mother. Matter of Mericlo, 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 62, reviewing the cases.

Probate of will reviewed by jury.—In New York, at least, the probate of a will is not conclusive as to real estate, either as to its validity or due execution. Matter of Kellum, 50 N. Y. 299; Bailey v. Hilton, 14 Hun (N. Y.), 7. It is prima facie evidence which may be repelled. Jackson v. Rumsey, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.), 236; Bailey v. Stewart, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 212. Compare Hewlett v. Wood, 62 N. Y. 75; Wager v. Wager, 23 Hun (N. Y.), 439; though the probate is conclusive as to personalty. Vanderpoel v. Van Valkenburgh, 6 N. Y. 190. The question of testamentary capacity is, therefore, frequently raised in ejectment. We may note that equity will not set aside the probate of a will. Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485; Case of Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 509; Kerrich v. Bransby, 7 Bro. P. C. 437; State of California v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 266.

³ Young v. Holmes, 1 Strange, 70; Doe d. Saye v. Guy, 3 East, 120. See McCrea v. Haraszthy, 51 Cal. 146; Van Rensselaer v. Barringer, 39 N. Y. 9; Woodbridge v. Banning, 14 O. S. 328. While a devise of real estate to an alien is void by statute in New York (R. S. Part II, ch. 6, t. 1, art. I, § 4), a devise to executors who are citizens in trust to pay the income to an alien is valid. Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357.

⁴ Abbott v. Pratt, 16 Vt. 626.

⁵ Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484; Austin v. Bailey, 37 Vt. 219.

⁶ Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 71.

executor, administrator,¹ or administrator de bonis non,² cannot maintain ejectment to recover real estate in fee simple, for he represents, and is clothed with power to administer, the personal and not the real estate of his testator or intestate, and ordinarily has no concern with or control over the real property,³ has no commission to intervene and unsettle the title to the landed possessions of the heirs derived through inheritance,⁴ and is not vested with the seizin or any estate in fee.⁵ Upon the death of an ancestor the title to real property usually vests immediately in the heirs or devisees, whose rights to the remedy of ejectment we have just considered. Exceptions to these rules have been created by statute in several States, and the right has been given to personal representatives to control the real estate and treat it as assets until the debts are paid.⁶

§ 208. May recover estates for years.—An executor may maintain ejectment for lands which were held by his testator for a term of years, as such term is a chattel interest,⁷ or a chattel real,⁸ and is treated as assets in his hands. So, under the early practice, he was entitled to an ejectione firmæ for such an interest.⁹ Executors of a testator who held an estate for years in land, and had leased the same

¹ McPike v. Wells, 54 Miss. 136; Burdyne v. Mackey, 7 Mo. 374; Lucy v. Lucy, 55 N. H. 9; Hollingsworth v. Spaulding, 54 N. Y. 636; Bridgewater v. Brookfield, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 299; James v. Beesly, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 236. See Denham v. Cornell, 67 N. Y. 560; Sheldon v. Rice, 30 Mich. 296; Humphreys v. Taylor, 5 Oregon, 260.

² Brown v. Strickland, 32 Me. 174.

³ Ludlow v. Johnson, 3 Ohio, 553; Burdyne v. Mackey, 7 Mo. 374.

⁴ Campbell v. Kuhn, 45 Mich. 513; s. c. 40 Am. Rep. 479.

⁵ Hathaway v. Valentine, 14 Mass. 501; Humphreys v. Taylor, 5 Oregon, 260; Morrill v. Menifee, 5 Ark. 629.

⁶ See Carnall v. Wilson, 21 Ark. 62; Sisk v. Almon, 34 Ark. 391.

⁷ Duchane v. Goodtitle, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 117. See Williams on Executors (6th Am. ed.), vol. 1, pp. 746, 749; Olendorf v. Cook, 1 Lansing (N. Y.), 37; Cole on Eject. 533.

⁸ Mosher v. Yost, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 277; Metters v. Brown, 1 H. & C. 686; Murdock v. Ratcliff, 7 Ohio, 119; Moreton's Case, 1 Ventris, 30; Slade's Case, 4 Rep. 95 a (2 Co. 510); Doe v. Bradbury, 2 D. & R. 706; s. c. 16 Eng. Com. Law, 115; Lewis' Heirs v. Ringo, 3 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 247; Payne v. Harris, 3 Strobbh. Eq. (S. C.) 39.

⁹ Peytoe's Case, 9 Rep. 78 b; (5 Coke, 143); Russell v. Prat, cited in 1 Anderson, 243. See Gutzweiler v. Lackmann, 39 Mo. 91; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 192. Compare People v. McAdam, 84 N. Y. 287; Smith v. Dodds, 35 Ind. 452.

for a part of the term, with condition of re-entry for non-payment of rent, may bring the action.¹ So may an administrator of a tenant from year to year,² and it seems to be immaterial whether the ouster occurred before or after the death of the testator or intestate. In a case in England, two of three executors were permitted to recover in ejectment, on a joint demise, a mortgage term which belonged to their testator.³ Ejectment has been upheld in England on a demise laid before probate granted,⁴ and before letters of administration were issued.⁵ In Alabama the executor, suing in his representative capacity, and the devisees under the will, cannot join in ejectment.⁶ Under the peculiar practice in Pennsylvania, an administrator cum testamento annexo may maintain ejectment to enforce payment of the purchase-money for land sold by a deceased executor prior to his death under a power in a will.⁷

§ 209. Freehold terms or leases.—But the executor has no interest in freehold terms or leases, and the New York Supreme Court held that, where the testator conveyed land in fee, reserving a right of re-entry for non-payment of rent, the executor could not bring ejectment for the forfeiture, because, if successful, he would thereby be invested with the original estate, that is, with a fee simple, a species of property to which the functions and duties of an executor bear no relation.⁸

§ 210. When executors or administrators may sue.—Though ordinarily, as we have seen, an executor has no interest in the freehold, yet where, by the provisions of the will, he is authorized to enter on the land and lease or otherwise dispose of it, he has a right to maintain eject-

¹ Van Rensselaer v. Hayes, 5 Denio (N. Y.), 477.

² Doe v. Porter, 3 T. R. 13.

³ Doe d. Stace v. Wheeler, 15 M. & W. 622.

⁴ Roe d. Bendall v. Summerset, 2 W. Bl. 692.

⁵ Patten v. Patten, Alc. & N. 493.

⁶ Tarver v. Smith, 38 Ala. 135.

⁷ Cornell v. Green, 10 S. & R. (Penn.) 14.

⁸ Van Rensselaer v. Hayes, 5 Denio (N. Y.), 477.

ment.¹ And where lands had been devised to trustees with power to convert the same into money, invest the proceeds, and receive and apply the income for the benefit of persons designated in the will, the trustees were held to be seized of a sufficient estate to enable them to bring ejectment.² In Pennsylvania, executors empowered by will to sell real estate may bring ejectment for it,³ and it has been held that the executors may bring the action when no one is designated in the will to execute the power.⁴ In Tennessee it has been held that an executor cannot maintain an action for mesne profits of the land, even though clothed with a power of sale.⁵ An executor appointed under a will in Virginia, to whom lands in Kentucky have been devised, need not take out letters testamentary in the latter State to enable him to maintain ejectment for the lands.⁶ In Michigan an administrator has been held entitled to maintain ejectment for lands which he acquired by foreclosure of a mortgage left by his intestate.⁷ The title in such a case is taken by the administrator in trust for the estate, and the land is treated as personal property.⁸ In New York, when the purchaser of real estate at execution sale dies previous to the execution of the sheriff's deed, the conveyance must be made to his personal representatives, who may bring ejectment for the land on a title so acquired, without joining the heirs.⁹

§ 211. Statutory changes.—In California, during administration of an estate, and until distribution, the executor or administrator is entitled to the possession of the real prop-

¹ Duchane v. Goodtitle, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 117.

² McLean v. Macdonald, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 534.

³ Chew's Ex'rs v. Chew, 28 Penn. St. 17.

⁴ Kirk v. Carr, 54 Penn. St. 285.

⁵ Brown v. McCloud, 3 Head (Tenn.), 280.

⁶ Lewis v. McFarland, 9 Cranch, 151.

⁷ Kunzie v. Wixom, 39 Mich. 384.

⁸ Valentine v. Belden, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 537.

⁹ Reynolds v. Darling, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 418. The question of the right of an administrator with the will annexed to execute a power of sale of real estate given to an executor or trustee under a will is involved in some obscurity in New York. See Onderdonk v. Ackerman, 23 N. Y. Daily Reg. 1165 (New York Court of Appeals); Bain v. Matterson, 54 N. Y. 663; Roome v. Phillips, 27 N. Y. 357; Hood v. Hood, 85 N. Y. 571.

erty, and may recover it from the heir or devisee.¹ In Michigan the statutory right of the administrator, before final settlement, to the possession and to the rents and profits of the real property, may be enforced by ejectment.² A similar statutory policy prevails in Minnesota.³ In Alabama an executor or administrator has such a right to the possession of land of his testator or intestate, that he may bring ejectment without reference to the solvency of the estate,⁴ and it has been held in that State, that, where the plaintiff brings the action as an individual, the complaint may be so amended as to show that he sues as administrator.⁵ In Missouri, however, an executor suing in his representative capacity was not allowed to recover by virtue of his individual interest.⁶ An administrator in Florida may maintain ejectment,⁷ but cannot have partition.⁸

§ 212. Reversioners — conditions subsequent. — A grantor may maintain ejectment, after a breach of a condition subsequent, to recover the premises conveyed subject to such condition;⁹ usually all the original grantors or their heirs must join in the action.¹⁰ The grantors are reversioners, and such an interest in real estate is not and does not become a title till after entry,¹¹ or the recovery of possession; until then the title of the defendant is not divested.¹² “Such interest,” says the New York Supreme Court, “being joint,

¹ Page v. Tucker, 54 Cal. 121; See McCrea v. Haraszthy, 51 Cal. 146; McClelland v. Dickenson, 2 Utah, 100.

² Kline v. Moulton, 11 Mich. 370. But see Warren v. Tobey, 32 Mich. 45.

³ Miller v. Hoberg, 22 Minn. 249; see Menifee v. Menifee, 8 Ark. 9.

⁴ McRae v. McDonald, 57 Ala. 423; Russell v. Erwin, 41 Ala. 292; Golding v. Golding, 24 Ala. 122.

⁵ Agee v. Williams, 30 Ala. 636.

⁶ Burdyne v. Mackey, 7 Mo. 374.

⁷ Sanchez v. Hart, 17 Fla. 507.

⁸ Whitlock v. Willard, 18 Fla. 156.

⁹ Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 38 Wis. 165; Bogie v. Bogie, 41 Wis. 209; Bear v. Whisler, 7 Watts (Pa.), 144; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693.

¹⁰ Cook v. St. Paul's Church, 5 Hun (N. Y.), 293; aff'd 67 N. Y. 594. In New Jersey a plaintiff having a defeasible title is entitled to a general judgment. Hunt v. O'Neill, 44 N. J. Law, 566.

¹¹ Osgood v. Abbott, 58 Me. 73; Guild v. Richards, 16 Gray (Mass.), 309.

¹² Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693; Kenner v. American Contract Co., 9 Bush (Ky.), 202.

no less than the whole number could declare the forfeiture, nor could an action to recover possession for condition broken be sustained without the consent and joinder of all."¹ In England, by 32 Hen. VIII, c. 34, the assignee of the reversion is given a right of re-entry for condition broken and may bring the action.² Breach of the condition can only be taken advantage of by the grantors, and the right to claim and enforce it does not usually pass by a conveyance of the land,³ and is not assignable,⁴ and a stranger cannot take advantage of it.⁵ If a grantor re-enters for breach of a condition subsequent, the dower of the grantee's wife, of course, falls with the estate of her husband,⁶ and a recovery against a life tenant, for breach of a condition subsequent, destroys the lien of a judgment on the life tenant's estate.⁷ The right to enforce the forfeiture may be lost by waiver.⁸ The condition, if relied on to work a forfeiture, is construed with great strictness.⁹

§ 213. A condition in a deed that the grantee shall not at any time manufacture or sell, to be used as a beverage, any intoxicating liquor, or permit the same to be done on the premises conveyed, was held by the New York Court of Appeals to be valid, and not repugnant to the grant. The right of entry upon breach of the condition being reserved in the deed, the grantor, upon proof of the breach,

¹ Cook v. St. Paul's Church, 5 Hun (N. Y.), 293; Nicoll v. N. Y. & Erie Railway, 12 N. Y. 121. See Doe d. Patrick v. Beaufort, 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 496.

² Adams on Ejectment, 4th ed. p. *72 (120). See Sheets v. Seldon, 2 Wall. 189.

³ Towle v. Remsen, 70 N. Y. 303-312.

⁴ Underhill v. Saratoga & W. R. R. Co., 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 455; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693.

⁵ Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall. 44-63; Dewey v. Williams, 40 N. H. 222; Hooper v. Cummings, 45 Me. 359; Nicoll v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 121; Fonda v. Sage, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 109; Underhill v. Saratoga & W. R. R. Co. 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 455; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693.

⁶ Beardslee v. Beardslee, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 324. See Moore v. Esty, 5 N. H. 479.

⁷ Moore v. Pitts, 53 N. Y. 85. But see Allen v. Brown, 5 Lansing (N. Y.), 280.

⁸ Cook v. St. Paul's Church, &c., 67 N. Y. 594; Andrews v. Senter, 32 Me. 394; Hooper v. Cummings, 45 Me. 359. An elaborate consideration of the rules applicable to conditions subsequent, how construed, duration of, waiver, release, breach of, etc., may be found in a note to Cross v. Carson, 44 Am. Dec. 742, 744. The subject is too prolific of cases to admit of extended treatment in this volume. See also Hammond v. Railroad Co., 15 S. C. 10.

⁹ Crane v. Hyde Park, 135 Mass. 149.

may recover the premises in ejectment, without previous entry,¹ demand or notice. The court, in the opinion, cites with approval various cases in which conditions against the use of the premises for a school-house, distillery, blast furnace, livery stable, machine shop, powder magazine, hospital, or cemetery, have been upheld as valid.² The following clause in a deed of real estate, "This conveyance is made by us upon condition that the said O," the grantee, "will erect upon said premises a cotton factory within two years from the date hereof," was held to be a condition annexed to the estate and not a personal covenant with the grantor, and an entry for breach of the condition was not invalid for want of notice to the grantee.³ Where, however, the plaintiff sold land to a railroad corporation, which paid for the same, and agreed in the contract of sale that when the road was finished it would keep the land fenced, it was held that ejectment would not lie for the failure of the corporation to maintain fences, the agreement being merely an interproprietary regulation.⁴

§ 214. Forfeiture of life estate.—In this country a reversioner cannot maintain ejectment on the ground that the owner of the life estate has forfeited his estate by the commission of waste,⁵ nor does the life tenant forfeit his estate by claiming the fee against the reversioner,⁶ nor by consenting to a sale of it,⁷ nor by executing a deed purporting to convey the fee,⁸ and the remainder men, after the con-

¹ See Cowell v. Springs Co., 100 U. S. 58; Austin v. Cambridgeport Parish, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 215; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693; especially, Cornelius v. Ivins, 26 N. J. Law, 386, and cases cited.

² Plumb v. Tubbs, 41 N. Y. 442. See Collins Mfg. Co. v. Marcy, 25 Conn. 242; Gray v. Blanchard, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 284; Sperry's Lessee v. Pond, 5 Ohio, 388; Nicoll v. N. Y. & Erie Railway, 12 N. Y. 121; Warner v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 468; Gillis v. Bailey, 17 N. H. 18; Gibert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 165; Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co., 3 Col 82; s. c. 100 U. S. 55; Bogie v. Bogie, 41 Wis. 209; Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. 38 Wis. 165.

³ Langley v. Chapin, 134 Mass. 82. See Crane v. Hyde Park, 135 Mass. 147; Anon., 2 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 56; Craig v. Wells, 11 N. Y. 315.

⁴ Hornback v. Cincinnati & Z. R. R. Co. 21 Ohio St. 81. Compare Hammond v. Railroad Co., 15 S. C. 11.

⁵ Patrick v. Sherwood, 4 Blatch. C. C. 112. See Quimby v. Dill, 40 Me. 528.

⁶ Robinson v. Miller, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 284; see, especially, De Lancey v. Ganong, 9 N. Y. 9.

⁷ Bazemore v. Davis, 48 Ga. 341.

⁸ Carpenter v. Denoon, 29 Ohio St. 379; Quimby v. Dill, 40 Me. 528; Rogers

veyance as before, have no right to the possession during the life estate.¹ The early English doctrine that estates for life were liable to forfeiture for waste, or for alienation in fee, has been uniformly renounced in this country.² Commission of waste can be restrained by injunction, or the property preserved by the appointment of a receiver,³ and a suit for damages will lie,⁴ or an action on the case,⁵ while a conveyance of a greater estate than the life tenant possesses conveys only the title or estate which he could lawfully grant.

§ 215. Life tenant.—It has been held in North Carolina in a case where B. erected a saw-mill, house and fixtures on A.'s land, under an agreement that the same might remain as long as B. wished, that B. had a life interest in the land, so far as the use of the same might be necessary for his business, and that ejectment could be maintained to recover that interest.⁶ A widow's life estate in Michigan may be recovered in ejectment.⁷ A married woman in New York may recover a life estate in ejectment against her husband.⁸ The life tenant may also maintain trespass for injury to his possession.⁹

§ 216. Tenant for years.—A tenant of a term for years, or leasehold interest, may maintain ejectment. It was contended by counsel, in an action in the Supreme Court

v. Moore, 11 Conn. 553; Williams v. Robinson, 16 Conn. 522; McKee's Lessee v. Pfout, 3 Dall. 486; Robinson v. Miller, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 88. The life tenant should pay taxes out of income, Clark v. Middlesworth, 82 Ind. 240, and an action for damages lies for neglect so to do, Wade v. Malloy, 16 Hun (N. Y.), 226. See Pierce v. Burroughs, 58 N. H. 302; Plympton v. Boston Dispensary, 106 Mass. 547.

¹ Christie v. Gage, 71 N. Y. 193.

² 4 Kent's Com. 83, 84; Quimby v. Dill, 40 Me. 528; Patrick v. Sherwood, 4 Blatch. C. C. 112.

³ King v. King, 41 N. Y. Superior, 518; Cairns v. Chabert, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 312.

⁴ Rodgers v. Rodgers, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 595; Jesser v. Gifford, 4 Burr. 2141.

⁵ Queen's College v. Hallett, 14 East, 489; Ray v. Ayers, 5 Duer (N. Y.), 494.

⁶ Stancel v. Calvert, Winst. (N. C.) Law, 104.

⁷ Finch v. Rhodes, 49 Mich. 33.

⁸ Wood v. Wood, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 350; aff'd 83 N. Y. 575; see Batterton v. Yoakum, 17 Ill. 288; Gregg v. Tesson, 1 Black, 150; Beal v. Harmon, 38 Mo. 435.

⁹ Zimmerman v. Shreeve, 59 Md. 357; s. c. 27 Alb. L. J. 499; Lane v. Thompson, 43 N. H. 320. For proceedings to discover death of life tenant see N. Y. Code Civ. Pro. § 2302, et seq.

of New York, that as a term for years was a chattel interest, and constituted personal estate, the owner of the term could not maintain ejectment. But the court decided that ejectment at common law lay to recover possession of land held under a lease for years, whatever the duration of the term might be. While it is true that the subject-matter in controversy must be in its nature corporeal and capable of seizin, yet, the right of possession being shown, the nature or quality of the estate itself does not control.¹ This doctrine has been repeatedly recognized in the New York Court of Appeals in actions in which leasehold interests constituted the subject-matter of contention,² and in Pennsylvania, even where the right conferred under the lease was incorporeal.³ Ejectment may be maintained by a lessee, before entry, against a stranger wrongfully withholding the possession.⁴ A less estate than a fee simple may form the basis of an action of trespass to try title.⁵

§ 217. Tenant at will.—It has been said by the Supreme Court of Indiana that a tenant at will may maintain ejectment.⁶ The opinion is based upon the case of Stone v. Grubbam,⁷ referred to by Runnington,⁸ which sustains the tenant's right to the action against an intruder, on the theory that ejectment is in its nature an action of trespass supposed to have been committed vi et armis, and the ouster and wrong committed must be personal to the party in actual possession, hence, "the tenant at will may make a lease to punish the trespass and ejectment, otherwise there would be an injury done, and no one competent to redress it." But this authority can hardly be considered of much weight. The Supreme Court of North Carolina held that where the obligee of a bond to make titles went

¹ Olendorf v. Cook, 1 Lansing (N. Y.), 37.

² Mason v. Lord, 40 N. Y. 476; Darby v. Callaghan, 16 N. Y. 71; Trull v. Granger, 8 N. Y. 115.

³ Karns v. Tanner, 66 Penn. St. 297.

⁴ See Trull v. Granger, 8 N. Y. 115; Gardner v. Keteltas, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 330.

⁵ Thurber v. Connors, 57 Texas, 96.

⁶ Buntin v. Doe d. Duchane, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 26.

⁷ 1 Rolle 3.

⁸ Runnington on Ejectment, pp. 23, 24.

into possession, under a parol agreement to the effect that he might occupy the premises until the bond matured, he was a mere tenant at will of the obligor, and not entitled to maintain ejectment against the latter, or one taking title from him.¹ The definition of an estate at will excludes the idea of the tenant sustaining ejectment against his lessor,² for any acts of the lessor sufficient to warrant an ejectment against him would indicate a withdrawal of his assent, and constitute a termination of the tenancy. It is clear that the tenant has no certain and indefeasible estate; nothing that can be granted to a third person,³ and hence, his grantee cannot maintain or defend ejectment.

§ 218. Tenant at sufferance.—A tenant at sufferance who is evicted by his landlord, without a demand of possession, cannot maintain ejectment, for he has no interest in the land; but it has been said that he may bring trespass.⁴ Like a tenant at will, he has no estate which can be granted to a third person. “A tenancy by sufferance,” says the New York Court of Appeals, “existing only by the laches of the owner, cannot give the occupant an estate or interest capable of transmission to another.”⁵

§ 219. Tenant by the curtesy.—A tenant by the curtesy initiate may sue alone for the possession of his wife's land, and for damages for withholding it.⁶ It has been held in Pennsylvania, however, that the wife must join.⁷ At common law the husband's interest in the estates of

¹ Richardson v. Thornton, 7 Jones (N. C.) Law, 458. See Love v. Edmonston, 1 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 152.

² Jemot v. Cooly, T. Raym. 137.

³ Reckhow v. Schanck, 43 N. Y. 446. See Haythorn v. Margerem, 8 N. J. L. 324.

⁴ Doe d. Harrison v. Murrell, 8 C. & P. 134.

⁵ Reckhow v. Schanck, 43 N. Y. 448.

⁶ Wilson v. Arentz, 70 N. C. 670; Tucker v. Vance, 2 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 458; Chambers v. Handley, 3 J. J. Mar. (Ky.) 98. See Gregg v. Tesson, 1 Black, 150; Jackson v. Leek, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 339; Prescott v. Jones, 29 Ga. 58; Thompson's Lessee v. Green, 4 Ohio St. 216; Hall v. Hall, 32 O. S. 184.

⁷ Bratton v. Mitchell, 7 Watts (Pa.), 113.

which the wife was possessed, at the time of the marriage, was a freehold, he alone having the right of entry, and the present right of exclusive enjoyment. The wife could not recover the lands from a stranger, even though her husband was joined as defendant, and disclaimed title, and admitted the wife's right to possession.¹

§ 220. Married women.—In most of our States the right to hold and enjoy real property, free from the interference or control of their husbands, has been conferred by statute on married women. Their rights have been a frequent subject of legislation.² It will be remembered that at common law her deed was void,³ and the husband was entitled to the possession of her lands.⁴ A wife may now, in some States, maintain ejectment for her lands,⁵ even against her husband,⁶ and may recover a term for years without joining her husband,⁷ and in Illinois may sue for homestead.⁸ She may lose her property by adverse possession.⁹ By the common law a woman upon her marriage takes her husband's name. That becomes her legal name, and she ceases to be known by her maiden name. By that name she must sue and be sued, make and take grants, and execute all legal documents.¹⁰

§ 221. Partners.—Ejectment for real property belonging to a firm should be brought in the name of all the persons in whom the legal estate is vested.¹¹ If one partner alone has the legal estate, he should bring the action in his own

¹ Clark v. Clark, 20 Ohio St. 128.

² See Slaughter v. Glenn, 98 U. S. 242; Burton v. Burton, 1 Keyes (N. Y.), 359; Clark v. Clark, 20 O. S. 128; Reinheimer v. Carter, 31 O. S. 579; Clarke v. Gibbons, 83 N. Y. 108; Bledsoe v. Simms, 53 Mo. 308.

³ Lefevre v. Murdock, Wright (O.), 205.

⁴ Wilson v. Garaghty, 70 Mo. 517; Hunt v. Thompson 61 Mo. 148.

⁵ See Scott v. Battle, 85 N. C. 184.

⁶ Wood v. Wood, 83 N. Y. 575; s. c. below, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 350.

⁷ Darby v. Callaghan, 16 N. Y. 71. Compare § 639, note.

⁸ Allen v. Hawley, 66 Ill. 164, 169.

⁹ Clarke v. Gibbons, 83 N. Y. 108.

¹⁰ Chapman v. Phoenix Nat'l Bank, 85 N. Y. 449. See § 426.

¹¹ 1 Lindley on Part. *482.

name,¹ and a surviving partner may recover the partnership lands against one having no title.² The real property held by a commercial firm, as partnership assets, upon the dissolution of the partnership, as between the partners, vests in the individual members thereof, as tenants in common,³ and where the interest of a partner is sold on execution it creates a dissolution of the firm, and the purchaser becomes a tenant in common as to the realty with the remaining partner.⁴ This principle has been recognized in Georgia, where it has been held that one partner cannot mortgage the interest of his copartner.⁵ In equity, partnership real estate is treated and governed by the same rules as personalty,⁶ but after the claims of partnership creditors are satisfied, and the rights and equities of the partners adjusted, it is then considered as real estate,⁷ and descends to heirs.⁸ The widow's right of dower is subject to the adjustment of the partnership affairs.⁹ It has been held in Pennsylvania, where the partnership real property is purchased with partnership funds, and the deeds are made to the partners as tenants in common, that as to creditors the deeds establish the status of the property, and that this cannot be altered by parol. This is because partners have the power of directing the application of partnership moneys to suit their own purposes, and can always secure the identity of its character in the kind of title they take

¹ Doe d. Green v. Baker, 2 Moore, 189.

² Robinson v. Roberts, 31 Conn. 145.

³ McGrath v. Sinclair, 55 Miss. 89; Galbraith v. Gedge, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 634.

⁴ Carter v. Roland, 53 Texas, 540; See § 303*a*.

⁵ Sutlive v. Jones, 61 Ga. 676.

⁶ Andrews' Heirs v. Brown, 21 Ala. 437; Black v. Black, 15 Ga. 445; Divine v. Mitchum, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 488; Coles v. Coles, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 159; Piatt v. Oliver, 3 McLean, 27; Whitney v. Cotten, 53 Miss. 689; Davis v. Christian, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 11; Mauck v. Mauck, 54 Ill. 281; Collumb v. Read, 24 N. Y. 509; Dupuy v. Leavenworth, 17 Cal. 262; In re Ransom, 17 Fed. Rep. 331, 336; Shanks v. Klein, 104 U. S. 18; Fairchild v. Fairchild, 64 N. Y. 471; Tarbell v. West, 86 N. Y. 280.

⁷ Buckley v. Buckley, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 43; In re Codding, 9 Fed. Rep. 849, especially the learned note of Mr. Ewell at pages 851-853; Scruggs v. Blair, 44 Miss. 406.

⁸ Foster's Appeal, 74 Penn. St. 391; Williamson v. Fountain, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 212; McGrath v. Sinclair, 55 Miss. 89; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 13 Allen (Mass.), 252.

⁹ Winter v. Eckert, 23 N. Y. Daily Reg. 657, and cases cited. See Greene v. Greene, 1 Ohio, 535; s. c. 13 Am. Dec. 642, and note. See § 129.

for it. If they take title as tenants in common, instead of as partners, they by their own election stamp the character of the title as to those who may subsequently deal with them.¹

§ 222. Trustees.—A trustee may recover in ejectment the lands affected by the trust even against his cestui que trust,² and may defend the legal title against the cestui que trust unless the trust has terminated, or the trustee is enjoined by a court of equity from setting up the title.³ The title of the cestui que trust being merely equitable, and the trustee being vested with the legal title or estate, real actions or remedies in the nature of ejectment must, of course, be brought in the name of the trustee.⁴ Succeeding trustees may be substituted in ejectment;⁵ and a trustee holding the legal title need not set forth in a writ of entry that he is trustee.⁶ Where the defendant deeded to the plaintiff as trustee “to seize, sell, and dispose of” the real estate in controversy, and apply the proceeds to the payment of certain debts, it was held that sufficient title passed to the trustee to support ejectment to recover the lands, to enable him to carry into effect the objects of the trust.⁷ In a case which arose in Georgia, it appeared that the plaintiff in an ejectment was appointed trustee

¹ Second National Bank of Titusville's Appeal, 83 Penn. St. 203; Ebbert's Appeal, 70 Penn. St. 79. See § 303a.

² Beach v. Beach, 14 Vt. 28; s. c. 39 Am. Dec. 204; Reade v. Reade, 8 T. R. 118; Matthews v. Ward, 10 G. & J. (Md.) 443; Starke's Lessee v. Smith, 5 Ohio, 455-458; Pownall v. Myers, 16 Vt. 415; Lincoln v. French, 105 U. S. 614; Fitzpatrick v. Fitzgerald, 13 Gray (Mass.), 402; Reece v. Allen, 10 Ill. 241; Sawyer v. Skowhegan, 57 Me. 513.

³ Stearns v. Palmer, 10 Met. (Mass.) 35; Den d. Obert v. Bordine, 20 N. J. L. 394; Nicoll v. Walworth, 4 Denio (N. Y.), 385.

⁴ Moore v. Burnet's Lessee, 11 Ohio, 334; Beach v. Beach, 14 Vt. 28; Cox v. Walker, 26 Me. 504; Hopkins v. Stephens, 2 Rand. (Va.) 422; First Baptist Soc. v. Hazen, 100 Mass. 322; Matthews v. Ward, 10 G. & J. (Md.) 443; Fitzpatrick v. Fitzgerald, 13 Gray (Mass.), 400; Chapin v. First Universalist Soc., 8 Gray (Mass.), 581; Reece v. Allen, 10 Ill. 236; Doggett v. Hart, 5 Fla. 215; Stearns v. Palmer, 10 Met. (Mass.) 35; Wake v. Tinkler, 16 East, 36; Goodtitle v. Jones, 7 T. R. 47; Methodist Soc. v. Bennett, 39 Conn. 293; McClurg v. Wilson, 43 Penn. St. 439; Baker v. Nall, 59 Mo. 265; Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.) 127 [82]; Kirkland v. Cox, 94 Ill. 400; Meth. Ep. Church v. Stewart, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 553. See Western R. R. Co. v. Nolan, 48 N. Y. 517; Smith's Lessee v. McCann, 24 How. 398.

⁵ Dillon v. Dougherty, 2 Grant (Pa.), 99.

⁶ Simpson v. Dix, 131 Mass. 179.

⁷ Cameron v. Phillips, 60 Ga. 434. See Findlay v. Artope, 48 Ga. 537.

under a marriage settlement, and vested with the title for the use of a wife, with power of disposition in her by will, and in the event of her intestacy then the property was to go to her children. Pending the ejectment the wife died. The court held that the trustee could continue the action, so as to enable him to execute the trust by recovering and turning over the possession to those entitled to it, and to accomplish this end he was allowed to add such demises as might be necessary to bring in the children as formal parties.¹ A wrong-doer cannot set up the title of the cestui que trust against the trustee.² It has been held in New York, where lands were devised to trustees with directions to convert the same into money, invest the proceeds, and collect the rents and income, and apply it during two specified lives to the use of certain parties named, that the trustees were seized of such an estate in the lands as entitled them to maintain ejectment.³

§ 223. Cestuis que trustent.—The cestui que trust, it has been held, may maintain a real action upon his equitable title against a stranger, who has no title and does not claim under the trustee,⁴ especially after the purposes of the trust have been fully accomplished⁵ though the true legal title is still in the trustee.⁶ But the remedy of the cestui que trust is usually in equity,⁷ often by injunction.⁸ A re-conveyance by the trustee may be presumed in many cases where the duty to re-convey existed.⁹

§ 224. Insolvent or bankrupt.—It has been decided, in a case which arose in Pennsylvania, that notwithstanding the assignment by an insolvent debtor passed the legal

¹ Findlay v. Artope, 48 Ga. 537.

² Hunt v. Crawford, 3 P. & W. (Penn.) 426.

³ McLean v. Macdonald, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 534. See Heermanns v. Robertson, 64 N. Y. 332-352. Contra, Doe d. Elle v. Young, 23 N. J. L. 475; reversed, 24 N. J. L. 775. See Chew's Ex'rs v. Chew, 28 Penn. St. 17.

⁴ Stearns v. Palmer, 10 Met. (Mass.) 35; Roper v. Holland, 3 Ad. & El. 99; Sloper v. Cottrell, 2 Jur. N. S. 1046. See Kennedy v. Fury, 1 Dall. 72; also note to Doggett v. Hart, 58 Am. Dec. 472.

⁵ Note to Doggett v. Hart, 58 Am. Dec. 474.

⁶ Hopkins v. Ward, 6 Munf. (Va.) 38; Goodtitle d. Hart v. Knott, Cowp. 46.

⁷ See Gillett v. Treganza, 13 Wis. 472; Hukill v. Page, 6 Biss. 183.

⁸ St. Luke's Hospital v. Barclay, 3 Blatchf. 259.

⁹ See note to Doggett v. Hart, 58 Am. Dec. 474; England v. Slade, 4 T. R.

estate in his hands, yet a trust resulted by operation of law which, as soon as the debts were satisfied, entitled the insolvent to the possession of the lands, even against his assignee, et a multo fortiori as to a stranger, against whom he might maintain ejectment in his own name. It was further held that after a lapse of fourteen years the court would, in the absence of proof to the contrary, make all necessary intendments that the debts had been paid.¹ In another case in the same State it was held that an insolvent, upon proof of payment of all the debts owing by him at the time of his discharge, could maintain ejectment in his own name, for lands assigned by him, without a formal re-assignment.² The title reverts and vests again by operation of law.³ But one discharged as an insolvent debtor, whose debts remain unpaid, cannot support an ejectment for lands of which he was divested by the assignment, though his trustees have not given the bonds required by law.⁴ The Supreme Court of California have decided that an insolvent might maintain ejectment for a right of homestead, under the insolvency laws of that State, during the pendency of an application on his part to be discharged from his debts.⁵

§ 225. Assignee of bankrupt or insolvent debtor.—An early case in Massachusetts held that an assignee in bankruptcy was not entitled to come in under the statute⁶ and prosecute a real action instituted by the bankrupt. The report of the case does not contain the reasons upon which the decision is based.⁷ A conclusion more in harmony with 682; Wilson v. Allen, 1 Jac. & W. 611; Nicoll v. Walworth, 4 Denio (N. Y.), 385; Schaffer v. Lavretta, 57 Ala. 14; Page v. Waring, 76 N. Y. 473.

¹ Ross v. M'Junkin, 14 S. & R. (Penn.) 364. See Hoag v. Hoag, 35 N. Y. 469; Colie v. Jamison, 4 Hun (N. Y.), 284; R. S. N. Y. (7th ed.) p. 2183, § 67.

² Power v. Hollman, 2 Watts (Penn.), 218.

³ Page v. Waring, 76 N. Y. 473. See Charman v. Charman, 14 Ves. 580; In re Hoyt, 3 N. B. R. 55. Perry on Trusts, §§ 351, 352, 353, 920; Cole on Eject. 554; Boyd v. Olvey, 82 Ind. 294.

⁴ Willis' Lessee v. Row, 3 Yeates (Penn.), 520.

⁵ Moore v. Morrow, 28 Cal. 551. A mortgagee of a homestead in Texas cannot maintain ejectment thereof if the forced sale of it was prohibited by the constitution of the State in force at the date of the mortgage. Lanahan v. Sears, 102 U. S. 318.

⁶ Bankrupt Act of 1800, ch. 19, § 3.

⁷ Fales v. Thompson, 1 Mass. 134.

the spirit of the bankrupt act was reached in Connecticut, where the right of the assignee of a bankrupt to maintain ejectment under the act of 1800 was upheld.¹ Similar decisions have been rendered relative to the English bankruptcy laws,² under which it is held that the assignees can eject the bankrupt himself from lands conveyed to a friendly third party in trust for him, and transferred by such third party, by order of the court, to the assignees.³ In England, both the assignee⁴ and provisional assignee⁵ of an insolvent debtor may bring ejectment for the lands of the insolvent. The right of dower is unaffected by the assignment.⁶

§ 226. Aliens.—The general rule under the former practice in England was that an alien could not maintain a real or mixed action,⁷ and this principle was recognized in an early case in North Carolina, in which the court held that an alien could not maintain ejectment, or any action for the recovery of a freehold.⁸ But in many of our States an alien may acquire land by purchase, and hold it against all the world but the State,⁹ and may convey a good title thereto, at least until after office found.¹⁰ Having this right, it naturally follows that an alien may maintain an action in the nature of ejectment to recover and protect the possession of his lands.¹¹ Thus in California a non-resident

¹ Barstow v. Adams, 2 Day (Conn.), 70.

² Smith v. Coffin, 2 H. Bla. 444.

³ Cooper v. Lands, 14 W. R. 610; s. c. 14 L. T. (N. S.) 287.

⁴ Doe d. Ibbetson v. Land, 3 D. & R. 509; Longfield on Eject. p. 179.

⁵ Doe d. Clark v. Spencer, 2 C. & P. 79.

⁶ Porter v. Lazear, 109 U. S. 88; Eberle v. Fisher, 13 Pa. St. 526; Worcester v. Clark, 2 Grant (Pa.) 84.

⁷ Co. Litt. p. 129; Shep. Touchstone, p. 204; see White v. Sabariego, 23 Tex. 243; Hardy v. De Leon, 5 Tex. 240. For a general discussion of the rights of aliens see note to Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 1 Lea. Cas. on Real Prop. 493.

⁸ Barges v. Hogg, 1 Hayw. (N. C.) 485.

⁹ Ford v. Harrington, 16 N. Y. 294; Wright v. Saddler, 20 N. Y. 320.

¹⁰ Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. 563, 589; Territory v. Lee, 2 Mont. 124-129; Fox v. Southack, 12 Mass. 143; Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475; 1 Washb. on Real Prop. p. 74 [*49]; Blount v. Horniblea, 2 Hayw. (N. C.) 36; People ex rel. v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373. An alien woman becomes naturalized by marrying a citizen. Kelly v. Owen, 7 Wall. 496. See Burton v. Burton, 1 Keyes (N. Y.), 359.

¹¹ Jenkins v. Noel, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 60; Bradstreet v. Supervisors, &c., 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 546; Ford v. Harrington, 16 N. Y. 285, 294; Overing v. Russell, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 263, and cases cited.

alien can acquire title to real property by purchase, or other act of the party, though not by descent or operation of law, and, until office found, no individual can question the rights or title of the plaintiff on the ground of alienage or non-residence.¹ The same principle has been recognized in Maryland, where the court say that the title of an alien friend could only be divested by office found, or some act done by the State to acquire the possession; and a judgment for the possession of the land in the right of the alien was upheld.²

§ 227. Receivers.—In England it was held that a receiver appointed in Chancery, with general authority to let lands from year to year, had also authority to determine such tenancies, and, therefore, might sustain ejectment.³ But the receiver, as a rule, cannot institute an action to recover the possession of land without first obtaining leave of the court so to do.⁴ In New York a receiver in supplementary proceedings obtains title to the real property of the judgment debtor within that State, by force of his appointment when perfected, without an execution of an assignment by the debtor, and may impeach transfers of real property made by the latter in fraud of creditors.⁵ He probably cannot maintain partition,⁶ nor does a receiver to sequester rents and profits in divorce obtain title to the land.⁷ The title of receivers to the property of which they are the custodians is generally statutory, and their right to maintain actions in the nature of ejectment often depends upon the wording and construction of statutes.⁸

¹ Norris v. Hoyt, 18 Cal. 217.

² McCreery v. Allender, 4 H. & McH. (Md.) 409. See People ex rel. v. Folsem, 5 Cal. 372. A devise of real estate to executors who are citizens in trust to pay the income to an alien is valid. Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357.

³ Doe d. Marsack v. Read, 12 East, 57.

⁴ Wynne v. Lord Newborough, 1 Vesey, Jr. 165; s. c. 3 Bro. C. C. 88; Green v. Winter, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 60; Sturgeon v. Douglas, 1 Hogan, 400; Conyers v. Crosbie, 6 Irish Eq. 657; Ward v. Swift, 6 Hare, 312; Hooper v. Winston, 24 Ill. 366; Merritt v. Lyon, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 410; Thompson on Prov. Rems. 488.

⁵ Porter v. Williams, 9 N. Y. 142; s. c. 59 Am. Dec. 525 and notes. See, however, Scott v. Elmore, 10 Hun (N. Y.), 68; Wing v. Disse, 15 Hun (N. Y.), 190; Chautauqua County Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 374.

⁶ See Dubois v. Cassidy, 75 N. Y. 300.

⁷ Foster v. Townshend, 68 N. Y. 203.

⁸ See Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, as to the general nature of a receiver's title.

§ 228. Indians.—An Indian may recover in ejectment lands reserved to him by treaty, and of which he has been dispossessed.¹ The Indian right of occupancy of lands in this country has already been noticed.²

§ 229. Felons.—It has been held in England that a person attainted of felony may, before office found in favor of the king, convey a title to land which will sustain ejectment.³ It would seem, however, that the title conveyed would be defeasible and subject to the crown's right of seizure after office found.⁴

§ 230. Additional illustrations.—We cannot, perhaps, further classify, to advantage, the parties who may maintain actions for the trial of title to land. Any additional discussion of exceptional cases, in a particular State, might confuse the general subject. In conclusion it may be stated that, in Mississippi, trustees of school lands may maintain ejectment, in the name of their president, for school lands wrongfully withheld from them.⁵ So may school commissioners in Tennessee.⁶ In Vermont a plaintiff vested with a proprietor's right in a town may recover in ejectment against one in possession without title.⁷ In Pennsylvania, overseers of the poor have legal capacity to maintain ejectment, and if the plaintiff in ejectment dies a pauper the overseer may be substituted in his stead.⁸ In Wisconsin a preemptor of swamp lands may sustain ejectment therefor.⁹ In Ohio a religious society may maintain ejectment by its trustees.¹⁰ The owner of a conditional fee may, until a breach of the condition, maintain eject-

Concerning the right of a receiver to sue in a foreign jurisdiction, see Booth v. Clark, 17 How. 332; Field v. Ripley, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 26.

¹ Coleman v. Doe d. Tish-ho-mah, 12 Miss. 40. See Cornet v. Winton, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 144; Marsh v. Brooks, 8 How. 232.

² See § 194; United States v. Cook, 19 Wall. 592; Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 271; Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S. 517.

³ Doe d. Griffith v. Pritchard, 5 B. & Adol. 765.

⁴ See Cole on Eject. 573.

⁵ Windham v. Chisholm, 35 Miss. 531.

⁶ Bowers v. School Com'rs, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 117.

⁷ Pomeroy v. Mills, 3 Vt. 410.

⁸ Jester v. Overseers, &c., 11 Penn. St. 540.

⁹ Manny v. Smith, 10 Wis. 509.

¹⁰ First Presbyterian Society v. Smithers, 12 Ohio St. 248. See § 144.

ment;¹ the grantor of a conditional deed may institute suit where the right of possession remains in him until compliance with the conditions,² and the assignee of a rent charge may take advantage of a clause of re-entry and bring the action.³ The grantee of a deed containing covenants of warranty may bring ejectment against his grantor who remains in possession,⁴ and the grantee of an ordinary quitclaim deed may, of course, maintain ejectment if his grantor could have done so.⁵ Where it appeared that the plaintiff purchased from the mortgagor, but his name had been omitted as a party defendant in proceedings subsequently instituted to foreclose the mortgage, it was held in Illinois that he could not maintain ejectment against the purchaser at foreclosure sale, though he was unaffected by the decree, and had the right to redeem.⁶ The nature of the titles which will support actions for the trial of title and recovery of possession of land will be incidentally discussed in subsequent portions of this treatise.

¹ Candee v. Burke, 1 Hun (N. Y.), 546; Olmsted v. Harvey, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 102.

² Bennett v. Criswell, 27 Hun (N. Y.), 554.

³ Farley v. Craig, 11 N. J. L. 262.

⁴ Dodge v. Walley, 22 Cal. 225.

⁵ Sullivan v. Davis, 4 Cal. 291.

⁶ Kelgour v. Wood, 64 Ill. 345. See Howard v. Railway Company, 101 U. S. 837.

CHAPTER VII.

PARTIES DEFENDANT.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 231. Party in possession. 232. Abandonment of possession. 233. Defendants in writs of entry. 234. Unoccupied lands. 235. Claim of adverse title. 236. Proof of possession. 237. Possession of a part of the land. 238. Joinder of defendants. 239. Defendants claiming distinct parcels. 240. Claiming under distinct titles. 241. Squatters. 242. Servants or employees. 243. Clergymen and trustees of religious corporations. 244. { 245. { Ejectment against the United 246. { States. 247. { 248. { 248a. { The Arlington case. 249. { 249a. United States v. Lee further explained. | § 250. Ejectment against corporations 251. County. 252. City. 252a. Receivers. 253. Insolvents. 253a. Aliens. 254. Infants. 255. Husband and wife. 256. Widow. 257. Defendant claiming under tax title. 258. Tenant at will. 259. Who may come in and defend. 260. Parties claiming by title paramount to both litigants. 261. Parties claiming in opposition to defendant's title. 262. Mortgagee. 263. Purchaser pendente lite. 264. Landlord as defendant. 265. Party claiming as landlord. 266. Marvin v. Dennison discussed. 266a. Relief between defendants. |
|--|---|

§ 231. Party in possession.—Ejectment, as we have seen, is a possessory action which must be instituted by a party who has been disseized, or from whom the possession of the land is wrongfully withheld. There must be actual interference with the possession.¹ Actual possession is the same as pedis possessio or pedis positio, and these mean a foothold on the land, an actual entry, a standing upon it, a real demonstrative act done.² Black, J., in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, said : “Ejectment is a possessory action. It is designed to redress no other wrong than that of holding the true

¹ Towle v. Ayer, 8 N. H. 57; Field v. Hawley, 126 Mass. 327; Favour v. Sargent, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 5.

² Churchill v. Onderdonk, 59 N. Y. 136.

owner out of possession, and it cannot be maintained for land of which the plaintiff is himself in possession.”¹ If the object of the action is to establish a title, the claimant or holder of the adverse title must be made a defendant if it is intended that the judgment should conclude him. The action must usually be brought against the tenant or person in the actual occupation or enjoyment of the lands. He is a necessary party defendant for the reason that he is the party who withholds the possession.² Usually all the parties in possession should be summoned.³ By the party in possession is meant the actual occupant “as against the plaintiff;” i. e., holding in hostility to and not in privity with him.⁴ And, as a general rule, the defendants in ejectment cannot, on motion, require the plaintiff to bring in other parties as defendants, who are not alleged to have been in possession of the land at the commencement of the action.⁵ The question of possession is usually submitted to the jury.⁶

It must, in short, appear that there has been a disseizin of the plaintiff as well as a wrongful possession of the premises described in the complaint by the defendant.⁷

We may observe that no decree annulling or affecting the title of parties to land can be rendered without the

¹ Kribbs v. Downing, 25 Penn. St. 399-404; Van Horne v. Everson, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 531; Reed v. Tyler, 56 Ill. 288; Ellicott v. Mosier, 7 N. Y. 201. See § 93; Chamberlin v. Donahue, 41 Vt. 306; Sears v. Taylor, 4 Col. 38; Anderson v. Smith, 2 Mackey, (D. C.) 275.

² Rodgers v. Bell, 53 Ga. 94; Hawkins v. Reichert, 28 Cal. 534; Simms v. Richardson, 32 Ark. 304; Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 270; Betz v. Mullin, 62 Ala. 365; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; Owen v. Fowler, 24 Cal. 192; Lucas v. Johnson, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 244; Lyle v. Rollins, 25 Cal. 440; Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271; Bonner v. Greenlee's Heirs, 6 Ala. 411; Taylor v. Crane, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 358; Jackson v. Allen, 30 Ark. 110; Schuyler v. Marsh, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 350; Albertson v. Reding, 2 Murphey (N. C.), 283; Allen v. Dunlap, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 585; Banyer v. Empie, 5 Hill (N. Y.), 48; Lockwood v. Drake, 1 Mich. 14; Kilgour v. Gockley, 83 Ill. 109; Finnegan v. Carraher, 47 N. Y. 493; People v. Ambrecht, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97; Goodright v. Rich, 7 T. R. 327. See § 161. Forcible entry proceedings lie against an agent if guilty as well as against the principal. Bailey v. Bailey, 61 Me. 361.

³ Irish v. Scovil, 6 Binn. (Penn.) 55.

⁴ Strong v. City of Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1. See Childs v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 246; Redfield v. Utica & S. R. R. Co., 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 54.

⁵ Simms v. Richardson, 32 Ark. 304. See Webster v. Bond, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 437.

⁶ Gross v. Welwood, 90 N. Y. 638. See Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 46; Martin v. Rector, 30 Hun (N. Y.), 138; s. c. 17 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 240.

⁷ Chamberlin v. Donahue, 41 Vt. 306.

presence of such parties; they are entitled to their day in court.¹

§ 232. Abandonment of possession.—A party in possession of lands may, of course, abandon the premises at any time, and whether the owner accepts such abandonment or not, if the party is out of possession by his own act, at the time the ejectment is instituted against him, the plaintiff cannot recover.² Thus, when a mechanic, having possession of a school-house for the purpose of making repairs, offered to deliver the key which was the only symbol of possession he had, to one of the trustees of the district school, it was held by the New York Supreme Court, that his act constituted an abandonment of the possession, and that a subsequent action of ejectment could not be maintained against him, whether one or all of the trustees were present at the time the key was offered, or whether the offer was accepted or not.³

§ 233. Defendants in writs of entry.—As a general rule a writ of entry will only lie against one claiming an estate not less than a freehold, but in Maine it has been held that if the person in possession has actually ousted the demandant, or withheld the possession, the demandant may, at his election, consider him a disseizor for the purpose of trying the right, though claiming an estate less than a freehold.⁴ Formerly, in Massachusetts, a writ of entry could not be brought against a tenant at will who refused to surrender the premises on demand, as the writ would only lie against a tenant of the freehold; but the right has since been conferred by statute.⁵

§ 234. Unoccupied lands.—Under the modern practice, if the premises are not occupied, the action can usually be

¹ United States v. Central Pacific R. R., 8 Sawyer, 92; s. f. Shields v. Barrow 17 How. 130; Coiron v. Millaudon, 19 How. 113; Barney v. Baltimore City, 6 Wall. 285; Bank v. Carrollton R. R., 11 Wall. 624.

² It is a complete defense in ejectment that the party sued is not an actual occupant. Porter v. McGrath, 41 N. Y. Superior, 84. See Shaver v. McGraw, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 558.

³ Allen v. Dunlap, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 585.

⁴ Wyman v. Brown, 50 Me. 139; Gregory v. Tozier, 24 Me. 308.

⁵ See Dolby v. Miller, 2 Gray (Mass.), 135; Gregory v. Tozier, 24 Me. 308.

instituted against any one exercising acts of ownership over the lands,¹ and under such circumstances acts of trespass by one claiming title may be considered as acts of possession.² Any subjection of the property to the will and dominion of the party is sufficient.³ Such subjection may be shown by its cultivation, or by any other substantial use as well as by residence thereon.

§ 235. Claim of adverse title.—It has been held in Wisconsin, that a grantee in a tax deed, who had never occupied the premises, by placing the tax deed upon record might be considered as asserting and claiming title to the land, and could properly be made a party defendant in ejectment.⁴ So it was decided, under the practice in Virginia, that any person who had made entries and surveys of any part of the land in controversy, and set up claims to it, though not in the actual possession at the time the action was instituted, could be made a party defendant.⁵ Any person claiming title to the lands adversely to the plaintiff, though not in actual occupation, may be made a party defendant.⁶ An idle declaration, however, made by the defendant that he owns the land, will not be sufficient to justify the action;⁷ but if the defendant seriously and deliberately lays claim to the title he does so at the peril of making good the claim, for he should not set up title to land unless he is prepared to defend it.⁸

§ 236. Proof of possession.—It is usually an indispensable part of the plaintiff's case in ejectment to show that, at the commencement of the action, the defendant was in possession of at least some portion of the lands to which the

¹ Hanson v. Armstrong, 22 Ill. 442; Langford v. Love, 3 Sneed (Tenn.), 308; Hill v. Kricke, 11 Wis. 442.

² Chilson v. Buttolph, 12 Vt. 231; Doolittle v. Linsley, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 155; Sawyer v. Newland, 9 Vt. 383.

³ Quicksilver Mining Co. v. Hicks, 4 Sawyer, 688. See Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 270.

⁴ Hill v. Kricke, 11 Wis. 442.

⁵ See Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 328.

⁶ Carter v. Hunt, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 89; Abeel v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513; Mordecai v. Oliver, 3 Hawks (N. C.), 479. See Langford v. Love, 3 Sneed (Tenn.), 308.

⁷ Lucas v. Johnson, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 244.

⁸ Banyer v. Empie, 5 Hill (N. Y.), 48. See Abeel v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513; s. c. 2 Tr. App. (N. Y.) 99.

plaintiff seeks to establish title,¹ and, as already shown, if the defendant proves that he abandoned the premises before the action was commenced, the plaintiff's case cannot be sustained.² It has been decided, however, to be sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that a third person is in actual possession under the defendant, especially if such possession is held under a lease or written contract;³ and in California it has been expressly ruled that the possession need not be actual as distinguished from constructive in its character.⁴ In Pennsylvania, proof of service of the writ is prima facie evidence of the possession of the defendant.⁵ Working a quarry may be considered evidence of possession.⁶ There are substantial objections to the practice of requiring the plaintiff in actions to try title to prove that the defendant is in possession and exercising acts of ownership over the land. It is often very difficult, and sometimes practically impossible, to distinguish between acts which constitute merely trespasses on the land and acts amounting to a claim of title, or an exercise of ownership over it, and though trespass and ejectment are distinct remedies, which must not be confounded, it is not an easy task to find the dividing line. The practice of encumbering actions for the trial of title with this issue of the possession of the defendant often results in the miscarriage of the action, and places the claimant in an extremely awkward position.⁷ Thus questions of fact involving the title are sometimes submitted to the jury, together with disputed facts as to the possession or occupancy of the lands by the defendant, and the jury under the practice in some States is allowed to render a general verdict. If the verdict is rendered, and a judgment entered for the defendant on the ¹ Brown v. Brackett, 45 Cal. 167; Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268; Flanniken v. Lee, 1 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 293; Doe v. Roe, 30 Ga. 553; Ward v. Parks, 72 N. C. 452; Williamson v. Doe d. Crawford, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 12.

² Allen v. Dunlap, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 585. See § 232.

³ Hurd v. Tuttle, 2 D. Chip. (Vt.) 43. See Smith v. Walker, 18 Miss. 584.

⁴ Crane v. Ghirardelli, 45 Cal. 235; Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 609; Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268.

⁵ Kirkland v. Thompson, 51 Penn. St. 216.

⁶ See Donovan v. Vandemark, 88 N. Y. 668.

⁷ See § 551.

ground that he has not withheld the possession, then the object of the action is not accomplished, and, though the plaintiff may have a perfect title to the land, yet there is a judgment record showing that he was defeated in an action of ejectment, in which that title was apparently involved. The questions involved in the trial of the title to land are so important that neither the courts, the litigants, nor the juries ought to be called upon to consider the secondary and collateral question as to the possession of the defendant. The title alone should be brought in issue, and not complicated and embarrassed by disputed questions of possession. A still further embarrassment must be noticed. The defendant may be vested with an easement or profit a prendre upon or over the land, the enjoyment of which carries with it many of the elements which constitute the proofs of ordinary possession. It is sometimes practically impossible to discover whether or not the acts amount to a disseizin, a trespass, or a legal exercise of the rights conferred by the servitude. If the owner brings trespass he may fail because the jury find the possession in the defendant as proprietor of the easement. If ejectment is resorted to this carries with it the dangerous admission as to the possession of the defendant, for if the defendant relies upon adverse possession, the plaintiff is practically called upon to prove what may constitute an important or vital part of his adversary's case. Thus, in Lawrence v. Ballou,¹ the court held that it could not be claimed that the defendant was present and in the actual occupation for the purpose of being sued, and at the same time ignore its presence and occupation when relied upon as constituting an adverse possession and defense.

§ 237. Possession of a part of the land.—Upon proof that the plaintiff is in possession of a portion of the demanded premises he cannot recover judgment for that portion. The Supreme Court of California, in Mahoney v. Middleton,² says that the error of rendering a judgment against a defendant for land not in his possession, might be immaterial were it not for the rule rendering the judgment evidence against the defendant, in a suit for the recovery of damages and mesne profits. The plaintiff is entitled to a verdict if he can show wrongful possession by the defendant of any part, no matter how small, of the land claimed in the declaration.¹

¹ 50 Cal. 264.

² 41 Cal. 41.

§ 238. Joinder of defendants.—Under the practice in some States, the landlord may be joined as a party defendant with his tenants.² All the tenants should be made parties defendant.³ One in possession of the whole may be joined with another in possession of a portion of the same land.⁴ So, as shown elsewhere, husband and wife may be joined in certain cases,⁵ and the mortgagee with the party in possession,⁶ and parties occupying by a joint possession should all be made defendants.⁷ In an action of ejectment in New York against four defendants, the complaint charged that one of them unjustly claimed title to the premises, that the others were in possession under him, and that all the defendants unjustly withheld the possession. The answer merely denied the allegation as to withholding possession, and alleged that one of the defendants was the owner, and entitled to the premises. The defendants were allowed to prove, under objection, that they occupied, severally, distinct parcels of the premises. The court decided that under the pleadings the plaintiff was entitled to recover against all the defendants, and that if there was an improper joinder of parties the objection should have been raised by demurrer or answer.⁸ It is clear that if the defendants unite in a joint denial they are liable to a joint ¹ Gilliam v. Bird, 8 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 280; s. c. 49 Am. Dec. 379; Huggins v. Ketchum, 4 Dev. & B. (N. C.) Law, 415.

² Harkey v. Houston, 65 N. C. 137; Fosgate v. The Herkimer Co., 12 N. Y. 580; Abeel v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513; Wilson v. Guthrie, 2 Grant (Penn.), 111; Pearce v. Ferris, 10 N. Y. 280; More v. Deyoe, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 208.

³ See Doe d. Williamson v. Roe, 10 Moore, 493; Doe d. Darlington v. Cock, 4 B. & C. 259.

⁴ Rank v. Levinus, 50 N. Y. Superior, 159.

⁵ Stewart v. Patrick, 68 N. Y. 450. See § 255.

⁶ Marvin v. Dennison, 1 Blatchf. C. C. 159.

⁷ See Fosgate v. Herkimer Co., 12 N. Y. 580; Harkey v. Houston, 65 N. C. 137.

⁸ Fosgate v. Herkimer Co., 12 N. Y. 580. See Dillaye v. Wilson, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 261; Ames v. Harper, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 56; Camden v. Haskill, 3 Rand. (Va.) 462; Cunningham v. Bradley, 26 Ga. 238.

verdict.¹ The plaintiff may dismiss the action as to some defendants, and proceed against others.² A party cannot, however, for the purpose of defeating an ejectment, rely upon the non-joinder as defendant of any person occupying the premises with him under a claim of right that is merely subordinate to, and wholly inseparable from, his own possession. Hence, where a man furnished his son with money to enable him to buy a farm, and lived with him upon it, working the farm and receiving a certain proportion of the crops, and occupying rooms in the house exclusively, claiming a right to remain on the premises, it was held that these facts did not in themselves make it necessary to implead him as a joint defendant with his son in an action of ejectment.³

The embarrassments incident to interposing equitable defenses which require the presence of additional parties on the record will be noticed presently.⁴

§ 239. Defendants claiming distinct parcels.—In Fisher v. Hepburn,⁵ in the New York Court of Appeals, it was held that where different parties claimed distinct parcels of the real property in question, but all denied plaintiff's rights upon the same ground, and claimed title from the same source, it was proper to join them all as defendants in the same action or proceeding. And in Minnesota it was decided that where the possession of the land was wrongfully withheld by two persons, both were liable to a suit, and the fact that one was acting as an agent for the other afforded no protection.⁶ On the other hand, it has been held in Michigan that where ejectment was instituted against two defendants it was error to direct a verdict for the plaintiff unless a joint occupancy was shown.⁷ In Pearce v. Fer-

¹ Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28; Jones v. Hartley, 3 Whart. (Penn.) 191.

² Dimick v. Deringer, 32 Cal. 488; Reed v. Calderwood, 22 Cal. 464.

³ Hendricks v. Rasson, 49 Mich. 83.

⁴ See § 488. Webster v. Bond, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 437. Compare Sawyer v. Chambers, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 110.

⁵ 48 N. Y. 41. See § 128; Boles v. Cohen, 15 Cal. 150. See Gibbons v. Martin, 4 Sawyer, 206.

⁶ Wells v. Atkinson, 24 Minn. 161. See Humphries v. Huffman, 33 O. S. 395.

⁷ Murphy v. Campau, 33 Mich. 71. A suit to quiet the title of three separate tracts of land formerly owned by different persons, was held to be bad for misjoinder. Turner v. Duchman, 23 Wis. 500.

ris,¹ it appeared that the defendants occupied, separately, different parts of a house which had been wrongfully continued on the land after the expiration of a lease. The owner brought ejectment against them jointly, and it was held that, as they all used the land in common, to sustain and support the house, they were all joint trespassers as against the plaintiff, who only claimed the land, and that plaintiff was not bound to elect against which defendant he desired to take a verdict. And in Michigan it was held that if a distinct portion of a house is occupied by any person, it is proper to join him as defendant, but the suit would not fail by reason of the non-joinder, as the only effect would be to limit the recovery by excluding that portion of the premises which he occupied.² In ejectment against a number of persons, who are severally in possession of different parcels of the demanded premises, where no damages or mesne profits are claimed, the recovery against each defendant should be confined to the parcel in his possession.³ At common law in ejectment for lands, distinct parcels of which were in the several occupation of different persons, no direct objection to the misjoinder could be made, as by plea in abatement, but the parties might apply to the court to be allowed to enter into the consent rule and plead separately. But even if they pleaded jointly, evidence might be given on the trial to show that the defendants occupied distinct parcels, and in such cases, if the plaintiff was entitled to recover, there was verdict and judgment severally for the parcels respectively occupied by the defendants.⁴ On the other hand, if the defendants plead the general issue and fail to show what or how much they claim, a general verdict against them will be good, and this whether their possession be joint or several.⁵

¹ 10 N. Y. 280. See Winton v. Cornish, 5 Ohio, 477; Kerr v. Merchants' Ex. Co. 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 315; Stockwell v. Hunter, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 448.

² Hendricks v. Rasson, 42 Mich. 104.

³ Mahoney v. Middleton, 41 Cal. 41.

⁴ See Gibbons v. Martin, 4 Sawyer, 206; Bayard v. Colefax, 4 Wash. C. C. 38; Jackson v. Woods, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 278. But see Camden v. Haskill, 3 Rand. (Va.) 462; White v. Pickering, 12 S. & R. (Penn.) 435; Greer v. Mezes, 24 How. 268.

⁵ Greer v. Mezes, 24 How. 268.

§ 240. Claiming under distinct titles.—In Helfenstein v. Leonard,¹ in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, which was ejectment for several distinct properties against several defendants, it was held that they could defend separately on separate titles, but if the titles were identical, as where the parties occupied the position of a landlord and tenant of the same premises, and the defendants had the same interest to defend, it was error to permit a severance at the trial. It was held, however, in Georgia, that where the defendants claimed under distinct titles a joint recovery could not be had;² but in the event of a misjoinder of defendants the plaintiff may usually, under the modern practice, move to strike out the unnecessary parties, and proceed against those properly joined.³

- § 241. Squatters.—The owner of the fee can maintain ejectment against a mere squatter, who neither makes claim to nor has color of title.⁴ And it was held in the
- Circuit Court of the United States for the district of Oregon, that if several defendants were mere trespassers or squatters on land without color of right, or definite claims to distinct parcels, or established and visible boundaries, they might be joined as defendants in a single action, for the reason that the plaintiff could not be expected to know how they claimed, or to what extent.⁵ In Greer v. Mezes,⁶ in the Supreme Court of the United States, the rule is stated as follows: “In the action of ejectment a plaintiff will not be allowed to join in one suit several and distinct parcels, tenements, or tracts of land in possession of several defendants, each claiming for himself. But he is not bound to bring a separate action against several trespassers on his single, separate, and distinct tenement or parcel of land. As to him they are all trespassers, and he cannot know how they claim, whether jointly or severally; or, if severally, how much each one claims; nor is it necessary

¹ 50 Penn. St. 461. See § 128.

² Wood v. McGuire, 17 Ga. 303. See Cunningham v. Bradley, 26 Ga. 238.

³ See Cunningham v. Bradley, 26 Ga. 238.

⁴ Sykes v. Hayes, 5 Bissell, 529.

⁵ Gibbons v. Martin, 4 Sawyer, 206.

⁶ 24 How. 277.

to make such proof in order to support his action. Each defendant has a right to take defense specially for such portion of the land as he claims, and by doing so he necessarily disclaims any title to the residue of the land described in the declaration; and if on the trial he succeeds in establishing his title to so much of it as he has taken defense for, and in showing that he was not in possession of any of the remainder disclaimed, he will be entitled to a verdict. He may also demand a separate trial, and that his case be not complicated or impeded by the issues made with others, or himself made liable for costs unconnected with his separate litigation." It may be here observed that possession of public land, by a mere squatter, will afford no basis for the presumption of a grant,¹ and that a squatter who entered as a tenant at will, disclaiming title, cannot change the character of his possession so as to make it adverse by secretly attorning to another.²

§ 242. Servants or employees.—A servant or employee claiming no title or interest in himself, or any right to the possession, is not usually liable to an action of ejectment. Such an employee is not an occupant within the meaning of the rules of law governing ejectment. He is acting under the control of another, and it is only in another's right that he occupies the premises.³

§ 243. Clergymen and trustees of religious corporations.—On this principle it has been held in the Supreme Court of Illinois, that a clergyman who preached in a church edifice, under the direction and employment of a religious corporation, was not liable to an action of ejectment. As well, say the court, might the claimant of a farm bring his action against the men employed to cultivate the farm.⁴ Even in

¹ Miller v. Brownson, 50 Tex. 583.

² Gay v. Mitchell, 35 Ga. 139.

³ Hawkins v. Reichert, 28 Cal. 534; Polack v. Mansfield, 44 Cal. 36; Doe v. Staunton, 1 Chit. 119. It has been held, however, in New York, in an ejectment in which it appeared that the premises were not actually occupied, but work was being done thereon by a servant of a person making claim thereto, that the servant was the person exercising acts of ownership over the land, and was the proper party defendant. Shaver v. McGraw, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 558. But see People v. Ambrecht, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97; Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 225.

⁴ Chiniquy v. Catholic Bishop, 41 Ill. 148; Chatard v. O'Donovan, 80 Ind. 29.

England, a parson claiming a right to enter and perform divine service has been held not to have a sufficient title to be admitted as a defendant.¹ It has been decided in New York, that where the property in controversy was a church edifice occupied and used by a society for the purpose of religious worship, it was to be deemed to be in the possession of the corporation, and ejectment would not lie against the trustees or other officers of the church.²

§ 244. Ejectment against the United States.—An interesting question is presented as to who shall be made the defendant, and how a claimant shall proceed to recover the possession of, or try the title to, lands of which the United States government are in possession, by its officers, employees, tenants, or agents. It has been held in England, that ejectment will not lie for lands belonging to the crown, or of which the crown is in possession by its officers; the proper remedy is by petition of right,³ which may be brought in all cases where the crown has, through misinformation or inadvertence, wrongfully possessed itself of the lands or chattel property of a subject. It is a fundamental principle that the government cannot be summoned into its own courts against its will. "It is inherent in the nature of sovereignty not to be amenable to the suit of an individual without its consent. This is the general sense and the general practice of mankind."⁴ A bill cannot be sustained that calls for an interference with the operations of the executive departments of the government;⁵ and money in the hands of an officer of the government, as purser, cannot be attached by creditors of seamen to whom it is

¹ Martin v. Davis, Stra. 914. But see Hillingsworth v. Brewster, 1 Salk. 256.

² Lucas v. Johnson, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 244. See § 144.

³ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 18 [*21]; Doe v. Leigh v. Roe, 8 M. & W. 579; see Atty. Gen'l v. Hallett, 15 M. & W. 106; Broom's Constitutional Law, p. 241; 3 Bla. Com. p. 255.

⁴ Federalist, No. 81; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264-380; United States v. Clarke, 8 Pet. 436, 444; United States v. Eckford, 6 Wall. 484; Hill v. United States, 9 How. 386-389; Reese v. Walker, 11 How. 272-290; Briggs v. Light Boats, 11 Allen (Mass.), 157, 176, 177; People v. Dennison, 84 N. Y. 272; The Davis, 10 Wall. 15. See The Fidelity (16 Bla. C. C. 569), in which case it was held that this exemption applied to a municipal corporation in so far as it was locally intrusted with a share in the government.

⁵ Dobbins v. The Commissioners, 16 Pet. 435; The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113; Harris v. Dennie, 3 Pet. 292.

due.¹ It may be regarded as established by the cases, that the officers and executive agents of the United States cannot be divested or dispossessed of property to which the government has an undisputed title, for the purpose of enforcing a lien upon such property.²

§ 245. In Carr v. The United States,³ the question of the right of an individual to sue the government indirectly was considered by the Supreme Court of the United States. The court held that a judgment in ejectment against a government agent did not constitute an estoppel against the government. Mr. Justice Bradley, in delivering the opinion of the court said: "We consider it to be a fundamental principle that the government cannot be sued except by its own consent; and certainly no State can pass a law, which would have any validity, for making the government suable in its courts. It is conceded in The Siren,⁴ and in The Davis,⁵ that, without an act of Congress, no direct proceeding can be instituted against the government or its property. And in the latter case it is justly observed that 'the possession of the government can only exist through its officers; using that phrase in the sense of any person charged on behalf of the government with the control of the property, coupled with actual possession.' If a proceeding would lie against the officers as individuals in the case of a marine hospital, it might be instituted with equal facility and right in reference to a post-office, or a custom-house, a prison, or a fortification. In some cases (perhaps it was so in the present case), it might not be apparent until after suit brought, that the possession attempted to be assailed was that of the government; but when this is made apparent by the pleadings or the proofs, the jurisdiction of the court ought to cease. Otherwise the government could always be compelled to come into court and litigate with private parties in defense of its

¹ Buchanan v. Alexander, 4 How. 20.

² See The Davis, 10 Wall. 15; The Siren, 7 Wall. 154; The Fidelity, 16 Bla. C. 569; Klein v. New Orleans, 99 U. S. 149.

³ 98 U. S. 433. See People v. Ambrecht, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97.

⁴ 7 Wall. 152.

⁵ 10 Wall. 15.

property." The later case of *Campbell v. James*¹ was an action brought against a United States postmaster by a patentee who claimed that the former had, while acting in the government service, infringed a patent covering a stamp for printing postmarks and canceling postage stamps. Mr. Justice Bradley, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "We doubt very much whether such an action can be sustained. It is substantially a suit against the United States itself, and cannot be maintained under the guise of a suit against its officers and agents, except in the manner provided by law. We have heretofore expressed our views on this subject in the case of Carr v. The United States,² where a judgment in ejectment against a government agent was held to be no estoppel against the government itself. But, as the conclusion which we have reached in this case does not render it necessary to decide this question, we reserve our judgment upon it for a more fitting occasion."

In Livingston v. D'Orgenoy,³ a case which arose in the District Court of the United States for the Territory of Orleans, early in the century, the pleadings showed that the defendant, who was a United States marshal, admitted the ouster, but claimed no interest in the premises and did not have possession, and no damages were demanded against him. The United States intervened, and by their attorney asked to have the proceedings stayed on the ground that the government claimed the premises. The Court granted the stay, saying, "It is a standing rule in actions of ejectment that no plaintiff shall proceed to recover the land, without giving the tenant in possession a declaration, and making him a defendant. . . . If the United States, who claim the premises, cannot be made defendants, it becomes their dignity to establish a tribunal in which the controversy may be determined."

§ 246. Notwithstanding the remarks of the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of Carr v. The

¹ 104 U. S. 356.

² 98 U. S. 433.

³ Martin's O. T. R. (La.) 87.

United States,¹ and Campbell v. James,² already quoted, the right of an individual claimant of lands, which are in the possession of officers, employees, or agents of the government, to assert his title and recover the possession in the courts, has been upheld by the same court in a number of cases.³ Meig's v. McClung's Lessee,⁴ one of the most important of these, was an action of ejectment—the plaintiff claiming the land under a grant from the State of North Carolina, and the United States asserting title to it under an Indian treaty. The defendants were officers of the government, and were maintaining a garrison upon the land under its authority. The objection was urged against a recovery that “the land was occupied by the United States troops, and the defendants, as officers of the United States, for the benefit of the United States, and by their direction.” Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, said: “The fact that the agents of the United States took possession of this land . . . erected expensive buildings thereon, and placed a garrison there, cannot be permitted to give an explanation to the treaty which would contradict its plain words and obvious meaning. The land is certainly the property of the plaintiff below; and the United States cannot have intended to deprive him of it by violence, and without compensation. This court is unanimously and clearly of opinion that the Circuit Court committed no error in instructing the jury that the Indian title was extinguished to the land in controversy, and that the plaintiff below might sustain his action.”

§ 247. In the important case of Grisar v. McDowell,⁵ Mr. Justice Field states the position of the parties, and the ground of the controversy, as follows: “The premises, for the possession of which this action is brought, are situated within the city of San Francisco, in the State of California. The plaintiff claims to be seized in fee of them, and derives

¹ 98 U. S. 433.

² 104 U. S. 356.

³ See Meigs v. McClung's Lessee, 9 Cranch, 11; Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet. 498; Brown v. Huger, 21 How. 305; Grisar v. McDowell, 6 Wall. 363; Cooley v. O'Connor, 12 Wall. 391. See contra, in New York, People v. Ambrecht, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97; Dibble v. Clapp, 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 420.

⁴ 9 Cranch, 11.

⁵ 6 Wall. 363.

his title from the city of San Francisco, under an ordinance of the Common Council for the settlement of land titles in the city, passed on the 20th of June, 1855, commonly known as the Van Ness Ordinance, and the act of the Legislature of the State ratifying and confirming the same. The defendant is an officer in the army of the United States, commanding the Military Department of California, and as such officer entered upon the possession of the premises previous to the commencement of this action, and has ever since held them, under the order of the Secretary of War, as part of the public property of the United States reserved for military purposes." In four of these cases the actions were brought against officers of the United States, in possession of the land by the alleged authority of the government, and for its use and benefit, as public property. The question of the exemption of the government from suit, and of the jurisdiction of the court to proceed, was presented in some form in each of these causes. In Meigs v. McClung,¹ the point was distinctly taken and insisted upon by counsel. In Wilcox v. Jackson,² it was sharply presented by the agreed state of facts. In Grisar v. McDowell,³ it was raised by the pleadings, and in Brown v. Huger,⁴ it was a prominent feature in the case. In Cooley v. O'Connor,⁵ the defendants were tenants of the United States, and the title of the latter was directly assailed, and, though the judgment was reversed in the Supreme Court of the United States, it was by reason of error which had been committed in the trial, and a venire de novo was awarded, but not a judgment dismissing the action for want of jurisdiction. The right of an individual to bring actions in the nature of ejectment against officers or employees of the government is recognized in some of our State tribunals. Thus, the Supreme Court of California, in Polack v. Mansfield,⁶ said: "But this rule which . . . exempts the mere servant or employee of another from an action, presupposes that the employer may be sued, and that the wrongs of which the plaintiff complains may be redressed by resort to an action against the employer, as being the real party committing the ouster. In a case, therefore, where the employer is for any reason not amenable to an action, the rule referred to has no application, and the employee, or servant, becomes ex necessitate the proper party defendant, since he is the only party who can be subjected to suit at all. Were this otherwise, it would result that open and admitted violation of private rights would find no redress in the courts of the country. The government of the United States, as such, cannot be sued as a party defendant in the courts of the State; and unless its servants and employees may be properly held responsible for the lawless invasion of private property, committed by them under the direction or command of the government, the citizen is left wholly without the protection which it is the first aim and purpose of the municipal law to afford."

¹ 9 Cranch, 11.² 13 Peters, 498.³ 6 Wall. 363.⁴ 21 How. 305.⁵ 12 Wall. 393.

⁶ 44 Cal. 36. See McConnell v. Wilcox, 2 Ill. 344; Swasey v. North Carolina R. R. Co. 1 Hughes, 17-20; s. c. 71 N. C. 571; Dreux v. Kennedy, 12 Rob. (La.) 489; Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat. 738; Hancock v. Walsh, 3 Woods C. C. 351; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall, 203, Chase, C. J., and Davis, J., dissenting; Preston v. Walsh, 10 Fed. Rep. 315; King v. La Grange, 61 Cal. 221.

§ 248. The Arlington case.—This subject derives fresh interest from the Arlington case,¹ recently decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, but by a divided bench. The facts of the case are briefly as follows: The plaintiff, Lee, asserted ownership of the premises in controversy. The government claimed title to them under a tax sale, being one of a series of such sales which had been adjudged void by the courts.² The lands were occupied by officers, agents, tenants, or wards of the federal government, and were used as a military station, and as a national cemetery established for the burial of deceased soldiers and sailors, and known as the "Arlington Cemetery." Lee brought ejectment in a State Court and made the officers and occupants of the land, some two hundred in number, defendants. The case was removed by certiorari into the Circuit Court of the United States. The Attorney General of the United States then intervened upon the record, and, by way of suggestion, informed the court that the lands in controversy were held and possessed by the United States, through its officers and agents, for the purposes above specified, and without submitting the rights of the government of the United States to the jurisdiction of the court, insisted that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter in controversy, and moved that the declaration in ejectment be set aside, and the proceedings dismissed. The motion made on behalf of the government to dismiss the cause was denied, and the plaintiff had judgment in the ejectment, from which a writ of error was prosecuted to the Supreme Court. Following Grisar v. McDowell,¹ Meigs v. McClung,² Polack v. Mansfield,³ Dreux v. Kennedy,⁴ and similar cases, the majority of the court held that the judgment must stand. Mr. Justice Miller in delivering the opinion also relied on the constitutional provision that no person shall be "deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." He treated the decision in Carr v. United States as not in point, for the reason that the action was "equally inconclusive against the United States" (i. e. not an estoppel), whether the persons "sued were officers of the government or not," and mentioned the following additional consideration: "Since the United States cannot be made a defendant to a suit concerning its property, and no judgment in any suit against an individual who has possession or control of such property can bind or conclude the government, as is decided by this court in the case of Carr v. United States, already referred to, the government is always at liberty, notwithstanding any such judgment, to avail itself of all the remedies which the law allows to every person, natural or artificial, for the vindication and assertion of its rights. Hence, taking the present case as an illustration, the United States may proceed by a bill in chancery to quiet its title, in aid of which, if a proper case is made, a writ of injunction may be maintained. Or, it may bring an action of ejectment, in which, on a direct issue between the United States as plaintiff, and the present plaintiff as defendant, the title of the United States could be judicially determined.”¹ The view of the minority (Gray, J., delivering the opinion) contains a full and able review of the authorities. This learned justice maintains that the apparently conflicting cases are reconciled by the fact that the objection to the exercise of jurisdiction over the sovereign is a personal one, which he may take or not, as he pleases. If the sovereign submits to the adjudication of his rights then he waives the objection; if he refuses to submit then the jurisdiction is entirely defeated. The view taken of *Meigs v. McClung*² is that the United States there raised no objection to the jurisdiction.

¹ The Arlington Case, Lee v. Kaufman, 3 Hughes, 36; s. c. 106 U. S. 196.

² See Bennett v. Hunter, 9 Wall. 326; Tacey v. Irwin, 18 Wall. 549; Atwood v. Weems, 99 U. S. 183.

¹ 6 Wall. 363.² 44 Cal. 36.³ 9 Cranch, 11.⁴ 12 Rob. (La.) 489.

§ 248a. In Swasey v. North Carolina Railroad Company,³ which was a suit by a bondholder, to procure a sale of certain certificates of stock held by the State of North Carolina, in pledge for the security of bonds owned by complainant and others, Chief Justice Waite, sitting at circuit, said: “It is first insisted by the defendant that the State of North Carolina is in fact a party defendant, and, consequently, that this court cannot entertain jurisdiction of the cause. The State, although directly interested in the subject-matter of the litigation, is not a party to the record. The eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that no suit can be prosecuted in this court against a State, by the citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of a foreign State. It has long been held, however, that this amendment applies only to suits in which a State is a party to the record, and not to those in which it has an interest merely. It is next urged, that if the State is not actually a party to the suit it is a necessary party in whose absence the cause cannot proceed, and that, as a State cannot be brought into court, no relief should be granted upon the case made. If the State could be brought into court, it undoubtedly should be made a party before a decree is rendered, but, since the case of Osborn v. The Bank of the United States,⁴ it has been the

¹ U. S. v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 222.

² 9 Cranch, 11.

³ 1 Hughes, 17, 20; S. C. 71 N. C. 571. See Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203.

⁴ 9 Wheat. 738.

uniform practice of the courts of the United States to take jurisdiction of causes affecting the property of a State in the hands of its agents without making the State a party, when the property or the agent is within the jurisdiction. In such cases the courts act through the instrumentality of the property or the agent."

§ 249.—Ejectment, as we shall presently see, is at once a remedy in the nature of a proceeding in rem,¹ and an action of trespass, and the action must be instituted in the State and county in which the lands are situated. There would seem to be no practical objection growing out of the nature of the subject-matter of contention to the exercise of jurisdiction in such cases by the courts "through the instrumentality of the property or the agent."² The plaintiff can only recover upon the strength of his own title, and upon proof of a wrongful withholding of the possession by the defendant. In so far as the possession of the agent is wrongful, and constitutes an encroachment upon private property, to which the government has no title, it cannot be regarded as the authorized act of the sovereign power, but should be treated as the independent tort of the agent. The fact that a party is employed in the federal service will not exempt him from responsibility for the commission of felonies or misdemeanors, and he may be arrested and punished even under State process,³ and certainly this principle ought to include injuries and wrongs to property. If the wrongful act of the agent is to be construed as the act of the executive department of the government, it would seem to be the proper function of the judiciary, as an independent and co-ordinate department of the body politic, to adjudge and declare the rights of the parties, enlighten the executive as to its powers and duties, and extend the appropriate relief. Surely it cannot be intended by the courts that the executive agents of the government should have an unlimited license to seize and appropriate private property to governmental uses, and then to invoke the sovereign prerogative as a shield against judicial inquiry, and a bar to all efforts of the owner to repossess himself of that to which he has a clear title. How can the use to which the property is appropriated, whether public or private, affect the rights of the parties? Is it possible that any one of the vast number of our state or federal executive agents is able to deprive a citizen of his property, and place it beyond the reach of a writ, by applying it to the uses of the government, merely because it is land and not personal property; and that, too, in a country in which private rights are so carefully guarded that the government is not allowed to occupy private property, even temporarily, with its military forces, except in time of actual war, and then only in the manner prescribed by law?¹

¹ Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 161-176, per Lord Mansfield; Casey v. Adams, 102 U. S. 66. See chap. XVII.

² Swasey v. N. C. R. R. Co. 1 Hughes, 17, 20.

³ See United States v. Kirby, 7 Wall. 482; United States v. Hart, Pet. C. C. 390; Penny v. Walker, 64 Me. 430; 5 Opinions Att'ys Genl. 554.

§ 249a. United States v. Lee further explained.—The principle of the sovereign's exemption from suit has been before the court again in two leading cases,² and in the latest of these Mr. Justice Miller further defined the limits and explained the scope of the decision in United States v. Lee. In delivering the opinion of the court in Cunningham v. Macon & Brunswick R. R. Co.,¹ he said: "Another class of cases is where an individual is sued in tort for some act injurious to another in regard to person or property, to which his defense is that he has acted under the orders of the government. In these cases he is not sued as, or because he is, the officer of the government, but as an individual, and the court is not ousted of jurisdiction because he asserts authority as such officer. To make out his defense he must show that his authority was sufficient in law to protect him. . . . To this class belongs also the recent case of United States v. Lee,² for the action of ejectment in that case is, in its essential character, an action of trespass, with the power in the court to restore the possession to the plaintiff as part of the judgment. And the defendants, Strong and Kaufman, being sued individually as trespassers, set up their authority as officers of the United States, which this court held to be unlawful, and therefore insufficient as a defense. The judgment in that case did not conclude the United States, as the opinion carefully stated, but held the officers liable as unauthorized trespassers, and turned them out of their unlawful possession."

¹ U. S. Constitution, III Amendment. In Dibble v. Clapp, 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 420, it appeared that the lands in question were purchased from the husband of the claimant, and also ceded by the State of New York to the United States, and were appropriated to public governmental uses. The plaintiff brought ejectment to recover dower in the lands, making the government officers defendants. The complaint was dismissed upon the ground that the State courts had no jurisdiction over the lands. People v. Ambrecht, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97, is a special term decision. This case holds that a soldier occupying real property under the direction of his superior officers, is not an actual occupant within the meaning of the statute of that State, and that an ejectment cannot be maintained against him. The court said, "ejectment could not, therefore, be brought against the United States any more than an action of assumpsit, and it seems to follow that they cannot be indirectly sued in the person of their agents or officers, and the title and claim thus subjected by indirection to the jurisdiction of the State courts." But upon what theory are the acts of the officers and agents of the government to be excepted from judicial inquiry, and why are not such acts, when shown to be in defiance of the plainest provisions of organic laws, the proper subject of judicial redress? The grant of judicial power, which extends to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, must certainly have been intended to cover cases of this character, for it seems incredible that the framers of our Constitution should have embodied provisions in that instrument guarding the rights of the citizen against executive encroachment, and furnished no means by which the exercise of arbitrary power could be checked, and these salutary provisions made effectual. New York stands in the front rank of the States which have placed the judiciary above the executive, and in which executive action is constantly supervised and annulled by the courts, and it seems curious that, even in an inferior tribunal of that State, an authority should be found tending to support the startling proposition contended for by the attorney general in the Arlington case.

² Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711; Cunningham v. Macon & Brunswick R. R. Co. 109 U. S. 446.

§ 250. Ejectment against corporations.—The old doctrine that ejectment would not lie against a corporation aggregate has long been exploded.³ It has been held in New York, that if the premises are actually occupied by the tenant of a corporation, the action must be against the tenant and not against the corporation,⁴ and that a railroad corporation which had laid its track in a street, but had not occupied the whole street, was not an actual occupant, and could not be sued in ejectment as such.⁵ A church edifice will be deemed to be in the actual occupation of the religious society using it, and ejectment therefor should be

¹ 109 U. S. 446, 452.

² 106 U. S. 196.

³ See Dater v. Troy Turnpike, &c., Co., 2 Hill (N. Y.), 629.

⁴ People v. Mayor, &c., of N. Y., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 240.

⁵ Redfield v. Utica, &c., R. R. Co., 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 54.

brought against such corporation, and not against its trustees.¹ It has been held in various cases that ejectment could be maintained against a railroad corporation in the same way as against any individual who had entered upon plaintiff's lands, without taking condemnation proceedings, or acquiring the title by deed, although it was using the land for a public purpose;² and where the plaintiff purchased at judicial sale land over which a railway company had constructed its road, without right or condemnation, it was held that he could eject the company, and that he need take no notice of their possession, as they were mere intruders.³ No assent to the use of the lands can carry the title when compensation has not been paid,⁴ though the owner may waive the right to eject a railroad company that entered upon his lands with his consent.⁵ The defense of adverse possession may be set up by a corporation incapable of acquiring title.⁶

§ 251. County.—Ejectment may be brought against a county to recover land claimed by the county to have been dedicated to public use.⁷ A county is considered to be a quasi corporation capable of suing and being sued, of owning lands and instituting ejectment therefor.⁸

§ 252. City.—Ejectment will lie against a city by the owner of land wrongfully taken by the city and converted into a public street.⁹ This subject has already been considered in an earlier chapter,¹⁰ but we may observe that

¹ Lucas v. Johnson, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 244.

² Smith v. Chicago, A. & St. L. R. R., 67 Ill. 191. See Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. Knox College, 34 Ill. 195; Carpenter v. Oswego & S. R. R., 24 N. Y. 655; Mills on Eminent Domain, §§ 88, 90; Troy & B. R. R. Co. v. Boston, H. T. & W. Ry. Co., 86 N. Y. 127; Robinson v. Pittsburg R. R. Co. 57 Cal. 417; Murray v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 130 Mass. 101. See § 161. But compare Edwardsville R. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 92 Ill. 377.

³ Chicago & I. R. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 90 Ill. 316.

⁴ Evansville, H. & N. R. R. Co. v. Grady, 6 Bush (Ky.). 144.

⁵ Prybylowicz v. Mo. River R. R., 17 Fed. Rep. 492; Pierce on Railroads, 169.

⁶ Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 604. See § 253a.

⁷ Barry v. Sonoma Co., 43 Cal. 217. See Lyell v. Supervisors, &c., 3 McL. 580.

⁸ Lincoln Co. v. Magruder, 3 Mo. App. 314. See Bennett v. Walker, 64 Ga. 326.

⁹ Armstrong v. St. Louis, 69 Mo. 309; Strong v. City of Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1. But compare Cowenhoven v. City of Brooklyn, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Smith v. Wiggins 48 N. H. 105. See § 161.

¹⁰ See §§ 133, 161.

where the tenant of a municipal corporation is sued in ejectment the corporation may be allowed to come in and defend.¹

§ 252a. Receivers.—It is a contempt of court to disturb the possession of a receiver.² The law upon this subject is considered in Angel v. Smith,³ where it appeared that an ejectment had been brought without leave of the court for lands in the possession of its receiver. The Lord Chancellor observed that the practice was to ask leave, and he “cautioned the solicitor that he would proceed at his peril.” Possibly a sale of property by a third party in the hands of a receiver would be considered illegal and void,⁴ though this is questioned.⁵

§ 253. Insolvents.—In a case which arose in New York, it was held that where a person had been discharged under an insolvent act, he had no further right in the premises, and, therefore, could not be let in to defend as landlord.⁶ In Canada ejectment is maintainable against an insolvent and his assignee.⁷ In Massachusetts the assignee of an insolvent may maintain a real action against the wife of the insolvent, and need not aver that she holds the land to her sole and separate use.⁸

§ 253a. Aliens.—Though an alien cannot acquire title as against the true owner by an adverse possession of twenty years, yet the statute of limitations will furnish a perfect defense to an action of ejectment brought against him by the true owner.⁹ The real question in such cases respects the plaintiff's right to the remedy and not the defendant's title to the estate.¹⁰ An alien enemy may be sued¹¹ and may employ counsel to defend him.

¹ Carleton v. Darcy, 90 N. Y. 573; s. c. 16 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 125.

² See Chautauque Co. Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 377.

³ 9 Ves. 335. That a receiver may be sued, see Fort Wayne, M. & C. R. R. Co. v. Mellett, 92 Ind. 536; Hills v. Parker, 111 Mass. 508.

⁴ Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. 52.

⁵ Chautauque Co. Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 378.

⁶ Jackson v. Stiles, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 67-69.

⁷ Fraser Institute v. Moore, 19 L. C. Jur. 133.

⁸ Blake v. Sawin, 10 Allen (Mass.), 340; see Cooper v. Lands, 14 W. R. 610; s. c. 14 L. T. (N. S.) 287.

⁹ Overing v. Russell, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 263.

¹⁰ See S. P. Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 604.

¹¹ McNair v. Toler, 21 Minn. 176.

§ 254. Infants.—Ejectment, being an action of tort, may be maintained against an infant,¹ who must, however, appear and be represented by a guardian² otherwise any judgment rendered against him in the action will be reversed.³ But if the infant attain his majority pending the suit he may be admitted to plead,⁴ and, having pleaded, he waives any doubt attending the service of the writ during his minority.⁵ An infant vested with the title to land for which an action of ejectment has been instituted has a right to be admitted as a party defendant on the usual terms, and it is the duty of the court to appoint a guardian ad litem, so as to enable him to defend the action;⁶ and an infant is entitled to defend by guardian as landlord of the premises.⁷ It has been held in Missouri, however, that an action of ejectment will not lie against an infant upon the possession of his guardian.⁸ In New York a statutory action for the determination of conflicting claims to real property cannot be brought against an infant defendant.⁹

§ 255. Husband and wife.—At common law, where husband and wife occupied the land, the possession was in law the possession of the husband, and in no respect that of the wife. And where the husband claimed the lands in his own right, it was held to be improper to join the wife in the action, and, if joined, she was entitled to a nonsuit, or a verdict in her favor.¹⁰ To authorize a judgment against the wife, there must be evidence tending to show that the ouster, dispossession or holding over was the act of the ¹ Marshall v. Wing, 50 Me. 62; McCoon v. Smith, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 147; s. c. 38 Am. Dec. 623; Beckley v. Newcomb, 24 N. H. 360. See § 196.

² The appointment of a guardian ad litem in an action will not be effectual unless the court has first acquired jurisdiction of the infant. See Insurance Co. v. Bangs, 103 U. S. 435.

³ Beckley v. Newcomb, 24 N. H. 360; Crockett v. Drew, 5 Gray (Mass.), 399.

⁴ Marshall v. Wing, 50 Me. 52; Tessier v. Wyse, 3 Bland's Ch. (Md.) 28.

⁵ Hillegass v. Hillegass, 5 Pa. St. 97.

⁶ Glass v. Doe, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 293.

⁷ Stiles v. Jackson, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 316.

⁸ Spitts v. Wells, 18 Mo. 468.

⁹ Bailey v. Briggs, 56 N. Y. 407.

¹⁰ See Rose v. Bell, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 25; Von Schrader v. Taylor, 7 Mo. App. 361; Meegan v. Gunsollis, 19 Mo. 417; Hunt v. Thompson, 61 Mo. 154; Wilson v. Garaghty, 70 Mo. 518.

wife.¹ In Massachusetts, however, as we have just seen, an assignee of an insolvent debtor was held entitled to maintain a writ of entry against the insolvent's wife, without averring that she held the land to her sole and separate use.² It has been held in the New York Court of Appeals,³ that where a husband and wife were seized in joint tenancy, the entry upon the premises by the husband, under a claim of title under the grant to himself and wife, inured to the benefit of both. It appeared in this case that when the possession was demanded of the wife she did not disclaim title to the land, or repudiate the action of her husband, but refused to yield the possession. The court held that the wife was properly joined as a party defendant with her husband, not as being answerable for his tortious acts, but as one claiming title and right of possession to the lands in controversy. The action would have been defective had she been omitted as a party, because the judgment would not have concluded her, and it would have been necessary to litigate the same questions over again with her, should she subsequently have asserted the right which she had already asserted by refusing to yield the possession.⁴ So it was decided in the Supreme Court of Michigan,⁵ that where a husband and wife occupied lands claimed by the wife, an ejectment against the husband alone would be a fruitless proceeding, as no judgment could be rendered affecting her title to which she was not a party, and her possession could not be disturbed by a judgment against her husband. And in Pennsylvania, in an ejectment against a husband for the wife's lands, if the husband has confessed judgment, the wife has a right to ask that the judgment be opened, and to come in and defend.⁶ So in Fenwick v. Gravenor,⁷ an early English case, a wife was

¹ Von Schrader v. Taylor, 7 Mo. App. 361.

² Blake v. Sawin, 10 Allen (Mass.), 340. See Von Schrader v. Taylor, 7 Mo. App. 361.

³ Stewart v. Patrick, 68 N. Y. 450-455.

⁴ See Porter v. McGrath, 41 N. Y. Superior, 84.

⁵ Hodson v. Van Fossen, 26 Mich. 68.

⁶ Lewis v. Brewster, 57 Penn. St. 410. See, however, Johnson v. Fullerton, 44 Penn. St. 466.

⁷ 7 Mod. 70. See Den v. Steward, 3 N. J. L. 929.

admitted to defend when the title of the plaintiff's lessor was based on a pretended marriage with her, which, however, she disputed. On a writ of entry, in New Hampshire, where the title to the land sued for is in the wife, the husband need not be joined.¹ The legal relations existing between husband and wife have been so much altered by legislation that it is almost impossible to formulate any general rule applicable to them. It is clear that if the wife claims title to the land independent of the rights incident to the relationship, or if she is the person who has ousted or withheld the possession from the plaintiff, then she is a necessary and proper party defendant. If, however, she is upon the land merely as a member of her husband's family, she can, as we shall presently show, be evicted under the writ issued against him.

§ 256. Widow.—In Pennsylvania, ejectment will not lie by an heir against a widow in possession of real estate, of which her husband died seized. The heir, it was held, must proceed under the partition acts of that State to have her share ascertained and set off to her.² It has been held in Kentucky that the possession of the mansion house of a deceased person by his widow, before allotment of dower, is consistent with that of the heirs, and the latter may therefore be admitted to defend an ejectment brought against her.³ The widow occupies a fiduciary relation toward the heirs.⁴

§ 257. Defendant claiming under tax title.—According to some of the authorities, ejectment cannot be supported against the purchaser of a tax title until he has taken possession,⁵ but in some of the States the statute of limitations begins to run from the date of the deed,⁶ or from the date of its record, the act of recording the instrument being regarded as equivalent to taking possession under it.⁷ It

¹ Cahoon v. Coe, 57 N. H. 556.

² Gourley v. Kinley, 66 Penn. St. 270.

³ Porter v. Robinson, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 253.

⁴ Knolls v. Barnhart, 71 N. Y. 474.

⁵ Waln v. Shearman, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 356. See McEntire v. Brown, 28 Ind. 347, 352; Pixley v. Rockwell, 1 Sheldon (N. Y.), 267.

⁶ Degraw v. Taylor, 37 Mo. 310.

⁷ Knox v. Cleveland, 13 Wis. 245; Whitney v. Marshall, 17 Wis. 174.

has been decided in Nebraska, that parties holding tax deeds are not proper parties to a foreclosure; that if made defendants they are entitled to defend their title, and that the plaintiff should be compelled to rely upon the strength of his own title and not on the invalidity of the tax title.¹ The holder of tax deeds upon different tracts of land, the former owners being different, cannot quiet the title in a single suit.²

§ 258. Tenant at will.—A writ of entry will lie against a tenant at will who refuses to surrender the premises on demand.³

§ 259. Who may come in and defend.—In an action to recover land in North Carolina, it was held that a third party, claiming to be a joint owner with the defendant, had a right to be let in as a party defendant.⁴ This is of course the general rule as to joint ownership. If a party has been made a co-defendant on motion, the plaintiff is not entitled to dismiss the suit as to him.⁵ A party claiming an equitable title may be made a defendant.⁶

§ 260. Parties claiming by title paramount to both litigants.—It was decided in the Supreme Court of California that a party did not gain the right to intervene, in an action of ejectment, who merely alleged that he had title paramount to both litigants, for a person so situated could not be said to possess any interest in the matter in litigation, and certainly could not be disturbed in his possession under any process which might be issued on a judgment in the action.⁷ So in Files v. Watt,⁸ in the Supreme Court of Arkansas, the application of a party to come in and defend was denied where he alleged an independent ownership,

¹ Hurley v. Cox, 9 Neb. 230. See § 179, a.

² Turner v. Duchman, 23 Wis. 500.

³ Wheelwright v. Freeman, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 154; Dolby v. Miller, 2 Gray (Mass.), 135; Gregory v. Tozier, 24 Me. 308.

⁴ Lytle v. Burgin, 82 N. C. 301. See Colgrove v. Koonce, 76 N. C. 363; Rollins v. Rollins, 76 N. C. 264; McCown v. Hannah, 3 Oregon, 302.

⁵ Hayden v. Stewart, 27 Mo. 286.

⁶ Hampson v. Fall, 64 Ind. 382; but compare Webster v. Bond, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 437.

⁷ Porter v. Garrissino, 51 Cal. 559; Colgrove v. Koonce, 76 N. C. 363.

⁸ 28 Ark. 151.

and showed no interest in common or privity of right between himself and either of the litigants. Under the practice in Texas, however, in an action of trespass to try title, brought by an insolvent vendor against the vendee, to enforce payment of the purchase money for the land, the vendee has, as against his vendor, the right in equity to have the claimants of an outstanding grant, who assert title, brought in so that the title may be settled before the vendee is either evicted or forced to pay the balance of the purchase money to an insolvent vendor.¹

§ 261. Parties claiming in opposition to defendant's title.—It is quite clear that one claiming in hostility to the title of the defendant, cannot be admitted as a party defendant in the action.²

§ 262. Mortgagee.—A mortgagee may be let in to defend,³ and so may the assignee of a mortgage,⁴ unless the plaintiff in ejectment will satisfy the mortgage;⁵ and a mortgagee claiming title to land for his mortgagor, as being within the description of the mortgage deed, is jointly liable in ejectment with a mortgagor.⁶

§ 263. Purchaser pendente lite.—It may be stated as a general principle, that a party who purchases or intermeddles with property pendente lite does so at his peril, and is as conclusively bound and affected by the judgment⁷ as though he had been made a party, and has no right to demand that the proceedings be suspended or delayed until he is brought in as a defendant. If the rule were otherwise, by successive alienations, litigations could be protracted,⁸ and the administration of justice delayed indefi-

¹ Estell v. Cole, 52 Texas, 170. See Cooper v. Singleton, 19 Texas, 267; Simpson v. Hawkins, 1 Dana (Ky.), 303; Harris v. Smith, 2 Dana (Ky.), 11.

² Jackson v. Flint, 2 Cowen (N. Y.), 594.

³ Doe v. Cooper, 8 T. R. 645; vide Barnes, 194; Doe & Pearson v. Roe, 6 Bing. 613; s. c. 4 M. & P. 437; Den v. Fen, 6 N. J. L. 478; Fairclaim v. Shamtitle, 3 Burr. 1293.

⁴ Jackson v. Babcock, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 112.

⁵ Den v. Fen, 6 N. J. L. 478. See Jackson v. Babcock, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 112.

⁶ Patch v. Keeler, 28 Vt. 332. See Marvin v. Dennison, 1 Bla. C. C. 159.

⁷ Whiteside v. Haselton, 110 U. S. 296, 301.

⁸ See Galbreath v. Estes, 38 Ark. 600.

nately.¹ And persons entering upon land pending ejectment, are bound by the judgment subsequently rendered, and are subject to removal by the final process.² Hence in Georgia, where a defendant was added who took possession after the action was instituted, it was held that the only result thereby accomplished was to hold him for mesne profits, as he would have been bound by the judgment as to the title, even though not made a party.³

§ 264. Landlord as defendant.—In Finnegan v. Carraher,⁴ in the New York Court of Appeals, which was an action for the possession of real estate occupied by a tenant of the defendant, it was held that, under the practice in that State, the presence of the tenant was not essential to enable the claimant to litigate the title, and that the defendant had waived the defect of the non-joinder of the tenant because such objection had not been taken by demurrer or answer. It further appeared that the defendant (the landlord) said that he was in possession of the premises in question, and that service of the papers in the action was made upon him on the faith of this statement. The court decided that the defendant was estopped by such declaration from subsequently denying that he was in the actual possession of the lands at the time of the commencement of the action. It has been held in South Carolina, that trespass to try title will lie against a landlord, even though he was never in possession except by his tenant.⁵ A party not an occupant cannot as a general rule be joined as a defendant without his consent, or in the absence of averments showing some connection between the occupant and the defendant out of possession.⁶

¹ Malone v. Marriott, 64 Ala. 486-490; Tilton v. Cofield, 93 U. S. 163; Inloe's Lessee v. Harvey, 11 Md. 524; Salisbury v. Morss, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 359; Harrington v. Slade, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 162; Penna. Canal Co. v. Central Iron Works, 7 Phila. (Penn.) 662.

² Oetgen v. Ross, 47 Ill. 142; Wallen v. Huff, 3 Sneed (Tenn.), 82; chap. XXI.

³ Willingham v. Long, 47 Ga. 540; Bradley v. McDaniel, 3 Jones Law (N. C.), 128.

⁴ 47 N. Y. 493. See Abeul v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513; Pierce v. Ferris, 10 N. Y. 280; Fosgate v. Herkimer Co., 12 N. Y. 580; Presbyterian Congregation v. Williams, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 147; Hall v. White, 3 C. & P. 136.

⁵ Binda v. Benbow, 11 Rich. Law (S. C.), 24.

⁶ Chamberlain v. Dempsey, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 356.

§ 265. Party claiming as landlord.—A third party claiming as landlord will ordinarily be let in to defend an action of ejectment.¹ But, according to some of the authorities, he cannot be substituted in the tenant's place without the plaintiff's consent.² If the tenant dies pending suit, the landlord may prosecute a writ of error in the name of the tenant's heirs, and against their will, upon his engagement to bear all the costs and expenses of the action.³ And it may be stated as a general rule, that if the landlord is once allowed to appear and defend in the tenant's name, his right to conduct the proceedings is not limited to the lower courts,⁴ and the tenant cannot interfere with the cause to the prejudice of the landlord.⁵ It was held in Virginia, that by the common law, and under the statute of that State, the policy prevailed to extend the word landlord to every person whose right or title was connected or consistent with the possession of the occupying tenant,⁶ and where the tenant occupied under a mere license, no lease or contract being shown, the party from whom he received the possession was let in to defend.⁷ The technical relationship need not always be shown, provided the title of the applicant is consistent with that of the occupier;⁸ and the question of the receipt of rent is not a conclusive test. A party claiming in opposition to the tenant can in no light be considered as landlord,⁹ and two persons claiming separately will not be permitted to defend as landlords of the same tenant.¹⁰

¹ Rollins v. Bishop, 76 N. C. 268; Mitchell v. Baratta, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 455; Wise v. Wheeler, 6 Ired. Law (N. C.), 196; Marvin v. Dennison, 1 Blatch. C. C. 159.

² Merritt v. Thompson, 13 Ill. 716; Emlen v. Hoops, 3 S. & R. (Penn.) 130; Jackson v. Stiles, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 134.

³ Kellogg v. Forsyth, 24 How. 186.

⁴ Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; Kellogg v. Forsyth, 24 How. 186.

⁵ Doe v. Franklin, 7 Taunt. 9.

⁶ See Stribling v. Prettyman, 57 Ill. 371; Fairclaim d. Fowler v. Shamtitle, 3 Burr. 1290; Falkner v. Jones, 12 Ala. 165.

⁷ Hanks v. Price, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 108.

⁸ Falkner v. Jones, 12 Ala. 165. See Abeel v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513.

⁹ Fairclaim d. Fowler v. Shamtitle, 3 Burr. 1295.

¹⁰ Doe d. Lloyd v. Roe, 15 M. & W. 431. Lord Mansfield said, in Fairclaim ex dem Fowler v. Shamtitle, 3 Burr. 1295: "It is no answer 'that any person affected by the judgment may bring a new ejectment,' because there is a great dif-

§ 266. Marvin v. Dennison discussed.—In Marvin v. Dennison,¹ in the United States Circuit Court, the proper construction of the statute of Vermont, which provides that “the action shall be brought as well against the landlord as the tenant in possession of the premises,” is considered. The court says that it would seem to be more consistent with the general reason and policy of the law that all the parties to the title, under and subsidiary to which the possession is held, should be liable to be joined in the first instance, and the title finally settled as to all in one suit. The court further suggested that the fitness and propriety of this rule would appear none the less obvious when it was considered that otherwise, especially where different courts, acting under different and independent jurisdictions existed, and could be resorted to, conflicting decisions might possibly be rendered upon the same title. “To the joinder of mortgagee with mortgagor we are not able to perceive any well-founded objection; nor any, we may add, to the joinder of vendor with vendee, where the latter holds under a bond or contract for a deed; or of trustee with cestui que trust, where the latter is in possession under the trust title. In these and other cases of a like nature, but especially in that of mortgagee and mortgagor, there is such a relation or connection existing between the respective parties as constitutes a tenancy, though it may not amount to that of landlord and tenant within the meaning of the statute. A mortgagee, if he claims title under the mortgage, cannot be allowed in contradiction to the tenancy to set himself up, or claim to be treated, as a stranger to the possession. If he claims nothing under the mortgage and would, on that ground, not only discharge himself from but recover costs, there can be no injustice or hardship in compelling him to disclaim, so that he may be forever estopped by matter of record from setting up any title under the mortgage. If the mortgagee cannot be made a party, the suit would be, in a good measure, ineffectual, since a judgment against ference between being plaintiff, or defendant, in ejectment.” In other words, the possessor is favored with the presumption of title, while the claimant must recover upon the strength of his own title.

¹ 1 Bla. C. C. 159.

the mortgagor, though conclusive upon his rights, would have no effect upon the rights of the mortgagee, who would be at liberty to bring an action in his own behalf, and have the title tried over again, or leave it unsettled and open to litigation during his pleasure, or until the statute of limitations should run." Much as the purpose sought to be accomplished in this case is to be commended, we cannot but regard the decision as carrying the interpretation of the word landlord to an extreme, not to say unwarrantable limit. The decision, in effect, practically converts ejectment into a modern statutory action for the determination of conflicting claims to real property, at least so far as the title under which the actual possession is held is concerned, except that the plaintiff is not in possession. It may be classed as judicial legislation of a most decided character.

§ 266a. Relief between defendants.—Where all the property claimed in ejectment was recovered, one lessor of the plaintiff was held not entitled to prosecute a writ of error against another on the ground that a greater interest was recovered on the demise of the latter than should have been. The controversy should be settled in a suit between the plaintiffs.¹ It is said, in Fink v. Allen,² that parties who are defendants in the same suit cannot be compelled to settle any controversies they may have, unless it is done by their voluntary submission.

¹ Fortune v. Center, 2 O. S. 537. Compare Meek v. Breckenridge, 29 O. S. 642.

² 36 N. Y. Superior, 359

CHAPTER VIII.

EJECTMENT BY MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS FOR STREETS AND PUBLIC PLACES.

- | | |
|---|---|
| § 267. Ejectment by municipal corporations vested with the fee. | § 272. Right to bring ejectment not uniformly recognized. |
| 268. Vested with public easement. | 273. Rule in Michigan. |
| 269. Theory of the decisions. | 274. When ejectment cannot be maintained. |
| 270. Founded on public necessity. | 275. Trespass to try title. |
| 271. Ejectment for streets and public places. | |

§ 267. Ejectment by municipal corporations vested with the fee.—The right of a municipal corporation to recover possession by ejectment of streets or public places under its direction and control, has been a subject of frequent consideration in the courts. The public, we may observe, ordinarily acquire by dedication for street purposes a mere easement and not the right to the soil.¹ Where, however, the legal title to the soil itself is vested in the corporation, though in trust for public use, it is clearly established that the action may be brought, for the right of entry and of possession accompany the legal title, and the sheriff delivers possession of the ground itself to be held and appropriated to the purposes of the public trusts.² Incidentally we may note that condemnation proceedings, dedication and grant are not the only means by which the title of these corporations to lands intended for public uses may be obtained. A municipal corporation may acquire title to real estate for corporate purposes by adverse possession.³

§ 268. Vested with public easement.—Where the adjoining owner retains the freehold in the soil, and only a naked

¹ Pomeroy v. Mills, 3 Vt. 279; s. c. 23 Am. Dec. 207.

² City of Savannah v. Steamboat Co., 1 R. M. Charlton (Ga.), 342; See Com'r's of Bath v. Boyd, 1 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 194; City of Chicago v. Wright, 69 Ill. 318.

³ Sherman v. Kane, 86 N. Y. 57.

easement or servitude, or the power to regulate and control the enjoyment by the public of the right of way or passage, is granted or acquired by the corporation, a more serious question is presented than where the fee is taken. How can the rights thus conferred, which are in their nature clearly incorporeal, be protected or enforced by the action of ejectment?¹ In City of Savannah v. Steamboat Company,² the recovery in ejectment was limited to cases of corporations holding the fee, and, as we have seen, the right to recover in that case was founded upon the ownership of the fee by the city. On the other hand, the case of *Cincinnati v. White*³ established the doctrine that a municipal corporation could defend ejectment at the suit of the owner of the fee, by setting up the right of possession, in a street or common, under rights acquired by dedication to a public use; and, as has been said by the New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals, "if the right of possession under a public easement may be made a defense in ejectment, no reason can be advanced why it should not be also available to support an action to recover the possession."⁴

§ 269. Theory of the decisions.—In Dummer v. Jersey City,⁵ which was ejectment for a market ground dedicated to public use, the New Jersey Supreme Court used this language: "Ejectment is a possessory action, and if the lessors of the plaintiff (a municipal corporation) are entitled to the possession, and they must be if they are entitled to the use, for they are inseparable, it is a legal and not a mere equitable right, and they may recover it against the legal owner of the fee." The principles of this case, however, involve a plain departure from the common law rules governing the action of ejectment. Are the rights which the parties are seeking to redress incident to or connected with some corporeal interest or estate in the land—is the common law test in determining whether or not ejectment is the appropriate remedy. Any easement, whether public

¹ See §§ 95, 130, 132, 139, 140, 146, 161.

² 1 R. M. Charlton (Ga.), 342.

³ 6 Pet. 431.

⁴ Hoboken Land and Imp. Co. v. Mayor, &c., 36 N. J. L. 540.

⁵ 20 N. J. L. 86.

or private, carries with it, to the extent essential for its proper enjoyment, the right of possession of the land over which the easement extends. Remedies for the protection and enforcement of such incorporeal rights, exist both at law and in equity. It is going too far to say that the right of possession is the test as to when the remedy can be invoked, unconnected with the character of the possession claimed, or the nature of the interest or estate from which the right springs. This principle is not affected by calling the right to enjoy the easement a legal rather than an equitable right. There is no inherent distinction between public and private easements.¹ Neither constitutes an estate in lands, and they differ only in degree. It must be remembered that the abutters or owners of lands fronting upon the public street or highway have a clear standing in court either to restrain any unauthorized use of a public street,² or to recover damages.³ "We have no doubt at all," say the Supreme Court of Indiana, "as to the right of the owner of the fee to maintain ejectment against a wrongdoer, although the fee is burdened by a public easement."⁴

Can the right to maintain a possessory action for lands be vested in two persons at the same time?

§ 270. Founded on public necessity.—In the case of Hoboken Land Company v. Mayor, &c., of Hoboken,⁵ the right of a municipal corporation, not vested with the fee, to maintain ejectment, is placed upon the ground of convenience and paramount public necessity. The public easement in a street or public place, is considered to be of so important a character that possession, exclusive of any interference by the owner of the fee, is essential for its improvement, regulation, and enjoyment. In a large city the owner of the fee is practically divested of dominion over

¹ See §§ 140, 161.

² Glover v. Manhattan Railway Co., 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 81; Henderson v. New York Central R. R. Co., 78 N. Y. 423; Story v. N. Y. Elevated R. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 178.

³ Williams v. New York Central R. R. Co., 16 N. Y. 97; Terre Haute & S. E. R. R. Co. v. Rodel, 89 Ind. 128; s. c. 46 Am. Rep. 164.

⁴ Terre Haute & S. E. R. R. Co. v. Rodel, 89 Ind. 128; s. c. 46 Am. Rep. 164-167, citing Sedg. & Wait on Trial of Title to Land, §§ 132, 135. See Cox v. Louisville, &c., R. R. Co. 48 Ind. 178.

⁵ Hoboken Land Co. v. Mayor, &c., of Hoboken, 36 N. J. L. 540; Trustees M. E. Church v. Council of Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13; s. p. City of California v. Howard, 78 Mo. 88.

the land, and his rights differ little from those which are common to the public. Hence, for the protection of so important a public use, and in furtherance of what is vaguely termed police power, the convenient and effectual remedy of ejectment is given, instead of remitting the municipal authorities to test and protect the rights of the public by criminal prosecutions. The early decisions limited the public right in a street or highway to that of passage and repassage, but the interests of the public in the easement have been greatly extended by the modern decisions, especially with reference to streets in crowded cities, and now includes not only the right of passage, and of flagging, curbing, and paving the street, but also the privilege of constructing sewers, and laying water and gas pipes under it, and the exclusive right to regulate the public use and enjoyment even as against the owner of the soil, so that the latter has only a naked fee of but nominal value. The public easement has grown to such proportions as to draw to it the remedies incident to an estate in lands.

§ 271. Ejectment for streets and public places.—The right of municipal corporations or public authorities vested with no higher estate than a public easement, or right by dedication, to invoke the remedy of ejectment, for the possession of streets,¹ public squares,² town commons,³ churches,⁴ and market grounds,⁵ is upheld in many cases.⁶ It is even held that a railroad corporation may support ejectment to recover possession of lands embraced in the grant of its right of way. This is upon the theory that in order to enable the corporation to apply the lands to the purposes intended it is necessary that they should take and hold the possession thereof.⁷

¹ San Francisco v. Sullivan, 50 Cal. 603.

² Trustees M. E. Church v. Council of Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13; City of Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119.

³ Com'rs of Bath v. Boyd, 1 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 194.

⁴ City of Hannibal v. Draper, 15 Mo. 634.

⁵ Dummer v. Jersey City, 20 N. J. L. 86.

⁶ City of Chicago v. Wright, 69 Ill. 318; Klinkener v. School Directors, 11 Penn. St. 444; City of Apalachicola v. Land Co., 9 Fla. 340. See Inhabitants of Greenwich v. Easton & A. R. R. Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 217; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324; Perry v. New Orleans, &c., R. R., 55 Ala. 413.

⁷ Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Benity, 5 Sawyer, 118; Tenn. & Coosa R. R. Co. v. East Ala. Ry. Co., 75 Ala. 516.

§ 272. Right to bring ejectment not uniformly recognized.—The correctness of this doctrine, however, is not uniformly conceded, and there is excellent ground for assailing it. Where ejectment had been brought by a town having an easement in a street, against the owner of the fee, for obstructing it, the Kentucky Court of Appeals denied the right of a party entitled to an easement to recover in ejectment, for the reason that the judgment would divest the owner of the absolute property in the soil. The court say that the public have a remedy by injunction or indictment,¹ or it may summarily remove the obstructions in its street.² In a recent case in Indiana, it is said that the right to the possession of the street is in the owner of the fee, for neither the public nor the municipal corporation can maintain an action for possession; their rights cannot be vindicated in such an action. It is argued that as the right to maintain the proper possessory action must reside somewhere, and as it does not reside in the public or in the municipality it must be in the owner of the fee.³ In Wisconsin, the interest of the corporation in the street is considered to be a mere easement which, being incorporeal, is not the proper subject of an ejectment.⁴

§ 273. Rule in Michigan.—By statute in Michigan, the plaintiff in ejectment is required to show “a valid subsisting interest in the premises claimed.” Under this statute the right of a city, vested by charter with the supervision and control of its streets, to maintain ejectment therefor, was denied.⁵ The same doctrine was applied in a case in which a county representing the public brought ejectment against a party who had occupied and obstructed land dedicated to the public use as a street. The easement, the court said, was not a beneficial ownership in land, and in Michigan ejectment has never been considered as a proper remedy to put the public in possession of land ap-

¹ West Covington v. Freking, 8 Bush (Ky.), 121.

² City of Racine v. Crotsenberg, 61 Wis. 486; s. c. 50 Am. Rep. 149.

³ Terre Haute & S. E. R. Co. v. Rodel, 89 Ind. 128; s. c. 46 Am. Rep. 164.

⁴ City of Racine v. Crotsenberg, 61 Wis. 486; s. c. 50 Am. Rep. 149. Citing Sedg. & Wait on Trial of Title to Land, §§ 95, 98, 146.

⁵ Grand Rapids v. Whittlesey, 33 Mich. 109.

propriated for streets, or to keep it clear of unauthorized impediments.¹

§ 274. When ejectment cannot be maintained.—In the case of The Borough of Chambersburg v. Manko,² in the New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals, the general rule is recognized that local municipal authorities having charge of a public highway may maintain ejectment therefor, against any persons encroaching thereon; but the rule was held not to be applicable so as to support ejectment by the municipal authorities for an encroachment upon a turnpike, under the control of a private corporation, upon which the burden of protecting the highway had been expressly imposed, even though the municipal authorities were vested with certain prescribed powers which, in the case of an ordinary highway, would have justified the use of this possessory action.

§ 275. Trespass to try title.—In South Carolina it has been held, that the commissioners of streets cannot maintain trespass to try title for lands alleged to have been dedicated to public use as streets, and which had been closed up by those claiming under the donor. Indictment for nuisance was declared to be the appropriate relief.³ In Texas a municipal corporation may maintain trespass to try title for its lands.⁴

¹ Bay County v. Bradley, 39 Mich. 163.

² 39 N. J. L. 496.

³ Com'rs of Georgetown v. Taylor, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 130; s. c. 2 Bay (S. C.), 282; second trial, Ib. 288.

⁴ Lewis v. San Antonio, 7 Texas, 288.

CHAPTER IX.

EJECTMENT BETWEEN CO-TENANTS AND BY CO-TENANTS AGAINST THIRD PARTIES.

| | |
|--|--|
| § 276. Ejectment between tenants in common. 277. Actual ouster must be shown.—Early practice. 278. How distinguished from ouster in other cases. 279. Newell v. Woodruff stated. 280. Zeller's Lessee v. Eckert. 280a. Notice of ouster. 281. Ouster a question of fact. 282. Burden of proof. 283. What constitutes an ouster.—Demand. 284. Examples of ouster, etc. 285. Occupation of wild lands. 286. Ouster to sustain trespass. 287. Conveyance of the entire estate. 288. Exceptions to the rule. 289. Presumption of ouster from lapse of time. | § 290. When ouster need not be proved.—Denial by answer. 291. Title of co-tenants.—Estoppel. 292. Purchase of outstanding title. 293. } Title acquired under same in- 294. } strument. 295. Ejectment between joint tenants and co-parceners. 296. Tenancy in common of naked possession. 297. } Tenants in common against third 298. } parties.—Joinder of tenants in 299. } common. 300. } What interest recovered. 301. } 302. Joinder of joint tenants against third parties. 303. Ejectment by co-parceners. 303a. Partnership real estate. |
|--|--|

§ 276. Ejectment between tenants in common.—Ejectment is an appropriate remedy in cases where one tenant in common has been dispossessed or ousted by his co-tenant from the whole or any portion of the lands of the co-tenancy.¹ An ouster is defined to be “a wrongful dispossession or exclusion of a party from real property who is entitled to the possession.” The principal question to be determined in ejectments between co-tenants is whether or not the unity of possession has been destroyed, or whether the defendant has excluded the plaintiff from the possession and enjoyment of the estate, or has ousted him therefrom. Without proof of ouster ejectment will not lie where this relationship exists.² The general rule is that the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of his companions,¹ for a fellowship exists between tenants in common, (the doctrine of possessio fratris applies), and the law assumes that each will be true to the other.² "The seizin and possession of one tenant in common of real estate," say the Supreme Court of Iowa, "is seizin and possession for the use of the others."³ In a recent case, in the New York Court of Appeals, it was said that where one tenant in common acted for all the tenants in reference to the common property, his knowledge would be attributed to his co-tenants, in the same way that the knowledge of any other agent affects his principal.⁴ But this must be regarded as an extreme statement of the legal effects of this relation, for the co-tenant's admissions have been held not to be evidence against his companions, for the purpose of enlarging or varying the boundaries of a piece of land they had previously sold;⁵ one co-tenant cannot create an easement in the common property,⁶ and the judgment in an unsuccessful action for the lands of the co-tenancy, brought by one co-tenant, does not bind or estop his companions.⁷ The possession of one co-tenant does not prevent the statute of limitations from running against the others,⁸ and the disability of one co-parcener does not preserve the right of entry of another.⁹ The relations of tenants in common

¹ See Culver v. Rhodes, 87 N. Y. 348. Evidence of ouster is essential to maintain trespass to try title between tenants in common. Taylor v. Stockdale, 3 McCord (S. C.), 302.

² Hebrard v. Jefferson Mining Co., 33 Cal. 290 ; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 270.

¹ Covington v. Stewart, 77 N. C. 148; Bowen v. Preston, 48 Ind. 367; Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527; Doe v. Keen, 7 T. R. 386; Smales v. Dale, Hob. 120; Miller v. Myers, 46 Cal. 535; Ford v. Grey, Salk. 285; Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Penn.), 158; Doe d. Fishar v. Prosser, Cowp. 217; Challefoux v. Ducharme, 8 Wis. 287; Fairclaim v. Shackleton, 5 Burr. 2604; Mining Co. v. Taylor, 100 U. S. 37; Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 587; Vaughan v. Bacon, 15 Me. 455; Young v. De Bruhl, 11 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 638; Clymer's Lessee v. Dawkins, 3 How. 674-689; Van Valkenburg v. Huff, 1 Nev. 142; Campau v. Campau, 44 Mich. 31; Allen v. Hall, 1 McCord (S. C.), 131; Lillianskyoldt v. Goss, 2 Utah, 292; Robidoux v. Cassilegi, 10 Mo. App. 523; Peaceable v. Read, 1 East, 568; Fielder v. Childs, 73 Ala. 567; Campbell v. Shivers, 1 Ariz. 161; Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586.

² Day v. Howard, 73 N. C. 1; Thornton v. York Bank, 45 Me. 161.

³ Kinney v. Slaterry, 51 Iowa, 353; Burns v. Byrne, 45 Iowa, 285; Campbell v. Campbell, 13 N. H. 483; Crook v. Vandevort, 13 Neb. 506.

⁴ Ward v. Warren, 82 N. Y. 265. See Munson v. Munson, 30 Conn. 425.

⁵ Young v. Griffith, 79 N. C. 201.

⁶ Crippen v. Morss, 49 N. Y. 63.

⁷ Stovall v. Carmichael, 52 Texas, 383. See Williams v. Sutton, 43 Cal. 71.

⁸ Earl of Sussex v. Temple, 1 Ld. Raym. 310.

⁹ Roe d. Langdon v. Rowleston, 2 Taunt. 441. See Chap. XXVIII.

are presumed to be amicable rather than hostile, and the acts of one co-tenant affecting the common property are presumed to be for the common benefit;¹ and one co-tenant will not be presumed to intend a wrong to his companion, if his acts will admit of any other construction.² Thus, in Wood v. Phillips, the New York Court of Appeals held that one tenant in common was justified in taking peaceable possession of the common property; and even though such possession was acquired by stealth, it was legal as against a co-tenant claiming the sole possession, if accomplished without tumult or breach of the peace.³

Tenants in common sustain to each other a relation of trust,⁴ and the possession of one tenant in common eo nomine as tenant in common can never bar his companion, such possession being not adverse to, but in support of, the common title.⁵ In an early case, in the New York Supreme Court, Spencer, J., is reported as having said that in ejectment between tenants in common, actual ouster need not be proved. This cannot, however, be regarded as a correct statement of the law, unless the term be confined to actual physical ouster, "a turning out by the shoulders," or forcible expulsion.⁶

§ 277. Actual ouster must be shown.—Early practice.—The rule of law, then, may be regarded as clearly established, that one co-tenant cannot maintain ejectment against his fellow tenant without proof of an actual ouster, ¹ Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527; Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumn. 475, per Story, J.; Wood v. Phillips, 43 N. Y. 152.

² Stearns on Real Actions (2d ed.), p. 41; Berthold v. Fox, 13 Min. 507.

³ Wood v. Phillips, 43 N. Y. 152. See Depuy v. Williams, 26 Cal. 314; Low v. Elwell, 121 Mass. 309; Souter v. Codman, 14 R. I. 119.

⁴ Harrison v. Harrison, 56 Miss. 174.

⁵ Doe d. Fishar v. Prosser, Cowper, 217; Kathan v. Rockwell, 16 Hun (N. Y.), 90; Jackson v. Tibbits, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 241.

⁶ Shepard v. Ryers, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 497, 501. See Gale v. Hines, 17 Fla. 773.

Tenancy in common of personal property.—One tenant in common or joint owner cannot maintain an action for the possession of personal property against his co-tenant. If the co-tenant sells or converts the property an action will lie for conversion, or the excluded co-tenant may hold the title with the purchaser. But he cannot compel a delivery to himself of the whole property, because his co-tenant has an equal right. Davis v. Lottich, 46 N. Y. 396; Russell v. Allen, 13 N. Y. 173; Hart v. Fitzgerald, 2 Mass. 510; Balch v. Jones, 61 Cal. 234; Witham v. Witham, 57 Me. 448; Wills v. Noyes, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 324.

which may be effected either forcibly, or by a denial of the plaintiff's rights and the assertion of an adverse title. The Supreme Court of the United States adopted this doctrine in Barnitz v. Casey,¹ and cases sustaining the rule are numerous in both State and Federal tribunals, under both common law and code systems of practice.² The ouster may be committed by a principal through an agent.³

The rule requiring proof of actual ouster existed in early times in all cases where ejectment was brought by a tenant in common, a joint tenant, or parcener, against his companion, and the peculiar practice introduced to meet this emergency further illustrates the flexible nature of the remedy. When the defendant desired to admit the title and co-tenancy, and to deny the commission of any acts amounting to an ouster, or total denial of the plaintiff's rights, the court permitted him, upon presenting proper proof of the facts by affidavit, to enter into a special rule, requiring him to confess lease and entry at the trial, but not ouster, unless actual ouster should be proved.⁴ This favor was usually granted as a matter of course,⁵ for if the defendant entered into the usual consent rule he could not subsequently object that no actual ouster was proved at the trial.⁶ This special rule was, of course, available only when the defendant did not dispute or assail the title of his companion.

§ 278. How distinguished from ouster in other cases.—An

¹ 7 Cranch, 456.

² Norris v. Sullivan, 47 Conn. 474; Bethell v. McCool, 46 Ind. 303; Sharp v. Ingraham, 4 Hill (N. Y.), 116; Jones v. Perkins, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 512; Day v. Howard, 73 N. C. 1; Story v. Saunders, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 663; Gale v. Hines, 17 Fla. 773; Cutts v. King, 5 Me. 482; Taylor v. Hill, 10 Leigh (Va.), 457; Harvin v. Hodge, Dudley's (S. C.) Law, 23; Cross v. Robinson, 21 Conn. 379; Higbee v. Rice, 5 Mass. 351; Noble v. McFarland, 51 Ill. 226; Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493; Young v. De Bruhl, 11 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 638; Siglar v. Van Riper, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 414; Gilchrist v. Ramsay, 27 U. C. Q. B. 500; Trapnall v. Hill, 31 Ark. 345; Edwards v. Bishop, 4 N. Y. 61; Halford v. Tetherow, 2 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 393; Jones v. Weathersbee, 4 Strobb. (S. C.) Law, 50.

³ Munson v. Munson, 30 Conn. 425.

⁴ Doe d. Gigner v. Roe, 2 Taunt. 397; Anon. 7 Mod. 39; Oates v. Brydon, 3 Burr. 1895; Langendyck v. Burhans, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 461; Jackson v. Lyons, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 398; Jackson v. Leek, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 105; Taylor v. Hill, 10 Leigh (Va.), 457.

⁵ Doe d. Gigner v. Roe, 2 Taunt. 397.

⁶ Jackson v. Denniston, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 311.

ouster by a tenant in common does not differ in its nature from any other ouster in any respect; the amount of evidence required to prove it is, however, greater than in ordinary cases. In other cases the assumption of ownership is more clearly adverse, but the acts of a tenant in common which indicate assumption of ownership may be consistent with an acknowledgment of the title and rights of the co-tenant; hence acts which are decisive in the one case may be equivocal and insufficient in the other,¹ and may be susceptible of explanation consistent with a common title. "Acts of ownership," says Story, J., "are not, in tenancies in common, necessarily acts of dis-seizin."² As the possession of a co-tenant is presumed to be in right of the common title, he cannot claim the protection of the statute of limitations, unless it clearly appears that he has repudiated the relationship in toto, and is holding adversely to it. "In such cases the acts and declarations of the party in possession are to be construed much more strongly against him than when there is no privity of title."³ The difference as explained by the Supreme Court of Connecticut in a leading case, is only in the kind of evidence by which the ouster may be proved in the two cases. As against a co-tenant it cannot be proved merely by acts which are consistent with an honest intent to acknowledge and conform to the rights of his companion, although such acts might be sufficient evidence of an ouster between the parties, if there was no tenancy in common, and each claimed the whole estate.⁴

§ 279. Newell v. Woodruff, stated.—In the case just cited the evidence showed that the defendant leased the property, ordinarily spoke of it as her own, and paid the taxes regularly; that no one had, to her knowledge, set up a title or

¹ Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527; Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492. See Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 272.

² Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mason, 326, per Story, J. See Gower v. Quinlan, 40 Mich. 572; Norris v. Dunn, 70 Ga. 800.

³ Baily v. Trammell, 27 Texas, 328. See § 750.

⁴ Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492; Trenouth v. Gilbert, 63 Cal. 407; and see Barret v. Coburn, 3 Met. (Ky.) 510; s. c. 13 Am. Dec. 140, note. An ouster which may be the subject of an ejectment or an action of trespass will not necessarily sustain a suit instituted to invoke the equitable powers of the court to restrain it. Shoemaker v. Shoemaker, 11 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 85.

claimed any right to it except the plaintiff, who had never distinctly stated the nature of the claim put forward by him, and had not demanded to be let into possession of a specific interest as co-tenant. On this evidence the court below granted a non-suit, and this ruling was held on appeal to be correct. Mr. Freeman, in his valuable work on Co-tenancy and Partition,¹ says of this decision, that if it be accepted as sound, "it follows that acts sufficient to establish an ouster when proved as a defense, are insufficient when proved as a cause of action." As an illustration he takes the case of an exclusive occupancy (similar to that shown in Newell v. Woodruff) under a claim of ownership in severalty, accompanied by the occupant's belief that his claim is unquestioned and unquestionable. "If he be sued in ejectment by a co-tenant, the latter cannot recover, in the absence of a demand for possession, because there is no ouster," i. e., the facts proved are insufficient as a cause of action. "But if the possession has continued for a length of time sufficient to create a title by disseizin, then the plaintiff would not be able to recover, because, from such possession, the jury would be justified in finding an ouster," i. e., the facts proved are sufficient as a defense. If the decision were rested by the court wholly on the absence of a distinct demand by the plaintiff it might be open to this criticism; but the judges seem to have been quite as much affected by the lack of any positive evidence that the defendant's occupancy was actually adverse to the plaintiff's asserted title. Her speaking of the property as her own must be considered as of little importance. As was said by the Supreme Court of Missouri, in a leading case in that State, "To constitute an adverse possession of one tenant in common against his co-tenant, there must be some notorious act asserting an entire ownership. It is further said in some cases that this act must be brought home to the knowledge of the co-tenant. This, we suppose, depends upon the nature of the act. If it consists altogether of a mere verbal assertion of entire ownership, such an assertion could not with any propriety be regarded as an act of adverse possession of which the co-tenant was bound to take notice, unless made to him or communicated to him.”¹

¹ Co-tenancy and Partition, by A. C. Freeman; § 231.

§ 280. Zeller's Lessee v. Eckert.—Mr. Justice Nelson, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Zeller's Lessee v. Eckert,² said: “The trustee may disavow and disclaim his trust; the tenant the title of his laudlord after the expiration of his lease; the vendee, the title of his vendor after breach of the contract; and the tenant in common, the title of his co-tenant; and drive the respective owners and claimants to their action within the period of the statute of limitations. The only distinction between this class of cases and those in which no privity between the parties existed when the possession commenced, is in the degree of proof required to establish the adverse character of the possession. As that was originally taken and held in subserviency to the title of the real owner, a clear, positive, and continued disclaimer and disavowal of the title, and assertion of an adverse right, and to be brought home to the party, are indispensable before any foundation can be laid for the operation of the statute. Otherwise, the grossest injustice might be practiced; for, without such notice, he might well rely upon the fiduciary relations, under which the possession was originally taken and held, and upon the subordinate character of the possession as the legal result of those relations.” The principles on which this opinion is founded apply to every case where a party comes into possession of land under a fiduciary relation and include, as has often been decided, the case of a tenant in common in possession of land.³

The proof of ouster must at least be sufficient to establish an adverse possession on the part of a wrong-doer.⁴

§ 280a. Notice of ouster.—While it is conceded that one co-tenant may oust his companion, some of the authorities

¹ Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 272-282.

² 4 How. 289. See §§ 351, 750.

³ Bogges v. Meredith, 16 W. Va. 1-25.

⁴ See Edwards v. Bishop, 4 N. Y. 61.

assert that, as the entry and possession of one co-tenant is deemed to be the entry and possession of all, this presumption will continue and prevail until some notorious act of ouster or adverse possession is brought home to the knowledge of the excluded tenant.¹ Such were the views of Mr. Justice Nelson elsewhere quoted.² It has been said that "a possession that, in its commencement, is not adverse to the title of the true owner, can only become adverse to that title in one way; the holder must change his mind and intend to hold adversely, and knowledge or notice of this intention must come to the true owner."³

While evidence of actual notice of ouster to the evicted co-tenant is the most satisfactory proof procurable, yet we do not apprehend that this is the exclusive test intended to be applied. What is meant by the cases evidently is that, while this class of proof will be accepted as satisfactory, yet for proof of personal notice of eviction may be substituted evidence of an open notorious exercise of the rights of exclusive and absolute ownership which no co-owner could mistake, and of the existence and continuance of which he was bound to take notice.⁴

§ 281. Ouster a question of fact.—The ouster is a question of fact which it is the province of the jury to determine, and must be expressly found by them;⁵ and is not a question of law for the decision of the court.⁶ The evidence of

¹ Stonestreet v. Doyle, 75 Va. 378; Caperton v. Gregory, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 506. See Ord v. De La Guerra, 18 Cal. 75.

² See § 280; Zeller's Lessee v. Eckert, 4 How. 289.

³ Lawson v. Cunningham, 21 Ga. 459; S. P. Roberts v. Morgan, 30 Vt. 324; Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 534.

⁴ See Packard v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 180. The Supreme Court of Missouri, in a well-considered case, say: "When the act [of ouster] is of such a nature as the law will presume to be noticed by persons of ordinary diligence in attending to their own interests, and of such an unequivocal character as not to be easily misunderstood, it is not believed to be necessary that any positive notice should be given to the co-tenant, or that it devolves upon the possessor to prove a probable actual knowledge on the part of the co-tenant. It is sufficient that the act itself is overt, notorious, and if the co-tenant is ignorant of his rights or neglects them, he must bear the consequences." Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 282. See Waterman v. Andrews, 14 R. I. 600.

⁵ Taylor v. Hill, 10 Leigh (Va.) 457.

⁶ Cummings v. Wyman, 10 Mass. 465; Purcell v. Wilson, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 16; Harmon v. James, 15 Miss. 111; Blackmore v. Gregg, 2 W. & S. (Penn.) 182; Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484; Clark v. Crego, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 599.

ouster may of course be so overwhelming as to practically amount to a legal presumption of ouster, so that a verdict of a jury failing to find ouster will be set aside as against the evidence.¹ The evidence of ouster must be of a most positive and satisfactory nature,² sufficient to effectually dispel the presumption that the co-tenants have been loyal to one another.

§ 282. Burden of proof.—The burden of proving the ouster rests upon the party alleging it;³ the law, as we have seen, never assumes that a co-tenant is disloyal to the interests of the co-tenancy, or that he intends to do an unlawful act. The law will presume “that every man, having a right of entry or possession, enters and occupies according to his title.”⁴ But before the plaintiff can be called upon to establish an eviction or denial of his rights, it must appear that he is a tenant in common with the defendant, since it is only when that relation is shown to exist that proof of the ouster becomes necessary.⁵ The objection that a tenant in common must show an ouster can in the nature of things only be taken by the co-tenant or one claiming under him.⁶

§ 283. What constitutes an ouster.—Demand.—The determination of the question as to what constitutes an ouster between tenants in common is often perplexing and difficult, and the cases, though numerous, are not entirely in harmony.⁷ As we have seen, no proof of actual physical force,⁸ or “turning out by the shoulders,”⁹ or “the heels,”¹⁰ is necessary. The intent to oust must be established to the satisfaction of the jury, and the highest and most complete evidence of an ouster is a specific demand by the

¹ See § 289.

² Adam v. Ames Iron Co., 24 Conn. 230; Allen v. Hall, 1 McC. (S. C.) 131.

³ Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492; Van Bibber v. Frazier, 17 Md. 436.

⁴ Compare Van Bibber v. Frazier, 17 Md. 436; Robidoux v. Cassilegi, 10 Mo. App. 522; Stonestreet v. Doyle, 75 Va. 365; Caperton v. Gregory, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 506.

⁵ Gillett v. Stanley, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 121; Sharp v. Ingraham, 4 Hill (N. Y.), 116.

⁶ Arnot v. Beadle, Lator's Supp. (N. Y.) 181.

⁷ See note to Gillaspie v. Osburn, 13 Am. Dec. 140; s. c. 3 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 77.

⁸ Gale v. Hines, 17 Fla. 773.

⁹ Doe d. Fishar v. Prosser, Cowp. 217.

¹⁰ Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 272.

plaintiff, to be let into the possession of the premises, followed by a specific refusal on the part of the defendant to comply with the demand.¹ The demand and refusal do not, however, constitute an ouster, but like any other facts are evidence of it, just as in trover a demand and refusal do not constitute, but are only evidence of, a conversion. Hence, in California, a special verdict in ejectment between co-tenants, finding, not an ouster, but merely a demand of possession and a refusal by defendant to comply therewith, has been held not sufficient to authorize a judgment in plaintiff's favor,² the court saying, however, that in the absence of all explanation, the court might direct the jury to infer an ouster from the fact of demand and refusal.

It seems quite clear, as we shall presently show, that a denial by answer in the ejectment suit, of plaintiff's title and right of entry, is equivalent to an ouster.³ According to the Supreme Court of Missouri there must be outward acts of exclusive ownership, of an unequivocal character, overt and notorious, and of such a nature as, by their own import, to impart information and give notice to the co-tenants that an adverse possession and an actual disseizin are intended to be asserted against them.⁴

In the recent case of Culver v. Rhodes,⁵ the New York Court of Appeals said, "We are thus led to consider the reason and justice of the rule which should measure the adverse possession necessary to effect the ouster of a co-tenant. Assuredly it should be one which requires notice in fact to the co-tenant, or unequivocal acts, so open and public, that notice may be presumed, of the assault upon his title, and the invasion of his rights. The adverse possession sets running a limitation which in the end may

¹ Miller v. Myers, 46 Cal. 535; Doe d. Hellings v. Bird, 11 East, 49; Greer v. Tripp, 56 Cal. 209.

² Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484. See Roberts v. Moore, 3 Wall. Jr. 297.

³ Siglar v. Van Riper, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 414; Miller v. Myers, 46 Cal. 535; Greer v. Tripp, 56 Cal. 209. See § 290.

⁴ Warfield v. Lindell, 38 Mo. 561-581; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289; Bogges v. Meredith, 16 W. Va. 1; Hudson v. Putney, 14 W. Va. 561; Rust v. Rust, 17 W. Va. 901.

⁵ Per Finch, J., 87 N. Y. 348.

operate as a bar. It does so only upon the theory that the party disseized has slept upon his rights, and by silence and inaction has waived them. The rule is just if the ouster or adverse possession is brought home to the knowledge of the owner, or is of such definite and hostile and public character that such knowledge may be fairly presumed : but it is unjust and unreasonable if enforced without such limitation. . . . Originally, an actual disseizin, a palpable turning out of the co-tenant, or hindering him from entry, seems to have been requisite.¹ The modern rule is content with less, but is well stated in Hawk v. Senseman,² that to effect an ouster of the co-tenant there must be 'an actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile possession.' It must be such that knowledge of its existence is brought home to the co-tenant.³ It must make the intention to hold adversely manifest, and palpably display such intention.⁴ . . . Wherever the acts needful to create an ouster have been stated, they have been an actual and exclusive possession of the whole premises claiming the whole ;⁵ taking title from a hostile source, and refusing to let in the co-tenant ;⁶ an exclusive possession, exclusive receipt of rents and profits, and exclusive claim of title ;⁷ a public claim of the entire title, a notorious act, an open claim of exclusive right,⁸ or where, upon demand of the co-tenant, his title is denied and possession is refused."⁹

§ 284. Examples of ouster, &c.—The refusal to receive the co-tenant into possession must be unequivocal. Thus, it has been held that where the plaintiff, before suit

¹ Citing Reading's Case, 1 Salk. 392.

² 6 S. & R. (Penn.) 21.

³ Citing Zeller's Lessee v. Eckert, 4 How. 295 ; Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat. 213 ; McClung v. Ross, 5 Wheat. 124 ; Challefoux v. Ducharme, 8 Wis. 287 ; Long v. Mast, 11 Penn. St. 189 ; Bennet v. Bullock, 35 Penn. St. 364 ; Hall v. Stevens, 9 Met. (Mass.) 418.

⁴ Citing Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Met. (Mass.) 360 ; Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mason, 330 ; Hart v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Penn.), 185.

⁵ Citing Florence v. Hopkins, 46 N. Y. 182.

⁶ Citing Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cowen (N. Y.), 530 ; Clark v. Crego, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 617 ; Phelan v. Kelly, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 395.

⁷ Citing Grim v. Dyar, 3 Duer (N. Y.), 354.

⁸ Citing Smith v. Burtis, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 174 ; Jackson v. Brink, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 483 ; Jackson v. Tibb ts, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 241 ; Miller v. Platt, 5 Duer (N. Y.), 272.

⁹ Citing Siglar v. Van Riper, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 419.

brought, demanded to be let into possession, and defendant, who occupied the whole premises, answered that she desired to pay the judgment on which plaintiff had acquired title, and did not wish to give up the premises, this was held not to be an ouster or denial of plaintiff's rights.¹ Where the defendant admitted that he was in possession, and in answer to a demand for possession, answered that "it would be hard to pay for the land twice," this was held not to amount to "an unequivocal denial of the defendant's title," and not to be sufficient evidence of an ouster.² Piling lumber on the land is not an ouster.³

Again where defendant "claimed the land as owner in fee," such claim was adjudged not to be evidence of an ouster, or total denial of plaintiff's rights, but was considered to be consistent therewith, for each tenant in common is an owner in fee with the others.⁴ It is an ouster, however, if the tenant in possession refuses to suffer his companion to occupy with him.⁵ The ouster cannot be presumed from the fact of sole and exclusive possession,⁶ nor from a mere refusal to account for or pay a share or proportion of the rents,⁷ nor from an occasional going upon the land and cutting and removing trees from the woods,⁸ or swamps,⁹ nor from cutting grass and removing fences,¹⁰ nor from the removal of fixtures¹¹ nor from the ploughing up of crops,¹² nor from the exclusive receipt of the profits.¹³ "The taking of the whole profits," says Coke, "is no ejectment." There must be something more than

¹ Avery v. Hall, 50 Vt. 11.

² Colburn v. Mason, 25 Me. 434.

³ Keay v. Goodwin, 16 Mass. 1.

⁴ Edwards v. Bishop, 4 N. Y. 61.

⁵ Norris v. Sullivan, 47 Conn. 474.

⁶ Blakeney v. Ferguson, 20 Ark. 547.

⁷ Doe d. Fishar v. Prosser, Cowper, 217; Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Penn.), 158-164.

⁸ Wait v. Richardson, 33 Vt. 190.

⁹ Peck v. Ward, 18 Penn. St. 506; Ewer v. Lovell, 9 Gray (Mass.), 276. See § 285.

¹⁰ Booth v. Adams, 11 Vt. 156.

¹¹ Gibson v. Vaughn, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 389.

¹² Harman v. Gartman, Harp. (S. C.) Law, 430.

¹³ Silloway v. Brown, 12 Allen (Mass.), 30; Keyser v. Evans, 30 Penn. St. 507; Allen v. Hall, 1 McC. (S. C.) 131; Catlin v. Kidder, 7 Vt. 12; Linker v. Benson, 67 N. C. 150.

mere perception of profits and payment of taxes.¹ There must be a disturbance of the possession.² But proof of a denial of the plaintiff's title, accompanied by an exclusive claim of possession, and receipt of the whole profits, is sufficient to establish an ouster.³ So where defendant, in response to a demand for possession, said the demandant "could obtain it by law," this was held to justify a finding of an ouster.⁴ Where one of several co-tenants entered, claiming as exclusive owner, and locked the doors of the buildings upon the premises, thereby excluding the other tenants in common, the latter were allowed to maintain ejectment.⁵ Erecting a permanent structure on the land is some evidence of ouster.⁶ So it is an ouster to flood the lands of the co-tenacy by means of a dam erected upon the sole estate of one co-tenant.⁷ It has been held in Vermont that acts of possession constituting the ouster must be not only inconsistent with, but exclusive of the continuing rights of the plaintiff, and such as would amount to an ouster between landlord and tenant.⁸ In North Carolina an ouster by one tenant in common will not be presumed merely upon evidence of an exclusive use of the common property and appropriation to himself of its profits, unless such use and appropriation have continued for a period of twenty years.⁹

The ouster must at least be such as would establish an adverse possession on the part of a wrong-doer.¹⁰ A silent possession accompanied by no act which can amount to an ouster or give notice to the co-tenant of the intention to

¹ Tulloch v. Worrall, 49 Penn. St. 133.

² Harvin v. Hodge, Dudley (S. C.) Law, 23; Doe d. Hellings v. Bird, 11 East, 49; Gale v. Hines, 17 Fla. 773.

³ Alexander v. Kennedy, 19 Texas, 488, per Savage, Ch. J.; Siglar v. Van Riper, 10 Wend. (N.Y.) 414; Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. 587.

⁴ Gordon v. Pearson, 1 Mass. 323.

⁵ Trustees, &c., Church of North Greig v. Johnson, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 119.

⁶ Bennett v. Clemence, 6 Allen (Mass.), 18.

⁷ Jones v. Weathersbee, 4 Strobh. (S. C.) Law, 50. But see § 149.

⁸ Chandler v. Ricker, 49 Vt. 128. See Squires v. Clark, 17 Kan. 84; Ball v. Palmer, 81 Ill. 370. See, also, Chap. XII.

⁹ Caldwell v. Neely, 81 N. C. 114; Covington v. Stewart, 77 N. C. 148; Neely v. Neely, 79 N. C. 478. See Frederick v. Gray, 10 S. & R. (Penn.) 182.

¹⁰ Edwards v. Bishop, 4 N. Y. 61. See § 278.

exclude him, will not make the possession adverse.¹ And the statute will cease to run upon the recognition of the co-tenant's right.²

§ 285. Occupation of wild lands.—The use of an extensive tract of wild mountain land, covered, except as to a patch of five acres, with forest, by occasionally cutting a small number of trees for shingle or lumber, and peeling and carrying away a few loads of bark, at a nominal profit, does not of itself afford conclusive evidence of an ouster of a co-tenant, or of an adverse possession.³

§ 286. Ouster to sustain trespass.—A tenant in common can only maintain trespass quare clausum fregit against his companion for an actual ouster, such as would entitle him to maintain an ejectment,⁴ and in an action between tenants in common, recently decided in the House of Lords,⁵ it was held that where one co-tenant put a lock upon a gate, which was not shown, however, to have been kept locked, it did not constitute an ouster which would enable the co-tenant to maintain trespass. In the case of Filbert v. Hoff,⁶ which was trespass between tenants in common, the court decided that where both were in actual possession, a mere denial of the plaintiff's title, unaccompanied by acts, did not of itself amount to an ouster. The denial is available only as showing intent in connection with evidence that plaintiff had been excluded or expelled from the property.

§ 287. Conveyance of the entire estate.—When the grantee has obtained a conveyance of the whole estate from one of the co-tenants, entry made under such a title is a disseizin of the other co-tenants.⁷ This doctrine is just and reason-

¹ Abercrombie v. Baldwin, 15 Ala. 363; McClung v. Ross, 5 Wheat. 116-124; Challefoux v. Ducharme, 8 Wis. 288-307.

² Harral v. Wright, 57 Ga. 484. See § 753 c.

³ Chandler v. Ricker, 49 Vt. 128; s. p. Ewer v. Lovell, 9 Gray (Mass.), 277; Peck v. Ward, 18 Pa. St. 508.

⁴ Stedman v. Smith, 8 El. & Bl. 1; McCourt v. Eckstein, 22 Wis. 153, 159.

⁵ Jacobs v. Seward, L. R. 5 H. L. 464-472.

⁶ 42 Penn. St. 97.

⁷ Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527; Horne v. Howell, 46 Ga. 9; Kinney v. Slattery, 51 Iowa, 353; Kittredge v. Locks & Canals, &c., 17 Pick. (Mass.) 246; Cain v. Furlow, 47 Ga. 674; Townsend & Pastor's Case, 4 Leon. 52; Doe d. Reed v. Taylor, 5 Barn. & Adol. 575; Parker v. Prop'rs, &c., M. R., 3 Met. (Mass.) 101; able, for the grantee does not intend to enter or hold as a co-tenant. His entry is adverse. "The sale in such case of the whole tract, is in effect such an assertion of claim to the whole as cannot be mistaken, because it is wholly incompatible with an admission that the other tenant-in-common has any right whatever."¹ This is especially so if the conveyance is a deed of warranty.²

Devising the entire estate by will is an ouster.³ The same principle applies to joint tenants.⁴

§ 288. Exceptions to the rule.—In Seaton v. Son,⁵ however, the Supreme Court of California held that nothing short of an actual ouster severs the unity of possession, and that entry, followed by exclusive possession, under a deed which purported to convey the entire title, and a belief that the deed conveyed the whole estate, when in fact the grantor had but an undivided interest, did not amount to an ouster of the co-tenant. This case cannot be reconciled with the authorities above cited⁶ and seems to ignore the fact that the grantee in such a deed has rights which should be considered. It is in effect a revival of the absurd doctrine of physical expulsion; and would require an actual turning out by the shoulders or some such decided Clark v. Vaughan, 3 Conn. 191; Long v. Stapp, 49 Mo. 506; Gill v. Fauntleroy, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 186; Gray v. Bates, 3 Strobb (S. C.) Law, 498-500; Clapp v. Bromagh, 9 Cowen (N. Y.), 530; Hinkley v. Greene, 52 Ill. 230; Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. 401-445; Clymer's Lessee v. Dawkins, 3 How. 674-689; Weisinger v. Murphy, 2 Head (Tenn.), 679; Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mason, 326; Gerry v. Holford, Cro. Eliz. 615. But see Seaton v. Son, 32 Cal. 481; Roberts v. Morgan, 30 Vt. 319, 324; Day v. Howard, 73 N. C. 1; Caldwell v. Neely, 81 N. C. 114; Culver v. Rhodes, 87 N. Y. 348. Possession taken under a partition decree constitutes a disseizin. Cryer v. Andrews, 11 Texas, 181; Clymer v. Dawkins, 3 How. 688.

¹ Law v. Patterson, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 191.

² Thomas v. Pickering, 13 Me. 349; Kittredge v. Locks and Canals, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 247.

³ Miller v. Miller, 60 Pa. St. 16.

⁴ Larman v. Huey's Heirs, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 436; Caldwell v. Neely, 81 N. C. 114; Day v. Howard, 73 N. C. 1.

⁵ 32 Cal. 481. See, also, Packard v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 183; Day v. Howard, 73 N. C. 1; Roberts v. Morgan, 30 Vt. 324. In this latter case the court say: "It has never been considered that a conveyance by one joint tenant, or tenant in common, of all his interest in real estate, though the land is described in such a manner as to pass the whole under the deed, if the grantor had owned the whole, is notice of itself to the other joint-owner of any such exclusive claim to the land, as to oust him of his legal seizin in the land. He has the right to suppose that by such a deed, both the grantor and the grantee understand it to convey the real interest the grantor owns in the land."

⁶ § 287.

act to evidence an ouster. It is doubtful, however, if the taking of a deed by one co-tenant from a third party¹ or a life tenant² is of itself the equivalent of an ouster, unless accompanied and followed by a hostile claim of which the co-tenant had knowledge, or by acts of possession not only inconsistent with, but exclusive of, the rights of the co-tenant. The execution by one co-tenant of a mortgage upon the whole property was held in Pennsylvania not to be per se an ouster, for the mortgagor was left in possession, and the instrument created only a lien, and had not the force or legal effect of an absolute sale.³

§ 289. Presumption of ouster from lapse of time.—When there is no evidence of actual ouster, it is frequently said that the jury may presume an ouster from long continued adverse possession. No fixed principle or well defined rule of law as to this seems to have governed the decisions. The exclusive possession and receipt of profits for more than seven years in North Carolina,⁴ for seventeen years in Iowa,⁵ for twenty-six years in Missouri,⁶ and for twenty-seven years in New York,⁷ appear to have been regarded as insufficient, without other evidence, to justify an inference of an ouster. But thirty-six years sole and uninterrupted possession, by one tenant in common, was held by Lord Mansfield to be sufficient to justify the jury in finding an actual ouster.⁸ So in New York, periods of forty and forty-two years,⁹ in Alabama thirty years,¹⁰ and in Pennsylvania twenty-one years¹¹ were in each case, regarded as sufficient to justify the inference of an ouster without other proof. In

¹ Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 532.

² Culver v. Rhodes, 87 N. Y. 348.

³ Wilson v. Collishaw, 13 Penn. St. 276.

⁴ Linker v. Benson, 67 N. C. 150.

⁵ Flock v. Wyatt, 49 Iowa, 466.

⁶ Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 272.

⁷ Northrop v. Wright, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 221. See Colman v. Clements, 23 Cal. 245.

⁸ Doe d. Fishar v. Prosser, 1 Cowper, 217. See Cole on Eject. p. 17; Robidoux v. Cassilegi, 10 Mo. App. 523.

⁹ Van Dyck v. Van Beuren, 1 Caines (N. Y.), 84; Jackson d. Bradt v. Whitbeck, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 632. See Woolsey v. Morss, 19 Hun (N. Y.), 273.

¹⁰ Johnson v. Toulmin, 18 Ala. 50.

¹¹ Frederick v. Gray, 10 S. & R. (Penn.) 182; McCall v. Webb, 88 Penn. St. 150.

one of the cases cited¹ it was said, by the Supreme Court of New York, that the jury should have been directed to presume an ouster, i. e., that the presumption was one of law, or that, as a matter of law, exclusive possession and receipt of profits for forty-two years is conclusive evidence of an ouster. The only authority cited in support of this principle is Doe v. Prosser; but in that case Lord Mansfield simply left the question to the jury upon all the facts. It is hard to see on what ground the view advanced in Van Dyck v. Van Beuren can be supported, and the authorities are very generally opposed to it.² Michigan has no statute that disposes of controversies which may arise between tenants in common from an exclusive possession by one co-tenant; but where such exclusive possession is continued for more than twenty-five years it is there held that the right of the excluded parties is gone.³ These cases cannot be reconciled, but the confusion seems to have arisen partly from the misuse of the word presumption, and partly from the analogies suggested by the existence of a statutory limit with regard to most cases of adverse possession. Thus, in Pennsylvania and Alabama the courts appear, from the cases above cited, to regard the statutory period of twenty-one years as governing absolutely, but whether by actual force of law, or by analogy, is not made clear. The resort to analogy for such a purpose is open to many objections, and, indeed, when the legislature has omitted to provide a statutory limit to govern in cases where ouster is claimed from lapse of time, such action by the courts is merely a loose kind of judicial legislation. On principle the following rules seem to be those which ought generally to govern in these cases though they have never been distinctly formulated by the courts, and may be subject to exception and limitation.

First. There is, in ordinary cases, no presumption of law as to ouster arising from long continued exclusive possession by one co-tenant.⁴

¹ Van Dyck v. Van Beuren, 1 Caines (N. Y.), 84.

² See Bolton v. Hamilton, 2 W. & S. (Penn.) 294.

³ Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

⁴ This subject is ably treated in the case of Dubois v. Campau, 28 Mich. 304.

Second. Where the exclusive possession, however, has been of such long duration as to be manifestly inconsistent with the claim of a co-tenancy, the jury should be directed to find an ouster based on the presumption of fact arising from such long continued hostile possession.

Third. Where the possession has been of such short duration as to be manifestly insufficient to support a title in the occupant based upon an ouster, without other evidence, the question of ouster should not be submitted to the jury at all.

Fourth. Where a period is fixed by statute, it of course governs absolutely.

Fifth. When no such period is fixed, the limit of twenty years, from its general adoption by legislation, in ordinary cases of adverse possession, may possibly be regarded as a general guide in considering the evidence in the case.

Sixth. As a general rule, the evidence of exclusive possession is to be submitted to the jury, if its duration warrants a submission at all, with the direction that they may infer ouster from it.

§ 290. When ouster need not be proved.—Denial by answer.—If the defendant controverts the plaintiff's title, that must be taken as an admission of the ouster. If he does not dispute the plaintiff's title, he should admit it by answer or disclaimer, and deny the ouster.¹ He cannot, in one breath, deny the co-tenancy and claim the benefit of the relation.² Hence it was held that no ouster need be shown where the answer alleged that the defendant held the premises "adversely against all persons,"³ or where Campbell, J., and Graves, J., were both of opinion that proof of the occupation by one tenant in common, executing leases and receiving rents for more than twenty-one years with the knowledge and without dissent or claim on the part of the excluded co-tenant, barred the latter absolutely as matter of legal presumption or inference. Christiancy, Ch. J., with whom the learned Cooley, J., concurred, rendered a very able dissenting opinion reviewing a great number of cases, and maintaining with much vigor that the inference or question of ouster or adverse possession was one of fact to be submitted to and found by the jury. The judgment, however, was affirmed, as Cooley, J., considered, that if the jury had returned any different verdict it would have been set aside as unwarranted by the facts, and, therefore, no error was committed to the prejudice of the plaintiff.

¹ Withrow v. Biggerstaff, 82 N. C. 82. See Halford v. Tetherow, 2 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 395.

² Peterson v. Laik, 24 Mo. 541.

³ Harrison v. Taylor, 33 Mo. 211.

the defendant claiming the exclusive possession pleaded "not guilty,"¹ or denied the plaintiff's title, or right of entry, by answer.² In the New York Superior Court, Chief Justice Oakley said that "a denial in the defendant's answer of all right, title and interest in the plaintiff, is an admission that his own possession is adverse, and may therefore well be treated as equivalent to a confession of ouster superseding the necessity of proof upon the trial."³

§ 291. Title of co-tenants.—Estoppel.—Tenants in common, entering into and holding possession of land as such, cannot, as against their co-tenants, dispute or assail the common title,⁴ or set up a tax title as paramount and in opposition to the title of the co-tenants. If one tenant in common has a title superior to that of the co-tenancy he should surrender the possession or allow the other co-tenant to enter, after which the superior title may be asserted by action. The vantage ground of possession may have been acquired by an acknowledgment of the co-tenancy, and good faith requires that it should be given up if the relationship is to be repudiated. Where the co-tenant relies upon the defense of adverse possession, any title may be proved in support of that plea,⁵ for the defense concedes

¹ Noble v. McFarland, 51 Ill. 226. But see Halford v. Tetherow, 2 Jones (N. C.) Law, 393.

² Miller v. Myers, 46 Cal. 535; Greer v. Tripp, 56 Cal. 209.

³ Clason v. Rankin, 1 Duer (N. Y.), 337. See McCallum v. Boswell, 15 U. C. Q. B. 343; Scott v. McLeod, 14 U. C. Q. B. 574. See § 283.

⁴ Olney v. Sawyer, 54 Cal. 379; Bornheimer v. Baldwin, 42 Cal. 27; Phelan v. Kelly, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 389; Knolls v. Barnhart, 71 N. Y. 474; Funk v. Newcomer, 10 Md. 301; Buchanan v. King, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 414; Keller v. Auble, 58 Penn. St. 410; Weaver v. Wible, 25 Penn. St. 270; Brown v. Homan, 1 Neb. 448; Frentz v. Klotsch, 28 Wis. 312. But see Lawrence v. Webster, 44 Cal. 385; reviewed in Olney v. Sawyer, 54 Cal. 379; Burhans v. Van Zandt, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 91. Mr. Bigelow, in a note in his work on Estoppel, 3d ed. p. 284, says of Olney v. Sawyer, 54 Cal. 379: "A questionable distinction taken in California may in this connection be noticed. While it is there agreed that no estoppel arises from the sole fact of a common title under which both plaintiff and defendant claim, it is held that for the purpose of enabling an ousted co-tenant to obtain possession there is an estoppel upon his associate to set up an outstanding title. But after the co-tenant has thus regained possession either may proceed against the other under a paramount title. Olney v. Sawyer, 54 Cal. 379; Bornheimer v. Baldwin, 42 Cal. 27. This distinction appears to have been fixed upon to save the case of Lawrence v. Webster, 44 Cal. 385, which had justly denied the existence of any estoppel."

⁵ Phelan v. Kelly, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 389. See Larman v. Huey's Heirs, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 436.

the former title of the co-tenancy, but seeks to defeat it by reason of the omission of the co-owner to assert his rights within the proper time. The purchase of a tax title by one co-tenant is esteemed to be for the benefit of all the tenants in common,¹ though a lien may exist in favor of the party making the payment.² The same principle applies to the grantee of a co-tenant if he purchases with knowledge of the co-tenancy.³ The tenant who relieves the estate from the incumbrance of taxes has also a charge upon the land against his co-tenant for reimbursement,⁴ but not as against a purchaser from the co-tenant without notice.⁵

In Gillett v. Gaffney ⁶ a curious exception was admitted to the rule that one tenant in common, who acquires an outstanding title, will be considered as holding it in trust for his co-tenant. The fee of the lands of the co-tenancy, which were subject to entry, was in the United States. One co-tenant died, leaving heirs. The survivor deeded an undivided half interest in the lands to a third party, who, with the survivor, thereafter acquired the title to the entire tract from the government, the heirs of the deceased co-tenant having taken no steps to protect their share. The survivor afterwards died, leaving heirs. The court held that ¹ Allen v. Poole, 54 Miss. 323-334; Davis v. King, 87 Penn. St. 261; Page v. Webster, 8 Mich. 263; Morgan v. Herrick, 21 Ill. 481; Flinn v. McKinley, 44 Iowa, 68; Lloyd v. Lynch, 28 Penn. St. 419; Sheean v. Shaw, 47 Iowa, 411; Dubois v. Campau, 24 Mich. 360; Maul v. Rider, 51 Pa. St. 377; Conn v. Conn, 58 Iowa, 747.

² Moore v. Woodall, 40 Ark. 42.

³ Austin v. Barrett, 44 Iowa, 488.

⁴ Davidson v. Wallace, 53 Miss. 475. See Harrison v. Harrison, 56 Miss. 174.

⁵ Stover v. Cory, 53 Iowa, 708. In Washington v. Conrad, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 562, it is said that tenancy in common differs widely from the ordinary relation of landlord and tenant, and that a mere admission of co-tenancy is not necessarily binding. Thus, if A, being already in possession, admit that B is his tenant in common, and afterwards, claiming exclusively for himself, is sued by B in an action of ejectment, B cannot recover against him by the mere force of such parol admission, and without showing any title whatever. Analogous to the doctrine of estoppel between tenants in common is that of implied warranty between partitioners. In case of a partition of land between co-tenants, the law imports a warranty of the common title, and holds it incompatible with their duty to each other to set up a claim by paramount title. But in a case in which, by the operation of law or act of God, there has, after the partition, ripened in favor of the claimant a title potentially existing at the time of the partition, but then inchoate, (e. g., dower,) the warranty may not apply. See Bigelow on Estoppel, 3d ed. p. 346, and cases cited.

⁶ 3 Col. 351.

the heirs of the co-tenant who died first, having neglected to perfect their title, should not be allowed to participate in the fruits of the greater diligence of the third party, and that the latter did not come within the rule making co-tenants trustees for their companions, as to the acquisition of an outstanding title, but that the heirs of the survivor took his interest in the premises charged with all the equities, and must be considered as holding it in trust for the heirs of his co-tenant.

§ 292. Purchase of outstanding title.—We may therefore regard it as a well settled rule that one tenant in common who purchases an outstanding title or incumbrance, cannot set it up against his co-tenant without affording the latter an opportunity to contribute his proportion of the expense of acquiring the title or incumbrance, thus enabling him to participate in the benefits of the purchase.¹ The same principle applies to joint tenants and co-parceners.² A defendant in possession under a deed which makes him tenant in common with the plaintiff, cannot set up an outstanding title in a stranger to defeat the action.³ The possession of a widow as dowress, and as guardian in socage of the minor children, is as tenant in common with the heirs, and she will not be permitted to buy in a title for her individual benefit.⁴ The same principle holds though the co-tenant takes the title in the name of a third party.⁵

Chancellor Kent said in Van Horne v. Fonda, the leading case on the subject, "It is not consistent with good faith, nor with the duty which the connection of the parties, as claimants of a common subject, created, that one ¹ Smith v. Osborne, 86 Ill. 606; Titsworth v. Stout, 49 Ill. 78-80; Wilton v. Tazwell, 86 Ill. 29; Venable v. Beauchamp, 3 Dana (Ky.), 321; Lee v. Fox, 6 Ib. 172; Boskowitz v. Davis, 12 Nev. 446; Van Horne v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 389, 407; Tisdale v. Tisdale, 2 Sneed (Tenn.), 596; Picot v. Page, 26 Mo. 421; Rothwell v. Dewees, 2 Black, 613; Bracken v. Cooper, 80 Ill. 221; Brown v. Homan, 1 Neb. 448; Gossom v. Donaldson, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 230; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumner, 486; Brittin v. Handy, 20 Ark. 381; Moore v. Woodall, 40 Ark. 42.

² Lee v. Fox, 6 Dana (Ky.), 172, 176.

³ Braintree v. Battles, 6 Vt. 395.

⁴ Knolls v. Barnhart, 71 N. Y. 474. Compare Aguirre v. Alexander, 58 Cal. 21; Watts v. Owens, 62 Wis. 525.

⁵ Duff v. Wilson, 72 Penn. St. 442.

of them should be able, without the consent of the other, to buy in an outstanding title, and appropriate the whole subject to himself, and thus undermine and oust his companion. It would be repugnant to a sense of refined and accurate justice. It would be immoral, because it would be against the reciprocal obligation to do nothing to the prejudice of each other's equal claim, which the relationship of the parties, as joint devisees, created. Community of interest produces a community of duty, and there is no real difference, on the ground of policy and justice, whether one co-tenant buys up an outstanding incumbrance, or an adverse title, to disseize and expel his co-tenant."¹

This doctrine is not, however, of universal application, but is limited and qualified by some of the authorities. Thus, where one tenant denies the title of his co-tenants, and claims the entire property, such denial being known to his companions, the latter cannot be justified thereafter in assuming that the acts of his hostile companion respecting the land are for the common benefit. It is then no longer a breach of trust, or fraud upon their rights, for him to purchase an outstanding title, and hold it exclusively for his own benefit.² If the lands have been actually lost by an adverse title, and the co-tenants are evicted, the co-tenancy is destroyed, and one tenant may then buy the lost land, and hold it free from any claim of his companion.³

§ 293. Title acquired under same instrument.—It has been laid down in several cases⁴ that tenants in common are subject to this mutual obligation only when their interests accrue under the same instrument, or acts of the parties, or of the law, or where they enter into some obligation or understanding with one another, and that persons acquir-

¹ Van Horne v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 389; Tisdale v. Tisdale, 2 Sneed (Tenn.), 596. A purchase by a life tenant of an adverse title will inure to the benefit of the remainder-man. Myers v. Reed, 17 Fed. Rep. 401-407; Varney v. Stevens, 22 Me. 334; Daviess v. Myers, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 513. Neither a guardian of an intestate's heirs nor an administrator of his estate can buy up an adverse title to his land. Culberhouse v. Shirey, 42 Ark. 25.

² Wright v. Sperry, 21 Wis. 331, 338. See Frenz v. Klotsch, 28 Wis. 312, 317.

³ Coleman v. Coleman, 3 Dana (Ky.), 398.

⁴ Roberts v. Thorn, 25 Texas, 728, 737; King v. Rowan, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 675; Rippetoe v. Dwyer, 49 Texas, 498; Brittin v. Handy, 20 Ark. 381, 419; Frenz v. Klotsch, 28 Wis. 312, 318. Contra Montague v. Selb, 106 Ill. 49.

ing unconnected interests in the same subject, by distinct purchases, though it may be under the same title, are not bound to any greater protection of one another than would be required among strangers.

In most of these cases the principle stated was not necessary to a decision of the case. Thus in Roberts v. Thorn it appeared that the outstanding title acquired was of no value, and the decision is in great measure based on the distinction, drawn in the case of Smiley v. Dixon,¹ between a defective title and an absolute want of title. The plaintiff and defendant in that case had purchased from a party having neither claim nor color of title, and the defendant had subsequently acquired the title from the State by actual settlement. The court held that there existed no obligation of law, or of conscience, which prevented him from acquiring the absolute title, or that made him a trustee for the plaintiff. None of the cases in which the principle is cited with approval suggest any reason in the nature of the relation between co-tenants why, if it is a relation of trust, it should be destroyed by the mere fact that the interests of the co-tenants are of different origin. The distinction seems to have been derived from a misconception of the principle underlying the decision of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, in Matthews v. Bliss.² In that case it was held that one tenant in common of a vessel, who had contracted with his co-tenant for the purchase of his share, was under no legal obligation to disclose the fact that a third party had previously agreed with him to purchase the entire vessel at a higher rate. Chief Justice Shaw, in delivering the opinion of the court, says, that "the tenants in common of a vessel, who are not engaged jointly in the employment of purchasing or building ships for sale, do not stand in such a relation of mutual trust and confidence towards each other, in respect of the sale of such vessel, that each is bound, in his dealings with the other, to communicate all the information of facts within his knowledge which may affect the price or value. A different rule may prevail, in respect to any contract for the use or employment of the common property, in which relation perhaps they may be deemed to place confidence mutually in each other."

¹ 1 P. & W. (Pa.) 439.

² 22 Pick. (Mass.) 48.

The rule here stated with regard to tenants in common of a ship would undoubtedly apply to tenants in common of land; that is to say, there is nothing in the mere relation, established by such a co-tenancy, to prevent one co-tenant dealing with another, as to the purchase or sale of his share, as an entire stranger. But the Massachusetts Supreme Court suggested no distinction between co-tenancies having a common and those having diverse origin. The learned court did indeed suggest that if the tenants in common of a ship were engaged jointly in the employment of purchasing or building ships for sale, they might be bound to communicate to each other all facts affecting the price or value; such a rule would, however, be founded not on considerations growing out of the origin of the co-tenancy, but out of its object and purpose. It is not easy to see on what principle any distinction as to the nature of the co-tenancy, growing out of its origin, can be satisfactorily supported.

§ 294. The distinction is without merit if the doctrine of this trust relation is founded upon elementary considerations of fair dealing between parties having a community of interest in a subject. Each tenant in common is entitled to the entire management and control of the property; for one to use this right for his own individual profit, and not the common benefit, would be simple fraud; and to permit him to buy in outstanding titles, without giving his co-tenant the option of joining in the purchase, would, as we have said, be to permit a fraud no less distinct. All this remains true no matter how the tenancy in common originated, and, therefore, the cases in which the general principal of the trust relation is departed from, must be rested upon the consideration that the facts showed, as in Matthews v. Bliss, ubi supra, that no trust and confidence was called for between the co-tenants. Thus, in *Brittin v. Handy*¹ it was decided by the Supreme Court of Arkansas, in a well-considered opinion, that there was no reason why one tenant in common should not purchase the interest of his co-tenant in the land under execution. He having a claim against his co-tenant, enforceable by such means, was regarded, as to the enforcement of it, as standing in a hostile relation to him, though no doubt, as to the use of the land, accounting for profits, &c., he would have been held by the same court to occupy a relation of trust. In the course of the opinion, the learned court refers to the supposed distinction between tenancies in common under the same instrument, and such tenancies arising through purchases at different times, and of land held by different titles; but what was said on this head was in no way necessary to the decision of the case.

¹ 20 Ark. 381, 401, 404.

The analogy of the rule governing landlord and tenant may be noticed. If the co-tenants all acquire the interest and possession under a common instrument or by a single act they are estopped. All must be vested with the same title. When the diverse interests are gathered into one by separate conveyances, the possibility of a variation in the interests and in the situation of the parties seems to be considered possible.

§ 295. Ejectment between joint tenants and co-parceners.—The principles governing ejectment between tenants in common are applicable to joint tenants and co-parceners. The possession of one joint tenant or co-parcener is in legal contemplation the possession of all; the acts of each, affecting the joint property, are considered to be for the common benefit; and proof of actual ouster, and denial of the claimant's rights and title, is necessary to sustain the action.¹

One joint tenant or owner may, as we shall presently see, sustain ejectment against another upon a title acquired by adverse possession.² The Court of Errors and Appeals of South Carolina recognized the rule that one joint tenant could not sue his co-tenant except he be ousted of the joint possession, and held that it was an ouster where the defendant had overflowed the land by water.

¹ 2 Cruise's Dig. *497, *518; Adams on Ejectment (4th ed. 1854), p. 136; Doe v. Keen, 7 T. R. 386; Jones v. Weathersbee, 4 Strobb. (S. C.) Law, 50.

² Russell v. Marks, 3 Met. (Ky.) 37.

from a mill-pond, thus appropriating it to his exclusive use.¹

§ 296. Tenancy in common of naked possession.—The Supreme Court of Utah, in a recent case, expressed doubts as to whether there could be any tenancy in common in a mere naked possession of land, strongly intimating the opinion that there must be some right or title to the possession to create a co-tenancy; that in any case a mere possessory tenancy in common can exist only when all the tenants are actually occupying the land,² and, consequently, that where one of two joint possessors of land ousted the other, the latter could not maintain ejectment. If, however, any possessory co-tenancy at all can exist, the termination of the relation by force is inconsistent with the most elementary principles of justice. The recognition of such a right would lead to the most absurd results. In all cases of co-tenancy, for instance, the tenants are entitled to partition, but the right would hardly have any value if the more powerful of the co-tenants could end the relationship by driving his companion off the property. But naked possession or occupancy of land is clearly a degree of title, although the lowest and most imperfect,³ or, at least, it constitutes, in itself, prima facie evidence of title,⁴ which, in ejectment, is effectual against every person except the true owner. A mere naked possession can be sold at sheriff's sale, and the purchaser acquires the right to recover it;⁵ so a debtor may have homestead in a mere possessory interest;⁶ and such an interest descends to heirs.⁷ Actual possession of land is prima facie evidence of title in ¹ Jones v. Weathersbee, 4 Strobb. (S. C.) Law, 50. After considerable controversy (see Meeker v. Wright, 76 N. Y. 262), it seems to be now established in New York (Bertles v. Nunan, 92 N. Y. 152; Freil v. Buckley, 92 N. Y. 634), that under a conveyance to a husband and wife jointly, they take not as tenants in common or joint tenants, but as tenants by the entirety, and upon the death of either the survivor takes the whole estate. The legislation affecting married women is considered not to have abrogated the common law doctrine.

² Lillianskyoldt v. Goss, 2 Utah, 292 (Boreman, J. diss.).

³ 2 Bla. Com. 195.

⁴ Hill v. Draper, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 458.

⁵ Knox v. Herod, 2 Penn. St. 26; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 501.

⁶ McGrath v. Sinclair, 55 Miss. 89.

⁷ Gillett v. Gaffney, 3 Col. 351; Teabout v. Daniels, 38 Iowa, 158.

fee, and will support ejectment against a trespasser,¹ although, to raise a presumption as to the quality or degree of the interest claimed, if not an absolute fee, proof of possession must be accompanied by evidence of some claim of title.² In *Gillett v. Gaffney*³ the nature of title by occupancy of land, and whether or not it possesses the legal character of real estate, was considered at length by the Supreme Court of Colorado. The common law doctrine, that a mere naked possession, without shadow or pretense of right, or apparent right, to continue such possession, constitutes an estate in land, is recognized, though the decision is based largely upon the construction of statutes. The court reach the conclusion that title by occupancy of land which is the subject of entry descends to heirs. There seems, therefore, no reason why a possessory co-tenancy should not be recognized as involving, as far as applicable, all the legal consequences incident to an ownership of the fee by tenants in common.

It seems that, under the English chancery practice, and in our Federal Courts, the holder of a mere possessory interest in land cannot maintain a bill for partition.⁴ Such a bill must be filed by those having title.⁵

§ 297. Tenants in common against third parties.—Joinder of tenants in common.—Many cases hold that, at common law, tenants in common cannot join in an action of ejectment. This was certainly the rule in real actions.⁶ The reason upon which this rule rests is that their freeholds are several; there is no joint property, or union and en-

¹ Burt v. Panjaud, 99 U. S. 180.

² Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59. In Jackson d. Sparkman v. Porter, 1 Paine C. C. 467, the court said "Possession per se is evidence of no more than the mere fact of present occupation by right. Hence the declarations of a party in possession are always admitted to show the extent and nature of the interest he claimed in the land; and from the very nature of the case, it must depend on these collateral circumstances to ascertain the extent of his interest. If the occupant of land avows his interest to be that of a term of years, it would be absurd to consider his possession evidence of a fee; and it is certainly granting all that can reasonably be asked, to allow the occupant an interest as large as he claimed."

³ 3 Colorado, 351

⁴ Strettell v. Ballou, 3 McCr. 46. See Horncastle v. Charlesworth, 11 Simons, 315.

⁵ Ross v. Cobb, 48 Ill. 111; Williams v. Wiggand, 53 Ill. 233.

⁶ Stearns on Real Actions, p. 198; Roscoe on Actions Relating to Real Property, p. *8. See Webster v. Vandevanter, 6 Gray (Mass.), 432.

tirety of interests, but the estate is held by distinct titles, or by one title and several rights.¹ The co-tenants have separate interests in the land; each has only an undivided part; there is no privity, and consequently neither has the right to demise the whole.² Their interests are considered as different estates, depending upon different titles.³ This rule has been disregarded in some of our States, and actions of ejectment, founded upon a joint demise by tenants in common, have been sustained by courts of the highest authority, upon the theory that the possession of tenants in common is joint, and that they may join in disposing of that interest.⁴ This is contrary to the former rule in England, and opposed to the doctrine of Littleton and Coke.⁵ Chancellor Kent said (1804), that it had "long been the established practice to permit tenants in common to join in the mixed action of ejectione firmæ, and when that action has become in form only a mixed action, and in substance a real action, for trying the title of the fee, having carried the fiction thus far, we ought not now to suffer ourselves to be entangled in this very fiction. If two tenants in common are competent to join in the lease or transfer of their joint possession, it is sufficient; and for these reasons we must hold, even in opposition to several authorities, that it has now become immaterial whether tenants in common declare on joint or separate demises."⁶

§ 298. It was held, however, in a later case in New York, that though this doctrine may be sound as to the

¹ Doe d. Poole v. Errington, 1 Ad. & El. 750; Heatherley v. Weston, 2 Wils. 232; Gaines v. Buford, 1 Dana (Ky.), 483; Wathen v. English, 1 Mo. 746; Moore v. Fursden, 1 Show. 342; Mantle v. Wollington, Cro. Jac. 166; Rogers v. Turley, 4 Bibb (Ky.), 355; White v. Pickering, 12 S. & R. (Penn.) 435; Throckmorton v. Burr, 5 Cal. 400; Cole v. Irvine, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 634; Malcom v. Rogers, 5 Cowen (N. Y.), 188; Dube v. Smith, 1 Mo. 313.

² White v. Pickering, 12 S. & R. (Penn.) 435.

³ Doe d. Harrison v. Botts, 4 Bibb (Ky.), 420.

⁴ Cole v. Irvine, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 634; Malcom v. Rogers, 5 Cowen (N. Y.), 188; Massie v. Long, 2 Ohio, 287; Doe d. Nixon v. Potts, 1 Hawks (N. C.), 469; Jackson v. Bradt, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 170 (note a); Alford v. Dewin, 1 Nev. 211; Hoyle v. Stowe, 2 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 321; Barrow v. Nave, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 228. Tenants in common may join in an action for use and occupation. Cobb v. Kidd, 19 Bla. C. C. 560; Porter v. Bleiler, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 149.

⁵ See Jackson v. Bradt, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 170.

⁶ Ibid.

mere rights of possession of tenants in common, it has no application to their right of property which is not joint.¹ Judge Story said, in the case of Poole v. Fleegeer,² in error from the Circuit Court of Western Tennessee, that it had been the uniform practice in Tennessee for tenants in common to declare on a joint demise in ejectment. In several of our States this vexed question has been disposed of by statutory enactment conferring upon tenants in common the right to join in ejectment at their option,³ and that method of procedure is now very common.

One tenant in common, we may note, can maintain a suit to abate a nuisance without joining his companions.⁴

§ 299. In New York it was held, in an action in which the title was in several tenants in common that a joint ejectment could not be sustained by two or more, less than the whole number. All must join in one action to recover the whole premises and estate, or a separate action must be brought by each to recover his share. The case turns upon the construction of the statutes of that State,⁵ which have since been changed,⁶ so as to enable one or more to maintain a suit, thereby rendering this decision inapplicable.

§ 300. What interest recovered.—A tenant in common is seized per mi et per tout, and, as we have seen, has such an interest in the lands of the co-tenancy as entitles him to the enjoyment of the entire estate as against every one except his co-tenants.⁷ Each tenant can pursue his remedies independent of the others, and may maintain

¹ Cole v. Irvine, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 634.

² Poole v. Fleegeer, 11 Pet. 185. See Alford v. Dewin, 1 Nev. 207; May v. Slade, 24 Tex. 205.

³ Gray v. Givens, 26 Mo. 291-303; Poole v. Fleegeer, 11 Pet. 185-212; affirming S. C. 1 McL. 185; Hicks v. Rogers, 4 Cranch, 165; Swett v. Patrick, 11 Me. 179.

⁴ The Debris Case, 16 Fed. Rep. 33; Mississippi & Mo. R. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Black, 485. See Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 431. But compare contra, DePuy v. Strong, 37 N. Y. 372; White v. Brooks, 43 N. H. 402.

⁵ Hasbrouck v. Bunce, 62 N. Y. 475. See Bullion Mining Co. v. The Cæsus G. & S. Mining Co., 2 Nev. 171.

⁶ N. Y. Code of Civil Procedure, § 1560.

⁷ Williams v. Sutton, 43 Cal. 65; Hart v. Robertson, 21 Cal. 346; Touchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 150-162.

ejectment or trespass to try title alone,¹ and in many States may recover the entire premises and estate from trespassers, strangers, wrong-doers, and all persons, other than his co-tenants and those claiming under them.² Where this right is recognized he recovers for the benefit of all.³ Thus, in Vermont, it was held that one tenant in common had the right to oust an intruder and stranger to the title, and recover and hold the lands for the benefit of all the tenants in common.⁴ This principle is expressly recognized in Oregon,⁵ Nebraska,⁶ Nevada,⁷ North Carolina,⁸ Colorado,⁹ and California.¹⁰ But the rule has been repudiated in Massachusetts,¹¹ Pennsylvania,¹² and Missouri.¹³ In Gray v. Givens,¹⁴ the Supreme Court of Missouri say, that "as the right of possession, which depends on title, is several, a recovery by one will restore him only a moiety of the possession against the disseizor, who will hold the other moiety with him in common." The court further remark, that the statute permitting tenants in common to join is rendered useless if one co-tenant can recover for his companions. Moreover, the disseizor may ¹ Robinson v. Roberts, 31 Conn. 145; Alexander v. Gilliam, 39 Tex. 227; Cruger v. McClaughry, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 642; Tarver v. Smith, 38 Ala. 135; Mobley v. Bruner, 59 Penn. St. 481; Carson v. Smart, 12 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 369; Hooper v. Hall, 30 Tex. 154; Hines v. Trantham, 27 Ala. 359; Presley v. Holmes, 33 Tex. 476.

² Hardy v. Johnson, 1 Wall. 371; Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 361-371; Winthrop's Lessee v. Grimes, Wright (Ohio), 330; Hibbard v. Foster, 24 Vt. 542; Allen v. Gibson, 4 Rand. (Va.) 468; Truehart v. McMichael, 46 Tex. 222; Alexander v. Gilliam, 39 Tex. 227; Presley v. Holmes, 33 Tex. 476; Hopkins v. Noyes, 4 Mont. 550; Chipman v. Hastings, 50 Cal. 310; Logan v. Goodall, 42 Ga. 95; Davant v. Cubbage, 2 Hill (S. C.) Law, 311; French v. Edwards, 5 Sawyer, 266; Le Franc v. Richmond, 5 Sawyer, 601.

³ Barrett v. French, 1 Conn. 354.

⁴ Johnson v. Tilden, 5 Vt. 426.

⁵ Dolph v. Barney, 5 Oregon, 191.

⁶ Crook v. Vandevoot, 13 Neb. 507.

⁷ Sharon v. Davidson, 4 Nev. 416; Brown v. Warren, 16 Nev. 228.

⁸ Yancey v. Greenlee, 90 N. C. 317.

⁹ Weese v. Barker, 7 Col. 178.

¹⁰ Chipman v. Hastings, 50 Cal. 310; Hart v. Robertson, 21 Cal. 346; Melton v. Lambard, 51 Cal. 258.

¹¹ Dewey v. Brown, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 387.

¹² Dawson v. Mills, 32 Penn. St. 302. See Hall v. Dodge, 38 N. H. 352.

¹³ Gray v. Givens, 26 Mo. 291-303.

¹⁴ Gray v. Givens, 26 Mo. 291-303. See Bannister v. Bull, 16 S. C. 229; Dorn v. Beasley, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 420.

have a complete defense against the co-tenants who are not parties, and their rights cannot certainly be a proper subject of adjudication in a proceeding in which they are not represented ; and the other co-tenants may prefer that the disseizor should occupy the lands.¹ It seems to be clearly settled in Pennsylvania that, as there is no privity of estate between tenants in common, and they are separately seized, one cannot maintain ejectment, or sue and recover in any form of action, for the interest and benefit of the others.²

§ 301. It was held by Judge Story, in the case of Stevens v. Ruggles, which arose in the Circuit Court in Rhode Island, that a tenant in common could recover no more than his moiety or portion of the estate. The co-tenant in that case had never been ousted or disseized, and dying without heirs in the colony, the town council took possession and charge of the land under the statute, and the defendants claimed as its tenants. The plaintiff, it was said, could not recover the whole estate upon his prior possession, for that possession was consistent with the title of the other tenant.³

In Texas, since the enactment of the Revised Statutes of that State, the claimant of an undivided interest is required to state its nature,⁴ but, nevertheless, a single co-tenant is allowed to recover the entire estate against a wrong-doer.⁵ In Georgia, when tenants in common sever, each recovers only his own interest or their respective shares.⁶ The rule allowing one tenant in common to maintain in his own name, but for the benefit of his co-tenants as well as himself, an action of trespass to try title, will not be allowed to prevail when it is evident that the action is speculative in its character, and is brought by the plaintiff for his own exclusive benefit.⁷

¹ Dewey v. Brown, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 387.

² Mobley v. Bruner, 59 Penn. St. 481.

³ Stevens v. Ruggles, 5 Mason, 221.

⁴ Stovall v. Carmichael, 52 Tex. 383.

⁵ Contreras v. Haynes, 61 Tex. 103; Sowers v. Peterson, 59 Tex. 216.

⁶ Sanford v. Sanford, 58 Ga. 259; Wilson v. Chandler, 60 Ga. 129. See Logan v. Goodall, 42 Ga. 95.

⁷ Cromwell v. Holliday, 34 Tex. 463.

§ 302. Joinder of joint tenants against third parties.—At common law, in all actions relating to the joint estate, one joint tenant could not sue or be sued without joining the other.¹ Having but one joint title, and one freehold, they must join in an action for the possession of land.² Hence, it was held, in an early case in Pennsylvania, that one of three joint tenants could not recover his one-third of the estate from a stranger.³ In that State all must join. Less than the whole number cannot recover for the benefit of the others.⁴ “It is not, however,” says Mr. Adams, “compulsory upon joint tenants, or parceners, to allege a joint demise; for if a joint tenant, or parcener, bring an ejectment without joining his companion in the demise, it is considered as a severance of the tenancy, and he will be allowed to recover his separate moiety of the land.”⁵ Cases sustaining this doctrine are numerous.⁶ It was suggested to Lord Ellenborough, by counsel, that, if joint tenants might sever, it was difficult to see why tenants in common might not join. Where joint tenants demise jointly each may recover his share in ejectment on their several demises.⁷ Where several persons have a joint title to an estate, any one or more of them may sue, without joining the others, and recover against him who has no title.⁸

§ 303. Ejectment by co-parceners.—Parceners may declare on a joint demise,⁹ or they may sever and each recover his moiety.¹⁰

¹ 3 Bla. Com. 182; Bac. Abr. Joint Tenants, K. See §§ 187, 188, 189.

² Dewey v. Lambier, 7 Cal. 347.

³ Milne v. Cummings, 4 Yeates (Penn.), 577.

⁴ Mobley v. Bruner, 59 Penn. St. 481.

⁵ Adams on Ejectment (4th ed. 1854), p. (*210) 232.

⁶ See Roe d. Raper v. Lonsdale, 12 East, 39; Doe d. Marsack v. Read, 12 East, 57-61; Doe v. Fenn, 3 Camp, 190.

⁷ Doe d. Whayman v. Chaplin, 3 Taunt. 120. See Craig v. Taylor, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 457.

⁸ Clark v. Vaughan, 3 Conn. 191.

⁹ Boner v. Juner, 1 Lord Raymond, 726, per Holt, J., overruling Milliner v. Robinson, Moore, 682. See Decharms v. Horwood, 10 Bing. 526.

¹⁰ Jackson v. Sample, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 231; Doe v. Pearson, 6 East. 179; Chambers v. Handley, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 98; Roe d. Raper v. Lonsdale, 12 East, 39.

§ 303a. Partnership real estate.—The rule generally prevails in America that partnership real estate is subject to the adjustment of partnership debts,¹ and is treated as personalty in the adjustment of the mutual claims of the partners.² As between personal representatives and heirs it becomes realty, after the adjustment of the co-partnership affairs.³ The principles and rules applicable to the sale of partnership effects do not apply to real estate; usually one partner can only convey his own interest or undivided share therein,⁴ as they hold as tenants in common.⁵ But, to satisfy co-partnership obligations, a surviving partner may convey co-partnership real estate, and vest the equitable ownership in a purchaser who can in equity compel the heirs or devisees of the deceased partner to convey the legal title to him.⁶

¹ See §§ 129, 221; Buchan v. Sumner, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 165; Shanks v. Klein, 104 U. S. 18; Buckley v. Buckley, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 74; Sumner v. Hampson, 8 Ohio, 328; Sage v. Sherman, 2 N. Y. 428; Hiscock v. Phelps, 49 N. Y. 103; Ross v. Henderson, 77 N. C. 170; Brewer v. Browne, 68 Ala. 210.

² Shearer v. Shearer, 98 Mass. 117; Richards v. Manson, 101 Mass. 484; Moran v. Palmer, 13 Mich. 377; Fairchild v. Fairchild, 5 Hun (N. Y.), 413; s. c. on appeal, 64 N. Y. 478; Tarbel v. Bradley, 7 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 279; McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 362.

³ Marrett v. Murphy, 11 Nat. Bank Reg. 133.

⁴ Coles v. Coles, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 159. See Thornton v. Dixon, 3 Bro. C. C. 199; Balmain v. Shore, 9 Ves. Jr. 500; Baca v. Ramos, 10 La. 417; Thomas v. Scott, 3 Rob. (La.) 256.

⁵ Slaughter v. Swift, 67 Ala. 498; Caldwell v. Parmer, 56 Ala. 405.

⁶ Shanks v. Klein, 104 U. S. 18. See § 221.

CHAPTER X.

EJECTMENT BETWEEN VENDOR AND VENDEE.

- | | |
|---|--|
| § 304. Against vendee in possession under executory contract. 305. Vendee holds as a licensee. 306. Ejectment maintainable when covenant or specific performance cannot be brought. 307. Election of remedies. 308. Vendor.—Bond for titles. 309. Nature of vendor's interest. 310. Demand of possession and notice to quit. 311. Rescission of contract. 312. When notice of rescission is necessary. 313. Tender of deed by vendor. 314. When tender of deed or money not necessary. 315. Nature of the relationship. 316. Rules governing relationship of | landlord and tenant not applicable. § 317. Vendee in default cannot dispute vendor's title. 318. Estoppel in absence of fraud. 319. Vendee against vendor. 320. Vendor or vendee against trespassers. 321. Part performance. 321a. Statute of frauds.—Part performance. 322. Vendee may assert equitable rights. 323. Defective title —Surrender of possession.—Improvements. 324. Defenses.—Defective title. 325. Parties. 326. Waiver of forfeiture. |
|---|--|

§ 304. Against vendee in possession under executory contract.—Remedies in the nature of ejectment or trespass to try title are often invoked by a vendor to regain possession of lands from a vendee in possession under an executory contract of sale, after the latter has repudiated or failed to perform the contract on his part.¹ When the contract for the sale and purchase of land is silent as to the possession there is no implied license for the purchaser to enter; the facts oppose the idea that the vendee is to have the consideration for which he bargained before he has complied with the terms of the contract on his part, and by omitting any stipulation in the contract, as to the possession of the land, the right to it is left with the vendor.²

¹ See Browning v. Estes, 3 Texas, 462; s. c. 49 Am. Dec. 760; Harris v. Catlin, 53 Texas, 1-9; Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Mudd, 59 Cal. 585; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 14.

² Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 290; Gaven v. Hagen, 15 Cal. 208; Spencer v. Tobey, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 260; Suffern v. Townsend, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 35; Erwin v. Olmsted, 7 Cowen (N. Y.), 229; Van Deusen v. Young, 29 N. Y. 32; Doe d. Brumfield v. Brown, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 142; s. c. 41 Am. Dec. 217.

It may be stated as a general rule, however, that when the contract makes no mention of the possession, and the land is vacant, and the vendee has paid the entire consideration and fully performed on his part, and the delivery of the deed is all that remains to be done, there is an implied agreement or license that the vendee may at once take possession and have the use of the land.¹

§ 305. Vendee holds as a licensee.—If the vendee acquires the possession, he holds as a licensee² or tenant at will,³ and his possession is in no sense adverse to the vendor,⁴ at least until his agreement has been fully performed, so that he has become entitled to a conveyance,⁵ or the purchase money has been fully paid.⁶ The vendee under such circumstances is not vested with the full rights of an owner. While, for instance, he may cut timber for the use of a farm, he will not be permitted to sell timber therefrom.⁷

§ 306. Ejectment maintainable when covenant or specific performance cannot be brought.—Though the vendor, having failed to tender a deed, cannot recover the purchase money in covenant against the vendee, yet after default in the payment of any installment, he may, without tendering a deed, maintain an action of ejectment; the redress of the vendee in such a case, if any, is in equity.⁸ And when a vendor sues for a specific performance of a contract to convey, it is necessary to show a strict tender of performance

¹ Sherman v. Savery, 2 McC. 118; Miller v. Ball, 64 N. Y. 293. Compare Suffern v. Townsend, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 35; Spencer v. Tobey, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 260.

² Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 290; See Dolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 74, 78; Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 380.

³ Harris v. Frink, 49 N. Y. 32, and cases cited; Howard v. Shaw, 8 M. & W. 122.

⁴ Young v. Irwin, 2 Hayw. (N. C.) 9; Seabury v. Stewart, 22 Ala. 207; Potts v. Coleman, 67 Ala. 225; Adair v. Adair, 78 Mo. 630.

⁵ Matter of Department of Parks, 73 N. Y. 560-566; Devyr v. Schaefer, 55 N. Y. 446; Briggs v. Prosser, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 227; Jackson v. Johnson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 74; Dolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 79. "Taken in its strict import, it is a mere license." Cowen, J., in Wright v. Moore, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 230, 233. But see Stansbury v. Taggart, 3 McL. 457.

⁶ Benson v. Stewart, 30 Miss. 49; Taylor v. Dugger, 66 Ala. 445. See § 751; Tillman v. Spann, 68 Ala. 102.

⁷ Van Deusen v. Young, 29 N. Y. 9; Rockwell v. Saunders, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 482.

⁸ Wright v. Moore, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 230; Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 290-293.

on his part, but in ejectment by a vendor to recover the land, the vendee can only defend or protect his possession by showing a performance on his part, or that he is not in default.¹

Hill v. Winn,² in the Supreme Court of Georgia, was ejectment by the obligor of a bond for titles against an obligee in possession, and in default as to part of the purchase money. The defense was insolvency of the vendor and the fact that he had no title, but only a bond for title, and had not paid his vendor. It was held that these facts might have constituted sufficient ground for a rescission of the contract, but afforded no defense in ejectment, and no reason why the obligee should keep both the purchase money and the possession of the land.

§ 307. Election of remedies.—After demand of payment of the purchase money, and a refusal or default, the vendor has an election either to maintain a suit for the specific performance of the contract, or an action for the purchase money; or, if the contract is executory, to treat it as rescinded, and bring an action of ejectment against the vendee in possession.³

A vendee induced to purchase by fraud has an election of remedies. He may rescind the contract and offer to reconvey, and then recover back the consideration; or he may retain the land and recover damages by reason of the fraud.⁴

§ 308. Vendor.—Bond for titles.—The general principle prevails in Georgia that, in cases of an executory sale of land, where the purchase money is not paid and no deed is executed, but only a bond for title given, conditioned to be void if the vendor conveys a perfect title on the payment of the notes, the title, and therefore the right to sue and recover in ejectment, remains in the vendor until the purchase money is fully paid.⁵ The rule is stated in a case in

¹ Pierce v. Tuttle, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 155-169.

² 60 Ga. 337.

³ Home Manuf. Co. v. Gough, 2 Bradw. (Ill.) 477. See Crary v. Smith, 2 N. Y. 60.

⁴ Krumm v. Beach, 96 N. Y. 398. Compare Graves v. White, 87 N. Y. 465; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 21.

⁵ Alston v. Wingfield, 53 Ga. 18; Day v. Solomon, 40 Ga. 32; Tompkins v.

Texas to be that the superior title remains in the vendor until the purchase money is fully paid in three classes of cases.¹ First. When the conveyance is executory, as where a bond for title has been given.² Second. When a mortgage for unpaid purchase money is given simultaneously with the deed.³ Third. When an express lien is retained in the deed for the payment of the purchase money.⁴

§ 309. Nature of vendor's interest.—In Mississippi the vendor is regarded by the courts as a mortgagee, his retention of the title operating as an equitable mortgage; his interest and the interest of a mortgagee are held to be alike in this essential that both are security for the debt;⁵ while in Alabama the vendor is said to be a trustee for the vendee of the legal title pending an executory contract.⁶

§ 310. Demand of possession and notice to quit.—We shall presently show that after default, or failure by the vendee to comply with the conditions of the contract, the vendor may, in most of our States, recover the possession of the lands from the vendee by ejectment without proving previous demand of possession or notice to quit.⁷ The same rule applies where the vendee repudiates the contract.⁸ The subsequent possession of the vendee is held to be tortious, and there is an immediate right of action against him.⁹ But until the vendee shall have done or omitted to Williams, 19 Ga. 569; Miller v. Swift, 39 Ga. 91; Ware v. Jackson, 19 Ga. 452; McHan v. Stansell, 39 Ga. 197.

¹ Webster v. Mann, 52 Texas, 416.

² Citing Walker v. Emerson, 20 Texas, 706; Baumgarten v. Smith, 37 Texas, 439.

³ Citing The Howards v. Davis, 6 Texas, 174; Dunlap v. Wright, 11 Texas, 597.

⁴ Citing Baker v. Ramey, 27 Texas, 52; Peters v. Clements, 46 Texas, 114.

⁵ Strickland v. Kirk, 51 Miss. 795; Tanner v. Hicks, 12 Miss. 294, 300.

⁶ Sellers v. Hayes, 17 Ala. 749. See Muldrow v. Muldrow, 2 Dana (Ky.), 387.

⁷ Baker v. Gittings, 16 Ohio, 485; Jackson v. Miller, 7 Cowen (N. Y.), 747; Jackson v. Moncrief, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 26; Wright v. Moore, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 233; Maynard v. Cable, Wright (Ohio), 18; Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 274, 280.

⁸ Moak v. Bryant, 51 Miss. 560. See Chap. XIII.

⁹ Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 274; Prentice v. Wilson, 14 Ill. 92; Baker v. Gittings, 16 Ohio, 489; Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 290. But see, contra, Costigan v. Wood, 5 Cr. C. C. 507; Right v. Beard, 13 East, 210; Twyman v. Hawley, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 512; Williamson v. Paxton, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 475, 505; Newby v. Jackson, 1 B. & C. 448.

do something which by operation of law converted his possession from a lawful to a tortious one he cannot be evicted as a trespasser in an action of ejectment.¹

§ 311. Rescission of contract.—A rescission of a contract, in order to be effectual, must be a rescission in toto.² A party cannot repudiate a contract and enforce it in the same action.³ And if, on a bill to rescind a contract on the ground that the vendor is unable to convey good title, it appears that at the time of the hearing or decree he is able to do so the plaintiff will be compelled to accept.⁴ When the vendor brings ejectment to recover lands in the possession of the vendee under a parol contract of sale, this amounts to a rescission of the contract, and the vendee may sue for the purchase money paid.⁵

§ 312. When notice of rescission is necessary.—The Supreme Court of Kansas⁶ has held that where a vendee had been for a long time in possession of land under a bond for title, and had neglected to pay the balance of the purchase money when due, and the contract was silent as to any rescission, and no time of performance was mentioned, the vendor could not maintain an action of ejectment against the vendee in possession, without at least giving an explicit notice, reasonable in its terms, that unless the vendee performed within a certain time, he would rescind the contract. The vendor it was said had the right to proceed

¹ Harle v. McCoy, 7 J. J. Mar. (Ky.) 318; s. c. 23 Am. Dec. 407. See Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 238.

² Bohall v. Diller, 41 Cal. 532.

³ Walker v. Millard, 29 N. Y. 375.

⁴ Diggle v. Boulden, 48 Wis. 477; Akerly v. Vilas, 15 Wis. 401; Fletcher v. Wilson, 1 Sm. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 376; Pierce v. Nichols, 1 Paige (N. Y.), 244. The same principle applies to a suit for specific performance, especially where time is not of the essence of the contract. Dresel v. Jordan, 104 Mass. 407; Christian v. Cabell, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 82; Jenkins v. Fahey, 73 N. Y. 355; Moss v. Hanson, 17 Penn. St. 379; Lockett v. Williamson, 37 Mo. 388; Coffin v. Cooper, 14 Ves. 205; Hepburn v. Dunlop, 1 Wheat. 179.

⁵ Hairston v. Jaudon, 42 Miss. 380. See Pipkin v. James, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 325; s. c. 34 Am. Dec. 652. We cannot discuss all the objections to a title that may be raised between vendor and vendee, but it may be noted that one who buys real estate is not obliged to take it subject to easements. Wheeler v. Tracy, 49 N. Y. Superior, 208. An implication arises that the property is free from incumbrances. Burwell v. Jackson, 9 N. Y. 535; Newark Savings Inst. v. Jones, 37 N. J. Eq. 449.

⁶ Courtney v. Woodworth, 9 Kan. 443. See Kirby v. Harrison, 2 Ohio St. 326; Cythe v. La Fontain, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 186.

in equity for a rescission of the contract, or could treat the bond as an equitable mortgage and foreclose the equities of the vendee.

§ 313. Tender of deed by vendor.—Questions concerning the sufficiency of a tender frequently arise. In the case of *Gregg v. Von Phul*¹ it appeared that the vendor had tendered a deed which did not contain all the covenants called for by the contract. The vendee made no objection to the form of the deed, but handed it back, answering that he was not ready to pay the money. The Supreme Court of the United States held that if the deed was defective or objectionable the defects should have been pointed out by the vendee at the time of the tender, for possibly they might have been obviated. The very silence of the vendee was well calculated to influence the conduct of the vendor, and to convince him that inability to raise the money was the only reason which the vendee had for declining to perform the contract. The vendee is estopped, upon the most obvious principles of justice, from subsequently interposing objections which he did not even name when the deed was tendered, and the money due on the contract demanded.

§ 314. When tender of deed or money not necessary.—No necessity exists for proving tender of the deed in ejectment by a vendor against a vendee who has failed to pay the purchase money, where the vendee had previously declared his inability to perform,² or had practically abandoned the possession, and given notice to the vendor of his refusal to perform the contract.³ And when the vendor is unable to perform a tender of the purchase money is not necessary in order to preserve the vendee's rights under the contract.⁴

¹ 1 Wall. 274. See Bigler v. Morgan, 77 N. Y. 312; Carman v. Pultz, 21 N. Y. 547; Congregation S. H. M. v. Halladay, 50 N. Y. 664.

² Dixon v. Oliver, 5 Watts (Penn.), 509.

³ See Crary v. Smith, 2 N. Y. 60; Morange v. Morris, 3 Keyes (N. Y.), 48. The vendee is excused from a tender of payment, or of performance on his part, where the vendor is unable to carry out the agreement, or has broken it by failing to remove incumbrances. Morange v. Morris, 3 Keyes (N. Y.), 48. See Holmes v. Holmes, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 137; s. c. aff'd, 9 N. Y. 525; Karker v. Haverly, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 79.

⁴ Delavan v. Duncan, 49 N. Y. 485.

§ 315. Nature of the relationship.—The authorities expounding the nature of the relationship of vendor and vendee are not entirely harmonious. We shall notice an important case, Blight's Lessee v. Rochester,¹ in the United States Supreme Court. It appeared that James Dunlap, an alien, died in 1794 seized of the premises in dispute. The plaintiffs were the heirs of John Dunlap, who was a citizen, and had claimed as the heir to his alien brother James Dunlap. Subsequent to his death one Hunter, professing to have purchased from John Dunlap, entered into possession and conveyed to the defendant. The plaintiffs brought ejectment, and sought to estop the defendant from impeaching or controverting the title of John Dunlap, by parol evidence that James Dunlap was an alien. The court doubted the propriety of extending the doctrine of estoppel, as applied to lessor and lessee, to vendor and vendee. Chief Justice Marshall, who delivered the opinion, said: "The vendee acquires the property for himself, and his faith is not pledged to maintain the title of the vendor. The rights of the vendor are intended to be extinguished by the sale, and he has no continuing interest in the maintenance of his title, unless he should be called upon in consequence of some covenant or warranty in his deed. The property having become, by the sale, the property of the vendee, he has a right to fortify that title by the purchase of any other which may protect him in the quiet enjoyment of the premises. No principle of morality restrains him from doing this; nor is either the letter or spirit of the contract violated by it. The only controversy which ought to arise between him and the vendor, respects the payment of the purchase money. How far he may be bound to this by law, or by the obligations of good faith, is a question depending on all the circumstances of the case, and in deciding it, all those circumstances are examinable. If the vendor has actually made a conveyance, his title is extinguished in law as well as equity, and it will not be pretended that he can maintain an ejectment. If he has sold, but has not conveyed, the contract of sale binds him to convey, unless it be conditional. If, after such a contract, he brings an ejectment for the land, he violates his own contract, unless the condition be broken by the vendee; and if it be, the vendor ought to show it."

¹ 7 Wheaton, 535. Compare the contradictory cases of Sparrow v. Kingman, 1 N. Y. 242; Bowne v. Potter, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 164; Ward v. McIntosh, 12 O. S. 231; Hamblin v. Bank of Cumberland, 19 Me. 66; Small v. Procter, 15 Mass. 495.

§ 316. Rules governing relationship of landlord and tenant not applicable.—It may be regarded as a settled principle that the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between vendor and vendee.¹ An essential quality of a lease is wanting, i.e., stipulation for compensation to the owner. "The vendee pays nothing for the enjoyment of the property."² And the relationship of vendor and purchaser cannot, by a subsequent agreement, be converted into that of landlord and tenant so as to defeat supervening rights.³

§ 317. Vendee in default cannot dispute vendor's title.—Where, however, the vendee enters into possession under an executory contract to purchase land, and fails to comply with the terms of the contract by neglecting to pay the purchase money, the vendor may bring ejectment, and the vendee obviously cannot dispute his title, nor set up an outstanding title to defeat a recovery,⁴ any more than a lessee could question the title of his lessor,⁵ and for the same reason. The estoppel in one case, as in the other, is founded upon the fact that the defendant has been clothed with the possession by the plaintiff.⁶ Were the rule otherwise the inconvenient condition of affairs would result

¹ Watkins v. Holman, 16 Peters, 25-54; Society, &c., v. Town of Pawlet, 4 Peters, 480-506; Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Peters, 402; Willison v. Watkins, 3 Peters, 43; Dolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 74; Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 290.

² Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 293.

³ Nobles v. McCarty, 61 Miss. 456.

⁴ Pershing v. Canfield, 70 Mo. 140; Leshner v. Sherwin, 86 Ill. 420; Seabury v. Stewart, 22 Ala. 207; Harvey v. Morris, 63 Mo. 475; Fitzgerald v. Spain, 30 Ark. 95; Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 230; Jackson v. Stewart, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 34; Hill v. Winn, 60 Ga. 337; Jackson v. Ayers, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 224; Sanford v. Cloud, 17 Fla. 557; Jackson v. Hotchkiss, 6 Cowen (N. Y.), 401; Galloway v. Finley, 12 Peters, 264-295; Jackson v. Walker, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 637; Bush v. Marshall, 6 How. 284-291; Love v. Edmonston, 1 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 152; Strong v. Waddell, 56 Ala. 471; Jackson v. McGinness, 14 Penn. St. 331.

⁵ Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 290; Whiteside v. Jackson, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 418; Bowers v. Keesecker, 14 Iowa, 301-305; but see contra Gudger v. Barnes, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 570; Corder v. Dolin, 4 Baxter (Tenn.), 238. See Waggener v. Lyles, 29 Ark. 47. See, also, § 351.

⁶ A warrantor having put a warrantee in his place as regards the occupancy of that no vendor could safely part with the possession of his lands until the consideration money had been fully paid.

The estoppel, of course, extends to those claiming in the vendee's right,¹ and a purchaser cannot set up want of title, or an outstanding title, against a grantor who brings ejectment to enforce a forfeiture arising from a breach of a condition subsequent.² When a person in possession of land covenants with another to pay him for the land, he thereby acknowledges the title of the vendor, and is estopped from setting up an outstanding title, or title in himself, unless he can show that he was deceived, or imposed upon, in making the agreement.³

§ 318. Estoppel in absence of fraud.—So in Pennsylvania, in ejectment by a vendor against a purchaser from the vendee, where it appeared that the defendant had not paid any part of the purchase money, nor made any valuable improvements, it was held that the defendant could not set up the weakness of the vendor's title in defense of his possession. Unless fraud had been practiced on him he must pay the purchase money or relinquish possession. He cannot set up an outstanding title in another, or adverse title in himself.⁴

§ 319. Vendee against vendor.—The remedies of a vendee, being usually in equity, cannot be treated here. It has been decided in the Supreme Court of Georgia, that a vendor is not liable to an action for the recovery of the possession of land at the instance of his vendee claiming under a bond for titles, until the purchase money has been fully paid, or unconditionally tendered.⁵ Even then it seems to us his proper relief is in an equitable forum.

In a case which came before the Supreme Court of land, the latter is bound in good faith to retain the possession which may itself ripen into a perfect title. If the possession be surrendered the warrantee in an action on the covenant must justify the surrender by evidence clearly showing the paramount title. Callis v. Cogbill, 9 Lea (Tenn.), 137.

¹ Raley v. Ross, 59 Ga. 862.

² O'Brien v. Wetherell, 14 Kan. 616.

³ Jackson v. Ayers, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 224; Jackson v. Thompson, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 178; Jackson v. Walker, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 637.

⁴ Jackson v. McGinness, 14 Penn. St. 331. See Smith v. Webster, 2 Watts (Penn.), 478; Treaster v. Fleisher, 7 W. & S. (Penn.) 138.

⁵ Miller v. Swift, 39 Ga. 91. See Allen v. Holding, 29 Ga. 485-490; Peterson v. Orr, 12 Ga. 464; Hays v. Carr, 83 Ind. 275.

Pennsylvania, where it appeared that no time for the delivery of possession of the land was stipulated for in the contract of sale, and before the day for the payment of the purchase money arrived the vendee obtained possession with the consent of the vendor, and the purchase money remained partially unpaid, the court held that the vendee might, without tender of the balance of the purchase money, recover the possession from the vendor who had unlawfully regained it through the unauthorized act of a third party.¹ The general rule is, however, that an obligee of a title bond cannot maintain ejectment against the obligor, or one taking title under him,² for he has only a promise of the title, and not a title sufficient to support the action.

Incidentally we may observe that the vendee's damages are not restricted to the purchase money and interest; on the contrary, he may recover the equivalent or value of the lands to which he was entitled.³ He may retain the land and recover damages for false representations in the sale, the measure of the damages being the difference between the value of the property conveyed and the value had it been as represented.⁴

§ 320. Vendor or vendee against trespassers.—Trespassers and strangers to the title may, in Texas, be evicted by either the vendor or vendee. And as against a trespasser the vendee need not prove a compliance with the conditions of the contract which would entitle him to a specific performance. The trespasser has no interest in, and cannot bring into controversy, any disputed matters, or unadjusted equities, between the contracting parties. A recovery of the land by either the vendor or vendee will inure to the benefit of the one who may be entitled thereto upon an adjustment between them of their respective rights.⁵ The status of the vendee in such a controversy is not readily defined.

¹ Harris v. Bell, 10 S. & R. (Penn.) 39; s. P. D'Arras v. Keyser, 26 Pa. St. 252.

² Richardson v. Thornton, 7 Jones (N. C.) Law, 458; Love v. Edmonston, 1 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 152; Trammell v. Simmons, 17 Ala. 411.

³ Taylor v. Barnes, 69 N. Y. 434.

⁴ Krumm v. Beach, 96 N. Y. 398.

⁵ Hooper v. Hall, 30 Texas, 154; Wright v. Thompson, 14 Texas, 558. See

§ 321. Part performance.—Construction.—Although a vendor cannot insist upon the vendee's accepting a part performance of the contract,¹ yet the vendee may require a specific performance as to part, and claim damages as to the residue, where the vendor is unable to perform in toto.²

The court will not construe a contract so as to produce a forfeiture of a legal or equitable estate unless that intention is plainly indicated.³

§ 321a. Statute of frauds.—Part performance.—It is the general policy of the law that agreements for the sale of interests in real property must be evidenced by some note or memorandum in writing.⁴ Part performance of a parol agreement is often relied upon to free it from the operation of the statute of frauds. The general rule is that nothing is to be considered as a part performance which does not put the party into a situation which would make it a fraud upon him, unless the agreement was fully performed.⁵ Taking possession under a parol agreement with the consent of the vendor, accompanied with other acts which cannot be recalled so as to place the party taking possession in the same situation that he previously occupied, has always been held to take such agreement out of the operation of the statute.⁶ Mr. Waterman⁷ considers the rule "well established, that when the vendee has been let into possession under a parol contract, and made valuable improvements, it constitutes part performance, and takes the case out of the statute."⁸

Murphy v. Loomis, 26 Hun (N. Y.), 662; Melenthin v. Keith, 17 Fed. Rep. 583. It is unimportant to a tenant, who has no title, whether the demandant is a mortgagee or absolute owner of the fee. Simpson v. Dix, 131 Mass. 183.

¹ Gibert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 165.

² Jones v. Shackelford, 2 Bibb (Ky.), 410; Barnes v. Wood, L. R. 8 Eq. 424; Bass v. Gilliland, 5 Ala. 761; Wright v. Young, 6 Wis. 127; Harding v. Parshall, 56 Ill. 219; Wilson v. Cox, 50 Miss. 133.

³ Hill v. Still, 19 Texas, 76.

⁴ It seems that a written conveyance is not necessary to the transfer of a possessory mining claim. Mining Co. v. Taylor, 100 U. S. 42; Table Mountain Tunnel Co. v. Stranahan, 20 Cal. 198. By statute a written conveyance has been required in California. Felger v. Coward, 35 Cal. 652.

⁵ Malins v. Brown, 4 N. Y. 403; Miller v. Ball, 64 N. Y. 291. See Felton v. Smith, 84 Ind. 493.

⁶ Lowry v. Tew, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 407; Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34.

⁷ Waterman on Specific Performance, § 280.

⁸ See Wills v. Stradling, 3 Ves. 378; Mundy v. Jolliffe, 5 Mylne & C. 167; Annan

§ 322. Vendee may assert equitable rights.—Under the reformed procedure, as we shall presently see, the equitable rights of a vendee may be enforced as effectually by answer and proofs in ejectment as by an independent suit in equity. Thus in a case decided by the New York Court of Appeals,¹ it was held that a vendee in possession of land under a contract of sale could, in an action of ejectment brought by the vendor, assert equitable rights the same as though he was a party to an action for a specific performance of the contract. And if the vendor is indebted to the vendee on an independent liquidated claim, the latter can set it up and have it applied in payment, and procure a specific performance of the contract. The same rule was held to apply in favor of a sub-vendee. So in Minnesota the vendee may set up in ejectment any equities relating to the right of possession, but the facts must be such as, under the former practice, would have sustained a bill in chancery for an injunction against the action at law, and so have kept the party in possession.²

§ 323. Defective title—Surrender of possession.—A vendee in possession who has discovered a defect in the title of his vendor is sometimes confronted with a perplexing question as to the safest course to take. It has been decided by the New York Court of Appeals that if the vendee is not content with the title offered, he should specify the objection and surrender up the possession of the land.³ Otherwise, if the vendee were permitted to retain the possession and defend a suit for the purchase money on the ground that the vendor had no title and was insolvent,

v. Merritt, 13 Conn. 478; Green v. Finin, 95 Conn. 178; Dugan v. Colville, 8 Texas, 126; Neatherly v. Ripley, 21 Texas, 434; Mason v. Wallace, 3 McL. 148; Kidder v. Barr, 35 N. H. 236; Edwards v. Fry, 9 Kansas, 417; Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34; Haines v. Haines, 6 Md. 435; Vickers v. Sisson, 10 W. Va. 12; Pfiffner v. Stillwater & St. P. R. R. Co., 23 Minn. 343.

¹ Cavalli v. Allen, 57 N. Y. 508; See Traphagen v. Traphagen, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 537; Cythe v. La Fontain, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 186; Tibeau v. Tibeau, 19 Mo. 78; Carpenter v. Ottley, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 451; Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547; Richards v. Elwell, 48 Penn. St. 361; Young v. Montgomery, 28 Mo. 604.

² Williams v. Murphy, 21 Minn. 534; Gates v. Smith, 2 Minn. 30; Barker v. Walbridge, 14 Minn. 469-475. See Chap. XVIII.

³ Viele v. Troy & B. R. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 184; See Jackson v. McGinness, 14 Penn. St. 331; McIndoe v. Morman, 26 Wis. 588; Pierce v. Tuttle, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 155; Diggle v. Boulden, 48 Wis. 477-484; Hill v. Winn, 60 Ga. 337; Niclosen v. Wordsworth, 2 Swanston, 369; More v. Smedburgh, 8 Paige (N. Y.), 606.

the vendee might defeat a recovery of the purchase money, and yet never be disturbed in the possession of the land.¹ The application of this principle often works injustice to a vendee who has paid a part of the purchase money, or made valuable improvements, and then discovers that the vendor is unable to give him the title for which he bargained. Hence the same court has decided that where a vendee was in possession under a contract from a vendor to convey, and had made improvements in conformity with the provisions of the contract, which required certain expenditures as a necessary condition to entitle him to a deed, and the vendor's title proved defective, the vendee had an equitable lien upon the premises for the money so expended for improvements, which entitled him to hold the possession, and the payment of which was a condition precedent to the recovery of the premises, by the vendor, in ejectment.² A lien for the unrefunded purchase money is in some cases recognized in equity where the transaction is tainted with fraud.³

§ 324. Defenses.—Defective title.—It has been decided in Texas that where the purchaser held under an executed contract, as a deed with warranty, he could not resist the payment of the purchase money upon proof that the title might be doubtful. He must go further and show with reasonable certainty that the title had failed in whole or in part, and that he had been evicted by a superior outstanding title of which he had no notice at the time of the purchase.⁴ The fact that the vendor has proved his claim for the purchase money against the estate of the vendee in bankruptcy constitutes no ground of defense to an eject-

¹ Cartwright v. Culver, 74 Mo. 182; Pershing v. Canfield, 70 Mo. 140; Key v. Jennings, 66 Mo. 356; Wheeler v. Standley, 50 Mo. 509. Compare Noonan v. Lee, 2 Black, 508; Mitchell v. McMullen, 59 Mo. 252.

² Gibert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 165. Compare Davis v. Strobridge, 44 Mich. 159; Turner v. Marriott, L. R. 3 Eq. 744; Tyler v. Fickett, 75 Me. 211; Smoot v. Smoot, 12 Lea (Tenn.), 274; Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 513; Brown on Stat. of Frauds, §§ 119, 120; Ewing v. Handley, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 346; Patrick v. Roach, 21 Texas, 251.

³ See Diggs v. Kirby, 40 Ark. 422; Rose v. Watson, 10 H. L. Cas. 672; Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 211.

⁴ Price v. Blount, 41 Texas, 472; Cooper v. Singleton, 19 Texas, 266; Woodward v. Rodgers, 20 Texas, 178; Johnson v. Long, 27 Texas, 21; Demaret v. Bennett, 29 Texas, 263. See Estell v. Cole, 52 Texas, 170.

ment brought by the vendor against the vendee for default in the payment of it.¹

§ 325. Parties.—It has been held in Pennsylvania that a vendor could not enforce his contract in ejectment by bringing suit against a tenant of a single field or tract, or of a single room of a house,² nor could a vendee who was not summoned, or made a party to the ejectment, be turned out of possession upon a judgment rendered against a tenant of a small portion of the premises.

§ 326. Waiver of forfeiture.—In a recent case in the Supreme Court of Iowa, it was decided that the vendor's statement to the purchaser that he would not insist upon the forfeiture stipulated in the contract, in case of default in prompt payments, constituted a waiver of the right to declare a forfeiture, where, upon the strength of such statements, the payments were allowed to fall in arrears, and valuable improvements were made upon the property.³ And in a case which arose in New York, where it appeared that the time of payment under the contract had been extended with the vendor's assent, and no certain time fixed when payment would be required, it was held that the vendor could not afterwards claim a forfeiture of the contract, by requiring immediate payment, but that the vendee was entitled to a reasonable time, after notice, to complete his payment.⁴

¹ McAlpin v. Lee, 57 Ga. 281.

² Davidson v. Barclay, 63 Penn. St. 406. See § 239.

³ Blair v. Blair, 48 Iowa, 393.

⁴ Cythe v. La Fontain, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 186. See Durand v. Sage, 11 Wis. 151; Edgerton v. Peckham, 11 Paige (N. Y.), 352; Ahl v. Johnson, 20 How. 511; Hale v. Wilkinson, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 75; Potter v. Jacobs, 111 Mass. 32.

CHAPTER XI.

EJECTMENT BETWEEN MORTGAGEE AND MORTGAGOR.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 327. Early practice. 328. Disadvantages of ejectment between mortgagee and mortgagor. 329. Foreclosure a more effectual remedy. 330. Mortgagee's rights at common law. 331. } Modern practice. 332. } 333. In what States mortgagee may bring ejectment. 334. Statute prohibiting ejectment by mortgagee.—When unconstitutional. 335. Ejectment by execution purchaser. 336. Title after default. 337. Deed absolute on its face may be shown to be a mortgage. | § 338. Ejectment maintainable in certain States upon a deed intended as a mortgage. 339. Mortgage.—Outstanding title. 340. Ejectment by mortgagor against mortgagee in possession. 341. Ejectment by mortgagor not maintainable until after accounting and application of rents. 342. Rule in Michigan. 343. Mortgagee may purchase equity at execution sale. 344. A conveyance by mortgagor to mortgagee of entire estate.—How regarded. 345. Mortgagor's remedy against mortgagee after condition broken. |
|--|---|

§ 327. Early practice.—The remedy of ejectment was formerly much resorted to by mortgagees to recover possession of the premises from the mortgagor, after default in the payment of the mortgage. The ancient principle governing this relationship was, that the mortgagee, upon the execution of the mortgage, became immediately vested with the entire estate, and the mortgagor, by continuing in possession, was considered to be like a tenant at will of the mortgagee.¹

§ 328. Disadvantages of ejectment between mortgagee and mortgagor.—The remedy of ejectment while in general use by mortgagees was not, ordinarily, a final remedy, and frequently led to litigious accountings concerning the rents and profits received by the mortgagee during the period of his occupancy of the mortgaged lands; so that the practical abolition of ejectment, as applied to this peculiar relationship, may be regarded as a beneficial change.

¹ We may note that land certificates are not the proper subject of a pledge. The debtor's interest cannot be extinguished by a sale as in the case of pledged goods. The depositing of such certificates as security for a debt is in effect a mortgage which must be enforced in equity. Mowry v. Wood, 12 Wis. 413.

§ 329. Foreclosure a more effectual remedy.—The mortgagee's most common and effectual remedy is to proceed by bill in equity, or statutory proceeding to foreclose the mortgage, sell the property, and thus in a single action bar the mortgagor's right of redemption, and secure the possession of the premises to the purchaser. "The case of mortgages," says Kent, "is one of the most splendid instances in the history of our jurisprudence, of the triumph of equitable principles over technical rules, and of the homage which those principles have received by their adoption in the courts of law."¹ The commentator refers in this passage to the adoption by courts of law, by a gradual and almost insensible progress, of the equity doctrine that a mortgage is a mere security for the debt, and only a chattel interest, and that, until a decree of foreclosure, the mortgagor continues the owner of the fee.² Lord Mansfield, in King v. St. Michael,³ decided in 1781, used this language: "The mortgagee, notwithstanding the form, has but a chattel, and the mortgage is only a security. It is an affront to common sense to say the mortgagor is not the real owner."

§ 330. Mortgagee's rights at common law.—As we have said, at common law the mortgagee, even before and a fortiori after forfeiture, could, by reason of non-payment of the mortgage, maintain an action of ejectment, a writ of entry, or an action of trespass to try title, to recover the possession of the lands, against the mortgagor or any person in occupation of the premises claiming under him.⁴ Whether the mortgage was legal or equitable in its nature, the mortgagee might pursue his legal remedy of ejectment,

¹ 4 Kent's Com. p. *158. See De Wolf v. Sprague Mfg. Co., 49 Conn. 318.

² 4 Kent's Com. p. *160; See Wilkins v. French, 20 Me. 111; Kinna v. Smith, 3 N. J. Eq. 14.

³ 2 Doug. 632. See Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atkyns, 603, per Lord Hardwicke.

⁴ Thunder v. Belcher, 3 East, 449; Wakeman v. Banks, 2 Conn. 445; Rockwell v. Bradley, 2 Conn. 1; Keech v. Hall, Doug. 21; Birch v. Wright, 1 T. R. 378; Tripp v. Ide, 3 R. I. 51; Colman v. Packard, 16 Mass. 39; Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165; Wilson v. Hooper, 13 Vt. 653; Den v. Stockton, 12 N. J. Law, 322; Jackson v. Warren, 32 Ill. 331; Jackson v. Colden, 4 Cowen (N. Y.), 266; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 6 R. I. 542; Oldham v. Pfleger, 84 Ill. 102; Carrroll v. Ballance, 26 Ill. 9-17; Fuller v. Wadsworth, 2 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 263; Ahern v. White, 39 Md. 409; Mitchell v. Bogan, 11 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 686.

and at the same time file a bill to foreclose the equity of redemption.¹

§ 331. Modern practice.—The law as at present settled in most of our States by judicial decision or by statute, is that the mortgagee does not, even after default, possess a sufficient title to support the action of ejectment. The right of possession remains with the mortgagor until foreclosure whether the instrument be a mortgage in form, or a deed intended as a mortgage.² Default in payment does not divest his right to the possession. The exceptions to the general rule in certain States, extending to the mortgagee the right to maintain ejectment, must not be overlooked. In New York the principle is settled that a mortgage is but a lien upon the land. The mortgagor, both at law and in equity, is regarded as the owner of the fee,³ and the mortgage is considered to be a mere chose in action, or security of a personal nature.⁴ Prior to the enactment of the Revised Statutes, a mortgagee could maintain ejectment in New York to recover possession of the mortgaged lands; but under the present system of practice in that State the mortgagor, both before and after default, is entitled to the possession of the mortgaged premises, of which he cannot be deprived without his consent, except by a decree of foreclosure and sale, or the appointment of a receiver. Ejectment by mortgagees in that State is expressly prohibited by statute.⁵ And a mortgagor in default may have ejectment against an intruder or one ¹ Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. 489-494; Very v. Watkins, 18 Ark. 546. But see Ould v. Stoddard, 54 Cal. 613; Livingston v. Hayes, 43 Mich. 129.

² Ferris v. Wilcox, 51 Mich. 105, per Cooley, J.

³ See Angier v. Agnew, 98 Pa. St. 587.

⁴ Union College v. Wheeler, 61 N. Y. 88-118; Trimm v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 599-604; Packer v. Rochester & Syracuse R. R. Co., 17 N. Y. 283-295; Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343; Astor v. Hoyt, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 603; Power v. Lester, 23 N. Y. 527. See 4 Kent's Com. 194, and notes; Runyan v. Mersereau, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 534; Waters v. Stewart, 1 Cal. Cas. in Er. (N. Y.) 47.

⁵ Trimm v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 599-604; Madison Ave. Bap. Ch. v. Oliver St. Bap. Ch., 73 N. Y. 82-94; Dunning v. Fisher, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 178. See Russell v. Ely, 2 Black (U. S.), 575; Souter v. La Crosse R. R. 1 Woolw. 80. It seems that in New York a plaintiff may prove title as mortgagee in possession by agreement with the mortgagor. This establishes a right to the possession. Chapman v. Delaware L. & W. R. R. Co. 3 Lans (N. Y.), 261. See Murphy v. Loomis, 26 Hun (N. Y.), 662.

claiming under a void deed, since until foreclosed he has the right of possession against all the world except the mortgagee lawfully in possession.¹ Indeed it is the prevailing principle, in most of the States, that a mortgage is only a chattel interest, and a lien upon the lands as a security for the debt, the legal title remaining in the mortgagor during the life of the mortgage;² and the interest of the mortgagor is an estate which may be sold on execution,³ and is subject to dower and curtesy, and may be mortgaged or conveyed as any other estate in lands. The mortgagor's estate is popularly but erroneously called an equity of redemption, retaining the name it had when the legal estate vested in the mortgagee and the right to redeem existed only in equity.⁴

§ 332. It has been held in Texas that the mortgagor of real estate remains the real owner of the land, and entitled to the possession thereof, both before and after the breach of the condition of defeasance, and that the mortgagee cannot maintain an action of trespass to try title to dispossess him.⁵ In Florida under the present practice the mortgagee cannot acquire the possession until after a decree of foreclosure.⁶ So a mortgagee cannot maintain ejectment for the possession of the mortgaged premises in Kentucky;⁷ and it has been held in Wisconsin that, where the plaintiff's only title is a mortgage, the action fails, even though the defense is imperfectly pleaded;⁸ in Georgia a mortgagee has only a lien, and no right of

¹ Olmsted v. Elder, 5 N. Y. 144. See Pell v. Ulmar, 18 N. Y. 139.

² Fletcher v. Holmes, 32 Ind. 497; Grable v. McCulloh, 27 Ind. 472; Turrell v. Warren, 25 Minn. 9; Carpenter v. Bowen, 42 Miss. 28; Taliaferro v. Gay, 78 Ky. 496; United States v. Athens Armory, 35 Ga. 344; Jackson v. Carswell, 34 Ga. 279; Souter v. La Crosse R. R., 1 Woolw. 80; Bartlett v. Borden, 13 Bush (Ky.), 45; McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365. See Brobst v. Brock, 10 Wall. 519-529; Dayton v. Dayton, 7 Bradw. (Ill.) 136.

³ Gorham v. Arnold, 22 Mich. 247; Huntington v. Cotton, 31 Miss. 253; Trimn v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 599.

⁴ Odell v. Montross, 68 N. Y. 499.

⁵ Mann v. Falcon, 25 Texas, 271; Duty v. Graham, 12 Texas, 427.

⁶ See McMahon v. Russell, 17 Fla. 698; Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atkyns, 606.

⁷ Newport Bridge Co. v. Douglass, 12 Bush (Ky.), 673. See Caufman v. Sayre, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 202-205.

⁸ Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498.

entry, and cannot maintain ejectment,¹ and a mortgagee, as such, is not entitled to bring ejectment in Michigan.²

§ 333. In what States mortgagee may bring ejectment.—In Illinois the mortgagee owns the fee, and has the jus in re as well as ad rem, and after condition broken may maintain ejectment against the mortgagor;³ and in that State, where the mortgage provides for the payment of interest annually or in installments, and for a forfeiture in case of non-payment, the mortgagee can maintain ejectment whenever an installment of interest or principal is overdue and unpaid.⁴

In North Carolina a mortgagee may bring an action to recover the lands.⁵ So in Vermont, the mortgagee, under the statutes of that State,⁶ has the right, after condition broken, to bring ejectment against the mortgagor or his grantees without giving notice to quit,⁷ for he then becomes absolutely vested with the interest of the mortgagor, and has a right to the immediate possession.⁸

So in Arkansas the mortgagee can obtain possession of the mortgaged premises by ejectment, and apply the rents and profits in satisfaction of the debt, and it is unnecessary to make the legal representatives of a deceased mortgagor defendants in the action for the judgment would not bar their right of redemption.⁹

§ 334. Statute prohibiting ejectment by mortgagee.—When unconstitutional.—The Supreme Court of Michigan decided, in Todd v. Davis,¹⁰ that the act of the legislature preventing actions of ejectment by mortgagees before their title

¹ Fry v. Shehee, 55 Ga. 208-212.

² Livingston v. Hayes, 43 Mich. 129.

³ Oldham v. Pfleger, 84 Ill. 102; Jackson v. Warren, 32 Ill. 331; Carroll v. Ballance, 26 Ill. 17.

⁴ Carroll v. Ballance, 26 Ill. 9. See Carpenter v. Carpenter, 6 R. I. 542; Reddick v. Gressman, 49 Mo. 389.

⁵ Wittkowski v. Watkins, 84 N. C. 458.

⁶ Ford v. Steele, 54 Vt. 562.

⁷ Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165; Wilson v. Hooper, 13 Vt. 653; Pratt v. Bank of Bennington, 10 Vt. 293; Burton v. Austin, 4 Vt. 105. See Marvin v. Dennison, 20 Vt. 662. See, also, Chap. XIII.

⁸ Hagar v. Brainerd, 44 Vt. 294.

⁹ Simms v. Richardson, 32 Ark. 304.

¹⁰ 32 Mich. 160. And see Mundy v. Monroe, 1 Mich. 68.

had become absolute by foreclosure, was unconstitutional and void as to mortgages existing and in force at the time of the passage of the act, and it was held that mortgagees so situated still had the right to bring ejectment.

§ 335. Ejectment by execution purchaser.—The mortgagor in Rhode Island is regarded as the tenant at sufferance of the mortgagee, and a mortgagor in possession, whose interest had been sold on execution, can, in ejectment brought against him by the purchaser, protect his possession by setting up a lease for years from his mortgagee, the mortgage having been given prior to the levy.¹ The sale of the mortgagor's interest upon execution, it was held, imposed no obligation upon him to redeem the mortgage for the benefit of the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, nor did it create any such relation between them as disentitled him to acknowledge the superior title of his mortgagee, and to accept a lease from him to protect the possession from the adverse claim of the purchaser.

In Alabama the mortgagor's interest, unless the right to possession is reserved, is regarded as a mere equity of redemption, and, consequently, except in case of such a reservation, a purchaser of the mortgagor's equity of redemption in land, after the maturity of the mortgage, does not become vested with a sufficient title to maintain a possessory action in the nature of ejectment.²

§ 336. Title after default.—Some of the authorities decide that the title of the land passes and becomes absolute in the mortgagee after condition broken ;³ but the prevailing modern principle is that even after default the title reverts in the mortgagor upon payment of the debt, without a formal reconveyance.⁴ And after the condition

¹ Simmons v. Brown, 7 R. I. 427. But see Doe d. Ogle v. Vickers, 4 Ad. & El. 782.

² Atcheson v. Broadhead, 56 Ala. 414; Childress v. Monette, 54 Ala. 317; Bernstein v. Humes, 60 Ala. 582.

³ Frische v. Kramer, 16 Ohio, 125-138; Stewart v. Crosby, 50 Me. 130; Johnson v. Houston, 47 Mo. 227.

⁴ 4 Kent's Com. p. 194, Lecture LVIII and notes; Pease v. Pilot Knob Iron Co. 49 Mo. 124; Tryon v. Munson, 77 Penn. St. 250-262; McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365; White v. Rittenmyer, 30 Iowa, 268; Wells v. Rice, 34 Ark. 346; McMahon v. Russell, 17 Fla. 698.

of the mortgage has once been performed the mortgage becomes void, and no agreement of the parties to continue it in force can affect the legal title.¹

§ 337. Deed absolute on its face may be shown to be a mortgage.—A deed absolute on its face may be shown by parol or other extrinsic evidence to be a mortgage,² and the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee being thus established, all the rights, remedies, and obligations incident to that relation attach to the parties;³ and in New York such a mortgagee cannot recover the possession of the mortgaged premises in ejectment.⁴ But a deed will be declared a mortgage upon purely equitable grounds only, and in the absence of such equitable considerations the relief will be refused; as where the conveyance was made to defraud creditors.⁵ The evidence must be so clear and conclusive as to leave no doubt as to the real intention of the parties, otherwise the intention, as expressed on the face of the deed, will prevail.⁶ The burden rests upon the grantor to establish that the deed was intended as a mortgage,⁷ and the question of whether or not a deed absolute in form was a mortgage is a mixed question of law and fact.⁸ But if the lands are conveyed by a deed absolute on its face, but intended as security for money loaned, a

¹ York Co. Savings Bank v. Roberts, 70 Me. 384. See Griffin v. Lovell, 42 Miss. 402; Donnelly v. Simonton, 13 Minn. 301.

² Meehan v. Forrester, 52 N. Y. 280; King v. Warrington, 2 New Mex. 318; Wells v. Morrow, 38 Ala. 125; French v. Burns, 35 Conn. 359; Butcher v. Stultz, 60 Ind. 170; Gay v. Hamilton, 33 Cal. 686; McCarron v. Cassidy, 18 Ark. 34; 3 Pomeroy's Eq. § 1196.

³ Horn v. Keteltas, 46 N. Y. 605; Carr v. Carr, 52 N. Y. 251; Murray v. Walker, 31 N. Y. 399; McBurney v. Wellman, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 390; s. c. sub nomine Dodge v. Wellman, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 427; Odell v. Montross, 68 N. Y. 499. See Chase v. Peck, 21 N. Y. 581; Villa v. Rodriguez, 12 Wall. 323; Littlewort v. Davis, 50 Miss. 403; O'Neill v. Capelle, 62 Mo. 202; French v. Burns, 35 Conn. 359; Weide v. Gehl, 21 Minn. 449; Steinruck's Appeal, 70 Penn. St. 289; Hills v. Loomis, 42 Vt. 562; Kent v. Agard, 24 Wis. 378.

⁴ Carr v. Carr, 52 N. Y. 251; Murray v. Walker, 31 N. Y. 399.

⁵ Hassam v. Barrett, 115 Mass. 256.

⁶ Henley v. Hotelling, 41 Cal. 22; Phillips v. Croft, 42 Ala. 477; Kent v. Lasley, 24 Wis. 654; Price v. Karnes, 59 Ill. 276. See Fullerton v. McCurdy, 55 N. Y. 637. A deed absolute in form and a defeasance are to be taken as one instrument, constituting a mortgage. Lanahan v. Sears, 102 U. S. 321.

⁷ Haines v. Thomson, 70 Penn. St. 434.

⁸ Brown v. Clifford, 7 Lansing (N. Y.), 46. See Montgomery v. Spect, 55 Cal. 352.

purchaser from the grantee, without notice that the grant was intended as a mortgage, acquires a title free from the equity of the grantor.¹ In such a case the party to whom the mortgage deed was given is bound to account to the debtor at his election for the proceeds of the sale or for the value of the land at the time the debtor's right to restoration is established.²

§ 338. Ejectment maintainable in certain States upon a deed intended as a mortgage.—In Michigan a deed, absolute on its face, though intended as a mortgage, confers upon the grantee a right of possession that will support ejectment. It was decided that the statute of that State which forbids ejectment by mortgagees before foreclosure, was not intended to reach a case of this description.³ So in Georgia, in which State ejectment cannot ordinarily be maintained by a mortgagee, an absolute deed, conveying land in fee simple, has been held to pass the legal title, though made and delivered as security for a debt, and a recovery may be had thereon in ejectment by the grantee against the grantor.⁴ These decisions seem illogical. In California, where the plaintiff claims under a conveyance, absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage to secure a loan of money, he is entitled to recover in ejectment, unless the defendant sets up his equities by answer, accompanied with an offer to pay the amount of the mortgage lien, and prays that the conveyance be declared a mortgage.⁵ On the other hand, the courts of Texas have decided that the defendant, under a plea of "not guilty" in an action of trespass to try title, may give in evidence special matters of defense to the action, whether legal or equitable, and may defeat the plaintiff's recovery by proving that the deed under which plaintiff claims, is in fact a mortgage.⁶

¹ Pico v. Gallardo, 52 Cal. 206; Meehan v. Forrester, 52 N. Y. 280.

² Meehan v. Forrester, 52 N. Y. 277.

³ Jeffery v. Hursh, 42 Mich. 563; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311; Bennett v. Robinson, 27 Mich. 26-30.

⁴ Biggers v. Bird, 55 Ga. 650.

⁵ Pico v. Gallardo, 52 Cal. 206. See Sutton v. Mason, 38 Mo. 120.

⁶ Mann v. Falcon, 25 Texas, 271. See Hannay v. Thompson, 14 Texas, 142.

§ 339. Mortgage.—Outstanding title.—The rule that the plaintiff in ejectment cannot recover premises, the title to which is in a third person, does not apply to a case where the outstanding title is a mortgage with which defendant is unconnected.¹ In the United States Supreme Court the principle was declared to be settled, that an outstanding satisfied mortgage could not be set up against the mortgagor by a stranger for the purpose of defeating the mortgagor's title.²

§ 340. Ejectment by mortgagor against mortgagee in possession.—The general rule, as we have seen, is, that upon payment of the mortgage debt, the title or interest of the mortgagee reverts in the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, without reconveyance or release.³ The mortgagor cannot ordinarily maintain an action of ejectment, or writ of entry, or an action of trespass to try title, against the mortgagee lawfully in possession,⁴ nor his tenant,⁵ nor any one claiming in his right.⁶ He, of course, cannot do so until the mortgage is fully paid and satisfied,⁷ as the lawful possession of the mortgagee carries with it the right to liquidate the mortgage debt from the rents and profits of the land,⁸ and to retain the possession until that purpose is accomplished. The mortgagee may have a writ of entry against the mortgagor where the latter has disturbed the rightful possession of the former.⁹ If the mortgagee's

¹ Hardwick v. Jones, 65 Mo. 54-60; Woods v. Hilderbrand, 46 Mo. 284; Bartlett v. Borden, 13 Bush (Ky.), 45; Johnson v. Houston, 47 Mo. 227; Den v. Dimon, 10 N. J. Law, 157; Emory v. Keighan, 88 Ill. 482; Oldham v. Pfleger, 84 Ill. 102. But see Meyer v. Campbell, 12 Mo. 603.

² Peltz v. Clarke, 5 Peters, 480. See Collins v. Robinson, 33 Ala. 91; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 330. A pretended outstanding title barred by statute is not available to a defendant in ejectment. Chapman v. Delaware, L. & W. R. R. Co., 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 263; Hoag v. Hoag, 35 N. Y. 473.

³ Odell v. Montross, 68 N. Y. 499. See § 336.

⁴ Conner v. Whitmore, 52 Me. 185; Hennesy v. Farrell, 20 Wis. 42; Gillett v. Eaton, 6 Wis. 30; Phyfe v. Riley, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 248; Sherman v. Abbot, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 448; Pace v. Chadderdon, 4 Minn. 499.

⁵ Hennesy v. Farrell, 20 Wis. 42.

⁶ Stark v. Brown, 12 Wis. 572.

⁷ Madison Ave. Bap. Church v. Oliver St. Bap. Church, 73 N. Y. 82; Sahler v. Signer, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 606; Holt v. Rees, 44 Ill. 30; Martin v. Fridley, 23 Minn. 13; Roberts v. Sutherlin, 4 Oreg. 219; Wells v. Rice, 34 Ark. 346; Tryon v. Munson, 77 Penn. St. 250, 262; Den v. Wright, N. J. Law, 175; Hannay v. Thompson, 14 Tex. 142.

⁸ Edwards v. Wray, 12 Fed. Rep. 42.

⁹ Stewart v. Davis, 63 Me. 539.

possession is obtained unlawfully, as where the mortgagee, without the mortgagor's consent, secured the possession by an arrangement with the tenant of the mortgagor, whose term had expired, the rule that he cannot be evicted after condition broken until the debt is paid does not apply.¹ To authorize such retention of the possession, however, it is not necessary that it should have been given under the mortgage, or with a view to the liquidation of it out of the rents and profits. The true test of the right to retain the possession is—was it acquired rightfully and by the mortgagor's consent.²

§ 341. Ejectment by mortgagor not maintainable until after accounting and application of rents.—Even though the mortgagee has received sufficient rents and profits to satisfy the mortgage, an action in the nature of ejectment cannot be sustained against him until an accounting has been had, and such rents and profits applied to the mortgage debt, for the mortgagee takes the rents and profits in the quasi character of trustee or bailiff of the mortgagor, and to be applied in equity as an equitable set-off to the amount due on the mortgage debt.³ The law does not make the application.⁴ The mortgagee may possibly be

¹ Russell v. Ely, 2 Black, 575; Gross v. Welwood, 90 N. Y. 638. See 27 Albany L. J. 9. See especially the learned article on "How mortgagee as such can get possession," 26 Alb. L. J. 526, and 27 Albany L. J. 9, reviewing the New York cases.

The New York Court of Appeals in a recent case consider it scarcely necessary to review the authorities to show that none of them have ever gone so far as to hold that a possession of the mortgagee acquired by either force or fraud against the will and consent of the rightful owner, and without even color of lawful authority, as it respects such owner and amounting only to a pure trespass, was sufficient to defend the action of ejectment. Finch, J., said: "The possession requisite for such a defense must have about it, at least, some basis of right as against the owner evicted. Often his assent or acquiescence may be inferred from slight circumstances, but the right cannot be founded upon an absolute wrong. To hold that one who has merely a lien, and but an equitable right, can get a legal one by the commission of a trespass would be neither logical nor just." Howell v. Leavitt, 95 N. Y. 621. This language is employed in a case where the mortgagee had gained the possession by foreclosure, but the proceedings were a nullity as to the heirs of the mortgagor who had not been made parties.

² See Madison Ave. Bap. Ch. v. Oliver St. Bap. Ch. 73 N. Y. 82.

³ See Ruckman v. Astor, 9 Paige (N. Y.), 517. A mortgagee in possession of personal chattels is liable to account for the income or profits of the chattels. Covell v. Dolloff, 31 Me. 104; Osgood v. Pollard, 17 N. H. 271.

⁴ Hubbell v. Moulson, 53 N. Y. 225; New England Jewelry Co. v. Merriam, 2 Allen (Mass.), 390.

entitled to commissions,¹ though in some cases his right thereto has been denied.² He is clearly liable for waste and misuse of the property.³

§ 342. Rule in Michigan.—In Michigan, however, a mortgagor, at any time before his rights have been foreclosed, can recover possession by ejectment from a mortgagee, who, without consent of the mortgagor, peaceably takes possession of the land.⁴

§ 343. Mortgagee may purchase equity at execution sale.—A mortgagee in possession may purchase, for his own benefit, the title of the mortgagor on an execution sale against him in favor of a third party, and he may set up the title so acquired as a defense to an action by the mortgagor or his grantee to redeem, for the relationship is not one of trust or confidence;⁵ and he may purchase the equity of redemption, and thereby acquire an absolute title.⁶

§ 344. Conveyance by mortgagor to mortgagee of entire estate.—How regarded.—The mortgagor and mortgagee may, at any time after the creation of the mortgage, and before foreclosure, make any agreement that they please concerning the estate, and the mortgagee may become the purchaser of the right of redemption. Such a transaction is, however, regarded with jealousy by courts of equity, and will be avoided for fraud, actual or constructive, or for any unconscionable advantage taken by the mortgagee in obtaining the title. It will be sustained only when it is bona fide, and in all respects fair and for an adequate consideration.⁷ In Odell v. Montross,⁸ in the New York Court of

¹ Cazenove v. Cutler, 4 Met. (Mass.) 246; Adams v. Brown, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 220.

² Moore v. Cable, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 385; Bonithon v. Heckmore, 1 Vern. 316. See Green v. Lamb, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 89.

³ Castleman v. Simpson, 16 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 455.

⁴ Newton v. McKay, 30 Mich. 380. See Humphrey v. Hurd, 29 Mich. 44; Russell v. Ely, 2 Black, 575. But see Mad. Ave. Bap. Ch. v. Oliver St. Bap. Ch. 73 N. Y. 82.

⁵ Ten Eyck v. Craig, 62 N. Y. 406.

⁶ Green v. Butler, 26 Cal. 595; Gwinn v. Smith, 55 Ga. 145; Hinkley v. Wheelwright, 29 Md. 341. A mortgagee cannot acquire a tax title against the owner while in possession, as it is his duty to pay taxes. Schenck v. Kelley, 88 Ind. 444.

⁷ Odell v. Montross, 68 N. Y. 499; Trull v. Skinner, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 213; Hyndman v. Hyndman, 19 Vt. 9; Patterson v. Yeaton, 47 Me. 308; Ford v. Olden, L. R. 3 Eq. Cas. 461; Russell v. Southard, 12 How. 139; Holdridge v. Gillespie, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 30; McLeod v. Bullard, 84 N. C. 531.

⁸ 68 N. Y. 499.

Appeals, it appeared that the plaintiff executed to the defendant a deed of the premises, absolute on its face, but simply as security for the payment of money. Subsequently defendant paid plaintiff at his request the sum of fifty dollars and plaintiff signed and delivered to defendant the following paper :

“NEW YORK, Sept. 17, 1866.

“Received from William Montross fifty dollars, in full satisfaction for all claims and demands whatsoever as to the conveyance of property, or otherwise, up to this date.

“THOMAS B. ODELL.”

It was held that the deed was a mortgage, with all the incidents of such an instrument, and that the rights and obligations of the parties were the same as though the deed had been subject to a defeasance expressed in the body of the paper, or executed simultaneously with it; furthermore, that the mortgagor's legal estate in fee could only be divested (otherwise than by way of estoppel) by some instrument valid under the statute of frauds, and which complied with the statute prescribing the mode and manner of conveying lands; that this paper, ex proprio vigore, did not have that effect, for it did not profess to release the right of redemption, nor to convey any title, interest, or estate in lands, and was not under seal. No agreement could be spelled out of the instrument which could be specifically performed, and it could not be aided and made a perfect contract to release or convey lands by parol proof. Though the contract was intended as a full settlement of the mortgagor's claim upon the property, yet the mere payment of money did not entitle the purchaser to a specific performance of a parol contract for the purchase of an interest in lands. Had the mortgagee incurred expense and changed his situation so that he could not be restored to the same position, it might have estopped the mortgagor from taking shelter under the statute of frauds, or alleging the insufficiency of the written instrument.

§ 345. Mortgagor's remedy against mortgagee after condition broken.—The remedy of the mortgagor against the mortgagee in possession after breach of condition, according to some of the authorities, is in equity;¹ and in Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts he cannot recover the possession from the mortgagee by a writ of entry, although he has tendered the whole amount due after default. The tender, under such circumstances, merely affords a foundation for a bill in equity.²

¹ Brobst v. Brock, 10 Wall. 519-536; Hill v. Payson, 3 Mass. 559; Parsons v. Welles, 17 Mass. 419.

² Parsons v. Welles, 17 Mass. 419; Rowell v. Mitchell, 68 Me. 21; Jewett v. Hamlin, 68 Me. 172; Wilson v. Ring, 40 Me. 116; Woods v. Woods, 66 Me. 206. Dyer v. Toothaker, 51 Me. 380. See Johnson v. Elliot, 26 N. H. 67; Brown v. Smith, 116 Mass. 108.

CHAPTER XII.

EJECTMENT BETWEEN LANDLORD AND TENANT.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 346. Ejectment prior to the introduction of summary proceeding statutes. 347. The remedy inadequate. 348. Summary proceeding statutes. 349. Title not involved in summary proceedings. 350. What the landlord must prove in ejectment. 351. Estoppel against the tenant. 352. Reasons upon which the estoppel rests.—Public policy. 353. Estoppel ceases upon redelivery of the possession.—Adverse possession. 354. Tenant cannot, by his own act, destroy the estoppel.—Attornment. 355. Fraud of the landlord. 356. When tenant may purchase superior title. 357. Acknowledgment of another's title.—Attornment. 358. Exceptions as to the estoppel. | § 359. In Massachusetts tenant cannot set up his wife's title. 360. Tenancy under mortgagor extinguished by foreclosure. 361. Tenant in common may deny cotenant's title. 362. Forfeiture and waste. 363. Test of waste. 364. Waste by tenant at will or from year to year. 365. Construction of covenant against waste. 366. Severance of conditions in a lease. 367. Construction of conditions. 368. Liberal construction by Lord Ten- terden. 369. Verbal disclaimer. 370. Ejectment for non-payment of rent.—Demand. 371. Right to enforce forfeiture.—How waived. |
|--|---|

§ 346. Ejectment prior to the introduction of summary proceeding statutes.—Early in the present century, ejectment, in the States in which that form of remedy prevailed, constituted the only proceeding by which a landlord, entitled to re-enter upon his lands by reason of forfeiture or expiration of the demised term, could recover the possession from a tenant.

§ 347. The remedy inadequate.—This intricate and dilatory remedy was productive of the grossest abuse and injustice to the landlord,¹ and in the case of refractory and irresponsible tenants often proved an expensive and inadequate method of compelling a surrender of the possession. The judgment for mesne profits constituted the landlord's only redress for the delay and loss of possession, and this remedy was often rendered worthless by reason of the tenant's insolvency.

¹ See Adams on Ejectment, 4th Am. ed. p. 187 [*161].

§ 348. Summary proceeding statutes.—The unsatisfactory character of the remedy in this class of cases led to the enactment of the summary proceeding statutes, now so common, which furnished the landlord a convenient, prompt, and effectual substitute for ejectment in many cases where the tenant, after forfeiture or expiration of the term, refused to yield up the possession.

§ 349. Title not involved in summary proceedings.—It is foreign to the scope of this treatise to discuss remedies or proceedings in which the title to land is not the principal subject of contention, and as questions of title cannot be tried in summary proceedings, the principles governing that class of remedies will not be considered. Furthermore, the provisions of these statutes, and the principles and rules governing their interpretation, vary in the different States, and any attempt to treat of the general practice under them would be of doubtful utility.

The subject of ejectment between landlord and tenant, which assumes so great a prominence in the early text-books, will be but briefly noticed, partly because, as already stated, summary proceedings have been generally substituted in its stead, and for the additional reason that, when this remedy is invoked by a landlord, practically all the proof offered or required is such as will establish this conventional relationship and its termination, and this being established, the tenant, as we shall presently see, is estopped from denying the landlord's title, so that in either case the controversy over the title is excluded.

Ejectments have been divided into two classes, viz.: ejectments on the title and ejectments for non-payment of rents.¹

§ 350. What the landlord must prove in ejectment.—To maintain ejectment against his tenant the landlord must show, either that the term has expired according to the provisions of the lease, or that the tenancy has been actually terminated by forfeiture, and that the landlord has a present right to the immediate possession. The landlord

¹ Longfield on Ejectment, p. 10.

has ordinarily no right of re-entry during the term, and his only practical redress for breach of the contract or injury to the property is compensation in damages, unless there is an express clause in the agreement reserving the right of re-entry before the expiration of the term for condition broken.¹

§ 351. Estoppel against the tenant.—It is a fundamental principle governing the relation of landlord and tenant that in controversies between them concerning the possession of the demised lands, the tenant is estopped from disputing or assailing the landlord's title,² or from setting up an outstanding title against the landlord hostile to that under which the tenant entered,³ or a title acquired during the existence of the tenancy.⁴

This principle is a rule of pleading as well as of evi-

¹ Johnson v. Gurley, 52 Texas, 222; Dennison v. Read, 3 Dana (Ky.), 586; Brown v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 122; Smith v. Blaisdell, 17 Vt. 199; Fox v. Brissac, 15 Cal. 223; Vanatta v. Brewer, 32 N. J. Eq. 268. See Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. 141. See, also, § 160. As to the early feudal and common law doctrine concerning forfeiture of inferior estates, see DeLancey v. Ganong, 9 N. Y. 9-16, and the extract from Coke therein discussed. See, also, Wigg v. Wigg, 1 Atk. 382; Doe v. Watt, 1 M. & R. 694; Fox v. Brissac, 15 Cal. 223. A forfeiture will not be favored or implied. Kentucky River Nav. Co. v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush (Ky.), 435. See § 370.

² 6 Am. Law. Rev. 1; Doe v. Smythe, 4 M. & S. 347; Coppinger v. Armstrong, 8 Bradw. (Ill.) 210; Hostetter v. Hykas, 3 Brewst. (Penn.) 162; Tompkins v. Snow, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 525; Hawes v. Shaw, 100 Mass. 187; Barwick v. Thompson, 7 T. R. 488; Silvey v. Summer, 61 Mo. 253; Townsend v. Davis, Forrest, 120; Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall. 436; Stott v. Rutherford, 92 U. S. 107; Vernam v. Smith, 15 N. Y. 327; O'Halloran v. Fitzgerald, 71 Ill. 53; James v. Belding, 33 Ark. 536; Donald v. McKinnon, 17 Fla. 746; Cook v. Creswell, 44 Md. 581; Morrison v. Bassett, 26 Minn. 235; Love v. Law, 57 Miss. 596; Nolen v. Royston, 36 Ark. 561; Territt v. Cowenhoven, 79 N. Y. 400; Prevot v. Lawrence, 51 N. Y. 219; Davis v. Davis, 83 N. C. 71; Wilson v. James, 79 N. C. 349; Jones v. Dove, 7 Oregon, 467; Lyles v. Murphy, 38 Tex. 75; Hatch v. Bullock, 57 N. H. 15; Bowdish v. Dubuque, 38 Iowa, 341; Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet. 156; Lamson v. Clarkson, 113 Mass. 348; Tewksbury v. Magrath, 33 Cal. 237; Pope v. Harkins, 16 Ala. 321; Clarke v. Clarke, 51 Ala. 498; Cody v. Quarterman, 12 Ga. 386; Alwood v. Mansfield, 33 Ill. 452; Grant v. White, 42 Mo. 285; Richardson v. Harvey, 37 Ga. 224; Cooper v. Smith, 8 Watts (Penn.), 536; Blakeney v. Ferguson, 20 Ark. 547; Longfellow v. Longfellow, 61 Me. 590; Jackson v. McLeod, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 182; Jackson v. Harder, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 202; Whiting v. Edmunds, 94 N. Y. 314; Bishop v. Lalouette, 67 Ala. 197; Otis v. McMillan, 70 Ala. 46.

³ "The principle is that a tenant shall not contest his landlord's title; on the contrary, it is his duty to defend it. If he objects to such title let him go out of possession;" per Tindal, C. J., in Doe v. Manton v. Austin, 9 Bing. 45.

⁴ Pope v. Harkins, 16 Ala. 321; Jackson v. Harper, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 246; O'Halloran v. Fitzgerald, 71 Ill. 53; Galloway v. Ogle, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 468; Bertram v. Cook, 32 Mich. 518; Woodward v. Brown, 13 Pet. 1.

dence,¹ and, when the relationship is shown, applies to actions of assumpsit, covenant, debt, summary proceeding, and actions of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, as well as to ejectment, trespass to try title, and writs of entry.² A party admitted to defend in the tenant's place is subject to the same rule,³ and the estoppel applies to the heirs of the tenant, retaining the possession and claiming solely in the tenant's right;⁴ nor can the tenant after the landlord's death hold adversely to his infant heir, by taking a grant to himself, or attorning to another.⁵

The estoppel extends to all persons claiming under, or succeeding to the lessee,⁶ and, being founded on the delivery of possession,⁷ ceases only when the possession is surrendered. In modern practice the estoppel is regarded as equitable rather than legal.⁸ It was held in the Supreme Court of California that a party who accepted a lease could not lawfully refuse to surrender possession of the demised premises at the expiration of the term, upon the ground that a prior agreement existed, under which the lessee might have retained the possession if he had not taken the lease. The prior agreements are presumed to be merged in the lease.⁹

As against a stranger the tenant is not precluded from denying his landlord's title, and setting up title in himself adversely to his landlord. The reason upon which the estoppel depends is manifestly wanting when a stranger

¹ Palmer v. Bowker, 106 Mass. 317.

² Townsend v. Davis, Forrest, 120; Tompkins v. Snow, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 525; Barwick v. Thompson, 7 T. R. 488; Hawes v. Shaw, 100 Mass. 187; Towne v. Butterfield, 97 Mass. 105; Silvey v. Summer, 61 Mo. 253; Jackson v. Hinman, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 202; Allen v. Chatfield, 8 Minn. 435. For a history of the origin of the estoppel, see 6 Am. Law Rev. p. 1.

³ Belfour v. Davis, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 300; Whissenhunt v. Jones, 80 N. C. 348. See Isler v. Foy, 66 N. C. 547.

⁴ Lewis v. Adams, 61 Ga. 559.

⁵ Williams v. McAliley, Cheves (S. C.) Law, 200.

⁶ Graham v. Moore, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 467; Stagg v. Eureka Tanning Co. 56 Mo. 317; Blakeney v. Ferguson, 20 Ark. 547; Rose v. Davis, 11 Cal. 133; McCravey v. Remson, 19 Ala. 430; Farle v. Hale, 31 Ark. 470; Jones v. Dove, 7 Oregon, 467; Cooper v. Smith, 8 Watts (Pa.), 536.

⁷ Lamson v. Clarkson, 113 Mass. 348.

⁸ Wiggin v. Wiggin, 58 N. H. 237.

⁹ McCreary v. Marston, 56 Cal. 403.

not in privity with the landlord, seeks to set it up for estoppels must be mutual and can only operate between parties and privies.¹ The estoppel upon a tenant from denying his landlord's title may be met by a counter estoppel on the landlord from denying the tenant's right to hold under another person.²

§ 352. Reasons upon which the estoppel rests.—Public policy.—The estoppel rests upon considerations of public policy, the purpose of which would, for obvious reasons, be defeated if one who had been clothed with possession of land by another was allowed to controvert the title of the latter without first restoring him to as good a position as he occupied before parting with the possession.³ The landlord can only be required to litigate title with his tenant upon the vantage ground of possession. If the tenant acquires a title, he must ordinarily surrender the possession and regain it by action,⁴ in which the onus of proof will lie upon the claimant.⁵

If the rule were otherwise no person would be safe in parting with the possession of lands, as he might be driven to the necessity of making out a complete chain of title before he could regain the possession, or evict the tenant.⁶ If any defects existed in the chain of his title, or the muniments of title had been lost or destroyed, or the witnesses who were conversant with the facts affecting it had died, or were absent from the country, the owner would be practically precluded from letting the property.⁷ It results from the application of this principle that, generally speaking, as we have said, proof of the relationship and expiration of the term only, and not proof of title, is required in ejectment between landlord and tenant. This carries the subject practically beyond the scope of this treatise.

¹ Cole v. Maxfield, 13 Minn. 235.

² Downs v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. 256.

³ Tewksbury v. Magraff, 33 Cal. 237-244; Glen v. Gibson, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 638; Richardson v. Harvey, 37 Ga. 224; Rogers v. Boynton, 57 Ala. 501; Wilson v. James, 79 N. C. 349.

⁴ Lowe v. Emerson, 48 Ill. 160.

⁵ Doe v. Smythe, 4 M. & S. 347.

⁶ Anderson ads. Darby, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) Law, 368.

⁷ See §§ 317, 318.

§ 353. Estoppel ceases upon redelivery of the possession.—Adverse possession.—The tenant is only estopped to deny the title under which he entered, and therefore the rule does not prevent him from buying up a title to be asserted after the termination of the tenancy and the redelivery of possession of the land.¹ It is the tenant's possession at which the estoppel is aimed. We may observe that the tenant of one holding under a tax deed cannot purchase the interest of a minor who has a right of redemption, and set it up against his lessor.²

In New York the rule is established that the possession of the tenant in subordination to the title of the landlord continues not only during the running of the term, but is presumed to be such and to remain unchanged until twenty years after the end of the term, and notwithstanding any claim by the tenant or his successors of a hostile title. This presumption may be rebutted, but to do so effectively and initiate an adverse holding, the tenant must surrender the possession to the landlord or do some equivalent act, and bring home to him knowledge of the adverse claim.³

§ 354. Tenant cannot, by his own act, destroy the estoppel.—Attornment.—The tenant cannot so change his tenancy or affect the relationship by ceasing to pay rent to his landlord and attorning to another, as to enable him to dispute the landlord's title,⁴ nor can the tenant, ordinarily, without defending the possession or giving notice to his landlord, treat himself as evicted, and attorn to another.⁵ Where one claiming to be entitled to the rents as landlord, acknowledges the right of another thereto, and the tenant, relying upon such acknowledgment, made payment to the

¹ Williams v. Garrison, 29 Ga. 503; Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45.

² Stout v. Merrill, 35 Iowa, 47.

³ Whiting v. Edmunds, 94 N. Y. 314. See note to Jackson v. Davis, 15 Am. Dec. 460; Flanagan v. Pearson, 61 Tex. 302.

⁴ Belfour v. Davis, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 300; Bertram v. Cook, 32 Mich. 518; Turner v. Thomas, 13 Bush (Ky.), 518, and cases cited; Leach v. Koenig, 55 Me. 451; Simmons v. Robertson, 27 Ark. 50; Rogers v. Boynton, 57 Ala. 501. See Mills v. Hamilton, 49 Iowa, 105.

⁵ Williams v. McMichael, 64 Ga. 445; Lowe v. Emerson, 48 Ill. 160. See Tucker v. Whitehead, 58 Miss. 762. But see Merryman v. Bourne, 9 Wall. 592.

latter, the party claiming the rent was held to be estopped from enforcing his claim against the tenant.¹ And an attornment to a stranger may be operative as to the tenant, though void as against his lessor.² The attornment does not create a new tenancy but is a continuation of the old tenancy under a new landlord.³

§ 355. Fraud of the landlord.—The estoppel has been held not to apply in cases where the tenant was induced by force, fraud, or misrepresentation, to enter into the lease.⁴ The same rule applies where an attornment of the tenant is superinduced by the misrepresentations of the landlord,⁵ or the plaintiff has received rent from the defendant by mistake, or under a false claim of title.⁶ Hence where, by the exhibition of a title founded in forgery, the party in possession was induced to accept the lease, it was held that the facts might be shown;⁷ and the landlord's title may be disputed where it was acknowledged under a misapprehension by a party already in possession as the tenant of another.⁸ It may be here observed that an agreement by a party in possession to abandon the premises at a certain day is not a lease, and does not estop him from controverting the title.⁹

But the tenant, in refusing to surrender possession of the demised premises, on the ground that his landlord falsely represented himself to be the owner of the property, must prove not only the false representation, but that he was induced by the fraud to accept the lease,¹⁰ and must show some right under a superior title. And it is error to

¹ Winterink v. Maynard, 47 Iowa, 366. See Downs v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. 256.

² Kenada v. Gardner, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 589.

³ Austin v. Ahearne, 61 N. Y. 6.

⁴ Schultz v. Arnot, 33 Mo. 172; Johnson v. Chely, 43 Cal. 300; Miller v. Bonsadon, 9 Ala. 317; Mountnoy v. Collier, 1 El. & Bl. 630; Franklin v. Merida, 35 Cal. 558; Higgins v. Turner, 61 Mo. 249; Turpin v. Saunders, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 27-33; Alderson v. Miller, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 279.

⁵ Tison v. Yawn, 15 Ga. 491; Gallagher v. Bennett, 38 Tex. 291; Evans v. Bidwell, 76 Penn. St. 497; Jenckes v. Cook, 9 R. I. 520.

⁶ Anderson v. Smith, 63 Ill. 126; Schultz v. Arnot, 33 Mo. 172.

⁷ Miller v. McBrier, 14 S. & R. (Penn.) 382.

⁸ Swift v. Dean, 11 Vt. 323. See Borland v. Box, 62 Ala. 87.

⁹ Miller v. McBrier, 14 S. & R. (Penn.) 382.

¹⁰ Camarillo v. Fenlon, 49 Cal. 202.

permit the defendant to prove that his signature to the lease was obtained by fraud or mistake when no such facts are set up in the answer.¹

§ 356. When tenant may purchase superior title.—In Gallagher v. Bennett, the Supreme Court of Texas² carried the exception as to the fraud of the landlord to the extent of holding that if he practiced misrepresentation or fraud as to his title, and by reason of insolvency his estate was unable to indemnify the tenant for rents wrongfully exacted, the tenant acting in good faith, under the advice of counsel, and from a well-founded fear of eviction during the term, might purchase the superior title, and resist the landlord's action to recover the possession.

§ 357. Acknowledgment of another's title.—Attornment.—A party in possession who has acknowledged the title of another, is not, as a general rule, estopped from subsequently disclaiming holding under such title, if the original entry was not under the person whose title is acknowledged.³ And after judgment of eviction by title paramount the tenant may attorn to the successful party, and defeat the former landlord's claim for rent, by setting up the paramount title;⁴ but the tenant assumes the burden of showing the superiority of the title in question.⁵

§ 358. Exceptions as to the estoppel.—The tenant may also show that his landlord's pretended title was acquired in violation of law.⁶ So no estoppel exists if the contract on which the so-called tenancy rests is void for usury,⁷ or the tenant accepted the lease under an entire misunder-

¹ McCreary v. Marston, 56 Cal. 403.

² 38 Tex. 291.

³ Jackson v. Leek, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 105; Franklin v. Merida, 35 Cal. 558; Alderson v. Miller, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 279; Washington v. Conrad, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 562. But see, contra, Saunders v. Moore, 14 Bush (Ky.), 98; Prevot v. Lawrence, 51 N. Y. 219; Hall v. Butler, 10 Ad. & El. 204; Marlow v. Wiggins, 4 Q. B. 367.

⁴ Moffat v. Strong, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 57; Lunsford v. Turner, 5 J. J. Mar. (Ky.) 104; Foster v. Morris, 3 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 609; Supervisors v. Herrington, 50 Ill. 232.

⁵ Merryman v. Bourne, 9 Wall. 592. See Douglas v. Fulda, 45 Cal. 592.

⁶ Satterlee v. Mathewson, 13 S. & R. (Penn.) 133. See Milton v. Haden, 32 Ala. 30.

⁷ Tribble v. Anderson, 63 Ga. 31.

standing of its purport and effect.¹ And if the tenant is compelled to purchase in an outstanding mortgage upon or title to the property, for his own safety, equity will protect his equitable title and his possession until he has been reimbursed.² The tenant, it is clear, may show an outstanding title against the landlord where the latter's title has expired, or been extinguished since the relation of landlord and tenant was created,³ for he does not thereby deny that the landlord had title at the time the lease was executed.⁴ So the tenant may show that he himself has acquired the title by voluntary alienation or purchase under execution sale; for it is no more prejudicial to the landlord that the tenant should purchase or acquire the title than that it should pass into the hands of a stranger.⁵

The tenant may also show that the landlord's only title was an estate for the life of another which expired during the term.⁶ So it has been held that a tenant who is under no obligation to pay taxes may purchase the property at a tax sale, and resist the recovery of his former landlord for rent by virtue of an adverse title so acquired.⁷ And a tenant entitled to homestead in certain lands which have been sold under an execution against him, is not estopped from claiming the homestead by accepting a lease for the same lands from the purchaser at execution sale.⁸

The cases holding that the tenant may show the failure of the landlord's title subsequent to the entry are numer-

¹ Wiggin v. Wiggin, 58 N. H. 237.

² Bates v. Conrow, 11 N. J. Eq. 137. See Gallagher v. Bennett, 38 Texas, 291; Thrall v. Omaha Hotel Co. 5 Neb. 295.

³ Jackson v. Rowland, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 666; Randolph v. Carlton, 8 Ala. 606; McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 592; Wheelock v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 309; Gregory v. Crab, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 234; Giles v. Ebsworth, 10 Md. 333; Wolf v. Johnson, 30 Miss. 513; Camp v. Camp, 5 Conn. 291; Wells v. Mason, 5 Ill. 84; Tilghman v. Little, 13 Ill. 239; Kinney v. Doe, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 350; Pentz v. Kuester, 41 Mo. 447; Russell v. Allard, 18 N. H. 222; Horner v. Leeds, 25 N. J. L. 106; Hoag v. Hoag, 35 N. Y. 469; Devacht v. Newsam, 3 Ohio, 57; Clarke v. Clarke, 51 Ala. 498; Otis v. McMillan, 70 Ala. 46.

⁴ Lamson v. Clarkson, 113 Mass. 348.

⁵ Casey v. Gregory, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 505; Texas Land Co. v. Turman, 53 Tex. 619; Camley v. Stanfield, 10 Tex. 546. See Silvey v. Summer, 61 Mo. 253; Higgins v. Turner, 61 Mo. 249; Ryder v. Mansell, 66 Me. 167; Hetzel v. Barber, 69 N. Y. 1-15; Despard v. Walbridge, 15 N. Y. 374.

⁶ Lamson v. Clarkson, 113 Mass. 348; Blake v. Foster, 8 T. R. 487.

⁷ Weichselbaum v. Curlett, 20 Kans. 709.

⁸ Abbott v. Cromartie, 72 N. C. 292.

ous.¹ Thus the tenant may show that the landlord's title has expired by effluxion of time,² or that the plaintiff has parted with his title, and is no longer entitled to possession.³

§ 359. In Massachusetts tenant cannot set up his wife's title.—It seems that in Massachusetts a tenant cannot hold over, after the expiration of his term, under a claim of title to the premises in his wife,⁴ for he can derive no title from her by contract or grant.⁵

§ 360. Tenancy under mortgagor extinguished by foreclosure.—The interest of a tenant under a demise from a mortgagor is extinguished by a foreclosure sale, and though the tenant be not evicted, yet if he attorn to the purchaser the right of the lessor to the future rents is extinguished. If the tenant voluntarily does that which the law would compel him to perform—yields up the possession to the party entitled to it—this cannot be regarded as an act of disloyalty, or as being in any sense injurious to the rights of the landlord. The proceedings are tantamount to an actual eviction, and the tenant is not estopped to show that he has attorned to the holder of the paramount title.⁶ But a disclaimer by the tenant of his landlord's title will never be implied.⁷

§ 361. Tenant in common may deny co-tenant's title.—The relation of landlord and tenant stands on grounds entirely different from that of tenants in common; and it has been held in Tennessee, that each tenant in common enters

¹ Lancashire v. Mason, 75 N. C. 455; Grundin v. Carter, 99 Mass. 15; Den v. Ashmore, 22 N. J. L. 261; Dobson v. Culpepper, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 352; Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 123-135; Supervisors v. Herrington, 50 Ill. 232; Duff v. Wilson, 69 Penn. St. 316; England v. Slade, 4 T. R. 682; St. John v. Quitzow, 72 Ill. 334; Franklin v. Palmer, 50 Ill. 202; Armstrong v. Wheeler, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 88; Burden v. Thayer, 3 Met. (Mass.) 76.

² Presstman v. Silljacks, 52 Md. 647. See Claridge v. Mackenzie, 4 Man. & G. 143, per Tindal, Ch. J.

³ McGuffie v. Carter, 42 Mich. 497.

⁴ Miller v. Lang, 99 Mass. 13.

⁵ Ibid. See Thompson v. O'Sullivan, 6 Allen (Mass.), 503; Gay v. Kingsley, 11 Ibid. 345; Love v. Law, 57 Miss. 596.

⁶ Simers v. Saltus, 3 Denio (N. Y.), 214; Lancashire v. Mason, 75 N. C. 455. But see Belfour v. Davis, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 300.

⁷ Leport v. Todd, 32 N. J. L. 124.

as owner, and holds possession for himself, and is not estopped, by the admission of the co-tenancy, from setting up a better title in himself or others.¹ This, as we have already shown, is too broad a statement of the rule.²

§ 362. Forfeiture and waste.—Ejectment may be brought for breach of a covenant against waste, where the lease contains a provision for re-entry. In the case of the United States v. Bostwick,³ the Supreme Court of the United States held that, unless excluded by the operation of some express covenant or agreement, an implied obligation existed on the part of the lessee so to use the property as not unnecessarily to injure it, or to treat the premises demised in such manner that no injury be done to the inheritance, so that the estate may revert to the lessor undeteriorated by the wilful or negligent conduct of the lessee. This implied obligation was declared to be a part of the contract itself; as much so as if incorporated into it by express language. It results from the relation of landlord and tenant which the contract creates,⁴ and is not a covenant to repair generally, but so to use the property in a proper and tenant-like manner,⁵ as to avoid the necessity for repair as far as possible.⁶ The tenant is not bound to rebuild, if the buildings are burned down or otherwise destroyed by accident. But it is voluntary waste, and within the prohibition of the implied agreement, if, during the occupancy under the lease, ornamental trees are destroyed, fences and walls torn down and the materials used for sidewalks and the erection of buildings, or removed from the property; or where stones are quarried, and gravel dug, from a stone quarry and gravel-pit on the premises, and taken away.⁷

¹ Washington v. Conrad, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 562.

² See §§ 291, 292.

³ 94 U. S. 53-65. See McGregor v. Brown, 10 N. Y. 114; Winship v. Pitts, 3 Paige (N. Y.), 259; Cole v. Greene, 1 Lev. 309; London v. Greyme, Cro. Jac. 181.

⁴ See Holford v. Dunnett, 7 M. & W. 347.

⁵ Nave v. Berry, 22 Ala. 382. See Cheetham v. Hampson, 4 T. R. 318.

⁶ Miller v. Shields, 55 Ind. 71; Horsefall v. Mather, Holt, 7-9; Brown v. Crump, 1 Marsh. 567.

⁷ United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53-69; Jackson v. Brownson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 227. See People v. Alberty, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 162.

§ 363. Test of waste.—Injury is not the test of waste, but disherison of him in remainder or reversion.¹ It is “the abuse or destructive use of property by him who has not an absolute unqualified title.”² The tenant is not liable for the mere wear and tear of the premises,³ and is under no obligation to make repairs of a substantial and general nature.⁴ Waste, it may be added, can only be committed of the thing demised; and where trees are excepted out of the demise no waste could be committed of them, and consequently no forfeiture could be incurred by cutting them down.⁵ Taking down partitions is apparently an act of waste though the question as to whether or not it is injurious should be submitted to the jury.⁶

§ 364. Waste by tenant at will or from year to year.—A tenant at will who commits voluntary waste, such as cutting timber, forfeits the term, for it is said that the injury amounts to a determination of the will and of his possession.⁷ A condition in the lease not to sell or dispose of any wood or timber from the demised premises is valid, and a breach of it works a forfeiture of the estate which may be enforced in ejectment.⁸ An action will lie against a tenant from year to year for permissive waste.⁹

§ 365. Construction of covenant against waste.—Ejectment has been upheld, in the following cases:—by a lessor

¹ Livingston v. Reynolds, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 115; Doe d. Darlington v. Bond, 5 B. & C. 855; Robinson v. Kime, 70 N. Y. 147; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 59 Wis. 561. See, especially, McGregor v. Brown, 10 N. Y. 114; Wade v. Malloy, 16 Hun (N. Y.), 226. See §§ 214, 215.

² Duval v. Waters, 1 Bland's Ch. (Md.) 572.

³ Torriano v. Young, 6 C. & P. 8; Wise v. Metcalfe, 10 B. & C. 299. See Harder v. Harder, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 409. See, also, § 621.

⁴ Horsefall v. Mather, Holt, 7; Johnson v. Dixon, 1 Daly (N. Y.), 178; Leach v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 327.

⁵ Goodright v. Vivian, 8 East, 190. See Schermerhorn v. Buell, 4 Denio (N. Y.), 422. The reversioner cannot bring trespass or ejectment against the tenant so long as the tenancy continues, but he is not debarred from his remedy at law or in equity for waste because the proceeding may involve the determination of a disputed title. Robinson v. Kime, 70 N. Y. 151.

⁶ Agate v. Lowenbein, 57 N. Y. 604, and cases cited in opinion of Dwight, C.

⁷ Phillips v. Covert, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 1. See, further, as to forfeiture for waste, Suffern v. Townsend, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 35; Cooper v. Stower, Ib. 331; Erwin v. Olmsted, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 229; Livingston v. Reynolds, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 115.

⁸ Verplanck v. Wright, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 506.

⁹ Newbold v. Brown, 44 N. J. Law, 266.

for breach of a covenant in the lease, against exercising the trade of a butcher on the premises, upon proof that the lessee sold raw meat thereon, although no beasts were slaughtered upon the demised lands;¹ on a proviso for re-entry for breach of a covenant not to use the demised premises for any trade or business whatever—the breach consisting in carrying on a school by an assignee of the lease;² and for breach of a covenant to insure,³ and where the tenant broke a doorway in the demised premises into an adjoining house, this was held, by Lord Ellenborough, to be a breach of a covenant to repair.⁴

§ 366. Severance of conditions in a lease.—The conditions of a lease do not become severed by a severance of the occupation of the demised premises, and the payment of rent to the lessor by the respective occupants for the portion occupied by each, and if either the lessee, or an assignee of the lease, as to a portion of the demised premises, commits any act which, by the terms of the lease, creates a forfeiture of the estate, the forfeiture attaches to the whole of the premises embraced in the lease.⁵

§ 367. Construction of conditions.—It has been held by the New York Court of Appeals, that in all cases where an estate for years is granted on condition, and the lease declares that the estate shall cease and determine on the breach of the condition, without any clause of re-entry or other qualification, the estate will ipso facto cease as soon as the condition is broken,⁶ but, if the lease contain a clause that, in case of non-performance, the landlord may re-enter, the lease is not void, but voidable only at the election of the landlord.⁷ It is often said that the extent and meaning

¹ Doe v. Spry, 1 B. & Ald. 617. See Doe d. Davis v. Elsam, 1 Mood. & M. 189.

² Doe d. Bish v. Keeling, 1 M. & S. 95.

³ Doe d. Flower v. Peck, 1 B. & Adol. 428; Doe d. Pitt v. Shewin, 3 Camp. 134; Reynolds v. Pitt, 2 Price, 212, note.

⁴ Doe d. Vickery v. Jackson, 2 Stark. 293. But see Doe v. Jones, 4 B. & Adol. 126.

⁵ Clarke v. Cummings, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 339. See Eyton v. Jones, 21 L. T. [N. S.] 789.

⁶ Parmelee v. Oswego & S. R. R. Co., 6 N. Y. 74. See Morton v. Weir, 70 N. Y. 247.

⁷ Stuyvesant v. Davis, 9 Paige (N. Y.), 427; Collins v. Hasbrouck, 56 N. Y. 167.

of a covenant or condition, and the fact of a breach, are matters strictissimi juris, and the plaintiff to defeat an estate of his own creation, by means of such a condition, must bring the defendant clearly within its letter.¹ A forfeiture is never favored or implied.² Thus it has been held in ejectment for breach of a condition, that the words "let and underlet," in the lease, cover a demise or underletting, and not an assignment of the whole interest, and the landlord having proved only an assignment, was defeated by this strict and literal interpretation of the covenant.³

§ 368. Liberal construction of Lord Tenterden.—Lord Tenterden decided that provisoes of this sort should not be construed with the strictness of conditions at common law, as they constituted matters of contract between the parties, and should be construed like any other contracts.⁴ This rule of construction commends itself as sound and reasonable. The covenants and conditions should receive the construction which the ordinary and natural meaning of the words employed justify, for such an interpretation obviously reflects the intention of the parties more clearly. The words strict or liberal, as applied to these interpretations, are often mere epithets; and a departure from Lord Tenterden's rule has, in considering many cases of forfeiture, led to palpable absurdities.

§ 369. Verbal disclaimer.—The mere verbal disclaimer or parol denial by a tenant for life or years, of his landlord's title, and a claim and assertion of ownership in fee, does not work a forfeiture of the term, nor will it authorize the landlord to maintain ejectment for the demised lands. This subject has been learnedly considered in the New York Court of Appeals,⁵ and the conclusion reached that, even under the feudal system, the many causes for which an inferior estate could be forfeited did not include a parol

¹ Lynde v. Hough, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 415, 423; Livingston v. Stickles, 8 Paige (N. Y.), 398; s. c. in error, 7 Hill (N. Y.), 253, per Nelson, Ch. J.; Jackson v. Harrison, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 66. See Dermott v. Wallach, 1 Wall. 61.

² Kentucky River Nav. Co. v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush (Ky.), 435.

³ Lynde v. Hough, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 415, 423.

⁴ Doe d. Davis v. Elsam, 1 Moody & M. 189.

⁵ De Lancey v. Ganong, 9 N. Y. 9, and cases cited. See Graves v. Walls, 10 Ad. & El. 427.

denial of the landlord's title, except in cases of a tenancy at will or sufferance, or from year to year, in which a disclaimer is evidence only of a cessation of the will, and supersedes the necessity of service of notice to quit. The court expressed inability to find any case in which judgment had proceeded upon the distinct ground that a parol denial of the landlord's title worked a forfeiture of a term for years. If the doctrine was established that an estate for years could be forfeited by mere words such interests in real estate, which are often of great value, would be dependent upon the uncertain memory of witnesses, and the title to valuable landed estates gained or lost, according to the preponderance of oral testimony, or the result of a nicely balanced case. This would be contrary to the policy of our law, in regard to interests in real estate, which has been to leave as little as possible to depend upon verbal testimony.

§ 370. Ejectment for non-payment of rent.—Demand.—The remedy by ejectment to enforce the payment of rent is never allowed except where a right of re-entry for non-payment of rent is expressly stipulated for between the parties.¹ It was formerly held at common law that only the grantor of a lease in fee, and his heirs, could avail themselves of the right of re-entry,² but the condition of re-entry is now generally made by statute, or held by the courts to be assignable, and the right of re-entry may be enforced in ejectment by the assignee of the rent,³ or by an heir for an undivided interest in the demised premises.⁴ The right to re-enter for breach of the conditions of a lease in fee may, as a general rule, be enforced by the legal representatives, grantee, or assignee of the lessor.⁵ A

¹ De Lancey v. Ganong, 9 N. Y. 25; Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 Ib. 141; S. C. 5 Denio (N. Y.), 121; Kenege v. Elliott, 9 Watts (Penn.), 258; Tyler v. Heidorn, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 439-454; Campbell v. Shipley, 41 Md. 81; Hosford v. Ballard, 39 N. Y. 147.

² Tyler v. Heidorn, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 439-454; Nicoll v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 121; Van Rensselaer v. Ball, 19 N. Y. 100-103.

³ Van Rensselaer v. Slingerland, 26 N. Y. 580; Farley v. Craig, 11 N. J. L. 262.

⁴ Cruger v. McLaury, 41 N. Y. 219.

⁵ Van Rensselaer v. Hays, 19 N. Y. 68; Nicoll v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 460.

demand of the rent must be shown,¹ and as the right to re-enter is a very harsh remedy it will be restrained by the courts within very narrow limits, and the lease construed strongly in favor of the lessee.²

§ 371. Right to enforce forfeiture.—How waived.—The right to maintain ejectment for forfeiture, arising upon breach of a covenant on the part of the lessee, may be waived, or lost by acceptance of rent which accrued after knowledge on the part of the lessor of the act of forfeiture,³ or by acceptance of an annuity, non-payment of which constituted the claim of forfeiture,⁴ or by any act constituting an acknowledgment of a subsisting tenancy.⁵ This principle applies whether the breach be for non-payment of taxes;⁶ failure to erect buildings;⁷ underletting;⁸ cutting timber,⁹ or insolvency,¹⁰ and it has been said that an unqualified demand for rent after forfeiture,¹¹ or dilatoriness on the part of the landlord, from which the tenant is justified in assuming that strict performance of the covenant will not be exacted,¹² amounts to a waiver of the forfeiture, or may constitute a ground of relief in equity.

¹ Smith v. Whitbeck, 13 O. S. 471; Jackson v. Harrison, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 66; Connor v. Bradley, 1 How. 211; Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. 141; Prout v. Roby, 15 Wall. 471; Kansas City Elevator Co. v. Union Pacific R'y Co., 3 McCra. 463.

² Kansas City Elevator Co. v. Union Pacific R'y Co., 3 McCra. 463; Kentucky River Nav. Co. v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush (Ky.), 435; Miller v. Havens, 51 Mich. 482.

³ Collins v. Hasbrouck, 56 N. Y. 157; Roe d. Gregson v. Harrison, 2 T. R. 425; Conger v. Duryee, 12 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 225; s. c. 24 Hun (N. Y.), 617; reversed 90 N. Y. 594. See Jackson v. Sheldon, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 448; Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 79; Ireland v. Nichols, 46 N. Y. 413; Arnsby v. Woodward, 6 B. & C. 519; McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384; Gomber v. Hackett, 6 Wis. 323; Watson v. Fletcher, 49 Ill. 498; Murray v. Harway, 56 N. Y. 337.

⁴ Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 79.

⁵ Doe d. Sheppard v. Allen, 3 Taunt. 78.

⁶ Watson v. Fletcher, 49 Ill. 498.

⁷ McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384.

⁸ Ireland v. Nichols, 46 N. Y. 413.

⁹ Gomber v. Hackett, 6 Wis. 323.

¹⁰ Doe v. Rees, 4 Bing. N. C. 384.

¹¹ Doe d. Nash v. Birch, 1 M. & W. 402.

¹² Thropp v. Field, 26 N. J. Fq. 82. The right of re-entry for non-payment of rent must be enforced during the term, otherwise the forfeiture will be considered waived; Cheatham v. Plinke, 1 Tenn. Ch. 577; see Johns v. Whitley, 3 Wils. 127, and a covenant not to assign without the landlord's consent, if waived once, is

The principles governing the relationship of landlord and tenant will be further incidentally discussed in the next chapter.

waived forever. Murray v. Harway, 56 N. Y. 337; Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 79; see Dumper v. Syms, Cro. Eliz. 815. See further, as to waiver, Prindle v. Anderson, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 391. Rent must have accrued, and been received after forfeiture, to constitute waiver. Jackson v. Allen, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 220; Hunter v. Osterhoudt, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 33. Mere receipt of rent without knowledge of the forfeiture, is not a waiver. Keeler v. Davis, 5 Duer (N. Y.), 507. Mere silent acquiescence in an act which constituted a breach of an express condition in a deed would not amount to a waiver of the right of forfeiture for such breach. Adams v. Copper Co., 4 Hughes, 594.

CHAPTER XIII.

NOTICE TO QUIT AND DEMAND OF POSSESSION.

- | | |
|---|---|
| § 372. Notice to quit. 373. Defined.—When necessary. 374. Privity of estate. 375. Notice to quit necessary only in cases of tenancies. 376. Intruders. 377. Trespassers. 378. Expiration of term by provisions of lease. 379. Lease void by statute of frauds. 380. Tenant holding over. 381. Uncertain tenancies. 382. Tenancy from year to year. 383. Reasonable notice.—Tenancy from year to year. 383a. From month to month. 384. Tenant at will. 385. Tenant at sufferance. 386. Possession under a void homestead claim. 387. Disclaimer by tenant. 388. Disclaimer a question of fact.—Attornment. 389. Defense of adverse possession forfeits right to notice. 390. When refusal to deliver possession not a disclaimer. | § 391. Tenants in common.—Demand of possession. 392. Tenant of tenants in common. 393. Landlord defending in tenant's place. 394. Vendor and vendee. 395. Obligee in bond for titles. 396. Vendee in possession under void contract. 397. Mortgagee against mortgagor. 398. Infant plaintiff. 399. Personal representatives.—Tenant for life. 400. Notice by tenant to landlord. 401. Form of the notice. 402. What notices held good. 403. Mistakes in notice. 404. Parol notice. 405. By whom notice should be given. 406. Receiver in chancery. 407. Agent of a corporation. 408. By joint tenants. 409. By tenants in common. 410. Who cannot give notice. 411. Waiver of right to notice. 412. Service of notice. 413. How served. 414. How proved. |
|---|---|

§ 372. Notice to quit.—The subjects of notice to quit and demand of possession assume much prominence in controversies over the possession of land, where the relationship of landlord and tenant is proved, or some express or implied contract or agreement as to the possession is shown between the parties. The importance of determining in a given case whether or not a demand of possession, or notice to quit, is requisite, should not be overlooked, for the failure to observe one of these prerequisites may defeat the plaintiff's action, and preclude inquiry into the merits of the title or right of possession. Attention to this subject is the more important because parties sometimes enter into a contest with the intention of trying the title, and the defendant, when actually confronted with a suit, having no substantial claim, or desiring to embarrass the litigation, finds it convenient to retreat behind a claim of tenancy, or of occupation by the express or implied consent of the owner, and a failure to demand possession or to serve notice to quit. Every presumption will be indulged by the courts that the defendant acquired the possession by right or consent of the owner, for the law will never presume that a man is a trespasser or wrong-doer, and as a result subject him to costs and damages in an action at law. This feature of the law suggests the importance of carefully considering this branch of our subject.

§ 373. Defined.—When necessary.—A notice to quit is a certain reasonable notice required by law, by custom or by special agreement, to enable either a landlord or tenant without the consent of the other to determine a tenancy for an indefinite period.¹ Generally speaking notice to quit is necessary in cases where the occupant acquired the possession with the owner's assent but for no definite term.² The right is an ancient one³ and is founded upon the theory that it would be unreasonable that a man who had expended time and money in cultivating lands, and making preparation for crops, while his estate was uncertain, should be turned off at a moment's warning.⁴ There is no distinction, however, between houses and lands as regards the time of giving notice to quit, it being considered necessary that both should be governed by one rule.⁵

§ 374. Privity of estate.—It is clear that a party in possession is not entitled to notice to quit unless there is some privity of contract or of estate between the parties.⁶

¹ See Cole on Eject. p. 30.

² See Jackson v. Miller, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 747; Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 274; Stedman v. McIntosh, 4 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 291; Smith v. Littlefield, 51 N. Y. 541; McCaslin v. State, 99 Ind. 428.

³ See Year Book, 13 Hen. VIII, 15, b.

⁴ Bedford v. McElherron, 2 S. & R. (Penn.) 49; Witt v. Mayor, &c. 6 Rob. (N. Y.) 441.

⁵ Right v. Darby, 1 T. R. 159.

⁶ See Livingston v. Tanner, 14 N. Y. 64-66; Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 274;

And where the relation of landlord and tenant is not shown between the claimant and occupant,¹ and the issue is one of title only, no demand or notice is requisite.² This subject has been recently considered in the Supreme Court of New Jersey in the case of Steffens v. Earl,³ and the rule relative to notices to quit is stated as follows: "Where there is a lease for a certain period, the term determines without notice.⁴ In uncertain tenancies, reasonable notice was necessary, which reasonable notice had, from the time of Henry VIII, according to Lord Ellenborough, been six months.⁵ This rule was applied to all uncertain tenancies in New Jersey, whether rent was or was not reserved.⁶ . . . In cases of tenancies for periods running less than a year, the rule enunciated by the text-writers is, that the notice must be regulated by the letting, and must be equivalent to a period. How the rule arose is uncertain."⁷

§ 375. Notice to quit necessary only in cases of tenancies.—

In order then to render service of notice to quit necessary the party claiming it must show that he entered as a tenant of some kind of the plaintiff or his lessor. If he is not a tenant for years, or from year to year or from month to month or at will, or even by sufferance, there can be no pretense that a notice to quit, or demand of possession, is necessary before the action is brought.⁸ A person in possession is not, as already shown, entitled to receive notice to quit, unless there existed privity either of contract, or of estate, between him and the plaintiff.⁹ Thus it has been

Jackson v. Fuller, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 215; Eberwine v. Cook, 74 Ind. 377; McCaslin v. State, 99 Ind. 428.

¹ Waters v. Butler, 4 Cr. C. C. 371.

² Eysaman v. Eysaman, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 430; Wood v. Wood, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 351; Herrell v. Sizeland, 81 Ill. 457; Woodward v. Brown, 13 Pet. 1.

³ 40 N. J. L. 128.

⁴ Citing Cobb v. Stokes, 8 East, 358; Right v. Darby, 1 T. R. 159; Decker v. Adams, 12 N. J. L. 99.

⁵ Citing Doe d. Strickland v. Spence, 6 East, 120.

⁶ Citing Den v. Drake, 14 N. J. L. 523. Changed by statute in New Jersey to three months. See Rev. 1877, page 575.

⁷ See Huffell v. Armitstead, 7 C. & P. 56; Towne v. Campbell, 3 C. B. 921.

⁸ Eaton v. George, 3 Jones (N. C.) Law, 385.

⁹ Livingston v. Tanner, 14 N. Y. 64; Jackson v. Fuller, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 215. See § 373.

held in New York that a tenant for the life of another, who continues in possession after the death of the cestui que vie, without the consent of the owner, is not a tenant at sufferance but a trespasser, and hence not entitled to notice to quit.¹ An occupant under a license is not entitled to notice, for he has no interest, term or estate.²

§ 376. Intruders.—Manifestly intruders cannot claim the privilege of notice to quit. Where the plaintiff had purchased the property under decree of foreclosure of a mortgage made by T., who had executed an unrecorded lease for life to R., it was held, R. having died, and his daughter, the defendant, having entered on the property, that she was to be considered as a mere intruder, and therefore not entitled to notice to quit.³ Wood v. Wood,⁴ decided in the New York Court of Appeals, was an action of ejectment by a wife against her husband, for the possession of lands the title to which was vested in the wife. The parties had taken possession of the lands under a deed to the wife, and had resided together thereon, until, by reason of the husband's improper conduct the wife went off of the premises, the husband remaining. It was held that the possession taken under the deed was by virtue of the wife's title, the defendant being upon the premises merely because he was her husband, and the head of the family; that he was not in any way a tenant at will or at sufferance, because he never had any interest in the lands, nor any possession growing out of an interest,⁵ nor acquired the possession by the consent of the plaintiff. The court, compared the case to that of one who had by a trespass come into the pedis possessio of the lands, and was therefore not entitled to notice to quit. This analogy seems forced and unnecessary to the decision of the case.

§ 377. Trespassers.—It seems to be clearly established, that no proof of service of notice to quit is necessary in

¹ Livingston v. Tanner, 14 N. Y. 64. See Horsely v. Horsely 4 Harr. (Del.) 517.

² Johns v. McDaniel, 60 Miss. 486.

³ Worthington's Lessee v. Etcheson, 5 Cr. C. C. 302; s. p. Lewis v. Ringo, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 247; Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. Knox College, 34 Ill. 195.

⁴ 83 N. Y. 575.

⁵ Citing Knowles v. Hull, 99 Mass. 562.

ejectment against a party who sets up no right to the possession,¹ The Supreme Court of California have held that it would be absurd to require either a demand of possession or notice to quit in a case where the defendant was a mere naked trespasser or intruder.² These cases proceed upon the theory that, as there is an entire want of privity and absence of contract relationship, express or implied, between the parties, the reasons do not apply upon which the practice of giving the notice rests.

§ 378. Expiration of term by provisions of lease.—Where the term of a lease is to end on a day certain there is no occasion for a notice to quit previous to bringing an action, because both of the parties are apprised that, unless they come to some fresh agreement, there is an end of the lease.³ The contract itself gives sufficient notice.⁴ Nor is notice necessary when the landlord gives a tenant in possession written permission to remain two years longer without charge.⁵

§ 379. Lease void by statute of frauds.—The receipt of rent, and occupancy under a lease void by the statute of frauds, does not validate the lease, but the relationship inures as a tenancy from year to year,⁶ which must be

¹ Meeker v. Place, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 169.

² Godwin v. Stebbins, 2 Cal. 103. See Eaton v. George, 3 Jones (N. C.) Law, 385; Murphy v. Williamson, 85 Ill. 149; Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. Knox College, 34 Ill. 195.

³ Cobb v. Stokes, 8 East, 358; Messenger v. Armstrong, 1 T. R. 54, per Lord Mansfield; Right v. Darby, 1 T. R. 162; McCanna v. Johnston, 19 Penn. St. 434; Roe v. Ward, 1 H. Bl. 97; McClure v. McClure, 74 Ind. 108; Kellogg v. Groves, 53 Iowa, 395; Doe d. Tilt v. Stratton, 4 Bing. 446; Doe d. Godsell v. Inglis, 3 Taunt. 54; Smith v. Littlefield, 51 N. Y. 539; Alcorn v. Morgan, 77 Ind. 184; Gibbons v. Dayton, 4 Hun (N. Y.), 451; Young v. Smith, 28 Mo. 65; Rich v. Keyser, 54 Pa. St. 86.

⁴ Doe d. Tilt v. Stratton, 4 Bing. 446; Bedford v. McElherron, 2 S. & R. (Penn.) 49. See, especially, Decker v. Adams, 12 N. J. L. 99; Ellis v. Paige, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 71, and note reviewing cases; Hendrick v. Cannon, 5 Tex. 248; Young v. Smith, 28 Mo. 65; Dorrell v. Johnson, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 263; Stockwell v. Marks, 17 Me. 455; Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 274; Allen v. Jaquish, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 628; Rich v. Keyser, 54 Penn. St. 86.

⁵ Hulett v. Nugent, 71 Mo. 131.

⁶ Reeder v. Sayre, 70 N. Y. 180; Clayton v. Blakey, 8 T. R. 3; Doe v. Bell, 5 T. R. 471; Doe v. Terry, 4 Ad. & El. 274. See Doe v. Cockell, 4 Ad. & El. 478; Doe v. Amey, 12 Ad. & El. 476; Schuyler v. Leggett, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 660; Lounsbury v. Snyder, 31 N. Y. 514; Edwards v. Clemons, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 480; Morehead v. Watkyns, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 228; Williams v. Ackerman, 8 Oregon, 405; Thurber terminated by a notice to quit, though resort may be had to the void lease to determine the rights and duties of the parties in all things consistent with a yearly tenancy. Where the occupancy is under a lease void by the statute of frauds, and the rent is paid monthly, the relationship constitutes a tenancy from month to month, which is determinable only by a month's notice to quit.¹

§ 380. Tenant holding over.—In *Schuyler v. Smith*² the New York Court of Appeals held that where a tenant for one or more years holds over after the expiration of his term, the landlord may, at his option, treat him as a trespasser, or as a tenant for another year upon the terms of the prior lease, so far as applicable, and that the right of the landlord to continue the tenancy is not affected by the fact that the tenant refused to renew the lease, and had notified the landlord that he had hired other premises. It is not in the power of the tenant to throw off his character as such, or deny his tenancy; nor has he the right to convert himself, at his option, into a wrong-doer, any more than he could deny the landlord's title. To entitle a tenant, who holds over a definite term, to notice the holding over must be continued for such a length of time after the expiration of the term, and under such circumstances, as to authorize the implication of assent, on the part of the landlord, to such continuance.

§ 381. Uncertain tenancies.—It has been held, in the Supreme Court of New Jersey, that half a year's notice to quit is necessary in all cases of uncertain tenancy, whether under the name of tenancies from year to year, or tenancies at will. This rule, it was said, applies to all general and undefined tenancies, whether they originated simply by permission of the owner, or when the tenant has entered under a void lease, or has been let in pending a treaty for a purchase, or wherever no express agreement

v. Dwyer, 10 R. I. 355; Chapman v. Towner, 6 M. & W. 100. Compare 19 Alb. L. J. 46, article "Tenancies from year to year."

¹ Geiger v. Braun, 6 Daly (N. Y.), 506; People v. Darling, 47 N. Y. 666.

² 51 N. Y. 309. See Chase v. Second Ave. R. R. Co. 97 N. Y. 389; Conway v. Starkweather, 1 Denio (N. Y.), 113; Rowan v. Lytle, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 616; Allen v. Jaquish, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 628; Garner v. Hannah, 6 Duer (N. Y.), 262-270; Livingston v. Tanner, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 484; Wolfe v. Wolff, 69 Ala. 549.

has been made between the parties as to the terms of the occupancy; provided the entry was a lawful one, or with the privity and consent of the owner. All such tenancies, whether created by grant or contract, or arising by implication, are, so far at least as to entitle the tenant to half a year's notice to quit, constructively held to be tenancies from year to year.¹

Where, however, the lease is dependent upon the performance of conditions, or is to terminate upon the happening of a contingency, the event determines the tenancy without further notice.²

§ 382. Tenancy from year to year.—Notice to quit must ordinarily be given in cases of tenancies from year to year.³ The necessity of notice and the length of time to be allowed are matters regulated by statute in some States; in others the English rule prevails. In Hall v. Myers,⁴ the Maryland Court of Appeals held that, in order to terminate a tenancy from year to year, notice should be given six months prior to the expiration of the tenancy. Then, where the defendant had been allowed to occupy lands for several years, without any definite lease or specific contract as to the termination of the tenancy, he was considered to be a tenant from year to year, and entitled to notice to quit before the end of the year.⁵ Either party

¹ Den v. Drake, 14 N. J. L. 523, and cases cited. See Ellis v. Paige, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 72, note. Changed by statute, in New Jersey, to three months. See Rev. 1877, p. 575.

² See People v. Schackno, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 551; Allen v. Jaquish, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 628; Davis v. Murphy, 126 Mass. 143; Horner v. Leeds, 25 N. J. Law, 106.

³ Boudette v. Pierce, 50 Vt. 212; Ridgely v. Stillwell, 25 Mo. 570; Magaw v. Cannon, 3 Watts (Pa.), 139; Vincent v. Corbin, 85 N. C. 108; Den v. Drake, 14 N. J. Law, 523; Herrell v. Sizeland, 81 Ill. 457; Larkin v. Avery, 23 Conn. 304; Chapman v. Towner, 6 M. & W. 100; Right v. Darby, 1 T. R. 159; Doe v. Porter, 3 T. R. 13; Doe v. Browne, 8 East, 165; Den d. Snowhill v. Snowhill, 23 N. J. Law, 447; Doe d. Hollingsworth v. Stennett, 2 Esp. 717; People v. Paulding, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 91; Garrett v. Clark, 5 Ore. 464; Thurber v. Dwyer, 10 R. I. 355. An agreement to pay rent is regarded as an essential part of a tenancy from year to year. Jackson v. Bradt, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 169, per Kent, J.; Rich v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 87.

⁴ 43 Md. 446. See Doe d. Clarke v. Smaridge, 7 Q. B. 957; Thomas v. Wright, 9 S. & R. (Penn.) 87; Siedman v. McIntosh, 4 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 291; 19 Alb. L. J. 46, article "Tenancies from year to year."

⁵ Den d. Snowhill v. Snowhill, 23 N. J. L. 447; Jackson d. Livingston v. Bryan, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 322. See Hemphill v. Giles, 66 N. C. 512.

may, in England, determine a tenancy from year to year at the end of any current year, by giving notice to quit half a year before the end of the year,¹ and if the premises are taken "twelve months certain, and six months notice to quit afterwards," the tenancy may be determined by a six month's notice to quit, expiring at the end of the first year.² If the owner does any act from which the jury may infer that he intended to acknowledge the party in possession as his tenant, a tenancy from year to year is created, and can be terminated only by a regular notice to quit. Thus where the lessor has allowed the tenant to remain in possession for seventeen years after the expiration of the lease, notice to quit was considered necessary before a recovery could be had in ejectment.³ The same rule prevails where the tenant holds over by the permission of the landlord.⁴ And where a contract provided that the defendant was to occupy a house and put it in repair, and in consideration thereof should enjoy the property at a certain rent, until the repairs were reimbursed, this was held to create a tenancy from year to year, determinable only by a notice to quit.⁵

§ 383. Reasonable notice.—Tenancy from year to year.—In *Boudette v. Pierce*⁶ it appeared that the defendant obtained permission of the plaintiff, who owned the locus in quo, to build a hovel and stable a colt upon the premises, the plaintiff, by way of compensation, to have the manure. Subsequently defendant enlarged the hovel, and moved his family into it with the plaintiff's knowledge. The Court held that the defendant, by occupying the hovel as a dwelling, undoubtedly put an end to the contract, if the plaintiff had so elected, but that by acquiescence, and thereafter receiving the stipulated compensation, plaintiff confirmed the act. In April, plaintiff, without stating any

¹ Doe v. Clarke v. Smaridge, 7 Q. B. 957.

² Thompson v. Maberly, 2 Camp. 573.

³ Bedford v. McElherron, 2 S. & R. (Penn.) 49.

⁴ Doe v. Morse, 1 B. & Adol. 365; Doe v. Miller v. Noden, 2 Esp. 530. But see Williams v. Deriar, 31 Mo. 13.

⁵ Thomas v. Wright, 9 S. & R. (Penn.) 87.

⁶ 50 Vt. 212. See Hemphill v. Giles, 66 N. C. 512.

time, requested defendant to remove the building and vacate the premises; and on July 10 notified him to quit at once; and on July 14 brought ejectment. It was held upon this state of facts, that the occupancy had become a tenancy from year to year, and that the notice was not reasonable.

Where, however, a parol agreement provided for a lease for one month and for each successive month until the landlord should want the premises, whereupon the tenancy should expire, it was held by the New York Supreme Court that thirty days' notice was not necessary to terminate the tenancy.¹

§ 383a. From month to month.—Tenancies from month to month must be terminated by a notice to quit,² and the same has been held with regard to a weekly tenancy.³ The length of the notice is a matter of common statutory regulation. Generally monthly tenancies are determinable by a month's notice,⁴ and weekly tenancies by a week's notice.

§ 384. Tenant at will.—The rule of the common law was that a tenancy at will could be terminated by any act of the lessor inconsistent with the continuance of the estate, and that no formal notice to quit was essential.⁵ A demand of possession was the common method of indicating the landlord's election to terminate the relationship. The English rule was extensively followed in America,⁶ though cases may be found both in England⁷ and this country⁸ going to support the theory that such tenancies

¹ People v. Schackno, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 551.

² Geiger v. Braun, 6 Daly (N. Y.), 506; Steffens v. Earl, 40 N. J. L. 128; Methewson v. Thompson, 12 R. I. 288; Bonsall v. McKay, 1 Houst. (Del.) 520.

³ Doe d. Finlayson v. Bayley, 5 C. & P. 67.

⁴ See Eberlein v. Abel, 10 Bradw. (Ill.) 626; Hart v. Lindley, 50 Mich. 20. Compare Hollis v. Burns, 100 Pa. St. 206; Geiger v. Braun, 6 Daly (N. Y.), 506.

⁵ Doe d. Jones v. Jones, 10 B. & C. 718; Pollen v. Brewer, 7 C. B. [N. S.] 371; Turner v. Doe d. Bennett, 9 M. & W. 643; Doe d. Price v. Price, 9 Bing. 356; Disdale v. Iles, 2 Lev. 88; James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 383; Ball v. Cullimore, 2 C. M. & R. 120; Doe d. Davies v. Thomas, 6 Exch. 854.

⁶ Herrell v. Sizeland, 81 Ill. 457; Robie v. Smith, 21 Me. 114; Chamberlin v. Donahue, 45 Vt. 50; Esty v. Baker, 50 Me. 325; Clark v. Wheelock, 99 Mass. 14; Den d. Howell v. Howell, 7 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 496; Harrison v. Middleton, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 527.

⁷ Parker d. Walker v. Constable, 3 Wils. 25.

⁸ Silsby v. Allen, 43 Vt. 172; Clark v. Smith, 25 Pa. St. 137; Cody v. Quarter- are constructively tenancies from year to year, at least for the purpose of requiring the same notice to quit as tenancies of that kind. Modern legislation has tended rather to favor these interests, and, as a general result of the legislation and the rulings of the courts, notice to quit must in many States be given before instituting ejectment against a tenant at will.¹ This is to avoid a sudden, harsh, and unreasonable determination of the tenancy. The result is that we have no fixed rule of universal application regulating either the necessity for notice, or the length of time to be given as regards this relationship.

In a case which arose in Michigan, it was held that a woman who had obtained a divorce from her husband, and, with his consent, kept possession of lands to which he held the legal title, was at least a tenant at will, and entitled to notice to quit before she could be disturbed.² In an ejectment case before the New York Court of Appeals, it was decided that where a party entered upon land for an indefinite period by the permission of the owner, even without the reservation of any rent, he was, by implication of law, a tenant at will, and, under the statutes of that State, entitled to one month's notice to quit.³ In a case in the Supreme Court of Maine it appeared that the defendant, for several years prior to April 1, 1877, had been occupying a wharf at an annual rent, payable quarterly, and on April 1, 1877, the agreement was renewed for another year, on the same terms, under which the defendant occupied and paid rent up to January 1, 1878. The court decided that, under the statutes of that State, this agreement created a tenancy at will, which could be terminated only by thirty days' notice in writing, to be given by one party to the other, or by mutual consent.⁴ man, 12 Ga. 386; Larkin v. Avery, 23 Conn. 304; Squires v. Huff, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 17.

¹ Blum v. Robertson, 24 Cal. 127; King v. Connolly, 51 Cal. 181; Semmes v. United States, 14 Ct. of Claims, 493; Thomas v. Sanford S. S. Co., 71 Me. 548; Burns v. Bryant, 31 N. Y. 453; Davis v. Murphy, 126 Mass. 143.

² Wilson v. Merrill, 38 Mich. 707.

³ Larned v. Hudson, 60 N. Y. 102; Post v. Post, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 253; Burns v. Bryant, 31 N. Y. 453.

⁴ Thomas v. Sanford S. S. Co., 71 Me. 548. See Rollins v. Moody, 72 Me. 135.

Chief Justice Kent said, in the case of Phillips v. Covert,¹ decided in 1810, that though a tenancy at will might be considered to be a tenancy from year to year, for the purpose of notice to quit, yet the tenant had no right to such notice, after he had determined the will by an act of voluntary waste. The rule in England was that, without a previous demand of possession, a tenant at will could not be ousted in ejectment.² It was said by Kent, however, in 1804, in the case of Jackson v. Bradt,³ that if the defendant was strictly a tenant at will no notice to quit was necessary. Where it appeared that the defendants moved into the house of another, and resided with and took care of him, until he died, but never agreed to pay rent, and no definite term was agreed upon, they were held by the Supreme Court of Illinois, not to be tenants from year to year, or entitled to notice to quit, but mere tenants at will of the owner, and a demand of possession was considered sufficient to terminate the tenancy.⁴

§ 385. Tenant at sufferance.—In a case recently reported in Massachusetts, it was decided that the owner of land, who forcibly entered thereon and ejected, without unnecessary force, a tenant at sufferance who had received reasonable notice to quit, was not liable to an action for an assault.⁵ At common law a tenant at sufferance was not entitled to notice to quit,⁶ and where a tenant for years held over, he became a tenant at sufferance, and was not entitled to this notice, for he stood in no privity to his landlord, and had no estate which he could transfer. But there is a distinction in the case of tenants holding over, between one entering by act of the parties and one entering by act of the law. The former is a tenant at sufferance, the latter becomes merely an abator, intruder, or ¹ 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 4. See Jackson v. Wilsey, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 267; Jackson v. Miller, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 747; and especially Harris v. Frink, 49 N. Y. 24, 32, 33.

² Right v. Beard, 13 East, 210.

³ 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 169, 174. See Larned v. Hudson, 60 N. Y. 102.

⁴ Herrell v. Sizeland, 81 Ill. 457.

⁵ Low v. Elwell, 121 Mass. 309. Compare Wood v. Phillips, 43 N. Y. 152.

⁶ Reckhow v. Schanck, 43 N. Y. 448; Hauxhurst v. Lobree, 38 Cal. 563; Doe d. Roby v. Maisey, 8 B. & C. 767; Howard v. Carpenter, 22 Md. 10; Reed v. Reed, 48 Me. 388; McClung v. Echols, 5 W. Va. 204; Stedman v. Gassett, 18 Vt. 346.

trespasser.¹ In Michigan, however, a tenant at sufferance is entitled to notice to quit.² But a tenant who wrongfully holds over his term does not acquire any equities from a brief delay on the part of the landlord in proceeding against him, and is not entitled to this notice.³ To entitle him to notice, the holding over must be continued for such a length of time and under such circumstances as to authorize the implication of assent on the part of the landlord.⁴

§ 386. Possession under a void homestead claim.—A party who gets possession of a homestead by foreclosure of a void mortgage is not entitled to notice to quit as tenant at will, before being sued in ejectment, for the reason that the possession is not acquired by the consent of the person entitled to it.⁵

§ 387. Disclaimer by tenant.—Notice to quit is not necessary in cases where the tenant commits any act which amounts to a disavowal or disclaimer of the title of his lessor, or sets the landlord's title at defiance.⁶ The tenant by so doing becomes a trespasser; his possession is for some purposes adverse, and the landlord may bring ejectment with the same effect as though the possession had originally been acquired by wrong.⁷ And a disclaimer, made subsequent to the demise, may be considered in evidence to disprove the tenancy;⁸ and where the tenant conveys the land in fee simple, it is a disclaimer of the

¹ Livingston v. Tanner, 14 N. Y. 64; 4 Kent's Com. pp. 116, 117; Jackson d. Van Cortlandt v. Parkhurst, 5 Johns. (N. Y.), 128; Jackson v. McLeod, 12 Johns. (N. Y.), 182. See Co. Litt. 57 b; Moore v. Lawder, 1 Stark. 308.

² Kunzie v. Wixom, 39 Mich. 384.

³ Benfey v. Congdon, 40 Mich. 283.

⁴ Smith v. Littlefield, 51 N. Y. 539.

⁵ Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515.

⁶ Grubb v. Grubb, 10 B. & C. 816; Doe d. William v. Pasquali, Peake, 196; Van Winkle v. Hinckle, 21 Cal. 342; Doe d. Jefferies v. Whittick, Gow, 195; Doe d. Clun v. Clarke, Peake's Add. Cases, 239; Vincent v. Corbin, 85 N. C. 108; Kunzie v. Wixom, 39 Mich. 384; Eberwine v. Cook, 74 Ind. 377; Herrell v. Sizeland, 81 Ill. 457; Murphy v. Williamson, 85 Ill. 149; Russell v. Fabyan, 34 N. H. 218; Den d. Hankinson v. Blair, 15 N. J. Law, 181; Ingraham v. Baldwin, 9 N. Y. 45; Duke v. Harper, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 280.

⁷ Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 43-48. See Harrison v. Middleton, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 527.

⁸ Horsey v. Horsey, 4 Harr. (Del.) 517.

tenancy which dispenses with the necessity of notice to quit.¹ These cases follow the doctrine of Lord Mansfield in Doe v. Williams,² to the effect that where the tenant's possession is adverse from the very nature of things no notice to quit is necessary.

§ 388. Disclaimer a question of fact.—Attornment.—The question as to whether or not particular expressions constitute a disclaimer or repudiation of the tenancy, is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.³ But the mere payment of rent by a tenant to a third person does not amount to a disclaimer of the title of the landlord so as to operate as a forfeiture of the lease,⁴ nor will the refusal to pay rent to a devisee claiming under a contested will, accompanied by a declaration that the tenant was ready to pay rent to any person entitled to receive it, amount to a disavowal sufficient to dispense with the necessity of a regular notice,⁵ nor a mere naked claim to hold adversely to the landlord. Attornment to another, or some act of disclaimer, must appear in order to work a forfeiture.⁶

"I have no rent for you, because A. B. has ordered me to pay none," is evidence of a disclaimer of a tenancy;⁷ so it is a disclaimer where a tenant attorned to another, and answered the demand for rent by saying that his connection as tenant with the plaintiff had ceased.⁸

§ 389. Defense of adverse possession forfeits right to notice.—If the tenant, after entering under the lessor, sets up a defense of adverse possession against him, in an action for the recovery of the land, and hostile to the title under which he entered, he cannot claim to be a tenant at will and entitled to notice to quit. Such a defense is inconsistent with the existence of a tenancy at will.⁹ The rule has

¹ Trustees of Wadsworthville School v. Meetze, 4 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 50.

² Cowp. 621.

³ Doe d. Bennett v. Long, 9 C. & P. 773.

⁴ Doe d. Dillon v. Parker, Gow, 180.

⁵ Doe d. Williams v. Pasquali, Peake, 196, per Lord Kenyon. See Den d. Snowhill v. Snowhill, 23 N. J. L. 447. But see Phillips v. Rollings, 4 C. B. 188; Doe v. Frowd, 4 Bing. 557.

⁶ Montgomery v. Craig, 3 Dana (Ky.), 102; Steinhauser v. Kuhn, 50 Mich. 367.

⁷ Doe d. Whitehead v. Pittman, 2 N. & M. 673.

⁸ Grubb v. Grubb, 10 B. & C. 816.

⁹ Williams v. Cash, 27 Ga. 507. See Kunzie v. Wixom, 39 Mich. 384.

been stated by the Supreme Court of Illinois to be that a tenant's right to notice to quit may be superseded, and the tenancy terminated by the denial by the tenant, by word or act, of the title of the landlord.¹ This is, perhaps, too broad and general a statement, for, as we have already shown, a parol disclaimer of the landlord's title does not work a forfeiture of the lease.²

§ 390. When refusal to deliver possession not a disclaimer.—A refusal to deliver possession, or a declaration that the party will continue to hold the property at a time when the landlord had no right to claim or demand the possession, does not constitute a disclaimer.³ There must be a direct repudiation of the relation of landlord and tenant, or a claim to hold possession which by necessary implication is a repudiation of it.⁴ Where a lease for a specified time contained an express covenant that the tenant would "deliver up possession at the expiration of the term, without further notice," and with a reservation of the right of the landlord to "enter and repossess the premises at the end of the period, or at any time thereafter," it was held that the landlord could maintain ejectment after the expiration of the term without previous notice to quit, and that a new lease from year to year, with right to three months' notice to quit, could not be implied from the neglect of the landlord to dispossess the tenant.⁵

§ 391. Tenants in common.—Demand of possession.—We have already seen that in ejectment between tenants in common, proof of actual ouster and denial of the plaintiff's rights is essential to support the action. It is generally safer, and often necessary, as already shown in discussing this special subject, for the plaintiff to make demand of his companion to be let into possession, before bringing ejectment, where this relationship exists between the

¹ Wood v. Morton, 11 Ill. 547.

² See § 369.

³ Doe d. Gray v. Stanion, 1 M. & W. 695-703.

⁴ Bates v. Austin, 2 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 270; Tuttle v. Reynolds, 1 Vt. 80; Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 43; Tillotson v. Doe d. Kennedy, 5 Ala. 407; Brown v. Keller, 32 Ill. 151; Bolton v. Landers, 27 Cal. 104.

⁵ McCanna v. Johnston, 19 Penn. St. 434.

parties ;¹ for a specific demand by the plaintiff to be let into possession, followed by a specific refusal on the part of the defendant to comply with the demand, constitutes the highest and best evidence of an ouster ; but the demand is not necessary where the defendant relies on adverse title,² or sets it up by answer.³

§ 392. Tenant of tenants in common.—Where the defendant in ejectment had been put in possession or allowed to occupy a portion of the premises by one of several tenants in common, it was held, in California, that he could not be sued as a trespasser by another tenant in common, without notice to quit or other act showing a termination of the license or tenancy. Being in possession by lawful right, he could not be turned into a trespasser and held liable for costs and damages, so long as his relations to the owners remained unchanged.⁴

§ 393. Landlord defending in tenant's place.—One who comes in to defend as landlord, in place of the tenant, cannot object that no notice to quit has been given to the original defendant.⁵ The application of the landlord to defend in place of the tenant presupposes that the defendant is the applicant's tenant ; so that although the defendant entered at first as the tenant of the plaintiff, he must have subsequently attorned to the applicant, and thereby disclaimed or disavowed the tenancy to plaintiff, and thus put himself in the wrong, which dispensed with the necessity of notice.

§ 394. Vendor and vendee.—Under an executory contract to purchase land, the possession of the vendee is originally rightful, and until the party in possession has made default, or is called upon to restore the possession, he cannot be ejected without a demand of possession or notice

¹ See Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492 ; Greer v. Tripp, 56 Cal. 209. See, also, § 283.

² Harrison v. Taylor, 33 Mo. 211.

³ Greer v. Tripp, 56 Cal. 209. See § 290.

⁴ Ord v. Chester, 18 Cal. 77.

⁵ Foust v. Trice, 8 Jones (N. C.) Law, 490 ; Whissenhunt v. Jones, 78 N. C. 361. See Doe d. Davies v. Creed, 5 Bing. 327.

to quit.¹ An executory contract of purchase and sale of land, which gives the vendee the right to occupy until default in the payment of the purchase money, is a license, and not a lease. The license operates as an excuse for the vendee's possession, and he cannot be treated as a wrongdoer until after default.²

The vendee, however, may forfeit his right of possession; and if he fails to comply with the terms of sale his after possession is tortious, and there is an immediate right of action against him.³ And if the vendor, after default, finds the premises vacant, and peaceably enters, this is not an intrusion.⁴ It would be an idle ceremony to demand possession when the vendee refused to respond to a previous demand for the money due on the contract of purchase. The refusal, unaccompanied by any promise to pay the money at a future day, is equivalent to a direct notice to the vendor that the vendee declines to execute the contract,⁵ and he has no right to notice that the vendor intends to assert his rights.⁶ The same exemption as to demand or notice applies in case of the non-performance by the vendee of any of the conditions or covenants contained in the contract of sale.⁷ This doctrine constitutes an exception to the general rule that demand of possession, or notice to quit, is necessary in cases of occupancy by the consent of the owner for no definite term.⁸

¹ Right v. Beard, 13 East, 210; Moak v. Bryant, 51 Miss. 560; Pierce v. Tuttle, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 155; Carson v. Baker, 4 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 220; Prentice v. Wilson, 14 Ill. 91. See Costigan v. Wood, 5 Cr. C. C. 507.

² Dolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 74; Pierce v. Tuttle, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 155. See Chap. X.

³ Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 274; Baker v. Gittings, 16 Ohio, 489; Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 290; Prentice v. Wilson, 14 Ill. 91; Hotaling v. Hotaling, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 163; Wright v. Moore, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 230; Candee v. Haywood, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 349; Jackson v. Moncrief, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 26; Dean v. Comstock, 32 Ill. 173; Moak v. Bryant, 51 Miss. 560; Pierce v. Tuttle, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 155; McClanahan v. Barrow, 27 Miss. 664. But see Stackhouse v. Reynolds, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 570; Twyman v. Hawley, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 512.

⁴ McHan v. Stansell, 39 Ga. 197.

⁵ Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 274.

⁶ McHan v. Stansell, 39 Ga. 197.

⁷ Pierce v. Tuttle, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 155.

⁸ McClane v. White, 5 Minn. 178.

A different rule prevails in England.¹ It is that the vendor, having put the vendee in possession, cannot, without proof of a demand of possession and a refusal by the vendee, or some wrongful act to determine the possession, treat the latter as a wrong-doer or trespasser, as he must assume him to be in instituting an action of ejectment. This has been followed in Virginia,² the reason assigned being that the vendor would rarely be subjected to any inconvenience by making the demand, while it is an act of simple justice to the vendee, who having failed to pay the money, may desire to surrender the premises without incurring the costs of an action, or whose default may have been the result of inadvertence or misapprehension, and the demand would enable him to comply with the contract.

§ 395. Obligee in bond for titles.—If the obligee in a bond for titles fails to pay the purchase money within the time specified, no demand of possession or notice to quit is necessary to enable the obligor to maintain ejectment.³ Of course these formalities are unnecessary where the defendant's contract is with a stranger, between whom and the plaintiff no connection is shown in respect to the title.⁴ In the case of Ross v. Van Aulen,⁵ recently decided in the Supreme Court of New Jersey, it was held that where the defendant was let into possession under a contract to purchase, which he failed to carry out, he was not to be regarded as a tenant to the vendor in such a sense as to entitle him to three months' notice to quit, but that he might be ejected after a demand of possession, unless the contract contained some provision to the contrary.

§ 396. Vendee in possession under void contract.—Where the defendant was in possession under a parol contract to purchase the lands, which was void by the statute of

¹ Right v. Beard, 13 East, 210; Newby v. Jackson, 1 B. & C. 448.

² Twyman v. Hawley, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 512; Williamson v. Paxton, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 475-505.

³ Day v. Solomon, 40 Ga. 32; McHan v. Stansell, 39 Ga. 197.

⁴ Petty v. Graham, 13 Ala. 568.

⁵ 42 N. J. L. 49. See Den v. Westbrook, 15 N. J. L. 371; Van Valkenburgh v. Den d. Rahway Bank, 23 N. J. L. 583; Freeman v. Headley, 33 N. J. L. 523.

frauds, and refused to pay the purchase money, or to deliver up possession, it was held that he was in no sense a tenant so as to entitle him to demand notice to quit.¹ In *McClung v. Echols*² it appeared that the defendant had acquired the possession under a contract to purchase, but subsequently procured a decree declaring the contract null and void, as being founded on a promise to pay confederate treasury notes. It was held that his subsequent possession was wrongful, and that he was not entitled to notice to quit prior to the institution of an action of ejectment.

§ 397. Mortgagee against mortgagor.—It has been said that notice to quit must be given before ejectment is brought by a mortgagee against a mortgagor, for the latter occupies with the mortgagee's consent, and with the perfect understanding that the mortgagor may use the premises as his own. His interest is much greater than that of the mortgagee, and in practice no tenant at will, for years, or even for life, exercises such unlimited dominion over the land as the mortgagor. No person, it is argued, who holds by another's consent for an indefinite period, ought ever to be evicted by ejectment at the suit of such party without a previous notice to quit. This should especially be required in all cases of mortgages, because the mortgagor may not only surrender the possession of the land, but may protect himself against an action by payment of the money due.³ But the general rule, in such States as permit a mortgagee to invoke the remedy of ejectment, is that he may recover the possession of the lands from the mortgagor, after he has defaulted or the day of payment has passed, without notice to quit, the mortgagor being considered as a tenant at sufferance only.⁴

¹ Chilton v. Niblett, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 404. See Den v. Webster, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 513.

² 5 W. Va. 204.

³ Jackson v. Laughhead, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 75.

⁴ Wilson v. Hooper, 13 Vt. 653; Stedman v. Gassett, 18 Vt. 346; Fuller v. Wadsworth, 2 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 263; Jackson v. Warren, 32 Ill. 331; Thunder v. Belcher, 3 East, 449; Doe d. Garrod v. Olley, 12 Ad. & El. 481; Doe d. Roby v. Maisey, 8 B. & C. 767; Rockwell v. Bradley, 2 Conn. 1; Carroll v. Balance, 26 Ill. 9, and cases cited. But see Keech v. Hall, Doug. 21. See, also, § 333.

The same rule applies in ejectment against the assignee of the mortgagor.¹

A purchaser of public lands who has made default in the payment of the purchase money, and has failed to redeem after a resale, may be evicted by the second purchaser without notice to quit.²

§ 398. Infant plaintiff.—Where an infant becomes entitled to the reversion of an estate, leased from year to year, he cannot maintain ejectment against the tenant without giving the same notice to quit that would have been required had the original lessor been the plaintiff; and he cannot avoid a lease which is for his own benefit.³

§ 399. Personal representatives.—Tenants for life.—If a tenant from year to year dies, his personal representatives are entitled to notice to quit,⁴ unless by the terms of the letting the interest ceases with the life of the tenant and is not to vest in the personal representatives, in which case no notice is necessary.⁵ It seems that in England the lessee of a tenant for life was entitled to regular notice from the remainderman;⁶ at least such a notice was given in the case cited, and its form and regularity were a subject of controversy. A tenant for the life of another, holding over, is not entitled to notice in New York.⁷

§ 400. Notice by tenant to landlord.—As the relation of landlord and tenant is mutual, the rules for the regulation of notices to quit, when given by tenants, are of course similar, mutatis mutandis, to those by which notices from landlords are governed. They must be the same in form and substance, expire at the like periods of the year, be dependent upon like rules as to the time and mode of

¹ Lyman v. Mower, 6 Vt. 345; Wilson v. Hooper, 13 Vt. 653. See Walcop v. McKinney, 10 Mo. 229; Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165.

² Candee v. Haywood, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 349; aff'd, 37 N. Y. 653.

³ Maddon v. White, 2 T. R. 159. See Doe v. Miller v. Noden, 2 Esp. 530. See, also, §§ 196, 198, 451.

⁴ Gulliver v. Burr, 1 W. Bl. 596; Doe v. Porter, 3 T. R. 13; Parker v. Constable, 3 Wils. 25.

⁵ Doe v. Smith, 6 East, 530.

⁶ Jordan v. Ward, 1 H. Bl. 97.

⁷ Livingston v. Tanner, 14 N. Y. 65; Torrey v. Torrey, 14 N. Y. 430; Seaton v. Davis, 1 T. & C. (N. Y.) 91.

service, and subject to waiver by similar acts.¹ To free himself from liability the tenant is frequently bound to give notice to his landlord of the termination of the tenancy.²

§ 401. Form of the notice. — “Care should be taken,” says Mr. Adams,³ “that the words of the notice are clear and decisive, without ambiguity, or giving an alternative to the tenant; for, although the courts will reluctantly listen to objections of this nature, yet, if the notice be really ambiguous, or optional, it will be sufficient to render it ineffectual, as far at least as the action of ejectment is concerned.” But a notice directing the tenant to quit, “or I shall insist on double rent,” was held, by Lord Mansfield sufficient to support ejectment, the additional words only proving the landlord’s anxiety to get into possession, and being an emphatic way of showing to the tenant that he is in earnest, by informing him of the consequences if he holds over. His lordship said that had the notice contained the words, “or else that you agree to pay double rent,” the ejectment could not have been supported.⁴ A notice to quit will be held good if, upon the whole, it is intelligible, and so certain that the tenant cannot reasonably misunderstand it. An obvious mistake, in some part, will not invalidate it if it is otherwise so explicit that the party receiving it cannot be misled.⁵ A misdescription of the premises, or a misstatement of dates which cannot mislead, will not vitiate the notice; nor need it be directed to the person. Even if directed by a wrong name, yet if the tenant keeps it without objection, the error is waived.⁶ The notice is sufficient if it fairly shows the tenant what

¹ Adams on Eject. (4th Am. ed. 1854) 182, [*156]. See Boynton v. Bodwell, 113 Mass. 531.

² See Currier v. Perley, 24 N. H. 219; Hall v. Wadsworth, 28 Vt. 410; Whitney v. Gordon, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 266.

³ Adams on Eject. (4th Am. ed. 1854) 164, [*133].

⁴ Doe d. Matthews v. Jackson, Doug. 175. See, further, Doe d. Lyster v. Goldwin, 2 Q. B. 142; Doe d. Matthewson v. Wrightman, 4 Esp. 5; Doe v. Archer, 14 East, 245.

⁵ Cook v. Creswell, 44 Md. 581.

⁶ Doe d. Cox v. Roe, 4 Esp. 185; Doe d. Matthewson v. Wrightman, 4 Esp. 5; Doe v. Spiller, 6 Esp. 70; Doe d. Bedford v. Kightley, 7 T. R. 63.

premises are demanded ;¹ and it should require him to quit all the demised premises, and not a part only.²

§ 402. What notices held good.—A notice describing the lands as lying in an adjoining parish has been held sufficient.³ In Massachusetts a tenancy at will may be terminated by either party by a thirty days' notice to quit.⁴ A notice served by a tenant was held to be defective and informal in that it did not state the time when he would vacate and deliver up the premises;⁵ but it was decided that the landlord might waive the informality, and evidence tending to show that after service of the notice the landlord endeavored to induce the tenant to remain, and offered to reduce the rents and make improvements, and that upon the tenant's departure he received the keys, and at no time objected to the sufficiency of the notice, was held sufficient to warrant a jury in finding a waiver.

§ 403. Mistakes in notice.—In *Clark v. Keliher*⁶ the notice was addressed to John Clark, his true name being Thomas B. Clark. The court held that the notice was sufficient and lawful, both in substance and in mode of service. There was no uncertainty as to the party for whom it was intended, or the tenement to which it applied, and there could have been no doubt but that it was meant for the family who occupied that tenement. The mistake in the christian name of the tenant was, therefore, of no importance. And where a tenant died and a notice to quit was served upon his widow, and there was no proof of the existence of personal representatives, the notice was held sufficient.⁷

§ 404. Parol notice.—Where a demise is by parol, notice to quit need not be in writing.⁸ And it is not necessary to

¹ Whipple v. Shewalter, 91 Ind. 114.

² Right v. Fisher v. Cuthell, 5 East, 498; Doe v. Archer, 14 East, 245.

³ Armstrong v. Wilkinson, 12 Ad. & El. 743; s. c. 40 Eng. C. L. 368.

⁴ Genl. Stat. Mass. 1860, c. 90, § 31.

⁵ Boynton v. Bodwell, 113 Mass. 531; Currier v. Barker, 2 Gray (Mass.), 224.

⁶ 107 Mass. 406; Doe v. Spiller, 6 Esp. 70.

⁷ Rees v. Perrot, 4 C. & P. 230.

⁸ Doe v. Macartney v. Crick, 5 Esp. 196; Bird v. Defonvielle, 2 C. & K. 415; Roe v. Pierce, 2 Camp. 96; Timmins v. Rowlinson, 3 Burr. 1603.

state to whom the possession is to be delivered up.¹ Though a parol notice to quit may suffice, the general practice of serving a written notice is much safer, the latter kind of notice being more easily susceptible of proof and less open to dispute.

§ 405. By whom notice should be given.—The notice to quit must be given either by the landlord or his authorized agent,² or by any person legally entitled to the reversion, as assignee, devisee, heir, executor, or receiver with power to let. If it be doubtful in whom the legal estate is vested, all should join in the notice.³ A notice to quit given by an agent should purport to be given in the name of and on behalf of the principal,⁴ and must be such that the tenant may safely act on it at the time of receiving it; hence, a notice by an unauthorized agent cannot be made good by an adoption or ratification of it by the principal after the proper time for giving notice has elapsed.⁵ Bringing an action of ejectment is not a sufficient recognition of such authority to entitle the plaintiff to recover, because the recognition should at all events be before the day of the demise laid in the declaration.⁶ And a notice to quit given by an agent of an agent, is not sufficient without evidence of recognition by the plaintiff;⁷ but an agent to receive rent has power to determine a tenancy.⁸

§ 406. Receiver in chancery.—A receiver in chancery, with power to let, is considered as the agent of the landlord sufficiently authorized to give a valid notice to quit,⁹ though a mere receiver of rents, as such, has no authority to determine a tenancy.¹⁰

¹ Doe d. Bailey v. Foster, 3 C. B. 215.

² Reeder v. Sayre, 70 N. Y. 180-188; Doe v. Browne, 8 East, 165.

³ Reeder v. Sayre, 70 N. Y. 180-188. See Doe d. Whayman v. Chaplin, 3 Taunt. 120; Doe d. Green v. Baker, 8 Taunt. 241.

⁴ Cole on Ejectment, p. 44.

⁵ Doe d. Lyster v. Goldwin, 2 Q. B. 143; Adams on Eject. (4th Am. ed. 1854), [*127] 158.

⁶ Doe v. Walters, 10 B. & C. 626. See Right v. Cuthell, 5 East, 491.

⁷ Doe d. Rhodes v. Robinson, 3 Bing. N. C. 677.

⁸ Doe d. Manvers v. Mizem, 2 Moo. & R. 56.

⁹ Wilkinson v. Colley, 5 Burr. 2694; Doe d. Marsack v. Read, 14 East, 57-61.

¹⁰ Doe v. Walters, 10 B. & C. 633.

§ 407. Agent of a corporation.—The authority of the agent of a corporation to give notice to quit to its tenants need not be under seal;¹ and it has been held that a notice given by a person acting as steward of a corporation is sufficient without evidence that he had authority under seal from the corporation for such purposes.²

§ 408. By joint tenants.—Notice to quit by one of several joint tenants who have demised jointly from year to year, has been held to be good for his share only, and he was allowed to recover on his separate demise;³ but the contrary, and what seems to us the better doctrine, was held in the King's Bench,⁴ and a notice signed by one of several joint tenants, on behalf of his companions, was adjudged sufficient. A notice signed by three of four trustees, who were joint landlords of a house under a deed of trust, was held to put an end to the relation of landlord and tenant between all the parties.⁵

§ 409. By tenants in common.—A notice which required the defendant to quit the entire estate, has been held fatally defective where it appeared that the plaintiff's title was an undivided interest, and the defendant was in possession as a lessee of the other tenant in common. The defendant could not comply with the notice without giving up his legal right to the enjoyment of an undivided portion of the estate which did not belong to the plaintiff. The notice was, therefore, one which the plaintiff had no legal right to give, and which the defendant was not bound to regard. It was not even effectual to terminate the right of the defendant to occupy the estate as lessee or tenant of the plaintiff.⁶

§ 410. Who cannot give notice.—A vendee who has entered into a contract with the landlord for a purchase of

¹ Wolf v. Goddard, 9 Watts (Penn.), 544.

² Roe v. Pierce, 2 Camp. 96.

³ Doe d. Whayman v. Chaplin, 3 Taunt. 120. See Goodtitle v. Woodward, 3 B. & Ald. 689.

⁴ Doe v. Summersett, 1 B. & Adol. 135, 137. See Doe v. Hughes, 7 M. & W. 139.

⁵ Alford v. Vickery, Car. & M. 280.

⁶ King v. Dickerman, 11 Gray (Mass.), 480. See § 300.

the premises, but who has not obtained the legal title, cannot give a valid notice to quit;¹ and notice to quit is not necessary where the person holding the possession is a mere bailiff or servant to the owner.²

§ 411. Waiver of right to notice.—The objection that notice to quit was necessary comes too late if made for the first time in the appellate court; it should be urged upon the trial at nisi prius.³ Acceptance of subsequently accruing rent is a waiver of the notice to quit.⁴ Where ejectment is brought against a tenant by a landlord, relying upon a disclaimer, any subsequent act of the landlord acknowledging the party as his tenant, such as distraining for rent, is a waiver of the disclaimer.⁵ Serving a second notice has been construed to be a waiver of the first.⁶ The right to demand and notice may, of course, be waived by express stipulation in the lease.⁷ And the tenant may, by agreement, waive the notice;⁸ and where the service of the notice has been admitted in the pleadings, it need not be proved on the trial.⁹

§ 412. Service of notice.—It has been held in Walker v. Sharpe,¹⁰ upon an examination of the English cases, to be well settled in England that delivery of a notice on the premises to the wife or agent of the tenant, or any other person occupying the same jointly with or under him, is a sufficient service. Notice to a tenant corporation should be addressed to it by name, and served upon its officers;¹¹ and where a tenant dies, the notice may be served on the

¹ Reeder v. Sayre, 70 N. Y. 180.

² Jackson v. Sample, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 231. See § 242.

³ Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 40.

⁴ Prindle v. Anderson, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 391; s. c. 23 Ib. 616; Goodright v. Cordwent, 6 T. R. 219. See Collins v. Hasbrouck, 56 N. Y. 157.

⁵ Doe d. David v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 322.

⁶ See Doe v. Palmer, 16 East, 53-56.

⁷ McCanna v. Johnston, 19 Penn. St. 434; Hosford v. Ballard, 39 N. Y. 147; Byrane v. Rogers, 8 Minn. 281; Eichart v. Bargas, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 464; Doe d. Harris v. Masters, 2 B. & C. 490. See Moody v. Seaman, 46 Mich. 74.

⁸ Banks v. Carter, 7 Daly (N. Y.), 417.

⁹ Chandler v. Kent, 8 Minn. 536.

¹⁰ 103 Mass. 154. See Cook v. Creswell, 44 Md. 581.

¹¹ Doe v. Woodman, 8 East, 228.

administrator who pays the rent.¹ Where there are two tenants of premises held in common, notice to one is sufficient;² and where the defendant and his wife are absent from the commonwealth, service on the tenant's partner, at his place of business, is valid.³

413. How served.—It has been held in New York, that the notice in writing given under the statute,⁴ to terminate a tenancy at will or by sufferance, cannot be served by leaving it at the tenant's place of business (not being his residence) while he is absent therefrom, and that a tenancy from month to month, which, by special agreement can be terminated on a notice of thirty days, is in the nature of a tenancy at will, and the notice must be given in the manner prescribed by the statute.⁵ Where the tenant of an estate holden by the year, had a dwelling house at another place, a delivery of the notice to quit to his servant, at the dwelling house, is strong presumptive evidence that the master received the notice.⁶

§ 414. How proved.—A copy of a notice to quit is competent evidence,⁷ and may be proved by the person who served it, and in case of neglect to take a copy, or preserve a counterpart, the contents of the notice may be proved by a witness without notice to produce the original.⁸ And where the tenant, being personally served with a notice to quit on a specified day, made no objection to the time, this was held to afford prima facie proof that the tenancy ended at the date specified in the notice.⁹

¹ Prior v. Ongley, 10 C. B. 25.

² Doe d. Macartney v. Crick, 5 Esp. 196.

³ Walker v. Sharpe, 103 Mass. 154.

⁴ R. S. Part II, ch. 1, t. 4, §§ 7, 8.

⁵ Banks v. Carter, 7 Daly (N. Y.), 417. Compare Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 509, and cases cited.

⁶ Jones d. Griffiths v. Marsh, 4 T. R. 464.

⁷ Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 S. & R. (Penn.) 153.

⁸ See 1 Greenleaf's Ev. § 561; Jory v. Orchard, 2 B. & P. 39-41; Doe v. Somerton, 7 Q. B. 58; Doe v. Durnford, 2 M. & S. 62; Doe v. Turford, 3 B. & Adol. 890; Falkner v. Beers, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 117.

⁹ Doe v. Biggs, 2 Taunt. 109; Doe v. Forster, 13 East, 405.

CHAPTER XIV.

ATTORNEY'S AUTHORITY TO PROCEED.

- | | |
|--|--|
| § 415. Attorney not generally required to produce authority. | § 419. Authority by one or more of several co-tenants. |
| 416. Rule more strict in action to recover land. | 420. Outstanding title. |
| 417. Proof of authority after issue joined. | 421. Hamilton v. Wright . |
| 418. Authority of general agent to bring ejectment. | 421a. Champertous agreements. |

§ 415. Attorney not generally required to produce authority.
—That an appearance of an attorney at law for a party in an action may be recognized by the adverse party as authentic and valid if no collusion is shown, is a rule of practice almost universal in the administration of justice.¹ And while the courts clearly possess the power,² in the exercise of a sound discretion,³ to compel an attorney to exhibit or prove his authority to represent litigants, yet, in the absence of circumstances indicative of fraud, the court will not ordinarily exercise this prerogative, as against a reputable and responsible attorney, in the preliminary stages of the action.⁴ The presumption will ordinarily be indulged that the attorney, who is an officer of the court, has full authority to prosecute.⁵

Where a judgment has been rendered upon an appearance by an attorney, and rights have accrued under it,

¹ Hamilton v. Wright, 37 N. Y. 502; s. c. 5 T. R. App. (N. Y.) 1. See Hallett v. Hastie, 35 Ala. 164.

² Ninety-nine Plaintiffs v. Vanderbilt, 4 Duer (N. Y.), 632; s. c. 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 193; Allen v. Green, 1 Bailey (S. C.) Law, 448. See Allen v. Bone, 4 Beav. 493.

³ Commissioners of Excise, &c. v. Purdy, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 506; s. c. 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 266; s. c. 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 434; M'Alexander v. Wright, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 189; Ex parte Gillespie, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 325.

⁴ Republic of Mexico v. Arrangois, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 437; s. c. 5 Duer (N. Y.), 643; Denton v. Noyes, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 296, per Chief Justice Kent; Jackson v. Stewart, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 34; Anon. 1 Salk. 86-88; Anon. 6 Mod. 16; Cartwell v. Menifee, 2 Ark. 356; Hamilton v. Wright, 37 N. Y. 502; American Ins. Co. v. Oakley, 9 Paige (N. Y.), 496; Stewart v. Stewart, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 258.

⁵ Esley v. People, 23 Kan. 510; Rogers v. Park, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 480.

the burden of establishing want of jurisdiction is upon the party questioning it, and the absence of authority should be established in a most satisfactory manner.¹ There is said to be, however, no distinction between a forged notice of appearance and a notice given by an attorney without authority, and jurisdiction is not acquired in either case.²

§ 416. Rule more strict in action to recover land.—When the title or right of possession of land is in dispute, a stricter rule has been applied³ than governs in personal actions, so cherished are the rights of the actual occupant of land in the eye of the law. In New York, for instance, it is provided by statute that the defendant in an action to recover real property, or the possession of it, may, at any time before answer, demand and, in a proper case, obtain, an order requiring the plaintiff's attorney to produce written evidence of his authority from the plaintiff or his agent to commence the action, or written recognition of his authority to do so.⁴ The court, upon such an application being made to it, has no discretion, but is compelled to grant the order, with a stay of proceedings in the action, until the authority called for has been produced.⁵ The practice requiring the attorney to produce his authority to prosecute actions in the nature of ejectment prevails in several States.

§ 417. Proof of authority after issue joined.—It was held while the system of real actions prevailed in Virginia, that where a writ of right was sued out, and the issue regularly joined upon the mere right, and the tenant subsequently produced affidavits tending to show that the demandant died before the institution of the suit (the tenant having been ignorant of this fact until after the issue was joined), all proceedings should be stayed until the person who instituted the suit for his own benefit proved that the

¹ Ferguson v. Crawford, 86 N. Y. 609.

² Burton v. Sherman, 20 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 419.

³ See Stewart v. Stewart, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 258.

⁴ N. Y. Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 1513, 1514. See Harris v. Mason, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 568; Turner v. Davis, 2 Denio (N. Y.) 187.

⁵ McDermott v. Davison, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 194; Howard v. Howard, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 80. See Carpenter v. Allen, 13 J. & S. (N. Y.) 322.

demandant was living when the writ issued.¹ In ejectment in Pennsylvania the rule was recognized that a defendant could require the plaintiff's attorney to file his warrant of attorney, in order that the defendant might learn by whose authority the suit had been instituted; but it was decided that the application came too late if not made until after pleading and putting the cause at issue.² It may be here observed that the rule permitting the defendant to demand proof that the prosecuting attorney was authorized by the plaintiff to bring the action, does not allow the defendant to compel the attorney for the plaintiff to testify as to whether or not, in bringing the ejectment for plaintiff in his capacity as administrator, he was employed to maintain plaintiff's individual claim to the land. Such evidence is privileged under the rule governing confidential communications between attorney and client.³

§ 418. Authority of general agent to bring ejectment.—In New York the general agent of a principal absent from the State, having power to manage the property and business of his principal, and to take and hold possession of and manage the locus in quo, is not authorized to employ an attorney to bring ejectment.⁴

§ 419. Authority by one or more of several co-tenants.—An instrument executed by one of two joint or common owners of land, in the name of himself and his co-tenant, with the verbal consent of the latter who is absent, requesting the attorney to continue the ejectment, is sufficient.⁵ So a power of attorney from four out of five of the owners of the land, authorizing the commencement of the ejectment, the fifth owner, a married woman, having signed the power without procuring her husband to join, has been held sufficient in Illinois.⁶ In an action of ejectment which arose

¹ Howard v. Rawson, 2 Leigh (Va.), 733. See Gynn v. Kirby, 1 Stra. 402.

² Campbell v. Galbreath, 5 Watts (Penn.), 423; Mercier v. Mercier, 2 Dall. 142.

³ Stephens v. Mattox, 37 Ga. 289.

⁴ See Howard v. Howard, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 80.

⁵ Howard v. Howard, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 80. But see N. Y. Code of Civil Procedure, § 1514.

⁶ Lockwood v. Mills, 39 Ill. 602.

in Tennessee, in which the name of R. was used as a lessor without his authority by co-plaintiffs claiming a joint interest in the land, on proof by defendants that R. was dead at the time the action was commenced, and that his name was used without authority, the court refused to dismiss the action, but struck out his name and allowed the survivors to continue the cause.¹

§ 420. Outstanding title.—To authorize a claimant of the title in ejectment to use the name of a third party, some connection must be shown between his title and that of the person in whose name he sues; and it must appear that the paramount outstanding title is not invoked to rob or molest others, but for the protection of the claimant himself. Though the claimant's attorney may have no authority to use the name of a party as lessor of the plaintiff in ejectment, yet the court will not for that reason dismiss the action, unless it also clearly appear that the claimant himself is without such authority.² And where it is apparent to the court that such use is important for the vindication of the rights of the claimant the name of a party may be used as lessor by the plaintiff, or the action may be brought in his name, not only without his consent but against his will, provided the party so using it furnishes sufficient indemnity against loss or damages.³

§ 421. Hamilton v. Wright.—In a case in the New York Court of Appeals it appeared that the plaintiffs Hamilton and Livingston had, while the defendant was in possession holding adversely, conveyed the premises in dispute to the plaintiff Gleason. Gleason was compelled to institute an ejectment in the name of his grantors,⁴ which he did without their knowledge or consent. Defendant prevailed in the action and obtained a judgment for costs against all the plaintiffs. The court held that the grantors were bound by the attorney's appearance, and were liable

¹ Greer v. Smith, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 487.

² Shanks v. White, 36 Ga. 432; Kinsey v. Sensbough, 17 Ga. 540; Adams v. McDonald, 29 Ga. 571. See § 190.

³ Shanks v. White, 36 Ga. 432; Fain v. Garthright, 5 Ga. 6.

⁴ See § 190. See Smith v. Long, 12 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 113.

to defendant for the costs, notwithstanding the ejectment was prosecuted without their knowledge or sanction, and at the sole instance and for the exclusive benefit of the grantee; furthermore, that the defendant was not guilty of laches in failing to avail himself of the statutory right of demanding evidence of the attorney's authority to institute the action.¹ The grantors by delivering a deed of the land might be fairly presumed to consent that the grantee should avail himself of every legal means by which he could obtain possession of it. It has been said that a deed of lands held adversely operates as a power of attorney authorizing the grantee to employ the grantor's name as plaintiff in ejectment.²

§ 421a. Champertous agreements.—We may note in this general connection that an agreement to the effect that an attorney is to receive one half or a portion of the lands in litigation as compensation for his services is champertous,³ especially if the attorney is to pay the expenses.⁴ A contract to pay an attorney for his services in actions concerning land a fixed sum out of the proceeds when sold by the client is, on the other hand, not regarded as champertous, because he neither pays the costs nor takes any part of the land for his compensation.⁵ The champertous agreement is, however, no defense to the action to which it relates, and can only be set up between the client and attorney.⁶

¹ Hamilton v. Wright, 37 N. Y. 502; s. c. 5 Tr. App. (N. Y.) 1; Couch v. Turner, 17 Ga. 489. As to the effect of an attorney's appearance, see, further, Denton v. Noyes, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 296; Taylor v. Trask, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 249; Gaillard v. Smart, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 385; Meacham v. Dudley, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 514; Anon. 1 Keble, 89; Anon. 1 Salk. 86-88; McCullough v. Guetner, 1 Binney (Penn.), 214; Reinholdt v. Alberti, 1 Binney (Penn.), 469; Lorymer v. Hollister, 2 Stra. 693; Alleley v. Colley, Cro. Jac. 695; Shepherd v. Orchard, 6 Mod. 40, and cases cited; Gibson v. Bishop of Bath, Barnes, 239.

² See § 190.

³ Jenkins v. Bradford, 59 Ala. 400.

⁴ Thompson v. Reynolds, 73 Ill. 11. See Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 187.

⁵ McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 416; s. p. Kersey v. Garton, 77 Mo. 645, s. c. 16 Cent. L. J. 472. Compare Duke v. Harper, 8 Mo. App. 296; Duson v. Dupré, 33 La. Ann. 1131; Schomp v. Schenck, 40 N. J. Law, 195.

⁶ Courtright v. Burnes, 3 McCra. 63; s. p. Whitney v. Kirtland, 27 N. J. Eq. 333; Allison v. C. & N. W. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 274. The lien of a lawyer upon lands for professional services may be preferred over the lien of a judgment creditor of the client. Brown v. Bigley, 3 Tenn. Ch. 618. See Hunt v. McClanahan, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 503.

CHAPTER XV.

OF THE COMPLAINT.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 422. The fictitious lease. 423. How set forth in the declaration. 424. Demise, though a fiction, must be consistent.—Amendment. 425. Modern pleading.—Facts to be alleged. 426. Names of the parties. 427. Written pleadings required. 428. Pleadings, how construed. 429. Pleadings in real actions. 430. Declaration in a writ of entry in Maine. 431. Modern declaration or complaint. 432. Must allege possession by defendant. 433. Must allege wrongful or unlawful withholding of possession. 434. Plaintiff's seizin. 435. Allegations as to plaintiff's title. 436. Under claim of fee simple, life estate cannot be recovered.—Variance. 437. Declaration on legal title will not support equitable recovery. 438. Nature of the interest claimed. 439. Nature of estate.—How set forth. 440. Pleading an estate in fee simple. | § 441. Particular estates. 442. General allegation of ownership, seizin and possession.—What may be proved under. 443. Effect of setting forth specific chain of title. 444. Muniments and chain of title not to be set forth. 445. Evidence of title not to be pleaded. 446. In California seizin must be averred. 447. Precision in pleading.—Forfeiture. 448. Mortgagor against mortgagee. 449. Joint title.—Title of trustee. 450. Joinder of hostile claimants. 451. Ejectment by infant. 452. Declaration against several defendants holding different portions of same premises. 453. Co-tenants. 454. Damages for withholding possession. 454a. Prayer for relief. 454b. Amendment of complaint. 454c. Supplemental complaint. |
|--|---|

§ 422. The fictitious lease.—It has been shown in tracing the history of ejectment that the parties were formerly imaginary or fictitious, and that the action was instituted by serving the declaration upon the tenant in possession, accompanied by a notice, signed by Richard Roe, the casual ejector, advising the tenant in possession to appear and procure himself to be made a party, and defend the action.¹ The declaration constituted the writ or process of the court,² and the service of the declaration and notice was considered to be the commencement of the action of ejectment.³

¹ See §§ 37, 38, 39.

² Rex v. Unitt, Stra. 567.

³ Pindell v. Maydwell, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 314; Atwell v. McLure, 4 Jones (N. C.) Law, 371; Barron v. Abeel, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 481. See § 32.

§ 423. How set forth in the declaration.—In the declaration John Doe declared on a fictitious lease or demise of the premises in controversy from A. to himself, for a term of years, and alleged that during the existence or continuance of the term, he was ousted from possession by the casual ejector Richard Roe.¹ When the tenant entered into the consent rule, and was substituted as defendant in the place of the casual ejector, it was necessary to file a new declaration against him, and if the court proceeded to trial and judgment without a new declaration, it was error which was not cured by the tenant pleading to the original declaration against Richard Roe, the casual ejector.²

§ 424. Demise, though a fiction, must be consistent.—Amendment.—Though the demise under the early practice was fictitious, yet the plaintiff was required to count on a demise which, if real, would have supported the action;³ for the fictitious lease and ouster were tested by the same rules as if they were realities and had been proved at the trial, and were required to be consistent with the plaintiff's legal rights, and within the scope of his legal powers.⁴ But as the lease was entirely a fiction, invented for the purpose of obtaining a fair and expeditious trial of the title, the courts very properly exercised full discretion, and evinced much liberality in granting amendments in matters of form, such as enlarging the term and changing the date of the demise.⁵

§ 425. Modern pleading.—Facts to be alleged.—The use of fictitious or imaginary parties, and the practice of declaring on a fictitious lease, is so nearly obsolete that further discussion⁶ of this novel method of judicial procedure would

¹ See §§ 37, 38, 39.

² Ayres v. McConnel, 3 Ill. 307; Harney v. Lamborn, 3 Ill. 480. See Jackson v. Wood, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 586.

³ Binney v. Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. 8 Pet. 214; Doe v. Butler, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 149, 154. See § 28.

⁴ Den v. McShane, 13 N. J. L. 35.

⁵ Blackwell v. Patton, 7 Cranch, 471; McDaniel v. Wailes, 4 Cranch C. C. 201; Shattuck v. Tucker, N. Chip. (Vt.) 69; Walden v. Craig, 9 Wheat. 576; Smith v. Vaughan, 10 Pet. 366. See § 53.

⁶ See §§ 27, 34, 37.

prove of little practical importance, though the modern practice is still governed, to some extent, by the principles of pleading and practice established by courts of common law.¹ The real parties in interest² now appear by their proper names, as the nominal parties in the action, usually the claimant or party deforced being the plaintiff, and the party in possession the defendant. Although the reformed procedure has dispensed with the old form of pleading, still, as we shall see, facts must be pleaded sufficient to show the plaintiff's right of recovery, and not mere conclusions of law.³ The ultimate facts constituting the cause of action, and not other subsidiary matters of fact or law which go to make up, or are evidence of, such ultimate facts, are to be pleaded.⁴

§ 426. Names of the parties.—By a name, in law, must be understood the full Christian name, as received in baptism, prefixed to the surname received from the party's ancestors. Initials⁵ or middle names are not ordinarily recognized in law, and the addition of senior or junior to a name is a mere matter of description, and forms no part of the name.⁶ And where parties whose names are unknown are

¹ Greer v. Mezes, 24 How. 268; Kitchen v. Wilson, 80 N. C. 191.

² Hubbell v. Lerch, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 295; affirmed, 58 N. Y. 237; Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 773; Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 493.

³ Payne v. Treadwell, 5 Cal. 310.

⁴ Prichhardt v. Robertson, 4 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 112. Johnson, C., said, in People v. Comm'rs of Highways, 54 N. Y. 279: "Matter of law is never matter to be alleged in pleading. No issue can be framed upon an allegation as to the law. Facts only are pleadable; and upon them, without allegation, the courts pronounce and apply the law. This is true alike in respect to statute and to the common law." Prof. Pomeroy observed: "The material facts which constitute the ground of relief, or the defense of new matter (confession and avoidance) should be averred as they actually existed or took place, and not the legal effect or aspect of those facts, and not the mere evidence or probative matter by which their existence is established." Pomeroy's Remedies, § 517.

⁵ The use of initials to designate a party to an action is an irregularity which will be cured by eighteen years' delay before motion made. Grant v. Birdsall, 16 J. & S. (N. Y.) 427; s. c. 22 N. Y. Daily Reg. 1137.

⁶ People v. Cook, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 259; s. c. aff'd, 8 N. Y. 67; Van Voorhis v. Budd, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 479; Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 45; Petition of John Snook, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 566; Fleet v. Youngs, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 524; See Chapman v. Phoenix Nat. Bank, 85 N. Y. 437; s. c. 12 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 525; Franklin v. Talmadge, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; Rex v. Newman, 1 Ld. Raym. 562; McKay v. Speak, 8 Tex. 376; State v. Martin, 10 Mo. 391; Edmundston v. State, 17 Ala. 179; Simpson v. Dix, 131 Mass. 179; San Francisco v. Randall, 54 Cal. 408; Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige (N. Y.), 170; s. c. 40 Am. Dec. 240, and note.

sued by fictitious names, the record should so state.¹ In tracing titles identity of names is prima facie evidence of identity of persons.²

§ 427. Written pleadings required.—As controversies over titles to land are in most cases restricted to courts of record, the universal practice is to require written pleadings. These can not be dispensed with by agreement.³ Oral pleadings were not tolerated in the system of real actions as originally practiced in Virginia,⁴ and ought not to be countenanced under any circumstances. The subject-matter of contention in actions to try title being practically indestructible and unchangeable, the highest considerations of public policy and convenience require that all statements or proofs affecting the title in such controversies be preserved upon the court records for future inspection, instead of being left to the uncertain memories of witnesses.

§ 428. Pleadings, how construed.—The general common law rule is that doubtful phraseology in pleadings is to be taken most strongly against the pleader;⁵ and any ambiguity, uncertainty, or omission in the pleadings must be at the peril of the party in whose allegations it occurs.⁶ This rule, however, is being gradually superseded in the

¹ Ford v. Doyle, 37 Cal. 346. See § 220.

² Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32; Brown v. Metz, 33 Ill. 339; Cates v. Loftus, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 202; Gitt v. Watson, 18 Mo. 274; Balbec v. Donaldson, 2 Grant (Pa.), 459; Bogue v. Bigelow, 29 Vt. 179; Chamblee v. Tarbox, 27 Tex. 139; Lessem v. Wilson, 43 Iowa, 488.

³ Hicks v. Marshall, 67 Ga. 713.

⁴ Taylors v. Huston, 2 H. & M. (Va.) 161.

⁵ In Hawes v. Ryder, 100 Mass. 216, 218, Gray, J., said: "By a general rule of law, pleadings, like other statements in writing, are to be construed most unfavorably to the party making them." See Clark v. Dillon, 97 N. Y. 373; Nation v. Cameron, 2 Dakota, 347.

⁶ Hill v. Allison, 51 Tex. 390; Howard v. Gosset, 10 Q. B. 383; Ferriss v. North Am. Fire Ins. Co., 1 Hill (N. Y.), 71; Slocum v. Clark, 2 Hill (N. Y.), 475; See Stephen on Pleadings (8th Am. ed.), 378, Rule 11; Bac. Max. Reg. III; Goldham v. Edwards, 18 C. B. 389-399; Triscony v. Orr, 49 Cal. 612; Herrington v. Santa Clara Co., 44 Cal. 496; Requa v. Guggenheim, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 51; Winter v. Quarles, 43 Ala. 692; Stephens & C. Transp. Co. v. Central R. R. Co., 33 N. J. L. 229; Rogers v. Shannon, 52 Cal. 99; Henley v. Wilson, 77 N. C. 216; Wright v. McCormick, 67 N. C. 27. In proceedings to determine conflicting claims to real property the pleader must be careful to make the allegations of his complaint square with the requirements of the act. Austin v. Goodrich, 49 N. Y. 266; Churchill v. Onderdonk, 59 N. Y. 136.

reformed procedure as to matters of form. In *Evans v. Womack*¹ the Supreme Court of Texas held that the petition in trespass to try title is not that sort of pleading which is required to be "certain to a certain intent in every particular," as the rule was understood at common law; while under the practice in Iowa the rule of the common law, that the allegations of the pleading are to be construed most strongly against the pleader, does not obtain, the allegations being liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties.² In a New York case the court say it is not true that, under the code, if there be uncertainty in respect to the nature of the charge, it is to be strictly construed against the pleader; the allegations must be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice.³ In Wisconsin the court observe, that "contrary to the common law rule, every reasonable intendment and presumption is to be made in favor of the pleading."⁴ The modification of the ancient rule was held, however, in a late case in the New York Court of Appeals "to extend only to matters of form and not to apply to the fundamental requisites of a cause of action;"⁵ and the rule of strict construction against the pleader was applied in an ejectment action in that State.⁶ Uncertainty in the pleadings must generally be reached by motion and not by demurrer;⁷ and motions designed to affect the pleadings should be brought to a hearing before the trial.⁸

§ 429. Pleadings in real actions.—The demandant in real actions was required to allege, and, if traversed, to prove a seizin either in himself or in his ancestors through whom he claimed; and in general it was also necessary to aver that

¹ 48 Texas, 230.

² Foster v. Elliott, 33 Iowa, 216; Gray v. Coan, 23 Iowa, 344.

³ Olcott v. Carroll, 39 N. Y. 438.

⁴ Morse v. Gilman, 16 Wis. 504, 507; s. p. Doolittle v. Greene, 32 Iowa, 124; Clay v. Edgerton, 19 Ohio St. 549; McGlasson v. Bradford, 7 Bush (Ky.), 250.

⁵ Clark v. Dillon, 97 N. Y. 373; citing Spear v. Downing, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 522; Cruiger v. Hudson River R. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 190; Bunge v. Koop, 48 N. Y. 225.

⁶ Moores v. Lehman, 52 N. Y. Superior, 283.

⁷ Hampson v. Fall, 64 Ind. 382. See Cairo & F. R. R. Co. v. Parks, 32 Ark. 131; Lorillard v. Clyde, 86 N. Y. 384.

⁸ Kahn v. Old Telegraph Min. Co., 2 Utah, 187; Smith v. Countryman, 30 N. Y. 668.

he was seized by taking the esplees or profits.¹ Seizin of some kind must be shown in the declaration in a writ of right, either by the constructive seizin in deed, or by the possession of the land, and the perception of the profits, or taking the esplees.²

§ 430. Declaration in a writ of entry in Maine.—Under the practice in Maine four things are necessary in a declaration in a writ of entry. First. The premises must be clearly described. Secondly. The estate which the demandant claims in the premises must be stated, whether it be a fee simple, a fee tail, for life or for years; and, if for life, then whether for the demandant's own life or that of another. Thirdly. An allegation that within twenty years the demandant was seized of the estate claimed. Fourthly. A disseizin by the tenant.³

§ 431. Modern declaration or complaint.—The requisites of the modern declaration, petition, or complaint in actions for the trial of title to lands, are almost uniformly a matter of statutory regulation. Though the requirements in some instances differ essentially in the several States, yet it is important to notice the substantial allegations which are of general and almost universal application.

§ 432. Must allege possession by defendant.—Actions in the nature of ejectment must, as we have seen,⁴ be instituted against the occupant or party in possession of the lands;⁵ and the declaration must generally allege that

¹ See Payne v. Treadwell, 5 Cal. 310; Roscoe on Actions relating to Real Property, 174; Dally v. King, 1 H. Bl. 1; Stearns on Real Actions (ed. 1824), 153; see Plummer v. Walker, 24 Me. 14.

² Dawson v. Watkins, 2 Rob. (Va.) 259; Dally v. King, 1 H. Bl. 1. See Plummer v. Walker, 24 Me. 14; Widdowson v. Earl of Harrington, 1 Jac. & W. 532.

³ Wyman v. Brown, 50 Me. 139.

⁴ See §§ 231-236.

⁵ Hawkins v. Reichert, 28 Cal. 534; Wheelock v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 309; Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268; Rodgers v. Bell, 53 Ga. 94; Lockwood v. Drake, 1 Mich. 14; Schuyler v. Marsh, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 350; Child v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 246; Redfield v. Utica & S. R. R. Co. 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 54; Morris v. Beebe, 54 Ala. 300; Banyer v. Empie, 5 Hill (N. Y.), 48; Ward v. Parks, 72 N. C. 452. In McCauley v. Gilmer, 2 Mont. 202-205, the court, following Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220, held that the only facts necessary to be alleged in an action of ejectment are that the plaintiff is seized in fee, or for life or for years, as the case may be, and that the defendant is in possession and withholds the lands. See Merrill v. Dearing, 22 Minn. 376.

the defendant is in possession of the disputed property,¹ for if the plaintiff is clothed with the possession, he cannot support ejectment, which is a possessory action.² It has been held in Illinois that the allegations of the declaration should be the same whether the defendant is in the actual occupation or possession of the premises, or, the premises being unoccupied, is exercising acts of ownership thereon, or claiming title thereto or an interest therein.³ It has been decided in North Carolina to be sufficient to plead that the defendant is in possession of a part of the premises without specifying the particular portion.⁴ The objection that the complaint was defective in that it did not positively allege that the defendants were in possession, but merely stated that they withheld the land, has been considered in that State to be cured by verdict.⁵ A declaration alleging that the plaintiff was in possession, and was ousted on the — day of September, 1862, was held sufficient under the practice in Illinois, the objection not having been raised until after judgment, though the defect, it was said, might undoubtedly have constituted good ground of special demurrer.⁶

§ 433. Must allege wrongful or unlawful withholding of possession.—The complaint or declaration should also contain an averment that the defendant wrongfully or unlawfully withholds the possession of the premises claimed⁷ or has ousted the plaintiff.⁸ The allegation as to the exact time of the ouster is immaterial, provided it is alleged to exist before the commencement of the action.⁹ Ejectment, as already shown, was originally an action of trespass,¹⁰

¹ Tetherow v. Chambers, 74 Mo. 183.

² Corley v. Pentz, 76 Penn. St. 57; Buchanan v. Streper, 12 Phila. (Penn.) 529; Cooper v. Smith, 9 S. & R. (Penn.) 26; Jackson v. Hakes, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 335; Taylor v. Crane, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 358.

³ Dickerson v. Hendryx, 88 Ill. 66. See Platto v. Jante, 35 Wis. 629.

⁴ Johnson v. Nevill, 65 N. C. 677.

⁵ Wiseman v. Penland, 79 N. C. 197.

⁶ Parr v. Van Horn, 38 Ill. 226.

⁷ Vance v. Schroyer, 77 Ind. 501; Levi v. Engle, 91 Ind. 330.

⁸ Tetherow v. Chambers, 74 Mo. 183.

⁹ Kidder v. Stevens, 60 Cal. 420; Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 468; Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 361; Woodward v. Brown, 13 Pet. 1.

¹⁰ See § 1.

and the defendant or disseizor, under the modern practice, is regarded as a wrong-doer, and must be put in the wrong by the pleadings. Under the practice in New York a complaint which does not set out affirmatively that the possession of the premises is unlawfully withheld from the claimant is fatally defective.¹ The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has decided that, under the statute of that State, it is necessary to allege in the complaint in an action to recover real estate that the defendant "unlawfully withholds the possession" of the premises claimed, although the premises may not be actually occupied at the commencement of the action.² In the same State the statute requires that the complaint should specifically allege that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the premises.³

§ 434. Plaintiff's seizin.—In New York the plaintiff in ejectment must aver in the complaint that he is lawfully seized or possessed of a certain estate in the premises, describing them, or of some tangible interest therein; that he is entitled to the immediate possession of the lands,⁴ and that the defendant unlawfully withholds the possession from him.⁵ If the complaint fails to state the nature or quality of the estate claimed by the plaintiff, it has been held in that State that this defect should be taken advantage of by demurrer. It does not follow, because the pleading is defective in some particulars, that no cause of action is made out by the facts stated, and, after a trial upon the merits, this objection cannot be taken by motion to dismiss the complaint.⁶

§ 435. Allegations as to plaintiff's title.—The claimant

¹ Taylor v. Crane, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 358.

² Platto v. Jante, 35 Wis. 629. See Barclay v. Yeomans, 27 Wis. 682; Lee v. Simpson, 29 Wis. 338.

³ Barclay v. Yeomans, 27 Wis. 682; s. p. Miller v. Shriner, 87 Ind. 143; McCarnan v. Cochran, 57 Ind. 169.

⁴ See, also, Jamison v. Smith, 4 Mo. 202.

⁵ People v. Mayor, &c., of N. Y., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 240; s. c. 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 56; Walter v. Lockwood, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 228. See Sears v. Taylor, 4 Col. 38. As to the sufficiency of a complaint in ejectment for dower, see Ellicott v. Mosier, 7 N. Y. 201, also § 129.

⁶ Clark v. Crego, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 599.

must allege title in himself at the time of the commencement of the action, or at the time of the wrongful entry by defendant;¹ and must, ordinarily, prove on the trial that he had title to the premises in dispute on the day named in the complaint or declaration.² An allegation that the plaintiff "claims" the premises "in fee simple absolute" is, under the practice in California, equivalent to a direct averment of such title in the plaintiff.³ In *Steinback v. Fitzpatrick*⁴ it was held in the Supreme Court of California, that the plaintiff must either aver title or possession, and that the mere taking from the land of a portion of the herbage growing thereon was not sufficient to give a right of possession that would support the action. It is doubtful, however, whether an averment of possession will suffice, as it has been asserted that the rule, presently to be considered, that possession is prima facie evidence of title, has no application to pleading, and where a title is necessary it is not enough to allege possession.⁵

§ 436. Under claim of fee simple, life estate cannot be recovered.—Variance.—In many of our States the statutes require the plaintiff to state the nature of the estate claimed. Under a count claiming an estate in fee simple the plaintiff cannot recover a life estate;⁶ and a real action in which the writ claims an estate in fee simple cannot be maintained by proof of an estate in fee tail only.⁷

But on a writ of entry for land in fee the declaration may be so amended as to claim merely a life estate in an undivided portion,⁸ and under an averment of title in fee,

¹ Armstrong v. Hinds, 8 Minn. 254.

² Pitkin v. Yaw, 13 Ill. 251; Wood v. Morton, 11 Ill. 547; Holt v. Rees, 44 Ill. 30; Joy v. Berdell, 25 Ill. 542.

³ Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176.

⁴ 12 Cal. 295.

⁵ Meriden Britannia Co. v. Whedon, 31 Conn. 118.

⁶ Forsyth v. Rowell, 59 Me. 131; Rawson v. Taylor, 57 Me. 343; Almond v. Bonnell, 76 Ill. 536; Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362; Breed v. Osborne, 113 Mass. 318. See Rupert v. Mark, 15 Ill. 540. But see Harrison v. Stevens, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 170; Holmes v. Seely, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 75. A claim of a fee is not supported by proof of an equitable title. Hunt v. Campbell, 83 Ind. 54; Stout v. McPheeters, 84 Ind. 585; Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342.

⁷ Hamilton v. Wentworth, 58 Me. 101.

⁸ Howe v. Wildes, 34 Me. 570.

an action may be upheld by proof of title as mortgagee in possession by agreement with the mortgagor.¹

§ 437. Declaration on legal title will not support equitable recovery.—It has been repeatedly decided that where the plaintiff declared upon a legal title he was not entitled to recover upon showing an equitable title. The equitable title, if relied upon, should be set forth in the pleadings; and if the evidence shows that the plaintiff, who has declared upon a legal title has only the equitable title, it is not regarded as a variance, but is considered to be a failure of proof.² The rule requiring the plaintiff to plead an equitable title, to enable him to give evidence of it, is obviously just and reasonable, because such titles are usually founded upon a complex state of facts often peculiarly within the claimant's knowledge, and which the opposing party is entitled to have spread upon the records for his information. So, as we shall presently see, where the defendant in ejectment relies in his answer upon a legal title, he cannot at the trial avail himself of an equitable title.³

§ 438. Nature of the interest claimed.—Chief Justice Savage, in Harrison v. Stevens,⁴ held that the plaintiff in ejectment was not bound to set forth in the complaint the nature of the estate, or the quantity of the interest claimed by him, unless required to do so by statute. But, under the modern practice, the statutes, which require the claimant to state the nature and extent of the interest sought to be recovered in the lands in controversy, in effect preclude a recovery upon proof of a different interest, for evidence of a different interest or estate is inadmissible, as it would not tend to establish the issues raised by the pleadings. Thus it was decided in Wisconsin that a complaint for an undivided interest in lands was properly dis-

¹ Chapman v. Delaware, L. & W. R. R. Co., 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 261. See § 454*b*.

² Sutton v. Aiken, 57 Ga. 416; Groves v. Marks, 32 Ind. 319; Jones v. Parker, 55 Ga. 12; Rowe v. Beckett, 30 Ind. 154; Seaton v. Son, 32 Cal. 481; Peck v. Newton, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 173; Stout v. McPheeters, 84 Ind. 585; Hunt v. Campbell, 83 Ind. 48; Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342.

³ Kennedy v. Daniels, 20 Mo. 104.

⁴ 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 170. See Baker v. Chastang, 18 Ala. 417; Van Alstyne v. Spraker, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 578. But see Holmes v. Seely, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 75.

missed when it appeared that the plaintiff's share was less than that claimed.¹ So it has been decided that, upon a claim for an undivided share of lands, the plaintiff could not recover an undivided interest greater or less than the share claimed, nor could he recover the entire property. Neither could he, upon a claim of the whole property, have a judgment for an undivided part.² In Illinois it is clear that, under a declaration claiming the whole estate, an undivided interest cannot be recovered.³ While the courts generally possess power to grant amendments to remedy difficulties of this nature,⁴ yet the exercise of this power is usually discretionary, and even though the amendment is granted, terms are often imposed, and the cause delayed, so that the necessity of correctly stating, in the incipient stages of the action, the interest and estate of the claimant ought never to be overlooked by the pleader. If the plaintiff declares on a particular estate or interest, the defendant is justified in preparing to disprove, at the trial, only the allegations of the complaint, and it would be unfair to the latter to grant at the trial amendments, by which the plaintiff was permitted to introduce evidence of a different title or interest, unless it is clearly shown that the defendant could not possibly have been misled by the erroneous pleading. The plaintiff may recover a part of the premises for which he declared,⁵ and the complaint in such a case may be amended so as to conform to the proofs.⁶

§ 439. Nature of estate.—How set forth.—As we have said, in many of our States the plaintiff must set forth the nature of his estate in the property claimed, and specify whether it is in fee, for life, or for years.⁷ In a case in the

¹ Riehl v. Bingenheimer, 28 Wis. 84-89.

² Allie v. Schmitz, 17 Wis. 169; Bresee v. Stiles, 22 Wis. 120; Eagan v. Delaney, 16 Cal. 85. See Holmes v. Seely, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 75; Cole v. Irvine, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 634; Cook v. St. Paul's Church, 5 Hun (N. Y.), 293.

³ Murphy v. Orr, 32 Ill. 489; Clark v. Thompson, 47 Ill. 25; Hardin v. Kirk, 49 Ill. 153.

⁴ See § 454b.

⁵ McArthur v. Porter, 6 Pet. 205.

⁶ Kellogg v. Kellogg, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 116-131.

⁷ Thompson v. Wolf, 6 Oregon, 308; Walter v. Lockwood, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 228; Bridges v. Cundiff, 45 Tex. 440.

Supreme Court of New York the general rule is stated to be that the plaintiff must allege the nature of his claim. But it is not considered necessary to state it in detail, nor need the facts evidencing the estate or interest claimed in the land be set forth, but the general form or character of the interest must be averred.¹ The plaintiff, in other words, must allege that he is seized of some certain estate.² It is unnecessary to recite how the plaintiff's estate was derived.³ In a case which arose in Alabama it was said that the complaint should allege that the plaintiff was possessed of the lands in controversy, and that after his right had accrued the defendant entered and unlawfully withheld and detained the premises. Otherwise the complaint would be considered defective both under the statute of that State and at common law.⁴

§ 440. Pleading an estate in fee simple.—In Tennessee, where the declaration averred an estate in fee in the plaintiff, the court decided that the estate claimed was sufficiently set forth, and that the pleader need not specify the claim or title under which defendant entered.⁵ And in Maine, under a statute which required the demandant to "set forth the estate he claims in the premises, whether in fee simple, fee tail, for life, or for years," it has been held sufficient to aver in a real action that he is seized in "fee" for the owner of a fee simple is frequently called the tenant in fee.⁶ An estate in fee simple may be pleaded in general terms without showing when or how the estate arose or was created.⁷

§ 441. Particular estates.—It is a general rule of pleading

¹ Austin v. Schluyter, 7 Hun (N. Y.), 275; Ensign v. Sherman, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 39; Castro v. Richardson, 18 Cal. 479; Walter v. Lockwood, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 228. See Bridges v. Cundiff, 45 Tex. 440.

² People v. Mayor, &c., of N. Y., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 248; Rawlings v. Bailey, 15 Ill. 178. See Rogers v. Sinsheimer, 50 N. Y. 646.

³ Kansas Pacific Ry. Co. v. McBratney, 12 Kans. 9.

⁴ Bush v. Glover, 47 Ala. 167.

⁵ Smith v. Cox, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 462; Hunt v. Campbell, 83 Ind. 54; McManus v. Smith, 53 Ind. 211.

⁶ Jordan v. Record, 70 Me. 529. See 2 Bla. Com. 104-106; Stephen on Pleadings, pp. 304, 305.

⁷ Silly v. Dally, 12 Mod. 191; Parr v. Van Horn, 38 Ill. 226; Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176.

that the commencement of particular estates must be shown. If a party sets up in his own favor an estate tail, an estate for life, a term for years, or a tenancy at will, he must show the derivation of that title from its commencement; that is, from the last seizin in fee simple.¹ The distinction between pleading estates in fee simple and particular estates, originates in the nature of the estates. A fee simple may be acquired by wrong, as by disseizin, or by causes involving matters of fact as to which a jury are competent to judge, and which need not be spread upon the records for the information of the court. Hence a general allegation of a seizin in fee simple is traversable. Particular estates, on the other hand, are carved out of a fee simple, and can be created only by contract, conveyance, or operation of law; hence, it is said, that a general allegation of seizin of a particular estate is defective, as it combines law and fact, and is not traversable.² The strictness of this rule of pleading has been much softened by the provisions of modern codes of procedure, which, in some States at least, permit a recovery in ejectment by a claimant vested with a particular estate, who has merely asserted ownership of such an estate, in the complaint, without tracing its origin.³

§ 442. General allegation of ownership, seizin and possession.—What may be proved under.—In a case in the Supreme Court of Texas⁴ the plaintiffs made no effort in their pleadings to set out the commencement or derivation of their title, but only averred, in general terms, their ownership and the legal seizin and possession. Under these averments it was held to be competent for them to prove a grant of the premises to their ancestor, and that they were his heirs. It was not necessary to aver in the petition that they claimed by inheritance. A different rule might

¹ See Stephen on Pleading, p. 307; Hendy v. Stephenson, 10 East, 60; Johns v. Whitley, 3 Wils. 72; Silly v. Dally, 12 Mod. 191; McMannus v. Smith, 53 Ind. 211; Hunt v. Campbell, 83 Ind. 54.

² Scilly v. Dalby, Comb. 476; s. c. 12 Mod. 191; s. c. 2 Salk. 562; especially Johns v. Whitley, 3 Wils. 65-72.

³ See §§ 439, 445.

⁴ Bridges v. Cundiff, 45 Tex. 440. See Ufford v. Wells, 52 Tex. 612.

apply if the plaintiff had undertaken to specifically set forth the title and had failed to aver heirship.

§ 443. Effect of setting forth specific chain of title.—If the plaintiff sets out a specific chain of title, his evidence will be confined to the title as alleged,¹ and, while it is not necessary to aver the evidences of the plaintiff's title, yet, if these be alleged, the substantial elements of the title must be stated,² and the complaint should contain all that the demandant would be required to prove in order to recover.³ In *Hill v. Allison*⁴ the plaintiff, in anticipation of defendant's answer, and in avoidance of his title, set forth a sheriff's deed under which he alleged the defendant claimed, and then sought to avoid the deed by averments that the property was homestead at the time of the levy and sale. The answer was a plea of not guilty. It was held that the plaintiff assumed the entire burden of the issue thus made and tendered by him.

§ 444. Muniments and chain of title not to be set forth.—It is not necessary for the plaintiff to set out his muniments in an action for the recovery of the possession of real property, these being merely part of his evidence. In the case of Pease v. Hannah,⁵ in Oregon, a motion was granted striking out that portion of the complaint which set forth the plaintiff's chain of title.⁶ And where a deed under which the plaintiff claimed title was set out at length in the complaint in an action for the recovery of real property in Indiana, the court held that the claimant was not thereby relieved from the necessity of proving its delivery, and that it was improper practice, in pleading, to set out in extenso the deeds upon which the parties rely, on either side, to make out their titles.⁷ As a general rule, the absence of material allegations in a complaint cannot be supplied by reference

¹ Turner v. Ferguson, 39 Tex. 505. See Custard v. Musgrove, 47 Tex. 217; Eagan v. Delaney, 16 Cal. 85; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 223; Rivers v. Foote, 11 Tex. 670.

² Hughes v. Lane, 6 Tex. 289.

³ Castro v. Richardson, 18 Cal. 479.

⁴ 51 Tex. 390. See Harlan v. Haynie, 9 Tex. 462.

⁵ 3 Oregon, 301. See Boardman v. Beckwith, 18 Iowa, 293.

⁶ S. P. Larco v. Casaneuava, 30 Cal. 560.

⁷ Burkholder v. Casad, 47 Ind. 418. See Cairo & F. R. R. Co. v. Parks, 32 Ark.

to exhibits.¹ In *Fitch v. Cornell*² it was held that an exhibit was no part of a pleading in an action at law, and that a record or instrument should be stated in a pleading either according to its tenor or legal effect.³

• § 445. Evidence of title not to be pleaded.—It is not proper in any form of action to plead the evidence by which a cause of action is to be established.⁴ In *Colman v. Clements*⁵ it was held, by the Supreme Court of California, that the complainant, who had averred ownership in general terms, was not required to set forth, in the pleadings, the rules and customs of mining upon which his 131; Hannibal & St. J. R. R. Co. v. Knudson, 62 Mo. 569; Buck v. Fischer, 2 Col. 182. See, also, § 464a.

¹ Watkins v. Brunt, 53 Ind. 208; City of Los Angeles v. Signoret, 50 Cal. 298.

² 1 Sawyer, 160. But see Montgomery v. Gorrell, 51 Ind. 309.

³ See Oh Chow v. Hallett, 2 Sawyer, 259.

Statute and rule as to disclosing chain of title.—To prevent surprise and secure a full hearing upon the absolute merits, and to bring sharply in issue the exact points in controversy, a statute was enacted in Arkansas which provides—"Sec. 1. That hereafter in all actions for the recovery of lands, except in actions of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, the plaintiff shall set forth in his complaint all deeds and other written evidences of title on which he relies for the maintenance of his suit, and shall file copies of the same, as far as they can be obtained, as exhibits, therewith, and shall state such facts as shall show a prima facie title in himself to the land in controversy, and the defendant, in his answer, shall plead in the same manner as above required from the plaintiff. Sec. 2. That the defendant, in his answer, shall set forth exceptions to any of said documentary evidence relied on by the plaintiff, to which he may wish to object, which exceptions shall specifically note the objections taken; and the plaintiff shall in like manner, within three days after the filing of the answer, unless longer time is given by the court, file like exceptions to any documentary evidence exhibited by the defendant, and all such exceptions shall be passed on by the court, and shall be sustained or overruled as the law may require; and if any exception is sustained to such evidence, the same shall not be used on the trial unless the defect for which the exception is taken shall be cured by amendment. Sec. 3. That all objections to such evidence not specifically pointed out in the manner provided above shall be waived." This statute is said to work successfully in practice. It seems to be open to the objection, however, that it might be used by unscrupulous litigants as a convenient means of dishonestly securing a disclosure of the strength of the opposing title. In the St. Louis Circuit the defect of general pleading was sought to be remedied by a rule of the court, providing as follows: "In all actions of ejectment, each party shall, on or before the day of trial, make out and deliver to the judge, at 'special term,' an abstract of his title, which abstract shall state the derivation of the title, parties to each deed, dates of execution, acknowledgment, and recording, and the tract of land conveyed. If either party fail to file such abstract, the cause shall, on motion of the opposite party, be continued; but if no motion is made for a continuance by the opposite party, then the cause shall be tried or continued at the discretion of the court." This is for the information of the court, however, and is of little value as an aid to counsel in preparing for trial or argument the exact points in controversy.

⁴ Badeau v. Niles, 9 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 48. See Prickhardt v. Robertson, 4 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 117, and note; Hobson v. McArthur, 3 McL. 244. See § 492b.

⁵ 23 Cal. 245; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 247.

title partly depended. The plaintiff is not bound to plead or disclose the evidence of his title; facts,¹ and not the evidence of facts,² must be stated;³ nor should he set forth the mesne conveyances through which the title is deraigned.⁴

§ 446. In California, seizin must be averred.—None of the allegations peculiar to the old action of ejectment are necessary in an action to recover the possession of real property in California. The seizin is the fact to be alleged, and it is a pleadable and issuable fact, to be established by conveyances from a paramount source of title, or by evidence of prior possession. The right of possession follows the seizin and need not be alleged.⁵

§ 447. Precision in pleading.—Forfeiture.—The Supreme Court of California, in McCarthy v. Yale,⁶ advert to the prevalent opinion that a style of pleading in the action of ejectment should be adopted which would show with precision the right or title under which the plaintiff claims the possession, and the true position of the defendant, both with respect to the title and the possession. Conceding that the change might be preferable to the existing general system of pleading, since by adopting such a method of procedure the judgment roll would exhibit the issues which were tried and determined with more distinctness and certainty, the court held that the change, if desirable, must be effected by statute. The same objection, it may be observed, was urged against the action of ejectment in the early stages of its history, and one of the redeeming features of the intricate system of real actions was the fact that the nature of the writ and the judgment record revealed the precise issue involved.⁷

Pleadings in cases of forfeiture must be specific.

¹ Hughes v. Lane, 6 Tex. 289.

² Depuy v. Williams, 26 Cal. 309.

³ Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 567; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 226; Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 346.

⁴ Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 567.

⁵ Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220. See McCarthy v. Yale, 39 Cal. 585; Kidder v. Stevens, 60 Cal. 422.

⁶ 39 Cal. 585.

⁷ See § 42.

Where a municipal corporation conveyed land to a party, who covenanted to build streets through it when required by the grantor, it was held, on demurrer to a complaint in ejectment to enforce a forfeiture for breach of the covenant, that to place the grantee in default the complaint should show that the streets were in condition to receive the improvements, that no impediment to the prosecution of the work proceeded from the plaintiff, and that the ordinance must direct the work to be done by the defendant, a mere general ordinance being insufficient.¹

Conditions subsequent, as already stated, are not favored in the law, being construed strictly² against the grantor and his heirs, because they tend to destroy estates.³ Complaints seeking to enforce these conditions also receive a strict construction.⁴ An entry or demand, as we have shown, is necessary to enable the grantor or his heirs to recover for breach of a condition subsequent,⁵ and where no such entry or demand is alleged in the complaint it is defective.⁶

§ 448. Mortgagor against mortgagee.—The rights of mortgagees and mortgagors as regards the remedies we are considering have already been discussed.⁷ We note a single case, Holt v. Rees,⁸ which was ejectment instituted by a mortgagor against a mortgagee. The title,

¹ Mayor, &c., of N. Y. v. Smith, 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 89. See § 486.

² See § 212.

³ Clark v. Holton, 57 Ind. 567; Hunt v. Beeson, 18 Ind. 380; Heaston v. Board of Comm'rs, &c., 20 Ind. 398; Crane v. Hyde Park, 135 Mass. 149.

⁴ Clark v. Holton, 57 Ind. 567.

⁵ Lindsey v. Lindsey, 45 Ind. 552; 4 Kent Comm. 127; Nicoll v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 121; Fonda v. Sage, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 109; Lincoln & K. Bank v. Drummond, 5 Mass. 321; Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 79.

⁶ Clark v. Holton, 57 Ind. 567. See § 464*b*. In a suit for breach of covenant of seizin in a deed, where the complaint alleged that defendant was not seized, &c., negating the words of the covenant, and the answer admitted the conveyance but denied the other allegations of the complaint, it was held in New York that the affirmative of the issue was on the plaintiff to prove the breach. Woolley v. Newcombe, 87 N. Y. 605; s. p. Ingalls v. Eaton, 25 Mich. 32. This is a departure from the English rule in an action for breach of covenant of seizin which required the defendant to establish his title and cast that burden upon him. Marston v. Hobbs, 2 Mass. 437; Swafford v. Whipple, 3 Greene (Iowa). 264; Schofield v. Iowa Homestead Co. 32 Iowa, 321; Baker v. Hunt, 40 Ill. 266; Mecklem v. Blake, 16 Wis. 102; Beckmann v. Henn, 17 Wis. 412; Potter v. Kitchen, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 566.

⁷ See Chap. XI.

⁸ 44 Ill. 30.

entry and ouster were laid in the declaration, May 3, 1865, while it appeared that the mortgage was not extinguished until August 22, 1865. The court held that on the day laid the right of possession was not in the plaintiff, and that therefore the action could not be supported.

§ 449. Joint title.—Title of trustee.—The title must be truly stated in the declaration. A joint demise can only be supported by showing a title in each to demise the whole. If one of the plaintiffs has no title,¹ or the title is several,² the action must fail; and a joint demise by husband and wife when the title was in the husband alone cannot be maintained.³

A trustee holding the legal title need not, as we have seen,⁴ set forth in a writ of entry that he is trustee.⁵

§ 450. Joinder of hostile claimants.—We have already seen that hostile claimants cannot join in any suit or action.⁶ In Hubbell v. Lerch,⁷ in the New York Court of Appeals, a case which we have heretofore noticed, the principles regulating the joinder of plaintiffs in ejectment, claiming under titles hostile to each other, are discussed. The complaint was so framed that both plaintiffs united in stating that the plaintiff A. H. was seized in his own right of an estate in fee in the premises as grantee of the heirs at law of one H., deceased, who it was alleged had died seized of the lands. In a subsequent portion of the complaint, the same plaintiffs united in declaring that H., in his lifetime, conveyed the premises upon a valid trust to M. and S., of whom the other plaintiff, A. S. H., was the successor. The court decided that, if the complaint was to ¹ Hoyle v. Stowe, 2 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 318. See Bryan v. Manning, 6 Jones (N. C.) Law, 334; Teal v. Terrell, 48 Tex. 491; Taylor v. Taylor, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 19; Taylor v. Whiting, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 365. See, contra, Miller v. Bledsoe, 61 Mo. 96; Tormey v. Pierce, 42 Cal. 335. See, also, §§ 187-189.

² Teal v. Terrell, 48 Tex. 491. See §§ 187-189.

³ Tucker v. Vance, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 458.

⁴ See § 222.

⁵ Simpson v. Dix, 131 Mass. 179.

⁶ See § 188.

⁷ 58 N. Y. 239. See s. c. below, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 295; Bunce v. Gallagher, 5 Blatchf. 489; Fulham v. McCarthy, 1 H. L. Cas. 703; Walker v. Powers, 104 U. S. 245. See also § 188.

be regarded as containing only one count, it showed no right of action in either plaintiff. Each plaintiff in the same breath stated facts showing that he was and that he was not entitled to recover. If no answer had been interposed the court would have been unable to determine which plaintiff was entitled to judgment. On the other hand, if the complaint was to be regarded as containing two counts or statements of causes of action, it was equally defective. The practice in New York does not permit two persons, each of whom claims the whole of a piece of land by a title hostile to that of the other, to unite as plaintiffs in an action of ejectment against a third party in possession, and to set forth the title of each plaintiff in a separate count.¹

§ 451. Ejectment by infant.—The rights of infants as plaintiffs in ejectment, and questions affecting their power to disaffirm deeds of land, have already been noticed.² It seems the disaffirmance must be pleaded as well as proved. In *Voorhies v. Voorhies*³ it was held, in ejectment brought to recover possession of lands conveyed by plaintiff during his infancy, that he must disaffirm the deed prior to the action, and give notice of his intention not to be bound by it, and this act of disaffirmance must be averred in the complaint.

§ 452. Declaration against several defendants holding different portions of same premises.—One declaration in ejectment will lie against several defendants holding different portions of the same tract.⁴ And where the defendants occupied separately the different stories of a building, it was held in New York, that the action would lie against all the defendants, as being joint trespassers on the land in using it to sustain and uphold the house, and for other uses necessary for the enjoyment of the house.⁵

¹ See St. John v. Pierce, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 362; aff'd, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 599; Hubbell v. Lerch, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

² See §§ 196-198.

³ 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 150-153. See §§ 196-198.

⁴ Needham v. Branson, 5 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 426; Marshall v. Wood, 5 Vt. 250; Stuart v. Coalter, 4 Rand. (Va.) 74; Camden v. Haskill, 3 Rand. (Va.) 462; White v. Pickering, 12 S. & R. (Penn.) 435. See §§ 238-240.

⁵ Pearce v. Ferris, 10 N. Y. 280; Pearce v. Colden, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 522. Com-

§ 453. Co-tenants.—As already shown, the complaint in ejectment between co-tenants should aver an actual ouster, or some act amounting to a total denial of the plaintiff's right of possession; for ouster must be shown to sustain ejectment between co-tenants.¹ The rules governing this important relationship have been elsewhere considered.²

§ 454. Damages for withholding possession.—The claims for mesne profits and damages for the withholding of the premises may properly be joined with the demand for possession, and the jury, upon finding for the plaintiff on the main issue, should give a verdict for damages up to the day of the trial.³ The claims for damages, and for mesne profits, as we shall presently see, are separate and distinct causes of action, which must be pleaded, and it has been considered to be error to allow evidence of the value of the use and occupation where only damages are claimed in the complaint.⁴ This subject will be presently considered.⁵

In a suit to recover damages for an invasion of plaintiff's possession or right of possession a complaint is bad which fails to show that plaintiff was ever in possession or that defendant's acts were wrongful.⁶

§ 454a. Prayer for relief.—As a general rule under the reformed procedure, a complaint alleging facts entitling the plaintiff to any relief, is good on demurrer, though the pleader may have prayed for the wrong relief.⁷ Where no answer is interposed the judgment will be restricted to what is asked for in the complaint, but if an answer is served the court will grant any relief embraced within the issues.⁸

pare Davidson v. Barclay, 63 Penn. St. 406; Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478. See §§ 238-240.

¹ Edwards v. Bishop, 4 N. Y. 61. See Nicholson v. Caress, 76 Ind. 24.

² See § 276 and succeeding sections, Chap. IX.

³ Vandevoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 639. See Livingston v. Tanner, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 481; Holmes v. Davis, 21 Ib. 265; s. c. on appeal, 19 N. Y. 488; Bell v. Medford, 57 Miss. 31; Lord v. Dearing, 24 Minn. 110; Emrich v. Ireland, 55 Miss. 390; Bottorff v. Wise, 53 Ind. 32; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382; Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478.

⁴ Larned v. Hudson, 57 N. Y. 151.

⁵ See Chap. XXV.

⁶ Garner v. McCullough, 48 Mo. 318.

⁷ Lovely v. Speisshoffer, 85 Ind. 455.

⁸ Dusenbury v. Dusenbury, 4 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 126; Marquat v. Marquat, 12 N. Y. 336.

§ 454b. Amendment of complaint.—The liberality of the courts in granting amendments in matters of form in ejectment such as enlarging the term,¹ is in marked contrast with the strange disinclination of the judges to permit the demandant in real writs to amend.² The completeness of the collection of these latter writs from which the demandant could choose, evidently led to the conviction that the pleader was not justified in making a mistake in the selection of his writ, but acted at his peril. Indeed, the exercise of the power of amendment might have rendered many of the real writs practically obsolete, as the courts and the profession would have at once ceased to carefully consider the distinctions between the writs.

The power of amendment is most liberally bestowed and freely exercised in the modern reformed procedure. The description, as we shall see, may be amended³ so as to embrace new lands, though such amendments will not relate back as regards the defense of the statute of limitations.⁴ A fee simple claim may be changed to a demand for a life interest;⁵ though, on the other hand, equitable relief cannot be converted into ejectment.⁶ Where the whole estate is claimed, an undivided interest cannot be recovered without an amendment of the complaint,⁷ but such an amendment may be granted.⁸ The plaintiff may be permitted to amend by enlarging the amount of damages.⁹

§ 454c. Supplemental complaint.—"The first rule governing in the production of evidence is, that the evidence offered must correspond with the allegations, and be confined to the point in issue."¹⁰ Enforcing this rule, it has been held that a deed executed after suit brought, convey-

¹ See § 424; Smith v. Vaughan, 10 Pet. 366.

² See § 3.

³ See § 464.

⁴ Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 124; Kaul v. Lawrence, 73 Pa. St. 410.

⁵ Howe v. Wildes, 34 Me. 566.

⁶ Bockes v. Lansing, 74 N. Y. 442.

⁷ Smith v. Long, 3 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 397.

⁸ Kellogg v. Kellogg, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 116-131.

⁹ Dew v. Katz, 8 C. & P. 315.

¹⁰ 1 Greenleaf Ev., § 51.

ing the disputed land to the plaintiff could not be received in evidence.¹ It did not tend to prove any of the issues in the pleadings. If the plaintiffs desired the benefit of any rights that may have accrued to them under a conveyance made since the suit was instituted the proper practice is to file a supplemental complaint or petition.²

Where a plaintiff conveys pending the action, the suit may be continued in his name;³ or in the name of the grantee,⁴ and a demandant may have judgment on review, although after a verdict in his favor, but before judgment, he made a conveyance of the property.⁵

¹ See Doe d. Baylor v. Neff, 3 McL. 302.

² Porter v. Wells, 6 Kans. 453. See Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 235, §§ 495, 645.

³ French v. Edwards, 4 Sawyer, 125; Camarillo v. Fenlon, 49 Cal. 202.

⁴ Warner v. Turner, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 758.

⁵ Berry v. Whitaker, 58 Me. 422.

CHAPTER XVI.

HOW THE LANDS ARE TO BE DESCRIBED.

- | | |
|---|---|
| § 455. Descriptions under the early practice. 456. Examples. 457. Modern practice. 458. General and particular descriptions. 459. Johnson v. Nevill. 460. Property described by street numbers, etc. | § 461. Description by reputed name. 462. Sections of townships. 462a. Descriptions considered sufficient. 463. Defective description. 464. Amendment of description. 464a. Bill of particulars. 464b. Particulars of breaches. |
|---|---|

§ 455. Descriptions under the early practice.—A general and imperfect description, in the declaration, of the lands sued for was sufficient under the practice, as established in the early action of ejectment. It is true that when the action was originally adapted to its new uses the same certainty of description was, according to some of the cases, held to be requisite as in a præcipe quod reddat.¹ But the strict rules prevailing in real actions, regulating the pleading, and the manner of describing the lands, if ever fully enforced were soon relaxed in ejectment, and no greater certainty of statement was required than in an ordinary action of trespass. In this respect the peculiarities of a personal action clung to ejectment after it had been transformed and adopted as a remedy for trying titles. The practice which is said to have prevailed for a considerable time, of requiring a description sufficiently specific and definite to enable the sheriff to find the premises recovered and deliver the possession, by consulting the writ solely, and without any suggestion or information from the lessor of the plaintiff, as to the situation or boundaries of the lands,² was soon relaxed.³ In *Connor v. West*⁴ Lord

¹ Macduncoch v. Stafford, 2 Rolle, 166. See Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. *26.

² See Bindover v. Sindercombe, 2 Ld. Raym. 1470, and cases.

³ See Connor v. West, 5 Burr. 2672; Cottingham v. King, 1 Burr. 623-630; St. John v. Commyn, Yelv. 117.

⁴ 5 Burr. 2672. See Johnson v. Nevill, 65 N. C. 677.

Mansfield explains the reason of the change as follows: "A præcipe in a real action requires exactness and precision; but an ejectment is a fictitious action, contrived for ease, dispatch, and saving expense; and has, of later times, been taken with more latitude than formerly. And though it has been often said 'that the descriptions ought to be so certain that the sheriff may be able to know, without any information from the plaintiff, what he is to give possession of;' yet, in truth and fact, the sheriff delivers possession at the shewing of the plaintiff, and at the peril of the plaintiff; who is, at his peril, to take possession of no more than he is entitled to."

§ 456. Examples.—Some of the descriptions inserted in the declaration, under the early practice, were vague and imperfect in the extreme, and are curiosities in procedure. Mr. Adams¹ has made a collection of these descriptions in his treatise. Thus ejectment has been maintained for "five acres of alder carr" in Norfolk; alder carr, in that county, signifying land covered with alders. So also in Suffolk for a beast gate; and in Yorkshire for cattle gates; and for so many acres of bog, or of mountain;² for a messuage or tenement called the Black Swan;³ for corn mills, without stating whether wind or water mills;⁴ and for a stable or cottage.⁵ So a declaration in ejectment for a place called a passage room has been held sufficient,⁶ and for a room and a chamber in the second story;⁷ and for "part of a house in A;"⁸ and for a certain place called a vestry;⁹ and for ten acres of underwood;¹⁰ and for "one hundred acres of gorse and furze;"¹¹ and for

¹ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 27.

² Barnes v. Peterson, 2 Stra. 1063; Bennington v. Goodtitle, 2 Stra. 1084.

³ Burbury v. Yeomans, 1 Sid. 295.

⁴ Fitzgerald v. Marshall, 1 Mod. 90.

⁵ Hill v. Giles, Cro. Eliz. 818; Lady Dacres' Case, 1 Lev. 58; Royston v. Eccleston, Cro. Jac. 654; s. c. Palm. 337.

⁶ Bindover v. Sindercombe, 2 Ld. Raym. 1470.

⁷ Anon. 3 Leon. 210.

⁸ Sullivan v. Seagrave, 2 Stra. 695; Rawson v. Maynard, Cro. Eliz. 286.

⁹ Hutchinson v. Fuller, 3 Lev. 95.

¹⁰ Warren v. Wakeley, 2 Rolle, 482.

¹¹ Fitzgerald v. Marshall, 1 Mod. 90.

“fifty acres of moore and marsh ;”¹ and for “ten acres of pease ;”² and for a manor or moiety of a manor generally, without any mention of the number of acres.³

§ 457. Modern practice.—The method of describing the lands in the pleadings and process in modern actions in the nature of ejectment, is regulated, in some of our States, by statute. The ancient strictness of real writs is much relaxed.⁴ The property should be described if practicable by metes and bounds, but this is not essential.⁵ The general requisites of a sufficient description of lands are so obviously apparent that most of the numerous mistakes and miscarriages of actions to be found in the reports, resulting from imperfect descriptions of the locus in quo in the pleadings, must be attributed to the carelessness of pleaders. The requirements as to correctly pleading the geographical position of the lands will be noticed in discussing the subject of venue.⁶ The general rule is that the country or State and the county in which the lands are situated, should be stated in the pleadings, and in most cases the town or city, or section or subdivision of the county should be added. These allegations are often held to be jurisdictional, actions for the trial of title to land being local in their nature, and should not be overlooked by the pleader.⁷

It is sufficient if the demanded premises are described with such substantial accuracy in the declaration that they can be identified by the application of the evidence

¹ Connor v. West, 5 Burr. 2672.

² Odingsal v. Jackson, 1 Brownl. & G. 149.

³ Warden's Case, Hetley, 146; Cole v. Aylott, Litt. 299-301; Hems v. Stroud, Latch, 61. Speaking of a description in a writ of dower the Supreme Court of Massachusetts says, (1839): “When lands are demanded, the description of them must be so certain that seizin may be delivered by the sheriff without reference to any description dehors the writ. It is not necessary in every case to describe the land demanded by metes and bounds, but there must be a certain description in the writ itself, and no defect can be cured by a reference to any existing conveyance.” Atwood v. Atwood, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 287. See College Corner & R. G. Road Co. v. Moss, 92 Ind. 119.

⁴ Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. 498.

⁵ Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 494.

⁶ See Chapter XVII.

⁷ See Leary v. Langsdale, 35 Ind. 74. In order that lands may be subjected to an injunction they should be clearly designated. Snyder v. Canal R. R. Co., 13 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 329.

to the description ;¹ and that the sheriff will be able to know how to execute the mandate of the court.²

§ 458. General and particular descriptions.—In Inge v. Garrett,³ in the Supreme Court of Indiana, it appeared that the complaint contained a general, followed by a specific description of the lands. The particular description did not, as it professed to, contain a more definite description of the same lands mentioned in the general description. The court held that if these descriptions were intended to apply to the same land, and were contained in a deed, the rule that words of particular description will control more general terms of description, when both cannot stand together, would require the court to adopt the more particular and reject the general description.⁴ The same rule, it was held, should be applied to a pleading. Hence a deed which did not contain the particular description set forth in the complaint was held to be properly rejected on the trial. And where the declaration contains a general description, the court will on motion order the plaintiff to furnish a more particular and detailed description of the lands.⁵

§ 459. Johnson v. Nevill.—The Supreme Court of North Carolina remarked, in Johnson v. Nevill,⁶ that particularity of description admitted of many degrees, and its sufficiency depended upon the objects to be answered by it; that in ejectment there can be but two objects: First. To enlighten the defendant as to what land is claimed. Secondly. To enable the sheriff to determine from the execution itself of what premises he is to put the plaintiff in possession. The court further remark that though these reasons seem plausible, yet “their weight is much diminished by the reflection, that however particular and defi-

¹ Munson v. Munson, 30 Conn. 425.

² Cunningham v. McCollum, 98 Ind. 40, and cases cited.

³ 38 Ind. 96.

⁴ See Gano v. Aldridge, 27 Ind. 294; Moore v. Griffin, 22 Me. 350; College Corner & R. G. Road Co. v. Moss, 92 Ind. 128.

⁵ Den d. Phillips v. Phillips, 21 N. J. L. 436; Goodright v. Rich, 7 T. R. 332, and note; Doe d. Roberts v. Roe, 13 M. & W. 691; Doe d. Winnall v. Broad, 2 Man. & G. 523; Johnson v. Nevill, 65 N. C. 677.

⁶ 65 N. C. 677.

nite (short of a photograph) a description of an object may be, it always requires some evidence outside of the written description to enable a stranger to apply it to the parcel intended; so that even in such a case, the sheriff is obliged either to satisfy himself of the identity of the land by witnesses, or to act on the representations for the plaintiff. It has, therefore, been the modern practice of the plaintiff, at his peril, to point out the land recovered to the sheriff, who puts him in possession accordingly. Such a practice sometimes produces inconvenience, as when the plaintiff seeks to obtain possession of more or other land than he has recovered. But in such a case the court will always interfere, and restrict the action of the sheriff under the writ to the land to which the plaintiff proved title on the trial. It was found by experience that the contrary course of requiring a precise and minute description of the land in the declaration was attended with inconveniences vastly greater. If a description be minute, it must be proved with exactness, or else the minuteness only misleads. Under such a rule, there is constant danger that a plaintiff may lose his cause from a variance in minute particulars, not entering into the merits, and the delay and expense of trials are greatly aggravated. To avoid these evils, the constant tendency of modern opinion has been to reduce the certainty required in pleading within the more moderate limits which experience has shown to be reasonable and convenient.”¹

§ 460. Property described by street numbers, etc.—A declaration in ejectment “for the premises situated No. 136 South Third street, in the city of Philadelphia,” is sufficient in a city having a known system of street numbers regulated by municipal laws, recognized in the transaction of general business, and acted upon by every one.² A description by metes and bounds is required in ejectment only so far as is necessary to identify the property with certainty.³ And a declaration in ejectment for property "lying between Water Street and the river Monongahela, with the appurtenances, situate and being in the city of Pittsburgh," has been sustained, as being sufficiently specific, by the Supreme Court of the United States.¹

¹ See Seward v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 427; Clark v. Clark, 7 Vt. 190.

² Flanigen v. City of Philadelphia, 51 Penn. St. 491.

³ Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 432.

§ 461. Description by reputed name.—Describing the land by a name is a sufficient substitute for metes and bounds if it can be rendered sufficiently certain by the evidence.² A description in a will of "all my lands on both sides of Haw river in Chatham County, and all the mills and appurtenances and improvements thereto, said property being known as the McClenahan Mills," has been held sufficiently definite to constitute color of title, provided the jury found that the tract of land was well known throughout the county by the name used in the will.³ So designating land as "The Home Place," "The Lyn Place," and "The Leonard Greeson Place," have been held sufficient descriptions if the property was well known by that name.⁴ The name of a place may serve to identify it to the apprehension of more persons than a description by coterminous lands and water-courses, and with equal certainty. For example "Mount Vernon, the late residence of General Washington," is better known by that name than by a description of it as situate on the Potomac river, and adjoining the lands of A., B. and C. Indeed the name of a place frequently overrules a mistaken description.⁵ A count in a writ of right, demanding "a certain tenement, consisting of the one stone house with the appurtenances," was held to be a demand for the land on which the house stands, and sufficiently certain.⁶ And in a declaration in trespass to try title, although advantageous, it is not necessary to describe a close by its abutments; "a

¹ Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. 498.

² Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 40; Whitney v. Buckman, 19 Cal. 300; Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 494.

³ Henley v. Wilson, 81 N. C. 405.

⁴ Smith v. Low, 2 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 457.

⁵ See Proctor v. Pool, 4 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 370. See, further, Ritter v. Barrett, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 133; Kitchen v. Herring, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. C.) 190; Fouke v. Kemp's Lessee, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 135; Lahiffe v. Hunter, Harper (S. C.) Law, 184.

⁶ Snapp v. Spengler, 2 Leigh (Va.), 1. See Beverley v. Fogg, 1 Call (Va.), 484.

certain plantation, close and tract of land" has been held to be a sufficient description.¹

§ 462. Sections of townships.—Proof of the number of the section, and the township, range, and meridian is sufficient to sustain a verdict, where the declaration counts for lands by the number of the government surveys.² A complaint in ejectment for a "part of the southwest quarter of section —, township nineteen, range four west, containing one hundred and fourteen and sixty-five hundredths acres," has been held, by the Supreme Court of Indiana, to be bad. The court remarks: "A judgment, founded on such a complaint, would hardly authorize the issuing of a writ which would justify the officer in putting the plaintiff in possession of any particular property."³

§ 462a. Descriptions considered sufficient.—Where the premises were described as about fifty acres in the southern part of a lot, the boundaries of which were fully and particularly given, this was considered sufficient.⁴ A correct description of the premises in ejectment, save that they are located in another city, will not vitiate the complaint.⁵ A description of the premises giving the number of acres, of what kind, the county, town, etc., and that the land was surveyed pursuant to a warrant granted to A. B., was held to be sufficient after verdict.⁶

§ 463. Defective description.—In Budd v. Bingham,⁷ in the Supreme Court of New York, the following description: "Northwardly, by lands of said plaintiff; eastwardly, by lands of said plaintiff; southwardly, by lands of said defendant; and westwardly, by lands of said plaintiff,"

¹ Broughton v. Broughton, 4 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 491.

² Dart v. Hercules, 34 Ill. 395. See, further, Sims v. Thompson, 30 Ala. 158; Rayburn v. Elrod, 43 Ala. 700; Heifner v. Porter, 12 Ala. 470; Pickett v. Doe, 13 Miss. 470.

³ Jolly v. Ghering, 40 Ind. 139.

⁴ St. John v. Northrup, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 31. Compare Spect v. Gregg, 51 Cal. 198; White v. Den d. Woodruff, 24 N. J. Law, 754. But see Hammond v. Stoy, 85 Ind. 457.

⁵ Brake v. Stewart, 88 Ind. 422.

⁶ Fisher v. Larick, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 99.

⁷ 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 494.

was held to embrace nothing whatever, or rather to describe only a straight line; because, assuming that which the complaint asserts to be true, the lands of the plaintiff and the defendant join upon a line running east and west; hence there can be no intermediate territory, as the lines unite and are blended into one line. It was further held that, as the complaint omitted to describe any premises whatever, there was nothing which could be made definite and certain by amendment, or by a bill of particulars. "Three and one half acres off of" a specified tract is not a good description in a complaint in forcible entry proceedings.¹ Describing land as "six — of lot number five," etc., is incurably bad.² Where the writ was "indescriptive except by adjoiners," and no shape or form of the land was given, the court held that delivery of possession could not be made by the sheriff.³

§ 464. Amendment of description.—A misdescription in the writ may be amended⁴ in the discretion of the court,⁵ and a new description filed, but the amendment, where it includes new lands, will not relate back to the commencement of the action, so as to affect rights the defendant might have acquired under the statute of limitations. The rights of the defendant are the same as though the writ had issued at the date of the amendment.⁶ The defendant may on motion, as we have seen, compel the plaintiff to give a more particular description.⁷ It seems to have been held in Maine, on a writ of entry, that an amendment embracing a different piece of land from that described in the declaration, was inadmissible, as setting forth a new cause of action. If, however, the amendment merely furnished a more particular and certain description of the land originally sued for, the court said that it would

¹ Klingensmith v. Faulkner, 84 Ind. 331.

² Unversaw v. Myers, 37 Ind. 487.

³ Hunt v. McFarland, 38 Pa. St. 71.

⁴ Leeds v. Lockwood, 84 Penn. St. 70; Sample v. Robb, 16 Penn. St. 305; Pickett v. Doe ex dem. Pope, 74 Ala. 132.

⁵ Russell v. Conn, 20 N. Y. 83.

⁶ Kaul v. Lawrence, 73 Penn. St. 410; Trego v. Lewis, 58 Penn. St. 463; Kille v. Ege, 82 Penn. St. 102; Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 124. See § 454*b*.

⁷ Johnson v. Nevill, 65 N. C. 677. See Stevens v. Webb, 17 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 213, as to when a bill of particulars will not be ordered. See § 458.

be unobjectionable.¹ But in trespass to try title in Texas, the plaintiff may, by an amended petition, describe land of different location, and allege a chain of title other than that set forth and relied upon in the original petition.² A complaint in ejectment in New York described the premises as "situate in the village of Forrestville, etc., viz., the store-room of the said defendants, which at and previous to said time had been occupied by said defendants as a billiard saloon, and situate in said village and adjoining the Morrison House in said Forrestville, together with the cellar under said store, being the cellar and first floor of the building of the defendants, adjoining the Morrison House in the village of Forrestville in said county, together with the right to use the back yard of the lot upon which said building stands, in common with the defendants." At the trial the defendants moved, after a jury had been impaneled, to dismiss the complaint, on the ground that it contained no description of any land. The motion was denied, and an exception taken; later in the trial, and after an accurate description of the premises claimed had been given in evidence, the court allowed the plaintiff to amend the complaint by inserting the correct description in it. It was held on appeal that, conceding the description was originally uncertain and defective, the court was at liberty to proceed with the trial, and to allow the amendment, in the exercise of its judicial discretion, and that this discretion was not the subject of review.³ The complaint in ejectment, or in a real action, may be amended, even after the evidence is closed, to correct a misdescription of the land in controversy.⁴

§ 464a. Bill of particulars.—The Court of Appeals of New York⁵ said (1874), that the constant course of practice in that State was to obtain a bill of particulars to ascertain the precise premises for which the plaintiff was

¹ Wyman v. Kilgore, 47 Maine, 184.

² Hunter v. Morse, 49 Tex. 219. See Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478.

³ Olendorf v. Cook, 1 Lansing (N. Y.), 37.

⁴ Russell v. Erwin's Adm'r, 38 Ala. 44; Bird v. Decker, 64 Maine, 550. A clerical error in the description in a lis pendens will not vitiate it. Watson v. Wilcox, 39 Wis. 643.

⁵ Tilton v. Beecher, 59 N. Y. 188.

proceeding.¹ The right to a bill of particulars seems applicable to all actions in which the plaintiff declares generally without specifying particularly the subject of the action.²

It is only under special circumstances in England that the court will order particulars of the premises sought to be recovered in ejectment,³ and the order does not operate as a stay of proceedings unless it is so expressed.⁴ The claimant may be compelled to furnish a map with the bill of particulars.⁵ But the plaintiff cannot compel production of documents in the defendant's possession which the latter swears relate solely to the defense of his title.⁶

§ 464b. Particulars of breaches.—In ejectment for forfeiture of a lease, the plaintiff may be compelled to furnish particulars of the breaches of covenant upon which he intends to rely, with the dates, and will only be permitted to give in evidence at the trial matters set forth in the bill of particulars.⁷ And where a remainder man brings ejectment to avoid a lease granted by the life tenant, as not being in execution of the power of leasing vested in him, the court may order the particulars of the alleged defects in the execution of the power.⁸ So the court may order an inspection of a lease.⁹ Where the particulars delivered were "for selling hay and straw off the land, removing manure, and non-cultivation," evidence of a breach of covenant by mismanagement in over-cropping, or by deviating from the usual rotation of crops, was held to be inadmissible.¹⁰

¹ Vischer v. Conant, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 396, per Savage, Ch. J., and note; Goodright v. Rich, 7 T. R. 332 in notis; Longfield on Eject. p. 79; Graham v. Whitely, 26 N. J. Law, 254.

² See Den d. Phillips v. Phillips, 21 N. J. L. 436. Compare Summers v. Brady, 56 Miss. 10. View will not be granted unless it be absolutely necessary. Ostrander v. Kneeland, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 276, and note. See Freeholders of Gravesend v. Voorhis, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 237.

³ Doe d. Saxton v. Turner, 11 C. B. 896.

⁴ Doe d. Roberts v. Roe, 13 M. & W. 691; Doe d. Vernon v. Roe, 7 A. & E. 14.

⁵ Ross v. Ejector, 2 Irish Law Rep. 25.

⁶ Iyell v. Kennedy, L. R. 20 Ch. D. 484.

⁷ Doe d. Birch v. Philips, 6 T. R. 597; Cole on Ejectment, p. 120.

⁸ Doe d. Egremont v. Williams, 7 Q. B. 686.

⁹ Doe d. Child v. Roe, 1 El. & B. 279.

¹⁰ Doe d. Winnall v. Broad, 2 Man. & G. 523. See § 444, and note, also § 447.

CHAPTER XVII.

VENUE.—LOCAL AND TRANSITORY ACTIONS.

- | | |
|---|---|
| § 465. Actions affecting realty are local. 466. Residence of the parties immaterial. 467. Local actions not maintainable in foreign jurisdictions. 467a. Lex loci rei sitæ. 468. Ejectment for lands lying in several counties. 469. Questions as to venue.—How raised. | § 470. Distinctions between actions local by nature and actions local by statute. 471. Change of venue. 472. Practice in New York. 473. Changes in territorial limits of counties. 474. Changes in channel of a stream dividing counties. 475. Venue in Federal courts. |
|---|---|

§ 465. Actions affecting realty are local.—Actions for the recovery of real property, or for the determination of an interest therein, are local, and must be instituted in the county in which the premises are situated;¹ and conflicting titles and rights to the possession of lands must be determined by the courts of the State wherein the lands lie.² The distinction between transitory and local actions in no way depends upon the difference between equitable and common law jurisdiction; and whether the relief is sought at common law or in chancery, the question of jurisdiction equally applies.³ Lord Mansfield stated, in 1774, that ejectment was a local action, and in its nature a proceed-

¹ Draper v. Kirkland, 1 Head (Tenn.), 2; Blake v. Freeman, 13 Me. 130; Bellas v. Houtz, 8 Watts (Penn.), 373; Doulson v. Matthews, 4 T. R. 503; Mayor, &c. v. Ewart, 2 W. Bl. 1070; Mayor of London v. Cole, 7 T. R. 587, 588; Mersey, &c. Nav. Co. v. Douglas, 2 East, 498, 499; Livingston v. Jefferson, 1 Brock. C. C. 203; Roach v. Damron, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 425; Graves v. McKeon, 2 Denio (N. Y.), 639; Warren v. Webb, 1 Taunt. 379; Northern Ind. R. R. Co. v. Mich. Cent. R. R. Co. 15 How. 233. See Putnam v. Bond, 102 Mass. 370; Loeb v. Mathis, 37 Ind. 306; Hamer v. Raymond, 5 Taunt. 789; Watts v. Kinney, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 82; Atlantic & P. Tel. Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. 14 J. & S. (N. Y.) 377; Stark v. Burr, 56 Tex. 130.

² Clopton v. Booker, 27 Ark. 482. See McGoon v. Scales, 9 Wall. 23; Story on Conflict of Laws, § 543; Burbank v. Payne, 17 La. Ann. 15; American Union Telegraph Co. v. Middleton, 80 N. Y. 408; Watts' Adm'r v. Kinney, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 484.

³ Atlantic & P. Tel. Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. 14 J. & S. (N. Y.) 377; People v. Central R. R. Co. 42 N. Y. 283; Northern Ind. R. R. Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. R. Co. 15 How. 233.

ing in rem, in which possession was to be delivered by the sheriff of the county, and that, therefore, the judgment could have no effect if the action was not laid in the county in which the lands were situated.¹ The same rule prevailed in the system of real actions,² and is still generally applicable to mixed actions, waste, quare impedit,³ trespass,⁴ case for nuisances,⁵ and all actions for injuries to real property.⁶ In *Casey v. Adams*⁷ Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, said: "Local actions are in the nature of suits in rem, and are to be

¹ Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 161-176; Gardner v. Granniss, 57 Ga. 550. See Goodtitle v. Lammiman, 2 Campb. 274; Mayor of London v. Cole, 7 T. R. 588; Casey v. Adams, 102 U. S. 66.

² Booth on Real Actions, p. 1.

³ Gould's Pleadings, p. 105.

⁴ American Union Tel. Co. v. Middleton, 80 N. Y. 408; Dodge v. Colby, 28 N. Y. Daily Reg. 737.

⁵ Warren v. Webb, 1 Taunt. 379. See Miss. & Mo. R. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Black, 485.

⁶ Jacks v. Moore, 33 Ark. 31; Huenermund v. Erie Ry. Co. 48 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 55; Champion v. Doughty, 18 N. J. L. 3; Oliver v. Loye, 59 Miss. 320; Hurd v. Miller, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 540; Cragin v. Lovell, 88 N. Y. 263; De Courcy v. Stewart, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 561; Thompson v. Crocker, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 59. As to the distinction between local and transitory actions, see Webb v. Goddard, 46 Me. 505; Mason v. Warner, 31 Mo. 508; Henwood v. Cheeseman, 3 S. & R. (Penn.) 500-503; Livingston v. Jefferson, 1 Brock C. C. 203, per Chief Justice Marshall; Casey v. Adams, 102 U. S. 66; Vermont & Mass. R. R. Co. v. Orcutt, 16 Gray (Mass.), 116. An action to procure a decree declaring a deed a mortgage, and for an accounting, has been held, in New York, to be a local action triable exclusively in the county where the property was situated. Bush v. Treadwell, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 27. See Leland v. Hathorne, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 97; s. c. on appeal, 42 N. Y. 547. But see Ely v. Lowenstein, No. 2, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 42. And an action brought to compel the conveyance of a farm to the plaintiff, on the ground that the title to it was held in trust for him by the defendant, has been held, under the New York Code, to be an action for the recovery of real property, and for the determination of an estate, right, or interest therein, which must be tried in the county where the land was situated. Ring v. McCoun, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.), 524; aff'd, 10 N. Y. 268. See Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 587. So an action to restrain the erection of a bridge over a highway, to connect buildings of the defendant standing on opposite sides of the highway, the plaintiff claiming that the erection would injure his property by cutting off the view and light and air, is local and not transitory, under the practice in New York, and must be tried in the county where the real property is situated. Leland v. Hathorne, 42 N. Y. 547. Actions on real covenants are local. White v. Sanborn, 6 N. H. 220; Lienow v. Ellis, 6 Mass. 331; Clark v. Scudder, 6 Gray (Mass.), 122. But in West Virginia, a suit by a grantor of a deed, absolute on its face, to have it declared a mortgage, may be brought in the county where the grantee resides, though the lands lie in another county. Lawrence v. Du Bois, 16 W. Va. 443. In Texas a suit brought to procure a decree canceling a deed for fraud in its execution may be properly instituted in the county of the defendant's residence, without regard to the locality of the land. Lehmberg v. Biberstein, 51 Tex. 457; Vandever v. Freeman, 20 Tex. 336. Use and occupation is not local. Gray v. Johnson, 14 N. H. 419; King v. Fraser, 6 East, 348; Kirtland v. Pounsett, 1 Taunt. 570.

⁷ 102 U. S. 66.

prosecuted where the thing on which they are founded is situated."¹ The court further said, that the distinction between local and transitory actions was as old as the actions themselves, and that no one had ever supposed that laws which prescribed generally the place where a party could be sued, included actions which were local in their character, either by statute or at common law, unless the statute so declared.

§ 466. Residence of the parties immaterial.—In Mississippi ejectment and trespass quare clausum fregit have been declared to be the only actions which could be brought in a county in which the defendant did not reside, and was not found.² It is unnecessary in an action of ejectment to state the residences of the parties, as the situation of the premises, and not the residences of the litigants, determines the county in which the action must be brought.³

§ 467. Local actions not maintainable in foreign jurisdictions.—No action will lie in one State or country to try the title or recover possession of lands lying in another country. Courts ordinarily have no jurisdiction of local actions arising within the borders of a foreign State. Judgments rendered in such cases would be nugatory, for the process of the courts could not be enforced beyond the territorial limits of the State.⁴ In Leary v. Langsdale,⁵ decided by the Supreme Court of Indiana, it was held that a complaint in ejectment was fatally defective which did not disclose the county or State in which the lands were situated, and that the defect was not cured by answer.

§ 467a. Lex loci rei sitæ.—Land is held and alienated according to the law of the place where it is situated; and

¹ s. P. Turnipseed v. Fitzpatrick, 75 Ala. 301.

² Elder v. Hiltzheim, 35 Miss. 231.

³ Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 432.

⁴ Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 176; Bac. Abr. Actions Local, &c. A (a). See Clopton v. Booker, 27 Ark. 482; Burbank v. Payne, 17 La. Ann. 15; American Union Tel. Co. v. Middleton, 80 N. Y. 408; Howe v. Willson, 1 Denio (N. Y.), 181; Watts' Adm'rs v. Kinney, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 484; Bozeman v. Browning, 31 Ark. 377. See § 542.

⁵ 35 Ind. 74.

cannot be owned or appropriated otherwise than according to the will of the local sovereign, the lex loci rei sitæ.¹ The probate of a will in one State does not necessarily pass title in another State. The validity of the will must be determined by the law of the State in which the land lies.² In *Clark v. Graham*³ the court said: "It is perfectly clear, that no title to lands can be acquired or passed, unless according to the laws of the State in which they are situated." This is the underlying principle that leads the Federal courts to follow the State decisions in land controversies. Otherwise rights might be recognized in one court which were denied in another.⁴ In *McGoon v. Scales*⁵ the court observed: "It is a principle too firmly established to admit of dispute at this day, that to the law of the State in which land is situated must we look for the rules which govern its descent, alienation, and transfer, and for the effect and construction of conveyances."⁶

§ 468. Ejectment for lands lying in several counties.—The rule at common law was that only lands lying within the county in which the ejectment was instituted could be recovered by the judgment;⁷ and when the lands were situated within the borders of several counties, it was necessary to make several entries, and bring as many ejectments,⁸ as the recovery in one county did not extend to another.⁹ This inconvenient practice has been practically abrogated¹⁰ by statute in this country. Thus in Tennessee, when the ¹ Sneed v. Ewing, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 460; s. c. 22 Am. Dec. 47; Danner v. Brewer, 69 Ala. 192; Knox v. Jones, 47 N. Y. 395; Abell v. Douglass, 4 Denio (N. Y.), 305. See § 542; United States v. Crosby, 7 Cranch, 115; Clark v. Graham, 6 Wheat. 577; Baxter v. Willey, 9 Vt. 276; s. c. 31 Am. Dec. 623; West v. Fitz, 109 Ill. 428; Kerr v. Moon, 9 Wheat. 566; McCormick v. Sullivant, 10 Wheat. 192; Brine v. Insurance Co., 96 U. S. 635; Hawley v. James, 7 Paige (N. Y.), 213. See § 610*æ*.

² Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 608.

³ 6 Wheat. 577, 579.

⁴ Olcott v. Bynum, 17 Wall. 44; Brine v. Insurance Co. 96 U. S. 635.

⁵ 9 Wall. 23, 27.

⁶ See United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315.

⁷ Hord v. Walker, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 23; Hackett v. Carter, 738 Wis. 398. See Bellas v. Houtz, 8 Watts (Penn.), 373.

⁸ Co. Litt. 252 b., and see 35 Hen. VI. 30. Compare Mayor v. Coffin, 90 N. Y. 312.

⁹ Sowder v. McMillan, 4 Dana (Ky.), 456.

¹⁰ See Bates v. Ray, 102 Mass. 458.

lands are situated within the limits of more than one county, an ejectment for the entire tract may be brought in either county.¹

§ 469. Questions as to venue.—How raised.—Questions as to the correctness of the venue are raised by answer, demurrer, motion, or at the trial. In a case which arose in New York it was held that when the action was local in its nature, and the venue was untrue on the face of the complaint, the defendant could demur.² If the venue is apparently correct in the title, the question of want of jurisdiction must be raised by answer.³ The absence of an allegation that the land is located within the limits of the county in which the action is brought, is not a ground of demurrer if the property is described as being in a town which is within the borders of the county, as the court will take judicial notice of towns created by law.⁴ It has been held in Maine that when an action, local in its nature, is commenced in the wrong county, the defendant is not obliged to plead that fact in abatement. If the objection appear on the record it may be raised by demurrer. Otherwise the defendant may avail himself of it at the trial under the general issue.⁵ In an action of ejectment, which arose in Tennessee, the court decided that the venue must be proved; but it was held that if the title papers covering the land in controversy showed that the premises lay in the county in which the action was brought, oral examination of witnesses, or direct proof as to that fact was unnecessary.⁶ Nor is it competent for the defendant, merely ¹ Session Acts of Tennessee, 1847-48, p. 280. In King v. Portis, 81 N. C. 382, in the Supreme Court of North Carolina, it was held that a foreclosure sale of lands lying in two counties, under a mortgage recorded in only one, passed title to the land in both counties, as against a purchaser under a judgment docketed subsequent to the foreclosure proceedings, in the county in which the mortgage was not registered. But compare Horsley v. Garth, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 471; s. c. 44 Am. Dec. 393. See Barrett v. Watts, 13 S. C. 441.

² Vernilya v. Beatty, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 429.

³ Wilcox v. Moudy, 82 Ind. 220.

⁴ Martin v. Martin, 51 Me. 366; Goodwin v. Appleton, 22 Me. 453; Ham v. Ham, 39 Me. 263; State v. Jackson, 39 Me. 291; Vanderwerker v. People, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 530. See St. Louis, J. & C. R. R. Co. v. Thomas, 47 Ill. 116.

⁵ Hathorne v. Haines, 1 Me. 239; 1 Tidd Pr. 369. See Thrale v. Cornwall, 1 Wils. 165; Bruckshaw v. Hopkins, Cowp. 409, 410; Santler v. Heard, 2 W. Bl. 1033.

⁶ Gorham v. Jones, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 353.

with a view to defeat jurisdiction on the principle that the action is local, to show that de jure the line of the county ought to be located in a different place from that in which it is actually established and known.¹ Nor will courts interfere to decide disputes between independent countries as to sovereignty over particular territory.²

§ 470. Distinction between actions local by nature and actions local by statute.—Actions necessarily local differ from actions naturally transitory, but required by statute to be brought in a particular county, in respect to questions of jurisdiction, for when the objection raised is that the court had no jurisdiction over the subject matter or the parties, to issue the process, the proceeding is void.³ But matters merely of form in practice, which do not affect the substantial merits of the controversy, nor the regular and fair administration of justice, are held to be waived if not excepted to at an early stage of the cause.⁴ Hence, a naturally transitory action brought in a county other than that prescribed by statute will be upheld, unless the objection to the jurisdiction is promptly urged. The Supreme Court of Texas decided, in an action of trespass to try title, that a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, based on the ground that the lands in controversy lay without the limits of the county, came too late after a plea to the merits.⁵

§ 471. Change of venue.—In Texas it is held that great prejudice in the community against the title furnished no ground for a change of venue in an action of forcible entry and detainer, for the title could not be litigated in a proceeding of that character;⁶ and in an action of trespass to try title it was decided that the fact that the judge had given an opinion in regard to the validity of the title in controversy was not a sufficient reason to sustain an order

¹ Hathorne v. Haines, 1 Me. 239.

² Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 3 Sumner, 270.

³ Elder v. Dwight Mfg. Co. 4 Gray (Mass.), 201.

⁴ Webb v. Goddard, 46 Me. 505; Richardson v. Welcome, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 331; Demuth v. Cutler, 50 Me. 298.

⁵ Ryan v. Jackson, 11 Tex. 391. See Heath v. Whidden, 29 Me. 108.

⁶ Warren v. Kelly, 17 Tex. 544.

changing the venue;¹ nor is the fact that parties to the suit are influential citizens of the county a sufficient ground for ordering a change of venue in ejectment.² In Illinois if a party in his application for a change of venue conforms strictly with the requirements of the statute,³ the granting of the change of venue is not considered discretionary, but a matter of absolute right.⁴ This doctrine has been extended to an action of ejectment.⁵ The statute allows the court to impose terms and conditions upon the granting of the order, and where the plaintiffs proved that some of the defendants were non-residents, and the others had no property within the jurisdiction of the court, and plaintiffs were being subjected to a large annual loss by being deprived of the possession, it was held to be a proper exercise of discretion to require the defendant, as a condition of granting the change of venue, to furnish a bond as security for the rents in the event of the plaintiff's success.⁶ The party moving for change of venue waives the right to view, as the court cannot send its jury into another county.⁷

In Minnesota a condemnation proceeding may be taken by a change of venue to another county from that in which the land lies.⁸ In England the venue may be changed under certain circumstances.⁹ This change will, however, be effected only in cases where it is tolerably plain that justice will not be attained by a trial in the county where the lands lie, or that justice and convenience require a change.¹⁰ The affidavits should show that from local causes or from other specified reasons an impartial trial cannot

¹ Houston & T. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 44 Tex. 426.

² Phipps v. Mansfield, 62 Ga. 209.

³ R. S. Illinois, p. 1094, § 11.

⁴ Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Tolman, 80 Ill. 106.

⁵ Mapes v. Scott, 94 Ill. 379.

⁶ Mapes v. Scott, 94 Ill. 379.

⁷ Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. R. Co. v. Coppinger, 66 Ill. 510.

⁸ Simmons v. St. Paul & C. Ry. Co. 18 Minn. 184.

⁹ Longfield on Ejectment, p. 15; Keon v. Keon, 3 Ir. Law Rec. N. S. 137; Jackson v. Lodge, 1 Ir. L. R. 161; Doe d. Williams v. Lloyd, 7 Scott, 143; Doe d. Hickman v. Hickman, 9 Dowl. 364.

¹⁰ Robertson v. Hayne, 16 C. B. 560.

be had where the venue is laid,¹ though the change may be made for convenience of witnesses only.²

§ 472. Practice in New York.—The New York Court of Appeals held that under the practice in that State, a judge had no power to adjourn the trial of a local action to another county.³ The statute of that State requiring that actions for the recovery of any interest in realty must be tried in the county where the land lies, was held not to apply to a suit brought to compel the specific performance of a contract to convey land without the jurisdiction of the State.⁴ In Meldrum v. Sarvis,⁵ decided in 1793 in the New Jersey Supreme Court, the power of the court to change the venue in ejectment for proper cause is asserted, but in the later case of Deacon v. Shreve,⁶ it was held that, under the statutes of that State, the court could not change the venue in a local action from the county where the land was situated. This latter case conforms more closely to the current of modern authority, and accords with the general legislative policy of this country. We may here remark that the Supreme Court of the United States decided, in Cook v. Burnley,⁷ that an exception to a refusal to grant a change of venue was not available for review on a writ of error to that court.

§ 473. Changes in territorial limits of counties.—If, in consequence of a legislative change of boundaries, the land in dispute is, pending an action of ejectment, transferred from one county to another, the venue should be altered, and the record transmitted to the new county, in order that the plaintiff, if successful, may have a writ of habere facias possessionem issued to the sheriff of the county in which the land lies. Otherwise a new action would be

¹ Rex v. Harris, 3 Burr. 1333; The King v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 444.

² Pashley v. Mayor, &c. of Birmingham, 14 C. B. 421.

³ Birmingham Iron Foundry v. Hatfield, 43 N. Y. 224; Gould v. Bennett, 59 N. Y. 124.

⁴ Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 587.

⁵ 1 N. J. L. 203.

⁶ 23 N. J. L. 204.

⁷ 11 Wall. 659.

necessary.¹ And where, after ejectment brought, and before trial, the land in controversy was by legislative act transferred to a different county, the court held that it was thereby deprived of all jurisdiction over the subject matter of the litigation. The cause having meanwhile gone to trial, and resulted in a verdict for plaintiff, an injunction was granted against the sheriff to restrain eviction thereunder.² On the other hand, where the land in dispute had been included in another county, after a decree had been rendered in chancery, it was held in Indiana that a bill to revive the decree should be brought in the county which contained the records. The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery having once attached, it was retained until the court fully and finally acted upon the subject matter before it.³ During the pendency of a real action in Maine, the town in which the land lay was set off to another county, and it was held that the action must proceed and be tried in the county in which it was commenced.⁴ And it has been decided in Wisconsin that where the action was commenced in the proper county, but while it was pending the lands were set off into another county, the court did not thereby lose jurisdiction. In that State the venue in ejectment may be changed by consent, or for cause shown, to a county other than that in which the lands are situated, the jurisdiction of the court not being entirely dependent upon the locus of the real estate.⁵ It is competent for a legislature, in order to avoid the confusion which would arise from the shifting of causes from one county to another, to provide, in establishing a new county, that pending actions of ejectment shall not be disturbed, even as to lands falling within the limits of the new county.⁶ It is held in the United States Circuit Court, that an act taking certain counties out of the west-

¹ Murdock v. Little, 18 Ga. 719. See, contra, Blake v. Freeman, 13 Maine, 130.

² Kelly v. Tate, 43 Ga. 535. Compare Champion v. Doughty, 18 N. J. L. 4.

³ Arnold v. Styles, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 391.

⁴ Blake v. Freeman, 13 Maine, 130.

⁵ Cornell University v. Wisconsin Central R. R. Co., 49 Wis. 158.

⁶ Jackson v. Dains, 2 Cow. (N. Y.), 526.

ern district, and placing them in the eastern district of Arkansas, does not disturb the jurisdiction to try pending causes, which are to be heard the same as though no such legislation existed.¹

§ 474. Change of channel of a stream dividing counties.—Where a stream, which is the boundary of a county or State, alters its channel by a gradual wearing of its banks, the division line shifts with the channel; but if its course is changed by violent or visible alterations, as by making a “cut off,” the abandoned channel continues to be the boundary.²

§ 475. Venue in Federal courts.—In the Federal courts, whenever the subject matter is local, and lies beyond the limits of the district, no jurisdiction attaches to the Circuit Court sitting within that district. An action of ejectment cannot be maintained in a district other than that in which the land is located; nor can an action of trespass quare clausum fregit be prosecuted where the act complained of was not committed in the district. These actions, being local in their character, must be prosecuted where the process of the court can reach the locus in quo.³

¹ Culver v. Woodruff Co., 5 Dillon, 392; s. r. United States v. Dawson, 15 How. 467. See, also, as to divesting jurisdiction, Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. 725; Dunn v. Clarke, 8 Pet., 1; Mollan v. Torrance, 9 Wheat. 537; Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. 290; Hatfield v. Bushnell, 1 Blatchf. 393.

² Collins v. The State, 3 Tex. App. 323. See Holbrook v. Moore, 4 Neb. 437; Missouri v. Kentucky, 11 Wall. 395.

³ Northern Ind. R. R. Co. v. Mich. Cent. R. R. Co., 15 How. 233; s. c. 5 McL. 444; Livingston v. Jefferson, 1 Brock. 203. See Foot v. Edwards, 3 Bla. C. C. 310. So a bill to abate a nuisance is local, and can only be brought in the district where the nuisance is located. Mississippi & Mo. R. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Black, 485.

CHAPTER XVIII.

OF THE PLEA OR ANSWER.

- | | |
|--|--|
| § 476. The general issue. 477. Evidence admissible under general issue. 478. Denial of plaintiff's title under modern practice. 479. Effect of plea of general issue on question of possession. 480. Disclaimer and denial inconsistent. 480a. Writs of right and of entry.—Non-tenure. 481. Special plea and general denial. 482. Pleading statute of limitations and adverse possession. 483. Practice in Texas. 484. General issue in trespass to real property. 485. Equitable defenses and affirmative relief. | § 486. Equitable defenses must be pleaded. 487. Elements of an equitable defense. 488. Defendant need not become an actor. 489. Counter-claim or set-off. 490. Title admitted by answer. 491. Tax title. 492. Pleading a special title. 492a. Pleading easement or outstanding title. 492b. Evidence not to be pleaded. 493. Reply to affirmative or other defense. 494. Demurrer to answer. 494a. Misjoinder of parties.—Demurrer. 495. Supplemental answer or plea puis darrein continuance. |
|--|--|

§ 476. The general issue.—Under the early practice the general issue in ejectment was “not guilty;”¹ and after the entry of the plea no objection could be taken to the declaration, or to the indorsement on the writ.² The filing of the plea is still considered in Illinois to be a full appearance.³ This plea afforded the party interposing it many advantages, and was a dangerous one to a claimant who,

¹ Kirkland v. Thompson, 51 Penn. St. 216; Gallagher v. McNutt, 3 S. & R. (Penn.) 409; Zeigler v. Fisher's Heirs, 3 Penn. St. 365. See Lea v. Slatterly, 7 Baxter (Tenn.), 235; Dorsey on Ejectment, p. 25; Gosser v. Hickenlooper, 81* Penn. St. 281. In an action in Montana where the complaint to recover real property was in the usual form, and the answer denied the right of the claimant to the possession, and denied the wrongful withholding of the land and the damages, the allegations of the answer were held to state conclusions of law, and not to constitute issues joined by pleading. Judgment was rendered upon the answer as sham. McCauley v. Gilmer, 2 Mont. 202. In a case which arose in Ohio, an answer to a petition for dower by a widow, simply denying the right of the petitioner to the dower claimed, was held to be a mode of pleading inadmissible either under the code or in chancery. Finch v. Finch, 10 O. S. 507. An answer alleging that a party is entitled to the possession of land sets forth a conclusion of law. Parks v. Barkley, 1 Mont. 514.

² See James v. Tait, 8 Port. (Ala.) 476.

³ Dart v. Hercules, 34 Ill. 395.

though vested with a meritorious title, might be surprised and defeated by a defense that could not reasonably have been anticipated, for which he was wholly unprepared at the trial, and which might have been avoided or disproved had the real issue been disclosed by the pleadings, or brought to his notice. The plea was broadened in scope in view of the fact that usually no specific title to the land in dispute was set forth in the complaint, and a general denial was therefore the only defense possible by way of pleading. The true issues were suppressed until the day of trial. Some of the authorities held that "not guilty" was the only proper plea in the action of ejectment.¹ It is certain that a most liberal tendency existed and still prevails in the courts, and in modern legislation, to favor this plea, and to admit evidence of available legal defenses of almost every class or nature under it.

§ 477. Evidence admissible under general issue.—Thus, in actions to recover real property in Indiana, all defenses may be given in evidence without special plea;² and in California, after pleading the general issue, the defendant need not set up title in himself.³ In Pennsylvania coverage or any other available defense may be given in evidence under it;⁴ so in Illinois may a defense of homestead right, as a special plea of homestead right has no proper place in ejectment as practiced in that State.⁵ In Wisconsin any matter which would defeat the plaintiff's title, or render the deed on which he relies ineffectual, may be proved without setting it up.⁶ Under the general issue, or a general denial, the defendant, if not a mere trespasser or intruder,⁷ may show title out of the plaintiff

¹ See Bernard v. Elder, 50 Miss. 336; Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.) 302; Tegarden v. Carpenter, 36 Miss. 404; Gallagher v. McNutt, 3 S. & R. (Penn.) 409; Bratton v. Mitchell, 5 Watts (Penn.), 69.

² Poffenberger v. Blackstone, 57 Ind. 288; Dale v. Frisbie, 59 Ind. 530; Woodruff v. Garnor, 20 Ind. 174; Hogg v. Link, 90 Ind. 346; Tracy v. Kelley, 52 Ind. 535; s. p. Kahn v. Old Telegraph Mining Co., 2 Utah, 174.

³ Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 346.

⁴ Black v. Tricker, 52 Penn. St. 436.

⁵ Johnson v. Adleman, 35 Ill. 265. See Patterson v. Kreig, 29 Ill. 514.

⁶ Begg v. Begg, 56 Wis. 536.

⁷ But compare Henderson v. Tennessee, 10 How. 323; Love v. Simms, 9 Wheat. 524. See § 718.

at the commencement of the action, without even connecting himself with such outstanding title in any way.¹ This principle is founded upon the fundamental rule that in ejectment the plaintiff must recover solely upon the strength of his own title, and that he fails in proving his case if the title is shown to be outstanding in another.

A denial, when properly pleaded, does not state facts: it simply denies facts;² and in California, unless the answer denies allegations of the complaint, they stand admitted without further proof.³

§ 478. Denial of plaintiff's title under modern practice.—It is, then, ordinarily sufficient, under the modern practice, to deny generally the title set forth in the declaration or petition, and under such a denial the defendant may prove any facts tending to establish that the plaintiff is not vested with the title or right of possession;⁴ but a mere denial of possession, and of unlawful withholding of the premises claimed, accompanied by an allegation that there has been no demand of possession, does not put the plaintiff's title in issue, nor raise the question of adverse possession. To question the plaintiff's title, in such a case, the defendant must set up title in himself or out of the plaintiff.⁵

A defendant, as we shall see, may set forth as many defenses as he has.⁶

§ 479. Effect of plea of general issue on question of possession.—The authorities are not entirely uniform as to whether the plea of the general issue in ejectment admits or puts in issue the question of the defendant's possession.

¹ Love v. Simms, 9 Wheat. 524; Raynor v. Timerson, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 518-526; Gillett v. Stanley, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 121; Schaubert v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 13-48; Styles v. Gray, 10 Tex. 503; Kinney v. Vinson, 32 Tex. 125; Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 183.

² See Town of Venice v. Breed, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 603.

³ Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28; McLaughlin v. Kelly, 22 Cal. 212; Tucker v. Hamilton, 108 Ill. 464.

⁴ Wicks v. Smith, 18 Kan. 508.

⁵ Ford v. Sampson, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 183; s. c. 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 447. See Wade v. Doyle, 17 Fla. 522; Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505.

⁶ Crary v. Goodman, 12 N. Y. 266; Ransom v. Anderson, 9 S. C. 438; McClane v. White, 5 Minn. 178; Shawhan v. Long, 26 Iowa, 488; Penny v. Cook, 19 Iowa, 538.

The general rule, according to many of the cases, is, that the defendant, by interposing this plea, admits himself to be in possession of the whole of the lands claimed in the writ or declaration;¹ and that if he desires to dispute or controvert the question of possession, the proper method to accomplish that result is by special plea, in order to avoid this admission of possession.² Thus, under the practice in Massachusetts, on a writ of entry, the tenant who pleads the general issue only, is estopped to deny that he was in possession of the premises and claiming a freehold therein;³ and in a real action in Maine the defendant admits himself to be in possession of the entire premises unless he files a disclaimer⁴ as to the whole or some part thereof.⁵ An answer setting up title to only a portion of the demanded premises should, as we shall see,⁶ particularly describe the part to which title is claimed.⁷ In North Carolina, if the defendant in ejectment intends to disavow possession, it has been held that he should not enter any defense.⁸

§ 480. Disclaimer and denial inconsistent.—Under the practice in Alabama the plea of “not guilty,” and a denial of the possession of the premises sued for, were held to be incompatible defenses, for the former plea was regarded as equivalent to the consent rule, which required the defend-

¹ Ulsh v. Strode, 13 Penn. St. 433; Hill v. Hill, 43 Penn. St. 521; Holman v. Elliott, 86 Ind. 231; Callan v. McDaniel, 72 Ala. 102; Alexander v. Wheeler, 69 Ala. 332; Cocheco Man'fg. Co. v. Whittier, 10 N. H. 309; Graves v. Amoskeag Co., 44 N. H. 463.

² Bernard v. Elder, 50 Miss. 336; Cumming v. Butler, 6 Ga. 88; Stevens v. Griffith, 3 Vt. 448; Mooberry v. Marye, 2 Munf. (Va.) 453. Contra, Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 649.

³ Swan v. Stephens, 99 Mass. 7; Higbee v. Rice, 5 Mass. 344; Washington Bank v. Brown, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 293; Devens v. Bower, 6 Gray (Mass.), 126.

⁴ See Jordan v. Stevens, 55 Mo. 361.

⁵ Blake v. Dennett, 49 Me. 102. See Perkins v. Raitt, 43 Me. 280; Mills v. Peirce, 2 N. H. 10.

⁶ See § 492.

⁷ Anderson v. Fisk, 36 Cal. 625; Guy v. Hanly, 21 Cal. 397.

⁸ McClennan v. McCleod, 75 N. C. 64. See Thomas v. Orrell, 5 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 569; Judge v. Houston, 12 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 108. An answer denying that the defendant has “unlawfully, wrongfully and in violation of plaintiff's rights, had the possession,” does not thereby put in issue the fact of possession. Burke v. The Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 403; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 209. A denial that “defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered and dispossessed,” plaintiff admits entry and ouster. Busenius v. Coffee, 14 Cal. 91; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 214.

ant to admit the fictitious averments as to lease, entry and ouster.¹ In an action in the nature of ejectment, in that State, an answer, "disclaiming all right, interest or possession in the premises sued for, at or since the commencement of the action," has been held tantamount to a plea denying possession, and which the court could not disregard by rendering judgment nil dicit for the plaintiff.²

A disclaimer by the defendant, unless withdrawn or amended, operates as an estoppel by record as to the land disclaimed.³ The party disclaiming is relieved from future costs.⁴

§ 480a. Writs of right and of entry.—Non-tenure.—If the demandant in a writ of right claims more lands than the tenant holds, the latter may plead non-tenure, but the writ abates only as to the parcel as to which non-tenure is pleaded.⁵ To most real writs in Massachusetts non-tenure was considered a good plea either in bar or abatement,⁶ though some of the authorities considered it matter pleadable in abatement only.⁷ A plea of non-tenure or disclaimer is regarded in New Hampshire as being in the nature of a plea in abatement,⁸ while in Maine it can only be pleaded in abatement and within the time prescribed by the rules of court.⁹ Judge Story considered also that a better subsisting adverse title in a third person was no defense to a writ of right which brought in controversy only the mere rights of the parties to the suit,¹⁰ but this is not the modern view.

¹ Bernstein v. Humes, 60 Ala. 582; King v. Kent, 29 Ala. 542; Clarke v. Clarke, 51 Ala. 498; Sledge v. Swift, 51 Ala. 386. See Creighton v. Proctor, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 433; Contra Miller v. Chandler, 59 Cal. 540.

² Morris v. Beebe, 54 Ala. 300.

³ Greeley v. Thomas, 56 Pa. St. 35. Compare Noé v. Card, 14 Cal. 576.

⁴ Killen v. Compton, 60 Ga. 116.

⁵ Green v. Liter, 8 Cranch. 230.

⁶ Fiedler v. Carpenter, 2 Woodb. & M. 211.

⁷ Mills v. Peirce, 2 N. H. 10; Brown v. Miltimore, 2 N. H. 442; Booth on Real Actions, 28; Liter v. Green, 2 Wheat. 306.

⁸ Tappan v. Tappan, 31 N. H. 41; Stark v. Brown, 40 N. H. 345.

⁹ Newbegin v. Langley, 39 Me. 200.

¹⁰ Green v. Liter, 8 Cranch. 230, 250. No formal joinder of issue by the demandant in a real action is necessary in Massachusetts, as the case is at issue when the plea is filed. Provident Institution for Savings v. Burnham, 128 Mass. 462.

§ 481. Special plea and general denial.—Under the practice in Texas a general denial is not abandoned, defeated or qualified by subsequent special pleas of confession and avoidance, and it has been held by the Supreme Court of that State to be error to sustain exceptions to the entire answer if a general denial had been filed and not expressly withdrawn.¹

§ 482. Pleading statute of limitations and adverse possession.—The question as to whether or not it is necessary to plead the statute of limitations in actions in the nature of ejectment, to entitle the defendant to introduce evidence in support of a title so acquired, or to protect the possession, is regulated by statute in many of the States. Where no statute governs, the cases are contradictory. In the famous case of Taylor v. Horde,² Lord Mansfield said: "Ejectment is a possessory remedy, and only competent where the lessor of the plaintiff may enter; therefore it is always necessary for the plaintiff to shew that his lessor had a right to enter, by proving a possession within twenty years, or accounting for the want of it, under some of the exceptions allowed by the statute. Twenty years' adverse possession is a positive title to the defendant; it is not a bar to the action or remedy of the plaintiff only; but takes away his right of possession. Every plaintiff in ejectment must shew a right of possession, as well as of property; and therefore the defendant need not plead the statute." The statute of limitations, if relied upon as a defense in ejectment, must be pleaded in Wisconsin;³ and it was held to be matter resting entirely in the sound discretion of the court and not error, to allow a defendant to amend his pleadings so as to set up the statute of limitations.⁴ It has been decided in Mississippi under the Pleading Act of 1850, that the defendant could set up the statute of limitations by special plea, although at common law a special plea was not allowed, as the defense could be made under

¹ Hurt v. Blackburn, 20 Tex. 601. But see Custard v. Musgrove, 47 Tex. 217.

² 1 Burr. 119.

³ Lawrence v. Kenney, 32 Wis. 281; Orton v. Noonan, 25 Wis. 672.

⁴ Meade v. Lawe, 32 Wis. 261; Fogarty v. Horrigan, 28 Wis. 142; Eldred v. The Oconto Co., 30 Wis. 206. See Ferguson v. Miles, 8 Ill. 358.

the plea of not guilty. The court said further that it was error to sustain a demurrer to a special plea merely because the defendant could prove the same defense under the general issue, which had originally been pleaded.¹ It is difficult to see how the defendant could have been prejudiced or affected by sustaining the demurrer,² or what good purpose could be subserved by encumbering the record with useless pleas. In an action in the nature of a writ of right in Mississippi, the defendant is not required to plead the statute of limitations, and where the seizin is denied the demandant is bound to prove it within the time prescribed. The defense is allowable under the general denial of seizin in the answer.³ In Alabama adverse possession may be given in evidence under the plea of the general issue;⁴ and the same rule prevails in Illinois.⁵ In North Carolina an outstanding title by adverse possession may be shown under this plea. The reason given is that the inquiry in ejectment is intended to ascertain whether or not the plaintiff has title to the land claimed; not whether the defendant has no title.⁶ In Hogan v. Kurtz,⁷ the Supreme Court of the United States recognize the rule that proof of title by adverse possession is admissible under the general issue. The same rule prevails in Florida,⁸ though in that State a plea of ejectment, which averred that neither the plaintiffs, nor those under whom they claimed title, were seized or possessed of the premises within seven years prior to the commencement of the action, or before the accruing of the right of action, was held bad, because it did not set forth facts showing that during the same period the defendant had been in adverse possession.⁹ Pleading that the entry was under a claim of title

¹ Tegarden v. Carpenter, 36 Miss. 404.

² Poffenberger v. Blackstone, 57 Ind. 288; Johnson v. Adleman, 35 Ill. 265.

³ Ellis v. Murray, 28 Miss. 129.

⁴ Lay v. Lawson, 23 Ala. 377.

⁵ Stubblefield v. Borders, 92 Ill. 279. See Wicks v. Smith, 18 Kan. 508.

⁶ Freeman v. Sprague, 82 N. C. 366; Davis v. McArthur, 78 N. C. 357.

⁷ 94 U. S. 773. Stearns on Real Actions, 241. See McConnel v. Reed, 5 Ill. 124; Wade v. Doyle, 17 Fla. 522; Zeigler v. Fisher, 3 Penn. St. 367; Zeilin v. Rogers, 21 Fed. Rep. 103.

⁸ Weiskoph v. Dibble, 18 Fla. 24; Spratt v. Price, 18 Fla. 300.

⁹ Wade v. Doyle, 17 Fla. 522.

exclusive of any other right, and that the possession had been continued the statutory period is, however, a sufficient answer. The particulars of the possession defining its character need not be set forth.¹ A mere squatter claiming no title, or a person in possession in subordination to the legal title, cannot, as we shall see, acquire the title by adverse possession, because there has been no actual entry or actual possession by the owner during the statutory period, and it is therefore useless to plead the statute in bar in such cases.²

On the other hand, title by adverse possession cannot be shown under a general denial under the practice in California;³ and in that State an answer in ejectment setting forth that the defendant was, at the commencement of the action, and had been for more than five years prior thereto, the owner of, and seized in fee, and entitled to the possession, of the demanded premises, has been held not to constitute a plea of the statute of limitations.⁴ In New York adverse possession must be pleaded, and evidence of a title so acquired cannot be given under the general issue.⁵ In a partition action where the complaint showed a tenancy in common between the parties, a paragraph in the answer, not denying the tenancy in common, but averring fifteen years sole exclusive and undisputed possession, "under claim and color of title, openly, notoriously, continuously, and adversely to any other claim or title whatsoever," was held not to constitute a good defense to the cause of action set forth in the complaint. The averments of the answer were construed to mean that the defendant, as tenant in common, was holding for the benefit of the co-tenancy adversely to all other persons. An allegation of actual ouster or its equivalent was held to be necessary to show a holding adverse to the

¹ Bartlett v. Secor, 56 Wis. 520; s. c. 14 N. W. Rep. 714.

² Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505; Neddy v. The State, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 249. See Stevens v. Hauser, 39 N. Y. 302.

³ McCreery v. Duane, 52 Cal. 262.

⁴ McCreery v. Sawyer, 52 Cal. 257.

⁵ Dezengremel v. Dezengremel, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 457; s. c. 12 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 286; Hanse v. Mead, 2 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 175; s. c. 27 Hun (N. Y.), 162; Butler v. Mason, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 546. See Sands v. St. John, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 628.

co-tenant.¹ Some of the authorities assert that a general denial is sufficient to raise the defense of the statute of limitations, because it negatives the plaintiff's averment of title.² This, we submit, is not the case. The evicted party may have a title enforceable against all the world except the disseizor. Then, as we have seen, the defendant, though incapable of acquiring title to land, may, nevertheless, succeed with a defense of adverse possession.³ This proves that the defense is not one operating upon the title.

Adverse possession of lands only affects or operates upon the remedy; it shields the possessor in that it deprives the true owner of the power to assert and enforce his title. The theory, as we shall see,⁴ is that prescription relates to incorporeal hereditaments, and is founded upon a title based upon a presumed grant, while title by adverse possession refers to corporeal hereditaments, and has no such presumption upon which to rest, but is merely a possession acquired by wrong, and protected from invasion on the part of the true owner by cutting off the latter's remedy.⁵ The better policy would seem, therefore, to be that the defense of adverse possession should be pleaded. It admits the title but avoids it.⁶

§ 483. Practice in Texas.—Under the practice in Texas a plea of "not guilty" in trespass to try title, lets in all defenses except the statute of limitations;⁷ and by interposing this plea the defendant is not regarded as admitting anything. The plea puts in issue not only the title of the

¹ Nicholson v. Caress, 76 Ind. 24. See Sandford v. Tucker, 54 Ind. 219; Bowen v. Preston, 48 Ind. 367; Nelson v. Davis, 35 Ind. 478; Jenkins v. Dalton, 27 Ind. 78. See Chap. IX.

² Nelson v. Brodhack, 44 Mo. 596; Bledsoe v. Simms, 53 Mo. 307; Kyser v. Cannon, 29 O. S. 359; Wintermute v. Montgomery, 11 O. S. 444; Hill v. Bailey, 76 Mo. 454.

³ Overing v. Russell, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 263. See § 253a.

⁴ See § 726.

⁵ In Hanse v. Mead, 27 Hun (N. Y.), 164, Learned, P. J., said: "I do not know that adverse possession of land has any other effect than to bar an opposing claimant's action, under Code Civil Procedure (§§ 365, 368). I know of no statute declaring that the possessor acquires title."

⁶ The question of the application of the statute of limitations must be raised in the court of original jurisdiction to be available on appeal. Upton v. McLaughlin, 105 U. S. 640, and cases cited.

⁷ Dalby v. Booth, 16 Tex. 563.

plaintiff, but also, contrary to the usual practice, the question of the possession of the defendant, and imposes upon the plaintiff the necessity of proving the defendant's possession, and everything requisite to sustain the plaintiff's right of action.¹ The defendant may even show, under a plea of "not guilty," that his deed to the plaintiff, upon which the latter relies to support the action, although absolute on its face, was, in fact, a mortgage; a special plea is not necessary.² In Johnson v. Byler,³ in the Supreme Court of Texas, it was held to be settled doctrine that under the plea of the general issue in trespass to try title, either a legal or an equitable defense, which amounted to an estoppel,⁴ could be introduced without being specially pleaded. But issues which involve affirmative equitable relief must be specially pleaded and the facts set forth in accordance with equitable principles and accompanied by an appropriate prayer for relief.⁵

§ 484. General issue in trespass to real property.—In trespass to real property, a freehold or mere possessory right in the defendant may be given in evidence under the general issue, though it is often advisable to plead liberum tenementum.⁶

§ 485. Equitable defenses and affirmative relief.—As ejectment is an action at law, a recovery under the former practice could only be had upon the legal title to the land. The holder of an equitable title could neither support the action nor set up his equitable title as a basis of affirmative relief, or to defeat a recovery based upon the legal title.⁷ The rights of the holder of the equitable title could only be asserted and established in equity. Injunctions

¹ Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 649.

² Mann v. Falcon, 25 Tex. 271.

³ 38 Tex. 606, 610. See Herrington v. Williams, 31 Tex. 448; Ragsdale v. Gohlke, 36 Tex. 286.

⁴ Compare Creque v. Sears, 17 Hun (N. Y.), 124; Mayer v. Ramsey, 46 Tex. 371; Suttle v. Richmond F. & P. R. R. Co. 76 Va. 291.

⁵ Williams v. Barnett, 52 Tex. 130; Catlin v. Bennett, 47 Tex. 165; Ayres v. Duprey, 27 Tex. 604; Rippetoe v. Dwyer, 49 Tex. 498; Powers v. Armstrong, 36 O. S. 357.

⁶ Cooley v. O'Connor, 12 Wall. 391-399; Monumoi Beach v. Rogers, 1 Mass. 160.

⁷ See Neave v. Avery, 16 C. B. 328.

were frequently granted to restrain ejectment by the holder of the legal title during the pendency of the proceedings in equity upon the equitable title. The modern innovations in systems and forms of judicial procedure, especially the blending of legal and equitable jurisdictions, have wrought radical and highly important changes in the nature and uses of the statutory action of ejectment for the trial of controverted titles. The defendant in many of our States may interpose equitable as well as legal titles or defenses;¹ and when equitable defenses are set up against legal titles the same rule and measure of justice is to be applied as if the proceeding was in equity.² Thus, in an action to recover possession of land for non-payment of rent, the tenant may plead and show by way of counterclaim partial eviction from an easement connected with the land, and is not driven to a cross-action.³

The equities set up should, as a general rule, be such as would have entitled the party to relief in equity against the judgment at law under the old practice.⁴

§ 486. Equitable defenses must be pleaded.—As a general rule equitable defenses must be distinctly pleaded and proved.⁵ In New York when the action is based upon the alleged legal title of the plaintiff to the premises in controversy, it is competent for the defendant to show that he is the equitable owner, and entitled in equity to a conveyance of the premises, or to other appropriate relief.

¹ Newsome v. Williams, 27 Ark. 632; Pope v. Cole, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 406; Smith v. Tome, 68 Penn. St. 158; Dewey v. Hoag, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 365; Phillips v. Gorham, 17 N. Y. 270; Bates v. Rosekrans, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 103; McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 355; Neill v. Keese, 5 Tex. 22; Allison v. Elder, 45 Ga. 17; Elder v. Allison, 45 Ga. 13; Herrington v. Williams, 31 Tex. 448; Bartlett v. Judd, 21 N. Y. 200; Suttle v. Richmond F. & P. R. R. Co. 76 Va. 284; Rosierz v. Van Dam, 16 Iowa, 175; Ten Broeck v. Orchard, 74 N. C. 409; Reece v. Roush, 2 Mont. 586; Pearsall v. Mayers, 64 N. C. 549; Webster v. Bond, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 437; Jones v. Manly, 58 Mo. 559; Stalnaker v. Morrison, 6 Neb. 364; Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342. See § 483.

² Sower v. Weaver, 78 Penn. St. 443; Blair v. Claxton, 18 N. Y. 529; Jones v. Brinker, 20 Mo. 87; Vasquez v. Ewing, 24 Mo. 31; Lombard v. Cowham, 34 Wis. 486; Dale v. Hunneman, 12 Neb. 224.

³ Blair v. Claxton, 18 N. Y. 529.

⁴ See Spratt v. Price, 18 Fla. 300; Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 409.

⁵ McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 355; Cadiz v. Majors, 33 Cal. 288; Millhollin v. Jones, 7 Ind. 715; Powers v. Armstrong, 36 O. S. 357; Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 409; Crecelius v. Mann, 84 Ind. 147; Dale v. Hunneman, 12 Neb. 221; Kahn v. Old Telegraph Min. Co. 2 Utah, 174.

The facts which would formerly have entitled a defendant to be relieved in equity, may be set up in his answer as a full defense.¹ A parol gift of land, accompanied by possession, and valuable improvements made upon the strength of the gift, will be upheld, but the answer setting up the gift is defective if it fails to allege the improvements.² And in ejectment to recover a mining claim, if the defendant relies upon a forfeiture by plaintiff for failure to comply with the local rules and regulations of the mining district, the forfeiture must be specially pleaded.³ It is analogous to a plea in confession and avoidance.

§ 487. Elements of an equitable defense.—It has been held in New York⁴ that if a recovery in ejectment is resisted by an equitable counter claim in the nature of a cross-bill, the answer must contain all the elements of a complaint, or bill in chancery, and must ask affirmative relief;⁵ that the defendant must become an actor in respect to his claim, and that the judgment must be for the plaintiff that he recover the land, or for the defendant that the plaintiff convey to him on such terms as the court shall adjudge. The court held that if an equitable defense were allowed simply as a defense in an action of ejectment, the effect might be to keep the legal title and possession forever separate. So in California, where the answer presents an equitable defense, it must contain all the essential averments of a bill in equity.⁶ The defendant becomes an

¹ Crary v. Goodman, 12 N. Y. 266; Phillips v. Gorham, 17 N. Y. 270; Stone v. Sprague, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 509; Hoppough v. Struble, 60 N. Y. 430; Lamont v. Cheshire, 65 N. Y. 42; Cavalli v. Allen, 57 N. Y. 508; Traphagen v. Traphagen, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 537; Thurman v. Anderson, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 621.

² Montgomery v. Carlton, 56 Tex. 364.

³ Morenhaut v. Wilson, 52 Cal. 263. But compare Steel v. Gold Lead M. Co. 18 Nev. 86.

⁴ Dewey v. Hoag, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 365; Lombard v. Cowham, 34 Wis. 486; Follett v. Heath, 15 Wis. 601; Conger v. Parker, 29 Ind. 380; Hicks v. Sheppard, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 335. But see Webster v. Bond, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 437; Cramer v. Benton, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 216; Stone v. Sprague, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 509; Bates v. Rosekrans, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 98-103.

⁵ See Conger v. Parker, 29 Ind. 380; Lombard v. Cowham, 34 Wis. 486, 492; Du Pont v. Davis, 35 Wis. 634. As to when equity will reform a deed or instrument for fraud or mistake, see Waring v. Somborn, 82 N. Y. 604; Bryce v. Lorrillard Fire Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 240.

⁶ Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 409; S. P. Allen v. Douglass, 29 Kans. 412.

actor with respect to the matters alleged by him,¹ and his defense must be of such a character as may be ripened by a decree of the court into a legal right to the premises, or as will estop the prosecution of the ejectment by the plaintiff. Under the practice of that State, the equitable defense is first passed upon by the court,² and, until it is disposed of the assertion of the legal remedy is in effect stayed. It will not be available unless specially pleaded.³ The necessity of proceeding further with the action at law depends upon the adjudication by the court as to the right to the relief sought by the answer.⁴

§ 488. Defendant need not become an actor.—On the other hand, in Hoppough v. Struble,⁵ in the New York Court of Appeals, it was decided that in an ejectment the defendant could set up as a defense the fact that the land in question was intended to be conveyed to him by a deed from plaintiff, but, by a mistake in the description, was not included. No reformation of the deed was considered necessary, because the same facts which would entitle the defendant to a reformation would establish his equitable right to the possession, and constitute a defense as effectual as the legal title. In Cramer v. Benton,⁶ affirmed in the New York Court of Appeals on the opinion of the court below,⁷ in which the defense to an action of ejectment proceeded upon the ground that the language and legal effect of the deed differed essentially from the intention of the parties, it was held that a case must be presented which would induce a court of equity to interpose and reform the defective instrument, but that it was not absolutely neces-

¹ See Kahn v. Old Telegraph Mining Co. 2 Utah, 174, 197.

² See, also, Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 103.

³ Cadiz v. Majors, 33 Cal. 288; Hartley v. Brown, 51 Cal. 465. See Carman v. Johnson, 20 Mo. 108; Murray v. Walker, 31 N. Y. 399; Safford v. Hynds, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 625.

⁴ Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 248-272; Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660; Blum v. Robertson, 24 Cal. 127; Downer v. Smith, 24 Cal. 114; Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 346-352.

⁵ 60 N. Y. 430. See Crary v. Goodman, 12 N. Y. 266; Bates v. Rosekrans, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 98, 105; aff'd 37 N. Y. 409; Ferguson v. Crawford, 70 N. Y. 253; Mandeville v. Reynolds, 68 N. Y. 528. But see Haire v. Baker, 5 N. Y. 357; Harris v. Vinyard, 42 Mo. 568; State v. Meagher, 44 Mo. 356.

⁶ 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 216.

⁷ 56 N. Y. 638. See Webster v. Bond, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 437.

sary in such a case that a judgment reforming the instrument should be pronounced if the defendant was content to waive, or did not demand such full relief. In this case the court also held that it was impossible to reform the deed, because the statutory period for such a species of relief had elapsed.

The cases are rare in which defendants setting up equitable defenses in ejectment rely upon the possession which their equitable rights confer, and do not become actors, or claim a formal judgment in their favor, for a litigant will be prompted by self-interest to strengthen and perfect his title, and, if expedient or necessary, to acquire the legal title, and will eagerly avail himself of a formal adjudication or finding of the court in his favor. But an important obstacle to a complete adjudication of an equitable defense in an action at law must not be overlooked. A person bringing an action at law cannot generally be compelled to sue any person, except such as he may elect to prosecute. Equitable defenses frequently require the presence of additional parties in the action, without whose presence an affirmative judgment, which would be res adjudicata upon the parties in interest, could not be rendered,¹ and the plaintiff may refuse to bring them before the court. By interposing an equitable defense the defendant does not convert the legal action into an equitable one, nor change the plaintiff's right to have his legal rights determined in a legal forum, nor can he ordinarily be forced to bring in the additional parties.² A vendee in possession, under a contract to purchase the land, may, as we have seen, defend ejectment by his vendor by pleading that he has fully performed the contract; or he can compel a specific performance.³ In Harris v. Vinyard, in the Supreme Court of Missouri, the defendant set up as a defense his purchase of the land under a contract with the plaintiff's deceased father. The court decided that if the answer was true it was sufficient to defeat the action, but that the defendant would not, by reason of a decision of the issues in his favor, be entitled to a decree vesting the title in himself, as against the heirs, and that portion of the answer praying for a decree of title in himself was stricken out.¹

¹ See Cramer v. Benton, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 291; s. c. 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 216; Call v. Chase, 21 Wis. 511.

² Webster v. Bond, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 437; Waters v. Perkins, 65 Ga. 34. See Sawyer v. Chambers, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 110; Shaw v. Millsaps, 50 Miss. 380; contra Ten Broeck v. Orchard, 74 N. C. 409.

³ Pierce v. Tuttle, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 155; Richards v. Elwell, 48 Penn. St. 361; Young v. Montgomery, 28 Mo. 604; Cavalli v. Allen, 57 N. Y. 508; Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547; Tibeau v. Tibeau, 19 Mo. 78; s. c. 6 Am. Rep. 624. See § 322.

In Minnesota the defendant may set up by answer his equities, so far at least as they relate to the right of possession, and ejectment is the proper action in which to litigate them. To prevail against the plaintiff's legal right to the possession in ejectment, the equities pleaded as a defense must be such that, under the former practice, a court of equity would, upon a bill filed setting up the facts, have enjoined the legal owner from proceeding at law.² We may say in conclusion that the general principle underlying the admission of equitable defenses to the action of ejectment under the reformed procedure, is that if the plaintiff, upon the application of such principles as govern the determination of his rights in courts of equity, ought not to be put in possession of the premises, he cannot recover.³

§ 489. Counter-claim, or set-off.—A widow's claim for dower of real estate is not subject to a set-off for damages, nor for money due, nor for the receipt of rents and profits of the whole of the land in which she claims dower; nor can such set-off be interposed as a counter-claim under the practice in New York when she claims no damages.⁴

§ 490. Title admitted by answer.—In Pryor v. Madigan,⁵ in the Supreme Court of California, it appeared that the complaint in ejectment contained the usual averments that at a specified time, prior to the commencement of the

¹ Harris v. Vinyard, 42 Mo. 568.

² Williams v. Murphy, 21 Minn. 534.

³ Chase v. Peck, 21 N. Y. 581, per Denio, J.; Pomeroy's Rem. & Rem. Rights, 116.

⁴ Bogardus v. Parker, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 303. See Elliott v. Gibbons, 31 N. Y. 67.

⁵ 51 Cal. 178. See § 476, note; Finch v. Finch, 10 O. S. 501; McCauley v. Gilmer, 2 Mont. 202.

action, the claimant owned the premises in fee, and while so the owner, and in possession, was ousted by the defendants, who had ever since withheld the possession. The answer admitted the defendants' possession, and averred that the defendants "claim the fee," and then proceeded to deraign title under an administrator's sale. The administrator's sale was adjudged void. It was held that the averment that the defendants "claim the fee," merely meant that they had acquired the title at the administrator's sale, and that it was not a denial of the plaintiff's title, except as predicated upon that fact; and the administrator's sale having been held void, the plaintiff's title was adjudged to be admitted by the answer.

§ 491. Tax title.—When the defendant, in an action of ejectment for dower under the practice in New York, set up a tax deed, it was held that the answer should contain averments of the various matters necessary to be proved in order to establish the validity of the conveyance. If the facts are not pleaded, the defendant cannot give evidence to support them, and the answer is bad on demurrer.¹

§ 492. Pleading a special title.—In a case which arose in Texas the court decided that where the defendant in trespass to try title filed a special plea, claiming title in himself, and setting it out specially, he should be confined to the title so pleaded in giving evidence of his defense, and the plea of not guilty, if also interposed, would be considered as thereby waived.² By pleading specially the defendant gives notice of his defenses, and the plaintiff has the right to assume that the defendant will rely on none other, and ought not to be required to come prepared with evidence to meet other defenses than those which the pleadings disclose.³ But this rule does not apply where the special defense is the statute of limitations, and in such a case the defendant may show the invalidity of the plaintiff's title with the same effect as if the special plea had not been made.¹ The defendant may plead specially though his defenses were equally available under the plea of not guilty.² Thus in Kansas the defendant may state his defenses specifically, and his answer is then governed by the ordinary rules of pleading. The pleadings must determine the relevancy of the evidence offered, for, even though unverified, they are professional statements by counsel of the claims of their clients, and the matters which they intend to prove.³ In Oregon if the defendant desires to claim title, or to avail himself of title in another, he must plead it specifically and disclose its nature ;⁴ and when the defendant sets up title to an undivided interest he must specify what share or interest he owns.⁵ The rule obtains in California, that an answer setting up title to only a portion of the demanded premises must particularly describe the part to which title is claimed, and, failing to do so, no evidence will be admitted under such a pleading.⁶ It has been held in New York, that a defendant is concluded by his answer, setting up a certain chain of title, from disputing the validity of the same title when asserted by the plaintiff.⁷

¹ Nicoll v. Fash, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 275; Blackwell on Tax Titles, [*501] 579; Russell v. Mann, 22 Cal. 132; McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 246. Compare Wakeley v. Nicholas, 16 Wis. 588; Morgan v. Bishop, 56 Wis. 284.

² Custard v. Musgrove, 47 Tex. 217; Shields v. Hunt, 45 Tex. 424; Rivers v. Foote, 11 Tex. 670.

³ Shields v. Hunt, 45 Tex. 424.

§ 492a. Pleading easement or outstanding title.—Under a plea of nul disseizin to a writ of entry, the tenant cannot set up an easement in the demanded premises, for an easement is no defense to a recovery in a real action.⁸ As we have seen, the right to the fee and a right to an easement are independent rights, which may subsist together though vested in different persons.⁹ The recovery in eject-

¹ Sheirburn v. Hunter, 3 Woods, 281.

² Hollingsworth v. Holshousen, 17 Tex. 41; Hunt v. Turner, 9 Tex. 385.

³ Wicks v. Smith, 18 Kan. 508.

⁴ Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawyer, 15; Fitch v. Cornell, 1 Sawyer, 156; Phillippi v. Thompson, 8 Oregon, 428; Hill v. Austin, 1 Dedy, 104.

⁵ Pease v. Hannah, 3 Oregon, 301.

⁶ Anderson v. Fisk, 36 Cal. 625.

⁷ Henderson v. Scott, 12 Week. Dig. (N. Y.) 363.

⁸ Kenniston v. Hannaford, 58 N. H. 28. Compare Blair v. Claxton, 18 N. Y. 529.

⁹ See §§ 130, 132.

ment would not estop the owner of the easement from invoking any of the usual remedies for the protection of such an incorporeal interest.¹ Under the plea of nul dis-seizin, it is no defense to show a better title in a third person.²

§ 492b. Evidence not to be pleaded.—The defendant in ejectment should state in his answer the nature and duration of the estate he claims, if any, but not the evidence of it.³ A statement of the grounds upon or means by which the defendant claims to be the owner of the property, may be stricken out on motion.⁴ This question has already been incidentally considered.⁵

§ 493. Reply to affirmative or other defense.—Under the practice in Minnesota the allegations in an answer in ejectment that defendant entered under an official deed, had no notice of any defects invalidating the deed, and had made improvements and paid taxes, are not admitted by failure to reply.⁶ In Wisconsin the plaintiff may show any facts invalidating a tax deed introduced in evidence against him without pleading such facts.⁷ But in Colorado, if the defendant sets up title, plaintiff must reply.⁸ In Texas a plaintiff, relying upon an exception in his favor to the running of the statute of limitations pleaded by the defendant, must specially plead the exception by way of replication.⁹ This scientific and rigid rule of pleading is not of universal application, though courts sometimes compel a reply where the statute of limitations is interposed,¹⁰ or a discharge in bankruptcy is pleaded,¹¹ or the

¹ In a suit concerning the diversion of a water course, the defendant claiming an uninterrupted right to user by adverse enjoyment, should tender such an issue by answer. American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 367, 368.

² Emerson v. Emerson, 58 N. H. 413.

³ Fitch v. Cornell, 1 Sawyer, 156.

⁴ Wythe v. Myers, 3 Sawyer, 595.

⁵ See § 445.

⁶ Reed v. Newton, 22 Minn. 541. See McCarty v. Roberts, 8 Ind. 150.

⁷ Morgan v. Bishop, 56 Wis. 286. But see § 491.

⁸ Newman v. Newton, 14 Fed. Rep. 634; s. c. 3 Col. Law Rep. 193.

⁹ Hughes v. Lane, 25 Tex. 356, and see Miller v. M'Intyre, 6 Pet. 61.

¹⁰ Hubbell v. Fowler, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 1; Jarvis v. Pike, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 398.

¹¹ Poillon v. Lawrence, 77 N. Y. 209.

defendant in an action for dower has set up that the plaintiff was divorced from the deceased.¹ The reply may, however, be waived in certain cases.²

§ 494. Demurrer to answer.—In ejectment in Kansas an answer which averred a contract of sale by plaintiff and a surrender of possession thereunder to defendant, but did not recite the contract, nor disclose the terms of sale, nor allege performance, was held to be defective, but the defects were held to be of such character that they should have been reached by motion, and not by demurrer, and a demurrer to the answer was overruled.³

§ 494a. Misjoinder of parties.—Demurrer.—If there is an improper joinder of parties defendant, the objection, to be available, must be taken by answer or demurrer;⁴ by demurrer if apparent upon the face of the pleading, otherwise by answer. The objecting party will lose the right to urge the misjoinder if the case goes to trial without dissent on this point.

§ 495. Supplemental answer or plea puis darrein continuance.—The rights of litigants are usually determined with reference to the state of facts existing at the commencement of the litigation,⁵ and, ordinarily, evidence of matters which transpired during the pendency of the action cannot be introduced upon the trial.⁶ As transfers of the title to the land in controversy, or changes in the relation of the parties, frequently occur pendente lite, the question of how such matters may be made available becomes important. This object is accomplished by applying to the court for leave to file amended or supplemental pleadings

¹ Brinkerhoff v. Brinkerhoff, 8 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 207. Compare Leslie v. Leslie, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 314; O'Gorman v. Arnoux, 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 163.

² Woodward v. Sloan, 27 O. S. 592.

³ Stringfellow v. Alderson, 12 Kan. 112. See Lorillard v. Clyde, 86 N. Y. 384.

⁴ Fosgate v. Herkimer Mfg. Co., 12 N. Y. 580; Dillaye v. Wilson, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 261. See Liter v. Green, 2 Wheat. 306.

⁵ "In a real action, judgment must be rendered upon the title as it stood at the date of the writ." Reed v. Crapo, 133 Mass. 203; citing Andrews v. Hooper, 13 Mass. 472; Hall v. Bell, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 431; Hooper v. Bridgewater, 102 Mass. 512.

⁶ Mills v. Graves, 44 Ill. 50; Jackson v. Leggett, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 377; Wood v. McGuire, 21 Ga. 576. See § 645.

setting forth the new facts, and presenting the additional issues, or by the common law plea puis darrein continuance.¹ If the practice were otherwise, the utmost confusion and uncertainty would result, for evidence could be introduced not tending to support the issues raised, and relating to matters not in the contemplation of the parties when the pleadings were framed. It seems to be a clearly settled practice not to allow a defendant to put in evidence a title acquired pending the action, unless his pleadings have been amended by averments showing that the title was acquired since the commencement of the action;² or by supplemental answer in the nature of a plea puis darrein continuance.³ Thus, it has been held in Michigan that a deed from the plaintiff to the defendant's wife, conveying the disputed premises after the commencement of the ejectment, is not admissible in evidence as a defense without a special notice in the nature of a plea puis darrein continuance.⁴ But a mere agreement entered into by the plaintiff to sell the land in dispute, but which provided that no conveyance should be made until after the suit was determined, is not a divesting of the plaintiff's title, and constitutes no defense to his recovery.⁵ In a real action judgment must be rendered upon the title as it existed at the date of the writ. The tenant cannot set up a title acquired by a deed made to him, without the demandant's concurrence, since the commencement of the action.⁶ In a number of cases it has been held, however, that a plea puis darrein continuance in ejectment, setting

¹ The filing of this plea waives all prior issues. Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Pet. 137; Spafford v. Woodruff, 2 McL. 191; Wisdom v. Williams, Hempst. 460. See Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 409.

² Reily v. Lancaster, 39 Cal. 354; McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238; McLane v. Boyce, 35 Wis. 27; Moss v. Shear, 30 Cal. 472; Anon. 1 Salk. 260; Doe v. Brewer, 4 M. & S. 300; Jackson v. Demont, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 55; Jackson v. Ramsay, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 75; Moore v. Hawkins, Yelv. 181; Simmons v. Brown, 7 R. I. 427; Kahn v. Old Telegraph M. Co., 2 Utah, 174; Thompson v. McCay, 41 Cal. 221; Spratt v. Price, 18 Fla. 289; Foscalina v. Doyle, 47 Cal. 437; Pollard v. Hanrick, 74 Ala. 334.

³ Hardy v. Johnson, 1 Wall. 371-374. See Thompson v. Red, 2 Jones (N. C.) Law, 412.

⁴ Jenney v. Potts, 41 Mich. 52. See Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 149.

⁵ Maus v. Montgomery, 11 S. & R. (Penn.) 329.

⁶ Hooper v. Bridgewater, 102 Mass. 512; Andrews v. Hooper, 13 Mass. 472; Hall v. Bell, 6 Met. (Mass.) 431; Curtis v. Francis, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 427.

up that the plaintiff had entered upon the lands described in the declaration, and still retained the possession, was bad, and constituted no bar to the further maintenance of the action.¹ If the defendant had offered to fully surrender the possession, pay the costs, and enter into a stipulation as to mesne profits, the court might direct a stay of proceedings, or a discontinuance.²

Granting leave to serve a supplemental answer usually rests in the sound discretion of the court.³

¹ Tyler v. Canaday, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 160; Den d. Price v. Sanderson, 18 N. J. Law, 426; McChesney v. Wainwright, 5 Ohio, 452; Venner v. Underwood, 1 Root (Conn.), 73. But see Thompson v. Red, 2 Jones (N. C.) Law, 412.

² Tyler v. Canaday, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 160; Jackson v. Stiles, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 429.

³ Spears v. Mayor, &c., 72 N. Y. 442; Holyoke v. Adams, 59 N. Y. 233; Medbury v. Swan, 46 N. Y. 200.

CHAPTER XIX.

OF THE VERDICT.

- | | |
|--|--------------------------------------|
| § 496. Questions of fact to be tried by jury. | § 501. Verdicts held sufficient. |
| 497. Requirements of the verdict. | 502. Verdicts held insufficient. |
| 498. Verdicts liberally construed. | 503. Roberti v. Atwater . |
| 499. References in verdict. | 504. Verdict between tenants in com- |
| 500. Verdict must specify the nature of the estate. | mon. |
| | 505. Misjoinder cured by verdict. |

§ 496. Questions of fact to be tried by jury.—When questions of fact are involved in ejectment the issues are almost uniformly submitted to a jury, under proper instructions from the court, for the reason that litigants ordinarily have a constitutional right to a trial by jury.¹ The disinclination of the courts to adjudicate upon conflicting facts, and their purpose to give full effect to the right of trial by jury, is evidenced by the common practice of framing issues of fact in equity cases, to be sent out to a jury for determination. This practice is very common in suits in equity which draw in question the title to land. In such cases the court calls the jury to enlighten its conscience and not to control its judgment.²

The changes in procedure, by virtue of which equitable defenses may be interposed in ejectment cases, have led to some confusion as to the method and order of trial of the legal and equitable issues. It is the proper province of the court to determine questions involving equitable considerations, and the trial judge should be permitted, on the hearing of the equitable issues, to submit controversies of fact to the jury, either separately or in connection with ¹ "The jury may be controlled in their determination of a question by a peremptory instruction, if the testimony is of such a conclusive character as would compel the court, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, to set aside a verdict if one were returned in opposition to such testimony." Montclair v. Dana, 107 U. S. 162. Citing Hendrick v. Lindsay, 93 U. S. 143; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Doster, 106 U. S. 30.

² Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. 680.

the trial of questions involved in the legal part of the controversy.¹ The practice prevailing in California of hearing the equity side of the controversy first is perhaps to be commended.²

§ 497. Requirements of the verdict.—The general form of the verdict or finding in ejectment is usually prescribed by statute, or by the rules or established practice of the courts. The requirements as to the verdict vary in the several States, and no uniform test can be furnished. One general rule applicable to the subject is that the courts will more readily set aside a verdict in ejectment upon a question of location than upon an ordinary question of fact.³ It becomes important to keep this principle in view, for uncertainty as to the lands intended to be affected, and the insufficiency of the description, constitute favorite grounds for attacking verdicts in ejectment. While the early practice prevailed it was commonly held that the verdict could relate only to the lands described in the consent rule.⁴ Under the modern practice the verdict must be limited to the lands claimed in the declaration, and must correspond with the evidence,⁵ and must also be limited to the lands to which the plaintiff proved title.⁶ The verdict must comprehend the whole issue, otherwise the judgment founded upon it will be reversed.⁷ Thus, where the jury found for all the plaintiffs but one, whom they failed to mention, the verdict was held to be defective, because it was impossible to tell whether they intended to find for or against him.⁸ The rule, as stated by Professor Stearns, is, that if the substance of the issue is found for the demandant, he will be entitled to judgment, though all the circumstances are not found.⁹

¹ See Hewlett v. Wood, 62 N. Y. 78.

² See § 487.

³ Mathews v. Horlbeck, 1 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 382; Bank v. Bobo, 14 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 51.

⁴ See White v. Den d. Woodruff, 24 N. J. L. 753.

⁵ Hughes v. Holliday, 3 G. Gr. (Ia.) 30.

⁶ City of East St. Louis v. Hackett, 85 Ill. 382.

⁷ Patterson v. United States, 2 Wheat. 222; Miller v. Trets, 1 Ld. Raym. 324.

⁸ Wood v. McGuire, 17 Ga. 361.

⁹ Stearns on Real Actions, p. 243.

§ 498. Verdicts liberally construed.—It was held in Turberville v. Long,¹ an early case in Virginia, that the statute of jeofails extended to writs of right, and therefore, if the verdict and judgment were substantially right, though not in the words of the law, they should not be disturbed. The verdict found “that the demandant hath more right to demand the land in the count and plea mentioned than the tenant hath to hold.” Tucker, J., said: “Verdicts are held to be subject to the power of the court, so as to mould them according to the true intent and meaning of the jury, where that can be found responsive to the issue joined. The jury have found the plaintiff had more right to demand than the tenant to hold the lands. The court have said he had more right to have them as he demandeth them. One seems to be an irresistible consequence of the other.” In M’Murray v. Oneal,² decided in 1798, a verdict in ejectment, “for the plaintiff one cent damage” was extended by the court, and made to read, “We of the jury find for the plaintiff the lands in the declaration mentioned, and one cent damage.” In a case before the Maryland Court of Appeals it appeared that the jury found a verdict “for the plaintiff, and assessed the damages at one cent.” The court held that the plain meaning and import of this verdict was that the defendants were guilty of the trespass and ejectment complained of in the declaration, and that the jury assessed the damages resulting therefrom to the plaintiff to be one cent.³

§ 499. References in verdict.—It seems clearly established, where no statute controls, that the certainty of the verdict may be established by a reference in it to monuments on the ground, or to recorded deeds, or diagrams filed of record, or to warrants of survey, or to identified agreements. This practice, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania observed, has been too often recognized to be any longer called in question. Strong, J., said: “Perhaps it would have been better had it never been so held. A record should be complete in itself, and as a court may mould a verdict, not changing its substance, there is no difficulty in having the record complete, by assisting the jury to incorporate formally into their verdict that which practically becomes a part of it by being made the object of a reference."¹ So it has been held that a verdict in trespass to try title may be aided by a reference embodied in it to the description in the plat or declaration. Hence where the jury found for "the land on which the defendant lives," it was held sufficiently definite to enable the plaintiff to take possession.² § 500. Verdict must specify the nature of the estate.—In some of our States the verdict must specify the nature of the estate found,³ and if the verdict fails so to do, it may be treated as a nullity and a new trial ordered.⁴ Under the practice in Illinois if the jury omit to specify the estate found, they are sent back to further consider the verdict. The courts of that State have no power to supply the want of such a finding. Such action, if attempted by the courts, would be regarded as constituting an encroachment upon the province of the jury, for the defect is considered not as a matter of form, but as an omission of an essential fact. Hence a verdict "for plaintiff" was held in that State not to be a verdict upon which a judgment could be based, the nature of the estate found not being specified.⁵ On the other hand, in Hawley v. Twyman,⁶ an ejectment case on appeal before the Court of Appeals of Virginia, it appeared that the declaration set forth that the plaintiff had title in fee simple to the land which was described as to quantity, and boundaries, and coterminous owners. The issue was "not guilty." The verdict was as follows: "We, the jury, upon the issue joined, find that the defendant is guilty in manner and form as the plaintiff in his declaration hath

¹ 3 H. & M. (Va.) 309.

² 1 Call. (Va.) 246. See Kershner v. Kershner, 36 Md. 309-336.

³ Kershner v. Kershner, 36 Md. 309-336.

¹ Miller v. Casselberry, 47 Penn. St. 376.

² Manning v. Dove, 10 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 395.

³ Van Fossen v. Pearson, 4 Sneed (Tenn.), 362.

⁴ Rivier v. Pugh, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 715; Rogers v. Sinsheimer, 50 N. Y. 646. See Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133.

⁵ Long v. Linn, 71 Ill. 152. See Rawlings v. Bailey, 15 Ill. 178.

⁶ 24 Gratt. (Va.) 516.

complained." The court held that though the verdict did not expressly find an estate in fee in the plaintiff, as required by statute, yet the verdict was sufficient, though informal.

§ 501. Verdicts held sufficient.—Where the jury found that "the old hedge row, &c.," was the dividing line between the parties, the verdict was held sufficiently certain;¹ and low water-mark is a boundary sufficiently certain, in a judgment in a real action, to enable the sheriff to execute the judgment by an habere facias.² And a verdict for the use and benefit of a house and store-room has been held to be a verdict for them, as they are capable of delivery of possession under an habere facias.³ Under the practice in California, a finding that "the defendant has a good and perfect title to the demanded premises," will support a judgment in his favor, whether it is to be regarded as a finding of fact or conclusion of law.⁴ Unless the defendants demand separate verdicts they will be bound by a general verdict.⁵ In ejectment in Alabama, where the premises are described with particularity in the complaint, and defendant pleads not guilty, without any disclaimer as to a part of the premises, a verdict of a jury finding the issues for the plaintiff is a verdict for the entire premises, and is sufficient. Under the practice of that State it is only necessary, when the jury find for the plaintiff less than the quantity of land sued for, to describe in the verdict the part of the premises recovered.⁶ The fact that a small piece of ground is included in the verdict, of which defendant is not in possession, cannot prejudice the defendant if he makes no claim to it, and a motion in arrest of judgment, based on that ground, will be overruled. It could only be important as to the question of damages and mesne profits, and in this case the damages assessed by the jury were only nominal.⁷ In trespass to try

¹ Hopkins v. Myers, Harper (S. C.), 57.

² Adams v. Frothingham, 3 Mass. 352.

³ Miller v. Casselberry, 47 Penn. St. 376.

⁴ Frazier v. Crowell, 52 Cal. 399.

⁵ Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. 409.

⁶ Chapman v. Holding, 60 Ala. 522.

⁷ Russell v. Maloney, 39 Vt. 579. See Coleman v. Henderson, 3 Ill. 251.

title in Alabama, a verdict not finding, as required by statute, that "the land belonged to the plaintiff at the commencement of the action," but only that "the land belongs to the plaintiff," was held sufficient, under the prevailing liberal rules of intendment, to support a judgment in favor of plaintiff for damages and costs, and to authorize the court to award a writ habere facias possessionem.¹ A finding by the jury "for the defendant ten acres, forty-eight perches, the meadow on the west side of the creek, and find for the plaintiff the balance," has been held sufficiently certain.² A verdict for "the property in question" is good.³ Where the writ described the premises as "a tract of land in Jackson township, containing 185 acres or thereabouts, bounded by lands of M. J. and V.," a verdict "for the farm as it stands in the writ," was held good.⁴ Where the description in the writ of ejectment was for a certain limestone quarry, containing about three acres, and bounded on two sides by adjoining owners, a verdict for the quarry, describing the two boundaries, was said to be sufficient.⁵ An award in ejectment, showing a plain mistake of fact in misdescribing the premises, should be sent back to the referees for correction, so as to make the award certain and consistent.⁶

§ 502. Verdicts held insufficient.—A verdict in ejectment for a certain number of acres, "part of the premises in the declaration mentioned," is too uncertain to warrant a judgment upon it,⁷ and a verdict "for the plaintiff for one hundred and fifty acres, part of the land claimed in the writ, and not guilty as to the residue," is bad for uncertainty.⁸ A verdict "for one half of the survey, according to draft filed in the case, the land to be laid off according to quantity and quality, reserving to defendant as much

¹ Stephens v. Westwood, 25 Ala. 716.

² Tryon v. Carlin, 5 Watts (Penn.), 371.

³ Patrick v. Young, 18 Fla. 50.

⁴ Emig v. Deihl, 76 Penn. St. 359.

⁵ Clement v. Youngman, 40 Penn. St. 341; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 230.

⁶ Kidd v. Emmett, 72 Penn. St. 150. Compare further as to a sufficient verdict Collins v. Riley, 104 U. S. 322.

⁷ Gregory v. Jacksons, 6 Munf. (Va.) 25.

⁸ Stewart v. Speer, 5 Watts (Penn.), 79. See White v. Hapeman, 43 Mich. 267.

of the improvement as practicable," &c., has been held void for uncertainty, in Pennsylvania.¹ So a verdict "for 2 acres, 28 $\frac{3}{4}$ perches, with 6 cents damages," is incurably bad, it being a part of the lot for which the action was brought.² So "the middle of a stone wall" is too indefinite a starting point for the boundary of a town lot as fixed by a verdict. It was said that while the courts favored verdicts, such essential uncertainty could not be tolerated.³ A verdict in ejectment, finding "that the defendant should have the third part of the 41 acres and 32 perches, and, if any overplus, it goes to the plaintiff," has been held to be too uncertain, and that the court could not cure it by appointing a surveyor to ascertain and designate the rights of the parties, and rendering judgment thereon.⁴ And where an ejectment was brought for the whole tract, and verdict was given for 20 acres on the lower or south end of the tract, it was held to be void for uncertainty. The verdict in this case was also rendered for the land in severalty, though it was owned in common. It was held that the verdict should have been for an undivided interest.⁵

§ 503. Roberti v. Atwater.—In a case which arose in Connecticut, the verdict was as follows: "In this case the jury find the issue for the plaintiffs, and therefore find for them to recover of the defendant the seizin and peaceable possession of the premises described in the declaration, and one dollar damages; and that the defendant have until June 1, 1875, to remove the barn." The court held that the whole verdict was vitiated by the last clause, and said: "It is clear that the jury believed that they were authorized to name a day in the future, prior to which the defendant might enter upon the plaintiffs' land, without their consent, and remove the barn. It is to be presumed that this belief entered into and produced the verdict, and that the jury would not have agreed to any portion of it as actually rendered unless this condition had been em-

¹ Martin v. Martin, 17 S. & R. (Penn.) 431.

² Borough of Harrisburg v. Crangle, 3 W. & S. (Penn.) 460.

³ Hagey v. Detweiler, 35 Penn. St. 409.

⁴ Smith v. Jenks, 10 S. & R. (Penn.) 153.

⁵ Nolan v. Sweeney, 80 Penn. St. 77.

bodied in it. To strike off the condition, and allow the remnant to stand, is for this court to make and record a verdict which the jurors refused to render. They practically declared themselves unable to agree upon one within legal limits, and we cannot perfect that which they left thus imperfect."¹

§ 504. Verdict between tenants in common.—And in ejectment between tenants in common, if the jury return a special verdict, actual ouster must be found therein to entitle the plaintiff to judgment.² As we have already shown, the ouster is a question of fact which must be found by the jury. Even a special verdict, finding a specific demand by the plaintiff to be let into possession, followed by a refusal on the part of the occupying co-tenant to comply with the demand, will not warrant a judgment in ejectment between co-tenants. Actual ouster must be found by the jury.³

§ 505. Misjoinder cured by verdict.—In an early case in England it was held that where an action of ejectment and an action of assault and battery were joined in the same writ, and, after verdict, it was moved, in arrest of judgment, that the practice was without precedent, the misjoinder was cured by verdict.⁴ The cases cited in discussing the subject of the description in the pleadings, are applicable to the verdict, though it is usually sufficient to insert a much shorter description in the latter. The courts frequently assist the jury in putting the verdict in proper form, by interrogating them as to their real intention, and suggesting the appropriate method of giving expression to it; or by calling their attention to informalities or elements of uncertainty in the verdict as tendered, and sending them back to further consider it. For this reason, errors in the form of verdicts are of infrequent occurrence.

¹ Roberti v. Atwater, 42 Conn. 266.

² Taylor v. Hill, 10 Leigh (Va.) 457. See Pierce v. Wanett, 10 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 446; Barnitz v. Casey, 7 Cranch, 456.

³ See §§ 277-283; Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484.

⁴ Bird v. Snell, Hob. 249. See Dalston v. Janson, 5 Mod. 90. After verdict any mistake as to venue is cured by the statute of jeofails. Mayor, &c. of London v. Cole, 7 T. R. 583; Bailiffs, &c. of Litchfield v. Slater, Willes, 431, cited by Parke, B., in Simmons v. Lillystone, 8 Exch. 439.

CHAPTER XX.

OF THE JUDGMENT.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 506. Judgments in personal actions conclusive. 507. Test as to the conclusiveness of a judgment. 508. Matters adjudicated. 509. Judgment in real actions. 510. Origin of ejectment reviewed.—Fiction of seizin. 511. } Judgment in ejectment not con- 512. } clusive. 513. Reasons for the inconclusiveness of the judgment. 514. Kimmel v. Benna and Camp v. Forrest discussed. 515. } Abolition of fictions ordinarily 516. } renders judgment conclusive. 517. Conflict of the cases. 518. } Kimmel v. Benna criticised. 519. } 520. Judgment not a source of title. 521. Judgment operates as an estoppel. 522. Distinction between realty and personalty. 523. Parol evidence admissible to show the exact title adjudicated. 524. Result of the cases. 525. Judgment must conform to complaint and verdict. | § 526. Judgment for land subject to easement, servitude or public use. 527. Recital of incorporeal hereditaments. 528. Relief incident to interference with property in possession. 529. Judgment in ejectment in New York. 530. Judgment by default. 531. Judgment by consent binding. 532. Judgment by confession. 532a. Judgment in partition. 532b. In condemnation proceedings. 532c. Action to quiet title. 533. Judgment in California. 534. Judgment in Vermont. 535. Judgment specifying particular estate. 536. Vendor and vendee. 537. } 538. } Landlord and tenant. 539. Avoidance of the estoppel. 540. Government officials. 541. After acquired title. 542. Judgment affecting foreign lands. 543. Form of judgment in Texas. 544. In California. 545. Judgment for possession and damages. |
|--|---|

§ 506. Judgments in personal actions conclusive. — The legal effect of the judgment in ejectment has been briefly adverted to in the opening chapter of this treatise.¹ The importance of this branch of our subject, the peculiar nature of the action, and the absence of harmony in the authorities and in the legislative policy in the several States determining the interests of the litigants, render necessary a more extended and detailed statement and discussion of the rights which are established and secured by the adjudication. The general and familiar rule in personal actions is that a litigant shall not be twice vexed

¹ See §§ 41, 42, 43, 44, 47.

for the same cause, and that allegations of record, upon which issue has been taken and found, are conclusive upon the parties and their privies according to the tenor of the findings, so as to estop the parties from again litigating the facts and issues once so tried and determined.¹ Stated in another form the rule is that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, directly upon the point in issue, considered as a plea, is a bar and as evidence is conclusive between the same parties, upon the same matter directly in question in another action or court.²

§ 507. Test as to the conclusiveness of a judgment.—If the evidence which will sustain the second action would have authorized a recovery in the first action under the allegations of the complaint, the first judgment is an absolute bar to a recovery in the second action.³ This is the usual and the most simple test. It is not sufficient that the transactions involved in and giving rise to the two actions are the same; the causes of action must be identical to the extent that the same evidence will support both actions. The forms of the actions may be different⁴ and the causes of action still the same,⁵ that is, the same evidence may be available to support either action.⁶ The judgment is

¹ Ferrer's Case, 6 Rep. 7 (3 Coke, 271). See Stowell v. Chamberlain, 60 N. Y. 272; Sturdy v. Jackaway, 4 Wall. 174; Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351; Bendernagle v. Cocks, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 207; Arnold v. Arnold, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 4; Steinbach v. Relief Fire Ins. Co., 77 N. Y. 498; South & North Ala. R. R. Co. v. Henlein, 56 Ala. 368; Perry v. Dickerson, 85 N. Y. 345; Castrique v. Imrie, 7 Jur. (N. S.) 1076.

² Stowell v. Chamberlain, 60 N. Y. 272; Barrs v. Jackson, 1 Y. & C. N. R. 585; Bigelow v. Winsor, 1 Gray (Mass.), 299; Bagot v. Williams, 3 B. & C. 235; Nelson v. Couch, 15 C. B. (N. S.) 99; Smith v. Hemstreet, 54 N. Y. 644; Blair v. Bartlett, 75 N. Y. 150; Gates v. Preston, 41 N. Y. 113; White v. Coatsworth, 6 N. Y. 137; Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 Howell's St. Tr. 538; Toles v. Gardner, 11 Week. Dig. (N. Y.) 395; Masten v. Olcott, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 587; East N. Y. & J. R. R. Co. v. Elmore, 53 N. Y. 624. A judgment of dismissal for want of jurisdiction is not a bar to a second suit for the same cause, whether the action relate to realty or personalty. Smith v. McNeal, 109 U. S. 426; Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet. 156; Hughes v. United States, 4 Wall. 232; Van Vliet v. Olin, 1 Nev. 495.

³ Steinbach v. Relief Fire Ins. Co., 77 N. Y. 498; Stowell v. Chamberlain, 60 N. Y. 272.

⁴ Strang v. Moog, 72 Ala. 465.

⁵ A judgment in ejectment in favor of the grantee of a deceased person against the executors of his estate is not a bar to a bill in equity filed by the executors or creditors to set aside the deed upon which the judgment in ejectment was procured as having been made to defraud creditors. Hills v. Sherwood, 48 Cal. 386.

⁶ Rice v. King, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 20; Miller v. Manice, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 114; Martin v. Kennedy, 2 B. & P. 69; especially Stowell v. Chamberlain, 60 N. Y. 272; equally conclusive upon the parties in a second action depending upon the same questions involved in the first action, although the subject-matter of the second action may be different.¹ A judgment for the defendant in an action of trover may bar an action of indebitatus assumpsit for the value of the same goods, but to constitute a bar it must appear that the question of property was passed upon in the first action.² A difference in the form of the action will not prevent the application of the estoppel;³ nor is the estoppel avoided by the fact that the first judgment was rendered upon erroneous grounds.⁴

§ 508. Matters adjudicated.—The courts have even gone so far in giving full effect to the binding force of a judgment, as to hold that the judgment is an estoppel not only as to the matters which were actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties might with reasonable diligence have litigated, and had decided in the former action, either as matter of claim or of defense.⁵ The estoppel is not confined to the judgment, but extends to all facts involved in it as necessary steps, or the groundwork upon which it must have been founded. It is allowable to reason back from a judgment to the basis on which it stands, “upon the obvious principle that, where a conclusion is indisputable and could have been drawn only from certain premises, the premises are equally indisput-

Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 390. See Kelsey v. Ward, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 98-103; aff'd, 38 N. Y. 83; Cannon v. Brame, 45 Ala. 262; Taylor v. Castle, 42 Cal. 367; Hall v. Dodge, 38 N. H. 346.

¹ Castle v. Noyes, 14 N. Y. 329; Doty v. Brown, 4 N. Y. 71.

² Hitchin v. Campbell, 2 W. Bl. 779; s. c. 3 Wils. 240; Id. 304; Union R. R. & T. Co. v. Traube, 59 Mo. 355-362; Agnew v. McElroy, 18 Miss. 555.

³ See Stowell v. Chamberlain, 60 N. Y. 272; Ware v. Percival, 61 Me. 391; Steinbach v. Relief Fire Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 498; Washburn v. Great Western Ins. Co., 114 Mass. 175.

⁴ Morgan v. Plumb, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 287; Steinbach v. Relief Fire Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 498. The frauds which will sustain a bill in equity to set aside a judgment or decree between the same parties, rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, must be extrinsic or collateral to the matter tried, and not matters which were in issue in the former suit. United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61. See Foster v. Wood, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 87. Ross v. Wood, 70 N. Y. 11. It may be observed that a court of equity cannot turn itself into a court of review and correct the errors of a court of law. This is alien to its jurisdiction and beyond the sphere of its power and duties. Tilton v. Cofield, 93 U. S. 167.

⁵ Bruen v. Hone, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 605; Jordan v. Van Epps, 85 N. Y. 427; Chamberlain v. Gaillard, 26 Ala.

able with the conclusion."¹ Thus in Doak v. Wiswell,² in the Supreme Court of Maine, it appeared that after a demandant had recovered a judgment in a real action, and had taken possession under it, the tenant brought assumpsit for the value of buildings erected by him upon the premises, claiming that they constituted personal property, and that the demandant, having taken possession of them, was bound to repay their value. The court decided however that, as the action for the land was brought directly against the tenant, it was his duty to have defended and protected, in that action, all his rights connected with the land. It did not appear whether he had set up, in the real action, by betterment claim or otherwise, his right to the buildings, but the court held it was of no importance, because the judgment in the real action, with the possession taken under it, constituted a bar to the action of assumpsit. The rule as to finality applies not only to judgments rendered after an actual litigation upon the merits of the matter in controversy, but also to judgments rendered upon default, or by confession.³ It is to be observed that only a final judgment, one which has definitely and conclusively decided the issues, and fixed the rights involved, can be used in another action as a bar, or as conclusive evidence;⁴ and an interlocutory order has been held, in New York, not to be such a judgment.⁵

§ 509. Judgment in real actions.—We have already shown⁶ that in the system of real actions writs of different degree

504; Stafford v. Clark, 2 Bing. 382; Miller v. Covert, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 487; Roberts v. Heim, 27 Ala. 678; Bloomer v. Sturges, 58 N. Y. 176; Clemens v. Clemens, 37 N. Y. 74; Marriot v. Hampton, 7 T. R. 269. See Foster v. Evans, 51 Mo. 39.

¹ Burlen v. Shannon, 99 Mass. 200-203; Reg. v. Hartington, 4 El. & Bl. 794; Gilbert v. Thompson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 349; Dickinson v. Hayes, 31 Conn. 417. See Packet Co. v. Sickles, 5 Wall. 580.

² 33 Me. 355.

³ Brown v. Mayor, &c., 66 N. Y. 390; Gates v. Preston, 41 N. Y. 113; Newton v. Hook, 48 N. Y. 676; Bradford v. Bradford, 5 Conn. 127.

⁴ Webb v. Buckelew, 82 N. Y. 555; Brinkley v. Brinkley, 50 N. Y. 202; Whitaker v. Bramson, 2 Paine's C. C. 209; Holt v. Miers, 9 C. & P. 191; Baugh v. Baugh, 4 Bibb, (Ky.) 556; McLane v. Spence, 11 Ala. 172; Thompson v. Mylne, 4 La. Ann. 206.

⁵ Webb v. Buckelew, 82 N. Y. 555.

⁶ See Chapter II.

prevailed. A judgment rendered upon an inferior writ was not an estoppel upon a writ of a higher degree or nature, because the superior writ established rights additional to those acquired under or conferred by an inferior writ.¹ A judgment upon a writ of right,² the highest and most important of the real writs, was final and conclusive, because no other writ could confer any additional or greater rights.³ By selecting a writ of a lower rank the demandant under this system was enabled to secure more than one trial of his title. Lord Ellenborough, in the leading case of Outram v. Morewood,⁴ after discussing the different species of actions affecting lands and chattels real, uses this significant language: "A judgment, therefore, in each species of action, is final only for its own purpose and object, and no further. The judgment in trespass affirms a right of possession to be, as between the plaintiff and defendant, in the plaintiff at the time of the trespass committed. In the real action, it affirms a right to the freehold of the land to be in the demandant at the time of the writ brought. Each species of judgment, from one in an action of trespass to one upon a writ of right, is equally conclusive upon its own subject matter, by way of bar to future litigation, for the thing thereby decided. Only the matter of the one judgment is in its nature, and according to its class and degree in the order of actions, more conclusive upon the general right of property in the land than the other. What, therefore, Lord Coke says, that in personal actions concerning debts, goods, and effects (by way of distinction from other actions), a recovery in one action is a bar to another, is not true of personal actions alone, but is equally and universally true as to all actions whatsoever, quoad their subject matter."⁵

§ 510. Origin of ejectment reviewed.—Fiction of seizin.—Before considering the effect of the judgment in ejectment

¹ See §§ 66, 67.

² See § 69.

³ See Outram v. Morewood, 3 East, 358; s. c. 5 T. R. 121; Stearns on Real Actions, pp. 370, 387; Booth on Real Actions, p. 85; Jackson on Real Actions, pp. 2, 16. See § 516.

⁴ 3 East, 346. See Stevens v. Hughes, 31 Penn. St. 381.

⁵ See § 67.

a brief review of the origin of the action, at the risk of slight repetition, will facilitate the discussion. Ejectment was originally a writ of trespass brought by a tenant for years to recover compensation for damages resulting from eviction from the demised premises during the continuance of his term.¹ The money judgment for damages proved in many cases an inadequate redress, so the practice of awarding the lessee a writ of possession sprung up.² This was followed by the introduction of imaginary parties,³ declaring on a fictitious lease, and the consent rule,⁴ by which the party desiring to protect the possession was forced to admit a lease in order to facilitate the trial of the title in cases where no tenancy or lease in fact existed. When the claimant recovered judgment in the action, and was placed in possession by the sheriff, he was said to be seized "according to his right."⁵ "This," says Mr. Adams,⁶ "is effected by another fiction. It is a rule of law that when a man having a title to an estate comes into possession of it by lawful means, he shall be in possession according to his title; and, therefore, when possession is once given by the sheriff, the possession and title are said to unite, and the plaintiff's lessor holds the lands according to the nature of his interest in them." The party thus clothed with the possession, if he had a fee simple, became thereby seized in fee simple; if he had a chattel interest, he was in as a termor; and if he had no title, his possession was that of a trespasser,⁷ except that he was not liable in trespass for the entry. The judgment did not award, and the claimant did not recover, the seizin of the land as in a real action. The only relief given as regards the land itself was a writ of possession.

§ 511. Judgment in ejectment not conclusive.—The record or judgment in the action did not disclose the title claimed

¹ See §§ 1, 23, 24, 25, 27.

² See § 23.

³ See § 37.

⁴ See § 36.

⁵ See Minke v. McNamee, 30 Md. 294. See § 41.

⁶ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 391.

⁷ Taylor v. Horde, 1 Burr. 114. See Long v. Neville, 29 Cal. 131; Man v. Drexel, 2 Penn. St. 202; Jackson v. Dieffendorf, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 270. See, also, §§ 41, 42, 43, 44.

by the parties; and, unlike a real action, an inspection of it would not reveal the character of the estate or interest adjudicated; for no particular estate or interest was claimed in the writ or found or awarded by matter of record by the court. Indeed the declaration negatived the ownership of the freehold by the plaintiffs.¹ It is true the judgment clothed the successful claimant with the possession of the land, which was an important acquisition, but it went no further. It did not in form declare or establish the title, or protect or continue the possession so awarded. The record afforded no evidence of the claimant's right to the possession as established upon the trial, and was not a bar or a matter of estoppel as to the same title or between the same parties.²

§ 512. When we recall the substantial reasons upon which the practice is based of holding the judgment in personal actions or on a writ of right, the highest real writ, conclusive upon parties and privies, it becomes important to consider more fully the causes which rendered the judgment in ejectment inconclusive as a muniment of title, or evidence of the right of possession, and of no avail as a protection against further vexatious litigation over the same title. The inconclusiveness of the judgment, as we have seen, constituted the basis of Lord Coke's lament over the disuse of real actions.³ In New England, too,

¹ Stevens v. Hughes, 31 Penn. St. 381.

² Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 410; Jones v. De Graffenreid, 60 Ala. 145; Shaw v. Lindsey, 60 Ala. 344; Camp v. Forrest, 13 Ala. 114; White v. Kyle, 1 S. & R. (Penn.) 515; Doe v. Harlow, 12 Ad. & E. 40; Bailey v. Fairplay, 6 Binn. (Penn.) 450; Eldridge v. Hill, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 281; Kimmel v. Benna, 70 Mo. 52; Taylor v. Horde, 1 Burr. 114; Jackson v. Dieffendorf, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 270; Botts v. Shields, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 36; Holmes v. City of Carondelet, 38 Mo. 552; Smith v. Sherwood, 4 Conn. 276; Bradford v. Bradford, 5 Conn. 132; Chapman v. Armistead, 4 Munf. (Va.) 382; Hopkins v. McLaren, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 667; Jackson v. Tuttle, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 233; Pollard v. Baylors, 6 Munf. (Va.) 433; Hawkin's Lessee v. Hayes, 3 Harr. (Del.) 489; Rice v. Auditor General, 30 Mich. 12; Moran v. Jessup, 15 U. C. Q. B. 612. See Sherman v. Dilley, 3 Nev. 21; Cagger v. Lansing, 64 N. Y. 417. In Wright v. Doe d. Tatham, 1 Ad. & El. 19, Tindal, C. J., said: "The result of the authorities is, that the lessor of the plaintiff is the real party in an ejectment, that the nominal plaintiff has no interest, and that in an ejectment between Doe on the demise of J. S. against B., J. S. is bound by a verdict for the defendant" (1834). But that "a judgment in ejectment is no bar to any number of other ejectments by the same party for the same premises" was stated in the Queen's Bench by Lord Denman, C. J., in 1839, during argument of counsel. Doe v. Wright, 10 Ad. & El. 777. The statement of Tindal, C. J., was not recognized as good law.

³ See § 45.

this imperfection in the remedy was appreciated, and it was largely instrumental in inducing the colonists to attempt the experiment of reforming and restoring the worn out system of real writs.¹

§ 513. Reasons for the inconclusiveness of the judgment.—One reason, as we have seen, why the judgment was not conclusive, was that nothing remained of record to reveal the title that had been adjudicated. The changes in the rules of evidence which enable a party to show by parol testimony what matters were actually litigated in an action, without regard to the judgment record, or the issues disclosed by the pleadings, are of comparatively modern origin.² Besides this there was no privity between the successive fictitious plaintiffs, and each successive ejectment was based upon a new lease and a fresh trespass. Hence the technical reasons upon which to found an estoppel did not exist. The right of property, too, might be in one person, the right of possession in a second, and the actual possession in a third ; hence a judgment for the possession did not of necessity conclude the title. In Smith v. Sherwood,³ in the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut, it was held that a former judgment for the defendant, in an action of disseizin on the issue of no wrong or disseizin, was not an estoppel as to the plaintiff's title, as the judgment might have been rendered upon the ground that the defendant was not in possession, or had occupied by the consent or license of the plaintiff, or on other grounds not involving the question of title.

§ 514. Kimmel v. Benna and Camp v. Forrest discussed.—The action is now divested of fictitious parties, and the practice of declaring on a fictitious lease is practically obsolete ;⁴ but it is not yet universally conceded, though it seems to be clearly settled, that these important changes in the practice and form of the action render the judgment conclusive upon the parties or the title. In Kimmel v.

¹ See § 74.

² 4 Conn. 276. Oetgen v. Ross, 54 Ill. 79.

³ See § 523.

⁴ See § 55.

Benna¹ the Supreme Court of Missouri say : “ It is a mistaken assumption that the sole reason for the ancient rule in regard to the want of finality of judgments in ejectment was the employment of fictitious parties in the proceeding. A judgment in ejectment confers no title upon the party in whose favor it is given.” The court then quote from Mr. Adams,² who says, “ that the judgment can never be final, and that it is always in the power of the party failing, whether claimant or defendant, to bring a new action ;” and continue : “ This reason is just as applicable since the abolishment of lease, entry and ouster as before.”³ In Camp v. Forrest,⁴ in the Supreme Court of Alabama, the question of the conclusiveness of a judgment, in an action of trespass to try title, where the issue was made in the name of the real parties in interest, was considered. The court observe that a judgment in ejectment confers no title upon the party in whose favor it is given, and is not evidence in a subsequent action between the same parties, and adverts to the fact that the peculiar character of the record renders it impossible to plead a former recovery in bar of a second ejectment, because it can never be made to appear that the second ejectment is on the same title as the first. The court say, further : “ Although such may be the condition of the record, yet the inconclusiveness of the judgment does not rest on the form of the declaration and consequent proceedings, but upon the effect of the verdict and judgment. These entitle the lessor of the plaintiff to the possession of the lands, but do not give him any title thereto, except such as he previously had.” The decision was not rested upon these grounds, but upon the peculiar wording of the statute of Alabama, abrogating the fictions which provided, among other things, that, “ the laws now in force in relation to the action of ejectment, except in so far as relates to fictitious proceedings therein, shall be applied to the action of trespass to try titles.”

¹ 70 Mo. 52.

² Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 420. See § 519.

³ See Carter v. Scaggs, 38 Mo. 302; Holmes v. City of Carondelet, 38 Mo. 551; Slevin v. Brown, 32 Mo. 176; Foster v. Evans, 51 Mo. 39; Gibson v. Chouteau, 50 Mo. 85.

⁴ 13 Ala. 114.

this imperfection in the remedy was appreciated, and it was largely instrumental in inducing the colonists to attempt the experiment of reforming and restoring the worn out system of real writs.¹

§ 513. Reasons for the inconclusiveness of the judgment.—One reason, as we have seen, why the judgment was not conclusive, was that nothing remained of record to reveal the title that had been adjudicated. The changes in the rules of evidence which enable a party to show by parol testimony what matters were actually litigated in an action, without regard to the judgment record, or the issues disclosed by the pleadings, are of comparatively modern origin.² Besides this there was no privity between the successive fictitious plaintiffs, and each successive ejectment was based upon a new lease and a fresh trespass. Hence the technical reasons upon which to found an estoppel did not exist. The right of property, too, might be in one person, the right of possession in a second, and the actual possession in a third; hence a judgment for the possession did not of necessity conclude the title. In Smith v. Sherwood,³ in the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut, it was held that a former judgment for the defendant, in an action of disseizin on the issue of no wrong or disseizin, was not an estoppel as to the plaintiff's title, as the judgment might have been rendered upon the ground that the defendant was not in possession, or had occupied by the consent or license of the plaintiff, or on other grounds not involving the question of title.

§ 514. Kimmel v. Benna and Camp v. Forrest discussed.—The action is now divested of fictitious parties, and the practice of declaring on a fictitious lease is practically obsolete;⁴ but it is not yet universally conceded, though it seems to be clearly settled, that these important changes in the practice and form of the action render the judgment conclusive upon the parties or the title. In Kimmel v.

¹ See § 74.

² 4 Conn. 276. Oetgen v. Ross, 54 Ill. 79.

³ See § 523.

⁴ See § 55.

Benna¹ the Supreme Court of Missouri say : " It is a mistaken assumption that the sole reason for the ancient rule in regard to the want of finality of judgments in ejectment was the employment of fictitious parties in the proceeding. A judgment in ejectment confers no title upon the party in whose favor it is given." The court then quote from Mr. Adams,² who says, " that the judgment can never be final, and that it is always in the power of the party failing, whether claimant or defendant, to bring a new action ;" and continue : " This reason is just as applicable since the abolishment of lease, entry and ouster as before."³ In Camp v. Forrest,⁴ in the Supreme Court of Alabama, the question of the conclusiveness of a judgment, in an action of trespass to try title, where the issue was made in the name of the real parties in interest, was considered. The court observe that a judgment in ejectment confers no title upon the party in whose favor it is given, and is not evidence in a subsequent action between the same parties, and adverts to the fact that the peculiar character of the record renders it impossible to plead a former recovery in bar of a second ejectment, because it can never be made to appear that the second ejectment is on the same title as the first. The court say, further : " Although such may be the condition of the record, yet the inconclusiveness of the judgment does not rest on the form of the declaration and consequent proceedings, but upon the effect of the verdict and judgment. These entitle the lessor of the plaintiff to the possession of the lands, but do not give him any title thereto, except such as he previously had." The decision was not rested upon these grounds, but upon the peculiar wording of the statute of Alabama, abrogating the fictions which provided, among other things, that, " the laws now in force in relation to the action of ejectment, except in so far as relates to fictitious proceedings therein, shall be applied to the action of trespass to try titles."

¹ 70 Mo. 52.

² Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 420. See § 519.

³ See Carter v. Scaggs, 38 Mo. 302; Holmes v. City of Carondelet, 38 Mo. 551; Slevin v. Brown, 32 Mo. 176; Foster v. Evans, 51 Mo. 39; Gibson v. Chouteau, 50 Mo. 85.

⁴ 13 Ala. 114.

The court considered that, under the wording of this statute, no greater effect could be given to the judgment in the new action than in the action which was superseded, and that the language was too general and unlimited to restrict it to what might transpire up to the rendition of the judgment, and to hold that the judgment itself was decisive of the question of title.

§ 515. Abolition of fictions ordinarily renders judgment conclusive.—The effect of the judgment in ejectment in cases where the real parties in interest appeared as the nominal parties in the action as rival claimants of the title, has been before the Supreme Court of the United States several times, and the conclusions of that court cannot be reconciled with the cases in the Supreme Court of Missouri, and the case of Camp v. Forrest, in Alabama, which we have just noticed. In Miles v. Caldwell,¹ Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the opinion of the first named court, refers to the common law rule, that the verdict and judgment in actions of ejectment have not that conclusive effect between the parties which judgments have in other actions, either in courts of law or equity, and continues: "It must be conceded that such is the general doctrine on the subject, as applicable to cases tried under the common law form of the action of ejectment. One reason why the verdict cannot be made conclusive in those cases is obviously due to the fictitious character of the action. If a question is tried and determined between John Doe, plaintiff, and A. B., who comes in and is substituted defendant in place of Richard Roe, the casual ejector, it is plain that A. B. cannot plead the verdict and judgment in bar of another suit brought by John Den against Richard Fen, though the demise may be laid from the same lessor, for there is no privity between John Doe and John Den. Hence, technically, an estoppel could not be successfully pleaded so long as a new fictitious plaintiff could be used. It was this difficulty of enforcing at law the estoppel of former verdicts and judgments in ejectment, that induced courts of equity (which, unrestrained by the technicality, could look past the nominal parties to the real ones) to interfere, after a sufficient number of trials had taken place, to determine fairly the validity of the title, and by injunction, directed to the unsuccessful litigant, compel him to cease from harassing his opponent by useless litigation. There was, perhaps, another reason why the English common law refused to concede to the action of ejectment, which is a personal action, that conclusive effect which it gave to all other actions, namely, the peculiar respect, almost sanctity, which the feudal system attached to the tenure by which real estate was held. So peculiarly sacred was the title to land with our ancestors, that they were not willing that the claim to it should, like all other claims, be settled forever by one trial in an ordinary personal action, but permitted the unsuccessful party to have other opportunity of establishing his title. They, however, did concede to those solemn actions, the writ of right and the writ of assize, the same force as estoppels, which they did to personal actions in other cases." The principles of this case were followed in the same court in Sturdy v. Jackaway,¹ in which Mr. Justice Grier said: "As the title of the freehold was never formally and directly in issue by the pleadings, but only a trespass committed by John Doe or Richard Roe, in forcibly expelling him from a term of years, no verdict between these parties for the supposed trespass could be pleaded in bar to another action of trespass by Thomas Troublesome or Timothy Peaceable. It was in this way that the doctrine crept in that a verdict and judgment were conclusive only as regards personalty. Afterwards, when this fictitious scaffolding was demolished in many States, and the parties made their issue in their own names—where there could be no difficulty as to the estoppel—the idea of a difference between rights to real property and personalty still continued in many States to linger, and a single verdict and judgment in ejectment was not considered conclusive. In such States provision was usually made by statute for a second trial."

¹ 2 Wall. 35.

§ 516.—Mr. Justice Davis said in *Blanchard v. Brown*²

¹ 4 Wall. 174-176.

² 3 Wall. 245. See Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 775.

"On account of the fictitious character of the common law action of ejectment, a judgment was not a complete bar, as in other actions."¹ Miller, J., observed in Equator Co. v. Hall:² "At the common law, the fiction in an action of ejectment, by which John Doe and Richard Roe were made respectively the plaintiff and the defendant, permitted any number of trials after verdict and judgment between the same parties in interest on the same question of title, by the use of other fictitious names, and other allegations of demise, entry and ouster." In Marshall v. Shafter,³ the Supreme Court of California use this language: "No sufficient reason, in our opinion, is given why the matters that have once been judicially determined in the action of ejectment, may be again drawn in question between the same parties, when they could not in an action of another character. In ejectment, as in other actions, the parties rely strictly upon their rights in the matter in litigation. No argument can be drawn from the fact that the judgment is not that the plaintiff recover the title, but only the possession, for a similar result accrues in the action of replevin, though the title to the personal property is confessedly in issue. In trespass to lands, whatever may be the form of the issues, the recovery is only of damages, and yet, as in Outram v. Morewood,⁴ the losing party is estopped in another action from averring contrary to the title, as found in the former suit."⁵ So, in Doyle v. Hal-lam,⁶ the Supreme Court of Minnesota, after citing some of the authorities which we have been discussing, declare that, as the fictions accompanying the common law action of ejectment have no existence in the practice of that State, the inconclusiveness which attached to judgments in ejectment on account of those fictions, is no longer admitted. In *Stevens v. Hughes*⁷ the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania

¹ See Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30-35.

² 106 U. S. 87.

³ 32 Cal. 176-198. See Amesti v. Castro, 49 Cal. 325.

⁴ 3 East, 346. See § 509.

⁵ See cases cited in note to Duchess of Kingston's Case, 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 784.

⁶ 21 Minn. 515. See Sherman v. Dilley, 3 Nev. 21-25.

⁷ 31 Penn. St. 381-385.

say : "The inconclusiveness of a verdict and judgment in ejectment is due to the form of the action, not to the character of the subject matter of the controversy. The apparent exception nowhere else exists. That there is no charm about land, as land, which relieves it from the operation of the general rule that a judgment between the same parties, or their privies, directly upon the same matter, is the end of controversy ; that it is an estoppel against future litigation of the same question, is evident from the fact, that a fine, a common recovery, a simple judgment in a writ of right, and indeed judgments in any real action, have always been held to be conclusive."

§ 517. Conflict of the cases.—The conflict in the authorities as to the effect of a judgment in ejectment, as an estoppel upon new actions, which bring in question the same title, is perhaps not deserving of as extended notice as the subject would call for if the statutes in most of our States did not specifically establish and define the rights of the parties, and the effect to be given to the adjudication. But changes and repeals of the statute law in several States, removing the statutory estoppel upon the judgments, have brought the subject into some prominence. It is probably now an open question in South Carolina as to whether or not a judgment in an action for the possession of land and trial of the title is conclusive. Even where the statutes defining the effect of the judgment prevail, the language employed is sometimes ambiguous, and capable of a double construction, so that frequently it becomes important, and often necessary, to fully comprehend the effect of the judgment, without regard to the provisions of the statute, in cases where the issue is made between the real parties in interest. Little need be said in support of the considerations upon which the principle of law making judgments conclusive rests. The highest reasons of public policy require that contentions, whether over the title to realty or personalty, should be promptly and irrevocably settled, otherwise the uncertainty as to ownership will be attended with waste, disuse or destruction of the subject matter of contention, whatever may be its character. The object of litigation is to put disputed rights at rest forever. If this result cannot be achieved in ejectment, it is idle to subject the parties to the trouble and expense of a trial.

§ 518. Kimmel v. Benna criticised.—In Kimmel v. Benna,¹ the leading case holding that the judgment in ejectment is not conclusive even where no fictions are employed, it is practically conceded that the inconclusiveness of the judgment was in part due to the peculiarities and effect of the fictions. The court remark (p. 65): “It is a mistaken assumption that the sole reason for the ancient rule in regard to the want of finality of judgments in ejectments was the employment of fictitious parties in the proceeding.” The additional reasons for the continuance of the rule are skillfully suppressed. We have seen already, especially in the cases of Sturdy v. Jackaway,² Blanchard v. Brown,³ and Miles v. Caldwell,⁴ in the Supreme Court of the United States, and Stevens v. Hughes,⁵ in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, that the want of finality is rested upon the fictitious and peculiar form of the action. It must be conceded that legislative acts, abolishing the fictions in actions of ejectment, do not abolish the action as such, nor convert it into a writ of right, and though changes of this character are usually held to place the final judgment in ejectment on the same footing as judgments in other actions, yet it still remains an action of ejectment, and falls under the rule of limitation applicable to that action.⁶ But what are the reasons for holding that the judgment is inconclusive other than the fictitious form of the action, and the use of imaginary parties, which technically prevented the application of the estoppel?

§ 519. The Supreme Court of Missouri, in Kimmel v. Benna,⁷ remark further: “A judgment in ejectment confers no title upon the party in whose favor it is given. ‘It is therefore manifest,’ observes Mr. Adams,⁸ ‘that the ¹ 70 Mo. 52-65; followed in Dunn v. Miller, 8 Mo. App. 467; Hogan v. Smith, 11 Mo. App. 314.

² 4 Wall. 174.

³ 3 Wall. 245.

⁴ 2 Wall. 35.

⁵ 31 Penn. St. 381-385. See Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351-354.

⁶ Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 773-775.

⁷ 70 Mo. 65.

⁸ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 420.

judgment can never be final, and that it is always in the power of the party failing, whether claimant or defendant, to bring a new action.' This reason is just as applicable since the abolishment of lease, entry and ouster as before." The latter remark is a mere assertion of the opinion of the court without fact, argument, or precedent to support it. It begs the question and states the conclusion without explaining the reason, or assigning any cause, meritorious or technical, why the rule should be as applicable since the change in the form of the remedy as before. The non-existence of the reason for the rule as to the non-finality of the judgment is ignored. The quotation from Mr. Adams' excellent work is given without reference to what precedes and follows the sentence quoted; and it must not be forgotten that his treatise was written while the fictions were in full force, and before the practice of making the issue in the name of the real parties in interest had been introduced or its effect considered. It is true that he says, "a judgment in ejectment confers no title upon the party in whose favor it is given," and then adds, "it is not evidence in a subsequent action even between the same parties," because the structure of the record "renders it impossible to plead a former recovery in bar of a second ejectment, for the plaintiff in the suit is only a fictitious person, and as the demise, term, &c., may be laid many different ways, it cannot be made to appear that the second ejectment is brought upon the same title as the first."¹ It thus appears that the reason for the inconclusiveness of the judgment is founded by Mr. Adams solely upon the fictitious nature of the remedy, and the attempt by an incomplete citation to appropriate the weight of his name as authority for the proposition that the judgment is still inconclusive when the issue is made in the names of the real parties in interest fails.

§ 520. Judgment not a source of title.—But a judgment in an action of ejectment, or any action, does not possess the force of a patent, or statutory or other grant. The court is not a source of title, and is possessed of no title that it can confer or bestow. Its function is merely to investigate and declare the legal status and effect of the titles which the rival claimants exhibit, and with which they are invested. The judgment record does not create the title, but merely shows that it has been proved, and its sufficiency judicially determined.¹ True the judgment in ejectment does not award the seizin of the land to the successful party, but only the possession. The possession being thus lawfully acquired, however, the party clothed with it, as we have seen,² becomes lawfully seized according to his estate or interest in the land, so that the result of a judgment in a real action is attained, except that no available record, muniment, or evidence of the title, or estate, upon which the recovery was had, is made or preserved. In Mahoney v. Middleton,³ the Supreme Court of California says: "A judgment in ejectment does not transfer to the successful party, the title of the adverse party, but if presented in the proper mode, whenever such adverse title is drawn in issue, it shuts out all proof of such adverse title. Its effect bears a closer resemblance to an extinguishment than a transfer of the adverse title. The judgment awards the possession to the prevailing party, because he had title at the commencement of the action, and because the losing party had no title, or not such title as would authorize him to withhold the possession; but it neither directly nor indirectly transfers the title."

¹ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 420.

§ 521. Judgment operates as an estoppel.—It is not a question as to what title has been conferred upon the successful litigant by the judgment, but whether or not the judgment is an estoppel upon the parties who have thus made the issue in their own names, exhibited their titles, and had their day in court. It would, as we have seen, be an estoppel in contentions over the title to personalty, and the judgment in the latter class of actions does not usually, in terms or in form, confer the title upon the prevailing party. Is there any inherent difference between realty and personalty which ought to prevent the application of the estoppel, or any consideration of public policy calling for the promulgation of a different rule?

¹ See, especially, Caggar v. Lansing, 64 N. Y. 417-424; Mahoney v. Middleton, 41 Cal. 41; Long v. Neville, 29 Cal. 131; Currier v. Esty, 116 Mass. 577.

² See §§ 510, 513.

³ 41 Cal. 41-53.

§ 522. Distinction between realty and personalty.—The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, as already shown, has declared that there is no charm about land, as land, which relieves it from the operation of the general and salutary rule that a judgment between the same parties, or their privies, directly upon the same matter, is an end of the controversy, and an estoppel against future litigation of the same question.¹ This sweeping declaration must be accepted with some caution. A peculiar sanctity derived from the old feudal system attached to this right of possession,² and the courts evinced a strong disinclination to hold that so important a right should be lost or maintained upon the result of a single conflict. But in our modern practice the facilities for correcting errors or omissions occurring at the trial, by motion for a new trial, or by appeal, are so ample that any scheme for increasing the number of methods by which the binding force of an adjudication is avoided should properly be discouraged. It must be remembered that the plaintiff's lessor in the early action of ejectment was compelled to prove a superior title in himself, or a right of immediate possession and entry against the defendant. The writ of possession was awarded upon the strength of the right to the possession of the land.

§ 523. Parol evidence admissible to show the exact title adjudicated.—The judgment record itself contained no recital of the title or rights established, but a fundamental rule of evidence has grown up, under which the nature of the title in dispute, decided in the action, may be shown by parol, and thus brought within the estoppel of the judgment. This principle has been expressly applied to judgments in ejectment,¹ as well as other actions,² and is distinctly recognized by the Supreme Court of Missouri in Kimmel v. Benha.³ Not only is the doctrine of Kimmel v. Benna repugnant to the authorities in the Federal courts and in the other States, but the prior decisions of the same court cannot be reconciled with it; for example, in *Foster v. Evans*⁴ the court remark: "In regard to the effect of a judgment in ejectment, it may be remembered that it is not a bar to another suit, or to defenses set up in a subsequent suit, unless the titles and defenses are precisely the same as they were in the first suit." The case of Foster v. Evans embodies the general and true rule.

¹ Stevens v. Hughes, 31 Penn. St. 381, 385. See § 516.

² Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall. 35.

§ 524. Result of the cases.—The correct principles deducible from the authorities seem to be as follows: First. The inconclusiveness of the judgment in ejectment under the early practice is attributable to the fictitious form of the action. Second. There is no inherent difference between rights to realty and to personalty which renders necessary the application of a different rule exempting the former from the effect of the usual estoppel incident to a judgment. Third. The overwhelming weight of authority is in favor of holding the judgment conclusive in ejectment, as in other actions where the issue is made in the names of the real parties in interest. Fourth. The cases holding the judgment inconclusive, where the issue is so made, are not supported by precedent, or by considerations of public policy, or the application of any sound technical rules or general principles of law.

§ 525. Judgment must conform to complaint and verdict.—The judgment in ejectment should of course follow and conform to the verdict in designating the extent of the

¹ Briggs v. Wells, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 567; Treftz v. Pitts, 74 Penn. St. 343; Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 398; Barger v. Hobbs, 67 Ill. 592; Sherman v. Dilley, 3 Nev. 21; Masten v. Olcott, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 587.

² Johnson v. Albany and Susquehanna R. R. Co., 5 Lansing (N. Y.), 222-226; Lawrence v. Hunt, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 80; Young v. Rummell, 2 Hill (N. Y.), 478; McKnight v. Dunlop, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 36; Beebe v. Elliott, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 457; Wood v. Jackson, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 9; Packet Co. v. Sickles, 5 Wall. 580; Strauss v. Meertief, 64 Ala. 299.

³ 70 Mo. 65.

⁴ 51 Mo. 39, 40 (decided in 1872).

interest recovered,¹ and must be rendered for the premises described in the complaint,² and must follow the complaint in respect to the description of the lands, and as to the plaintiff's estate or interest in the premises.³ Where the verdict was for more land than the plaintiff proved title to, a judgment in ejectment was reversed by the Supreme Court of Illinois, and the court refused to correct or reform the verdict, or to render judgment for the portion of the property to which the plaintiff proved title.⁴ This somewhat harsh ruling must not be taken as establishing the uniform practice, for appellate tribunals, under the modern practice, frequently reform, reduce, or correct verdicts or judgments so as to render substantial justice between the parties.

§ 526. Judgment for land subject to easement, servitude or public use.—Where land is subject to an easement, servitude, or public use, it has been shown that the owner of the fee in the dominant estate may recover it in ejectment subject to such servitude or use.⁵ And where the plaintiff's title is subject to an easement, such as the support of a party wall, the judgment will give him possession subject to the easement; and, under the practice in New York, it should define the nature and extent of the claimant's interest.⁶ So a judgment may be rendered for land subject to a homestead right.⁷

§ 527. Recital of incorporeal hereditaments.—It has been shown that ejectment is not a proper remedy to recover or test the right to incorporeal hereditaments.⁸ The recitals concerning incorporeal hereditaments in a judgment in ejectment have been held by the Supreme Court of Michi-

¹ Meraman v. Caldwell, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 32-35. See § 497.

² Bentley v. Brownson, 2 Ill. 240.

³ Allie v. Schmitz, 17 Wis. 169; Orton v. Noonan, 18 Wis. 447. See Holmes v. Seely, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 75.

⁴ City of East St. Louis v. Hackett, 85 Ill. 382.

⁵ Tillmes v. Marsh, 67 Penn. St. 507; Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133; Reformed Church v. Schoolcraft, 65 N. Y. 134; Ayer v. Phillips, 69 Me. 50; Doe d. The Queen v. Archbishop of York, 14 Q. B. 81. See §§ 130-132.

⁶ Rogers v. Sinsheimer, 50 N. Y. 646. See Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133.

⁷ Castle v. Palmer, 6 Allen (Mass.), 401; Stebbins v. Miller, 12 Allen (Mass.), 591; Swan v. Stephens, 99 Mass. 7; Letchford v. Cary, 52 Miss. 791. See § 141.

⁸ See § 95, 146, 147, 148.

gan to be merely nugatory, and not to affect the validity of the judgment for the land;¹ but the rule must not be overlooked that when the ejectment is successfully prosecuted for lands, the rights, liberties and privileges appurtenant to the land are recovered therewith.²

§ 528. Relief incident to interference with property in possession.—It is clear that a complaint alleging seizin, and right of possession in the plaintiff, followed by averments of a wrongful entry and possession by the defendant, and concluding with a demand for possession and damages, states a simple action of ejectment, and a plaintiff in a complaint of this nature, is not under the practice in New York, entitled to a judgment restraining an unlawful interference with a right incident to property in possession, such as projecting a cornice over the plaintiff's premises.³ The title to land may, however, be established in certain cases, in equity, and the defendant restrained from interfering with the possession.⁴

§ 529. Judgment in ejectment in New York.—In New York the action of ejectment tests and settles not only the right to the possession but the title under which the right exists, whether in fee, for life, or for years.⁵ The estoppel is complete, except that a statutory new trial is allowed and the judgment may be reversed for error.

§ 530. Judgment by default.—In New York State it has been provided by statute,⁶ that a judgment by default in ejectment shall not be considered conclusive upon the title

¹ Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232. See § 102 and note; Provident Institution v. Burnham, 128 Mass. 458.

² Crocker v. Fothergill, 2 B. & Ald. 652-661; Voorhees v. Burchard, 55 N. Y. 98.

³ Vrooman v. Jackson, 6 Hun (N. Y.), 326. See Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 400. See, also, §§ 156, 157.

⁴ Broiestedt v. South Side R. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 220; Corning v. Troy Iron and Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 191.

⁵ Cagger v. Lansing, 64 N. Y. 417; (below) 4 Hun (N. Y.), 812; Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 390; Sheridan v. Andrews, 49 N. Y. 478; s. c., below, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 129; Sheridan v. Linden, 81 N. Y. 182; Beebe v. Elliott, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 457.

⁶ R. S. (N. Y.) P. III., ch. v., tit. 1, § 38.

against persons claiming under the defendant unless the judgment has been for three years docketed in the office of the clerk of the court in which it was rendered. The Court of Appeals of that State,¹ in construing these provisions, held that the "judgment book" required to be kept by the statute,² was a separate and distinct book from the "docket book," which the statute also provided should be kept,³ and that an entry or record in the judgment book was not sufficient to render the judgment an estoppel, unless it was also entered in the docket book.⁴ In Colorado a judgment rendered for the defendants for want of a replication to an answer is a final judgment.⁵ In Pennsylvania judgment by default cannot be rendered in ejectment without an affidavit of the sheriff setting forth the manner of the service of the writ,⁶ and such we assume to be the general requirement. A liberal disposition prevails in the modern procedure to vacate judgments rendered by default in personal actions so as to permit a hearing upon the merits. There are many reasons why a still stronger inclination should exist not to bar the real property rights of litigants on an ex parte determination.

§ 531. Judgment by consent binding.—Where an action of ejectment for a mining interest was dismissed upon the written stipulation of the respective attorneys, conditioned that each party should pay his own costs, and that the plaintiff should be released from liability on an undertaking furnished to procure a restraining order, and a judgment was entered accordingly, it was held in Nevada, that such judgment of dismissal was a bar as to the identical title or cause of action involved in the former action.⁷

§ 532. Judgment by confession.—The authorities are not

¹ Sheridan v. Andrews, 49 N. Y. 478.

² N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1236.

³ N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.

⁴ Sheridan v. Linden, 81 N. Y. 182. See Ryerss v. Rippey, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 432.

⁵ Newman v. Newton, 14 Fed. Rep. 634; s. c. 3 Col. L. R. 193.

⁶ Bolard v. Mason, 66 Pa. St. 140.

⁷ Phillipotts v. Blasdel, 10 Nev. 19; citing Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 542; uniform as to the effect of a judgment by confession in ejectment. In Botts v. Shields,¹ in Kentucky, it was held that it was no more conclusive than a judgment based on a verdict of a jury. On the other hand, it has been decided in Pennsylvania that a judgment by confession in ejectment is to be treated as a solemn judicial confession of want of title, a total and unconditional surrender of the field in controversy, and as such conclusive forever on the defendant and all his privies.²

§ 532a. Judgment in partition.—Questions concerning partition proceedings and judgments frequently arise in ejectment. A distinction must be noticed as to the effect on the title between a judgment and writ of partition at common law and a partition by a decree in chancery. The former operates by way of delivery of possession and estoppel; in the latter the transfer is effected by the execution of conveyances between the parties.³ Partition at common law was a possessory action which divided the property but left the title undisturbed.⁴ Story, J., said: "No judgment in a writ or petition for partition will constitute any bar to the maintenance of a writ of right between the same parties."⁵ But in our modern practice it is becoming the general rule that the judgment is an estoppel, especially if the title is in any way drawn in controversy.⁶ Partition is now generally a statutory action, and

Bank of the Commonwealth v. Hopkins, 2 Dana (Ky.), 395; Jarboe v. Smith, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 257.

¹ 3 Litt. (Ky.) 32.

² Secrist v. Zimmerman, 55 Penn. St. 446.

³ Gay v. Parpart, 106 U. S. 679. Compare 7 Va. L. J. 65. In the case of Whaley v. Dawson, 2 Sch. & Lef. 367, 371, Lord Redesdale says: "Partition at law and in equity are different things. The first operates by the judgment of a court of law, and delivering up possession in pursuance of it; which concludes all the parties to it. Partition in equity proceeds upon conveyances to be executed by the parties, and if the parties be not competent to execute the conveyances, the partition cannot be effectually had."

⁴ McClure v. McClure, 14 Pa. St. 136; Nash v. Cutler, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 500; Pierce v. Oliver, 13 Mass. 212; Goundie v. Northampton Water Co., 7 Pa. St. 238; Johnson v. Britt, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 756; McBain v. McBain, 15 O. S. 350; Tabler v. Wiseman, 2 O. S. 211; Utterback v. Terhune, 75 Ind. 363. See Traver v. Baker, 15 Fed. Rep. 186. See, also, § 166.

⁵ Mallett v. Foxcroft, 1 Story, 475, 476; Nicely v. Boyles, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 177; s. c. 40 Am. Dec. 638, and valuable note as to partition judgments.

⁶ Burghardt v. Van Deusen, 4 Allen (Mass.), 375.

the effect of the judgment is in some cases regulated by statute ; and a tendency exists to empower the courts to pass upon certain questions of title in the action.¹ In Ihmsen v. Ormsby,² Strong, J., said : "The decree in partition, like any other judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, is conclusive between the parties as to all matters which were adjudicated directly, and as to all facts which were essential to the adjudication."³

§ 532b. In condemnation proceedings.—The rule seems to be fully established that a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in condemnation proceedings is as conclusive upon the parties as any other judgment.⁴

§ 532c. Action to quiet title.—A decree in an action to quiet title is conclusive, "putting all litigation at rest," as regards the parties to it, and the titles involved.⁵ In Indiana this statutory suit combines and enlarges the equity proceedings, known as bills of peace and bills quia timet.⁶

§ 533. Judgment in California.—The rule and practice is firmly established in California of holding the judgment conclusive upon parties and their privies, as to the title adjudicated. But in Amesti v. Castro,⁷ it was held that ¹ Breit v. Yeaton, 101 Ill. 245 ; Knapp v. Burton, 7 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 448. See § 166.

² 32 Pa. St. 200.

³ See S. P. Foxcroft v. Barnes, 29 Me. 129 ; Herr v. Herr, 5 Pa. St. 428 ; Whittemore v. Shaw, 8 N. H. 397 ; Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 569 ; Forder v. Davis, 38 Mo. 115 ; Hewlett v. Wood, 62 N. Y. 78. A judgment for partition may conclude contingent interests not in being, but this only in cases where the judgment provides for and protects such interests by substituting the fund derived from the sale of the land in place of the land, and preserving it to the extent necessary to satisfy such interests as they arise. Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. Y. 326 ; Mead v. Mitchell, 17 N. Y. 210 ; Brevoort v. Brevoort, 70 N. Y. 136. We may note that a reversioner or remainder-man cannot institute partition against others not seized of a like estate in common with him. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 66 N. Y. 37. See Wager v. Wager, 23 Hun. (N. Y.) 441. There is no possession.

⁴ Balto. & O. R. R. Co. v. Pittsburg, W. & Ky. R. R. Co., 17 W. Va. 812 ; Butman v. Vermont Cent. R. R. 27 Vt. 500 ; Secombe v. Railroad Co., 23 Wall. 117 ; Huston v. Eaton & H. R. R. Co., 4 O. S. 685 ; Allen v. Utica, I. & E. R. R. Co., 15 Hun (N. Y.), 80 ; Evans v. Haefner, 29 Mo. 141.

⁵ Farrar v. Clark, 97 Ind. 447 ; Green v. Glynn, 71 Ind. 336 ; Pomeroy's Rems. § 369 ; Hays v. Carr, 83 Ind. 275 ; Cooter v. Baston, 89 Ind. 185.

⁶ Trittipio v. Morgan, 99 Ind. 269, and cases cited.

⁷ 49 Cal. 325 ; citing Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 417, 418 ; Merryman v. Bourne, 9 Wall. 592.

the claimant of an inchoate Mexican grant, who had instituted proceedings to secure a confirmation of the grant by the United States courts, had not the same title, within the meaning of this rule, that he acquired after the grant had been confirmed, surveyed and patented, and hence was not estopped, after the issuance of the patent, by a judgment in ejectment, rendered against him before the confirmation of the grant and the issuance of the patent.

§ 534. Judgment in Vermont.—In Vermont ejectment partakes of the nature of a real action, and a judgment upon the merits is conclusive of the title between the parties; and greater certainty of description is therefore necessary than would be required in ejectment at common law, where the action was possessory merely, and the judgment not conclusive of the title.¹

§ 535. Judgment specifying particular estate.—Under the practice in Illinois the finding and judgment must specify the particular estate in the premises to which the plaintiff is entitled;² and it is provided by statute in many of our States, that the verdict or finding should set forth the nature of the estate or interest recovered,³ and in some States the interest must be specified in the complaint.

§ 536. Vendor and vendee.—The relationship of vendor and vendee has already been considered somewhat at length.⁴ The Supreme Court of Illinois has decided that a judgment in ejectment by default against a vendee in possession under an executory contract of sale is not conclusive upon the rights of the vendor, even though he had notice of the pendency of the action, and that the court will not allow it to be set up in an action of ejectment subsequently brought by the vendor for the same property.⁵

¹ Davis v. Judge, 44 Vt. 500-506. See Marvin v. Dennison, 1 Bla. C. C. 159; Edwards v. Roys, 18 Vt. 473.

² Koon v. Nichols, 63 Ill. 163. See Lillianskyoldt v. Goss, 2 Utah, 292. See, also, § 500.

³ See Rogers v. Sinsheimer, 50 N. Y. 646-649.

⁴ See Chap. X.

⁵ Cadwallader v. Harris, 76 Ill. 370. See Ryerss v. Rippey, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 432. See Chap. X.

§ 537. Landlord and tenant.—The rights of landlord and tenant are elsewhere treated. We may observe again¹ that the customary practice is to make the tenant or party in possession defendant in ejectment.² As to him, a judgment rendered in the action is, of course, binding and conclusive under the modern practice; but a different question is presented as to the effect of the judgment upon the landlord of the defendant. The general rule is that a judgment against a tenant³ is not conclusive against his landlord, who was not made a party to the action, and is not named in the record or judgment; for judgments are ordinarily conclusive only upon the parties named therein, and those claiming under them; but the landlord cannot properly be said to claim under his tenant, the converse of this proposition being the fact. In a recent case in the Supreme Court of New York,⁴ it was held that a judgment in ejectment recovered against a tenant in possession of the lands, was not binding upon his landlord, although the tenant notified the landlord of the pendency of the action, and the latter refused to defend the action. Under the practice in New York the landlord may be joined as a party defendant with the tenant,⁵ and, of course, the judgment would then constitute an estoppel against him; but if the claimant omits to join the landlord, and the latter refuses to appear or to defend the action, the judgment under the practice in New York only concludes the tenant and those claiming under him since the commencement of the action, and is not evidence against the landlord.⁶ A judgment against the tenant is, of course, not binding upon his landlord, if the tenant failed to notify him of the pen-

¹ See Chap. XII.

² See Finnegan v. Carraher, 47 N. Y. 493. See, also, §§ 231, 432.

³ See Oetgen v. Ross, 47 Ill. 142; Lowe v. Emerson, 48 Ill. 160.

⁴ Bennett v. Leach, 25 Hun (N. Y.), 178.

⁵ See Fosgate v. Herkimer Mfg. Co., 12 N. Y. 580.

⁶ Bennett v. Leach, 25 Hun (N. Y.), 178; s. c. 13 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 96; Ainslie v. Mayor, &c., 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 168; Thompson v. Clark, 4 Hun (N. Y.), 164; Leland v. Tousey, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 328; Sheridan v. Andrews, 49 N. Y. 484. See Finnegan v. Carraher, 47 N. Y. 493; Ryerss v. Rippey, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 432; Boles v. Smith, 5 Sneed (Tenn.), 105; Brush v. Cook, Brayton (Vt.), 89; Kent v. Lasley, 48 Wis. 257.

dency of the action,¹ and allowed judgment to be entered by default, or attorned to the defendants, and let them into possession.² In Alabama, on the other hand, if, pending an action of ejectment, the landlord, who is not made a party defendant, receives the possession from the tenant, who alone is made defendant, the landlord may be turned out under the writ of possession.³ As a general rule if the landlord undertakes the defense of the action in the tenant's name, and is unsuccessful, the court will, ordinarily, require him to pay the plaintiff's costs upon a return of an execution unsatisfied against the defendant of record.⁴

§ 538. In California, a landlord is not concluded by a judgment in ejectment against the tenant, unless he had notice of the pendency of the action, and an opportunity to defend in the name of the tenant;⁵ nor does a judgment in that State, in favor of the plaintiff in an action of ejectment, against his tenant, determine the question of title, or the right of possession, as between the plaintiff and a third person whom the tenant collusively placed in possession of the premises after the action was instituted.⁶ In that State, however, if the landlord, in an action of ejectment against a tenant, assumes charge of the defense, and puts his title in issue, the judgment rendered binds him by way of estoppel, with the same effect as though he had been made a party defendant;⁷ and after the tenant has permitted the landlord to appear and defend in the tenant's name, the tenant cannot interfere with any of the subsequent proceedings to the prejudice of the landlord;⁸

¹ We may note that a parol notice, given by a grantee to a grantor or warrantor, of the pendency of a suit has been considered good. Miner v. Clark, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 425. And if after notice the grantee is evicted, the judgment is conclusive upon the warrantor. Bridger v. Pierson, 45 N. Y. 603. Compare Bridgeport Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 34 N. Y. 275; Taylor v. Barnes, 69 N. Y. 433.

² Lum v. Reed, 53 Miss. 73.

³ Smith v. Gayle, 58 Ala. 600.

⁴ Finnegan v. Carraher, 47 N. Y. 493; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Kursch, 5 N. Y. 558; Johnston v. Manns, 21 W. Va. 20; Jackson v. Van Antwerp, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 295. See Miller v. Adsit, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 674.

⁵ Chant v. Reynolds, 49 Cal. 213.

⁶ Calderwood v. Brooks, 45 Cal. 519.

⁷ Valentine v. Mahoney, 37 Cal. 389; Russell v. Mallon, 38 Cal. 259.

⁸ Valentine v. Mahoney, 37 Cal. 389; Kellogg v. Forsyth, 24 How. 186. See §§ 264-266.

and in Texas, where a judgment is recovered against a tenant without notice to the landlord, the latter may procure the judgment to be set aside, and be admitted to defend the suit.¹

§ 539. Avoidance of the estoppel.—The estoppel may, of course, be avoided by proof that the defendant, by reason of some lease or license which temporarily defeated the right of possession, could not assert his title in the former suit. In such case the right of possession may be said to have accrued since the former action.²

§ 540. Government officials.—A judgment in ejectment against an agent of the government negatives all presumption of privity of contract in the nature of an implied lease between the owners of the premises and the government, and will defeat an action for the implied rent during the government's prior occupancy.³ The judgment against a government agent is not conclusive against the government.⁴

§ 541. After-acquired title.—The judgment in ejectment is conclusive only upon the title established in the action,⁵ and only between the parties or their privies, and for the same land,⁶ or where the title and defenses are precisely alike.⁷ It seems to be clearly settled that a defeated plaintiff or litigant may bring a new action, upon an after-acquired title, with the same effect as a stranger in whom such title might have been vested, and the former judgment will be no bar to the second action,⁸ for the judgment has no binding effect as to a subsequently acquired title, because the merits of the new title were not in issue.⁹

¹ Hough v. Hammond, 36 Tex. 657.

² Sherman v. Dilley, 3 Nev. 21; Chase v. Irvin, 87 Penn. St. 286.

³ Langford v. United States, 12 Ct. of Cl. 338.

⁴ See § 245.

⁵ Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 398; Bank v. Bridges, 11 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 87; Sherman v. Dilley, 3 Nev. 21.

⁶ Chase v. Irvin, 87 Penn. St. 286.

⁷ Foster v. Evans, 51 Mo. 39.

⁸ Merryman v. Bourne, 9 Wall. 592; Barrows v. Kindred, 4 Wall. 399; Sherman v. Dilley, 3 Nev. 21.

⁹ McLane v. Bovee, 35 Wis. 27; Whitney v. Nelson, 33 Wis. 365; Montgomery v. Whiting, 40 Cal. 294; Mann v. Rogers, 35 Cal. 316; Reed v. Calderwood, 32 Cal. 109; Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 33 Cal. 448; Emerson v. Sansome, 41 Cal. 552;

§ 542. Judgments affecting foreign lands.—It has been held in the Supreme Court of Texas, and, indeed, is of necessity the general rule, that the records, judgments and proceedings in one State can, in no particular, affect or pass the title to land situated in another State.¹ When courts of equity have jurisdiction of the person they may compel a party to convey lands beyond their jurisdiction, but in all such cases it is the act of the party and not the judgment or decree of the court which affects the title.² “Where the necessary parties are before a court of equity,” said Swayne, J., “it is immaterial that the res of the controversy, whether it be real or personal property, is beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the tribunal. It has the power to compel the defendant to do all things necessary, according to the lex loci rei sitæ which he could do voluntarily, to give full effect to the decree against him.”³ Actions for the trial of title to land are, as we have seen, local, and cannot be maintained in foreign jurisdictions.⁴ Ejectment is in the nature of a proceeding in rem.⁵ This principle was involved in Crugin v. Lovell,⁶ an action brought in New York for damages for breach of a contract to convey land outside the limits of the State. The defendant set up as a counter-claim waste committed by the plaintiff while in possession of the plantation in question, which was located in Louisiana. Plaintiff demurred to the counter-claim, and the court held that the demurrer was well taken, as actions for injuries to real estate must Burt v. Sternburgh, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 559; Doe d. Brayne v. Bather, 12 Q. B. 941; Haigh v. Paris, 16 M. & W. 145; Hunt v. O'Neill, 44 N. J. Law, 566, citing the text; Hawley v. Simons, 102 Ill. 115.

¹ See In re Hawthorne, 23 Ch. D. 743; s. c. 48 L. T. (N. S.) 701. See, also, § 467*a*.

² Paschal v. Acklin, 27 Tex. 173; Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 591; Williams v. Fitzhugh, 37 N. Y. 444; Booth v. Clark, 17 How. 332; Williams v. Ayrault, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 368; Wait on Fraud. Conv., § 405; Fenner v. Sanborn, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 610; Burnley v. Stevenson, 24 O. S. 474; Penn v. Hayward, 14 O. S. 302; Chautauque Co. Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 374; Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall. 249; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327; Bailey v. Ryder, 10 N. Y. 363. As to the conclusiveness of foreign judgments, see Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714; Boswell v. Otis, 9 How. 336; Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476.

³ Phelps v. McDonald, 99 U. S. 308.

⁴ See Chap. XVII, especially §§ 465-467; Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 587; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1.

⁵ Casey v. Adams, 102 U. S. 66.

⁶ 88 N. Y. 263. See § 467.

be brought in the forum rei sitæ,¹ and this rule prohibited the defendant from alleging as a counter-claim damages sustained by waste committed upon land outside of the State.

§ 543. Form of judgment in Texas.—Under the practice in Texas, where the defendant pleads not guilty and asserts title in himself, a general verdict for the defendant only authorizes a general judgment for the defendant, and a judgment decreeing title to defendant and cancelling plaintiff's claim as a cloud, was held to be erroneous.²

§ 544. In California.—In California the plaintiff cannot ask that he be adjudged the owner, and put in possession, and that the defendant be enjoined from claiming title to the land recovered. He must rely upon his judgment as a bar.³ The principles governing the practice by which affirmative relief may be sought by answer have already been considered.⁴

§ 545. Judgment for possession and damages.—Where the jury rendered a general verdict for the plaintiff in an action of ejectment without assessing damages, it was held that, under the practice in Arkansas, the court had no power to render a judgment for possession and damages.⁵

¹ See Story on Conflict of Laws, § 554; Watts v. Kinney, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 485; s. c. 6 Hill (N. Y.), 82; American Union Tel. Co. v. Middleton, 80 N. Y. 408; De Courcy v. Stewart, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 561.

² Johnson v. Newman, 35 Tex. 166. See Pixley v. Rockwell, 1 Sheldon (N. Y.), 267. See, also, § 154.

³ Doyle v. Franklin, 40 Cal. 106.

⁴ See §§ 485, 487, 488.

⁵ Cannon v. Davies, 33 Ark. 56. See Larned v. Hudson, 57 N. Y. 151; Cam-arillo v. Fenlon, 49 Cal. 202. See, also, § 454.

CHAPTER XXI.

WRIT OF POSSESSION.

- | | |
|---|--|
| § 546. Origin of the writ. 547. Its purpose. 548. Habere facias seisinam. 549. Peaceable possession without a writ. 550. Form and contents of the writ. 551. Return-day of the writ. 552. Alias writs. 553. Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer discussed. 554. Plaintiff taking possession at his peril. 555. Manner of executing the writ. 556. When execution considered complete. 557. Removal of personal property. 558. Parties who may be evicted. 559. Removal of wife under writ against her husband. 560. Johnson v. Fullerton criticised. 561. Burden upon the officer to excuse non-execution of the writ. | § 562. Parties concluded by the judgment must be evicted. 563. Possession to be given of fixtures and improvements. 564. Interference by the court before execution. 565. Mandamus or order to officer to execute writ—Indemnity. 566. Officer's duties defined. 567. Officer cannot file counter affidavit of party in possession to excuse non-execution of writ. 568. Injunction improper in order for restitution. 569. Landlord and tenant. 570. Co-tenant. 571. Land subject to easement. 572. Inaccessible lands. 573. Writ issued on behalf of heirs. 574. Separate judgments. 575. Restitution. |
|---|--|

§ 546. Origin of the writ.—Precisely how the practice originated of awarding a writ of habere facias possessionem in ejectione firmæ is involved in obscurity. The plaintiff in ejectione firmæ, as already shown,¹ at first recovered compensation in damages only, as in any other action of trespass, but this limited relief often afforded inadequate redress by reason of the defendant's insolvency. The courts, following, it is said, in the footsteps of courts of equity, by a species of judicial legislation engrafted upon the remedy a judgment for the recovery of the term of which the claimant had been ousted, and issued a writ of habere facias possessionem, directing the sheriff to place the claimant in the quiet and peaceable possession of the lands.

§ 547. Its purpose.—The writ of habere facias possessionem, or its statutory substitutes, under the modern practice,

¹ Anie, § 23.

commonly called writs of possession, constitute the basis and evidence of the sheriff's or marshal's authority for performing a task which, in many instances, involves delicate questions of official liability to the interested parties. It is the ultimate process by which the successful litigant secures the fruits of his victory, and through which the judgment is made practically effectual by the actual personal expulsion of the defeated party, and the removal of his goods and personal property from the lands. It is obvious that a clear understanding of the nature and provisions of this writ, and of the rights and liabilities of the parties in connection with it, and especially a statement or specification of the duties and responsibilities of the sheriff or marshal governing the method of executing or enforcing it, is of paramount importance, both to the litigants and the officer.

§ 548. Habere facias seisinam.—Before further considering this writ, we will briefly notice the nature of the final writ in the system of real actions. Upon the rendition of a judgment upon a real writ, process of execution issued, which was denominated a writ habere facias seisinam, from the command to the sheriff, embodied in the writ, that he cause the demandant to have a seizin of the tenements recovered.¹ "This writ," says Professor Stearns,² "being executed by the sheriff's delivering seizin of the tenements recovered to the demandant, and the writ being returned, and filed with the clerk of the court from whence it issued, the title of the demandant is now fully established by the highest sanction which the law can give." It will be noticed that this writ revested the lost seizin in the demandant while the writ habere facias possessionem, the nature and uses of which we are about to discuss, merely conferred the possession upon the plaintiff.

In equity a writ of assistance is allowed to render the decree of the court effectual, and to place the purchaser or successful party in possession.³ It is the equitable equivalent of the writ which we are about to consider, and is governed largely by the same rules.¹

¹ Stearns on Real Actions, pp. 15, 245, 388; Pilford's Case, 10 Rep. 116 (5 Coke, 460); Jackson on Real Actions, p. 193.

² Stearns on Real Actions, p. 388.

³ Terrell v. Allison, 21 Wall. 291; Kershaw v. Thompson, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.)

§ 549. Peaceable possession without a writ.—The successful plaintiff in ejectment may, at his election, if opportunity presents itself, take peaceable possession of the lands in controversy without the aid of the sheriff, and without procuring a writ of possession to be issued.² The defeated party, in some cases, surrenders the possession voluntarily, and in others the lands are unoccupied, or the defendant may have had only technical possession.³ In such cases the necessity of entering by virtue of the writ, or any court process, is obviated. The judgment is a complete protection to the plaintiff against an action of trespass for entering and taking possession of the land under such circumstances.⁴ It has been held in New York that if the plaintiff could himself take possession, he might authorize the sheriff as his agent to do so, which would seem to indicate that the sheriff is not entirely restricted to the writ as a justification for removing a party from the lands.⁵ There would seem to be no greater propriety in suing out a writ of possession in cases where a peaceful entry on the land in controversy could be effected, and complete possession gained without the assistance of a writ or a sheriff, than in instituting the action of ejectment for land the possession of which was not withheld. In an early case in Massachusetts⁶ on a writ of right, the court said: "That a man, who has a judgment for possession, may enter without a 609; Frelinghuysen v. Colden, 4 Paige (N. Y.), 204; Applegarth v. Russell, 25 Md. 317; Storch v. Carr, 28 Pa. St. 135; Jones v. Hooper, 50 Miss. 510; Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 190; Harney v. Morton, 39 Miss. 508; Blauvelt v. Smith, 22 N. J. Eq. 31.

¹ See Wilson v. Polk, 21 Miss. 131; s. c. 51 Am. Dec. 151, and valuable note at page 152.

² Taylor v. Horde, 1 Burr. 60-88; Caldwell v. Walters, 22 Penn. St. 378; Anon. 2 Sid. 155, 156; Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, 64 N. Y. 27-31; Hinton v. McNeil, 5 Ohio, 509.

³ Craft v. Yeane, 66 Penn. St. 210; Roe v. Dawson, 3 Wils. 49.

⁴ People v. Cooper, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 486; Jackson v. Haviland, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 229-234; Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, 64 N. Y. 27-31; Doe d. Morgan v. Bluck, 3 Campb. 447; Smith v. Hornback, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 392; Hinton v. McNeil, 5 Ohio, 509; Craft v. Yeane, 66 Penn. St. 210; Caldwell v. Walters, 22 Penn. St. 380; Creighton v. Proctor, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 433-436.

⁵ People v. Cooper, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 486-491.

⁶ McNeil v. Bright, 4 Mass. 282-300. See Farwell v. Rogers, 99 Mass. 33-35.

writ, is common learning." It is hardly prudent to adopt the practice of taking possession without process after judgment, where a probability of opposition on the part of the defendant exists. The presence of the sheriff may be necessary to preserve the peace. Thus in Doe d. Stephens v. Lord,¹ the court said: "It ought not to go forth that a party having obtained judgment in ejectment may enter without a writ of possession, unless by consent of the person holding." It appeared, in that case, that a successful plaintiff in ejectment had sued out a writ of possession in 1834, which was never executed. In 1837 a second writ of possession was issued and the possession obtained under it. The second writ was subsequently set aside for irregularity. The court held that the plaintiff could not be allowed to retain the possession, because it had been acquired with an appearance and color of authority from the court to which he was not entitled. The possession had been gained under a void writ. The case is scarcely an authority upon the question of the plaintiff's right to take peaceable possession without process, though it is sometimes cited as holding adversely to the exercise of that right.

§ 550. Form and contents of the writ.—The writ must follow the terms of the verdict² and judgment,³ and is usually addressed to the sheriff of the county in which the premises in controversy are located;⁴ and commands him to deliver the possession of the land, describing it, to the party entitled to it. It is no objection to the validity of the writ that the names of the officers to whom it is directed were inserted by interlineation after the writ had been sealed and placed in the officer's hand.⁵

§ 551. Return-day of the writ.—Usually there is no necessity for making the writ returnable except where a rule of the court, or statutory regulation on the subject exists,

¹ 7 Ad. & El. 610-614. See Wood v. Coghill, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 601.

² Martin v. Martin, 17 S. & R. (Penn.) 431. See §§ 497-525.

³ Roscoe on Real Actions, 609; Orton v. Noonan, 18 Wis. 447. See § 497.

⁴ Roscoe on Real Actions, 608.

⁵ The King v. Harris, 2 Leach C. C. 929.

and therefore the sheriff may, while he has the writ, remove the defendant, or his privies, from the land as often as he or they intrude upon it.¹ In some States the writ merely directs the officer to deliver possession, "without delay,"² and it is not always essential that any return-day should be named in it;³ and the writ cannot be avoided for mere irregularities and erroneous recitals in its form.⁴ It has been held in Kentucky that a joint writ, issued upon separate judgments, is irregular, and the writ was quashed and a restitution awarded.⁵ A command to return the writ within a given time has been considered in New York to be directory merely, and it was held by the Court of Appeals of that State that a writ of possession could be lawfully executed after the return-day specified in the writ. The judgment, it was said, bound the land of which the writ directed possession to be delivered, and the office of the writ was simply to carry the judgment into effect with reference to that particular piece of land.⁶ In the same case, the court below decided that, in the absence of any evidence on the subject, the presumption would be indulged that the sheriff began the execution of the writ or process within the sixty days prescribed by the writ.⁷ In United States v. Slaymaker,⁸ however, it was held that a writ of possession could not be legally executed after the day on which it was made returnable, as it then became functus officii. In Dent v. Simmons,⁹ the Court of Appeals of Kentucky held that where a judgment in ejectment had been fully executed on a habere facias, by the eviction of the tenant in possession, and giving actual possession to the plaintiff, and the writ returned executed, and the defendant in ejectment afterward re-entered, the proper remedy for restitution was by a warrant for forcible entry, and that

¹ See Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, 64 N. Y. 27-31; Crocker on Sheriffs, § 575.

² See People v. Cooper, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 486-489.

³ Jackson v. Hawley, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 182.

⁴ Franklin v. Merida, 50 Cal. 289.

⁵ Lowry v. Jenkins, 3 Bibb (Ky.), 315.

⁶ Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, 64 N. Y. 27-31.

⁷ Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, below, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 55.

⁸ 4 Wash. C. C. 169. See Gardiner v. Schuylkill Bridge Co. 2 Binn. (Penn.) 450.

⁹ 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 42. See Smith v. Hornback, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 392.

an alias writ of possession was erroneous. Both of these cases are referred to by the New York Court of Appeals in Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer,¹ and in so far as they conflict with the rule established by that case, to the effect that the writ can be executed after the return-day, are not followed. Dent v. Simmons, usually cited in connection with United States v. Slaymaker, was distinguished from Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer on the point as to the execution of the writ after the return-day, on the ground that it appeared, in Dent v. Simmons, that the writ had been returned and filed as a court record, and was, of course, no longer in the hands of the sheriff for execution. The theory upon which Dent v. Simmons and similar cases were decided is, that the execution of the writ is tantamount to a satisfaction of the judgment, and that two satisfactions cannot be had of the same judgment.² It must be conceded, however, that this principle cannot, from the very nature of things, be applied to actions for the recovery of the possession of land. If the writ can be issued and executed but once, it is idle to hold that the judgment is binding and conclusive, for, if the defendant again entered upon the lands there would be no method at the disposal of the plaintiff by which the judgment could be made practically effectual and the defendant again dispossessed.

§ 552. Alias writs.—Under the practice in New York, when, in ejectment, a writ habere facias possessionem has been executed by putting the defendant out of possession and the plaintiff, after maintaining the possession four or five days, is dispossessed by a person claiming under defendant's title, an alias writ is awarded, although the return-day of the first writ has not arrived;³ and if the sheriff deliver possession to the plaintiff on an alias writ, and before its actual return the defendant regains possession, the plaintiff may have a pluries writ.⁴

¹ 64 N. Y. 27-31.

² Dent v. Simmons, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 42. See Romero v. Munos, 1 New Mex. 314.

³ Jackson v. Hawley, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 182. See Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 412; People v. Dwinelle, 29 Cal. 632.

⁴ Van Rensselaer v. Witbeck, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 498. Mr. Longfield says: "Even should the sheriff give possession, and the writ be returned, yet, if the plaintiff be

§ 553. Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer discussed.—The practice intended to be established by the New York Court of Appeals, in Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, is certainly a more simple and effectual form of redress than that suggested by the cases holding that after the writ has been once executed and returned, or the return-day has passed, the power of the court to further enforce its mandate, or to protect and secure to the successful litigant the fruits of the judgment is exhausted. The latter doctrine renders the entire redress afforded by the judgment in ejectment transitory and unsatisfactory. The court is bound in good conscience to maintain and continue the party in the possession of the lands to which it has adjudged him to be entitled. Otherwise, the defeated party might constantly undo the action of the court and practically nullify its mandate. It is not a sufficient answer to say that the plaintiff in the ejectment action can procure a warrant of forcible entry if the defendant re-enters. Invoking this further remedy entails additional inconvenience and expense, and, furthermore, the possession may have been regained by the defendant under such circumstances as not to render him amenable to the provisions of the statutes regulating forcible entries.¹ If the plaintiff was unable to proceed under these statutes, his only redress would be to institute another ejectment. The judgment in ejectment, as we have seen, is now generally declared by statute, or held by the courts to be conclusive upon the parties. Under these circumstances it seems unreasonable to refuse to issue process to render its binding force practically effectual.²

§ 554. Plaintiff taking possession at his peril.—In ejectment at common law, when the declaration, verdict and judgment described the property in general terms, the plaintiff might take possession of the lands at his peril, shortly afterwards disturbed by the late tenants, the defendants, or by any one in collusion with them, the court will order a new habere to issue, and not compel the plaintiff to resort to another ejectment." Longfield on Ejectment, p. 205, citing Linehan v. Anthony, Batty, 454; Lee v. Ejector, 5, Ir. L. R. 172; Graydon v. Ejector, 5 Ir. L. R. 436; Doe d. Pitcher v. Roe, 9 Dowl. 971.

¹ See Romero v. Munos, 1 New Mex. 314.

² See §§ 43, 44, 524, and Chapter XX.

subject to be put right by the court if he took more or other lands than those which constituted the subject-matter of the controversy.¹ The propriety of arming a claimant with court process, and furnishing him an officer empowered to take possession of any lands which the claimant's caprice or cupidity might prompt him to point out was open to the most serious objections. This practice was not universal, and was not followed in Alabama, at least while trespass to try title prevailed in that State. The practice there required that the verdict and writ should describe with reasonable certainty the lands intended to be covered thereby.²

§ 555. Manner of executing the writ.—In executing the writ of possession where an adverse possession is held, it is the duty of the officer, first, to turn out the occupants;³ then to take possession in the name of the law; and afterwards to deliver the vacant possession to the plaintiff in the ejectment.⁴ When the writ is issued to the sheriff he is held to possess all the power necessary to accomplish its complete enforcement; and where admission to a house is denied, he may break open the doors or windows, and use all the force that may be needed to overcome any resistance to the enforcement of the process.⁵ If there is a house on the premises the writ must be executed by putting the tenant out of the house and the plaintiff into it.⁶ And in contemplation of law a delivery of the possession to the plaintiff's agent is equivalent to a delivery to the plaintiff in person.⁷

¹ Jackson v. Rathbone, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 291; Doe d. Drapers' Co. v. Wilson, 2 Stark. 477; Cottingham v. King, 1 Burr. 629; Shaw v. Bayard, 4 Penn. St. 257; Johnson v. Nevill, 65 N. C. 677; Ex-parte Reynolds, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 499; Bayard v. Colefax, 4 Wash. C. C. 38, 43; Camden v. Haskill, 3 Rand. (Va.) 462-465; Den v. Johnson, 12 N. J. L. 275; Fassit v. Richard, 2 Harr. (Del.) 289. See §§ 455-459.

² Bennet v. Morris, 9 Porter (Ala.), 171. See, also, Hildreth v. Thompson, 16 Mass. 191.

³ Johnson v. McIlwain, Rice (S. C.) Law, 368.

⁴ United States v. Lowry, 2 Wash. C. C. 169; Ex-parte Black, 2 Bailey (S. C.) Law, 8.

⁵ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. [*342] 412; Crocker on Sheriffs, § 573; Howe v. Butterfield, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 302; Semayne's Case, 5 Rep. 91, b. (3 Coke, 188); Keith v. Johnson, 1 Dana (Ky.), 605.

⁶ Den d. Smallwood v. Bilderback, 16 N. J. L. 497.

⁷ People v. Cooper, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 486-491; Kercheval v. Ambler, 4 Dana

§ 556. When execution considered complete.—The case of *Kingsdale v. Mann*¹ is usually cited as an authority for the proposition that the execution of the writ of possession is not completed until the sheriff or his bailiffs have delivered full possession to the plaintiff, and have left the premises. No such proposition was actually or necessarily involved in the case, for it appeared that possession was actually delivered by the officers at nine o'clock in the morning, and toward six o'clock at night of the same day the plaintiff was forcibly dispossessed. The court expressed doubt as to whether, after so many hours had elapsed, the act of the defendant in dispossessing the plaintiff could be regarded as an interference with or disturbance of the execution, and merely granted a rule to show cause why an attachment should not issue. This leads us to the discussion of the question as to what may be considered a delivery of possession or complete execution of the writ. Undoubtedly it is the duty of the sheriff, if required so to do, to remove from the premises all the personal property found thereon belonging to the defendant. But in a recent case before the New York Court of Appeals, that tribunal declared that no authorities had been cited to the court tending to show that the omission so to do vitiated the execution of the writ when possession of the land had been actually and in fact delivered.²

§ 557. Removal of personal property.—*People v. Cooper*³ in the New York Supreme Court, is an important and interesting case concerning the rights and duties of the sheriff as to the removal of goods and personal property found upon the premises. It appeared that on May 18, 1874, at 10 A. M., a writ of possession was issued to the sheriff on a judgment in ejectment, in which one Fountain (Ky.), 166; Higginbotham v. Higginbotham, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 370; Smith v. White, 5 Dana (Ky.), 376; Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, 64 N. Y. 27.

¹ 1 Salk. 321; s. c. 6 Mod. 27. See Farnsworth v. Fowler, 1 Swan (Tenn.), 1. In Smith v. White, 5 Dana (Ky.), 376, the court said: "A defendant may surely yield obedience to the process of the court, without being forcibly turned out, neck and heels. The object of the process is to obtain possession. If that be yielded up peaceably, or tacitly, or expressly acknowledged to be in the plaintiffs, and they or their agent accepted it, that is surely sufficient without an expulsion in fact."

² Witbeck v. Van Rensselaer, 64 N. Y. 27-32; People v. Cooper, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 486-491.

³ 20 Hun (N. Y.), 486.

was plaintiff, and one Scudder was defendant. The sheriff thereupon went to the house with one Arnot, the assignee of the plaintiff's rights under the judgment, and refusing his request for delay, demanded the immediate possession from Scudder, and proceeded at once to carry out the furniture, taking the door keys and putting them in his pocket. At 1 P. M. of the same day the sheriff was served with an order staying all proceedings upon the judgment and the writ. He thereupon stopped the further removal of the goods from the house, told a person in the house that she had better go out, as he was about to lock up the house, and having locked the doors went away leaving a deputy sheriff in possession. Upon an appeal from an order adjudging the sheriff guilty of contempt for violating the stay of proceedings, it was held that the sheriff could take possession as Arnot's agent; that when served with the order staying all further proceedings Arnot, by virtue of what had transpired, was already in possession of the premises; that the sheriff was not required to turn out Arnot and reinstate Scudder in possession, and that his failure so to do did not render him guilty of a contempt.

§ 558. Parties who may be evicted.—It is the duty of the sheriff to remove not only the defendant named in the writ and his family, employees and servants, but also all persons who may have entered upon the land pending the action, whether as trespassers, or claiming to hold the possession in the right of the defendant, or under the title which was adjudicated in the action.¹ Tenants at will or at sufferance, whether they entered before or after the commencement of the action, may be evicted.² Parties not bound by the judgment, when threatened with expulsion, may stay the writ,³ or secure a perpetual injunction.⁴

¹ Hickman v. Dale, 7 Verg. (Tenn.) 149; Wallen v. Huff, 3 Sneed (Tenn.), 82 McCreery v. Everding, 54 Cal. 166; Higginbotham v. Higginbotham, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 372; Johnson v. Fullerton, 44 Penn. St. 466; Wattson v. Dowling, 26 Cal. 124; Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489; Long v. Morton, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 39; Hanson v. Armstrong, 22 Ill. 442; Jackson v. Tuttle, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 233; Howard v. Kennedy, 4 Ala. 592; Mayne v. Jones, 34 Cal. 483; Huerstal v. Muir, 64 Cal. 450.

² Mattox v. Helm, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 185; s. c. 15 Am. Dec. 64.

³ McLeran v. McNamara, 60 Cal. 610.

⁴ Charter Oak L. I. Co. v. Cummings, 13 Mo. App. 76; High on Injunctions, (2d ed.) § 357; Goodnough v. Sheppard, 28 Ill. 81; Banks v. Parker, 80 N. C. 157.

§ 559. Removal of wife under writ against her husband.—It has even been said in Pennsylvania, that the rule justifies the sheriff, while executing the writ, in removing the wife of the defendant from the lands, though she put forth a claim of independent title in herself. The court decided that a judgment against the head of the family was a judgment against his family and servants, and against all tenants under him, who had entered since the action was instituted; otherwise it was considered that the judgment would be valueless, for if one member of the family could retain the possession, he or she might cover the possession of all the others. The court say further that it was the husband's duty to defend the possession of the family, and failing so to do the family must go out with him, "just as a tenant with his family must go out who fails to give his landlord notice, or to defend under his title, though this title may be perfect."¹ The court concede that the title of the wife cannot be affected by the judgment against her husband alone, but only her possession. This seems to be rested largely upon considerations of public policy and the dangers and uncertainty likely to result to a plaintiff from permitting a member of a family to evade the effect of the writ of possession issued against the head of the family.

§ 560. Johnson v. Fullerton criticised.—The facts in this case, however, were peculiar. The husband did not appear in the court below, and judgment against him was rendered on a plea entered by the court. This the court above held to be irregular, and, notwithstanding what was said in the opinion, affirmed the order of restitution to the wife. The case is, therefore, not authority for the proposition that a wife can be dispossessed while claiming an independent title. Such a view could not be supported on principle. Title to land is but another name for the right by which the possession of land is protected and maintained. The possession is its most essential and important attribute. The party vested with the title and possession can only be deprived of it against his will by a judgment duly rendered, by a court of competent jurisdiction, to which he is a party, and which is binding and conclusive upon him, and not by the circumstance that he or she is so unfortunate as to be related to or a member of the family of another person, who has been adjudged to be without title. The court said, in the case above cited, that it was the duty of the head of the family to defend the family's possession by setting up the title of the wife. But she is not to be prejudiced by the breach of duty of the husband in failing so to do, or to forfeit her possession in obedience to a judgment rendered without notice to her, and upon a title under which she does not claim or hold. The court said: "The title of the wife cannot be affected by a judgment against her husband alone, but only her possession." This statement is clearly erroneous. If the wife is deforced of the possession she will be compelled to become a plaintiff in ejectment, and thereby lose the vantage ground which the possession conferred. She will be forced to recover upon the strength of her own title, which it may be difficult or impossible to prove, and to become an actor, and assume the burden of a litigation, which, but for the loss of the possession, would have been cast upon her opponent. Her title is clearly affected, abridged and impaired to this extent at least by her expulsion under the writ; she can no longer hold the land as against all the world except the true owner. Her adversary has, by virtue of a judgment, to which she was not a party, and rendered upon a different title, usurped her position, and, by gaining the possession, acquired the important and substantial rights and advantages which the possession confers, and which belonged to her. In Tevis v. Hicks,¹ it was held that a wife who claimed in her own right, and as her separate property, an interest in the lands in controversy, could not be ejected or removed under a writ against her husband.

¹ Johnson v. Fullerton, 44 Penn. St. 466.

§ 561. Burden upon the officer to excuse non-execution of the writ.—There being ordinarily no exception on the face of the writ as to the parties to be removed under it, if the sheriff fails to obey its command, his excuse is affirmative matter, and the burden rests upon him to show that the parties whose possession he has refused to disturb, are not bound or affected by the judgment.¹

¹ 38 Cal. 234.

§ 562. Parties concluded by the judgment must be evicted.—The doctrine seems to be generally established that persons who were not made parties to the ejectment, and who were in possession before it was instituted, or who claim under titles distinct and independent from or paramount to the title litigated in the ejectment, cannot be evicted under the writ. The safest test is are the parties whom it is proposed to remove bound or concluded by the judgment, or do they claim under parties concluded by it, or in subordination to the title adjudicated in the action?² If so they must be evicted. Prima facie, all parties entering after suit brought acquire the possession in subordination to the defendant.³ But the facts may be shown, and the rule will exempt the party from eviction if he comes into possession after the action is commenced, provided he does not come in under a party to the suit, but by virtue of an adverse and paramount title. His most effective remedy, if evicted, is not to apply to open the judgment, but to get a writ of restitution,⁴ or to apply to the court to be excepted from the operation of the writ of possession.

§ 563. Possession to be given of fixtures and improvements.—The sheriff should also place the plaintiff in possession of all the fixtures⁵ and improvements upon the premises, that is to say, the disseizor, when obliged by law to yield the possession, must surrender the land in its improved state;⁶ and, as between the successful plaintiff in an action of ejectment and the evicted defendant, the crops growing

¹ Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 664.

² Powell v. Lawson, 49 Ga. 290; Calderwood v. Pyser, 31 Cal. 333; Garrison v. Savignac, 25 Mo. 47-53; Goerges v. Hufschmidt, 44 Mo. 179; Tevis v. Ellis, 25 Cal. 515; South Beach Land Ass'n v. Christy, 41 Cal. 501; Rogers v. Parish, 35 Cal. 127; Ford v. Doyle, 37 Cal. 346; Clark v. Parkinson, 10 Allen (Mass.), 133; Howard v. Kennedy, 4 Ala. 592; Smith's Lessee v. Trabue's Heirs, 1 McL. 87; Jones v. Burget, 38 Tex. 396; Kelly v. Fritz, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 7; Fogarty v. Sparks, 22 Cal. 143. See Terrell v. Allison, 21 Wall. 289; Howard v. Railway Co., 101 U. S. 837-849.

³ Hall v. Dexter, 3 Sawyer, 434; Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 664.

⁴ Smith v. Pretty, 22 Wis. 655; Hall v. Dexter, 3 Sawyer, 434; Gelpeke v. Mil. & H. R. R. Co. 11 Wis. 462; McChord's Heirs v. McClintock, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 304; Raw v. Stevenson, 24 Pittsb. L. J. (Pa.) 145. See § 575.

⁵ McMinn v. Mayes, 4 Cal. 209.

⁶ Russell v. Blake, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 507.

upon the land are a part of the realty, and belong to the plaintiff.¹

§ 564. Interference by the court before execution.—The court will also, when necessary, interfere in a proper case before the execution of the writ, and restrain the claimant from taking possession of more land than he is entitled to recover.² Thus, where the lessor had declared for lands held under two separate titles, and by a mistake of the judge upon the law of the case the verdict was given for the plaintiff upon both titles, when it should have been entered for the defendant as to the lands comprised in one of them, the court confined the execution to the lands to which the lessor had proved a valid title.

§ 565. Mandamus or order to officer to execute writ.—Indemnity.—If the sheriff refuses to execute the writ the plaintiff may procure an order in the action requiring him to do so,³ or possibly he may procure a peremptory mandamus against the sheriff.⁴ The court in New York, as we have already shown,⁵ refused to instruct the sheriff to remove so much of the wall of defendant's building as stood upon the strip of land recovered, which was one and seven-eighths inches wide, upon the theory that the sheriff must act on his own responsibility in the execution of process.⁶ The sheriff may of course demand a bond of indemnity before removing a party who claims that he is not bound by the judgment, if a reasonable doubt exists on the subject.⁷

¹ Altes v. Hinckler, 36 Ill. 275; Lane v. King, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 584; Gillett v. Balcom, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 370; McLean v. Bovee, 24 Wis. 295; Hodgson v. Gascoigne, 5 B. & Ald. 88; Doe d. Upton v. Witherwick, 3 Bing. 11; Croty v. Collins, 13 Ill. 567; Brothers v. Hurdle, 10 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 490; Strode v. Swim, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 271; Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), [*347] 416.

² Doe d. Forster v. Wandlass, 7 T. R. 118, in notis. See Brookes d. Mence v. Baldwin, Barnes, 468; Wallen v. Huff, 3 Sneed (Tenn.), 82; Blair v. Pathkiller, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 230; Jackson v. Rathbone, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 291; Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 664; Roe d. Blair v. Street, 2 Ad. & El. 329; Adams on Ejectment (4th ed.), p. 412 [*342].

³ Jackson v. Rathbone, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 291; Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 664.

⁴ Fremont v. Crippen, 10 Cal. 211; Moses on Mandamus, p. 59; Fogarty v. Sparks, 22 Cal. 143. See § 158.

⁵ Bowie v. Brahe, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 161; s. c. 4 Duer (N. Y.) 676. See Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. v. Babbitt, 74 N. Y. 403; Matter of Steamship Circassian, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 500.

⁷ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), [*342] 412; Gilbert on Ejectment, 110; Crocker on Sheriffs, § 572; Long v. Neville, 36 Cal. 455; Dupont v. Ervin, 2 Brev. (S. C.) Law, 400; Hall v. Dexter, 3 Sawyer, 434.

§ 566. Officer's duties defined.—The duties of the officer with regard to the execution of the writ have been carefully considered and defined by Mr. Justice Field, of the United States Supreme Court, sitting at circuit, in a comparatively recent case. After stating the general rule that a judgment in ejectment binds, as to the title, only parties to the action, and those claiming under them, the court said: "Persons entering after suit by title existing previously adverse to that of the parties, stand in a different position. Their title is in no respect affected by the judgment. But the determination of the question, whether parties thus entering into possession have such antedating title, is not left to the judgment of the marshal. He is not clothed with any judicial power to pass upon the rights of parties found upon the premises other than the defendant. The most that he can do, when such a party claims to have a title anterior to the suit, is to require from the plaintiff a bond of indemnity, or give a reasonable time for the party to apply to the court for a modification of the writ, so as to exclude him from its operation. Upon such application the court may stay the enforcement of the writ, or except the applicant from its operation, until the rights of the parties can be properly determined. But when a sufficient bond of indemnity is tendered, and no different order is made in the manner indicated, the duty of the marshal will only be discharged by placing the plaintiff in possession, as directed, and this implies a removal of all occupants."¹

§ 567. Officer cannot file counter-affidavit of party in possession to excuse non-execution of writ.—A curious state of facts growing out of the execution of a writ of possession was presented in a case in Georgia. The defendant in ejectment, after judgment, abandoned the possession of the premises, and a day or two after he left, one L. went into possession. A writ of possession having issued on the judgment, the sheriff went upon the land to execute the writ, and found L. in possession, who furnished him an affidavit setting forth that she did not hold under any of the parties to the action. The sheriff received and filed the affidavit with his return, and did not execute the writ. The court held that there was no provision of law authorizing the sheriff to receive the counter-affidavit of L. to the writ of possession, as she was not a party to the action, and no issue could be created to be tried by returning the papers to the court in the manner indicated.¹

¹ Hall v. Dexter, 3 Sawyer, 434.

§ 568. Injunction improper in order for restitution.—In *Dawley v. Brown*² in the New York Supreme Court, it appeared that the plaintiff had been put into possession of certain lands by virtue of a writ issued on a judgment in ejectment. The judgment was subsequently set aside and an order for the restoration of the possession granted to the defendant. This order contained an injunction clause restraining the plaintiff from entering upon or interfering with the possession of the lands, and restraining him from cultivating or otherwise using or occupying them. The court decided that the portions of the order which attempted to restrain the plaintiff were not only irregular but utterly void; that the only appropriate redress was the order for the restoration of the possession, and that when the possession was regained the defendant could maintain an appropriate action against the plaintiff for any illegal entry or interference with the possession.

§ 569. Landlord and tenant.—According to some of the cases, the landlord who receives the possession from his tenant pending the ejectment will be bound by a recovery against the tenant, at least so far as to entitle the plaintiff to evict him under the writ,³ and this rule has been extended to include the landlord's widow and heirs who entered subsequent to the commencement of the suit.⁴ But in Oetgen v. Ross,⁵ however, in which judgment had been rendered against a tenant, and the landlord had reassumed possession, the Supreme Court of Illinois, in the exercise of a species of equitable jurisdiction, stayed the enforce-

¹ Powell v. Lawson, 49 Ga. 290.

² 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 22. See People v. Cooper, 20 Hun (N. Y.), 486-489.

³ Hanson v. Armstrong, 22 Ill. 442; Sampson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. 200; Smith v. Gayle, 58 Ala. 600; Rodgers v. Bell, 53 Ga. 94.

⁴ Wallen v. Huff, 3 Sneed (Tenn.), 82.

⁵ 47 Ill. 142.

ment of the writ and permitted the landlord to come in and try the case upon its merits, the landlord representing that the tenant had not informed him of the pendency of the action.

§ 570. Co-tenant.—Where an ejectment is brought by a stranger against one of two persons in joint possession of the land, it not appearing that either claimed under the other, the judgment will bind only the defendant, and the other party cannot be expelled by the writ of possession.¹ And where the plaintiff recovers in ejectment an undivided part of a house and lot, it is the duty of the sheriff to put the plaintiff in actual possession with the defendant.² Thus, where the defendants were two out of eight of the lessor's heirs, it was held that the writ of possession should not issue to put the defendants out, but to put the other heirs in possession with them, as in the case of tenants in common.³ This subject has been considered at length in discussing the special subject of ejectment between tenants in common.⁴

§ 571. Land subject to easement.—The owner of the fee of a public highway over which the public have an easement or right to travel, who has recovered in ejectment the lands within the limits of the highway against a person who has appropriated the same to a purpose not authorized by the easement, is entitled to have the possession delivered to him by the sheriff, subject to the use or easement.⁵ The writ should follow the judgment in this respect, and this subject has already been incidentally considered in discussing the interests which will support ejectment and the judgment.⁶

§ 572. Inaccessible lands.—As shown in a former chapter, it is no obstacle to a recovery in ejectment that the land

¹ Stokes v. Morrow, 54 Ga. 597.

² Ash v. McGill, 6 Whart. (Penn.) 391; Withrow v. Biggerstaff, 82 N. C. 82; Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 499; Tevis v. Hicks, 38 Cal. 234; Dupont v. Ervin, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 400.

³ Wilson v. Hall, 13 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 489.

⁴ See Chap. IX.

⁵ Reformed Church v. Schoolcraft, 65 N. Y. 134; Kenniston v. Hannaford, 58 N. H. 28.

⁶ See §§ 130-132, 492a, 526.

in controversy is inaccessible at the time of trial, so that the sheriff cannot deliver possession.¹ Nor does the fact that the land is covered with water necessarily prevent the sheriff from delivering possession.²

§ 573. Writ issued on behalf of heirs.—In Pennsylvania it has been held that where a plaintiff dies after recovering a judgment in an ejectment, his heirs can have execution thereon without a re-trial of the original controversy. Only a release of the judgment, or a conveyance to the defendant, would be pleadable to a scire facias.³ In New York it has been held, under the former practice, that if one of two plaintiffs dies after judgment, execution may issue in their joint names without a scire facias.⁴

§ 574. Separate judgments.—Where two plaintiffs obtained separate judgments in ejectment at the same term of the court, against the same defendant, and one plaintiff evicted the defendant by habere facias, and immediately leased to him the land recovered, and he entered under the lease, it was held that he might be afterward lawfully evicted by habere facias upon the other judgment. Had the first plaintiff retained the possession, or leased to a stranger, neither he nor his tenant could have been turned out by a judgment to which neither was a party.⁵

§ 575. Restitution.—A writ, or an order for restitution, will be granted in cases where the sheriff has delivered possession of lands not embraced in the writ, or has evicted parties who were not legally subject to the operation of the writ or bound by the judgment,⁶ or where the judgment in ejectment has been reversed on appeal,⁷ or

¹ Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382. See § 127.

² Perrine v. Bergen, 14 N. J. L. 355.

³ Weaver v. Wible, 72 Penn. St. 469. See Howell v. Eldridge, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 678; Penn v. Klyne, Pet. C. C. 446. See, also, § 205.

⁴ Howell v. Eldridge, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 678.

⁵ Kercheval v. Ambler, 4 Dana (Ky.), 169.

⁶ City of Natchez v. Vandervelde, 31 Miss. 706; Smith v. Pretty, 22 Wis. 655; South Beach Land Assoc'n v. Christy, 41 Cal. 501; Shaw v. Bayard, 4 Penn. St. 257; Blair v. Pathkiller, 5 Verg. (Tenn.), 230; Jackson v. Stiles, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 418; Roscoe on Real Actions, p. 610.

⁷ Breeding v. Blocher, 29 Penn. St. 347; Polack v. Shafer, 46 Cal. 270; Hall v. Wells, 54 Miss. 290.

vacated for irregularity,¹ or a party has been turned out by mistake.² But the sheriff has no authority, by virtue of a writ of restitution, to remove from the premises persons who were not parties to the judgment, and who did not enter under the defendant pending the suit.³ The party moving for a writ, or order of restitution, must make out a clear case, free from ambiguity,⁴ and restitution will be denied to a party who has been removed from possession, if he is without color of right to the possession.⁵ In New York, since the adoption of the Code, when a regular judgment is entered awarding the plaintiff the possession of real property, and execution has issued putting him in actual possession, on setting aside the judgment and execution, the proper remedy of the defendant, to compel restoration of the property, is to apply to the special term of the court for an order to show cause why possession should not be restored to him, and an order granted on the hearing of the order to show cause is sufficient authority to restore the possession to the defendant.⁶ Disobedience of such an order may be punished as for a contempt. But, as we have seen, the order cannot properly contain an injunction clause restraining the plaintiff from using the premises.⁷ In Pennsylvania it has been held that where a habere facias is set aside, in consequence of an agreement of the parties after judgment, an award of restitution is a matter of course, and this may be enforced either by attachment or writ of restitution;⁸ and in New York where the plaintiff takes possession of more land than he has recovered, or is entitled to, the court will grant a writ of restitution, or, in a doubtful case, award a feigned issue.⁹

¹ Dawley v. Brown, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.), 17; Lowry v. Jenkins, 3 Bibb. (Ky.) 314.

² Ex-parte Reynolds, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 500.

³ Tevis v. Ellis, 25 Cal. 515.

⁴ California Q. Min. Co. v. Redington, 50 Cal. 160. See Franklin v. Merida, 50 Cal. 289.

⁵ McQuade v. Emmons, 38 N. J. L. 397.

⁶ Compare Martin v. Rector, 2 McC. Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 134, reversed 28 Hun (N. Y.) 409.

⁷ Dawley v. Brown, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 22.

⁸ Greer v. McClelland, 1 Phila. (Penn.) 128.

⁹ Ostrander v. Hasbrouck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 366; Jackson v. Stiles, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 418.

CHAPTER XXII.

STATUTORY NEW TRIALS, OR SECOND ACTIONS TO TRY TITLE.

- | | |
|--|--|
| § 576. Early practice as to new trials in ejectment. 577. New trials at common law. 578. Origin of statutory new trials. 579. Reasons for granting statutory new trial to plaintiff. 580. Statutes in effect restrictive of common law rights. 581. Statutory and common law new trials independent. 582. Abuses under the statutes. 583. Successful plaintiff not allowed to discontinue ejectment to avoid second trial. 584. How the statutes are interpreted. 585. Actions to which the statutes apply. 586. Suits to quiet title. 587. Defeated defendant cannot become plaintiff in second action. 588. Effect of entry of erroneous judgment. 589. Statutes not applicable to equitable actions. 590. Granting new trials in equity in analogy to the statutes. 591. Disputed boundaries. | § 592. Actions to determine conflicting claims to real property. 593. Actions between landlord and tenant. 594. Forcible entry statutes. 595. Actions of trespass, specific performance, and to set aside conveyances not within the statutes. 596. Common law new trials not counted. 597. What title investigated on second trial. 598. Conditions of procuring the order. 599. Practice in New York. 600. Sacia v. O'Connor. 601. Strangers to the record not entitled to new trial. 602. } Practice in various States. 603. } 604. New trial waived by stipulation. 605. Pendency of writ of error or appeal. 606. Second action must be instituted in same court. 607. Statutes controlling in Federal courts. 608. } Repeal of the statutes recommended. 609. } |
|--|--|

§ 576. Early practice as to new trials in ejectment.—The principle was asserted in some of the early cases, that the court would not award a new trial in an action of ejectment, for the reason that the judgment was not conclusive;¹ but Lord Mansfield decided in the case of Goodtitle v. Clayton, in 1768, that the fact that the action was an ejectment constituted no reason against granting a new trial, for, though the judgment was not an estoppel, and a second ejectment might be instituted, yet a change of possession

¹ Argent v. Darrell, 2 Salk. 648; s. c. 1 Ld. Raym. 514; Fenwick v. Grosvenor, 2 Salk. 650.

would be effected under the first judgment, by which the defeated party would suffer.¹

§ 577. New trials at common law.—It is clearly settled that the defeated party in ejectment, as in other civil actions, is entitled to any number of new trials for sufficient legal cause, such as erroneous rulings of the court in the admission or exclusion of evidence, a misdirection in the charge, a finding of the jury contrary to or against the weight of the evidence, or other similar errors.² Indeed, the rules governing applications for new trials in other civil cases, are not so rigidly enforced in actions to try title to land, and a new trial is frequently ordered in the latter class of cases for reasons which would ordinarily be considered manifestly insufficient.³ Ejectments, as we have seen, were substituted in the place of real writs in which the title appeared upon the pleadings or was indicated by the form of the writ, and gave no room for surprise. Hence the courts leaned in favor of defendants in ejectment who sought a new trial on the footing of surprise.⁴ A new trial will not be granted in these actions to enable a defeated party to set up an outstanding title with which he has no connection, for such a defense is stricti juris, and will not be favored;⁵ and a third trial will rarely be allowed on an application at common law, after the moving party has availed himself of the privilege of a second new trial under the statutes which we are about to consider;⁶ and will be denied if the purpose is to enable the party to introduce cumulative evidence.⁷

§ 578. Origin of statutory new trials.—In many of our States a more certain and effective method of procuring a

¹ Goodtitle v. Clayton, 4 Burr. 2224, 2225.

² Emmons v. Bishop, 14 Ill. 152; Taylor v. Sutton, 15 Ga. 103; Baze v. Arper, 6 Minn. 220; Clayton v. School District, 20 Kansas, 256.

³ Jackson v. Dickenson, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 309; Jackson v. Laird, 8 Ib. 489; Clayton v. Yarrington, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 144; Newell v. Sanford, 10 Iowa, 396; White v. Poorman, 24 Iowa, 108.

⁴ Clymer v. Littler, 3 Burr. 1244; s. c. 1 W. Bla. 346.

⁵ Peck v. Carmichael, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 325.

⁶ Frost ads. Brown, 2 Bay (S. C.) 133; Phyfe v. Masterson, 13 J. & S. (N. Y.) 338; Wright v. Milbank, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 672.

⁷ Laffin v. Herrington, 17 Ill. 399.

rehearing than the common law application for a new or second trial, peculiar to actions for the trial of title to land, is given by statute to the plaintiff, or the defeated party. The policy of the law in allowing new or second trials, as a matter of right, in actions to try titles to land, owes its origin to the peculiar sanctity which, in feudal times, attached to the tenure of real property. Our ancestors were unwilling that claims of title to land should, like other claims, be settled forever by one trial, in an ordinary personal action, but, as is shown elsewhere, were inclined to afford the unsuccessful party another opportunity of establishing his title.¹

§ 579. Reason for granting statutory new trial to plaintiff.—The statutory right to a second trial is given in some States only to a defeated plaintiff upon the theory that the burden of proving a superior title rests with him, and he should be afforded an opportunity to supply any defects in his claim of title as first exhibited, and especially to avoid or overcome the defendant's title concerning the evidence in support of which he may have been ignorant in the first instance.² The wisdom of a system of practice which enables a plaintiff to employ the process of the court to obtain knowledge of his adversary's title, as a means of preparing for a second trial, may certainly be questioned.

§ 580. Statutes in effect restrictive of common law rights.—The judgment in ejectment, for reasons already discussed,³ was not conclusive, and fresh ejectments could be instituted until a court of equity intervened by injunction.

¹ See Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall. 35-41; Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30-35; Gregory v. Lincoln, 13 Neb. 352. See § 42. In Equator Co. v. Hall, 106 U. S. 87, the learned Justice Miller said: "A title to real estate has, under the traditions of the common law, been held, in all the States where that law prevailed, to be too important, we might almost say too sacred, to be concluded forever by the result of one action between the contesting parties. Hence, those States which, by abolishing the fictions of the action at the common law, and substituting a direct suit between the parties actually claiming under conflicting titles, which, according to the nature of this new proceeding, would end in a judgment concluding both parties, have found it necessary to provide for new trials to such extent as each State legislature has thought sound policy to require. These provisions for new trials in actions of ejectment are not the same in all the States, but it is believed that almost all of them which have abolished the common law action have made provision for one or more new trials as a matter of right."

² Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30-35.

³ See Chapter XX.

Hence, Baron Gilbert observes that the proceeding of ejectment was generally preferred to an assize "from the convenience of repeated trials."¹ These statutes, generally speaking, are, therefore, in effect restrictive of the common law rights of the defeated party in ejectment; usually, by their provisions, a given number of trials is made conclusive upon the parties and the title, and the necessity for a perpetual injunction against new ejectments is superseded. The statutes, though necessarily somewhat varied in details as to matters of practice, are substantially alike in the several States in which they prevail.

§ 581. Statutory and common law new trials independent.—It is clear that these statutes furnish a remedy additional to and independent of the ordinary new trials at common law,² though in some cases in which the defeated party was pursuing the ordinary rights of a litigant, the application for a new trial at common law has been treated by the courts as superfluous, the statutory right to a new trial being available.³

§ 582. Abuses under the statutes.—Despite the wise purpose intended to be subserved by the law-making power, statutory new trials are frequently resorted to by unscrupulous claimants as instruments of vexatious delay and oppression. An honest litigant, after a tedious and expensive trial, and a careful examination and adjudication of the title upon the merits, suddenly finds his judgment vacated, and the fruits of a hard fought contest apparently sacrificed, for no error, omission, or mistake contained in the record or occurring at the trial. Hence the books are prolific of expedients for thwarting the operation of these statutes. Judge Foster, in delivering the opinion of the New York Court of Appeals in the case of Shumway v. Shumway,⁴ says: "It was not very uncommon

¹ Gilbert on Eject., p. 8.

² Lafin v. Herrington, 17 Ill. 399.

³ Walker v. Armour, 22 Ill. 658. See Frost ads. Brown, 2 Bay (S. C.), 133.

⁴ 42 N. Y. 143. See Masten v. Olcott, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 587. As to the estoppel of a judgment in trespass when pleaded in ejectment, see, further, Small v. Haskins, 26 Vt. 209; Morse v. Marshall, 97 Mass. 519; Dunckel v. Wiles, 11 N. Y. 420. Compare Arnold v. Arnold, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 4; Graham v. Peat, 1 East, 244.

for a party, claiming the title to land and the right of possession, and who desired to avoid the delays consequent upon the statutory right to new trials in an action of ejectment, to bring his action in trespass, and so establish his right upon a single trial, and recover his damages for the trespass; and when judgment was perfected, if the defendant did not yield the possession, to bring his action of ejectment, on the trial of which, the record of judgment in the action of trespass would be conclusive evidence of his right, and render hopeless any attempt to obtain a new trial."

§ 583. Successful plaintiff not allowed to discontinue ejectment to avoid second trial.—In Carleton v. Darcy,¹ a plaintiff who had succeeded in an ejectment was put into possession under the judgment. The defendant paid the costs and took a new trial. The plaintiff, still retaining possession of the lands, applied to the court for permission to discontinue the action. The application was denied, the court holding that the plaintiff could not retain the substantial fruits of the action, and force upon the defendant the burden of showing a valid title, but rather that it would require the plaintiff to pursue the action until a definite and final result was reached, settling positively the rights of possession of the lands in dispute, so long as the defendant desired to avail himself of the further litigation which the law afforded him.

§ 584. How the statutes are interpreted—In Illinois it has been held that the statutes should receive a liberal construction,² and the courts of that State have decided that the important rights granted thereby, were not lost by reason of the failure of the moving party to pay an award of one cent damages, given on the first trial, as the law would not regard such trifles.³ In Texas the statute permitting a second suit, was declared to be an exception to an almost universal rule founded on the wisest public policy, and the court said that it should be strictly construed, and confined to actions for the trial of title proper, which came within the mischief intended to be obviated.¹ We shall presently show that these statutes have practically outlived their usefulness² and the wisdom of applying a rule of construction to them which tends to favor new trials is very questionable. They should at most receive only an ordinary and natural construction, neither strict nor liberal. Any attempt to restrict the operation of the statutes by applying to them the rules of interpretation governing penal statutes would be of doubtful utility.

¹ 75 N. Y. 375; s. c., below, 11 J. & S. (N. Y.) 373.

² Chamberlin v. McCarty, 63 Ill. 262.

³ Myers v. Phillips, 68 Ill. 269.

§ 585. Actions to which the statutes apply.—Where the complaint, in addition to the usual averments, stated facts in relation to the assessment of damages, and also contained averments sufficient to warrant an application for a receiver, and supplemented the ordinary prayer by asking for an injunction, accounting, and receiver, the suit was held to be ejection, and the defeated plaintiff was allowed a new trial under the statute.³ In a recent case which arose in Kansas, it was decided that the right to a second trial was not taken away by the addition to the petition of a claim for mesne profits, and that this important privilege was not affected by the fact that an equitable defense was set forth in the answer. The court held that, as the plaintiff had commenced an action which was in form for the recovery of real property, the statutory rights incident to actions of that class were in no way prejudiced by the character of the defense interposed.⁴ So the plaintiff was held to be entitled to bring the second action, though the judgment in the first contained a superfluous provision that the defendant be quieted in the possession of the lands.⁵ Where the judgment for defendant in terms attempted to remove a cloud from defendant's title, his pleadings being purely defensive, the form, though inappropriate, was held not to operate so as to prevent the plaintiff from maintaining his second suit.⁶ The plaintiff has been held to be entitled to

¹ Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30-36. But see Magee v. Chadoin, 44 Tex. 488-496.

² See §§ 608, 609.

³ Bucher v. Carroll, 19 Hun (N. Y.), 618.

⁴ Cheesebrough v. Parker, 25 Kan. 566.

⁵ Houston & T. C. R. R. Co. v. McGehee, 49 Tex. 481.

⁶ Blessing v. Edmonson, 49 Tex. 333. See Cheesebrough v. Parker, 25 Kan. 566.

a second action though the judgment in the first was rendered on demurrer and not on a verdict, the court holding that a judgment on demurrer was res adjudicata as much as a judgment on a verdict. In the one case the judgment is given for lack of sufficient facts alleged, and in the other case for lack of sufficient facts proved.¹ But in Michigan the statutes were interpreted to cover the case of an actual trial, and not simply of a nonsuit.² The second suit may be brought as well where the defense interposed in the first suit was the statute of limitations as in other cases.³

§ 586. Suits to quiet title.—In Indiana a new trial may be demanded and obtained as a matter of right in suits for quieting title to land, with the same effect as in actions for the recovery of the possession.⁴ And this is so where such issue is raised only by defendant's cross complaint.⁵

§ 587. Defeated defendant cannot become plaintiff in second action.—In a case which arose in South Carolina, it was held that the defendant in an action of trespass to try title could not, after a recovery against him, in turn become plaintiff and maintain a second action to try the title to the same lands.⁶

§ 588. Effect of entry of erroneous judgment.—The right to a new trial is not generally affected by errors of form. A judgment in ejectment, entered by defendant's attorney, erroneously recited that the verdict was for defendant, instead of stating that plaintiff's complaint was dismissed. Nearly three years subsequently plaintiff moved to vacate the judgment, and for a new trial as a matter of right under the statute. Defendant opposed the motion, and produced the minutes of the trial showing that the complaint was dismissed. A new trial was granted, the court

¹ Edgar v. Galveston City Co., 46 Tex. 421.

² People v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 131.

³ Ward v. Drouthett, 44 Tex. 365.

⁴ Shuman v. Gavin, 15 Ind. 93; Galletley v. Williams, 15 Ind. 468; Wills v. Dillinger, 17 Ind. 253; Shucraft v. Davidson, 19 Ind. 98; Zimmerman v. Marchland, 23 Ind. 474; Truitt v. Truitt, 37 Ind. 514; Physio-Medical College v. Wilkinson, 89 Ind. 23. But see Russell v. Nelson, 32 Iowa, 215; Blackford v. Lovridge, 10 Kan. 101.

⁵ Adams v. Wilson, 60 Ind. 560; Moor v. Seaton, 31 Ind. 11.

⁶ Thomas v. Geiger, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) Law, 528. See Brownsville v. Cavazos, 100 U. S. 138. See § 598.

holding that the judgment could not be impugned, or changed from a final judgment upon the merits for the temporary purpose of defeating the motion. The court left undecided the question as to whether or not a judgment entered upon an order dismissing a complaint was to be regarded as one rendered "upon the decision of a single judge upon the facts" within the meaning of the statute allowing second trials as a matter of right in such cases.¹ It has been held in Texas, that an omission to indorse on the petition a recital that the action was brought to try the title, could not control the nature of the suit when it necessarily involved the plaintiff's title, and if the second suit was not brought within a year, the judgment rendered in the former suit would be res adjudicata.²

§ 589. Statutes not applicable to equitable actions.—In an action which arose in New York, it appeared that the plaintiffs, as executors, had successfully prosecuted an action to set aside a deed made by the testator, on the ground that it was procured by fraud and undue influence. The judgment contained a finding that the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of the lands. Defendant moved for a new trial under the statute, claiming that the action determined the title to real property within the meaning of the statute, and urging that the course of the plaintiffs, in bringing a suit in equity instead of an action at law, should not be allowed to deprive the defendant of the statutory new trial. The court held that the statute granting new trials as a matter of right, had never been extended so as to include equitable actions, though such actions frequently determined not only the right of possession, but the whole title to the premises, and denied the motion for a new trial.³

§ 590. Granting new trials in equity in analogy to the statutes.—But a tendency exists to grant new trials in analogy with these statutes in equitable actions, which in effect determine the title to land, upon grounds which ordinarily would be deemed wholly insufficient,¹ and this principle has been extended even to cases in which the verdict was satisfactory to the court.² Daniels³ says, that in order that titles may not be divested or defeated by a single verdict the court will frequently direct new trials of issues, even in cases in which the issue has been properly tried and the verdict is satisfactory upon the evidence, the practice of the court being adverse to bind the inheritance where there has been but one trial at law. But the rule granting a new trial in equity actions in analogy to the statutory right of the defeated party in ejectment, has been held not to apply to an action brought by an heir-at-law against the widow of his deceased father, to have the marriage declared void by reason of the lunacy of the father at the time of the marriage, as the judgment therein sustaining the marriage would not defeat the plaintiff's right as heir, but at most merely suspended his possession of a portion of the estate for the life of the widow.⁴

¹ Towle v. Dewitt, 7 Hun (N. Y.), 93.

² Dangerfield v. Paschal, 20 Tex. 536.

³ Shumway v. Shumway, 42 N. Y. 143. See Somerville v. Donaldson, 26 Minn. 75.

§ 591. Disputed boundaries.—In Texas it has been held that a second action of trespass to try title cannot be brought if the issue is one of boundary simply, though nominally in form an action to try title, and the defense of res adjudicata was declared to be available as a plea to the second action in like manner as though the action had been in form, as well as in fact, an equitable proceeding for the settlement of the disputed boundary.⁵

§ 592. Actions to determine conflicting claims to real property.—The statutes in Kansas have been considered not to apply to an action brought by a party in possession to determine conflicting claims to real property,⁶ and this doctrine was maintained in New York⁷ until a second trial was conferred by statute.⁸ In a proceeding of this charac-

¹ Clayton v. Yarrington, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 144.

² Stevens v. Church, 8 Phila. (Penn.) 642. See White v. Wilson, 13 Ves. 88.

³ 2 Daniels' Ch. Pr. 1124.

⁴ Banker v. Banker, 4 Hun (N. Y.), 259.

⁵ Bird v. Montgomery, 34 Tex. 713. See Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30-33; Corporation of San Patricio v. Mathis, 58 Tex. 242; Barbee v. Stinnett, 60 Tex. 167.

⁶ Northup v. Romary, 6 Kan. 240. See Swartzel v. Rogers, 3 Kan. 374.

⁷ Malin v. Rose, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 258.

⁸ New York Code of Civil Procedure, § 1646.

ter in Minnesota, in which the defendant answered, denying the lawfulness of plaintiff's possession and demanding judgment for possession and mesne profits, the proceeding was held to be a cross action in the nature of ejectment, and a new trial was secured as a matter of right under the statutes allowing a second trial to the defeated party in an action to recover real property.¹ Practically the same doctrine has been maintained in Texas.²

§ 593. Actions between landlord and tenant.—The statutes in Michigan are not applicable to ejectments between landlord and tenant for non-payment of rent, for the reason that in such actions the title could not be disputed.³ A similar interpretation was placed upon the statute in New York, in Christie v. Bloomingdale,⁴ but the doctrine of this case was disapproved in the later case of Reed v. Loucks,⁵ at special term. The new Code of that State has excepted actions of ejectment founded upon an allegation of rent in arrear from the operation of the statutes.⁶ In New York these statutes do not embrace controversies submitted without action by the agreement of the parties to a general term of the court;⁷ and they are not applicable to ejectments commenced prior to the enactment of the statutes.⁸

§ 594. Forcible entry statutes.—In Minnesota a novel practice (chiefly statutory) has grown up of making use of the statutory proceedings of forcible entry and unlawful detainer for the trial of the title to the land in controversy. As in such cases the proceeding is, in effect, an action for the recovery of real property in the nature of ejectment, a second trial is allowed as a matter of right under the statute providing for new trials in actions for the recovery of real property.⁹

§ 595. Actions of trespass, specific performance, and to set

¹ Eastman v. Linn, 20 Minn. 433. See Laws of Minnesota, 1867, ch. 72, § 2.

² Magee v. Chadoin, 44 Tex. 488-496.

³ Whitaker v. McClung, 14 Minn. 170. See Chap. XII.

⁴ 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 12.

⁵ 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 434.

⁶ N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1528.

⁷ Lang v. Ropke, 1 Duer (N. Y.), 701; s. c. 10 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 70.

⁸ Jackson v. Coe, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 101.

⁹ Ferguson v. Kumler, 25 Minn. 183. Compare § 94 and note.

aside conveyances not within the statutes.—The statutes do not apply to trespass quare clausum fregit in New York, though it is strictly a legal action, and involves the title and right of possession;¹ nor in Kansas to actions of partition.² These statutes are not applicable to actions to compel a specific performance of a contract to convey real estate,³ or to actions to set aside conveyances as fraudulent.⁴ In New York, an application for a second trial, as a matter of right, was denied in a proceeding brought under the laws of 1853, ch. 238, § 2,⁵ to test the validity of an apparent devise of real estate.⁶ A new trial, it is clear, cannot be given by legislative enactment where the right has once lapsed and the judgment has become final between the parties.⁷

§ 596. Common law new trials not counted.—It has been held in Michigan, in the case of Gilman v. Judge of Wayne Circuit,⁸ that it was the intention of the statute to grant a new trial as a matter of right only in cases in which a judgment had been regularly and properly obtained. Hence, if the judgment had been procured wrongfully or illegally, by error of law or of fact, it was not a valid judgment, but was subject to reversal by the appellate court, and when so reversed, the case stood in the same position as though no such judgment had ever been rendered. The statute was not needed to get rid of a judgment of this character. Hence it was held that a new trial granted by the court, reversing the judgment for error, was not to be counted as one of the new trials provided by the statute.

§ 597. What title investigated on second trial.—It appeared in an action of trespass to try title, which arose in Texas, that the plaintiffs were defeated in the first action, and

¹ Shumway v. Shumway, 42 N. Y. 143.

² Swartzel v. Rogers, 3 Kan. 374.

³ Blackford v. Loveridge, 10 Kan. 101. See Main v. Payne, 17 Kan. 608; Benner v. Benner, 10 Ind. 256; Allen v. Davison, 16 Ind. 416; Walker v. Cox, 25 Ind. 271; Truitt v. Truitt, 37 Ind. 514.

⁴ Somerville v. Donaldson, 26 Minn. 75; Shumway v. Shumway, 1 Lans. (N. Y.), 474; aff'd, 42 N. Y. 143; Perry v. Ensley, 10 Ind. 378.

⁵ This act is constitutional. See Ward v. Ward, 23 Hun (N. Y.), 431.

⁶ Marvin v. Marvin, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 102.

⁷ Sydnor v. Palmer, 32 Wis. 406. See Jackson v. Coe, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 101.

⁸ 21 Mich. 372.

acquired a new title before bringing the second action. The defendant objected to the introduction of evidence tending to establish the new title upon the theory that the second action was a continuation of the first, and consequently a recovery could not be had upon a title acquired after the institution of the action.¹ The court did not accept this view, but followed the case of Barrows v. Kindred,² in the Supreme Court of the United States, which maintains the doctrine that a defeated plaintiff in ejectment may subsequently purchase a new and distinct title, and acquire the same right to assert it without prejudice from the former action as would have accompanied the title into the hands of a stranger. It was held in the case of Menifee v. Hamilton,³ in which the judgment rendered on the first trial was reversed on appeal, and a new trial ordered, that it was error to permit an amendment of the defendant's pleading so as to count upon a new and different title from that set up on the former trial, otherwise it was urged there would be no end to the litigation; for as often as the judgment was reversed in the appellate court, the parties could go on acquiring new muniments of title, and presenting new issues of law and fact, thus effectually abrogating the rule giving but two actions of trespass to try title to the same party, and for the same subject matter. In Pennsylvania the defendant may on the second trial repudiate the defense interposed at the first trial, and defeat the plaintiff's recovery on other grounds.⁴

§ 598. Conditions of procuring the order.—Payment of costs is generally made a condition precedent to granting a new trial,⁵ and the entry of the order is absolutely without effect unless the costs, and in some States the dam-

¹ Connolly v. Hammond, 51 Tex. 635.

² 4 Wall. 399.

³ 32 Tex. 495.

⁴ Rice v. Bixler, 1 W. & S. (Penn.) 445. Where the title to real estate is tried in an action for divorce, a second trial may be had as to the real estate, but not as to the issues concerning the right to a divorce. Schmitt v. Schmitt, 32 Minn. 130.

⁵ Oetgen v. Ross, 36 Ill. 335. See Davidson v. Lamprey, 16 Minn. 445; Shaw v. McMaren, 2 Hill (N. Y.), 417; Dawson v. Shillock, 29 Minn. 189; Railsback v. Walke, 81 Ind. 409. Under the early practice, the courts granted a rule to stay proceedings in the second action of ejectment, till the costs of a former ejectment were paid. See Bass v. Firmen, 1 Ld. Raym. 697; Keene v. Angel, 6 T. R. 740, per Lord Kenyon, C. J.; Hullock on Costs, p. 449, and cases cited.

ages awarded by the first trial, are paid,¹ though, as we have seen, it has been held in Illinois that the statutory remedy is not lost by failure to pay an award of one cent damages, it being the policy of the law not to regard such trifles.² Where the costs were paid and the motion for a new trial granted within a year, but no formal order entered, the moving party's right to the new trial was nevertheless declared complete;³ and the order is effectual, even though a judgment has not been entered upon the verdict.⁴ Payment of the costs and damages in national bank notes to the clerk of the court has been held to be a good payment in Michigan.⁵ In Brownsville v. Cavazos,⁶ in the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal from the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Texas, it appeared that the defendant in that suit had been defeated as plaintiff in an action of trespass to try title, and that under the statute of that State (since abrogated) a judgment against a plaintiff in an action for the possession of real property was made conclusive, unless he commenced a second action for the property within a year, which in this case he had neglected to do. In answer to this objection, however, it was urged that before the year elapsed, and within ten days after the suit was dismissed, the defendant in the first action brought suit against the plaintiff in that action, in which all their rights were again brought into litigation. The court held that the statute allowing the defeated plaintiff one year within which to relitigate the title, did not preclude him or his grantees from setting up his or their chain of title, if within the required period a similar suit respecting the same land was commenced against the plaintiff or his grantees by the former defendant. The object of allowing a second litigation of the same title, and of requiring such litigation to be speedily instituted, was equally accomplished.

§ 599. Practice in New York.—In New York one new

¹ Golden v. Snellen, 54 Ind. 282; Oetgen v. Ross, 36 Ill. 335; Dennison v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 281; Dawson v. Shillock, 29 Minn. 189.

² Myers v. Phillips, 68 Ill. 269.

³ Rountree v. Talbot, 89 Ill. 246.

⁴ Delano v. Bennett, 61 Ill. 83.

⁵ Dennison v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 281.

⁶ 100 U. S. 138.

trial is granted to the defeated party as a matter of right upon the payment of the costs and all damages awarded upon the first trial, other than for rents and profits, or for use and occupation,¹ and a second new trial may be had in the discretion of the court, in cases where justice will be promoted, and the rights of the parties more satisfactorily ascertained and established, but only two new trials can be granted under the statute. The courts of that State do not ordinarily exercise this discretion to award a second new trial under the statute, but are inclined to remit the applicant to the ordinary rights of a defeated suitor by appeal.² It has been decided that the Code of Procedure of that State has not abrogated the former practice of making an order before judgment, directing that when the judgment is perfected it be thereupon vacated upon payment of costs, and a new trial granted without further order of the court.³ Under the former statute of that State, the courts held that it was essential to this form of relief that there should have been a trial by jury, and a verdict rendered, upon which judgment was entered,⁴ though a verdict subject to the opinion of the court at general term, was regarded as bringing the application within the statute.⁵ The statute is now extended to judgments in actions for the trial of title rendered upon the decision of a single judge, or the report of a referee.⁶ The application for the first new trial must be made within three years from the entry of the first judgment,⁷ and not three years from the affirmance of the judgment in the court of last resort,⁸ and an order, allowing a new trial under the statute, was held, under the former

¹ Burrows v. Miller, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 51; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1525.

² Brown v. Crim, 1 Denio (N. Y.), 665; Bellinger v. Martindale, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 113; Harris v. Waite, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 113; Wright v. Milbank, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 672-677; Phyfe v. Masterson, 13 J. & S. (N. Y.) 338.

³ Post v. Moran, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 122. See Cooke v. Passage, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 360; s. c. 3 Code R. 88.

⁴ Chautauqua Co. Bk. v. White, 23 N. Y. 347; Holmes v. Davis, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 265; Lang v. Ropke, 1 Duer (N. Y.), 701.

⁵ Phyfe v. Masterson, 13 J. & S. (N. Y.) 338.

⁶ Bucher v. Carroll, 19 Hun (N. Y.), 618; N. Y. Code of Civil Procedure, Chap. XIV., art. 1.

⁷ N. Y. Code of Civil Procedure, § 1525.

⁸ Chautauqua Co. Bk. v. White, 23 N. Y. 347.

practice of that State, not to be appealable to the Court of Appeals.¹

§ 600. Sacia v. O'Connor.—In Sacia v. O'Connor,² an application was made on behalf of the defendant, and a party claiming to be his landlord, for a new trial as a matter of right. It was shown that when the action was ready for trial the defendant, who was the tenant in possession, withdrew his answer, and the judgment was rendered by consent. The application in question was made by an attorney other than the attorney of record, and who had not been substituted in the action, and the interest of the landlord was strongly controverted in plaintiff's affidavits. The application was denied in the court below with leave to renew. The Court of Appeals held, that as the motion was made on behalf of a party whose interest in the premises was doubtful, and by an attorney who was not shown to have had any authority, and the judgment had been rendered by consent, it was very doubtful whether a case within the statute had been made out, and the moving party not having availed himself of the leave given to renew, the order should be affirmed. A subsequent application was made in this action for a statutory new trial in the court below. It appeared that issue had been joined in the action, and the cause regularly called for trial, and the defendant failing to appear, an inquest had been taken, and judgment entered for the plaintiff. A statutory new trial was granted, the court holding that this was not a judgment rendered by default within the meaning of the statute, an answer having been interposed, and the plaintiff thereby compelled to proceed regularly to verdict and judgment, which he did by taking an inquest in open court. A judgment by default was defined to be a judgment rendered for want of a plea or answer.³

§ 601. Strangers to the record not entitled to new trial.—In Forsyth v. Van Winkle,⁴ in the United States Circuit

¹ Evans v. Millard, 16 N. Y. 619.

² 79 N. Y. 260.

³ Sacia v. O'Connor, 15 J. & S. (N. Y.) 53; s. c. 11 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 440. See 2 N. Y. R. S. p. 309, §§ 36-38.

⁴ 9 Fed. Rep. 247.

Court for the District of Indiana, it has been held that only a party concluded by the judgment, or his heirs, assignees or representatives, was entitled, under the statute of Indiana, to have the judgment vacated and a new trial granted as a matter of right. The statute will not be interpreted to include strangers to the record. In Howell v. Leavitt,¹ however, the New York Court of Appeals decided that a mortgagee by purchasing the mortgaged premises at foreclosure sale became the assignee of the mortgagor, or person to whom he had conveyed, and was entitled to apply for a new trial of an action of ejectment to which he was not a party, and in which judgment had been entered by default against a purchaser from the mortgagor.

§ 602. Practice in various States.—In Minnesota the defeated party may have a second trial as of course, by demanding the same in writing within six months after notice of the entry of the judgment.² In Texas, before the abolition of the statute, it was necessary to bring the second action within one year from the entry of the judgment in the first action, and not one year from the dismissal of an appeal,³ and the right was given to the plaintiff only,⁴ and not to the defendant, though he set up and relied upon title.⁵ The party first invoking the action of the court upon the controversy was alone authorized to bring the second action, and this right it was said did not depend upon the mere designation of the parties to the action as plaintiffs or defendants, but upon the relations which they bore to the case.⁶ In Indiana a defaulted party is not entitled to a new trial as a matter of right, for there has been no trial.⁷ Under the practice in Ohio, it has been held that after two judgments in favor of defendant, the second trial having been granted as a matter of right under the statute, the

¹ 90 N. Y. 238 ; s. c. 2 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 447.

² Davidson v. Lamprey, 16 Minn. 445.

³ Martin v. Wayman, 38 Tex. 649.

⁴ Fisk v. Miller, 20 Tex. 572 ; Lewis v. San Antonio, 26 Tex. 316.

⁵ Fisk v. Miller, 20 Tex. 572 ; Lewis v. San Antonio, 26 Tex. 316. See, also, Magee v. Chadoin, 44 Tex. 488.

⁶ Magee v. Chadoin, 44 Tex. 488-496.

⁷ Fisk v. Baker, 47 Ind. 534.

plaintiff had no right of appeal.¹ And in the same State, in estimating the number of new trials to which a party is entitled on appeal in the District Court, it was decided that no notice would be taken of the number or result of the trials in the court below.² In Wisconsin the statute is interpreted so as to grant but one new trial as a matter of right, and not one new trial to each party.³ In Illinois a conditional order vacating the judgment, and granting a new trial upon payment of costs, followed by payment of the costs within one year, is sufficient.⁴ In that State each party is entitled to a new trial as a matter of right,⁵ but as the right is itself a matter of grace and favor, it must be insisted upon within the time specified.⁶ In Pennsylvania a second ejectment may be brought by the successful party before he has attempted to take possession under the first verdict.⁷ It seems difficult to conceive of any greater legal absurdity.

It has been held in Pennsylvania, under a statute which provided that where two verdicts were given in succession for the plaintiff or defendant, no new ejectment could be brought, that one verdict and one award of arbitrators in favor of the same party was not a bar to another ejectment.⁸ And in a case which arose in Tennessee, the court held that when a complainant's title was both legal and equitable, a trial of ejectment, which could be renewed, was no bar to the assertion of complainant's claim in equity any more than it would be a bar to the prosecution of a new ejectment.⁹ But one verdict for the plaintiff in ejectment, and a disclaimer filed by the defendant in a

¹ Smith v. Anderson, 20 Ohio St. 76 ; S. & C. Stat. (Ohio), 1157, sec. 294.

² City of Marietta v. Emerson, 5 Ohio St. 288.

³ Boland v. Gillett, 44 Wis. 329. See Gilman v. Judge Wayne Circuit, 21 Mich. 372 ; Wright v. Milbank, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 677 ; Bellinger v. Martindale, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 113 ; Brown v. Crim, 1 Denio (N. Y.), 665.

⁴ Rountree v. Talbot, 89 Ill. 246. See Myers v. Phillips, 68 Ill. 269 ; Becker v. Sauter, 89 Ill. 596 ; Pugh v. Reat, 107 Ill. 440. But see Delano v. Bennett, 61 Ill. 83.

⁵ Chamberlin v. McCarty, 63 Ill. 263.

⁶ Emmons v. Bishop, 14 Ill. 152.

⁷ Ross v. Pleasants, 19 Penn. St. 157.

⁸ Ives v. Leet, 14 S. & R. (Penn.) 301.

⁹ Winchester v. Gleaves, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 213.

second action, are equivalent, under the statute in Pennsylvania, to two verdicts for plaintiff, and end the controversy.¹

§ 603. Under the practice in Kansas, if the defeated party applies for a new trial at common law, for errors occurring at the trial, and has made no demand for a second trial as of course under the statute, it is too late for him to insist for the first time, in the appellate court, that he was entitled to a new trial as a matter of right.² Nor will a statutory new trial be granted in an equity action.³ In Michigan the time for taking a new trial, under the statute, only dates from the day when the first judgment is perfected.⁴ In a case which arose in South Carolina, while the statute allowing the plaintiff to bring a second action within two years after the termination of the first action was in force, it appeared that shortly after the termination of the first action in defendant's favor, he abandoned the possession of the land. The defeated plaintiff, finding the land unoccupied, took possession, and the question subsequently presented was, whether or not she was barred of her title to the land by reason of her failure to bring a second action within two years from the termination of the first action. The court held that the obvious intent of the statute was to quiet possession, and to take away the right of one out of possession, claiming to be the owner of land against a party in possession, after one trial or one decision, unless the second action was brought within two years. The plaintiff in the first action could not maintain ejectment or trespass to try title, the substitute for it, because she was in possession herself, nor could she bring trespass quare clausum fregit, for her possession was not disturbed.⁵

§ 604. New trial waived by stipulation.—In the case of Ladd v. Hildebrant,⁶ it appeared that the defendant, as a

¹ Crea v. Hertzler, 8 Phila. (Penn.) 644.

² Anderson v. Kent, 14 Kan. 207.

³ Larkin v. Wilson, 28 Kans. 515.

⁴ O'Blinskie v. Judge Kent Co. 34 Mich. 62.

⁵ Henderson v. Kenner, 1 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 474.

⁶ 27 Wis. 135.

condition of procuring a continuance of the cause, had stipulated to waive his right to a new trial if a verdict was rendered against him. Having been defeated, he applied for a new trial, urging that the stipulation was invalid, having been entered into prior to the trial, and before it was known whether the defendant would need or had a right to apply for it. The application was denied, the court holding that full effect should be given to the stipulation, and that a party might waive the statutory remedy as a future contingent right.

§ 605. Pendency of writ of error or appeal.—The pendency of a writ of error does not preclude the court below from granting a statutory new trial, and if the year within which to make the application under the statute expires pending an appeal from the judgment rendered on the first trial, the right to a new trial, as a matter of course, is lost.¹ Nor does the granting of a new trial operate to discontinue the writ of error pending at the time, brought by the party thus taking a new trial. The appellate court retains jurisdiction to decide the case on the record.²

§ 606. Second action must be instituted in same court.—In Michigan a defeated plaintiff in ejectment vacated the judgment and took a new trial under the statute bringing the second action in the United States courts. The court held that plaintiff's course was a fraud upon the law; having set aside the bar to another action, he did so under an obligation to pursue the remedy under the statute, and was not at liberty to resort to the United States court.³

§ 607. Statutes controlling in Federal courts.—It is well settled that local statutes and decisions constituting rules of property, and especially respecting titles to real estate, are binding rules of decision in the Federal courts, and this applies to State statutes defining the effect of a judgment in ejectment, and either permitting or barring new trials.¹ Any uncertainty as to the enforcement of the rules granting new trials as a matter of right in Federal tribunals, pursuant to State statutes, has been set at rest by a recent decision of the United States Supreme Court.²

¹ Gibson v. Manly, 15 Ill. 140. See Chautauqua Co. Bank v. White, 23 N. Y. 347; Martin v. Wayman, 38 Tex. 649; O'Blinskie v. Judge Kent Co., 34 Mich. 62.

² Rees v. City of Chicago, 40 Ill. 107.

³ Fraser v. Weller, 6 McL. 11. See, also, Cunningham v. City of Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 120.

§ 608. Repeal of the statutes recommended.—The strong disinclination of the courts to interfere with or deprive the defendant of the possession of real property pending the trial of the title has already been noticed, and will be again considered presently.³ Irresponsible and unscrupulous defendants eagerly avail themselves of this excessive regard for possessory rights, and, not satisfied with pilfering the rents and profits accruing during the pendency of the first action, hasten to pay the costs, vacate the judgment, and continue their depredation pending the second trial. The unfortunate owner of the title, who has been deforced of the possession, is, in many cases, under the existing practice, virtually deprived of redress, for the delays and embarrassments by which the proceedings are hampered are so numerous, the advantages of the possessor so important, and the expense of the litigation often so great, that unless the locus in quo is of considerable value, the plaintiff, though ultimately successful, may be ruined by an action decided in his favor. There is a superabundance of cumulative investigation. Under the early practice, as has been shown, judgments in ejectment were not conclusive, and fresh ejectments could be brought upon new fictitious leases. After a sufficient number of trials a perpetual injunction was obtained against further ejectments.⁴ The

¹ Hiller v. Shattuck, 1 Flippin, 272; Forsythe v. Van Winkle, 11 Biss. 111. See Sturdy v. Jackaway, 4 Wall. 174; Polk v. Wendal, 9 Cranch, 87; Shipp v. Miller, 2 Wheat. 316-325; Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. 58; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 291; Thatcher v. Powell, 6 Wheat. 119; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. 361-367; Jackson v. Chew, 12 Wheat. 153; Blanchard v. Brown, 3 Wall. 245-249; Barrows v. Kindred, 4 Wall. 399; Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall. 35-44.

² Equator Co. v. Hall, 106 U. S. 88. See Britton v. Thornton, 112 U. S. 526.

³ See Chapter XXIII.; §§ 631, 632.

⁴ Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 409. In Equator Co. v. Hall, 106 U. S. 86, 87, Miller, J., said, "The evil of this want of conclusiveness in the result of this form of action [fictitious ejectment] led to the interposition of a court of equity, in which, after repeated verdicts and judgments in favor of the same party and upon the same title, that court would enjoin the unsuccessful party from further disturbance of the one who had recovered these judgments."

statutes abolishing fictions, and in effect or in words, making the judgment in ejectment conclusive after a given number of trials, were formerly regarded as an important legal reform ; but when we consider that in several States the defeated party is afforded three and in others five years within which to elect to take a second trial, and, being defeated upon the second trial, is, in some States, given two additional years within which to invoke the discretion of the court to grant a third trial, the question cannot but suggest itself whether a further curtailment or entire revision of the remedy might not be beneficial. Indeed a sufficient number of trials might have been had within a shorter space of time to warrant a perpetual injunction against further ejectments under the early practice. It must be remembered that these statutes are not enacted to furnish relief against judgments erroneously rendered, for manifestly such judgments can be avoided by appeal or application at common law for a new trial.¹

Of course it would not be beneficial to restore the old system of practice. It was ineffective and illogical in its whole structure and operations. A judge and jury were required to retry the same issue indefinitely, and had no power to curb the litigants or bring the action to a conclusion. A worse condition of affairs could not well exist in any form of procedure. The supervisory jurisdiction of chancery to pass in review the efficiency and thoroughness of the various inquiries as to the title had in a court of law was very ineffectual.

But the statutory new trials are in some respects no better than the early system. Several trials are allowed, two at least as a rule, but the final trial is, in itself and by itself, the determining one. The verdicts that preceded it are not averaged or considered, and it may well happen that the party who was victorious on the last trial was defeated upon the other trials. Thus the general object of permitting these repeated trials in ejectment, whether it be commendable or not, fails of accomplishment. The first trials are often practically examinations before trial or preliminary hearings. The prudent litigant naturally will hold the strongest aspect of his case in reserve for the last contest. The prejudices, errors, and even surprises, against which these statutes are intended to relieve a defeated party are almost as likely to exist at the last trial as the first, and the statute is then powerless to extend relief.

¹ Gilman v. Judge of Wayne Circuit, 21 Mich. 372.

§ 609. We have stated that no inference is to be drawn that all actions relating to real property are within the provisions of these statutes. On the contrary, the almost uniform tendency of the decisions is to confine the operation of the statutes to actions at law for the recovery of the possession and trial of the title, either technically in the form of ejectment, or the statutory substitutes for that remedy. These classes of actions have been devised especially to facilitate the thorough adjudication of titles, and have been moulded after centuries of experience into their present forms, embodying all the safeguards to litigants which the wisdom of generations could suggest. In these actions, as opposed to all other remedies involving title to land, the least likelihood of a miscarriage of justice exists. Why limit the new trials to these remedies? The great field of equitable suits and proceedings is generally considered not to be within the supposed beneficial provisions of the statutes. Does it make any practical difference whether an occupant is evicted by a writ of assistance or by a writ of possession? It is well known that many of the most bitter and protracted land litigations in this country have been heard on a bill in equity, or that the litigation in some of its phases was passed upon in an equitable forum. The title is frequently established in equity. Keeping in view the fact that transfers of real property must usually be effected by written instruments and not by parol, and that titles such as are litigated in actions at law are, in most cases, spread upon the public records, it would seem that trials could be had in these actions without greater risk of a miscarriage of justice than in chancery, where the parties are compelled to deal with "a bundle of equities," and the field of inquiry is uncertain.

There seems no well-founded reason for extending the statutes to actions at law and excluding suits in equity.

In other words, if statutory new trials are not considered essential in equity, the whole fabric should fall. In any case, if the defeated party in a land litigation, having suffered no wrong by reason of errors occurring at the first trial, is afforded the great privilege of a new presentation of the case, he should be compelled to make the election so to do forthwith. Otherwise the title remains unsettled, is clouded for purposes of sale, and the possessor does not dare to permanently improve the property lest he may ultimately lose it. The statute in Texas, which granted a second trial as a matter of right to the plaintiff, has recently been repealed,¹ and the Supreme Court of that State, commenting upon the change, remarks that as real estate is now the subject of transfer with almost the same facility as personal property, the reasons for the practice of granting statutory new trials in such actions no longer exist.

¹ Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30-36.

CHAPTER XXIII.

PROVISIONAL REMEDIES AND ANCILLARY RELIEF IN ACTIONS TO TRY TITLE.

- | | |
|---|--|
| § 610. Provisional remedies. 611. Provisional relief at common law. 612. Forms of provisional relief. 613. Appointment of receiver. 614. Policy of the courts in New York. 615. In New York receiver not appointed before judgment. 616. When receiver will be appointed. 617. When receiver will not be appointed in Georgia. 618. In Illinois—Mapes v. Scott criticised. 618a. Receiver of oil well. 619. Receiver after judgment. 620. Defendant's right to move for receiver. 621. Receiver to prevent waste and harvest crops. | § 621a. Receivers for co-tenants. 621b. Effect of lis pendens on application. 622. Injunctions against trespass or waste pending ejectment. 623. Practice in North Carolina. 624. Injunction to restrain trespass in the nature of waste. 625. Failure to prosecute ejectment forfeits right to injunction. 626. Jurisdiction to grant injunction. 627. Storm v. Mann. 628. Practice in Pennsylvania. 629. Injunction by mortgagee against mortgagor. 630. Executions against the person, and orders of arrest. 631. Tendency of the modern cases. 632. Hardships incident to withholding provisional relief. |
|---|--|

§ 610. Provisional remedies.—Occasions often arise, pending actions for the trial of title to land, where more speedy redress becomes necessary than is afforded by final judgment and writ of possession. The object of the action might be practically defeated pending the litigation.¹ The party in possession may be unscrupulous, improvident, or insolvent, and desirous of profiting by his occupancy of the land at the expense of the inheritance. Cases of this character, in which prompt relief is of vital importance to the party out of possession, occur so frequently that the propriety of considering the principles and cases affecting provisional remedies, and applications for ancillary relief pending the delays incident to the trial of the title, is apparent.²

¹ See Sartwell v. Field, 68 N. Y. 342.

² Provisional remedies are governed by the lex fori. Story on Conflict of Laws, 556-557; Carter v. Hoffman, 2 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 328; Castree v. Kirby, 2 N. Y. Civ. Pro. 334, and cases cited; Baxter v. Drake, 85 N. Y. 502; Johnson v.

§ 611. Provisional relief at common law.—In ejectment at common law the law courts, not having equitable or chancery jurisdiction, were powerless to afford provisional relief, which could be obtained only by bill in chancery. This necessitated two actions—one to establish the title, the other to preserve and protect the property from waste or destruction pending the litigation. In States in which legal and equitable jurisdictions are blended, this cumbersome method of procedure is now practically abrogated, and provisional relief may be had in certain cases in the action to try the title.

§ 612. Forms of provisional relief.—The usual and most effectual provisional relief is either by the appointment of a receiver to take possession of the property and preserve the rents, or by granting an injunction to restrain waste, or kindred injury, to the property in dispute. The principles which govern courts of equity in passing upon applications by bill in equity for provisional relief pending the ejectment, control the policy of the courts when the relief is sought in the action itself.

§ 613. Appointment of receiver.—The general rule is that the appointment of a receiver pendente lite rests in the sound discretion of the court,¹ “to be governed by a view of the whole circumstances of the case,”² and this relief is usually granted only at the instance of a party having an acknowledged interest or strong presumption of title.³ There must be reasonable probability of the plaintiff’s success,⁴ and the subject-matter of the suit must be in danger.⁵ The appointment is made with a sole view of preserving the property, and not to inquire into the merits.⁶

Whitman, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 111; Scudder v. Union Nat. Bk., 91 U. S. 406; Miller v. Brenham, 68 N. Y. 83; though this principle has little practical application to real actions. See § 467a.

¹ Verplank v. Caines, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 57; Owen v. Homan, 4 H. L. Cas. 997-1032; Frisbee v. Timanus, 12 Fla. 300; Collier v. Sapp, 49 Ga. 93; Lenox v. Notrebe, Hempst. C. C. 225.

² Copper Hill Mining Co. v. Spencer, 25 Cal. 16.

³ Chase’s Case, 1 Bland’s Ch. (Md.) 206-213; Vause v. Woods, 46 Miss. 120; Mays v. Rose, Freem. (Miss.) Ch. 718; Stitwell v. Williams, 6 Madd. 49.

⁴ Gregory v. Gregory, 33 N. Y. Superior, 2.

⁵ Bainbrigge v. Baddeley, 3 Macn. & G. 413-419; Willis v. Corlies, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 286.

⁶ Bitting v. Ten Eyck, 85 Ind. 360.

§ 614. Policy of the courts in New York.—The courts of New York have shown great reluctance to interfere with the use and enjoyment of lands by the possessor before judgment in ejectment. In Ireland v. Nichols,¹ a much criticised case which arose in the New York Superior Court, a receiver was appointed ; but in Thompson v. Sherard,² in the Supreme Court, it was held that the action of ejectment, and for mesne profits, was brought against the defendants as trespassers, for the wrongful withholding of the possession, and that it was irregular and improper to appoint a receiver to receive damages to be recovered in an action of trespass. In the case of *People v. The Mayor*³ the New York Supreme Court said that, when the landlord alone was sued in ejectment, having let the property to tenants, and was himself irresponsible, there could be no objection to the appointment of a receiver of the rents. The court said that the absurdity of seeking to remove the occupant because his possession was unlawful, and, at the same time, accepting rent as for a lawful occupation, was thus avoided. But this objection itself seems to be unfounded. The mesne profits are now considered as, and recovered largely upon the basis of, rent, as in an action for use and occupation.⁴ The remedy of ejectment has advanced from its early stages when it was a simple action of trespass to recover damages ; it is now a real action, and the mesne profits or rents are measured in great part upon the basis of contract. The argument that the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits amounts to a complete ouster of the defendant, wresting from him the subject-matter of the litigation without trial or judgment, is more substantial. Though the appointment does not operate as an immediate transfer, yet, if the plaintiff succeeds, it is a transfer by relation from the time of the entry of the receiver. Hence it is considered that proof of an apparently ¹ 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 222 ; s. c. 1 Sweeney (N. Y.) 208. A receiver was appointed in that court in an action to have dower set off. Egan v. Walsh, 11 J. & S. (N. Y.) 402 ; and where the defendants were aliens and there was danger that the rents and profits would be removed out of the jurisdiction of the court, an injunction restraining such removal was granted. Renner v. Muller, 12 J. & S. (N. Y.) 537.

² 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 593. See Guernsey v. Powers, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 78.

³ People v. Mayor, &c., of N. Y., 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 111.

⁴ See Chap. XXV.

good title in plaintiff to the premises in question is not sufficient unless some equitable ground is made to appear, entitling the plaintiff to the rents and profits as such, or it is shown that their sequestration is vitally essential to his protection.

§ 615. In New York, receiver not appointed before judgment.—In the later cases of *Burdell v. Burdell*¹ and *Guernsey v. Powers*² it was expressly held by the Supreme Court of New York that a receiver would not be appointed in ejectment before judgment. The cases follow Thompson v. Sherrard and overrule Ireland v. Nichols, while no reference is made to People v. The Mayor. In New York, a receiver will not be appointed pendente lite in ejectment against one in possession under a contract of sale.³ Where the defendant is solvent the motion for a receiver will be denied.⁴ In a suit brought in New York to set aside a deed on the ground that the grantor was of unsound mind, a receiver was appointed, it appearing that the grantee defendant was insolvent.⁵ Learned, P. J., however, dissented, holding that the plaintiff could have proceeded in ejectment as well as by suit in equity,⁶ and as no receiver could be appointed in ejectment, by analogy none should be allowed in the action under consideration.

§ 616. When receiver will be appointed.—The uniform rule is that as against the legal title the court will interpose with reluctance to deprive the defendant of the possession or of the rents, and then only in cases of fraud clearly proved and danger to the property.⁷ A receiver will be appointed only in cases of such destructive and malicious waste by the defendant as would indicate his total want of confidence in his own claim, such as stripping the land of

¹ 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 91 (decided in 1877).

² 9 Hun (N. Y.), 78. See Huerstel v. Lorillard, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 251; Congden v. Lee, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 304; Willis v. Corlies, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 281.

³ Guernsey v. Powers, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 78.

⁴ Post v. Moran, 3 Mo. Law Bul. (N. Y.) 37.

⁵ Mitchell v. Barnes, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 194.

⁶ Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 378.

⁷ Vause v. Woods, 46 Miss. 120; Lloyd v. Passingham, 16 Ves. Jr. 59; Mitchell v. Barnes, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 194, dissenting opinion of Learned, P. J.

timber or pulling down the buildings;¹ or when there is actual danger of a total loss of the rents, and the defendant is irresponsible.² Unless some equitable principle is shown by which the Court of Chancery can "affect the conscience of the defendant," it will not interfere at the instance of a person claiming a mere legal title to deprive of his possession one occupying the lands.³

§ 617. When receiver will not be appointed in Georgia.—During the pendency of an action of ejectment in Georgia the plaintiff filed a bill in equity alleging that the defendant was insolvent, and asking that a quantity of corn and some bags of cotton, raised upon the land, and then in defendant's custody, be impounded, that the defendant be enjoined from interfering therewith, and that a receiver thereof be appointed to hold the same to await the result of the ejectment. The application was denied, the court holding that the claimant of the title had no lien upon the crops above other creditors.⁴ It has been held in the same State that a count of mesne profits in an action of ejectment was a claim for money which entitled the plaintiff to process of garnishment.⁵

§ 618. In Illinois.—Mapes v. Scott criticised.—The case of Mapes v. Scott,⁶ in the Appellate court of Illinois, furnishes some excellent illustrations of the glaring imperfections not uncommon in the system of remedies for the protection and recovery of real property. The plaintiff having successfully prosecuted an ejectment, the defendant vacated the judgment and took a statutory new trial. The second trial also resulted in plaintiff's favor, but the judgment was reversed on appeal for error at the trial. The ejectment case was on the calendar awaiting a third trial, the defend-

¹ Talbot v. Scott, 4 Kay & J. 96-126; Haigh v. Jaggard, 2 Collyer, 231.

² Payne v. Atterbury, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 414; Ireland v. Nichols, 1 Sweeney (N. Y.), 208; s. c. 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 222; Rogers v. Marshall, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 457.

³ Talbot v. Scott, 4 Kay & J. 96; Lenox v. Notrebe, Hempst. C. C. 225; Vause v. Woods, 46 Miss. 120; Mapes v. Scott, 4 Bradw. (Ill.) 268; Carrow v. Ferrior, L. R. 3 Ch. Ap. 719; Cofer v. Echerson, 6 Iowa, 502. The court has power in England under the Judicature Act, 1873, § 25, to appoint a receiver where the title to the property is disputed. Berry v. Keen, 51 L. J., Ch. 912.

⁴ Walker v. Zorn, 50 Ga. 370.

⁵ Walker v. Zorn, 56 Ga. 35.

⁶ 4 Bradw. (Ill.) 268.

ant having obtained a continuance, when the bill in question was filed, praying for the appointment of a receiver to care for and rent the property, and retain the profits subject to the order of the court. Defendants had paid no rent or taxes, had failed to keep the premises in repair or insured against fire, had no legal or equitable title thereto, and were insolvent. The court characterized the plaintiff's claim as being a purely legal one, not connected with any equities which would justify the intervention of a court of equity, and affirmed the principle heretofore stated, that a court of equity will not interfere by the appointment of a receiver to take the property from the party in possession, on the application of a party out of possession claiming a dry legal title only, but will remit him to his remedies at law.

618a. Receiver of oil well.—Ejectment was brought in Pennsylvania for land containing an oil well, and a writ of estrepement issued against the parties in possession.¹ Subsequently a bill was filed, and a receiver appointed to prevent alleged irreparable injury. In vacating the appointment, the learned Chief Justice Sharswood said: "It may be very convenient, wherever there is an adverse claimant to an oil well, that the court should have power to appoint a receiver to take possession of it and work it for the benefit of the successful litigant. It may be that if the tenant in possession is obstinate, and will not give security to dissolve an estrepement, the effect of the execution of the writ may be that the entire territory will be pumped dry by wells sunk on surrounding property, and thus the value of it be destroyed as to both parties. But will that consideration give a court of equity jurisdiction of a mere ejectment bill, and the power to take possession of the land in controversy? We think not. . . . For the courts to assume such a jurisdiction would, we think, be a clear case of judicial legislation."²

§ 619. Receiver after judgment.—In the case of Frisbee v. Timanus,³ in Florida, it appeared that the plaintiff had

¹ See § 112.

² 12 Fla. 300.

³ Emerson and Wall's Appeal, 95 Pa. St. 258, 261.

recovered a verdict and judgment in ejectment. The United States Circuit Court, at the instance of defendant, improvidently issued a writ of certiorari, in obedience to which the record in ejectment was certified by the State court to the United States Circuit Court, and the State court, out of comity, and to avoid any conflict, suspended the enforcement of its judgment. This bill was filed, alleging that the certiorari proceedings were not warranted by law, and were an invention and contrivance to perpetuate the litigation and deprive the plaintiff of the fruits of his judgment, that the property was becoming dilapidated, no repairs were being made, and defendants had reduced the rent in order to get advance payments from the tenants, and were wholly irresponsible. These circumstances were considered sufficient to justify the appointment of a receiver pending the proceedings to establish the title. In Georgia,¹ an action was brought for a balance of purchase money, and under the Relief Act of 1868, the jury rendered a verdict returning the land to the plaintiff upon his paying the defendant a sum of money. The defendant carried the case to the Supreme Court and obtained a supersedeas, by filing an affidavit of his inability to give security, and then withdrew the writ of error whereby the judgment below was affirmed. Upon these facts, together with proof that plaintiff had paid taxes to prevent a sale, and that defendant had received rents and profits of the land to a large amount, an injunction was granted and a receiver appointed, the object being to offset the rents against the amount which the verdict directed should be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant.

§ 620 Defendant's right to move for receiver.—It has been held in a very recent and curious case in North Carolina,² where the plaintiff sued in forma pauperis to recover land, and during the pendency of the action took possession of a part of it, that it was proper to appoint a receiver on defendant's application, to take control of the usurped premises and secure the rents and profits.³

¹ Collier v. Sapp, 49 Ga. 93.

² Horton v. White, 84 N. C. 297. See More v. Massini, 32 Cal. 590.

³ Compare Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bigler, 79 N. Y. 571.

§ 621. Receiver to prevent waste and harvest crops.—In California, after verdict and judgment in plaintiff's favor, in ejectment for lands which contained valuable mineral springs, the court, on petition of the plaintiff setting forth that the defendant was in possession, and was receiving large sums of money from the sale of the waters, and was wholly insolvent and threatened waste, appointed a receiver pending an appeal and motion for a new trial.¹ The appointment of a receiver, in that State, is a proceeding in the action to recover the land auxiliary to that action and a part of it.² It is not waste for the life tenant to cut timber to a reasonable extent, in conformity with the rules of good husbandry.³

§ 621a. Receivers for co-tenants.—The power of the courts to appoint receivers of common property at the instance of one co-tenant, has been characterized as an extraordinary one, which the courts should not exercise except in the clearest cases.⁴ But a receiver was appointed in a partition suit in an early English case⁵ which has been followed⁶ in this country. Especially will a receiver be appointed where one of two tenants in common refuses to rent the property, and unnecessary loss will result to the

¹ Whitney v. Buckman, 26 Cal. 447.

² Ibid; Adams v. Woods, 21 Cal. 165. Hlawacek v. Bohman, 51 Wis. 92, was an action to obtain specific performance of a contract to convey land. The title was contested, and both litigants were in possession, interfering with each other in harvesting the crops raised by each respectively, and threatening each other with assaults and forcible resistance. The court held that this was a proper case for the appointment of a receiver, as it would save both parties their full rights, and prevent waste and the expense and trouble of threatened and reasonably expected litigation arising from frequent conflicts over the possession pending the suit. See Finch v. Houghton, 19 Wis. 150. See, also, § 363. A crop of grain growing on the land is considered to belong to the plaintiff if he is adjudged entitled to recover the land, and in California, an order made by the court pendente lite in a suit to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, restraining defendant from alienating or encumbering the land during the pendency of the litigation, and appointing a receiver to harvest the grain, was upheld. Corcoran v. Doll, 35 Cal. 479. 480.

³ Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 59 Wis. 561, and cases cited. See Mooers v. Wait, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 104; s. c. 20 Am. Dec. 667, and note, p. 670; Kidd v. Dennison, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 12.

⁴ Low v. Holmes, 17 N. J. Eq. 148. See Norway v. Rowe, 19 Ves. 159.

⁵ Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 Dick. 800. See Street v. Anderton, 4 Bro. C. C. 414, and compare Holmes v. Bell, 2 Beav. 298.

⁶ Hargrave v. Hargrave, 9 Beav. 549; Sandford v. Ballard, 33 Beav. 401; Rutherford v. Jones, 14 Ga. 521; Goodale v. Fifteenth Dist. Court, 56 Cal. 26; Duncan v. Campau, 15 Mich. 415.

other.¹ Partition, however, is an equity proceeding, and, as we have seen, will not lie where the common ownership is disputed, and the party in possession has ousted his companion.² The proper remedy in such a case is ejectment, and we may assume that the embarrassments incident to securing provisional relief in ejectment apply to such a case.³

§ 621b. Effect of lis pendens on application.—A motion for a receiver was denied in New York in a case in which the court considered the plaintiff would probably be defeated, and where it was apparent that the filing of a notice of lis pendens, in conformity with the practice of that State would effectually preclude any transfer of the land pendente lite, and would protect the plaintiff's equitable interest therein.⁴

§ 622. Injunctions against trespass or waste pending ejectment.—Provisional or ancillary relief by injunction is regarded with greater favor by the courts than applications for the appointment of a receiver,⁵ for this remedy does not change or disturb the possession. The propriety of granting injunctions to restrain trespass⁶ waste, or kindred injuries pending the action to try the title, and recover possession of the land, is quite generally recognized. In some of our States, where legal and equitable jurisdictions are united, this species of relief may be had in the action itself, while in other States a bill in equity is resorted to, the practice being substantially the same as on applications for a receiver. Indeed, both forms of relief are frequently

¹ Verplanck v. Verplanck, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 104; Pignolet v. Bushe, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 9. See Vincent v. Parker, 7 Paige (N. Y.), 65.

² See §§ 166, 167.

³ See § 660.

⁴ Gregory v. Gregory, 1 J. & S. (N. Y.) 1. See § 645.

⁵ See Deep River Gold M. Co. v. Fox, 4 Ired. Eq. (N. C.) 61; s. c. 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 296.

⁶ In Mulry v. Norton, 29 Hun. (N. Y.) 666, Brown, J., said; "An owner of land is entitled to the equitable interference of the court in his behalf to restrain and prevent an illegal entry thereon, whenever the damages which might be recovered in an action at law would be inadequate to compensate for the injury which would be sustained from the trespass." Citing Story's Eq. Jur., § 918; Livingston v. Livingston, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 497; Carpenter v. Gwynn, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 395; West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 705; Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 74. See § 174 and note; Lacustrine Fertilizer Co. v. Lake Guano & F. Co., 82 N. Y. 486.

sought on the same application. The principles and practice controlling applications for injunctions against waste, or irreparable injuries to real property, are here discussed, only in so far as that jurisdiction is exercised as ancillary to and in aid of actions at law affecting the title or possession. The plaintiff must allege title in himself.¹ In Riemer v. Johnke, in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, where it appeared that the greater portion of the value of the land consisted in timber, an injunction was granted pending an ejectment restraining the defendant, who was insolvent, from chopping down, removing or destroying the timber growing upon the land.² Where, however, the plaintiff, after obtaining an injunction, proceeded to cut down the timber himself, the injunction was dissolved. It was declared to be the purpose of the injunction to preserve the property in controversy so that the prevailing party might enjoy it unimpaired after the termination of the litigation; but the court would not allow the plaintiff to restrain his adversary and then to seize and appropriate to his own use the most valuable portion of the property in controversy before his right thereto had been adjudicated.³ An injunction will not be granted at the suit of a mortgagee, to prevent the removal from the mortgaged premises of timber trees cut down in waste of the security before the service of the injunction, unless proof of fraud or insolvency is furnished and there is no redress at law or in equity.⁴ In Wisconsin an injunction to prevent waste during the pendency of an action for the recovery of land, may be granted in the action itself.⁵ In New York an injunction will issue restraining an interference with the plaintiff's possession pending an action to determine conflicting claims to real property.⁶

¹ Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175.

² Riemer v. Johnke, 37 Wis. 258. See Neale v. Cripps, 4 Kay & J. 472; Snyder v. Hopkins, 31 Kans. 557.

³ Haight v. Lucia, 36 Wis. 355. See Horton v. White, 84 N. C. 297.

⁴ Bank of Chenango v. Cox, 26 N. J. Eq. 452. As to injunction against waste, see Watson v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 169; Nevitt v. Gillespie, 2 Miss. 108; Smith v. Wilson, 10 Cal. 528; against interference with the possession, Long v. Kasebeer, 28 Kans. 238.

⁵ Gillett v. Treganza, 13 Wis. 472; Riemer v. Johnke, 37 Wis. 258.

⁶ Stamm v. Bostwick, 30 Hun (N. Y.), 70. Under the New York Code of Civil

§ 623. Practice in North Carolina.—The general rule in North Carolina is, that the plaintiff may have an injunction or other appropriate order to protect the property from waste and injury by an insolvent defendant during the pendency of the ejectment;¹ but an injunction will not lie restraining the defendant from enjoying the fruits of his possession when it does not appear that the plaintiff, if successful in establishing his title, would lose the fruits of his recovery.² The courts of that State have undoubted jurisdiction in the course of the action, where the locus in quo is claimed by both parties, to take care of the property until the question of the title can be tried and settled, if the acts threatened are of such a character as to work an irreparable injury, but the defendant in possession will not be enjoined from making that use of the land to which it is best adapted, such as cutting timber and turpentine trees for building and fencing purposes, if the plaintiff fails to show that the defendant is insolvent.³

§ 624. Injunction to restrain trespass in the nature of waste.—The plaintiff, without any allegation of insolvency, may, in California, seek, in addition to the recovery of the premises, an injunction restraining the commission of trespass in the nature of waste, such as cutting, destroying and removing growing timber pending the action, but the grounds of equitable interposition should be stated in the complaint distinct from the allegations upon which the judgment at law is sought.⁴ It has been held in England that courts of equity have no jurisdiction to interfere in case of permissive waste by a life tenant.⁵

Procedure, if the defendant during the pendency of an action relating to real property commits waste upon or does any other damage to the property in controversy the court may, upon proof of the facts by affidavit, grant, without notice or security, an order restraining the defendant from the commission of any further waste upon or damage to the property. Disobedience to such an order may be punished as a contempt of the court. This provision does not affect the right of the plaintiff to a temporary or permanent injunction in the action, but is intended to afford a cumulative remedy. New York Code of Civil Procedure, § 1681. See People v. Alberty, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 161; Bush v. Phillips, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 428.

¹ Jones v. Boyd, 80 N. C. 258-262.

² Baldwin v. York, 71 N. C. 463.

³ McCormick v. Nixon, 83 N. C. 113; Kron v. Dennis, 90 N. C. 327.

⁴ Natoma Water & Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 544; Snyder v. Hopkins, 31 Kans. 559; West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 703.

⁵ Powys v. Blagrove, 1 Kay, 495.

§ 625. Failure to prosecute ejectment forfeits right to injunction.—An injunction to prevent waste will not be continued pending an action of ejectment, if the complainant's title is denied, especially if he has been negligent in bringing to trial the action at law.¹ An injunction to prevent injury or waste will usually be granted only when the complainant has established or is seeking to establish his title at law. The remedy is not designed to supersede the jurisdiction of courts of law over the legal title, but rather to aid that jurisdiction so far as it is defective.² Nor will the defendant be restrained from using the land in the ordinary course of agriculture, or from clearing timber and erecting buildings for that purpose.³

§ 626. Jurisdiction to grant injunction.—In *Haigh v. Jaggar*⁴ the court said that even though the defendant was in complete possession of the estate, by title adverse to others who claim it against him, and no privity existed between the parties, and the party in possession swears that his title is valid or that the claim of his adversary is unfounded, even that state of things did not prevent a court of equity from interfering before judgment at law to restrain the party in possession from committing waste. The later and much quoted case of *Talbot v. Scott*⁵ establishes the doctrine that the court will not interfere by injunction except to restrain malicious and destructive waste. Granting an injunction is, as we have said, in any event largely a matter of discretion.⁶ Where the complaint alleged that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of certain land, that the defendants were insolvent and unable to respond in damages, and had threatened to destroy the improvements on the premises, the allegations were held sufficient to support an order enjoining defendants from removing the improvements or

¹ Higgins v. Woodward, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 342.

² Bogey v. Shute, 4 Jones' Eq. (N. C.) 174.

³ Thompson v. Williams, 1 Jones' Eq. (N. C.) 176. See McCormick v. Nixon, 83 N. C. 113.

⁴ 2 Collyer, 231.

⁵ 4 Kay & J. 96, reviewing the English cases.

⁶ Howe v. Rochester Iron Mfg. Co., 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 592.

committing waste.¹ It has been said that a court of equity will rarely interpose by injunction to restrain the working of mines until the right is established at law,² though this latter test was not considered a necessary prerequisite to relief by injunction in New York.³ The injury must be something more than a mere fugitive and temporary trespass, for which adequate compensation could be obtained in an action at law: it must be an injury to the corpus of the estate.⁴ An injunction to restrain a threatened injury to real property in the nature of waste may be granted in California, although the plaintiff is in possession.⁵ The injunction will usually be vacated if the sworn answer fully meets and contradicts the allegations of the bill.⁶

§ 627. Storm v. Mann.—An injunction to stay waste pending an ejectment was denied by Chancellor Kent in Storm v. Mann,⁷ a case in which the defendant had been in possession a long time, and had joined issue in the ejectment which had not yet been tried. The decision is based on the general principle that where the right is in doubt equity will not interfere. The rule in Storm v. Mann is perhaps too broadly stated, but the case as reported does not show that the defendant was insolvent, or that the waste which he was committing constituted an irreparable injury to the premises. This case is followed in Nevitt v. Gillespie.⁸ The case of *Pillsworth v. Hopton*⁹ is referred to by Kent in Storm v. Mann as authority for the proposition that if the complainant in his bill to restrain waste states an adverse claim of title in the defendant, he states himself out of court. This extraordinary proposition is not countenanced in the modern cases. The jurisdiction to

¹ Meadow Valley Mining Co. v. Dodds, 6 Nev. 261.

² Zinc Co. v. Franklinite Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 322-350. But see Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 321; Wade's American Mining Law, p. 234.

³ West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 705; Lacustrine Fer. Co. v. Lake Guano & F. Co., 82 N. Y. 476.

⁴ West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 705.

⁵ More v. Massini, 32 Cal. 590.

⁶ Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175.

⁷ 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 21. See Field v. Jackson, 2 Dick. 599; Pillsworth v. Hopton, 6 Ves. 51; Lansing v. North River S. B. Co., 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 163.

⁸ 2 Miss. 108.

⁹ 6 Ves. Jr. 51.

restrain trespass; or such waste as will constitute an irreparable injury to the land, has been greatly enlarged, and now extends to cases in which the title is sharply contested and the right is in doubt.¹

§ 628. Practice in Pennsylvania.—In Clark's Appeal² the owner of a hotel sought an injunction to restrain the removal of a cooking-range and carving-table fastened to the hotel floor. The injunction was denied on the ground that the table and range were articles of convenience, but not of necessity, and the injury resulting from their removal was not irreparable, while the redress at law was adequate. Witmer's Appeal,³ where an injunction was granted, was cited, but the court said that it was a different case, i. e., of dismantling a steam saw-mill by detaching and removing the boilers therefrom. Nor was it like the cases of waste in destroying timber or taking away minerals from land. No amount of money could replace the timber and minerals removed.

§ 629. Injunction by mortgagee against mortgagor.—A mortgagee may proceed by bill in chancery against a mortgagor who is impairing the security by committing waste,⁴ and a mortgagor in possession may be restrained from committing waste after decree of foreclosure, but before it has been executed.⁵ The court has authority to restrain the mortgagor from committing waste after the sale of the mortgaged premises and before confirmation, upon the petition of the purchaser.⁶

§ 630. Executions against the person, and orders of arrest.—It was established under the early code practice in New

¹ Spear v. Cutter, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 486, and cases cited. See United States v. Gear, 3 How. 120; Poor v. Carleton, 3 Sumn. 77; United States v. Parrott, 1 McAl. 271.

² 62 Penn. St. 447.

³ 45 Penn. St. 455.

⁴ Coker v. Whitlock, 54 Ala. 180; Burden v. Stein, 27 Ala. 104; Nelson v. Pinegar, 30 Ill. 481; Capner v. Flemington M. Co., 3 N. J. Eq. 467; Bunker v. Locke, 15 Wis. 635; Cooper v. Davis, 15 Conn. 556; Vanderslice v. Knapp, 20 Kan. 647. See Van Pelt v. McGraw, 4 N. Y. 110; Byrom v. Chapin, 113 Mass. 308; Salmon v. Clagett, 3 Bland (Md.), 180.

⁵ Malone v. Marriott, 64 Ala. 486; Harris v. Bannon, 78 Ky. 568.

⁶ Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bigler, 79 N. Y. 569. Compare Wright v. Atkins, 1 Ves. & B. 313; Goodman v. Kine, 8 Beav. 379; Walton v. Johnson, 15 Sim. 352.

York that, in an action to recover the possession of real property, and for the rents and profits, the defendant could not be imprisoned,¹ and upon the failure of the plaintiff to recover, in an action of this character, execution would not issue against his body for the costs;² and an order of arrest would not be granted upon a complaint for the recovery of real property.³ But in the later case of Welch v. Winterburn,⁴ an order of arrest was upheld in a statutory action of trespass, brought to recover damages for a forcible ejectment and detainer. These decisions rest largely upon the construction and interpretation of statutes of that State rather than upon the inherent principles governing the common law action of ejectment. Ejectment was originally based upon the idea of a trespass, an ejectio firmæ, which was alleged in the pleading to have been committed vi et armis. This early characteristic necessarily still clings to the remedy. The defendant must be put in the wrong by the pleadings, and must be shown, at the trial, to have disseized the plaintiff, and to have unlawfully withheld the possession of the lands from him. Upon principle there seems to be no controlling reason why the provisional relief, and final process against the person, usually given in actions for torts, should not be granted in remedies in the nature of ejectment. The policy of modern legislation, however, seems to be otherwise, and the cases reveal a singular absence of any purpose on the part of the courts to extend either provisional or final relief of this character to suitors in ejectment. In Howland v. Needham,⁵ nevertheless, it was held by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin that ejectment was an action ex delicto, and that the wrongful receipt, by the tenant, of the mesne profits, or the wrongful withholding of the possession from the lawful owner, had always been regarded as a tort, for which, by the com-

¹ Fullerton v. Fitzgerald, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 441. See Fassett v. Tallmadge, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 244.

² Merritt v. Carpenter, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 428; s. c. 3 Keyes (N. Y.), 142.

³ Brush v. Mullen, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 242; Griswold v. Sweet, 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 171.

⁴ 14 Hun (N. Y.), 518. See 2 N. Y. R. S. p. 338; Bruce v. Kelly, 5 Hun (N. Y.), 229.

⁵ 10 Wis. 495.

mon law, an action of trespass might be maintained. The constitution of that State provides that no person shall be imprisoned for debt arising out of, or founded upon, contract, express or implied. It was held that, as the judgment for damages was unconnected with any contract obligation, and the detention of the possession and the receipt of the profits was a wrong, it was entitled to be redressed as such, and an execution might properly issue against the body of the defendant upon a judgment rendered for damages for withholding the possession of the land.

§ 631. Tendency of the modern cases.—An examination of the cases and principles governing provisional relief, in actions to recover realty, cannot but confirm the conviction that this branch of relief is, in many of our States, inadequate, imperfect, and susceptible of grave abuse. The right of possession of land is regarded as peculiarly sacred in England, where many vast estates are held without pretense of title other than that of possession. Inviolability of possession of realty was a prominent characteristic of the feudal system. This is the source of the strong disinclination, pervading many of the cases, to disturb the possessor of lands before final adverse adjudication of the title. Provisional relief is not encouraged because the subject-matter of contention is immovable, practically indestructible, and, unlike personalty, cannot be spirited away. Objections are also urged against a premature and partial inspection and adjudication of the conflicting titles, based upon ex parte statements and affidavits. The defendant, if successful, will, it is true, be restored to the possession, but the improvements or growing crops may have needed his attention; any business which he was prosecuting on the property may have been dissipated by the interruption, and kindred losses may have been entailed, for which restoration to the possession furnishes no adequate compensation or redress. Such is the argument in favor of the present policy of the courts.

§ 632. Hardships incident to withholding provisional relief.—Still, provisional relief has been withheld in many cases, entailing serious hardships and loss upon parties out of possession. Conceding that the possessor has important advantages, the courts, in passing upon applications for these remedies, should consider more fully the question of the source from which the possession was derived, how long it has been enjoyed, and whether acquired honestly or by indirection, fraud, or force. Trespassers, intruders and squatters, or parties who have acquired the possession by violence or deceit, should not be permitted to avail themselves of their own wrong, and to shield their possession by invoking a principle of law devised for the protection of bona fide occupants. If the defendant has been clothed with the possession by the plaintiff, that feature should exert an important influence in granting provisional relief. Proof of insolvency of the defendant, which bears so important a part in applications for relief of this kind, is not always a true test; for the injuries inflicted are often damnum absque injuria. In Mapes v. Scott,¹ the parties in possession had been twice defeated in the ejectment, were wholly insolvent, and the premises in dispute, to which they had no legal or equitable title, were rapidly going to waste. The record showed that the defendants were without title, and yet, in the teeth of this strong case, the application for a receiver was overruled.

It is not easy to see why the rights of the possessor of real property are so superior to the rights of the holders of personal property as to call for this important difference in remedies, or that any great dangers would result to real property owners if the income of the land was accumulated pending the litigation in cases where the right was apparently with the plaintiff. In modern times litigants are not so much dependent as formerly upon the possession itself as evidence of their title. Indeed people are vastly better informed concerning the titles to their lands than to their personality. The record acts and the statute of frauds have wrought important changes that render it no longer necessary to throw so many safeguards around the possessor, which are too often used as obstructions to the true owner.

¹ 4 Bradw. (Ill.) 268.

Receivers are appointed with considerable freedom in equity suits which draw in question the title to land, and in which the ownership is often conclusively settled. As already shown, a plaintiff who could have proceeded in ejectment where a receiver is not allowed, but who elected to proceed in equity to set aside the deed that was the subject of dispute, may have a receiver. This proves that the form of the remedy, and not the abstract merits or probable results, governs in determining the right to this relief. The cases decide that a receiver will not be appointed where no special equity is claimed, and the moving party has only a mere dry legal title. In other words, the owner of land having a patent from the government or a chain of the legal title, apparently complete in every respect—the highest and most perfect evidence of title known to the law—who has been deforced of the possession, can generally invoke no provisional relief in his struggles to regain it. A claimant whose title is not recognized by any rule of law, but is uncertain, or, as we say, equitable, that is founded upon matters claimed to justify “a mitigation and moderation of the common law,” or on particular exceptions to clearly defined rules, can secure a receiver to protect real property and preserve the rents pending the controversy. Is this a result to be commended? Litigations over land titles are necessarily protracted, and a system of procedure which will enable unscrupulous and irresponsible possessors of land to enjoy the possession and profits, and waste the subject-matter of contention in practical defiance of the courts and the owners, should be corrected.

CHAPTER XXIV.

TWO ACTIONS PENDING FOR THE SAME LAND.—CONSOLIDATION OF EJECTMENTS.—JOINDER OF LEGAL AND EQUITABLE ACTIONS.—MISJOINDER OF ACTIONS.—LIS PENDENS.

- | | |
|--|--|
| § 633. Two actions for same cause. 634. Early practice. 635. Same title involved in both actions. 636. How the objection is raised. 637. Ejectments and suits in equity. 638. Consolidation of ejectments. 639. Joinder of legal and equitable actions. | § 640. Misjoinder of actions. 641. Ejectment and trespass quare clausum fregit. 642. Ejectment and claim for purchase money. 643. Ejectment and claim for damages. 644. Young v. Young. 645. Lis pendens. |
|--|--|

§ 633. Two actions for same cause.—Before proceeding with the consideration of the successful plaintiff's resultant claim for mesne profits,¹ and before touching upon the rights of a bona fide occupant to set off the value of useful improvements or to retain a lien therefor,² and before discussing the titles that will support and defeat ejectment, and the rules of evidence peculiar to the remedy, it will be necessary to notice briefly some questions relating to the joinder, consolidation and misjoinder of actions relating to realty, and also to see how far the pendency of the action constitutes notice of the rights involved.

It may be stated as a general rule, that a suitor will not be permitted to maintain more than one action against the same defendant for the same cause.³ The pendency of the former action may be pleaded in abatement of the second action, and constitutes a complete answer to it,⁴ but the plea must allege that the first action is still pend-

¹ See Chap. XXV.

² See Chap. XXVI.

³ Radford v. Folsom, 14 Fed. Rep. 97.

⁴ Harrington v. Libby, 6 Daly (N. Y.), 259; Wentworth v. Barnum, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 238; Bendernagle v. Cocks, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 207; Dawley v. Brown, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 107. A suit will not lie to enjoin the simultaneous prosecution of ejectment and summary proceedings, to dispossess the defendant. Success in either proceeding could be pleaded to defeat the other. Grissler v. Stuyvesant, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 77.

ing.¹ This rule is, of course, applicable to all actions in the nature of ejectment, in the modern procedure, though the practice as to the correct method of raising the objection is not uniform.² The rule on this subject as between State and Federal tribunals, though in entire harmony with the general principle, is somewhat peculiar, and the courts have had some difficulty in applying it. It is, that, where the Federal court is a court of concurrent jurisdiction with the State court (i. e., where the territorial limits of one embrace those of the other), and the case, including the parties, rights asserted and relief prayed for, are substantially the same, so that, if the pending case had already been disposed of, it could be pleaded in bar as a former adjudication, then the pendency of one suit is a bar to the other; but where the case is different, or the proceedings are in different States or circuits, then one action cannot be used to defeat the other.³

§ 634. Early practice.—In the case of Thrustout v. Troublesome,⁴ decided in 1738, it appeared that, during the pendency of an action of ejectment, the plaintiff brought a second action for the same land on the same title. The court granted a stay of proceedings in the second action until the first action was discontinued and the costs paid, and remarked that the reason for staying proceedings in one ejectment when another was pending, was that the first ejectment could not be pleaded in bar of the second action.

§ 635. Same title involved in both actions.—In Dawley v. Brown,⁵ an ejectment case, the New York Court of Appeals said: "To sustain a plea of a former action pending, . . . it must appear to the court that the first action is for the same cause as the second. This requirement is strictly enforced. It is not enough that the property in controversy in both actions is the same."⁶ The material

¹ Moore v. Kessler, 59 Ind. 152.

² See Findlay v. Keim, 62 Pa. St. 112.

³ Weaver v. Field, 16 Fed. Rep. 22; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548; Radford v. Folsom, 14 Fed. Rep. 98; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 714.

⁴ Andrews, 298. See Doe d. Brayne v. Bather, 12 Q. B. 941.

⁵ 79 N. Y. 390. See s. c. 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 107; s. c. 9 Hun (N. Y.), 461.

⁶ Citing Stowell v. Chamberlain, 60 N. Y. 272.

point of inquiry in such cases is whether or not the same title is involved in both actions.¹ As elsewhere shown, a plaintiff may acquire a new and distinct title, and, having done so, may assert it, without prejudice from a former action, with the same effect which would have accompanied such title into the hands of a stranger, because, as the newly acquired title was not investigated in the prior litigation, it cannot be concluded or affected by it.² This principle has been fully recognized in California in the case of Vance v. Olinger,³ in which the Supreme Court of that State said that a plaintiff might have two actions pending at the same time, to recover the same land, if the second action was brought upon a different title from the first, or was founded upon a title acquired subsequent to the commencement of the first action.

§ 636. How the objection is raised.—In Ritter v. Worth,⁴ in the New York Court of Appeals, it appeared that the plaintiffs claimed as heirs at law of R., and that the defendant set up in his answer the pendency of a former action, brought by the plaintiffs, together with the widow of R., to recover possession of a portion of the same lands. The court held that proof of the pendency of the former action abated the second action as to the land embraced therein, leaving the second action to proceed as to the balance of the land, and that the fact that the widow was joined as a co-plaintiff in the former action was no obstacle to the recovery by the other plaintiffs of their interests in the lands. In Williamson v. Paxton,⁵ it was held in the Court of Appeals of Virginia, that where an action at law and a suit in equity were pending for the same cause of action, at the same time, the proper method of making the objection was by a rule in the chancery suit to put the plaintiff to his election between the two suits. In Singer v. Scott,⁶ in the Supreme Court of Georgia, it was held that the pendency

¹ See Doe d. Brayne v. Bather, 12 Q. B. 941; Haigh v. Paris, 16 M. & W. 145; Doe d. Henry v. Gustard, 5 Scott N. R. 818.

² Barrows v. Kindred, 4 Wall. 399; Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 390.

³ 27 Cal. 358.

⁴ 58 N. Y. 627.

⁵ 18 Gratt. (Va.) 475.

⁶ 44 Ga. 659.

of the first action might be pleaded in abatement of the second action, and that this plea could not be evaded by dismissing the first suit after the plea had been filed; and in Williams v. Rawlins,¹ in the same State, the proper practice was held to be to interpose a plea of aliter lis pendens, and a motion to compel the plaintiff to elect which action he would prosecute.

§ 637. Ejectments and suits in equity.—In Quinn v. Quinn,² in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, it appeared that the defendant had, prior to the commencement of the ejectment, brought a suit in equity against the plaintiff to assert an equitable title to the premises. The court decided that the pendency of the suit in equity was not a bar to the ejectment; that the proper remedy of the defendant was by answer in the ejectment action, setting up the pendency of the suit in equity, followed by an application for a stay of proceedings until the equity suit was heard and tried, or that the defendant might set up and prove the equitable defense, leaving that suit to be discontinued. And in Michigan it was decided that a bill to quiet title would lie even where an action of ejectment was pending concerning the same land, if the judgment in the latter action would leave the title imperfect, and open to disputes, and the record of complainant would not be prima facie better than the opposing title.³ Relief in equity will not be denied where the decision at law cannot cover the entire controversy. It has been held by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, that a plaintiff in partition may, during the pendency of that action, maintain ejectment for a moiety of the same lands, as the action of partition did not affect the title, but operated merely upon the lines of division.⁴

§ 638. Consolidation of ejectments.—The practice as to consolidation of ejectments seems to have been unsettled

¹ 33 Ga. 117.

² 27 Wis. 168. See Wilson v. Jarvis, 19 Wis. 601.

³ Eaton v. Trowbridge, 38 Mich. 454.

⁴ Ross v. Pleasants, 19 Penn. St. 157. A bill to reform a deed may be brought against all the parties through whom the title has passed with notice of complainant's rights. Walkup v. Zehring, 13 Iowa, 306.

during the early stages of the remedy. In *Smith v. Crabb*¹ it appeared that ten ejectments were instituted on the same demise for as many houses in the occupation of ten persons. Application was made to the court to consolidate the declarations, accompanied by a suggestion that the title was the same in all the actions. The court refused to grant the request for the reason that the lessor might have sued the defendants at different times, and the consolidation would oblige him "to go on against all, when perhaps he might be ready in some of them only." This objection, however, seems to be answered by the fact that the application was based upon the theory that the title was the same in all the actions. In Grimstone v. Burgers,² however, a motion to consolidate sixteen ejectments was granted, and in Doe d. Pultney v. Freeman,³ where it appeared that thirty-seven ejectments, depending on the same title, had been brought against the occupants of as many houses, Lord Kenyon said it was a scandalous proceeding, and ordered that the actions be stayed to abide the event of a special verdict in one of them. So in Jackson v. Schaubert,⁴ the New York Supreme Court, in a per curiam opinion, said that where a number of ejectments were brought, and all depended upon the same title, and the evidence and the questions to be litigated were the same in the several actions, it was competent for either party to make an application to the court for an order that only one of the causes be carried down to trial, the plaintiff not to be prejudiced by his omission to try the others,⁵ and directing that in a clear case all the actions abide the

¹ 2 Strange, 1149. See Medlicot v. Bruester, 2 Keb. 524; Longfield on Eject. p. 81.

² Barnes' Notes of Cases, 176. See Roe d. Burlton v. Roe, 7 T. R. 477; Gilbert on Eject. 74.

³ See 2 Sell. Pr. p. 144; Den v. Kimble, 9 N. J. Law, 335; Adams on Eject. (4th Am. ed.) p. 291 [*262]; Hardin v. Kirk, 49 Ill. 153.

⁴ 4 Cowen (N. Y.), 78. See Law v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 210. In New York actions to foreclose mortgages will not be consolidated. Bech v. Ruggles, 6 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 69; Lockwood v. Fox, 8 Daly (N. Y.), 127; Kipp v. Delamater, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 183. Compare Turner v. Duchman, 23 Wis. 500. In New York two partition actions affecting lands in different counties, and not having common parties, cannot be consolidated. Mayor v. Coffin, 90 N. Y. 312. Motions to consolidate title suits have been refused. Manchester College v. Isherwood, 2 Sim. 476.

⁵ See S. P. Jackson v. Stiles, 5 Cowen (N. Y.), 447.

event of the cause to be tried. The practice of consolidating ejectments often results in hardships and inconveniences to litigants, which outweigh the reasons upon which the practice is founded. It frequently leads to confusion and injustice in ascertaining and adjusting the damages and mesne profits, and concerning the rights of the parties to costs, and to the control of the litigation, and also as affecting matters of evidence,¹ and, unless a plain case of the multiplication of vexatious litigations is presented, the power should not be exercised.

§ 639. Joinder of legal and equitable actions.—Under the practice in New York an equitable cause of action to remove, as a cloud upon plaintiff's title, a deed given by mistake by a third party to the defendant, under which the latter had fraudulently obtained the possession by connivance with the plaintiff's tenant, and a claim to recover the possession of the premises, may be united in the same complaint, and asserted in the same action.² So in Phillips v. Gorham,³ it was held that the plaintiff, in an action to recover specific real property, could attack a deed, under which the defendants claimed title, upon grounds cognizable in a court of chancery. In Laub v. Buckmiller,⁴ the New York Court of Appeals considered it to be settled law that legal and equitable relief might be had in one action, and held that a plaintiff claiming under a defective deed, and showing sufficient grounds for its reformation, was entitled to the same relief as if he had brought two actions: one to reform the instrument, the other to enforce it as reformed. And where the defendant claimed under a deed which was void because the grantor was non compos mentis, the plaintiff was allowed, in an action to recover possession of the land, to prove the grantor's incapacity, so as to defeat the defendant's claim, and it was held to be unnecessary to resort to a court of equity to set aside the deed.⁵

¹ Den d. Stewart v. Johnson, 18 N. J. Law, 88.

² Lattin v. McCarty, 41 N. Y. 107. See McTeague v. Coulter, 6 J. & S. (N. Y.) 208. Contra Peyton v. Rose, 41 Mo. 257; Curd v. Lackland, 43 Mo. 139. See §§ 187, 189.

³ 17 N. Y. 270.

⁴ 17 N. Y. 626.

⁵ Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 378. See Mitchell v. Barnes, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 194.

In Broiestedt v. South Side Railroad Company,¹ it was expressly held that the legal rights of the owner of land could be established and declared, and the equitable remedy by injunction, restraining any interference therewith could be obtained in the same action. To sustain the action, however, in this form, facts must be alleged which would have been necessary to entitle him to the relief had he sought it in separate actions.²

§ 640. Misjoinder of actions.—In New York the general rules regulating the joinder of causes of action have been expressly declared to be applicable to the action of ejectment; and it seems clearly established, as elsewhere shown, that two hostile claimants of the title of a piece of land cannot unite as plaintiffs in the same action against a third party in possession.³ In a case which arose in Missouri, it was decided that a declaration in ejectment and a petition for partition could not properly be united in the same count, and one or the other must be rejected as surplusage.⁴ So a suit to foreclose a mortgage, and an action to recover possession of another tract of land, cannot be joined.⁵

§ 641. Ejectment and trespass quare clausum fregit.—Ejectment and trespass quare clausum fregit cannot, according to some of the cases, be united in the same complaint, even though the locus in quo in both cases is identical. The causes of action are inconsistent. To enable the plaintiff to recover for the trespass, he must show that he was in possession when the tortious acts were committed, and that he had regained the possession at the time of the commencement of the action, while to entitle him to maintain his action for the ouster, and to recover possession, it is necessary to show that the defendant had the possession

¹ 55 N. Y. 220.

² Bockes v. Lansing, 74 N. Y. 437, 443. A husband and wife may join in a suit for damages for fraud in inducing the husband to convey land, the wife uniting in the conveyance to release her dower. Simar v. Canaday, 53 N. Y. 298. See §§ 187-189, 220.

³ Hubbell v. Lerch, 58 N. Y. 237. See St. John v. Pierce, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 362. See, also, §§ 188, 450.

⁴ Moreau v. Detchemendy, 41 Mo. 434.

⁵ Edgerton v. Powell, 72 N. C. 64. Compare Butler University v. Conard, 94 Ind. 353.

when the action was instituted.¹ A disseizee of land cannot, of course, maintain trespass quare clausum fregit for an injury done to the land until he has regained the possession.² Damages for trespass cannot be joined with an action for use and occupation.³

§ 642. Ejectment and claim for purchase money.—A cause of action for the recovery of land, alleged to have been improperly sold under a decree in equity, cannot be united in the same complaint with a demand against the clerk and master for the amount of the purchase money resulting from such sale.⁴

§ 643. Ejectment and claim for damages.—In a case which arose in Minnesota, it was decided that a cause of action to recover possession of one piece of real property, with a claim for damages for withholding it, was improperly united with a claim for damages for the detention of another piece of land,⁵ or for trespasses committed upon other lands;⁶ and the Supreme Court of Florida have held that it is improper to unite a cause of action for specific performance against one party with a cause of action in ejectment against another party in the same action.⁷ In Illinois a count in ejectment for dower cannot be joined with counts of a different character.⁸ It has been held in New York, that an action against two defendants to recover possession of real estate, with a claim for damages, was improperly united with a demand against one of the defendants, for rents and profits of the premises for which it was claimed such defendant was indebted to the plaintiff, no connection being shown between

¹ Budd v. Bingham, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 494. See Hotchkiss v. Auburn & R. R. Co., 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 600-613; Pomeroy on Remedies, § 503.

² Frost v. Duncan, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 560. See Freer v. Stotenbur, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 641. See, also, §§ 657, 668.

³ McLendon v. West Point & A. R. R. Co., 54 Ga. 293.

⁴ Brown v. Coble, 76 N. C. 391.

⁵ Holmes v. Williams, 16 Minn. 164.

⁶ See Hulce v. Thompson, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 113; Wager v. Troy Union R. R. Co., 25 N. Y. 535.

⁷ Fagan v. Barnes, 14 Fla. 53. A claim for damages for withholding the land may be joined in an action for specific performance. Worrell v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137.

⁸ Ringhouse v. Keener, 49 Ill. 470.

the rents and profits claimed and the alleged withholding of the possession of the premises.¹ And a complaint setting forth a breach of contract to sell and convey real estate, and an assault and battery committed upon plaintiff in forcibly taking the written contract of sale from his possession, was held bad on demurrer.² So it seems that a vendor cannot unite, in the same action, a claim against a broker for damages, for having effected a fraudulent sale of land, with a claim against the purchaser for a reconveyance and an accounting.³ The right to recover mesne profits in the action of ejectment will be presently noticed.⁴

§ 644. Young v. Young.—It has been held in North Carolina,⁵ that a complaint containing several causes of action, viz.: first, to declare one defendant a trustee of land; second, to recover judgment against other defendants for the purchase money of the land; and third, to recover possession of the land, with damages for withholding it, was not demurrable under the provisions of the code of that State,⁶ which allows the plaintiff to unite in the same complaint several causes of action where they arise out of "the same transaction; or transactions connected with the same subject of action."

§ 645. Lis pendens.—The law of lis pendens and the propriety of filing in the office of the clerk or custodian of the public records of the county in which the land in controversy is situated, a notice of the purpose and pendency of an action of ejectment has never received the consideration either at the hands of courts or legislatures, which the importance of the subject deserves. This is possibly due to the fact that the doctrine of lis pendens is commonly considered an equitable doctrine.⁷ It is only notice while

¹ Tompkins v. White, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 520. See People v. Mayor, &c., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 240-249.

² Ehle v. Haller, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 663; s. c. 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 287.

³ Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327.

⁴ See § 650.

⁵ Young v. Young, 81 N. C. 91.

⁶ Code of North Carolina, § 126.

⁷ King v. Bill, 28 Conn. 593. In Tilton v. Cofield, 93 U. S. 168, Mr. Justice Swayne said: "The law is, that he who intermeddles with property in litigation there is a lis pendens,¹ and only of such matters as appear in the pleadings.² In foreclosure cases it is the uniform practice to file a lis pendens, and so generally of suits in equity involving rights to realty. The practice is considered necessary to render the decrees effective. In Thompson v. Clark,³ it appeared that the plaintiff had instituted an ejectment, filed a lis pendens, and recovered a judgment against one B., and had been put into possession of the lands. An action for mesne profits was subsequently brought against a party who had occupied the premises pending the ejectment, under a lease from a person not claiming under B. It was held that the judgment in ejectment was not evidence in the action against the defendant for mesne profits, and that he was not bound by the filing of the notice of lis pendens in the ejectment suit, as he did not acquire his title from, or claim under, the defendant in that action.⁴ In Jackson v. Tuttle,⁵ Sutherland, J., said: "The defendant in an ejectment suit cannot defeat the action by transferring the possession to another, either with or without consideration. Whoever succeeds to his possession, succeeds also to the perils of the suit."⁶ In Sheridan v. Andrews,⁷ the New York Court of Appeals said: "The point, that the absence of a notice of lis pendens deprives the judgment of its effect as against persons claiming from or through the defendants, cannot be sustained. The only office of a notice of lis pendens is to give notice of the pendency of the action so as to affect persons who may deal with the defendants in respect to the prop-does it at his peril, and is as conclusively bound by the results of the litigation, whatever they may be, as if he had been a party to it from the outset." See County of Warren v. Marcy, 97 U. S. 96; Hunt v. Haven, 52 N. H. 162; Inloes v. Harvey, 11 Md. 519; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 44 Iowa, 252; McIlwath v. Hollander, 73 Mo. 105; s. c. 39 Am. Rep. 484, and note by Irving Browne, Esq.

¹ Leitch v. Wells, 48 N. Y. 585, and cases cited; Page v. Waring, 76 N. Y. 474.

² Shearon v. Henderson, 38 Tex. 245.

³ 4 Hun (N. Y.), 164.

⁴ See Aslin v. Parkin, 2 Burr. 668; Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. 296; Leland v. Tousey, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 328; Ainslie v. Mayor, &c., of N. Y., 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 168.

⁵ 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 240.

⁶ s. p. Smith v. Trabue, 1 McL. 87.

⁷ 49 N. Y. 478. See Long v. Neville, 29 Cal. 131; Gregory v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 591; Haynes v. Onderdonk, 5 T. & C. (N. Y.) 176; Wilmont v. Meserole, 41 N. Y. Superior, 275. See, also, §§ 454c, 495.

erty involved, before final judgment, and thus bind them by the judgment in the same manner as if they had been made parties to the action. Formerly, the commencement of a suit in equity was of itself constructive notice to subsequent purchasers, and they were bound by the decree. This rule was adopted in analogy to the rule in real actions at common law, that if the defendant aliened pending the writ, the judgment would overreach such alienation.¹ . . . It is difficult to see how, in an action of ejectment, a notice of lis pendens can be necessary to bind even purchasers pendente lite by the judgment.

. . . Inasmuch as a recovery in ejectment can only be had upon a legal title, it would seem unnecessary to show notice, actual or constructive, to bind a purchaser. It is only against mere equities that the purchasers without notice are protected." While it may be true that the plaintiff or claimant of the land will forfeit none of his rights by failing to file a notice of the pendency of an ejectment action, yet questions of public policy and the rights of innocent parties are frequently involved. The defendant in ejectment may have a perfect record title, and may transfer it, pending the action, to an innocent purchaser, who takes without notice, or any means of acquiring knowledge of the adverse title, or of the actual pendency of the action of ejectment. In New York, it is now provided by statute, that the plaintiff may, in an action brought to recover a judgment affecting the title to, or the possession, use, or enjoyment of real property, file a notice of the pendency of the action in the clerk's office of each county where the land is situated,² which shall be constructive notice from the time of filing it; and a person whose conveyance or incumbrance is subsequently executed or recorded, is bound by all proceedings taken in the action, after the filing of the notice, to the same extent as if he was a party to the action.³

¹ See Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 577; Howard v. Kennedy, 4 Ala. 592; Hickman v. Dale, 7 Verg. (Tenn.) 149; Jones v. Chiles, 2 Dana (Ky.), 25.

² N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 1670.

³ N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 1671. See §§ 621*b*, 649.

In Iowa a party will be charged with notice from the time the petition is filed.¹ In Missouri a conveyance by an heir or devisee pending proceedings to contest the validity of a will is subject to a subsequent judgment rendered in such proceedings, though no notice was filed as required in cases of equitable rights.²

¹ Haverly v. Alcott, 57 Iowa, 171.

² McIlwrath v. Hollander 73 Mo. 105; s. c. 39 Am. Rep. 484.

CHAPTER XXV.

MESNE PROFITS AND DAMAGES.

- | | |
|---|---|
| § 646. Damages in real actions. 647. Mesne profits in ejectment. 648. } Nature of the action. 649. } 650. Joinder of ejectment and claim for mesne profits. 651. Objections to the practice. 652. Distinction between action for mesne profits and action for use and occupation. 653. Distinction between claim for damages and for mesne profits. 654. Pleading in real actions. 655. In ejectment. 656. Parties plaintiff. 657. Plaintiff must actually acquire possession. 658. Parties defendant. 659. Possession of defendant. 660. Co-tenants. 661. Executors. 662. Recovery of nominal damages not a bar. 663. For what periods mesne profits are recoverable. 664. Damages assessed down to day of trial. 665. Measure of damages. 666. Rule in New York. | § 667. Interest on the value of the fee. 668. Damages for waste and trespass. 668a. Exemplary damages. 669. Damages after judgment. 670. Interest on mesne profits. 671. Judgment in ejectment conclusive as to title. 672. Judgment not conclusive as to length of defendant's occupation. 673. When judgment not conclusive. 674. Evidence as to mesne profits. 675. Income from saw-mill and site. 676. Income from ferry. 677. Rules as to ore and mines. 678. Income from improvements. 679. Costs. 680. Defenses. 681. Bankruptcy of defendant. 682. Matters in mitigation.—Payment of ground rent.—Inadequacy of purchase price. 683. Growing crops. 684. Fixtures. 685. Apportionment of mesne profits. 686. Statute of limitations. 687. Mesne profits in equity. 688. Taxes and assessments. 689. Abatement. 689a. Restitution of mesne profits. |
|---|---|

§ 646. Damages in real actions.—Under the early practice ordinarily no damages could be recovered in a real action.¹ The recovery was limited solely to interests in realty, for “it is of the essence of a real action, that only a real thing can be recovered therein; for wherever damages, which are a pecuniary recompense, and consequently a personal thing, are recoverable in the same action, the action becomes mixed.”² A discussion of the forms of procedure by which the demandant, while the ancient system of real writs prevailed, recovered the rents and profits of the land,¹ which had been wrongfully appropriated by the tenant (defendant), would be of little practical value at the present day, as real writs are almost wholly obsolete, and the methods by which damages and mesne profits are recovered in the modern procedure are largely regulated by statute. In some of the real writs the demandant was permitted to recover the damages that accrued pending the writ.² A writ of estrepement, prohibiting the tenant from committing waste upon the land pending the action, was also granted as a species of provisional relief in aid of certain real writs. By the statutes of Merton, Marlbridge, and Gloucester, damages were given in the principal real actions.³

¹ Stearns on Real Actions, pp. 94, 244, 389; Jackson on Real Actions, p. 99; Booth on Real Actions, 74, 75; Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. I, p. 241 [117].

² Sayer on Damages, p. 5.

§ 647. Mesne profits in ejectment.—"The mesne or intermediate profits of land are those received while the property is withheld from its rightful occupant; and when he recovers possession, the right to the mesne profits follows his recovery."⁴ The writ of ejectione firmæ, from which the modern action of ejectment is derived, was originally, as has been shown, a simple writ of trespass, brought by a lessee, or tenant for years, to recover damages resulting from eviction and loss of the term and possession. The recovery of compensation in damages at first constituted the sole purpose of the action, and the exclusive relief. Estates for years were scarcely recognized in early times, and the tenant for years was not allowed to make his precarious interest the basis of a real writ. Hence, his only practical redress against a person who had disseized him during the term was a writ of trespass for damages. The defendant very frequently proved insolvent, and this remedy was, therefore, palpably inadequate; and for this reason the practice of recovering the unexpired term and

¹ See Booth on Real Actions, p. 74; Stearns on Real Actions, pp. 245, 389.

² See Booth on Real Actions (Am. ed.), pp. 74-76; Stearns on Real Actions, p. 245; also, Chapter VIII.

³ 20 Hen. III, c. 3; 52 Hen. III, c. 16; and 6 Edw. I, anno 1278.

⁴ Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. I, p. 250 [123]. See Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1-80.

the possession was introduced. This innovation changed the whole nature and purpose of the writ, and gave it the character of a real action. The principal recovery under the early practice became a mere incident. When the fictitious parties were introduced into the action, and the practice was established of declaring on a fictitious lease, and of extending the action to cases where no lease in fact existed, the judgment for damages and mesne profits necessarily became nominal.¹ Thus in Davis v. Delpit,² the Court of Errors and Appeals of Mississippi declare, that "ever since the action of ejectment was adopted as a mode of trying title to real estate, it has been well settled as a rule of the common law, that the jury, in the assessment of damages, are confined to a compensation for the injury sustained by the ejectment, which being fictitious, the damage can only be nominal." A judgment for damages against the casual ejector, whether a fictitious or an actual person, was improper; for a money judgment could not be collected or enforced against a fictitious person, and the casual ejector, if an actual person, had not lived upon the lands, nor received the mesne profits, hence a judgment against him would be clearly erroneous. A real tenant, who had actually withheld the possession, occupied the lands, and enjoyed the profits, was needed as a defendant.³ The tenant in possession signed the consent rule, and defended the action, solely for the purpose of trying the title, not of contesting the right of the plaintiff, or his lessor, to mesne profits or damages, and for that reason, according to many of the cases, a judgment for mesne profits could not be rendered against him, though there is authority to the effect that the plaintiff might recover his real damages by giving notice of his intention to proceed therefor.⁴

¹ See Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), vol. IV, p. 241; Emrich v. Ireland, 55 Miss. 390-399; Davis v. Delpit, 25 Miss. 446; Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 444; Stearns on Real Actions, p. 402; Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. I, p. 243 [119]. See, also, § 62.

² 25 Miss. 446. See Emrich v. Ireland, 55 Miss. 390.

³ See Runnington on Ejectment, p. 438; Dobbins v. Baker, 80 Ind. 55.

⁴ Battin v. Bigelow, 1 Pet. C. C. 452; Osbourne v. Osbourne, 11 S. & R. (Penn.) 55; Goodtitle v. Tombs, 3 Wils. 118-121; Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 330; Lion v. Burtis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 408; Aslin v. Parkin, 2 Burr. 665-668.

After the damages in ejectment became nominal, the practice sprang up of bringing a new action of trespass for the mesne profits.

According to Mr. Reeves, there is no mention of the action for mesne profits until some time after the reign of Queen Elizabeth.¹

§ 648. Nature of the action.—A right to land essentially implies a right to the profits accruing from it, since without the latter the former can be of no value. "For what," says Lord Coke, "is the land but the profit thereof?"² Manifestly the person entitled to the land is entitled to the rents and profits; hence the legislature has no power to bestow upon another person, who has no title, a right to recover from the owner these rents and profits.³ This leads to a discussion of the nature of the modern remedies or forms of procedure by which claims for compensation in damages for withholding possession of land, and for mesne profits, are asserted. The remarkable changes wrought in the nature and uses of the action of ejectment by the introduction of fictions to facilitate the trial of the title, have been fitly supplemented by the alterations which the action for mesne profits has undergone.

Originally, the action for mesne profits was in the nature of trespass quare clausum fregit, and the cause of action died with the party.⁴ As already shown, one of the strong objections against granting provisional relief in the form of a receiver in this action was that it was prosecuted against the defendant as a trespasser, and that it would be a preposterous proceeding to appoint a receiver to receive damages to be recovered in an action of trespass.⁵ In Uttersen v. Vernon,⁶ however, Ashhurst, J., said: "The action for mesne profits, though in form it is an action of

¹ Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law (ed. 1880), Vol. IV, p. 241. See Stearns on Real Actions, p. 402, § 3.

² Co. Litt. 4 b. See Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1-76.

³ Rich v. Maples, 33 Cal. 102.

⁴ Stearns on Real Actions, p. 404; Thompson v. Bower, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 463-478. See Jackson v. Wood, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 443; Evans v. Welch, 63 Ala. 253; Brewster v. Buckholts, 3 Ala. 20.

⁵ See § 614.

⁶ 3 T. R. 539-547.

trespass, yet in effect it is to recover the rent." Again it is held that the action for mesne profits, being in its nature an equitable suit,¹ every equitable defense may be set up,² this feature of the action being borrowed from the chancery practice on bills to account.³ Chancellor Kent said: "The action for mesne profits is a liberal and equitable action, and will allow of every kind of equitable defense."⁴

Trespass for mesne profits is of course grounded upon the fiction of law that the disseizee, after re-entry, has been in continuous possession during the period of his disseizin.⁵ And the plaintiff must recover possession of the lands in some lawful manner before he is in a position to claim the rents and profits taken by the disseizor,⁶ or the damages inflicted by being kept out of possession. The mesne profits are "incident to the title and possession."⁷

§ 649. In Gill v. Patten,⁸ this language is used: "The court thinks that the action of trespass for the mesne profits, after a recovery in the fictitious action of ejectment, is strictly analogous to the action of trespass with a continuendo after an entry, and to that part of the remedy by assize which gave the defendant his damages, and is accompanied by the same equitable defense." In Camp v. Homesley,⁹ the court said that the action for mesne profits was substantially a continuation of the action of ejectment for the purpose of recovering the actual damages, and therefore whenever a person was allowed to maintain ejectment he could have trespass to complete his remedy. The

¹ See Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73; Ege v. Kille, 84 Penn. St. 333; Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456; Kille v. Ege, 82 Penn. St. 102; White v. Rowland, 67 Ga. 546.

² Murray v. Gouverneur, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 438. See Ege v. Kille, 84 Penn. St. 333; Zimmerman v. Eshbach, 15 Penn. St. 417.

³ Ewalt v. Gray, 6 Watts (Penn.), 427.

⁴ Murray v. Gouverneur, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 442. See Jackson v. Loomis, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 168.

⁵ Trubee v. Miller, 48 Conn. 347. See Dewey v. Osborn, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 329.

⁶ Bockes v. Lansing, 74 N. Y. 437-442. See Murray v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 130 Mass. 101.

⁷ Barnard v. Hart, 3 Fed. Rep. 555.

⁸ 1 Cr. C. C. 465. See Jackson v. Loomis, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 168; Murray v. Gouverneur, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 441.

⁹ 11 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 211.

remedy is regarded by some of the courts as a continuation or extension of the ejectment, introduced as a matter of convenience for the purpose of saving time,¹ or as being consequential to a recovery in ejectment.² Thus the Supreme Court of Alabama said: "The damages are an incident to the judgment, as in an action of detinue damages for the detention are an incident to the recovery of the chattel detained."³ Hunt, J., observed in delivering the opinion of the United States Supreme Court: "Speaking strictly, there was not only no cause of action, but no right to the mesne profits until the judgment in the original suit." The right of the true owner to the use and profits of the land is suspended until he regains possession either by entry or under a legal judgment.⁴ The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has said that though the action was in form for trespass, it was in reality for use and occupation, and necessarily involved the statement of an account under the evidence.⁵ In Carman v. Beam,⁷ however, the rule is laid down in that State that a claim for mesne profits is governed by the same general rules that are applicable to an ordinary action of trespass. In Illinois it is treated as an action of assumpsit,⁸ while in New York it is practically converted into an action for use and occupation.⁹ It is said in that State that the mesne profits "are those which are received intermediate the original entry and the restoration of possession. They are such whereto the right is created by an action of ejectment brought and actually carried into judgment; not damages which accrued anterior to or at the instant of the ouster."¹⁰

¹ Bradley v. McDaniel, 3 Jones (N. C.) Law, 128; Miller v. Melchor, 13 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 439.

² Mitchell v. Mitchell, 1 Md. 55; Benson v. Matsdorf, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 369; Trubee v. Miller, 48 Conn. 347.

³ Morris v. Beebe, 54 Ala. 300.

⁴ New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624.

⁵ Caldwell v. Walters, 22 Penn. St. 378. See Bigelow v. Jones, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 161; Avent v. Hord, 3 Head (Tenn.), 459; Bockes v. Lansing, 74 N. Y. 437-442.

⁶ Blight v. Ewing, 26 Penn. St. 135.

⁷ 88 Penn. St. 319.

⁸ Ringhouse v. Keener, 63 Ill. 230.

⁹ See Holmes v. Davis, 19 N. Y. 488; Vandevoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 639; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382.

¹⁰ Leland v. Tousey, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 333.

It will be apparent from these cases that the task of fixing the exact status of the modern action for mesne profits is not an easy one. The confusion results from the technical character of the early forms of action. As this remedy embraces some of the elements of an action of trespass for damages, and an action of assumpsit for use and occupation, and a suit for an equitable accounting, it necessarily differs from each of these actions, and must consequently be regarded as a form of relief by itself, to be governed by rules which are not common to the other remedies. It is established by a preponderance of the authorities, that the action has been divested of many of the peculiarities of an action of trespass; or rather that it has acquired the characteristics of an action ex contractu, and the recovery in the modern practice is largely regulated by the principles governing actions upon contract as distinguished from actions of pure tort.¹

§ 650. Joinder of ejectment and claim for mesne profits.—The general rule under the modern practice is that the plaintiff may bring an action for the recovery of the lands, and unite in the same action the claim to recover the rents or mesne profits and damages to which he may show himself to be entitled.² The legislative policy upon this subject varies in the several States, but it is generally optional with the plaintiff to join the claims for damages

¹ In Peter v. Hargrave, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 12, it appeared that the plaintiffs, who were slaves, had recovered their freedom by bringing trespass vi et armis for assault and battery and false imprisonment, in which the damages were only nominal. A subsequent action was brought for the mesne profits of the slaves, while wrongfully restrained of their liberty. The court held that the action for mesne profits after a recovery in ejectment furnished no principle to sustain a demand of this character. The purpose of an ejectment was said to be to remove opposition, quiet the regained possession and establish its enjoyment; but the recovery in a suit for freedom was founded upon nothing in the nature of a disseizin, and re-entry by the disseizee; the suit for freedom is not a possessory, but a droitural action, and droitural actions do not, by the common law, give mesne profits, either by a recovery therein, or in a subsequent action.

² Garner v. Jones, 34 Miss. 505; Armstrong v. Hinds, 8 Minn. 254; Lord v. Dearing, 24 Minn. 110; Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawyer, 523; Dawson v. McGill, 4 Whart. (Penn.) 230; Harrall v. Gray, 12 Neb. 543; Carman v. Beam, 88 Penn. St. 319; Bottorff v. Wise, 53 Ind. 32; Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28; Walker v. Mitchell, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 541; Livingston v. Tanner, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 481; Hotchkiss v. Auburn & R. R. Co., 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 600; Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478; Hecht v. Colquhoun, 57 Md. 563; Vandevoort v. Gould, 3 Tr. App. (N. Y.) 57. See § 643.

and mesne profits in the action of ejectment, or bring an independent action for the mesne profits, after the recovery in the principal action.¹ In Boyd's Lessee v. Cowan,² Chief Justice M'Kean defends the practice of uniting with the action for the recovery of the possession of the land the claim for mesne profits, and says: "I shall now briefly consider the argumentum ab inconvenienti, which refers but to a single instance, to wit: the difficulty the jury may labor under, in deciding on the titles of the parties to the possession, and at the same time, in fixing the value of the mesne profits, if the verdict shall be for the plaintiff. There can be no great hardship in this. In actions of waste, dowry, assize, and all others, where the thing itself, as well as the damages, is recovered, the jury are liable to the same inconvenience; nor can I perceive any great perplexity that can arise in determining the rent, or annual value, of a house or parcel of land, when complete evidence is given of it. It appears to me that the inconvenience or hardship is the other way. After a person has been unlawfully kept out of his house or land, for a series of years, and undergone great trouble and expense in recovering a judgment for them, to give him the possession merely, without any satisfaction for the use and occupation pending the action, does not seem complete justice."

§ 651. Objections to the practice.—This presentation of the subject does not entirely dispose of the objections to the joinder of the causes of action, and the trial and submission of both the issues at once. We have already deprecated the existing practice of incumbering the trials of title to land with questions of possession,³ and the objections urged against that method of procedure are, to a great extent, applicable to the practice of trying the claims for damages, mesne profits, and the right to offset improvements, at the same time with the issues relating to the right to recover the possession of the land. Under this practice too many complicated issues are clustered together. The claim for mesne profits embraces some of the elements of an equitable accounting, and is not in itself an easy task for a jury to cope with, while the defendant's set-off for improvements often presents difficult questions as to what shall be considered improvements, and frequently calls for the exercise of much delicate discrimination in separating the income of the unimproved land from the income of the improvements.¹ Then the right to the possession of land is regarded in the eye of the law as more sacred than rights involved in personal actions, and its consideration should not be embarrassed by collateral issues, and a mass of conflicting estimates and statements. Juries must base their verdicts upon their memory of the testimony solely, and ejectment cases in which the presentation of the testimony extends through several days, covering complicated transactions, are quite common. The questions involved in the trial of the title are often very intricate and difficult, and constitute by themselves all that the jury are competent to retain in memory and intelligently consider. Indeed, the jurisdiction at law to recover mesne profits is sometimes superseded by equity in complicated cases.² It is not possible, in the very nature of things, for the jury to creditably discharge their duty where a series of important issues, which might easily be separated, are submitted together in a body for their consideration. While the practice of settling both the disputed title and the questions of mesne profits and improvements in a single action is convenient, yet the issues should be separately considered by the jury, for, aside from the embarrassment incident to considering a multitude of issues, a verdict for the defendant renders the testimony as to mesne profits and improvements valueless, and the necessity for the production of the testimony on that branch of the case is entirely uncertain until the main issue is decided. Moreover, if the wisdom of the laws granting statutory new trials of the title is questionable,¹ there certainly can be no reason for a re-trial as of right of the issue as to mesne profits and improvements; and this appears to be an additional consideration in favor of separating the issues.²

¹ See Vandevoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 639-646; Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawyer, 523; Emrich v. Ireland, 55 Miss. 390. A claim for damages for withholding one parcel of land cannot be united with a claim to recover possession of another piece of land with damages for withholding it. Holmes v. Williams, 16 Minn. 164.

² 4 Dallas, 138.

³ See §§ 236, 658.

¹ See Chap. XXVI.

² See Gaines v. City of New Orleans, 17 Fed. Rep. 16, and cases cited.

§ 652. Distinction between action for mesne profits and action for use and occupation.—In Thompson v. Bower,³ in the New York Supreme Court, Johnson, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: “The action for mesne profits differs from an action for use and occupation, in this, that the latter is founded upon a promise, express or implied,⁴ while the former springs from a trespass, an entry vi et armis upon premises, and a tortious holding. The action to recover mesne profits is an action quare clausum fregit, and cannot be maintained without proof of the trespass. It is founded on the action of ejectment, generally, and follows a recovery in that action.” To show himself entitled to recover for use and occupation the plaintiff must prove that the relationship of landlord and tenant, or some express or implied agreement, existed between the parties.⁵ An implied promise to pay rent cannot, from the nature of things, arise out of a trespass or tortious entry upon land, and an adverse holding in the defendant’s own right.⁶ It is clearly settled that assumpsit will not lie for use and occupation, unless a contract relationship existed between the parties;⁷ nor can it be maintained after a recovery in ejectment.⁸ Trespass for mesne profits is the proper ac-

¹ See §§ 608, 609.

² Morris v. Beebe, 54 Ala. 300. See § 658.

³ 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 463-477.

⁴ See Goddard v. Hall, 55 Me. 579.

⁵ Sylvester v. Ralston, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 286; Wood v. Wilcox, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 28; Pierce v. Pierce, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 243; Bancroft v. Wardwell, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 489; McNair v. Schwartz, 16 Ill. 24; Scales v. Anderson, 26 Miss. 94; De Young v. Buchanan, 10 G. & J. (Md.) 149. See Kiersted v. Orange & A. R. R. Co., 1 Hun (N. Y.), 151.

⁶ Bard v. Nevin, 9 Watts (Penn.), 328; Harker v. Whitaker, 5 Watts (Penn.), 474; Irvine v. Hanlin, 10 S. & R. (Penn.) 220; Goddard v. Hall, 55 Me. 579. See Sinnard v. McBride, 3 Ohio, 264.

⁷ Watson v. Brainard, 33 Vt. 88; Goddard v. Hall, 55 Me. 579; Poindexter v. Cherry, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 305.

⁸ Butler v. Cowles, 4 Ohio, 205; Larrabee v. Lumbert, 34 Me. 79.

tion.¹ So account rendered will not lie for mesne profits.² As already shown, where the relationship of tenants in common exists, and one tenant has evicted his companion, the disseizee cannot maintain assumpsit against the disseizor for rents and profits that accrued during the period of the disseizin, as possession under an adverse title negatives the idea of a promise to pay rent, and the tort cannot be waived for the purpose of trying title to land in an action of assumpsit.³ It will be apparent, from a consideration of these cases, that the action of trespass for mesne profits is exclusive in its nature, and a disseizor, or person who has tortiously entered upon or occupied lands, either in good faith or mala fide, must be prosecuted for the rents taken, and damages sustained by the true owner, in this form of action, and cannot be held accountable in forms of procedure based upon contract, express or implied.

§ 653. Distinction between claim for damages and for mesne profits.—The distinction between the claim for damages for withholding real estate, and the claim for rents and profits of it, during the time the possession is wrongfully withheld, was taken in New York. The Court of Appeals of that State held that, under a complaint which asked for the recovery of the possession of real estate, with damages for withholding it, the admission of evidence as to the value of the use and occupation of the land, and an instruction to the jury that, in estimating the damages, they might consider the evidence as to rental value, was erroneous.⁴ The court said that the complaint, in the case cited, failed to set forth how long the defendant had been in possession; it did not allege that he had ¹ Leland v. Tousey, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 328; Morgan v. Varick, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 587; Poindexter v. Cherry, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 305; Dean v. Tucker, 58 Miss. 487; Scales v. Anderson, 26 Miss. 94; Larrabee v. Lumbert, 36 Me. 440. See Espy v. Fenton, 5 Ore. 423; Lankford v. Green, 52 Ala. 103; Edmonson v. Kite, 43 Mo. 176; Byrd v. Chase, 10 Ark. 602; Watson v. Brainard, 33 Vt. 88; Howe v. Russell, 41 Me. 446.

² Harker v. Whitaker, 5 Watts (Penn.), 474.

³ Richardson v. Richardson, 72 Me. 403; Van Alstine v. McCarty, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 326. See Bockes v. Lansing, 74 N. Y. 437; Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 196. See, also, § 176.

⁴ Larned v. Hudson, 57 N. Y. 151; Livingston v. Tanner, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 481. See Archbold's Landlord and Tenant, p. 231.

been in occupation of the premises at all before the day on which the action was commenced, and it contained no statement or allegation whatever to apprise the defendant, or indicate to him, that any claim was made for the rents and profits of the land. The rents and profits, the court said, did not "form any part of the damages for withholding the property, but constitute a separate and distinct cause of action."¹ It was further held that the complaint could not be amended so as to obviate this objection, as that would require the insertion of a new and independent cause of action, and not a mere amendment of that set forth in the complaint, and for which alone the action had been commenced. It must not be understood from this case that damages and mesne profits cannot be recovered in that State in the same action. The disseizee may proceed for both by inserting allegations in his pleading of the value of the use and occupation in addition to the claim for damages, so as to indicate to the defendant the nature and extent of the entire recovery sought.² By the damages, under the procedure in that State, is evidently meant all loss and damage which may be legally awarded to the disseizee, whether for waste, injury to the freehold, or otherwise, "other than for rents and profits or for use and occupation."³

§ 654. Pleading in real actions.—Under the statute in Massachusetts, the demandant, in a writ of entry, is entitled to recover the rents and profits, although not specifically demanded in the writ.⁴ In Maine, on the other hand, the demandant cannot obtain a judgment for dam-

¹ See Candee v. Burke, 10 Hun (N. Y.), 350; Cagger v. Lansing, 64 N. Y. 417, 431; Holmes v. Davis, 19 N. Y. 488.

² See Cagger v. Lansing, 64 N. Y. 419-431.

³ See N. Y. Code Civ. Pro. § 1525. "The court, at any time within three years after such a judgment is rendered [referring to a judgment in ejectment] and the judgment roll is filed, upon the application of the party against whom it was rendered, his heir, devisee, or assignee, and upon payment of all costs, and all damages, other than for rents and profits, or for use and occupation, awarded thereby to the adverse party, must make an order vacating the judgment, and granting a new trial in the action." The Code has since been amended so as to obviate any question as to the right of the plaintiff to recover rents and profits and damages in the same action. See §§ 1496, 1497 N. Y. Code Civ. Pro.

⁴ Provident Institution v. Burnham, 128 Mass. 458; Gen. Stat. of Mass. Ch. 134, §§ 13, 14; Raymond v. Andrews, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 265.

ages against the tenant, unless he has made claim therefor in his writ.¹ The policy of the latter State certainly embodies the better rule of procedure.

§ 655. In ejectment.—Mr. Adams says² in relation to pleading the claim for mesne profits, that “the plaintiff complains in it of his ejection and loss of possession, states the time during which the defendant (the real party) held the land, or took the rents and profits, and prays judgment for the damages which he has thereby sustained.” This formula is, under the present practice, still generally applicable, though somewhat meagre in its recitals. Under the modern procedure the premises should be described, the time stated when the defendant entered thereon and ejected the plaintiff, the length of time during which the possession was wrongfully withheld, and the value of the mesne profits of which the plaintiff has been deprived, and the amount of the damages which he has sustained.³ The jury, as a rule, cannot take into consideration the mesne profits, unless claimed in the declaration, and notice is given of the plaintiff’s intention to proceed for them.⁴ A statement in a pleading that a plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the land, and to the rents and profits, is defective, being merely an allegation of a conclusion of law. The complaint should state facts from which the conclusion could be drawn.⁵ In New York the claim for mesne profits should be stated in a separate count;⁶ but it is too late to object, for the first time, on the trial, to the form and want of particularity with which allegations with respect to the damages and mesne profits are made.⁷ In that State, as we have seen, under a claim for damages

¹ Pierce v. Strickland, 25 Me. 440; Larrabee v. Lumbert, 36 Me. 440.

² Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 446.

³ See Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 450 [384]; Higgins v. Highfield, 13 East, 407.

⁴ Bayard v. Inglis, 5 W. & S. (Penn.) 465; Livingston v. Tanner, 14 N. Y. 64; Dawson v. McGill, 4 Whart. (Penn.) 230. See Carman v. Beam, 88 Penn. St. 319; Larned v. Hudson, 57 N. Y. 151; Kinghouse v. Keener, 63 Ill. 230.

⁵ Sheridan v. Jackson, 72 N. Y. 173. See Scofield v. Whitelegge, 49 N. Y. 259; Armstrong v. Hinds, 8 Minn. 254.

⁶ Seaton v. Davis, 1 T. & C. (N. Y.) 91.

⁷ Candee v. Burke, 10 Hun (N. Y.), 350.

only, evidence of the value of the use and occupation cannot be received,¹ as the claims for damages and for rents and profits are regarded as separate causes of action which must be pleaded. A judgment for damages is clearly erroneous where no damages are alleged in the complaint.² The damages must, of course, be assessed by the jury, and when a verdict is rendered omitting any assessment of damages, the court has no power to render a judgment for possession and damages.³ The jury may be waived.⁴ In an English case decided in 1783,⁵ evidence of consequential damages, such as shutting up an inn and destroying the custom, was excluded because not specially pleaded.

It will thus be seen that there is nothing exceptional about claims against a disseizor for damages and mesne profits, but that such claims must, like other causes of action, be pleaded, to entitle the disseizee to introduce evidence in support of them, and to uphold a recovery.

§ 656. Parties plaintiff.—The action for mesne profits under the former practice could be brought in the name of the lessor of the plaintiff, or, according to some of the authorities, in the name of the nominal plaintiff;⁶ and in either case it was regarded as the lessor's action.⁷ A disseizee, who has recovered possession of lands by any lawful means, may maintain trespass for mesne profits against a party who has occupied the premises as a tenant of the disseizor, although the tenant was ignorant of the disseizee's claim of title, and, acting in good faith, had paid the rent to the disseizor.⁸ The only advantage which an

¹ Larned v. Hudson, 57 N. Y. 151; Livingston v. Tanner, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 481.

² McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 570.

³ Cannon v. Davies, 33 Ark. 56.

⁴ Candee v. Burke, 10 Hun (N. Y.), 350.

⁵ Dunn v. Large, 3 Doug. 335.

⁶ Goodtitle v. Tombs, 3 Wils. 118-121; Shadwick v. McDonald, 15 Ga. 392; Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 330; Lion v. Burtis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 408. See Masterson v. Hagan, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 325; Van Alen v. Rogers, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 281, in notis; Den v. Lunsford, Busb. (N. C.) Law, 401.

⁷ Aslin v. Parkin, 2 Burr. 665, 668. See Baron v. Abeel, 3 Johns. N. Y. 482; Chamier v. Clingo, 5 M. & S. 64.

⁸ Trubee v. Miller, 48 Conn. 347; s. c. 26 Alb. L. J. 39; Storch v. Carr, 28 Penn. St. 135. See Doe v. Whitcomb, 8 Bing 46; Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73; Green v.

occupant in good faith secures over a possessor in bad faith, as will presently appear, is that the former may recover for, or set off against mesne profits, the value of improvements left upon the land. Rent paid to a disseizor by a tenant is of no benefit to the true owner, and cannot be used by the tenant to defeat the owner's claim for mesne profits. The right to damages and mesne profits is assignable; and a plaintiff may recover for mesne profits taken by defendant prior to the plaintiff's acquiring title, provided the right of action therefor was transferred to the claimant by his grantor.¹ A plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits which accrued during his minority;² so a cestui que trust who has recovered lands may have judgment for the rents;³ and a municipal corporation may maintain an action for mesne profits for the use of a street.⁴ An heir or devisee cannot recover mesne profits that accrued during the life of the ancestor.⁵

§ 657. Plaintiff must actually acquire possession.—Trespass for mesne profits cannot ordinarily be maintained unless the plaintiff, in the prior ejectment suit, actually goes into possession of the premises after the recovery in the ejectment.⁶ In Stancill v. Calvert, in the Supreme Court of North Carolina,⁷ it appeared that the defendant wrongfully removed and converted a saw-mill, which constituted the subject-matter of dispute, and there was nothing of which possession could be taken. The court held that as the removal took place, and the lease expired before the trial, so that a writ of possession could not be executed, the plaintiff should have urged his right, in the ejectment

Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; Bradley v. McDaniel, 3 Jones (N. C.) Law, 128; Morgan v. Varick, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 587.

¹ Lord v. Dearing, 24 Minn. 110.

² McCrubb v. Bray, 36 Wis. 333.

³ Pugh v. Bell, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 399.

⁴ City of Apalachicola v. Apalachicola Land Co. 9 Fla. 340.

⁵ Hotchkiss v. Auburn & R. R. R. Co., 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 600. See § 661.

⁶ Stancill v. Calvert, 63 N. C. 616; Murphy v. Guion, 2 Murphy (N. C.), 238; Poston v. Henry, 11 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 301; Carson v. Smith, 1 Jones (N. C.) Law, 106; Miller v. Melchor, 13 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 439; Reid v. Stanley, 6 W. & S. (Penn.) 369; Zimmerman v. Eshbach, 15 Penn. St. 417; Nelson v. Allen, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 360; Atkison v. Henry, 80 Mo. 674.

⁷ 63 N. C. 616.

suit, to have actual instead of nominal damages, as in ordinary cases,¹ and a nonsuit was granted in the action for mesne profits. So in Bockes v. Lansing,² in the New York Court of Appeals, Rapallo, J., said: "The claim in the complaint to recover rents and profits cannot be sustained, for it appears that the plaintiffs are out of possession. They must recover possession before they are in a position to claim rents and profits." It is not necessary, however, to execute an habere to entitle a party to maintain an action for the mesne profits if the plaintiff has been let into possession by the defendant,³ for, as we have seen, it is common learning that a plaintiff may take peaceable possession without a writ.⁴ These cases illustrate the principle heretofore stated, that trespass for mesne profits is grounded upon the fiction of law, that the disseizee having been restored to the possession, is presumed to have occupied during the period of the disseizin.⁵ Where the plaintiff acquired possession of the locus in quo before trial, it was held that, having given notice of his intention so to do, he could proceed for mesne profits;⁶ and the same rule appertains in Vermont and New York where the plaintiff's title expires pending suit.⁷

§ 658. Parties defendant. — The proper and necessary party defendant, in an action for mesne profits, is the disseizor or party who has wrongfully withheld the possession, and appropriated the profits of the land. And one who comes into possession during the pendency of the action of ejectment is bound by the proceedings, and is liable for mesne profits during the period of his occupancy.⁸

¹ See Brown v. Galloway, Pet. C. C. 291; Carman v. Beam, 88 Penn. St. 319; Dodge v. Page, 49 Vt. 137; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 385; Van Rensselaer v. Owen, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 61; Wilkes v. Lion, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 334; Jackson v. Davenport, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 295.

² 74 N. Y. 437-442.

³ Calvert v. Horsfall, 4 Esp. 167. See Stearns on Real Actions, p. 410.

⁴ See § 549.

⁵ See Trulbee v. Miller, 48 Conn. 347. See, also, § 648.

⁶ Carman v. Beam, 88 Penn. St. 319.

⁷ Dodge v. Page, 49 Vt. 137. See Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 385; Van Rensselaer v. Owen, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 61; Wilkes v. Lion, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 334; Jackson v. Davenport, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 295.

⁸ Bradley v. McDaniel, 3 Jones (N. C.) Law, 128. See §§ 495, 645.

So where a defendant, who took possession after suit brought, was added in ejectment, it was held that the only necessity for adding the new tenant was to hold him for mesne profits, as he would clearly have been concluded by the judgment.¹ The judgment is conclusive of the title into whose hands soever it may subsequently pass by transmutation of the possession from the defendant in ejectment.²

Upon the death of a defendant pending an action of ejectment, if his heirs are substituted as defendants, their liability for mesne profits is limited to the rents and profits accruing during the period of their own possession after his death;³ they cannot be held liable for profits which they never received, nor can the disseizin or tort of the ancestor be predicated of the heir. In a case before the Supreme Court of North Carolina it was decided that an action for mesne profits would lie against infant defendants even though they had never been in possession except by their guardian.⁴ It is clear that the action may be brought against a corporation.⁵

In Eastwick v. Saylor,⁶ it appeared that a party voluntarily, and with plaintiff's consent, was joined as defendant in ejectment for the purpose of testing his own title, and trying the right of possession of the land. The court decided that the fact that he was thus united with the defendants, as against the title of the plaintiffs, did not render him jointly liable with the other defendants for mesne profits when he was powerless to prevent the trespasses of the other defendants, and did not aid, abet or encourage their commission. In Morris v. Beebe,⁷ in the Supreme Court of Alabama, it was said that because mesne profits and damages could be recovered in the action of ejectment the rule as to the proper parties

¹ Willingham v. Long, 47 Ga. 540.

² Merritt v. O'Neil, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 477; Jackson v. Hills, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 294; Jeffries v. Zane, 1 Miles (Penn.), 287. See Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat 296.

³ Cavender v. Smith, 8 Iowa, 360.

⁴ Molton v. Mumford, 3 Hawks (N. C.), 483.

⁵ McCready v. Guardians, &c., 9 S. & R. (Penn.) 94. See § 250.

⁶ 85 Penn. St. 15.

⁷ 54 Ala. 300.

defendant was not changed, and, at least in that State, it was never intended to authorize the introduction of defendants against whom no other judgment could be rendered than for mesne profits, while against others a judgment for both the mesne profits and the possession was pronounced. The court said that judgments at law were not capable of being so split up and divided. This question of parties defendant constitutes an impediment, additional to those already considered,¹ to the joinder and trial of the action to recover the possession of the land with the claim for mesne profits.

§ 659. Possession of defendant.—While it is the general rule that the plaintiff must furnish proof that the defendant was a disseizor, and withheld the possession, it seems that the objection to the absence of such proof must be taken in the court below. Thus in Hynes v. McDermott,² it was claimed on appeal that a judgment for the entire mesne profits had been rendered against two of the defendants, no proof having been furnished that they had occupied the entire premises. The court held that as the record did not show that the point was brought to the attention of the trial court, it was not available on appeal.³

Proof of actual occupation is unnecessary; it is sufficient if the defendant was interested in and derived profits from the premises during the period for which damages are claimed.⁴

§ 660. Co-tenants.—Trespass for mesne profits may be maintained by one co-tenant against his companion, as a necessary sequence to a judgment in ejectment.⁵ The successful co-tenant must, however, take possession of the property within a reasonable time after the recovery

¹ See §§ 236, 651.

² 82 N. Y. 41.

³ See s. p. Hudgins v. Kemp, 20 How. 53.

⁴ Gaines v. City of New Orleans, 17 Fed. Rep. 29; Adams on Eject. p. *383.

⁵ Goodtitle v. Tombs, 3 Wils. 121; Hare v. Fury, 3 Yeates (Penn.), 13; Bennet v. Bullock, 35 Penn. St. 367; Lane v. Harrold, 72 Penn. St. 267; Carpentier v. Mitchell, 29 Cal. 333; Camp v. Homesley, 11 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 212; Critchfield v. Humbert, 39 Penn. St. 427; Langendyck v. Burhans, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 461; Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 21. See Bryan v. Averett, 21 Ga. 401; Jones v. Massey, 14 S. C. 307.

in ejectment. In Hare v. Fury,¹ a month was considered a reasonable time, and the co-tenant was allowed to recover mesne profits from the date of the demise to one month after judgment. And the tenant cannot recover damages or mesne profits for the period during which the possession or occupancy was not adverse,² and when the proof of ouster is insufficient or unavailable, as the basis of a recovery in chief, it is equally unavailable as a ground for the recovery of damages resulting from it.³ If there is no proof of an ouster, except a denial of the plaintiff's title and right of entry in the answer, the plaintiff in ejectment can recover damages only from the date of the institution of the suit.⁴ The principles regulating the recovery and allowance for improvements, between tenants in common, will be presently considered,⁵ but it may be here observed that the co-tenant in possession is not chargeable with rent paid by a tenant in permanent improvements on the land, such as clearing, fencing, &c.⁶ The preponderance of authority seems to be in favor of holding that one co-tenant of real property cannot recover from his companion on account of an appropriation by the latter, to his own use, of the products of the common property, where there is no agreement to account, and the latter has not ousted or excluded the former from the enjoyment of the common property.⁷ There are cases, however, holding that a tenant in common who receives more than his share of rent may be compelled to account.⁸ The case of *Roseboom v. Roseboom*⁹ points out the distinc-

¹ 3 Yeates (Penn.), 13.

² Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484.

³ Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484. See Chap. IX.

⁴ Miller v. Myers, 46 Cal. 535.

⁵ See § 711.

⁶ Walker v. Humbert, 55 Penn. St. 407. See Reed v. Jones, 8 Wis. 421, 464.

⁷ Kean v. Connelly, 25 Minn. 222; Ragan v. McCoy, 29 Mo. 356; Dresser v. Dresser, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 300; Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 414; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 327; Henderson v. Eason, 17 Q. B. 701; Israel v. Israel, 30 Md. 120; Edsall v. Merrill, 37 N. J. Eq. 115; Jones v. Massey, 14 S. C. 308; Woolever v. Knapp, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 265; Newbold v. Smart, 67 Ala. 326; Terrell v. Cunningham, 70 Ala. 100. See contra Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 47; Shiels v. Stark, 14 Ga. 435; Hayden v. Merrill, 44 Vt. 348.

⁸ McCabe v. McCabe, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 154; Scott v. Guernsey, 48 N. Y. 108.

⁹ 15 Hun (N. Y.), 309.

tion between the co-tenant who has received and one who has only taken rents and profits; that is, between one who has collected rents from others and one who has himself been an actual occupant.¹ This is a necessary distinction, and accomplishes substantial justice. Were the rule otherwise, a co-tenant could not occupy the common property in the absence of his companion without rendering himself liable to the latter for rent, though he was perfectly willing that his companion should enjoy the property in common with him.

§ 661. Executors.—In a case which arose in Tennessee, it was said that an executor could not maintain an action for mesne profits, even though he was clothed by the will with the power to sell the lands and divide the proceeds; the rents and profits are incident to the ownership of the land, and, consequently, this remedy belongs exclusively to the person having title to the land.² Where, however, one from whom the land had been wrongfully taken died without recovering possession, it was held in New York, that all claim for damage done to the estate, and for the rents and profits, down to the time of his death, went to his executor and belonged to the personal estate;³ and, in North Carolina, where a party died, the executors were held entitled to the mesne profits and damages for waste, up to the date of her death; while those which accrued subsequently, and up to the time when the premises were vacated by defendant, went to the heirs and devisees.⁴ Under the early procedure, as we have seen, the claim for mesne profits, being founded upon a tort, and enforced

¹ See McCabe v. McCabe, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 155; Joslyn v. Joslyn, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 389; Ragan v. McCoy, 29 Mo. 367; Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 419; Henderson v. Eason, 17 Q. B. 718; Howard v. Throckmorton, 59 Cal. 79. See § 621a.

² Brown v. McCloud, 3 Head (Tenn.), 280.

³ Hotchkiss v. Auburn & R. R. Co., 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 600. See Stall v. Wilbur, 77 N. Y. 158; N. Y. Code Civ. Pro. § 1523. In Lent v. Howard, 89 N. Y. 177, Andrews, Ch. J., said, "The remedy of an executor to recover the intermediate rents and profits of land descended to the heir subject to an immediate and imperative power of sale and a gift of the proceeds to other persons, would seem to be in equity only." Rents accruing prior to lessor's death belong to the personal representatives, those accruing after death to the heir or devisee. Bloodworth v. Stevens, 51 Miss. 475; Sparhawk v. Allen, 25 N. H. 261; Stinson v. Stinson, 38 Me. 593; Crane v. Guthrie, 47 Iowa, 542.

⁴ King v. Little, 77 N. C. 138. See Blight v. Ewing, 26 Penn. St. 135; Cobb v. Biddle, 14 Penn. St. 444.

by an action of trespass, died with the person.¹ This is now generally changed by statute. Where the disseizee dies his personal representatives are usually entitled to the mesne profits up to the date of his death, and where the disseizor dies the claim may, in some States, be asserted against his personal representatives.²

§ 662. Recovery of nominal damages not a bar.—The recovery of nominal damages, in the action of ejectment, is not a bar to an action for the actual damages and mesne profits. Nominal damages are necessary only to entitle the plaintiff to recover costs in the ejectment and to establish title, and are not given in satisfaction of the actual damages and mesne profits which constitute an independent cause of action.³

§ 663. For what periods mesne profits are recoverable.—The claim for mesne profits being founded upon a tort the plaintiff is required to make specific proof of his case. The defendant will not be held liable for mesne profits taken prior to his own entry, by those under whom he claims title,⁴ but can be charged only for the rents and profits accruing during the time he was actually in possession of the disputed lands, in the character of a disseizor.⁵ And a plaintiff in ejectment recovers mesne profits only from the time his right to the possession accrued. Hence, an execution purchaser can have judgment for mesne profits from the date of the sheriff's deed.⁶ In other words, damages and mesne profits can only be computed from the time when the title was cast on the plaintiff.⁷

§ 664. Damages assessed down to day of trial.—The damages should be assessed down to the day of trial, upon the same principle that interest is recovered to that time in an action upon a money demand. The profits in one

¹ See § 648.

² See Hotchkiss v. Auburn & R. R. Co., 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 600; Rhodes v. Crutchfield, 7 Lea (Tenn.), 518.

³ See Van Alen v. Rogers, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 281; Davis v. Delpit, 25 Miss. 445; Burr v. Woodrow, 1 Bush (Ky.), 602.

⁴ Gardner v. Granniss, 57 Ga. 539.

⁵ Jacks v. Dyer, 31 Ark. 334.

⁶ Clark v. Byreau, 14 Cal. 634.

⁷ Brewster v. Buckholts, 3 Ala. 20.

case, and the interest in the other, are but the incidents of the cause of action.¹

§ 665. Measure of damages.—In Morrison v. Robinson,² the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania said: “Trespasses to personal property are usually very easily measured by the value of the property at the time it was taken or destroyed, or by the degree of impairment of its value. But it is not so with real property withheld from the rightful owner; for it is entirely different in its character. Generally, land is not exclusively adapted to any one special use, like most articles of personal property, but may be turned to all imaginable uses, and its condition indefinitely altered at the pleasure of its occupant. Out of these changes of use and condition often arise very complicated questions, in the estimation of damages.” The general rule is that the plaintiff recovers the annual value of the land from the time of the accruing of his title.³ The right to interest will be considered presently. The authorities show that the rule as to damages, in an action of ejectment, was very uncertain at common law.⁴ Mr. Adams says: ⁵ “The jury are not confined, in their verdict, to the mere rent of the premises, although the action is said to be brought to recover the rents and profits of the estate, but may give such extra damages as they may think the particular circumstances of the case may demand.” In Goodtitle v. Tombs,⁶ Gould, J., said: “The plaintiff in this case is not confined to the very mesne profits only, but he may recover for his trouble, &c. I have known four times the value of the mesne profits given by a jury in this sort of action of trespass; if it were not to be so sometimes, complete justice could not be done to the party injured.” In the same case, Chief Justice Wil-

¹ McCrubb v. Bray, 36 Wis. 333. See Bell v. Medford, 57 Miss. 31; Whissenhunt v. Jones, 78 N. C. 361; Dawson v. McGill, 4 Whart. (Penn.) 230; New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624; Love v. Shartzer, 31 Cal. 487; Dean v. Tucker, 58 Miss. 487; Ringhouse v. Keener, 63 Ill. 230.

² 31 Penn. St. 456.

³ Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. I, p. 251 [124]. See New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624, 632; Vandevoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 639-647.

⁴ See Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382-394.

⁵ Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 459 [*391].

⁶ 3 Wils. 118-121.

not added; "Damages are not confined to the mere rent of the premises; but the jury may give more if they please." In Goodtitle v. North,¹ it was held that bankruptcy was not a plea in bar to an action of trespass for mesne profits, as the damages were unascertained. Buller, J., said: "The damages here are as uncertain as in an action of assault." Lord Mansfield remarked: "The plaintiff goes for the whole damages occasioned by the tort, and when damages are uncertain, they cannot be proved under a commission of bankruptcy." Ashhurst, J., added: "The plaintiff goes for a compensation in damages, the amount of which is uncertain, and cannot be sworn to before the commissioners, but must be ascertained by a jury upon all the circumstances." In Dewey v. Osborn,² the court said: "The damages in that action [mesne profits] are not limited to the rent. Extra damages may be given." "As to the amount of damages," said Washington, J., "the jury are the only proper judges; there is no general rule, and the quantum depends on the circumstances of the case."³ In Hanna v. Phillips,⁴ on the other hand, where the judge charged the jury that they were not to be limited or confined in estimating a verdict to the mere rent of the premises, but might give such extra damages as they considered the particular circumstances of the case demanded, this was held to be error, on the ground that the jury should have been limited by the annual rent, or by some other definite standard. In *Larwell v. Stevens*⁵ it is held that "these damages consist of the value of the property by way of rents during the time the possession has been withheld." In Bullock v. Wilson,⁶ the court charged that the damages were the profits which the defendant had derived from the land. This was held to be error, as the plaintiff was entitled to recover the damages which he had sustained by reason of being kept out of the possession, and these were never increased or diminished by the profits acquired by the defendant from his occu-

¹ 2 Doug. 584.

² Brown v. Galloway, Pet. C. C. 291.

³ 12 Fed. Rep. 559; s. c. 2 McCra. 311.

⁴ 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 329, 338.

⁵ 1 Grant (Penn.), 253.

⁶ 3 Port. (Ala.) 382.

pancy. It is clear, as will presently be shown, that the defendant is answerable for all actual damage, waste, and injury to the premises, as well as mesne profits.¹ The owner should be entitled to recover in the action for mesne profits "whatever, by the act of the wrong-doer, he has been compelled to pay in order to obtain a restoration of his property."² Mr. Sedgwick says:³ "It is plain that the measure of compensation, which we are now considering, has been involved in confusion by the technical character of our forms of action. 'The dicta on the subject,' says Gibson, C. J., in Pennsylvania, 'seem to have been predicated by judges who had no precise idea of it; for they have not defined it by any landmarks.'⁴ The action of trespass being one of tort, admits of any evidence in aggravation; and, therefore, in one sense, it is correct to say, that the damages in this proceeding are entirely at large and under the control of the jury. But, on the other hand, there is nothing necessarily in the action of the nature of a trespass. The property may have been withheld, and the rents received, in entire good faith. In this case the allegations of force, etc., are purely fictitious; and it certainly never would be tolerated on such facts, that the jury should give any damages beyond the actual value of the income." The authority of the early cases which laid down the principle that the jury might determine the amount of damages and mesne profits in ejectment, without any practical guide or limitation in considering the evidence, has been very greatly impaired and restricted by modern decisions and legislation. The nature of the subject-matter of contention is such as to practically render specific evidence of the actual loss possible. In this respect, the remedy for mesne profits differs essentially from actions of assault, libel or slander, or actions of pure tort. Hence, in Alexander v. Herr,⁵ cited by Mr.

¹ Huston v. Wickersham, 2 W. & S. (Penn.) 308. See Goodtitle v. Tombs, 3 Wils. 118-121; Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawyer, 523. But see Emrich v. Ireland, 55 Miss. 390.

² Doe v. Perkins, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 200.

³ Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. I, p. 260.

⁴ Alexander v. Herr, 11 Penn. St. 537.

⁵ 11 Penn. St. 537.

Sedgwick, where the jury were allowed to assess such other damages as they might think the plaintiff entitled to recover, the verdict was set aside. The court said: "There are dicta that a jury may give whatever they may think reasonable; surely no court would subject a party to a blind and an unbridled discretion."¹ In Kille v. Ege,² the rule is stated to be that the plaintiff may recover for the fair rent or yearly value of the premises, and for injury done thereto.³ In Morrison v. Robinson,⁴ the rule is laid down that "compensation is the purpose of the action." In Campbell v. Brown,⁵ the damages were said to be not the actual yield or income of the property, but the fair annual value if prudently and judiciously managed. In Cutter v. Waddingham,⁶ the court say: "The actual annual value of the property detained, with interest thereon, is the measure of damage in ejectment." In Averett v. Brady,⁷ it was said that the plaintiff must prove "the value of the mesne profits, to be estimated by the amount of the crops taken, or by the fair annual value of the premises." In Bolling v. Lersner,⁸ the plaintiff was allowed to recover the annual value of the lands "in the hands of a prudent and discreet tenant, upon a judicious system of husbandry."⁹ The Massachusetts statute is designed to adjust the rights of both parties as to damages and mesne profits "upon equitable principles." The measure is "the clear annual value of the premises" and any damage for waste, and permits the tenant to offset taxes, expenses of collecting the rents and the value of improvements.¹⁰ This rule excludes the idea that the demandant "can recover consequential dam-

¹ Alexander v. Herr, 11 Pa. St. 539.

² 82 Penn. St. 107, 112.

³ See Huston v. Wickersham, 2 W. & S. (Penn.) 308.

⁴ 31 Penn. St. 456.

⁵ 2 Woods, 349.

⁶ 33 Mo. 269-286.

⁷ 20 Ga. 523-527. See Phillips on Evidence, vol. IV, p. 315.

⁸ 26 Gratt. (Va.) 36-58. See Harkness v. McIntire, 76 Me. 202; Hawkins v. Brown, 80 Ky. 186.

⁹ See Woodbury v. Swan, 59 N. H. 516.

¹⁰ Raymond v. Andrews, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 265.

ages for alleged injury to his other land adjoining the premises."¹

These cases show clearly that the damages and mesne profits, for which a disseizor can be held accountable, are now limited to strict compensation, and are no longer at large, or in the absolute discretion of the jury. Precise proof of value, injury, etc., must be furnished; the items of the loss and damage must be shown, and the verdict should conform to and reflect the details of the evidence.² The action, as we have said, is now largely treated as if it were one of contract or for use and occupation. The nature of the injury to be redressed, the alterations in the remedy, and the fact that the disseizor, in the majority of cases, withholds the lands under a belief of title in himself, renders it inadvisable in most cases to attempt to punish the possessor by awarding exemplary damages in the action.³

§ 666. Rule in New York.—In Holmes v. Davis,⁴ the measure of damages, in the action for mesne profits, is held to be that which would obtain in an action of assumpsit for use and occupation; and it was held that under the Revised Statutes of that State, the compensation is to be adjusted as upon contract, and not upon the footing of a tort. In Low v. Purdy,⁵ it was said that the compensation was to be adjusted as upon a contract for rent. In the later case of Vandevoort v. Gould,⁶ the rule is recognized that the measure of damages is that which would obtain in assumpsit for use and occupation, and the court say further: "The defendant's possession was wrongful, and the claim for damages for this wrong was in the nature of a claim for a tort. The question was, how much was the plaintiff damaged on the day of the trial by the defendant's wrongful act, which was continuous to that period. And the same considerations of convenience and propriety should here control, as in other cases where a recovery in one action is permitted in order to prevent unnecessary litiga-

¹ McMahan v. Bowe, 114 Mass. 148.

² See § 674.

³ 19 N. Y. 488.

⁴ 36 N. Y. 639-647.

⁵ See § 668a.

⁶ 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 422.

tion by multiplicity of suits. . . . The allowance of interest or the fair annual value of the use and occupation of the premises during the period they were wrongfully withheld, was a proper subject for the consideration of the jury in determining the amount of damages which the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Such damages are generally designated mesne profits. That is to say, what the premises were reasonably worth annually, with the interest to the time of the trial. Less than this would not give the plaintiff full and complete indemnity for the injury to his rights."¹

§ 667. Interest on the value of the fee.—In Magwire v. Labeaume, in the St. Louis Court of Appeals,² it appeared that a real estate expert, examined as a witness for the plaintiff, had given his opinion as to the rental value of the lot in suit, and upon cross-examination had stated that he computed a rate of interest annually upon what he believed to be the value of the fee. The court said: "The reason was a bad one. The jury are not allowed to arrive at the rental value of unimproved real estate by such a process of calculation. As the witness was an expert, and had, it must be supposed, other means of arriving at the rental value, the court, we think, committed no error in letting the testimony go to the jury for what it was worth."

Evidence of the value of the narrow strip of land in dispute was excluded in Hunt v. Pond.³

§ 668. Damages for waste and trespass.—Damages for waste may be included in the recovery in an action for mesne profits, if counted for and demanded in the declaration,⁴ and damages for actual injuries to the premises;⁵ so may damages for trespasses committed upon the

¹ See Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382; New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624.

² 7 Mo. App. 179-185.

³ 67 Ga. 581.

⁴ Emrich v. Ireland, 55 Miss. 390; Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456; Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawyer, 523; Alsop v. Peck, 2 Root (Conn.), 224; Lee v. Bowman, 55 Mo. 400. Where the defendant is a wilful trespasser, he is liable for the full value of timber cut without deducting expenses, but where the trespass is merely a mistake he may deduct the added value. Wooden Ware Co. v. United States, 106 U. S. 432.

⁵ Huston v. Wickersham, 2 W. & S. (Penn.) 308; Cooch v. Geery, 3 Harr. (Del.) 423; Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73.

land, such as cutting or destroying timber, pulling down fences, and destroying the growing crops.¹ Hence a recovery for mesne profits is a bar to trespass quare clausum fregit.² In Lippett v. Kelley,³ in the Supreme Court of Vermont, it was held that the plaintiff, in addition to mesne profits, might recover damages resulting from building and grading a road across the premises, and depositing stones and dirt thereon, whereby the land was injured and depreciated in value, provided the claims for such damages were properly alleged in the declaration.⁴ The practice, however, is not uniform. Thus in Indiana, damages for waste or injury to the freehold are not an incident to the action for mesne profits, and should not be joined with the claim therefor in the action of ejectment.⁵ And in Pacquette v. Pickness,⁶ the court held that where mesne profits were demanded in an ejectment, nothing more could be recovered than the value of the use and occupation of the premises, and that for injuries to the freehold a separate action could be maintained. The damages for waste and injuries ought properly to be recovered in the judgment for rents and profits, and the cases holding otherwise are exceptional, and cannot be regarded as embodying a salutary rule of procedure. It may be here observed that, in equity, interest should be allowed on damages caused by depreciation from waste, from the time when the plaintiff was let into possession to the date of the assessment or report.⁷ The diminished value of the land is not the exclusive measure of relief for an injury in the nature of waste committed by a wrong-doer on the land of another,

¹ Hillman v. Baumbach, 21 Tex. 203; Bonner v. Wiggins, 52 Tex. 125. See Barton Coal Co. v. Cox, 39 Md. 1.

² Cunningham v. Morris, 19 Ga. 583. See Morgan v. Varick, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 587; Kuhns v. Bowman, 91 Penn. St. 504.

³ 46 Vt. 516-523. See Whitledge v. Wait, Sneed (Ky.), 335.

⁴ See Strong v. Garfield, 10 Vt. 502; Walker v. Hitchcock, 19 Vt. 634.

⁵ Bottorff v. Wise, 53 Ind. 32; Woodruff v. Garner, 27 Ind. 4-8.

⁶ 19 Wis. 219.

⁷ Worrall v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137. Treble damages are allowed in New York for waste. See Rutherford v. Aiken, 3 T. & C. (N. Y.) 60. Under the practice in Virginia, where there is a claim for mesne profits and damages for waste, and also a claim on the part of the defendant for improvements, the various claims must all be passed upon by the same jury. Goodwyn v. Myers, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 336. See Malone v. Stretch, 69 Mo. 25. See, also, § 670.

but the value of the materials taken therefrom may be recovered.¹

§ 668a. Exemplary damages.—Mr. Sedgwick,² after observing that the action of trespass, being one of tort, admits of any evidence in aggravation, and the damages are under the control of the jury, says: “There is nothing necessarily in the action of the nature of a trespass. The property may have been withheld, and the rents received, in entire good faith. In this case the allegations of force, etc., are purely fictitious; and it certainly never would be tolerated, on such facts, that the jury should give any damages beyond the actual value of the income. It may then be said, as long as the technical form of action is maintained, that where circumstances of malicious aggravation are proved, such, for instance, as a willful holding for the purpose of oppression, the jury may give vindictive or exemplary damages; but that where no such facts are shown, they are limited to the actual annual value of the property, with interest thereon, and the costs of the ejectment.”³ No authorities are cited, and the modern cases seem to be singularly silent concerning exemplary damages in these actions in our modern procedure. The difficulties attendant upon recovering such damages will be at once apparent. The recovery is based in some cases upon contract and not upon the footing of a tort.⁴ An effort has been made in many States to regulate the damages by definite rules, and not to leave the computation solely to the jury, as in cases of slander or assault. In some of the modern cases the elements of damage are specified, and no reference is made to exemplary damages. Can these be recovered at the present time in cases of a willful withholding of the property for purposes of oppression? The recovery is often treated as one in contract as distinguished from tort, while rules specifying with precision the damages to be allowed have been carefully formulated. This might seem to imply that a recovery of “smart money”

¹ Worrall v. Munn, 53 N. Y. 185.

² See Sedgwick on Damages, 7th ed. vol. 1, p. 260.

³ Compare Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 28.

⁴ See Holmes v. Davis, 19 N. Y. 488; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 394. See, also, §§ 665, 666.

could no longer be obtained. Yet in *Haggin v. Clark*¹ the court say that there are cases of evident malice in which extra damages, more than the rental value, will not be disturbed. In *McGary v. City of Lafayette*² the court, in the assessment of damages, lay great weight upon the vexatious and incidental wrongs which have been established, and say "that the jury had a right to take into consideration the violent and illegal proceedings of the officers of the corporation." Exemplary damages are allowable in an action of trespass on land³ where it is willful. As a disseizin may be characterized as an enlarged trespass, destroying absolutely instead of disturbing the owners' possession, the conclusion would seem to result that a malicious occupancy and withholding of land from the true owner justified an award of exemplary damages against the offender. That the question is at the present time not free from doubt will be admitted. Advocates of vindictive or punitive damages will accord a ready assent to the retention of this element of recovery in land litigations as a means of protection to the public peace and an admonition to others. The wrongful occupant, if exempted from these damages, will eagerly avail himself of the benefits of the rule, retain the possession, and protract the controversy, knowing that ultimately he will be treated merely as a hostile tenant, liable only for the fair annual value of the property withheld and the costs.

§ 669. Damages after judgment.—A lessor in an action of ejectment may bring trespass quare clausum fregit against the defendant, or his servants, for an injury done to the freehold intermediate the verdict and habere facias possessionem executed.⁴

¹ 51 Cal. 115.

² 4 La. Ann. 440. See Gaines v. City of New Orleans, 17 Fed. Rep. 35.

³ Merest v. Harvey, 5 Taunt. 442; Williams v. Currie, 1 C. B. 841; Ames v. Hilton, 70 Me. 36; Wild v. Holt, 9 M. & W. 672; Huftalin v. Misner, 70 Ill. 55; Martin v. Porter, 5 M. & W. 352; Perkins v. Towle, 43 N. H. 220; Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 25; Parker v. Shackelford, 61 Mo. 68; Ellsworth v. Potter, 41 Vt. 685; Bonsall v. McKay, 1 Houst. (Del.) 520; Best v. Allen, 30 Ill. 30; Hedgepeth v. Robertson, 18 Tex. 858; Champion v. Vincent, 20 Tex. 811; Reeder v. Purdy, 41 Ill. 279.

⁴ Dewey v. Osborn, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 329. See Cummings v. M'Gehee, 9 Port. (Ala.) 349.

§ 670. Interest on mesne profits.—The rule that interest cannot be allowed upon unliquidated demands has been greatly modified by the modern authorities. In Parrott v. The Knickerbocker Ice Company,¹ Rapallo, J., said: “In cases of trover, replevin and trespass, interest on the value of property unlawfully taken, or converted, is allowed by way of damages, for the purpose of complete indemnity of the party injured, and it is difficult to see why, on the same principle, interest on the value of property lost or destroyed, by the wrongful or negligent act of another, may not be included in the damages,”² As the damages in the action for mesne profits must, under the modern cases, be proved by precise evidence of value, etc., and, as we have seen, are usually limited to strict compensation, the early rule as to the non-allowance of interest on unliquidated demands has ceased to have any practical bearing on the question. Besides this, the rents and profits have usually a fixed value, and come within the rule allowing interest on the recovery in cases where the subject-matter has a market value. In general, in actions ex delicto, it is in the discretion of the jury whether to allow interest by way of damages or not,³ and it is not given by the court as matter of law, but is allowed or withheld by the jury in their discretion.⁴ In Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid,⁵ the court lays down the general rule as follows: “Where money has been lent, advanced or expended, by request, and under an agreement to pay at a specific time, or where it has been had and received under a like agreement, then

¹ 46 N. Y. 361.

² See Whitehall Transp. Co. v. N. J. Steamboat Co., 51 N. Y. 369; Brown v. Southwestern R. R. Co., 36 Ga. 377; Goddard v. Foster, 17 Wall. 124; Lindsey v. Danville, 46 Vt. 144. “On principle, we can see no reason for distinguishing between liquidated and unliquidated demands. If interest is given as damages, it should be given to compensate the plaintiff and not to punish the defendant, and the fact that the amount is unliquidated cannot lessen the plaintiff’s damages. If anything is due him he has a right to have it paid upon demand, and he loses the interest upon the amount, as much where that amount is unknown as where it is known.” Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. II, p. 180, note iii.

³ Walrath v. Redfield, 18 N. Y. 457. Though the point was not directly presented for consideration, the Court of Appeals in a recent case intimate a determination not to vary this rule. Duryee v. Mayor &c., of N. Y., 96 N. Y. 477, 499.

⁴ Richmond v. Bronson, 5 Denio (N. Y.), 55. See Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 616.

⁵ 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 616.

the allowance of interest may be safely referred to the principle of an implied contract to pay interest on default. . . . But where no time of payment is fixed, and where the duty to pay arises from the relative situation of the parties, it seems that it should be referred to a jury to determine whether damages shall be given by an allowance of interest." As damages for mesne profits are to be assessed down to the day of trial,¹ or judgment,² so also the interest, which is but a portion of the damages, should be allowed down to the same time, in order to give the plaintiff full indemnity for the injury to his rights.³ In Jackson v. Wood,⁴ Nelson, J., said: "As rents in the city of New York, where these premises are situate, are payable at the usual quarter days (1 R. S. 736), I think the referees, in ascertaining the value of the mesne profits, were warranted in adding to the annual rent the interest quarterly. So much the plaintiff has lost, and the defendant enjoyed, by means of the wrongful possession."⁵ So interest is recoverable on the annual value of the premises from year to year.⁶ Where a vendee of land was evicted, it was held that he could recover against his vendor only the value of the land at the time of the purchase, with interest for so much time as he had been compelled to pay mesne profits.⁷ So where the evicted vendee had paid no mesne profits to the true owner, it was held that such mesne profits, and the interest on the purchase money, were equivalents to each other, and when one was released the other could not be recovered.⁸ The fact that the plaintiffs and defendants

¹ McCruhb v. Bray, 36 Wis. 333; Whissenhunt v. Jones, 78 N. C. 361; New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624; Love v. Shartzler, 31 Cal. 487; Dean v. Tucker, 58 Miss. 487. See § 664.

² Harrington v. Conolly, 116 Mass. 69.

³ Vandevoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 647; New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624; Bolling v. Lersner, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 36.

⁴ 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 443.

⁵ See Drexel v. Man, 2 Penn. St. 276; Sopp v. Winpenny, 68 Penn. St. 78.

⁶ Low v. Purdy, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 422. See Worrall v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137.

⁷ Fernander v. Dunn, 19 Ga. 497. See Staats v. Ten Eyck, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 111; Kerley v. Richardson, 17 Ga. 602; Caulkins v. Harris, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 324; Bennet v. Jenkins, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 50. See further, Clark v. Parr, 14 Ohio, 118; Pitcher v. Livingston, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; Guthrie v. Pugsley, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 125; Wager v. Schuyler, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 553.

⁸ White v. Tucker, 52 Miss. 145. See Rawle on Covenant for Title, p. 93 et seq.;

are tenants in common makes no exception to the general rule, as to the allowance of damages and interest,¹ and where one tenant in common is in possession, he must pay interest to his co-tenants upon the rents found to be due for each year, from the end of such year until payment.²

§ 671. Judgment in ejectment conclusive as to title.—The recovery in ejectment is conclusive evidence of the title of the plaintiff from the date of the demise laid in the declaration against the defendant and his servants, who will not be allowed to show title in another in bar of an action of trespass.³ This rule is salutary; the parties have had their day in court upon the question of title. If the plaintiff claims mesne profits for a period prior to the demise in the declaration, the title is open for investigation. A judgment by default is as effectual as a judgment on a verdict,⁴ and damages may be awarded on default.⁵

The judgment does not establish the value of the mesne profits; as to these the plaintiff must make proof.

§ 672. Judgment not conclusive as to length of defendant's occupation.—In Miller v. Henry,⁶ in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, it was declared to be well settled that the judgment in ejectment was not conclusive evidence as to the length of time the defendant had been in possession, and such is undoubtedly the general rule. The length of the occupancy is not in issue in the ejectment.

§ 673. When judgment not conclusive.—In Thompson v. Clark,⁷ it appeared that the plaintiff had recovered the Patterson v. Stewart, 6 W. & S. (Penn.) 527; Flint v. Steadman, 36 Vt. 210; Guthrie v. Pugsley, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 125.

¹ Cutter v. Waddingham, 33 Mo. 269.

² Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 21. As to when interest will not be allowed on rents, see Allen v. Smith, 63 Mo. 103.

³ Dewey v. Osborn, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 329; Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. 280; Baron v. Abeel, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 482; Kuhns v. Bowman, 91 Penn. St. 504; Drexel v. Man, 2 Penn. St. 271; Man v. Drexel, 2 Penn. St. 202; Postens v. Postens, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 182; Myers v. Sanders, 8 Dana (Ky.) 65; Graves v. Joice, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 261; Brewer v. Beckwith, 35 Miss. 467; Leland v. Tousey, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 328; Den v. McShane, 13 N. J. Law, 35.

⁴ Aslin v. Parkin, 2 Burr. 665.

⁵ Dimick v. Campbell, 31 Cal. 238.

⁶ 84 Penn. St. 33. See Bailey v. Fairplay, 6 Binn. (Penn.) 450; Sopp v. Winpenny, 68 Penn. St. 78; Huston v. Wickersham, 2 W. & S. (Penn.) 308.

⁷ 4 Hun (N. Y.), 164.

lands in ejectment against B., and had been put in possession. Plaintiff then brought this action against C. for rents and profits. It appeared that C. rented from one N., not from B., the defendant in ejectment. Plaintiff proved the judgment in ejectment against B., and the filing of a lis pendens, and then rested. The court granted a nonsuit, and it was held on appeal that the nonsuit was properly granted, as the lis pendens only affected the defendant and those claiming under him, and the judgment was conclusive only upon the parties and their privies, and as the defendant in this action did not rent from B., the defendant in ejectment, or claim under him, the judgment was not binding upon or evidence against him.¹

§ 674. Evidence as to mesne profits.—A verdict for mesne profits cannot of course be upheld when there is no evidence to sustain the finding.² There must be proof of the amount of the mesne profits³ or of the value.⁴ And where there was no conflict of evidence as to the rental value of the land, and the jury, having found for the plaintiff for the land, failed to bring in any verdict for the damages, the judgment was reversed on the ground that it did not conform to the uncontradicted testimony.⁵ Evidence of the rent of preceding years is competent.⁶ These cases illustrate the principle already stated that the damages are usually limited to compensation, and the recovery is largely based upon contract, and the assessment is not left to the absolute discretion of the jury.

§ 675. Income from saw-mill and site.—In ejectment to recover a mill site having a steam saw-mill upon it, the

¹ See Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. 280-296.

² Brown v. Colson, 41 Ga. 42.

³ Eaton v. Freeman, 58 Ga. 129.

⁴ Mooring v. Campbell, 47 Tex. 37; Ive v. Scott, 9 Dowl. 993.

⁵ Duncan v. Jackson, 16 Fla. 338. In Gill v. Gill, 37 Penn. St. 312-314, in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, it was held that any attempt to settle, in an action of ejectment, the damages due from one party to the other for breach of a contract, which was the foundation of no title, was dangerous and impracticable.

⁶ Fogg v. Hill, 21 Me. 529. Compare Williams v. Sherman, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 109. Mr. Cole says: "It is generally necessary for the plaintiff to prove—1. His own title. 2. The defendant's possession for the period in respect whereof mesne profits, &c., are claimed. 3. The annual value of the premises, or rather the value of the possession during the defendant's wrongful occupation. 4. The special damage (if any). 5. The costs of the ejectment." Cole on Ejectment, 640.

mesne profits may embrace the rent of the mill and of the site as one establishment, and the whole may be treated as realty in estimating the plaintiff's damages. The court said: "Whatever would be rent as between landlord and tenant, is mesne profits as between the parties in ejectment."¹

§ 676. Income from ferry.—So in an action for the mesne profits of a ferry landing in Georgia, the receipts of the ferry, deducting the expenses of fitting it up and running it, were held to be the amount properly recoverable.² So in the Supreme Court of Texas it was held that the net profits of a ferry were properly assessed, as part of the damages sustained by the detention of the land in connection with which the ferry was operated.³ It has been shown that though ejectment will not lie for a right or privilege which is a mere incorporeal hereditament, yet when an ejectment is brought for lands, the rights and privileges appurtenant to the lands may be recovered therewith.⁴ The cases just considered tend to establish the principle that the income from incorporeal rights, which are appurtenant to the land, may be considered in estimating the damages and mesne profits when the land itself is recovered.

§ 677. Rulcs as to ore and mines.—In Ege v. Kille,⁵ it appeared that the defendants were bona fide occupants under color of title, and had expended large sums of money in developing the mines upon the property and making permanent improvements of great value. It was held that they should be charged only with the value in place of the ore removed.⁶ The court said, that "Ore leave, or the right to dig and take ore, can have no general market value." The value of ore in place is to be ascertained by deducting the cost of mining, cleansing, and delivering the ore in market from its market value when delivered—the difference being its value in place.⁷

¹ Morris v. Tinker, 60 Ga. 466.

² Averett v. Brady, 20 Ga. 523.

³ Dunlap v. Yoakum, 18 Tex. 582.

⁴ See § 102.

⁵ 84 Penn. St. 333.

⁶ See Hardie v. Young, 53 Penn. St. 176; Forsyth v. Wells, 41 Penn. St. 291.

⁷ See Clowser v. Joplin Mining Co. 4 Dillon, 469, note; Coleman's Appeal, 62 Penn. St. 278; Barton Coal Co. v. Cox, 39 Md. 1.

§ 678. Income from improvements.—An important question presents itself in cases where the defendant has occupied the land in good faith, under claim and color of title, as to whether or not, in estimating the mesne profits, he shall be charged with the increase of rents and profits of the land resulting from the improvements which he has placed upon it, or, in other words, with the income from the improvements. Thus in Nixon v. Porter,¹ it appeared that the defendant in ejectment had made improvements which had been destroyed by casualty, so that no permanent value was imparted by them to the land, and he was therefore entitled to no compensation for them. The court held that he was not liable for the enhanced rent of the premises during the existence of the improvements. And where the court found that there would have been no rents from the locus in quo without the improvements made thereon by the occupants, it was held to be error to charge such occupants with rents which were but the results of their own labor.² In Jackson v. Loomis,³ Savage, J., said: "Most clearly the defendant should not be compelled to pay an enhanced rent in consequence of his own improvements." So in Wisconsin, in estimating the value of the use of the premises in controversy, the value of the use of the improvements made by the defendant is to be excluded.⁴ Especially should the defendant not be charged with the income from improvements, in estimating mesne profits, where he is so situated as not to be entitled to claim allowance for his expenditures in making the improvements;⁵ and if the mesne profits are to include the income from the improvements, then it would seem but fair that the occupant should be allowed interest on his expenditures, instead of being awarded their value at the time of the trial. It has been held in Kentucky that if a bona fide occupant is allowed prime costs for his im-

¹ 38 Miss. 401.

² Adkins v. Hudson, 19 Ind. 392; Neale v. Hagthorp, 3 Bland (Md.), 551-591. See Moore v. Cable, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 385; Ewing v. Handley, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 347-371; Hawkins v. King, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 162.

³ 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 168.

⁴ Davis v. Louk, 30 Wis. 308.

⁵ Tatum v. McLellan, 56 Miss. 352.

provements, then he should pay the increase of income from the time of making them.¹ In Miller v. Ingram,² in the Supreme Court of Mississippi, the court decided that, under the code of that State,³ the plaintiff in ejectment was entitled to the rent of the property as improved by the defendant. The reason for this innovation is not apparent. In Texas, it was said that the established rule had been to allow the successful claimant for rents on the property as it was found at the time the action was commenced, or during the litigation. The court said that it would not be inequitable if the courts and juries, in estimating rents and profits, and value of improvements, were to take into consideration the fact that the occupant had lost his interest on the money expended in making improvements, and they considered that it would be in accordance with correct rules of equity for the legislature to require this to be done.⁴ In *Dungan v. Von Puhl*⁵ the Supreme Court of Iowa said: "The owner is entitled to rents and profits according to the value of the land, for the purpose to which it is devoted by the occupant. The occupant is to pay what the use of the land is worth to him. In such a rule we think there will nothing be found inequitable. It does not require the occupant to pay rent on improvements made by himself. But it does require him to pay rent according to the increased adaptation of the land for the purpose for which it is used, though such adaptation has been brought about by the occupant's own labor." The estimate should be made upon all the land brought into a state of cultivation by him, and suitable for the raising of crops or for farming purposes; but no rent is to be charged for the use of buildings or farm fixtures erected by the occupant.⁶

The principle of law which prohibits the true owner from recovering, as mesne profits, the increase of income

¹ Bell v. Barnet, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 517.

² 56 Miss. 510. S. P. Phillips v. Chamberlain, 61 Miss. 748.

³ Code of Miss. 1871, § 1557.

⁴ Evetts v. Tendick, 44 Tex. 570.

⁵ 8 Iowa, 263.

⁶ See, also, Wolcott v. Townsend, 49 Iowa, 456.

resulting from improvements made by the occupant, is manifestly just and equitable. It cannot be said that the additional profits are taken from the owner's land; on the contrary, they spring from practically an independent source. While it is true that the improvements pass to the owner by a recovery in ejectment, yet they are the property of the occupant until set off against mesne profits, or in some States till after their value is ascertained, and the occupant's lien upon the land therefor is satisfied.¹ The strongest consideration to be urged against this policy of the law is the practical difficulty, often experienced, of separating the income of the improvements from the income of the land in its unimproved state.

§ 679. Costs.—Usually the taxable costs of the action of ejectment, if not recovered in the action itself, can be proved in the action for mesne profits, and included in the judgment in that action.² It was held, in an early case in New Jersey, that all the plaintiff's necessary expenses in the ejectment action, including counsel fees, might be included in the damages.³ This question came up in Tennessee, in the case of White v. Clack,⁴ in which it appeared that the court, at the trial, had instructed the jury that, in addition to the mesne profits, the plaintiff was entitled to recover such reasonable counsel fees as had been paid in the prosecution of the action of ejectment. The court said that notwithstanding the discrepancy in the decisions, the established doctrine seemed to be that the plaintiff could recover not only the reasonable value of the rents and profits, but also the costs of the ejectment, and held that this meant "the legal and proper costs taxed in the action of ejectment, not including counsel fees, or other expenses incurred by the plaintiff in the prosecution of the suit."⁵ This is the general rule. The costs of the eject-

¹ Quoted in Dean v. Feely, 69 Ga. 822.

² Baron v. Aberl, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 482; Doe v. Perkins, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 198; White v. Clack, 2 Swan (Tenn.), 230; Doe v. Huddart, 2 Cr. M. & R. 316.

³ Denn v. Delatouche v. Chubb, 1 N. J. L. 466.

⁴ 2 Swan (Tenn.), 230.

⁵ See Aslin v. Parkin, 2 Burr, 665; Symonds v. Page, 1 Cr. & J. 29; Brooke v.

ment suit, however, properly constitute no part of the damage recoverable against those who were not parties to that suit.¹

§ 680. Defenses.—In trespass for mesne profits, in Pennsylvania, brought against two defendants, one paid a sum in settlement, and the action was discontinued as to him. It was held that the other was not thereby discharged;² nor, as we have seen, is the defendant relieved by the fact that he has paid rent to the disseizor as landlord.³ If the defendant abandons the possession during the pendency of the suit, he is of course not liable for mesne profits which subsequently accrued,⁴ unless the abandonment is secret.

§ 681. Bankruptcy of defendant.—The Supreme Court of Georgia has decided that the bankruptcy of the defendant, after verdict, is no ground for staying proceedings, or for a writ of error in ejectment, especially where there was no judgment for mesne profits.⁵ In Goodtitle v. North,⁶ it was held in England that bankruptcy was not a good plea in bar to an action for mesne profits, and in Lloyd v. Peell,⁷ that an insolvent debtor's discharge was not a defense. These latter cases proceed upon the theory that the claim is founded in tort, and not being provable in bankruptcy is not discharged.

§ 682. Matters in mitigation—Payment of ground rent—Inadequacy of purchase price.—Where a party wrongfully entered upon land on June 2d, and on June 24th paid 18l. ground rent for which his goods had become liable, he was allowed to deduct the payment from the mesne profits. Bayley, B., said: "What was the value of the occupation of the premises to him? Why the real value minus

Bridges, 7 Moore, 471; Doe v. Davis, 1 Esp. 358; Doe v. Hare, 2 Dowl. P. C. 245; Doe v. Filliter, 13 M. & W. 47; Hunt v. O'Neill, 44 N. J. Law, 566.

¹ Leland v. Tousey, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 328.

² Arundel v. Springer, 71 Penn. St. 398.

³ Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 291; Trubee v. Miller, 48 Conn. 347, and cases cited.

⁴ Mitchell v. Freedley, 10 Penn. St. 198.

⁵ Alston v. Wingfield, 53 Ga. 18.

⁶ 2 Doug. 584. See Banister v. Scott, 6 T. R. 489; Charlton v. King, 4 T. R. 156; Hamond v. Toulman, 7 T. R. 612.

⁷ 3 B. & Ald. 407.

the sum due for ground rent which he was obliged to pay."¹ The damages cannot be mitigated or lessened by evidence that plaintiff paid an inadequate price for the land sought to be recovered. It is no answer to a claim of right that the land cost the owner little or nothing.² It is rather the owner's good fortune. Had he paid double value for the land he could not have enlarged the claim for damages.

§ 683. Growing crops.—The general rule, as we have seen,³ is that when a defendant delivers possession of land under a writ of habere facias possessionem, he must also deliver possession of the crops growing upon it, and must surrender the land in its improved state.⁴ In New York, crops grown upon the disputed land by the tenant, during the pendency of an action of ejectment, belong to the landlord. In that State, the commencement of an ejectment for non-payment of rent is equivalent to re-entry, and when possession is gained, it relates back to the commencement of the action.⁵ In Georgia, the plaintiff in ejectment, if successful, is entitled to the crops growing upon the plantation, unless he puts in issue and recovers, as mesne profits, the rent for that year. If the rents for the year are included in the recovery of mesne profits, then the defendant must be allowed to gather and carry away the crops.⁶ In McLean v. Bovee,⁷ in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, it appeared that the defendant had, before the suit, recovered possession of certain premises, in an action for the recovery of real property, and that he had been put in possession under the judgment, and had taken posses-

¹ Doe v. Hare, 2 Crompt. & M. 145. A tenant may, as against his landlord, set off or claim a deduction of ground rent which he was compelled to pay. Sapsford v. Fletcher, 4 T. R. 511; Taylor v. Zamira, 6 Taunt. 524; Carter v. Carter, 5 Bing. 406.

² Love v. Powell, 5 Ala. 58.

³ See § 563.

⁴ McLean v. Bovee, 24 Wis. 295; s. c. 1 Am. R. 185; Adams on Ejectment (4th Am. ed.), p. 416; Altes v. Hinckler, 36 Ill. 275; Doe d. Upton v. Witherwick, 3 Bing. 11; Hodgson v. Gascoigne, 5 B. & Ald. 88; Samson v. Rose, 65 N. Y. 411. See Lane v. King, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 584; Jackson v. Stone, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 447; Morgan v. Varick, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 587. See, also, § 563.

⁵ Samson v. Rose, 65 N. Y. 411. See Hodgson v. Gascoigne, 5 B. & Ald. 88.

⁶ Gardner v. Kersey, 39 Ga. 664.

⁷ 24 Wis. 295.

sion of a crop of wheat, part of which had been cut, and part of which was uncut, at the time he took the land. The defendant in ejectment brought suit to recover for the taking of the wheat, and it was held that, as the wheat was sowed long after the suit to recover the land was instituted, the crop belonged to the defendant, who had been the successful party in the ejectment. The plaintiff, however, has no right to seize upon the products of the land, such as fodder, which had been pulled and stacked, and peas and beans, which had been gathered and stored in a crib, before the writ of possession issued.¹ In Ray v. Gardner,² it appeared that the plaintiff was in possession of a tract of land, under a claim of ownership, and had raised, gathered, and stacked a crop of oats upon it. Defendant, who also claimed the land, entered, without license, and carried away and converted the oats to his own use, and subsequently recovered the possession of the land. The defendant was held liable for the value of the crops.³ Stockwell v. Phelps,⁴ was an action in the nature of replevin in the cepit for a quantity of hay. It appeared that the land from which the hay was cut, was, at the time of the cutting, in the possession of one Wild, who claimed the land as his own, and was holding it adversely to the plaintiffs, who had the title in fee. While thus holding the actual possession, adversely to the plaintiffs, Wild sold and delivered the hay to the defendant, and plaintiffs thereupon instituted this action. It was held that an action in the nature of replevin in the cepit could only be brought when trespass could be maintained, that such a suit would only lie for an injury to land when the plaintiff was in possession,⁵ and that Wild being in the actual possession of the land, claiming it as his own, would be regarded as the owner, as to all the world, until after a ¹ Brothers v. Hurdle, 10 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 490.

² 82 N. C. 454; s. p. Brown v. Caldwell, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 114; Renick v. Boyd, 99 Pa. St. 555.

³ See Walton v. Jordan, 65 N. C. 170.

⁴ 34 N. Y. 363. But compare Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 515.

⁵ See Rich v. Baker, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 79; De Mott v. Hagerman, 8 Cow. (N. Y.)

judicial decision.¹ The court said: "The remedy of the plaintiffs was a judgment against Wild for mesne profits in an action of ejectment, or by action of trespass after having got possession of the land."

§ 684. Fixtures.—As between hostile claimants to mining lands, all the machinery and implements necessarily used in working the mine become part of the realty, whether fast or loose.² By a recovery in ejectment the plaintiff, as a general rule, becomes entitled to the fixtures put upon the land by the defendants or their lessees.

§ 685. Apportionment of mesne profits.—In ejectment for a tract of land, only a portion of which the defendant has improved, the jury, in assessing mesne profits and the value of improvements, may deal with the entire tract together, although the defendant claims the part improved under a separate conveyance. The jury are not bound to deal with the different tracts separately in making their estimates.³ In Jenkins v. Means,⁴ it appeared that the plaintiff's wall formed one side of a store-room, and a narrow strip along the wall, inside of the room, constituted a part of the premises in dispute. It was held that the yearly rental value of the entire room might be proved, as a fact for the consideration of the jury in estimating the mesne profits. In Woodhull v. Rosenthal,⁵ the plaintiff owned a leasehold interest in the rear portion of a city lot, and the defendants a similar interest in the front part. Defendants had taken possession of the entire lot. It was held that the true method of ascertaining the mesne profits, to which plaintiff was entitled, was to ascertain the rental value of the entire lot, and apportion it to the respective owners, according to their interests, giving the plaintiff his proper share.

§ 686. Statute of limitations.—The right of the successful party to recover mesne profits and damages is usually

¹ S. P. Martin v. Thompson, 62 Cal. 618, and cases cited.

² Ege v. Kille, 84 Penn. St. 333; McMinn v. Mayes, 4 Cal. 209. See McRea v. Central Nat. Bank, 66 N. Y. 490, as to the general rule applicable to fixtures.

³ Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73.

⁴ 59 Ga. 55.

⁵ 61 N. Y. 382.

limited in this country to six years.¹ Where no statute exists the mesne profits may be recovered from the time when the plaintiff's right accrued. There is no limit. Thus in New Orleans v. Gaines,² which was an accounting supplementary to a decree in equity, the profits of the lands for fifteen years, with interest, were awarded. It has been held in New York to be unnecessary to plead the statute of limitations,³ for the right to mesne profits is limited by statute in that State to six years, and for that period only can a recovery be had.⁴ The statute in that State failed to specify when the six years, within which the plaintiff's recovery was limited, should commence or terminate. In Budd v. Walker,⁵ it was held that the six years limitation was next before and up to the filing of the suggestion for mesne profits. The statute, of course, does not begin to run until the title to the property has been judicially determined, for no right to the mesne profits exists, or rather the right is suspended, until judgment is rendered in the original suit.⁶ Under the practice in Georgia, it has been held that if a part of the claim for mesne profits is barred by the statute of limitations, the statute to be availed of must be pleaded.⁷ In Kansas, such damages only can be recovered as have accrued within three years prior to the commencement of the action.⁸ A plaintiff may show that a deficiency of profits in particular years, included in the period of recovery, has been compensated by an excess in years excluded from it by the statute of limitations. But the defendant cannot swell his claim by resorting to an inversion of the principle, which would, in effect, give him a right to recover expenses for a period during which he has elected to be irresponsible for profits.⁹

¹ See Hill v. Meyers, 46 Penn. St. 15, and cases cited; Jackson v. Wood, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 443; Ringhouse v. Keener, 63 Ill. 230.

² 15 Wall. 624.

³ Grout v. Cooper, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 326; Jackson v. Wood, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 443.

⁴ Budd v. Walker, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 493.

⁵ 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 493. See Avent v. Hord, 3 Head (Tenn.), 459.

⁶ New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624-633; Caldwell v. Walters, 22 Penn. St. 378; Avent v. Hord, 3 Head (Tenn.), 459. See § 649.

⁷ Gardner v. Granniss, 57 Ga. 539. See Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawyer, 523.

⁸ Gatton v. Tolley, 22 Kans. 678.

⁹ Ewalt v. Gray, 6 Watts (Penn.), 427.

§ 687. Mesne profits in equity.—The right to recover mesne profits is not limited to actions at law, or actions in the nature of trespass for mesne profits, but a recovery may be had, in a proper case, in equity.¹ Thus in Hill v. Cooper,² in which case a decree was rendered finding that the defendant was a trustee for the plaintiff, and decreeing a conveyance to plaintiff by defendant, it was held that the defendant could be called upon to account for the rents and profits of the land in that same suit in equity. So in South Carolina, a widow is entitled, in equity, when dower is assigned to her, to an account of the rents and profits from the time when her right to dower attached; or if money be assessed in lieu of dower, to interest.³ So on decreeing a restoration of land, possession of which had been obtained by fraud, the court ordered an account of the rents and profits to be taken, and, after allowing for improvements, to be paid to the owners.⁴ So an accounting for rents and profits was ordered in the famous case of New Orleans v. Gaines,⁵ in which judgment had been entered in an equity suit, decreeing possession of the premises in controversy to the defendant in error.⁶

§ 688. Taxes and assessments.—In Stark v. Starr,⁷ it was objected that the amount of money paid by the occupant, as an assessment for the improvement of the street adjoining the premises, was not an improvement “made upon the property,” and hence not allowable as such. The court said that though this distinction was technical it was nevertheless substantial; the assessment was in re-

¹ See Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 128; Maddock's Chancery (ed. 1817), vol. I, p. 73; Grimes v. Wilson, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 331; City of Apalachicola v. Apalachicola Land Co. 9 Fla. 340; Bains v. Perry, 1 Lea (Tenn.), 37; Worrall v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137; Drury v. Conner, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 220; New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624; Taylor v. Taylor, 43 N. Y. 584.

² 8 Oregon, 254.

³ Clark v. Tompkins, 1 S. C. 119.

⁴ Searcy v. Reardon, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 1.

⁵ 15 Wall. 624.

⁶ Equity will sometimes regard the special circumstances of the case where there are any peculiarities which render the rigid application of a general rule of law unsatisfactory, and will not always follow the analogy to be found in the rules for the assessment of damages at law. See, especially, Worrall v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137.

⁷ 1 Sawyer, 15. Assessment does not include tax; Stephani v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 2 Bradw. (Ill.) 249.

ality a tax, and payment of taxes upon property is not to be regarded as an improvement made upon it, however much such payment may indirectly enhance its value. It was a proper deduction to be made from the gross rents of the property¹ in estimating the actual damages which the plaintiff had sustained by the defendant's wrongful withholding of the possession, and undoubtedly it is the duty of the possessor to pay the taxes imposed by public authority.² If the payment of the assessment by the occupant was only allowed by way of set-off as a permanent improvement, it would often happen that no allowance would be made for it whatever, as in this case the pavement put upon the street might be worn out, and have no present value, at the time the possession is surrendered. In Minnesota the claimant may be required to repay to the occupant all taxes paid by the latter upon the land which were a valid charge thereon. This provision was held to be constitutional, and in effect to amount to a transfer of the lien or charge of the State to the person paying such tax.³ But it has been held in Missouri that a plaintiff, after a recovery in ejectment, cannot be compelled to refund to defendant the amount of taxes paid by him while in possession. The decision is rested upon the doctrine that the payments were voluntary, and that no action can be maintained for money paid for another, except upon proof of a previous request, express or implied, or a subsequent assent or sanction.⁴ In Marvin v. Lewis,⁵ in the New York Supreme Court, it appeared that the plaintiff had successfully prosecuted an action to cancel a conveyance made by his ancestor while of unsound mind. The defendants were in possession, claiming under divers mesne conveyances from the grantee in the void deed, and had paid taxes and assessments. It was held that, in ¹ Semple v. Bank of British Columbia, 5 Sawyer, 394, 403.

² See Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 478; Ringhouse v. Keener, 63 Ill. 230; Duffy v. Donovan, 52 N. Y. 634.

³ Madland v. Benland, 24 Minn. 372. See Flint v. Douglass, 28 Kans. 414.

⁴ Napton v. Leaton, 71 Mo. 358; s. p. Homestead Co. v. Valley R. R., 17 Wall. 153.

⁵ 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 49.

declaring the deed void, the court should not impose as a condition that it should be treated as good so far as to require the plaintiff to repay what had been expended by the occupants for taxes and assessments. Even if the payment in good faith of taxes and assessments would seem in conscience to create an equity for reimbursement, there was no principle upon which a court of equity could exact it, any more than such reimbursement could be decreed where a person had committed the mistake of paying taxes on property which did not belong to him. So in Curtis v. Gay,¹ it was held that taxes paid by the tenant did not constitute an improvement upon the land, and gave no increase to its value, and therefore did not constitute an item for which the tenant was entitled to be allowed.²

These cases reveal the somewhat confused state of the law on the subject of allowing a disseizor the amount paid by him for taxes, imposed upon the land during the period of his occupancy. His claim for reimbursement cannot properly be upheld as an improvement, for the reasons stated in Stark v. Starr;³ the payment is not a betterment or melioration made or placed upon the land.⁴ The amount of the taxes ought certainly to be deducted from the gross mesne profits of the land when mesne profits are claimed. Upon this the authorities seem to agree. The cases holding that an occupant who has paid taxes is no more entitled to be reimbursed than a person who has voluntarily paid money for the account of another, without request or sanction, sometimes lead to a harsh result, and show the strength of the inclination of the courts to protect the owner against any foreign interference with the management of his property. It may be urged that the disseizor ought in fairness to pay the taxes, as, during his occupancy, he is afforded the public protection and benefit, to maintain which the taxes are levied. The better policy, where the land is unimproved and yields no income, would seem to be to treat the tax as an annually accru-

¹ 15 Gray (Mass.), 36.

² 1 Sawyer, 15.

³ See § 704.

⁴ See § 700.

ing lien, and the statute of Minnesota, which, in effect, transfers the public lien to the person paying the tax, certainly accomplishes substantial justice.¹

§ 689. Abatement.—The claim for damages and mesne profits does not abate in Pennsylvania by the death of the defendant in ejectment, but survives against his personal representatives;² and the rule is the same in Alabama³ and is a subject of statutory regulation in most of our States.⁴ The rule that such causes of action died with the person⁵ is being rapidly superseded, and has been corrected by statute in England.⁶ Where the plaintiff dies, the personal representatives may revive the action.⁷

§ 689a. Restitution of mesne profits.—A restitution of mesne profits paid by a defendant may be decreed in a proper case. In *Starr v. Stark*⁸ it appeared that a judgment in ejectment had been obtained, and mesne profits awarded and paid. Afterwards the defendant in ejectment established his title in equity against the plaintiff, and it was held that the defendant in ejectment might recover back from the plaintiff therein the amount of the judgment for mesne profits and costs, as the right to retain them fell with the judgment in ejectment.

¹ In Sherman v. Savery, 2 McCra. 108, lands which a vendee was entitled to have conveyed to him, were transferred by the vendor to another who was subsequently declared trustee for the vendee, and decreed to convey to him. The trustee was held entitled to reimbursement for taxes paid by him to protect the title. s. p. Duffy v. Donovan, 52 N. Y. 634.

² Arundel v. Springer, 71 Penn. St. 398.

³ Evans v. Welch, 63 Ala. 250.

⁴ See §§ 648, 661.

⁵ Withers v. Burkett, 16 Fed. Rep. 86. See Adam v. Inhabitants of Bristol, 2 Ad. & El. 389.

⁶ 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 42, § 2.

⁷ Dean v. Feeley, 66 Ga. 273. See § 661; Rhodes v. Crutchfield, 7 Lea (Tenn.), 518.

⁸ 7 Oregon, 500.

CHAPTER XXVI.

IMPROVEMENTS.

- | | |
|---|--|
| § 690. Claim for improvements at common law. 691. Influence of the civil law. 692. Griswold v. Bragg.—Purpose of the statutes. 693. Improvements allowed in equity. 694. Bona fide occupant under claim of title. 695. Exception to the general rule. 696. Constructive notice not sufficient. 697. Claim and color of title. 698. Improvements in excess of mesne profits. 699. What constitutes an improvement. 700. Improvements must be made upon the land. 701. Ornamental improvements. 702. Perishable improvements. 703. Expenditures in experimenting for profits. | § 704. Payment of incumbrances. 705. Improvements made after suit brought. 706. Improvements made by grantor, warrantor or ancestor. 707. Basis of valuation.—Apportionment. 708. Titles which will not support claim for improvements. 709. Improvements by husband on wife's land. 710. Mortgagee in possession. 711. Co-tenants. 712. Constitutionality of the improvement statutes. 713. In what tribunals improvements are recoverable. 714. Pleading. 715. Verdict. 716. Judgment for improvements. |
|---|--|

§ 690. Claim for improvements at common law.—The right-ful owner of land is entitled to improvements or betterments placed upon it. They become a part of the freehold, and pass by the recovery in ejectment; that is, the plaintiff is placed in possession of the land in its improved condition.¹ The term improvement is a comprehensive one,² and includes any melioration whereby land is converted from its natural state and condition, and rendered suitable for the use and enjoyment of man.³ The claim of a bona fide occupant or possessor of land, who has made useful, lasting or permanent improvements, or necessary outlays upon it, believing himself to be the owner, to recover the value of such improvements or expenditures, from the holder of the paramount title, when compelled to surrender up the possession, presents many difficult and perplexing questions.¹ The character of the occupant's possession and the nature of the expenditures, or meliorations, for which allowance can properly be made, if at all, has been a subject of sharp contention, both in actions at law and suits in equity, in England and in this country. The policy of the common law, as we shall presently see, is averse to making any allowance to a person adjudged to have held the possession of land, without right or title, for his labors and expenditures in improving the property, during the period of his wrongful occupancy.² This principle of the common law is founded upon the theory that the rightful owner of land is under no equitable or moral obligation to pay for improvements which he never authorized, and which originated in tort. In the case of a tortious confusion of goods the law gives the entire property to the innocent party. So where an occupant expends his labor and money in making improvements upon lands of another, when the rightful owner desires to use his own property, and can only do so by availing himself of the improvements thus wrongfully placed upon it by the occupant, it would seem strange to hold that this wrong should prevail against a lawful exercise of a right incident to the ownership of property.³ In Townsend v. Shipp's Heirs,⁴ the court said: "If owners could not have the exclusive use and control of real estate, it would be in the power of others, by taking possession without permission and making larger improvements, to acquire a property in the soil. It would be manifestly repugnant to the first principle of property, of society and of free government, that any per-

¹ Bonner v. Wiggins, 52 Tex. 125; Lunquest v. Ten Eyck, 40 Iowa, 213; Parsons v. Moses, 16 Iowa, 440; Doscher v. Blackiston, 7 Oregon, 143; Humphreys v. Newman, 51 Me. 40; McMinn v. Mayes, 4 Cal. 209; Russell v. Blake, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 507. See § 563.

² In Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 521, Bradley, J., said: "A railroad is not land; it is a peculiar species of property, of a compound character, consisting of roadway, embankment, superstructure, and equipment. These constitute the corpus of the property. There is no room to exercise the election which the law gives to the owner, of keeping the ameliorations, or requiring the ejected possessor to demolish them. The demolition of the ameliorations would be the demolition of the thing itself."

³ Johnson v. Gresham, 5 Dana (Ky.), 547.

¹ An important discussion of this subject will be found in the opinions in Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 513.

² Parsons v. Moses, 16 Iowa, 444; Lunquest v. Ten Eyck, 40 Iowa, 213; Turnipseed v. Fitzpatrick, 75 Ala. 304.

³ See Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 1, and the authorities discussed.

⁴ Cooke (Tenn.), 293.

son should pay for work and labor done without his consent." The practice of compensating the occupant for improvements, or of making deductions therefor, is also discountenanced as tending to encourage depredations upon private property.¹ Mr. Sedgwick says:² "In regard to improvements made on the land while out of the possession of the rightful owner, the general principle of the English law, as well as our own, is, that the owner recovers his land in ejectment without being subjected to the condition of paying for improvements which may have been made upon it by any intruder, or occupant without title. The improvements are considered as annexed to the freehold, and pass with the recovery. Every possessor makes such improvements at his peril, and whether acting on an honest belief in his title or without color of right, the party who is ousted loses all benefit of his expenditures."

Mr. Mayne,³ says: "The improvements may be very valuable, but they may be quite unsuited to the use which the plaintiff intends to make of his land. Even if they are such as he would have wished to make, they may also be such as he could not have afforded to make. To compel him to pay for them, or to allow for them in damages, which is all the same, is quite as unjust as it would be to lay out money in any other investment for a man, and then compel him to adopt it volens volens."

§ 691. Influence of the civil law.—The civil law, however, drew a clear distinction between the possessor bona fide and mala fide: the latter was not allowed to recover for improvements or meliorations, but the former was permitted to mitigate the damages in an action brought by the rightful owner, by offsetting the value of permanent and useful improvements made upon the land in good faith, to the extent of the rents and profits claimed.⁴ This distinction

¹ See Frear v. Hardenbergh, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 271-277.

² Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. I, p. 246. See 2 Kent's Comm. p. 335; Lord Stair's Institutions, vol. I, p. 137; Frear v. Hardenbergh, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 272.

³ Wood's Mayne on Damages, § 586. See Oberich v. Gilman, 31 Wis. 495; Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 319. The statute allowing for improvements does not apply to unlawful detainer proceedings in Missouri. Sims v. Kelsay, 75 Mo. 71.

⁴ Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. I, pp. 247-257. See Pilling v. Armitage, in the civil law has obtained in our courts, and, as we shall presently see, it is an established principle, in the various States, to allow a bona fide occupant, under color of title, to mitigate the claim for damages and mesne profits by introducing proof of the value of permanent and useful improvements.¹ The principle was engrafted upon the common law through the medium of equity. A bona fide occupant may, by statute in some States, and in equity suits in most States, recover the value of the improvements in excess of the mesne profits, and his claim for the excess is made a lien upon the land, payment of which may be exacted as a condition precedent to a recovery of the possession by the owner.²

§ 692. Griswold v. Bragg.—Purpose of the statutes.—In Griswold v. Bragg,³ one of the most recent and well considered cases upon the subject of improvements, Shipman, J., said: "The statute practically impresses upon the land of a successful plaintiff in ejectment a lien for the excess, above the amount due for use and occupation, of the present value of the improvements which have been placed on the land, before the commencement of the action, by a defendant or his ancestors or grantors in good faith, and in the belief that he or they had an absolute title to the land in question, and forbids occupancy by the plaintiff until the lien is paid. There is a natural equity which rebels at the idea that a bona fide occupant and reputed 12 Ves. 84; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 479, and authorities cited; Just. Inst. lib. 2, tit. 1, §§ 30–32; 1 Story's Eq. Jurisprudence, §§ 388–799a, note; Putnam v. Ritchie, 6 Paige (N. Y.), 390 and cases cited; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; Bell's Comm. on Law of Scotland, p. 139, § 538. "The disseizor shall recoup all in damages which he hath expended in amending of the houses." Coulter's Case, 5 Rep. 30 (3 Coke, 60). "It is a maxim suggested by nature, that reparations and meliorations bestowed upon a house, or upon land, ought to be defrayed out of the rents. Governed by this maxim we sustain no claim against the proprietor for meliorations if the expense exceed not the rents levied by the bona fide possessor." Kame's Equity, p. 421. See Judge Jackson's article, "Improvements on Land held by Defective Title," 2 Am. Jur. 294.

¹ Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382; Davis v. Louk, 30 Wis. 308; Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 465; Marlow v. Adams, 24 Ark. 109; Wood v. Wood, 83 N. Y. 575; Walker v. Humbert, 55 Penn. St. 407; Ewalt v. Gray, 6 Watts (Penn.), 427; Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456; McKinly v. Holliday, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 477; Hawkins v. Brown, 80 Ky. 186.

² See Abbey v. Merrick, 27 Miss. 320; Hatcher v. Briggs, 6 Oregon, 31; Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Bla. C. C. 202. See, also, § 712.

³ 18 Bla. C. C. 202. See another phase of this case, 19 Bla. C. C. 94.

owner of land in a newly settled country, where unimproved land is of small value, or where skill in conveyancing has not been attained, or where surveys have been uncertain or inaccurate, should lose the benefit of the labor and money which he had expended in the erroneous belief that his title was absolute and perfect. While it is true that improvements and permanent buildings upon land belong to the owner, yet, in a comparatively newly organized State, where titles are necessarily more uncertain than they are in England, there is an instinctive conviction that justice requires that the possessor under a defective title should have recompense for the improvements which have been made in good faith upon the land of another. The maxim, often repeated in the decisions upon this subject, 'Nemo debet locupletari ex alterius incommodo,' tersely expresses the antagonism against the enrichment of one out of the honest mistake and to the ruin of another. It is obvious that this statutory equity is not without occasional hardships. The true owner may be forced to sell his land against his will, and may sometimes be placed too much in the power of capital; but a carefully regulated and guarded statute should ordinarily be the means of doing exact justice to the owner." The occupant, as we have seen, is liable for rents and profits, but he cannot be said to have received the mesne profits which were expended upon or returned to the land in the form of betterments, and should not therefore, in equity and justice, be compelled to account for them.

§ 693. Improvements allowed in equity.—The principle of allowing bona fide occupants the value of improvements made upon lands, under a mistaken belief as to ownership, has a prominent place in equity jurisprudence.¹ Indeed the principles of the civil law from which, as we have said, the doctrine of allowing bona fide occupants for improvements is derived, has been introduced into the modern procedure, regulating mesne profits and improvements, largely through the instrumentality of and by analogy with equity procedure, and is based upon equitable grounds.¹ The improvement acts, under which the occupant is allowed for improvements in the legal forum, have been construed merely to change the form of relief without altering its extent.² If the plaintiff seeks the aid of a court of equity to enforce his title against an innocent person, who has expended money and labor upon lands, supposing himself to be the absolute owner, aid will be extended to him in equity only upon the terms that he shall make due compensation to such innocent person, to the extent of the benefits which will be received from the improvements.³ Questions of this character now arise in equity where the plaintiff's claims are purely of an equitable character, and the occupant seeking compensation for improvement was vested with the legal title.⁴ If the plaintiff owns the legal estate, he is not entitled, as we have seen, to maintain ejectment in the form of a bill in chancery,⁵ or by a proceeding commonly denominated an ejectment bill,⁶ but must resort to an action at law, in the nature of ejectment, and determine the questions relating to damages and improvements either in that action, or in the consequential action for mesne profits.

¹ Canal Bank v. Hudson, 111 U. S. 66, 83. See Williams v. Gibbs, 20 How. 535; Cole v. Johnson, 53 Miss. 94; Foley v. Kirk, 33 N. J. Eq. 171.

§ 694. Bona fide occupant under claim of title.—It is uniformly established, in the modern procedure, as we have said, that only a bona fide occupant of land will be permitted to mitigate the plaintiff's claim for damages and mesne profits, by offsetting the value of his improvements; and the same principle prevails in States which give the occu-

¹ See Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382-397; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; Scott v. Battle, 85 N. C. 184; s. c. 39 Am. Rep. 694; Wharton v. Moore, 84 N. C. 479; s. c. 37 Am. Rep. 627; Weaver v. Norwood, 59 Miss. 678.

² Townsend v. Shipp's Heirs, Cooke (Tenn.), 293.

³ See Bomberger v. Turner, 13 O. S. 263; Sale v. Crutchfield, 8 Bush (Ky.), 636; McLaughlin v. Barnum, 31 Md. 425; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 494; Troost v. Davis, 31 Ind. 34; Mickles v. Dillaye, 17 N. Y. 80; Benedict v. Gilman, 4 Paige (N. Y.), 58; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; 2 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 799a-1237; Putnam v. Ritchie, 6 Paige (N. Y.), 390-405; Robinson v. Ridley, 6 Madd. 2; Attorney-General v. Baliol College, 9 Mod. 411; New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624.

⁴ See Putnam v. Ritchie, 6 Paige (N. Y.), 390-403; Barton v. Land Co. 27 Kans. 636.

⁵ Lewis v. Cocks, 23 Wall. 466. See § 170.

⁶ Young v. Porter, 3 Woods, 342; Loker v. Rolle, 3 Ves. Jr. 4, and note; Cavedo v. Billings, 16 Fla. 261. See §§ 168, 169.

pant a lien upon the land, for the surplus of the meliorations above the damages and mesne profits. The claim for betterments is founded upon equitable grounds, and it would be manifestly inequitable to the owner, and, indeed, a highly dangerous policy, to make allowances for improvements to one who made the expenditures with full knowledge of the adverse claim.¹ Thus it is said in Maryland: "A claim for permanent improvements or betterments can be successfully asserted only by one who is a bona fide occupant or possessor. It can never be maintained by a mere tortfeasor or mala fide intruder, who holds with full knowledge of his own position and of the adverse claim."² The question of the occupant's good faith is for the jury.³ Hence a charge which takes from the jury the question of good faith, and contains a direction to allow the defendant for his improvements, is erroneous.⁴ This leads to the discussion of the question as to who may be considered a bona fide occupant.

A bona fide possessor of land is one who not only honestly supposes himself to be vested with the true title, but is ignorant that the title is contested by any other person claiming a superior right to it.⁵ And an occupant of land, under color of title, is presumed to be acting in good faith until the contrary appears. The court will not presume that the possessor is a trespasser or wrong-doer.⁶ "Possession," says Kent,⁷ "is always presumption of right

¹ Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382; Wood v. Wood, 83 N. Y. 575; Thompson v. Thompson, 16 Wis. 91; Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456; Tatum v. McLellan, 56 Miss. 352; Bellows v. Copp, 20 N. H. 492; Ragsdale v. Gohlke, 36 Tex. 286; Burkle v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 513; Wales v. Coffin, 100 Mass. 177; Bristoe v. Evans, 2 Overton (Tenn.), 341; Kille v. Ege, 82 Penn. St. 102; Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 46; Townsend v. Shipp's Heirs, Cooke (Tenn.), 293; Simpson v. Robinson, 37 Ark. 137. The right to set off the value of the improvements is not affected by the fact that the plaintiff is an infant or a feme covert. Potts v. Cullum, 68 Ill. 217. See Willie v. Brooks, 45 Miss. 542.

² Linthicum v. Thomas, 59 Md. 583. See Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 456.

³ See Merrill v. Hilliard, 59 N. H. 481.

⁴ Powell v. Davis, 19 Tex. 380.

⁵ Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; Cole v. Johnson, 53 Miss. 94; Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456; Whitney v. Richardson, 31 Vt. 300; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 478; Putnam v. Ritchie, 6 Paige (N. Y.), 390; Henderson v. McPike, 35 Mo. 255; Dorn v. Dunham, 24 Tex. 366; Elam v. Parkhill, 60 Tex. 582; Canal Bank v. Hudson, 111 U. S. 80.

⁶ Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawyer, 15.

⁷ Smith v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 356.

and it stands good until other and stronger evidence destroys that presumption." Knowledge of the adverse title, as we have said, is ordinarily fatal to the occupant's claim for expenditures.¹ Thus, a person who takes a title, knowing it to be defective, is not entitled to compensation for improvements, as against the true owner, even though the latter saw the improvements in progress and did not object.² So, where the defendant entered as a trespasser, or with full knowledge of the inferiority of his title, having acquired the possession as well as the pretended title by fraudulent representations, the court held that it would not extend to him the relief to which a bona fide occupant is entitled.³ So, where a party wrongfully retains a title which he knows he ought to convey to another, he is not in a condition to claim payment for improvements.⁴ This principle is further illustrated in the case of Tatum v. McLellan,⁵ in the Supreme Court of Mississippi, where it was held that a trustee of land wrongfully retaining possession of it, in opposition to the provisions of the trust instrument which directed him to sell it, was not entitled to an allowance for expenditures in making improvements. So, one who forcibly dispossesses another and makes improvements, cannot be allowed for them.⁶ Nor can a party, whose acts were inconsistent with a belief in his title, make this claim;⁷ nor can a tenant claim improvements against his landlord;⁸ and improvements made by a guardian upon lands of his ward, fraudulently purchased by the guardian, will not be reimbursed.⁹ The rule running through these cases needs only to be stated to commend it as sound, but an exception of doubtful utility remains to be considered.

§ 695. Exception to the general rule.—In Texas the rule

¹ Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 332. See Witt v. Trustees of Grand Grove, 55 Wis. 380.

² Walker v. Quigg, 6 Watts (Penn.), 87.

³ Mosely v. Miller, 13 Bush (Ky.), 408.

⁴ Thompson v. Thompson, 16 Wis. 91.

⁵ 56 Miss. 352.

⁶ Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456.

⁷ Daggett v. Tracy, 123 Mass. 167.

⁸ Dunn v. Bagby, 88 N. C. 91.

⁹ Eberts v. Eberts, 55 Penn. St. 110. See Barrett v. Cocke, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 566.

laid down in Green v. Biddle,¹ that a bona fide possessor must be one who is ignorant that his title is contested, by any person claiming a better right, is limited. The court concede that the principle stated is the general rule, but say there are cases where, though aware of the adverse claim, the possessor may have reasonable and strong grounds to believe such claim to be destitute of any just or legal foundation, and so be a possessor in good faith. In other words, the principal test is declared to be, has the occupant reasonable grounds to believe himself the true owner of the land. The notice of the adverse claim would not, necessarily, destroy the good faith of the possessor, if his confidence in his title was unshaken.² In *Hill v. Spear*³ it was held that the fact that the defendant purchased land, knowing that his vendor held it under a deed from a married woman defectively acknowledged, was not inconsistent with his good faith in making such purchase, and the court decided that it was error, in such a case, to exclude from the jury evidence of the value of improvements.⁴ In *Griswold v. Bragg*⁵ the hostile claim of which the occupant had notice was considered, at that time, to be of no consequence, and had been declared worthless by competent lawyers. Improvements made after such notice were allowed.⁶ It will be apparent, at a glance, that the principle embodied in these cases is highly important in its bearing upon the rights of occupants to recover for improvements. If actual notice of the adverse title is not a conclusive test, in determining the question of good faith, then the occupant might be allowed for improvements down to the day of trial, merely upon proof that his counsel had advised him, and he honestly believed, that the adverse title was absolutely without merit, or upon showing that he fully expected, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that he would be able to defeat the hostile claim.

¹ 8 Wheat. 1.

² See Sartain v. Hamilton, 12 Tex. 222; Dorn v. Dunham, 24 Tex. 366; Hutchins v. Bacon, 46 Tex. 408.

³ 48 Tex. 583.

⁴ See Berry v. Donley, 26 Tex. 737.

⁵ 19 Bla. C. C. 98.

⁶ See Harrison v. Castner, 11 O. S. 347; Wells v. Riley, 2 Dillon, 569.

The litigants on either side, as a general rule, expect to succeed, and can, usually, furnish a multitude of plausible reasons to justify that belief, and if the test of actual notice is departed from, it would result that almost every possessor could prove himself to be an occupant in good faith, and thus entitled to recover for improvements. If the occupant learns of an adverse title, it is but just and reasonable that the law should regard subsequent improvements as having been made at his peril. We have seen that one of the great objections to allowing for improvements, in any case, is, that the character of the improvements may not be suitable to the property, or such as the owner needed, or could afford, or desired to have made upon the land. Under the rule in the cases noticed, the occupant, learning of the adverse claim, might "improve the owner out of his property."¹ The principle embodied in these cases constitutes a dangerous innovation upon a settled rule of law, and if adopted would render the determination of the character of the possession one of great difficulty and uncertainty, and, in many cases, a recovery, or allowance for improvements, by an occupant really holding in bad faith, would be a possibility.

§ 696. Constructive notice not sufficient.—The constructive notice of an adverse title, which the law implies from the record of a deed, is not sufficient to preclude an occupant from recovering for improvements or betterments, if he, in fact, purchased in good faith, and with the supposition that he was obtaining a perfect title in fee.² The mere fact that a fatal defect in the occupant's title is discoverable by an examination of the records of the county, is not enough to deprive him of the right to the value of his improvements in the ejectment suit. There must be brought home to him, either knowledge of an outstanding paramount title or some circumstance from which the court or jury may fairly infer that he had cause to suspect the invalidity of his own title. Thus, in Cole v. Johnson,³ it appeared that certain defects in probate court proceedings vitiated the title under which the occupant purchased, and these were patent upon the record, and could have been ascertained by inspection. Under these circumstances it was contended that the possessor could not claim to have become a purchaser, or to have paid his money, in good faith. But the court held that what was meant by the requirement of good faith was, that the money should have been genuinely paid, and without knowledge or suspicion, on the part of the purchaser, of fraud or imperfection. "The term," says the court, "is used in contradistinction to bad faith, and not in the technical sense in which it is applied to conveyances of title, in which latter sense, a party wholly free from moral mala fides, is still frequently held not to be a bona fide purchaser."¹ Notice in this connection does not mean direct and positive information, but anything calculated to put a man of ordinary prudence on the alert. Hence, where the statute adopts the word "notice" and "good faith," the terms are to be interpreted with the full force and meaning which attached to them as inseparable incidents in the system of jurisprudence, from whence they were derived.²

¹ See Kenney v. Browne, 3 Ridg. P. C. 518; Stepney v. Biddulph, 5 N. R. 505; Howard v. Massengale, 13 Lea (Tenn.). 590.

² Whitney v. Richardson, 31 Vt. 300; Green v. Dixon, 9 Wis. 532; Hatcher v. Briggs, 6 Oregon, 31.

³ 53 Miss. 94.

§ 697. Claim and color of title.—To successfully assert a claim for improvements, an occupant must ordinarily show not only that he occupied and claimed the land in good faith, but also under color of title; i. e., under some instrument or paper writing presenting the appearance or semblance of title.³ By statute in some States the possessor asserting a betterment claim is required to prove occupancy under color of title. Where no such enactment exists, color of title is a highly important and practically indispensable element of proof, in showing adverse occupancy and good faith. It does not necessarily follow that the claim and color of title which will sustain a recovery for improvements must be such as will ripen into an adverse possession. Thus in Bedell v. Shaw,¹ it was held that possession, to be adverse, must be under a claim of title in fee. An occupant under an assessment lease was decreed not to hold in hostility to the true title, but it was, nevertheless, decided that one who entered under such a lease, in good faith, or those who held under him, were entitled to be allowed for valuable and permanent improvements placed upon the land.² So the fact that the tenant had a good estate for life will not defeat the claim for betterments, if he had reason to believe that he had a title in fee.³ The equity doctrine that a party holding merely under a quitclaim deed cannot be a bona fide purchaser without notice⁴ is not applicable to a claimant under a betterment statute.⁵

¹ See Learned v. Corley, 43 Miss. 687; Lee v. Bowman, 55 Mo. 400; Dothage v. Stuart, 35 Mo. 251; Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456.

² Lee v. Bowman, 55 Mo. 400. See Cole v. Johnson, 53 Miss. 94.

³ See Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawyer, 523; Lunquest v. Ten Eyck, 40 Iowa, 213; Hatcher v. Briggs, 6 Oregon, 31; Krause v. Means, 12 Kans. 335; Thomas v. Thomas, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 420; Barlow v. Bell, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 246; Bell v. Barnett, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 516; Vallé v. Fleming, 29 Mo. 152; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 478; Cole v. Johnson, 53 Miss. 94; Love v. Shartzler, 31 Cal. 487.

The general subject of color of title will be presently discussed.⁶

§ 698. Improvements in excess of mesne profits.—The general policy of the law, where no express statute intervenes, is to allow the value of improvements only by way of set-off against or in mitigation of damages for the detention of the land, and the value of the betterments cannot usually exceed the amount of the plaintiff's damages and mesne profits.⁷ This rule is followed in a recent ejectment case in New York,⁸ in which the Court of Appeals in that State say that, at best, one who puts improvements upon the lands of another, is only allowed to mitigate the damages by offsetting the improvements to the extent of the

¹ 59 N. Y. 46.

² Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 46.

³ Plimpton v. Plimpton, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 458. See Wales v. Coffin, 100 Mass. 177.

⁴ Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. 333; May v. Le Claire, 11 Wall. 217; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578.

⁵ Griswold v. Bragg, 19 Bla. C. C. 97. See Mansfield v. Dyer, 131 Mass. 201.

⁶ See Chap. XXX.

⁷ Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 465; McKinly v. Holiday, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 477; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382; Davis v. Louk, 30 Wis. 308; Pulaski Co. v. State, 42 Ark. 120; Jones v. Johnson, 28 Ark. 211.

⁸ Wood v. Wood, 83 N. Y. 575.

rents and profits claimed.¹ So, in some States, evidence of improvements cannot be given where no claim is made for mesne profits,² while in others, as already stated, the excess of the value of the improvements is impressed as a lien upon the land.³ Texas furnishes an example of the latter policy. In that State the right to recover for improvements is not dependent upon the claim for rents and profits, nor is it limited to cases where rent is claimed, or compensation for use and occupation allowed. It is independent of such claim on the part of the plaintiff.⁴

§ 699. What constitutes an improvement.—An improvement or melioration is something done or put upon the land which the occupant cannot remove, or carry away with him, either because it has become physically impossible to separate it from the land, or, in contemplation of law, it has been annexed to the soil, and is therefore to be considered as a fixture or part of the freehold. The character of the improvement must be such as to make the land more valuable⁵ in the future for the ordinary purposes for which such property is owned and used. Hence it is said that a structure or labor may be as permanent in every sense of the word as the pyramid of Oheops, and yet add nothing to the usefulness or value of the land for the ordinary purposes to which it is devoted. The test is, does the melioration make the land more valuable to the owner.⁶ It is clear that if the plaintiff will receive no benefit from the expenditures or improvements, the defendant cannot be allowed for them. Thus, in Woodhull v. Rosenthal,⁷ in the New York Commission of Appeals, it appeared that the plaintiff claimed a leasehold interest, ¹ See Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 46; Jackson v. Loomis, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 168; Merritt v. Scott, 81 N. C. 385; Dowd v. Faucett, 4 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 92; Scott v. Mather, 14 Tex. 235.

² Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 319; Learned v. Corley, 43 Miss. 687.

³ Abbey v. Merrick, 27 Miss. 320; Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Bla. C. C. 202; Hatcher v. Briggs, 6 Oregon, 31. See § 691.

⁴ Dorn v. Dunham, 24 Tex. 366. See Scott v. Mather, 14 Tex. 235; Saunders v. Wilson, 19 Tex. 194.

⁵ See Breit v. Yeaton, 101 Ill. 273.

⁶ See Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawyer, 15; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 494; Johnson v. Gresham, 5 Dana (Ky.), 547.

⁷ 61 N. Y. 382, per Dwight, C.

and that his term expired pending the action. He recovered judgment for mesne profits, and the court refused to allow to the defendant, as an improvement, the value of a building erected by him upon the land, because it did not increase the value of the plaintiff's interest, and was of no benefit to him as lessee, the term having expired. The defendant is entitled to give evidence of such improvements only as are of a lasting and permanent character, and which give a permanently increased value to the land.¹ By the term value, as applied to improvements, is meant the value to the real owner.²

In Pennsylvania a purchaser from a lunatic whose deed has been avoided cannot recover for improvements.³ Repairs are not necessarily considered as improvements in Massachusetts.⁴ Ameliorations placed upon the land before plaintiff acquired title cannot be set off against mesne profits which accrued subsequent to the plaintiff's deed.⁵ As a general rule a life tenant cannot make improvements at the expense of the inheritance,⁶ though he may claim contribution for putting a building in tenantable shape;⁷ or for finishing an improvement left incomplete by the donor.⁸ Ringbarking is an improvement;⁹ so it is an improvement to construct an ell, containing a dining room and kitchen annexed to a house.¹⁰ A fence constructed as an obstruction will not be allowed as an improvement.¹¹

¹ Ege v. Kille, 84 Penn. St. 334.

² Bristoe v. Evans, 2 Overton (Tenn.), 341. If the only interest which a possessor has in land consists in the right to recover the value of improvements made by him upon it, such claim is not subject to sale on execution. Hendricks v. Snediker, 30 Tex. 296. Nor of an independent ejectment. Paull v. Eldred, 29 Pa. St. 415.

³ Rogers v. Walker, 6 Pa. St. 371.

⁴ Walsh v. Wilson, 131 Mass. 535. But see Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 521.

⁵ Haggin v. Clark, 51 Cal. 112.

⁶ Sohier v. Eldredge, 103 Mass. 345; Austin v. Stevens, 24 Me. 520; Merritt v. Scott, 81 N. C. 385. But see Folsom v. Clark, 72 Me. 44.

⁷ See Sohier v. Eldredge, 103 Mass. 345; Corbett v. Laurens, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 301.

⁸ See Parsons v. Winslow, 16 Mass. 361.

⁹ Ex-parte Thomas, 2 New South Wales L. R. 39.

¹⁰ Dockray v. Milliken, 76 Me. 517.

¹¹ Hunt v. Pond, 67 Ga. 582.

§ 700. Improvements must be made upon the land.—The expenditures must be incurred in making improvements upon the land, and not beyond the limits of the demanded premises. Thus a claim for the construction of a sidewalk which was located outside the limits of the premises recovered, was excluded.¹ So in Coburn v. Ames,² in the Supreme Court of California, it appeared that a lease had been given of lands bounded by low-water mark, on the shore of the ocean, and that the lessee had constructed a wharf extending from the shore into the water beyond low-water mark. The court decided that the portion of the wharf beyond low-water mark was not an improvement upon the demised premises, nor appurtenant thereto, nor was it affixed to the land within the meaning of the statute, even though attached to a wharf on the demised premises by nails, bolts and screws.

§ 701. Ornamental improvements.—In Mississippi, any allowance for ornamental improvements is expressly excepted from the statutes,³ and this policy of the law is of general application.⁴ Expenditures made as a matter of taste or for personal enjoyment will not be allowed.⁵ In Whitledge v. Wait,⁶ the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, after laying down the general rule that a bona fide possessor is entitled to an allowance for lasting and valuable improvements, made on the premises, remark: "Cases may arise which may be exceptions to this general rule without impeaching it, as where unnecessary, expensive, useless, fanciful, or ornamental improvements should be made or done with a design to render it out of the power of the proprietor to pay for them, and, therefore, to abandon his claim to the land." In cases where the improvements are made without the motive instanced in Whitledge v. Wait, it is

¹ Curtis v. Gay, 15 Gray (Mass.), 36.

² 52 Cal. 385.

³ See Gaines v. Kennedy, 53 Miss. 103. Compare French v. Grenet, 57 Tex. 280.

⁴ See Reed v. Reed, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 398; Woodward v. Phillips, 14 Gray (Mass.), 132.

⁵ York Buildings Co. v. Mackenzie, 3 Pat. App. Cas. 579; Atty. Genl. v. Kerr, 2 Beav. 429; Mill v. Hill, 3 H. L. Cas. 828.

⁶ Sneed (Ky.), 335. See Dick v. Hamilton, 1 Deady, 332.

not always an easy task to determine the question of what constitute useful and permanent as distinguished from ornamental meliorations. Thus expenditures upon property suitable for a country residence might be allowed which would be manifestly out of place upon lands useful only for agricultural purposes. The adaptability of the improvements is the test, and this question must, of course, be determined with reference to the peculiar facts of each particular case.

§ 702. Perishable improvements.—Improvements which are temporary and perishable in their nature cannot be allowed to the occupant. In Morris v. Tinker,¹ the improvements consisted of a basin and wharf; the former had to be dug out and cleaned two or three times a year, and the latter repaired annually. The court held that, as the improvements, owing to their character and the destructive influences to which they were exposed, had to be renewed periodically, they could not be said to add any permanent value to the lands, and were properly disallowed. Such improvements do not come within the rule already stated, that they must be permanent and add to the future value of the property for the ordinary purposes to which it is to be devoted.²

§ 703. Expenditures in experimenting for profits.—In Noble v. Biddle,³ it was held that an occupant, who received profits from one part of the land, could not set off his losses, occasioned by experimenting for profits, on other parts of the land. The doctrine of equitable defense, in an action for mesne profits, goes no further than to allow the defendant to defalk the value of improvements that are advantageous and useful, and give the land additional value. A trespasser or wrong-doer cannot be allowed to improve the owner out of his property, by making expenditures merely to suit his whim or caprice, or by experimenting in the hope of gain. The equity which will sustain his claim for the improvement is founded upon the fact that his labor and money have gone to the actual benefit of the owner by really enhancing the worth of his property.

¹ 60 Ga. 466.

² See Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawyer, 15. See, also, § 699.

³ 81* Penn. St. 430.

§ 704. Payment of incumbrances.—The subject of allowance for taxes and assessments, paid by the occupant, has already been noticed, and the unsatisfactory state of the law discussed.¹ The question of the right of a bona fide possessor of real estate, who has paid out money in discharging valid existing incumbrances or charges upon the estate, having no notice of any infirmity in his title, has been before the courts in different forms, and it may be regarded as a settled rule in equity, that he is entitled to be repaid the amount of such payments by the true owner seeking to recover the estate from him.² This rule was probably derived from the Roman law, and was applied by Mr. Justice Story to a case where the money was appropriated, not to the discharge of a judgment or mortgage lien, but to the payment of the debts of a testator, which were a general charge upon the estate.³

§ 705. Improvements made after suit brought.—It has been shown that constructive notice, such as the record of a deed, is not such notice of an adverse title as will deprive a party of the character of an occupant in good faith. The question of the propriety of allowing for improvements made by an occupant after the institution of an ejectment, or other legal proceeding concerning the title, has frequently been before the courts, and it may be regarded as a settled principle of law that the occupant cannot recover for or offset improvements made by him after suit brought.⁴ It is impossible to instance any form of notice of an adverse claim which could be more explicit and actual than the issuance and service of process in an action

¹ See § 688; Nowler v. Coit, 1 Ohio, 519; s. c. 13 Am. Dec. 640; Homestead Co. v. Valley R. R. 17 Wall. 166; Duffy v. Donovan, 52 N. Y. 634; Potter v. Gracie, 58 Ala. 303.

² Willie v. Brooks, 45 Miss. 542.

³ See Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 498; Cook v. Toumbs, 36 Miss. 685; Smith v. Robertson, 89 N. Y. 555; Sturgis v. Holliday, 1 MacAr. & M. (D. C.) 385.

⁴ Haslett v. Crain, 85 Ill. 129; Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456; Gaines v. Kennedy, 53 Miss. 103. See Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382; Taylor v. Whiting, 9 Dana (Ky.), 399; Johnson v. Harrelson, 18 S. C. 604; Henderson v. Ownby, 56 Tex. 651; Estell v. Cole, 62 Tex. 695.

based upon the hostile title. It is notice to the occupant of the insecurity of the title and of the imprudence of making further outlays.¹ Jackson v. Loomis,² if the reporter's statement of facts is correct, countenances the principle that the value of improvements made pending the ejectment may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages. The distinction between improvements placed upon the land before and after suit brought seems to have been overlooked. Chief Justice Savage, who wrote the opinion, said : " If the plaintiff is not content with acquiring possession of his property in an improved condition, after he has neglected to assert his title for a number of years, it is certainly equitable that the defendant should be allowed the value of his improvements, made in good faith, to the extent of the rents and profits claimed." This is all true, but is not applicable to improvements made after suit brought. The learned court overlooks the fact that the owner, who is invoking the aid of the court to be let into possession, is no longer guilty of laches, which is the basis of the equitable claim for improvements, while the possessor, by actual notice of the suit, has lost the character of a bona fide occupant. In Pennsylvania, evidence as to valuable improvements, made between the first and second actions of ejectment, was excluded, the court declaring that there was no principle of law which required the defeated party to bring his second action forthwith, at the risk of being improved out of his estate.³ So evidence that the defendant in possession under a parol gift made improvements, at a date subsequent to a dispute about the gift, has been rejected in that State.⁴ So, in Indiana, a defendant in ejectment was not allowed to prove that he had made permanent and lasting improvements, subsequent to a sheriff's sale of the land to the plaintiff, and before action brought.⁵ It was even held in

¹ Shand v. Hanley, 71 N. Y. 323, 324 ; Patterson v. Brown, 32 N. Y. 81 ; Henderson v. Ownby, 56 Tex. 651.

² 4 Cowen (N. Y.), 168.

³ Wilkinson v. Pearson, 23 Penn. St. 117.

⁴ Aurand v. Wilt, 9 Penn. St. 54.

⁵ Osborn v. Storms, 65 Ind. 321.

Haslett v. Orain,¹ in the Supreme Court of Illinois, that improvements placed upon the land after notice of title in another, were not to be regarded as made before notice merely from the fact of having been completed in pursuance of a contract with reference thereto entered into prior to the notice.

Owners have a right to improve their property, notwithstanding a line of public improvements have been marked out over it, and the condemning party must pay for such improvements unless made in gross bad faith.²

§ 706. Improvements made by grantor, warrantor or ancestor.—In Winslow v. Newell³ it was held that a party who purchased with the belief that he acquired a good title, could not recover for improvements made by his grantor who was not an occupant in good faith, and knew he was without title, although the last purchaser may have paid for the full value of the improvements.⁴ The principles governing the law merchant do not of course apply to a purchaser of this character, and the grantee could acquire no right of action or of set-off, which his grantor did not possess. If, however, the defendant is bona fide in possession, under a claim of right, with a warranty from a previous possessor in good faith, who has made improvements, it is only just that he should have the benefit of such improvements, so far as they are in excess of the rents due from the first possessor. The plaintiff gets the improvements by his judgment, and as the defendant succeeds under his deed to all the rights of his warrantor, there is great equity in allowing him to set up whatever defense his warrantor might have interposed.⁵ The defendant is, of course, not liable for mesne profits taken prior to his own entry, if he makes no claim for improvements. If he takes credit for prior improvements, all profits chargeable to former occupants must first be deducted.

¹ 85 Ill. 129.

² Sherwood v. St. Paul & C. Ry. Co., 21 Minn. 122. See Winona & St. P. R. R. Co. v. Denman, 10 Minn. 267; Hursh v. St. Paul & P. R. R. Co., 17 Minn. 439.

³ 19 Vt. 164.

⁴ See Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Bla. C. C. 202.

⁵ Willingham v. Long, 47 Ga. 540. See Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Penn. St. 456.

An heir may enforce a claim for improvements put upon the land by his ancestor.¹

§ 707. Basis of valuation—Apportionment.—In a case which arose in Mississippi it was held that the value of the improvements should be assessed on a basis co-extensive in time with the estimate of rents and profits which they contribute to produce, so as to allow the defendant for all improvements made by him of which the plaintiff receives the benefit.² It has been held in Georgia that the defendant in ejectment is entitled to the value which the improvements give to the land, and that he is not limited to their actual cost.³ The value of the betterments at the time of trial is the correct basis of the award,⁴ as they may have deteriorated from use and lapse of time.⁵ The jury in assessing mesne profits, and the value of improvements, may deal with the entire tract together, although the defendant claims the improved part under a separate conveyance.⁶

§ 708. Titles which will not support claim for improvements.—Improvements of any kind, put upon land by a life-tenant during his occupancy, constitute no charge upon the land when it passes to the remainderman.⁷ So a vendee of land under a parol agreement, who has failed to comply with his contract, and abandoned the possession without fault of the vendor, cannot recover for improvements put by him upon the land.⁸ So, in Massachusetts, a town which proceeds illegally to take lands for a school-house, is not entitled to an allowance for improvements.⁹ And in Texas, a tax-title does not sustain a suggestion of

¹ Stump v. Hornbeck, 15 Mo. App. 367.

² Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73; Atty. Genl. v. Earl of Craven, 21 Beav. 411.

³ Willingham v. Long, 47 Ga. 540; Thomas v. Malcom, 39 Ga. 328. See Willie v. Brooks, 45 Miss. 542; Booth v. Van Arsdale, 9 Bush (Ky.), 718.

⁴ Wendell v. Moulton, 26 N. H. 41; Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Bla. C. C. 202.

⁵ Ewing v. Handley, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 346; s. c. 14 Am. Dec. 157.

⁶ Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73. See § 685. The rule has been stated to be that an occupant of land is regarded as the employee of the real owner, and not as his tenant, in clearing and fencing and rendering it fit for cultivation, but after it is fit for cultivation the accounts between the owner and occupant are adjusted upon the principles governing landlord and tenant. Ewing v. Handley, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 346, 372.

⁷ Merritt v. Scott, 81 N. C. 385; Elam v. Parkhill, 60 Tex. 581, citing the text.

⁸ Rainer v. Huddleston, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 223.

⁹ Spalding v. Chelmsford, 117 Mass. 393; Crosby v. Dracut, 109 Mass. 206.

possession and improvements in good faith,¹ and something more is required to support the suggestion of good faith and claim for improvements, than a deed from one having neither title nor possession.² So improvements and expenditures on the faith of a contract void by the statute of frauds, made with the knowledge of the owner, give no equity to the purchaser to retain possession until repaid.³ And where the defendant set up that he entered under an agreement with plaintiff, by which he was to be paid for the improvements, it was held to be no defense to the ejectment; the remedy of the parties, in such a case, is by a direct action upon the agreement.⁴ In *Hatchett v. Conner*⁵ the Supreme Court of Texas say: "The jury were instructed in substance that, if the appellant honestly believed his title to be good, or that his vendor's title was good, he was entitled to the value of his improvements, &c. This is clearly erroneous with reference to the facts of this case, as it is not pretended that the appellant has shown that either he or his vendor hold by any claim or title derived from the government. It is difficult to perceive how a party can honestly believe that his title is good, or how his possession can be in good faith, when he is unable to trace his title back to the government, the only source of title to land. While a defective or irregular apparent title may be the basis of a recovery for improvements made in good faith, a void title (if such an expression may be used) cannot be."⁶ This is practically equivalent to holding that color of title consists of an apparent chain of title from the original source—the government. This, as we shall see, is not the true test in cases of

¹ Robson v. Osborn, 13 Tex. 298. See Oberich v. Gilman, 31 Wis. 495.

² Miller v. Brownson, 50 Tex. 583. But a deed of a married woman, though invalid, may serve as a basis of a claim for improvements. Johnson v. Bryan, 62 Tex. 623.

³ Harden v. Hays, 9 Penn. St. 151.

⁴ Norris v. Hoyt, 18 Cal. 217. A parol contract to pay for improvements upon land is not within the statute of frauds, as being a sale of an interest in lands. Thouvenin v. Lea, 26 Tex. 612; Godeffroy v. Caldwell, 2 Cal. 489; Lower v. Winters, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 263; 4 Kent's Com. p. 450.

⁵ 30 Tex. 104.

⁶ See Rogers v. Bracken, 15 Tex. 568; Robson v. Osborn, 13 Tex. 298; Pitts v. Booth, 15 Tex. 454.

adverse possession. The requirement that the occupant, to establish good faith, should trace an apparent title from the government, is too exacting, and would, in many instances, practically defeat the operation of the improvement statutes.¹

§ 709. Improvements by husband on wife's land.—On the death of a wife without issue, the husband was held, in Tennessee, to have no claim against his wife's heirs for the value of the improvements made by him on the land, though made with her assent and approbation.² In a case which arose in Massachusetts, an owner of land died, leaving a widow and children. The widow married again, and the husband improved and lived on the property, and enjoyed the rents and profits, thinking it belonged to his wife. On her death the children brought a writ of entry, and the husband was not allowed compensation for his improvements.³ So, as we have seen, it has been held in New York that a married woman can maintain ejectment for her lands against her husband, and the fact that he had made improvements, while they resided together thereon, constituted no defense, and, at best, the improvements could only be allowed to the extent of the mesne profits claimed.⁴ It would be practically impossible for a husband to prove that he had held his wife's land adversely, having no knowledge of her title.

§ 710. Mortgagee in possession.—An occupant having really only the rights of a mortgagee in possession, but believing himself to have an absolute title, and who, in good faith, makes valuable improvements, is entitled to be paid for them.⁵ Thus, in *Mickles v. Dillaye*⁶ it appeared ¹ In Michigan the improvement statute is interpreted to apply only to cases in which the plaintiff establishes a title in fee simple. Burke v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 513.

² Marable v. Jordan, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 417.

³ O'Brien v. Joyce, 117 Mass. 360.

⁴ Wood v. Wood, 83 N. Y. 575. See Minier v. Minier, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 424. Improvements placed by a debtor upon the lands of another in fraud of creditors may be reached. Lynde v. McGregor, 13 Allen (Mass.), 182; Isham v. Schafer, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 330; Rose v. Brown, 11 W. Va. 137; Heck v. Fisher, 78 Ky. 644; Wait on Fraud. Conv. § 26.

⁵ Green v. Dixon, 9 Wis. 532; Neale v. Hagthrop, 3 Bland's Ch. (Md.) 590.

⁶ 17 N. Y. 80. See McSorley v. Larissa, 100 Mass. 270.

that valuable and permanent improvements had been made, in good faith, by a party standing upon the legal footing of a mortgagee in possession, but who believed that he held the title to the property as the absolute owner. The mortgagor brought a bill to redeem, and the court held that, as the plaintiff found himself compelled to resort to a court of equity to enforce his rights, he had placed himself within the range of the great principle that he who seeks equity must himself do equity, and that, as the improvements had enhanced the value of the property, and were really the inspiring cause of the suit, and the defendant had occupied in the belief that the plaintiff had no right to the property, and the plaintiff had for a long time acquiesced in the adverse possession of the premises by the defendant, and thereby contributed to the mistake under which the latter acted, the plaintiff, if permitted to redeem, must pay for the improvements to the extent of the benefit.¹ These cases must be distinguished from the cases which hold that the mortgagee is not to be allowed for general improvements, made without the acquiescence or consent of the mortgagor, especially if the improvements tend to cripple the power of redemption.²

§ 711. Co-tenants.—The subject of mesne profits between co-tenants has already been considered.³ A co-tenant cannot recover for improvements made without the express or implied assent of his companion.⁴ In partition proceedings, however, the court will endeavor to award the improved part of the land to the tenant making the improvements.⁵ Even the law as to the liability of a co-tenant for ¹ See Dows v. Congdon, 28 N. Y. 132; Benedict v. Gilman, 4 Paige (N. Y.), 62; Hubbell v. Moulson, 53 N. Y. 225; Atkinson v. Morrissy, 3 Oregon, 332.

² Moore v. Cable, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 385. See Mickles v. Dillaye, 17 N. Y. 80-91; Russell v. Blake, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 506; Woodward v. Phillips, 14 Gray (Mass.), 132. As to improvements made by a vendee, where the vendor's title has failed, see § 323.

³ See § 660.

⁴ Scott v. Guernsey, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 163, aff'd 48 N. Y. 106; Taylor v. Baldwin, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 582; Ford v. Knapp, 31 Hun (N. Y.), 524; Becnel v. Becnel, 23 La. Ann. 150; Stevens v. Thompson, 17 N. H. 103; Sears v. Munson, 23 Iowa, 380; Bazemore v. Davis, 55 Ga. 504; Walter v. Greenwood, 29 Minn. 87; Husband v. Aldrich, 135 Mass. 317.

⁵ Beam v. Scroggin, 12 Bradw. (Ill.) 321; Robinson v. McDonald, 11 Tex. 385;

repairs made without his assent is in confusion. Some of the cases are in favor of upholding such liability,¹ though the doctrine does not seem to be firmly established.² Where a tenant in common had recovered in ejectment against his companion, who was in adverse possession, it was said, in the Supreme Court of Georgia, that the equities based upon improvements made in good faith by the defeated co-tenant, under an honest belief of ownership of the whole title, would be adjusted.³ The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania decided, in Walker v. Humbert,⁴ that, on a claim for mesne profits made by a co-tenant against his companion, the latter was not chargeable with rent paid in the form of permanent improvements on the land, and on a writ of entry by two tenants in common against a third, in Massachusetts, it was held that the demandants might recover rents and mesne profits, and that the tenant was also entitled to have the value of his improvements ascertained, and to recover compensation therefor.⁵ The Wisconsin Betterment Statute allows the bona fide possessor to recover the value of his improvements. This was applied to actions brought to recover an undivided interest in land, so as to give a tenant in common, who has been defeated in an action to recover possession of such undivided interest, a claim against his co-tenant for his improvements in part. It was admitted that the statute was imperfectly drawn, and that the power of the court to apportion the expense of the improvements, between the tenants in common, according to their respective interests, was one arising by implication rather than conferred by express grant, yet, they say, it would be manifestly unjust in such cases to impose upon one party the entire burden of the improvements.⁶

Nelson v. Clay, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 138; s. c. 23 Am. Dec. 387; contra, Husband v. Aldrich, 135 Mass. 317.

¹ Denman v. Prince, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 213; McDearman v. McClure, 31 Ark. 559; Fowler v. Fowler, 50 Conn. 256; Alexander v. Ellison, 79 Ky. 143.

² See Kidder v. Rixford, 16 Vt. 169; Calvert v. Aldrich, 99 Mass. 74; Stevens v. Thompson, 17 N. H. 103.

³ Logan v. Goodall, 42 Ga. 95. See Strong v. Hunt, 20 Vt. 614.

⁴ 55 Penn. St. 407.

⁵ Backus v. Chapman, 111 Mass. 386. See Silloway v. Brown, 12 Allen (Mass.), 30

⁶ Phoenix Lead Mining, &c., Co. v. Sydnor, 39 Wis. 600. See Davis v. Louk, 30

§ 712. Constitutionality of the improvement statutes.—The Improvement Statutes of Wisconsin is said, in Pacquette v. Pickness,¹ to be founded upon “the broad principles of equity.” The making of lasting and valuable improvements requires time, and, when made by an adverse possessor, constitute an evidence of laches on the part of the real owner. If the legislature can declare a lapse of time an absolute bar to a recovery, by enacting a statute of limitations, it certainly possesses the power to declare the lapse of time necessary for making such improvements a conditional bar.² It cannot be claimed that the statutes are unconstitutional because they deprive the owner of the land without his consent. Their effect is to punish him for his laches in remaining quiet and failing to assert his title, or give notice of it to the occupant while the improvements are in progress.³ The improvements, as we have seen, become a part of the freehold, and belong to the owner, who recovers the land in its improved condition; having neglected to assert his title during the years in which the innocent party was expending money and labor upon the land, the owner cannot be said to be wholly free from blame. It may be true that he did not authorize or may not need the improvements; but as he takes them by the recovery in ejectment he is, by reason of his laches and neglect in asserting his title, justly chargeable with the increased value which they give to the land. The plaintiff is the proper party to bear the expense of the improvements, not only because he takes them, but for the additional reason that he ought to have known of the existence of his own title, the presumption being that every body is acquainted Wis. 308; Walker v. Humbert, 55 Penn. St. 407. See, also, § 660. In Michigan a somewhat similar statute has been interpreted so as not to apply where the defendant in ejectment, claiming for improvements, is one of several tenants in common. The statute, however, was so framed that the court concluded that if it was applied to tenants in common, the defendant might recover from each the full value of the improvements. See Martin v. O’Conner, 37 Mich. 440. See, also, Comp. Laws Mich. §§ 6252–3, Act 180 of 1875; Sands v. Davis, 40 Mich. 14; Morris v. McKay, 40 Mich. 326.

¹ 19 Wis. 219.

² See Armstrong v. Jackson, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 374.

³ Ross v. Irving, 14 Ill. 171. See Davis v. Powell, 13 Ohio, 308; Longworth v. Wolfington, 6 Ohio, 10; Shaler v. Magin, 2 Ohio, 236; Bodley v. Gaither, 3 Mon. (Ky.) 58; Pope v. Macon, 23 Ark. 644; Scott v. Mather, 14 Tex. 235; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; Bright v. Boyd, 2 Story, 605.

with his own rights, and his opportunities for gaining knowledge of his title are manifestly superior to those of the adverse occupant.¹ It follows that a properly framed improvement or betterment statute is both equitable and constitutional. An examination of the cases holding particular statutes unconstitutional, will show that special facts were involved. Thus, in Green v. Biddle,² the leading case on the subject, the statute was adjudged unconstitutional because it impaired the provisions of a compact between Virginia and Kentucky.

§ 713. In what tribunals improvements are recoverable.—The claim for improvements is usually asserted as an offset in the action for mesne profits, whether the latter action be joined with the ejectment or prosecuted separately. In Missouri it has been held that a claimant who had been evicted from land could not maintain an action for improvements. The action must be brought in the same court in which the recovery in ejectment was had, and prior to eviction from the premises.³ In Virginia, the claims for mesne profits and improvements must all be passed upon by the same jury.⁴ In Sherry v. The State Bank,⁵ the defendant in ejectment prosecuted a writ of error from a judgment rendered against him, and executed a supersedeas bond with sureties to stay further proceedings upon the judgment. The judgment having been affirmed, it was held, in a suit brought upon the bond, that the defendant could not be allowed in that suit to deduct the value of the improvements. It has already been shown that the claim for compensation for improve-

¹ See Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 1; Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Bla. C. C. 202.

² 8 Wheat. 1. See Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 1. Judge Cooley said: "The parties cannot be placed in statu quo, and the statute accomplishes justice as nearly as the circumstances of the case will admit, when it compels the owner of the land, who, if he declines to sell, must necessarily appropriate the betterments made by another, to pay the value to the person at whose expense they have been made. The case is peculiar; but a statute cannot be void as an unconstitutional interference with private property which adjusts the equities of the parties as nearly as possible according to natural justice." Cooley on Const. Lims. (5th ed.) p. 480 [*389].

³ Malone v. Stretch, 69 Mo. 25. See Webster v. Stewart, 6 Iowa, 401; Clausen v. Rayburn, 14 Iowa, 136.

⁴ Goodwyn v. Myers, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 336.

⁵ 6 Ind. 397.

ments made by the occupant is an equitable lien which cannot be made the subject of an independent ejectment.¹

§ 714. Pleading.—In order to be allowed for his improvements the defendant must plead them² by way of set-off in his answer,³ and must state that he entered upon the disputed land under claim of title.⁴ The answer should aver that the improvements were made while holding under color of title adversely to plaintiff in good faith, and that they are permanent; otherwise evidence as to the improvements cannot be given.⁵ And it is not sufficient to set up that the occupant has made permanent improvements in good faith and allege their costs. It must be shown that the improvements are still of value and better the condition of the property. The counterclaim for permanent improvements is confined to their value at the time of the trial.⁶ In some States the defendant, in an action of ejectment, cannot plead the value of improvements unless the plaintiff has made a demand for mesne profits.⁷ The defendant cannot ordinarily have the value of his lasting improvements ascertained until the determination of the question of title.⁸ And in California, where no evidence is introduced to show damages, it is error to admit evidence of improvements.⁹

§ 715. Verdict.—In Hutchins v. Bacon,¹⁰ the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, incorporating in it, however, the following words: "the present occupants to hold their improvements." The court treated the latter portion of the verdict as surplusage. It was held, on review, that the verdict clearly intended to protect the

¹ Paull v. Eldred, 29 Penn. St. 415. See § 159.

² Walsh v. Wilson, 131 Mass. 535.

³ Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38. See Bonner v. Wiggins, 52 Tex. 125; Clewis v. Hartman, 71 Ga. 810.

⁴ Ragsdale v. Gohlke, 36 Tex. 286; Powell v. Davis, 19 Tex. 380.

⁵ Carpentier v. Small, 35 Cal. 346; Powell v. Davis, 19 Tex. 380.

⁶ Wythe v. Myers, 3 Sawyer, 595; Wendell v. Moulton, 26 N. H. 41; Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Bla. C. C. 202.

⁷ Learned v. Corley, 43 Miss. 687; Daniels v. Bates, 2 G. Gr. (Iowa), 151.

⁸ Wernke v. Hazen, 32 Ind. 431.

⁹ Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 319.

¹⁰ 46 Tex. 408.

defendants to the extent of the value of their improvements, and that it could not be disregarded as surplusage.¹

§ 716. Judgment for improvements.—It was held in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in Scott v. Reese,² that it was improper practice to enter two judgments in the action; one in favor of the plaintiff, for the possession of the land, the other in defendant's favor for the value of his improvements. The court decided that there should be but a single judgment, determining the amount assessed in defendant's favor, for the value of the improvements, and awarding plaintiff the possession of the land, conditional upon his paying the amount of the assessment within the statutory period. In the case cited separate judgments had been entered. The court decided that on appeal from the judgment in defendant's favor, for the value of the improvements, the judgment for possession was not up for review.³

¹ Roberti v. Atwater, 42 Conn. 266; Martin v. Martin, 17 S. & R. (Penn.) 431. See §§ 502, 503.

² 38 Wis. 638.

³ See Russell v. DeFrance, 39 Mo. 506.

CHAPTER XXVII.

POSSESSION.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 717. Possession as evidence of title. | § 723. Distinction between prior possession and adverse possession. |
| 718. Prior possession sufficient against a trespasser or intruder. | 723a. Possession as notice of possessor's rights. |
| 719. Character of the possession. | 723b. Possession to determine conflicting claims. |
| 720. The cases considered. | 723c. Possession in statutory suit to quiet title. |
| 721. Possession which will warrant ejectment against a defendant not the test. | 723d. Possession and paper title. |
| 722. When possession not sufficient to support ejectment. | |

"The law defends possession against everything except a better title."—Holmes' Common Law, p. 382.

"Any possession is a legal possession against a wrong-doer."—Lord Kenyon in Graham v. Peat, 1 East, 246.

Possessio contra omnes valet praeter eum cui jus sit possessionis.

§ 717. Possession as evidence of title.—Having thus traced the remedies for the trial of land titles historically and in the modern procedure through their various stages, and considered the resulting rights of the parties to mesne profits and betterments, it becomes important to notice the titles and defenses common to these actions, and especially to consider questions of evidence peculiar to real property trials, and upon what proofs these actions may be supported or defeated. The rights which result from the possession of land first demand attention.

Allen, J., in delivering the opinion of the New York Court of Appeals, in Rawley v. Brown,¹ said: "Possession of property alone, and without explanation, is evidence of ownership; but is the lowest species of evidence. It is merely presumptive,² and liable to be overcome by any evidence showing the character of the possession, and that it is not necessarily as owner." The possession raises a presumption of fact which may be rebutted.¹ A possession for less than the statutory period that confers title by adverse possession is sufficient.² The question of the effect of mere possession becomes important only when there is no other evidence of title on either side, and the subsequent possession of the defendant was acquired by mere entry.³

¹ 71 N. Y. 85. See Thompson v. Burhans, 79 N. Y. 93; McNeely v. Langan, 22 Ohio St. 37; Golden Fleece Co. v. Cable Con. Co., 12 Nev. 312; s. c. 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 129.

² See Keith v. Keith, 104 Ill. 402; Barger v. Hobbs, 67 Ill. 592.

It was held in Kansas that possession was a low degree of title, and descended to heirs,⁴ and such is the general rule.⁵ A debtor, as we have seen, may have homestead in a possessory interest,⁶ and a naked possession can be sold at sheriff's sale, and the purchaser acquires the right to recover it in ejectment,⁷ and it can be taxed.⁸ Possession of land is prima facie evidence of the highest estate in the property, viz., a seizin in fee,⁹ and, as we shall see, is alone sufficient to support ejectment against trespassers or intruders.¹⁰ This is the general rule. Thus, a person in

¹ Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 142.

² Dominy v. Miller, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 390; Smith v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 338.

³ Smith v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 338; Dunn v. Miller, 75 Mo. 273; Bledsoe v. Simms, 53 Mo. 305; Jackson v. Rightmyre, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 325.

⁴ Mooney v. Olsen, 21 Kansas, 691-697. But see Farris v. Hayes, 9 Oregon, 83; Hall v. Russell, 3 Sawyer, 514.

⁵ See Ludlow v. McBride, 3 Ohio, 241; Phelan v. Kelly, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 389; Gillett v. Gaffney, 3 Col. 351; Teabout v. Daniels, 38 Iowa, 158. See, also, § 296.

⁶ McGrath v. Sinclair, 55 Miss. 89.

⁷ Knox v. Herod, 2 Penn. St. 26; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 501.

⁸ Blackwell on Tax Titles, 5-6.

⁹ Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59; Preston v. Bowmar, 6 Wheat. 580; Blunt v. Aikin, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 522; Adams on Eject. (4th Am. ed.) p. 137; Jackson d. Sparkman v. Porter, 1 Paine, 457; Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 142; Dingey v. Paxton, 60 Miss. 1048; Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73; Woods v. Lane, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 53; Mitchell v. Carder, 21 W. Va. 277; Sears v. Taylor, 4 Col. 38; Cole on Eject. 211; Eakin v. Brewer, 60 Ala. 579; Wilson v. Glenn, 68 Ala. 383; Day v. Alverston, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 223; Murphy v. Loomis, 26 Hun (N. Y.), 659; Wilson v. Palmer, 18 Tex. 592; North Noonday Mining Co. v. Orient Mining Co., 11 Fed. Rep. 125; Mickey v. Stratton, 5 Sawyer, 475; Bradshaw v. Emory, 65 Ala. 208; Doe d. Mills v. Clayton, 73 Ala. 359; Wheeler v. Ladd, 40 Ark. 112; Feirbaugh v. Masterson, 1 Idaho, 135; Keith v. Keith, 104 Ill. 397; Brookings v. Woodin, 74 Me. 222.

¹⁰ Jones v. Easley, 53 Ga. 454; Bates v. Campbell, 25 Wis. 613. The weight of the inference in favor of any claim of right, whether legal or equitable, against the United States, growing out of mere possession, is very slight. Simmons v. Ogle, 105 U. S. 273. See Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall. 187. Mere possession of public lands, though open, exclusive and uninterrupted, creates no impediment to a recovery by the government or by one who receives its conveyance. The statute only begins to run after the title has passed from the government to its grantee. Oaksmith possession of land is presumed to have acquired the title which the people, in their capacity of sovereign, once held;¹ and it is not always a prerequisite to a recovery in ejectment that the plaintiff should trace his title back to the government, as peaceable possession under claim of right will prevail against a mere intruder, and the length of the possession is not material.² A widow as demandant in dower establishes prima facie a seizin in fee in her husband, by showing his actual possession of the premises, claiming as owner.³ As between two possessions the first is preferred;⁴ and where the equities are equal possession prevails.⁵ A party who only shows possession under an unfounded claim of title will be defeated by evidence of actual possession and occupation prior to the entry under such pretended claim.⁶ A party having actual possession of a mining claim has sufficient title to maintain an action against trespassers, although he may not have conformed to all the particulars required by law in taking up the claim.⁷ Possession of land for a long period of time will raise a presumption of a grant which will be enforced against the government.⁸

v. Johnston, 92 U. S. 343. See Burgess v. Gray, 16 How. 48. But contracts concerning possessory rights of actual settlers are valid between the parties. Lamb v. Davenport, 18 Wall. 307. It is doubtful whether a mere possessory interest will support a partition suit. Strettell v. Ballou, 3 McCra. 46. See Horncastle v. Charlesworth, 11 Sim. 315; Williams v. Wiggand, 53 Ill. 233; Ross v. Cobb, 48 Ill. 111.

¹ People v. Trinity Church, 22 N. Y. 44. See § 192.

² Doe v. West, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 135; Boyreau v. Campbell, McAll. 119; aff'd Campbell v. Boyreau, 21 How. 223.

³ Sparrow v. Kingman, 1 N. Y. 242; Ward v. McIntosh, 12 Ohio St. 231; Jackson v. Waltermire, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 301; Bancroft v. White, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 190.

⁴ Potter v. Knowles, 5 Cal. 87.

⁵ St. Johnsbury v. Morrill, 55 Vt. 165.

⁶ Ford v. Belmont, 69 N. Y. 567.

⁷ North Noonday Mining Co. v. Orient Mining Co., 11 Fed. Rep. 125.

⁸ United States v. Beebe, 17 Fed. Rep. 39, and cases cited. Mr. Irving Browne deduces the following rules from the authorities as to the possession necessary to maintain ejectment. See 7 Alb. L. J. 401. (1.) The possession need not be of such a character as would work a disseisin of the true owner. Citing Slater v. Rawson, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 439; Hubbard v. Little, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 476. (2.) The possession must be actual and not constructive merely. Citing Campbell v. Arnold, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 512; Wickham v. Freeman, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 183; Stuyvesant v. Tompkins, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 61; Leland v. Touey, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 331; Phillips v. De Groat, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 196; Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 95. (3.) The possessory acts must be such as in themselves evidence an assertion of right to the soil, but they may differ according to the different nature and condition of the property itself. See Bar-

§ 718. Prior possession sufficient against a trespasser or intruder.—In Christy v. Scott,¹ Curtis, J., in delivering the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, said: "A mere intruder cannot enter on a person actually seized, and eject him, and then question his title, or set up an outstanding title in another. The maxim that the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of the defendant's, is applicable to all actions for the recovery of property. But if the plaintiff had actual prior possession of the land, this is strong enough to enable him to recover it from a mere trespasser who entered without any title. He may do so by a writ of entry where that remedy is still practiced,² or by an ejectment,³ or he may maintain trespass."⁴ The same rule, of course, appertains in trespass to try title,⁵ and, as against an intruder, it is immaterial whether the legal title is vested in the holder of it absolutely, or whether he holds it in trust for another. Hence, where an attorney purchased land in his own name, it was held that the nature and extent of his interest could only be questioned by his client or those claiming under him.⁶ It follows from these cases that where there is an absence of proof of title on either side, a presumption of title in favor of the first possessor may be indulged. And so the authorities hold.⁷ tholomew v. Edwards, 1 Houst. (Del.) 17; Morris v. Hayes, 2 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 93; Allen v. Suseng, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 204; Oatman v. Fowler, 43 Vt. 462; Nichols v. Todd, 2 Gray (Mass.) 568; Cook v. Rider, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 186. (4.) The possession must be exclusive in the claimant, and not mixed or concurrent with the defendant. Citing Inhabitants of Barnstable v. Thacher, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 239; Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 423. In Asher v. Whitlock, L. R. 1 Q. B. 5, Cockburn, C. J., said: "I take it as clearly established, that possession is good against all the world except the person who can show a good title; and it would be mischievous to change this established doctrine. In Doe d. Hughes v. Dyeball, Moody & M. 346, one year's possession by the plaintiff was held good against a person who came and turned him out." In the same case Mellor, J., said: "The fact of possession is prima facie evidence of seizin in fee."

¹ 14 How. 282. See Burt v. Panjaud, 99 U. S. 180; Wilson v. Glenn, 68 Ala. 386; Seymour v. Creswell, 18 Fla. 38.

² Citing Jackson v. Boston & W. R. R. Co., 1 Cush. (Mass.) 575.

³ Citing Allen v. Rivington, 2 Saund. 111; Doe v. Reade, 8 East, 356; Doe d. Hughes v. Dyeball, Moody & M. 346; Jackson v. Hazen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 438; Whitney v. Wright, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 171.

⁴ Citing Catteris v. Cowper, 4 Taunt. 548; Graham v. Peat, 1 East, 246.

⁵ Caplen v. Drew, 54 Tex. 493.

⁶ Lair v. Hunsicker, 28 Penn. St. 115.

⁷ Fowke v. Darnall, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 317; Whitney v. Wright, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 171;

This is necessarily the rule, for it rarely happens that in the older portions of the country a possessor can trace his title, by an uninterrupted chain, to its original source. To raise a presumption, however, as to the quality or degree of the interest claimed, if not an absolute fee, proof of possession must be accompanied by evidence of some claim of title.¹

§ 719. Character of the possession.—The question of what constitutes evidence of possession of land sufficient to raise a presumption of title and to support ejectment without other proof of title, has been before the courts in many forms. The varied uses to which real property may be put render the task of formulating a rule governing the subject one of extreme difficulty. A distinction, which will be presently considered, has been suggested, and to some extent established, between the possession which will uphold a recovery in ejectment against an intruder, and the possession which will ripen into an adverse title. This distinction is not easily traced, and the wisdom of the policy of engrafting into the law disseizins of different degrees may certainly be questioned. Acts which constitute mere trespasses or depredations upon land, often cannot be distinguished from acts of ownership which amount to a disseizin; the introduction of an additional classification of acts of possession, where the line of distinction is still narrower, will be very difficult of application, if not practically impossible, in ordinary cases.² In *Woods v. Banks*³ it appeared that the plaintiff's agent entered upon the land with a view of taking possession of it under a claim of title, and marked the lines by spotting the trees around it. It was held, in trover, for timber cut on the lot, that this was a sufficient prior possession of the Doe d. Harding v. Cooke, 7 Bing. 346; Hunter v. Starin, 26 Hun (N. Y.), 529; Schultz v. Arnot, 33 Mo. 172; Wilson v. Palmer, 18 Tex. 592; Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 426; Shumway v. Phillips, 22 Penn. St. 155; Burt v. Panjaud, 99 U. S. 180; Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 142; Kline v. Johnston, 24 Penn. St. 72; Oregon Cas. R. Co. v. Oregon Steam Nav. Co., 3 Oregon, 178; Kelly v. Mack, 49 Cal. 524; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 618; Clarke v. Clarke, 51 Ala. 498; Lum v. Reed, 53 Miss. 73.

¹ See Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59. Possession is usually a question of fact to be found by the jury under proper instructions. Maxwell v. Paine, 53 Mich. 30.

² Compare Perry v. Weeks, 137 Mass. 584.

³ 14 N. H. 101.

land to uphold a recovery against a trespasser who subsequently entered upon it, and that it was not necessary to cultivate or to build a fence in order to take possession of land. This case was substantially followed, by the Supreme Court of New York, in Thompson v. Burhans,¹ but this latter case was reversed in the New York Court of Appeals.² Earl, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In *Woods v. Banks*³ it was held that an entry upon a lot, with a view of taking possession of it under a claim of title, and marking the lines of it by spotting the trees around it, is a sufficient possession of it against one who can show no right to enter upon the land, to sustain an action of trover for timber cut and taken from the lot. It is sufficient to say of that case that it is sustained by neither principle nor any authority to be found in this State. Can one mark the trees around one thousand or fifty thousand acres of forest land, and thus gain a possession which will shut out all the rest of the world but the true owner? If the land were derelict, without an owner, according to the philosophic writers on the origin of society and of property, such acts would not give such possession as would exclude others. Passing around land or over it, asserting title ever so loudly, does not give possession." In this case of Thompson v. Burhans it appeared that the locus in quo, which consisted of a very extensive tract of woodland, was not inclosed; no part of it had ever been cultivated or improved; whatever work had been done upon it consisted in taking value from it, and not in putting value upon it; and it did not appear that any one had ever lived in the shanty which had been erected upon the lands. The court said, "Payment of taxes, surveying and assertion of right do not constitute possession. They merely show a claim of title. . . . Going upon land, from time to time, and cutting logs thereon, does not give possession. Such acts are merely trespasses upon the land against the true owner, whoever he may be. Any other intruder may commit similar trespasses without liability to any other trespasser. Such acts do not constitute a disseizin of the true owner." The court, in the course of the opinion, observed that it had never been supposed that the hunter had possession of the forest through which he roamed in pursuit of game, or that the wood-chopper could be said to be in possession of the woods into which he entered to cut logs. It will thus be apparent that, at least so far as the State of New York is concerned, the case of Woods v. Banks, ubi supra, is not an authority. Indeed, it seems remarkable that such slender and shadowy proofs of assertion of ownership should ever have been considered sufficient to form the basis of a finding of possession. This case is clearly the result of the attempt to establish disseizins of different grades. In *Miller v. Long Island Railroad Company*¹ the question of the possession of woodland was considered in the New York Court of Appeals. Earl, J., said: "The possession, unaccompanied with paper title, requisite to furnish the presumption of ownership sufficient to maintain this action, must be actual; nothing less will answer. When lands are unoccupied, unimproved, and uninclosed, it is quite difficult to make out such possession. It can be done by showing that the lot was kept as a wood lot of suitable size for an improved farm, and that the owner of the farm habitually, for some years, cut thereon his firewood, saw logs, and fencing and building timber."² § 720. The cases considered.—In Sankey v. Noyes,³ the Supreme Court of Nevada said: "What acts are sufficient to constitute such a possession of public land as will maintain ejectment, has long been a vexed question in the courts of California, and our own courts have found it impossible to announce any general rules that would meet the varying circumstances of every case. But it seems to be generally agreed that these acts must in a great measure depend upon the character of the land, the locality, and the object for which it is taken up. While arable or meadow land should be inclosed with a substantial fence, cultivated and improved land, which is only valuable for the timber upon it, might be held by a much less substantial inclosure, and cultivation or improvement would not be necessary." In Lea v. Hernandez,¹ in the Supreme Court of Texas, the rule is recognized that a plaintiff may, by reason of his prior peaceable possession of lands, recover an ejectment against a mere trespasser by whom he has been dispossessed. The court supplement this by saying that "the fact of his prior possession must be clearly and unequivocally proved." The indicia of possession which the court in this case considered insufficient to uphold ejectment, are not fully stated in the report of the case. In Plume v. Seward,² the Supreme Court of California, after deciding that possession is prima facie evidence of title and sufficient to support ejectment, said: "There must be an actual bona fide occupation, a possessio pedis, a subjection to the will and control, as contra-distinguished from the mere assertion of title, and the exercise of casual acts of ownership, such as recording deeds, paying taxes, etc." The mere staking off of land, without occupation or other acts of ownership, does not constitute such a possession as would maintain ejectment, unless such acts were closely followed up by other and continuous acts of ownership.³ In California it has been held to be sufficient proof of prior possession if the plaintiff shows that for several years before defendant's entry, plaintiff inclosed the premises with a fence, and, until the adverse possession, cultivated the inclosure by raising and gathering crops thereon, though no direct proof of the character of the fence is given.⁴ And, in Pennsylvania, a person who entered upon vacant land with a view to acquire title under the laws of the State, may recover against one who turns him out of possession without right.⁵

¹ 15 Hun (N. Y.), 580, 584.

² 79 N. Y. 93, 101.

³ 14 N. H. 101.

¹ 71 N. Y. 380.

² See Machin v. Geortner, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 239. This subject is discussed in treating of adverse possession. See Chaps. XXVIII, XXIX, XXX.

³ 1 Nevada, 71. See Courtney v. Turner, 12 Nev. 345.

¹ 10 Tex. 137.

² 4 Cal. 95.

³ Sankey v. Noyes, 1 Nev. 68-72.

⁴ Hestres v. Brannan, 21 Cal. 423.

⁵ Kline v. Johnston, 24 Penn. St. 72.

Possession to sustain trespass.—Proof that the whole premises were used as a wood lot for the purpose of fuel and fencing, is sufficient evidence of actual posses-

§ 721. Possession which will warrant ejectment against a defendant not the test.—In Quicksilver Mining Company v. Hicks,¹ it was said that any subjection of land to the dominion of an individual, as owner, would constitute possession sufficient to enable an adverse claimant to maintain ejectment against him; that actual occupation in person or by an agent or servant was not essential. Hence maintaining a bridge, one end of which springs from a small strip of land on the bank of a creek, under a claim to own the strip, is sufficient evidence of possession to warrant ejectment. The test of the sufficiency of the possession which will warrant the owner in instituting an ejectment, and making the alleged occupant a defendant, cannot be applied in determining the sufficiency of the proof of possession which will support ejectment; for, as we have seen, trespasses committed by one claiming title, may be considered acts of possession,² and squatters,³ and even servants,⁴ who manifestly could not support the action, may be made defendants.

§ 722. When possession not sufficient to support ejectment.—The Supreme Court of California held that inclosing land with a fence, consisting of posts seven feet apart and one board six inches wide nailed to the posts, but which was not sufficient to turn cattle, and the land being uncultivated, did not constitute possession sufficient to sustain ejectment.⁵ The mere taking from the land of a portion of the herbage growing thereon, is not sufficient to give the right of possession.⁶ The principle of law, which permits a recovery against a trespasser, intruder or wrong-doer, upon sion to maintain trespass. Machin v. Geortner, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 239; Argotsinger v. Vines, 82 N. Y. 313. Compare Miller v. Long Island R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 380. Possession is sufficient to maintain trespass. Hayward v. Sedgley, 14 Me. 439; Heath v. Williams, 25 Me. 209; Truss v. Old, 6 Rand. (Va.) 556; s. c. 18 Am. Dec. 748, note, 751. See McClain v. Todd, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 335; s. c. 22 Am. Dec. 37; Matson v. Cook, 4 Bing. N. C. 392; Catteris v. Cowper, 4 Taunt. 547; Graham v. Peat, 1 East, 246.

¹ 4 Sawyer, 688. See Ward v. Parks, 72 N. C. 452; Burke v. Hammond, 76 Penn. St. 172; Courtney v. Turner, 12 Nev. 345.

² See § 234.

³ See § 241.

⁴ See § 242, n.

⁵ Baldwin v. Simpson, 12 Cal. 560. See Hughes v. Hazard, 42 Cal. 149; Southmayd v. Henley, 45 Cal. 101.

⁶ Steinback v. Fitzpatrick, 12 Cal. 295.

proof only of prior possession of the land by the plaintiff, does not extend to the case of a defendant who acquired the possession peaceably, and holds it under a claim or color of title. In the latter case the defendant may protect the possession so acquired and held, and may force the plaintiff to recover solely upon the strength of his own title, and may avail himself of defects in plaintiff's title, or prove that the true title is outstanding in another.¹

§ 723. Distinction between prior possession and adverse possession.—This distinction has already been noticed. In Hunter v. Starin,² Cullen, J., in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of New York, said: "It is urged by the defendant that the facts proved are insufficient to constitute an adverse possession in the plaintiff, and numerous cases are cited to establish this contention. I think defendant is correct, and the finding of the court below of an adverse possession erroneous. But I think there is a plain difference between the possession which will bar the true owner of his title, and commonly called 'adverse,' and the possession which is sufficient to support a title as against third parties. I think the cases recognize this distinction. In Smith v. Burtis,³ the plaintiff claimed title by adverse possession. Kent, Ch. J., says: 'We may infer title from his ten years' possession sufficient to put the tenant upon his defense, but we ought not to infer a tortious entry or an actual ouster sufficient to bar every defense.' So, in Wheeler v. Spinola,⁴ the distinction even in physical elements between possession and adverse possession is recognized. To constitute the latter the possession must be

¹ See Fowler v. Whiteman, 2 Ohio St. 270; Drew v. Swift, 46 N. Y. 204. In People v. Batchelder, 27 Cal. 73, the court said: "We are not disposed to extend the doctrine which recognizes the actual possessor of land for the uses to which land is ordinarily employed, as its owner, to the casual and temporary occupant, whose use of it is subordinate to the pursuits of hunting and fishing, or the gathering of the eggs of birds whose resting places are upon the islands of the sea. It would be equally reasonable to recognize in the hunter who had first penetrated the mountain wild in quest of game, the exclusive right to it as his hunting ground, as it would to accord to the Farallone Egg Company the right to the exclusive possession of the Farallone Islands, or any one of them, for the business of gathering eggs left there by wild birds."

² 26 Hun (N. Y.), 529.

³ 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 197.

⁴ 54 N. Y. 377.

exclusive, while the exercise of ordinary control and dominion of the land, I think, constitutes a sufficient possession from which to infer title as against strangers." The principal acts of dominion and control proved to have been exercised in Hunter v. Starin, the case from which we are quoting, consisted in cutting sedge and wood from the land. Such acts, however, unless the woodland is connected with a farm, may be treated as mere trespasses, and do not necessarily constitute occupancy, or amount to a claim or assertion of possession or ownership, and the case ought, properly, to be classed with Woods v. Banks, ubi supra, where the acts of possession consisted of spotting the trees around the locus in quo, which latter case, as we have seen, the New York Court of Appeals refused to follow.¹ Indeed, Hunter v. Starin can hardly be reconciled with Thompson v. Burhans, for, in the latter case, aside from the question of extent of territory, the acts of possession, and assertions of ownership, were more numerous and defined than in the former case, and, in addition to cutting timber, included payment of taxes, surveying, and other indicia of claim and assertion of ownership.

The distinction, which some of the cases seek to establish, between prior possession and adverse possession, may be likened to the distinction applicable to a disseizin between strangers, and between tenants in common, or parties occupying a relation of trust; the difference is in degree, or in the amount of proof which must be furnished in each case, though otherwise the analogy does not hold good. This distinction is denied in Missouri.² The Supreme Court of California say: "Wherein, it may be asked, does the actual possession, required in case of prior possession, differ, if at all, from the actual possession demanded in adverse possession? We see no ground for drawing any distinction, and think none exists."³

§ 723a. Possession as notice of possessor's rights.—The possession of property is notice to all persons dealing with the property of the rights of the occupant in it.¹ It is said in Brown v. Volkening,² that "the character of the possession which is sufficient to put a person upon inquiry, and which will be equivalent to actual notice of rights or equities in persons other than those who have a title upon record, is very well established by an unbroken current of authority. The possession and occupation must be actual, open and visible; it must not be equivocal, occasional, or for a special or temporary purpose; neither must it be consistent with the title of the apparent owner by the record."³ Constructive notice will not suffice.⁴

¹ See Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101; Thompson v. Burhans, 15 Hun (N. Y.), 584; reversed, 79 N. Y. 93.

² Spurlock v. Dougherty, 81 Mo. 184. See Dalton v. Bank of St. Louis, 54 Mo. 105; Doan v. Sloan, 42 Mo. 106.

³ Polack v. McGrath, 32 Cal. 21.

§ 723b. Possession to determine conflicting claims.—The words "actual possession," used in the statutes of New York,⁵ permitting a party after three years' occupancy to bring a statutory proceeding to determine any conflicting claims to real property, has been construed to mean an actual possession, in fact a pedis possessio, and not a possession following the wake of the title called constructive possession.⁶

§ 723c. Possession in statutory suit to quiet title.—In many States and territories the statutory action to quiet title

¹ Bartling v. Brasuhn, 102 Ill. 443; Bost v. Setzer, 87 N. C. 187; Johnson v. Hauser, 88 N. C. 390; Atwood v. Bearss, 47 Mich. 72; Conner v. Goodman, 104 Ill. 365. "Possession of Real Estate as Notice of Adverse Title." 4 Cent. L. J. 122, and cases cited. See Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 511.

² 64 N. Y. 82.

³ S. P. Pope v. Allen, 90 N. Y. 298, 303. See Moyer v. Hinman, 13 N. Y. 180; De Ruyter v. Trustees of St. Peter's Church, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 555; Atwood v. Bearss, 47 Mich. 72; Gouverneur v. Lynch, 2 Paige (N. Y.), 300; Norcross v. Widgery, 2 Mass. 508; Campbell v. Fetterman, 20 W. Va. 398; Colby v. Kenniston, 4 N. H. 262; Kendall v. Lawrence, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 540; Patten v. Moore, 32 N. H. 382.

⁴ Constructive notice.—Mr. Justice Woods said in Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 511, "Constructive notice is defined to be in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumption of which is so violent that the court will not even allow of its being controverted (Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anst. 432; Kennedy v. Green, 3 M. & K. 699). Where possession is relied on as giving constructive notice it must be open and unambiguous, and not liable to be misunderstood or misconstrued (Ely v. Wilcox, 20 Wis. 523; Patten v. Moore, 32 N. H. 382; Billington v. Welsh, 5 Bin. [Pa.] 129). It must be sufficiently distinct and unequivocal, so as to put the purchaser on his guard (Butler v. Stevens, 26 Me. 484; Wright v. Wood, 23 Pa. St. 120; Bogue v. Williams, 48 Ill. 371). As said by Strong, J., in Meehan v. Williams (48 Pa. St. 238), what makes inquiry a duty is such a visible state of things as is inconsistent with a perfect right in him who proposes to sell (see, also, Holmes v. Stout, 4 N. J. Eq. 492; McMeehan v. Griffing, 3 Pick. [Mass.] 149; Hanrick v. Thompson, 9 Ala. 409").

⁵ 1 R. S. 312, § 1.

⁶ Churchill v. Onderdonk, 59 N. Y. 134. See Ford v. Belmont, 69 N. Y. 567.

must be brought by a plaintiff in possession. In this case it is held that the allegation of possession is material, and must be sustained by proof on the trial, and without this averment the complaint is demurrable.¹ As to the character of the possession, some courts hold that it must be accompanied by a claim of right, legal or equitable;² others that it is immaterial how possession was obtained.³ It must, of course, be an actual possession, such as would enable the plaintiff, without the aid of a paper title, to maintain an action against a mere intruder.⁴

§ 723d. Possession and paper title.—When a party is under the necessity of proving title, it is not sufficient to simply produce a deed; he must show possession in his grantor, or possession accompanying the deed; without this he proves no title.⁵ But when it is found or conceded that a party has title that is sufficient, for his possession is presumed, and the occupation of any other person is considered to be in subordination to the legal title, unless adverse possession is shown.⁶ And where reliance is placed solely upon paper title, the land not having been actually occupied, improved or inclosed, the proof must be of a chain of title from the original patentee or donee.⁷ But plaintiff having shown the legal title in himself is presumed to have been in possession within the time required by law, no adverse possession being shown.⁸ The execution and recording of a warranty deed of wild land, without other evidence of the grantor's title, will not enable the grantee to maintain a writ of entry against a person who had been in possession of land for more than twenty years, although the acts of possession are not such as will constitute a disseizin of the true owner.⁹

¹ Ferris v. Irving, 28 Cal. 645; Pralus v. Jefferson G. & S. Min. Co., 34 Cal. 558; Shaffer v. Whelpley, 37 Wis. 334.

² Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 402; King v. French, 2 Sawy. 441; Tichenor v. Knapp, 6 Oregon, 205.

³ Scorpion S. M. Co. v. Marsano, 10 Nev. 370; Calderwood v. Brooks, 45 Cal. 519.

⁴ Sepulveda v. Sepulveda, 39 Cal. 13.

⁵ Miller v. Long Island R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 383; Gardner v. Heart, 1 N. Y. 528; Miller v. Downing, 54 N. Y. 631.

⁶ Stevens v. Hauser, 39 N. Y. 304.

⁷ Miller v. Long Island R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 383.

⁸ Porter v. McGrath, 9 J. & S. (N. Y.) 84.

⁹ Perry v. Weeks, 137 Mass. 584.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

ADVERSE POSSESSION UNDER STATUTES OF LIMITATIONS.

- | | |
|---|--|
| § 724. Limitations and prescription historically considered. 725. Statutes of limitation governing real actions in the different States. 726. Theory of prescription and limitations. 727. Purpose and policy of statutes of limitations. 728. General principles of possession, seizin and ouster. 729. What constitutes adverse possession in general. 730. Effect and requisites of entry and ouster. 731. Requisites of adverse possession in general. 732. Possession must be "actual;" what constitutes. 733. Requisites of possession as affected by nature of the land. 734. What is a sufficient actual possession. 735. Possession must be "open" and "notorious." 736. Notice to the owner, actual or constructive. 737. } Possession must be "continuous." 738. }  739. Requisites of continuity in possession. 740. Interruption of the possession. 741. By re-entry of the owner. | § 742. Statutory regulations as to an effectual re-entry. 743. Effect of bringing an action or recovering a judgment in ejectment. 744. Possession lost or interrupted by abandonment. 745. Interruption by other adverse claimants. 746. Tacking. 747. } Privity, what constitutes for purposes of tacking. 748. }  749. Possession must be "hostile." 750. Where the possession is begun in subserviency to the owner's title. —The question as between tenants-in-common. 751. The rule applied generally where there is a privity of possession or title. 752. Possession must be "exclusive." 753. Conflicting possessions, general principles regulating. 753a. Exceptions.—No adverse possession against the State or government.—Municipal corporations. 753b. Disabilities.—Infancy. 753c. Co-existing disabilities. 753d. Subsequent disabilities. — Tacking. 753e. Suspension by agreement. 753f. Disabilities of co-tenants. |
|---|--|

§ 724. Limitations and prescription historically considered.

—The belief is quite prevalent that no stated or fixed times of limitation for the recovery of lands existed at common law,¹ and that limitation governing real actions is wholly a matter of statutory regulation. This view of the matter is, however, we believe, inaccurate. The statute of

¹ People v. Gilbert, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 227, per Woodworth, J. In United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 489, Swayne, J., said: "The common law fixed no time as to the bringing of actions. Limitations derive their authority from statutes."

Merton,¹ usually referred to as the source of all modern legislation on the subject, did indeed provide various periods of limitation for different real writs, but an examination of the writs in use before its passage shows that limitations of some sort had always been required. The limitation was, in early times, fixed by the writ itself. Thus among the pleas in the time of John, we find the limitation de tempore quo rex Henricus avus noster fuit vivus et mortuus; in a writ of aiel die quo rex Henricus abiit appears; and so in a writ of mort d'ancestor, the first coronation of Henry II (a limitation of between thirty and forty years) is fixed as a limit.² From this early evidence the original periods of limitation seem to have been arbitrarily fixed by royal authority, and not until the middle of the thirteenth century can it be said that the periods were at all defined by law, in the modern sense of the word. This is in accordance with what might be inferred from what we know in other respects of the early history of procedure in England. The writ introduced into England by the Normans was not, at first, anything more than a device for bringing the controversy to which it related within the royal jurisdiction. It had nothing to do with the form or nature of the action, except that it usually specified the nature of the demand. During the period which, roughly, covered the two centuries between the Conquest and the statute of Merton, the King's prerogative to issue and sell writs was unquestioned. As is pointed out by Mr. Bigelow, in his recent learned work on the History of Procedure in England:³ "There is no evidence that the adoption of the writs of Glanvill laid any restriction upon the king in this particular. He continued to issue writs whenever it suited his pleasure, or answered his pecuniary needs. The king sanctioned the use of the writs of Glanvill; and probably his justiciar generally felt bound to follow them. The court clerks certainly were bound to do so. Suitors must have had to go to the king (or possibly to the Council) for writs adapted to special and peculiar cases" (p. 197). It was not until the year 1258, that the Provisions of Oxford bound the Chancellor to issue no more writs, except writs of course, without command of the king and of his council present with him. "This, with the growing independence of the judiciary on the one hand, and the settlement of legal process on the other, terminated the right to issue special writs, and at last fixed the common writs in unchangeable form." The periods of limitation, originally fixed at the pleasure of the king, now gradually became matters of statutory regulation. By the statutes of Westminster, 3 Edw. I, c. 39, A. D. 1275, the writ of right was limited to the first day of the reign of Richard I, and other limitations were fixed for other cases. The period established by this law, originally nearly a hundred years, increased every day, and not being capable of any abridgment, as in early times, by the use of royal prerogative, gave rise to much trouble and inconvenience, which finally led to the passage of the first general statute of limitations (32 Hen. VIII, c. 2, A. D. 1540). This was followed, nearly a hundred years later, by the more comprehensive statute of 21 James I, c. 16, entitled "An Act for limitation of actions, and for avoiding of suits in law." This statute has been the model of all the legislation on the limitation of actions for the recovery of land in this country. It was generally adopted here during the colonial period, and though now superseded by more modern legislation, the rules of construction laid down by the courts with regard to it, are held to govern the statutes which have been modeled upon it and taken its place.¹ The period fixed by the statute of Westminster, as a limitation in cases of writs of right, has led to some confusion with regard to the analogy between titles by prescription and titles by limitation. Statutes of limitation, as will be shown, bar the assertion by the owner of his title to the land. Technically and strictly, as we shall see, prescription only applies to incorporeal hereditaments, such as a way, a water-course, or the like, i. e., interests relating to land which lie in grant.² The original theory of prescription, in the case of easements, was that an incorporeal right in the lands of another, the origin of which could not be traced, must have been enjoyed from a time exceeding the limit of human memory.¹ The date of the coronation of Richard I, established by the statute of Westminster as a period of limitation in writs of right, had no necessary bearing upon the question of prescriptive titles to easements or other incorporeal hereditaments; nevertheless the courts, proceeding by analogy at an early date, applied the period appropriate in one class of cases to the other. It was held that an undisturbed enjoyment of an easement for a period of time sufficient to bar the title of the true owner of land in favor of a party holding by adverse possession, was sufficient also to give a title to an easement.² On this principle, when the limitation was reduced to sixty years by the statute of 32 Henry VIII, c. 2, the period of legal memory ought to have been reduced by the courts to the same period. But this was not done, probably because the introduction by the courts of the doctrine of a presumed grant made it a matter of little importance. The theory of this latter doctrine was that after the lapse of a period which would, under the statute of limitations, be sufficient to bar an action for the recovery of lands, the jury, in the case of an incorporeal hereditament, might be permitted to presume a grant.³ Whether the period of legal memory still goes back to the date of the coronation of Richard I, is now a matter of curious learning, and does not even affect title to incorporeal hereditaments acquired

¹ 20 Hen. III, c. 8 [A. D. 1235].

² See Glanvill, lib. 13, c. 3.

³ History of Procedure in England, from the Norman Conquest. The Norman period. By Melville M. Bigelow, Ph.D., 1880.

¹ Walden v. Gratz, 1 Wheat. 292.

² See especially Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. v. McFarlan, 43 N. J. Law, 605.

¹ Hall v. McLeod, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 98.

² 2 Rolle's Abr. p. 269; 2 Inst. p. 238; Rex v. Hudson, 2 Stra. 909; 3 Starkie on Ev. 1205; Coolidge v. Learned, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 503; 3 Washb. R. P. p. *449.

³ Hill v. Crosby, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 466; Carlisle v. Cooper, 19 N. J. Eq. 256; Kingston v. Lesley, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 383. In Ross' Early History of Land-Holding among the Germans, p. 75 et seq., the learned author observes that "a prescriptive title to land was admitted among the Franks at the time of Lex Salica. If a stranger settled on a piece of land in the clan village and no objection was made, either by the owner of the land or any of his neighbors, during the period of twelve months, the stranger acquired a right of property and inheritance in the land he had appropriated, and became a regular inhabitant of the village. . . . Among the early Latins, the ownership of land was acquired by possession during two years instead of one. . . . A prescriptive title was admitted among the Lombards in the time of King Rothar. We read, in his edict, that after five years the holder of a piece of land is not obliged to fight for it; provided he brings witnesses to say that he has had possession of the land during that time." See § 2, note.

by prescription, while neither the doctrine of legal memory, nor the theory of a presumed grant, has any practical application to the matter we are now about to consider—the length of time under the statutes of limitation by which an action to recover land by the true owner is barred or taken away.

§ 725. Statutes of limitation governing real actions in the different States.—Without attempting to discuss in detail the various statutes of limitation applicable to real actions adopted by the different States, we may say generally that, being of the same origin, historically, and adopted upon common considerations of public policy, and having the same main object in view, namely, the quieting and settlement of titles to land by barring any assertion of title by the true owner, provided he has been out of possession of the land for a fixed time, the statutes differ from one another only in respect to the extent in time of the limitation imposed, and in respect to minor provisions, such as those suspending the operation of the statute in favor of persons under disabilities.¹ All these statutes are, in substance and effect, as follows: No person shall commence an action for the recovery of lands except within a certain number of years from the time when the right to bring such action accrued, or unless within the same number of years he, or one with whom he is in privity, has been in possession of the premises. As a rule, there are no provisions in the statutes of the different States declaring in terms that adverse possession shall confer a title upon the adverse possessor, nor any provisions as to what will constitute a disseizin of the true owner and an adverse possession in another, but questions of seizin and disseizin, entry and ouster, and as to what acts will establish an adverse possession by a stranger, and, hence, whether the statute can be pleaded as a bar to an action by the owner, are left to be determined by the courts, in each case, by the principles of the common law. In New York, however, and in the several States which have adopted almost verbatim its Code of Procedure, certain requirements, which must exist to constitute adverse possession, are expressly laid down in the statute, and a distinction is made in the statute itself between possession under color of title and a naked possession under a claim of title founded upon no written instrument. There are also certain provisions as to presumptions of possession in certain cases, etc.¹ But these provisions are for the most part declaratory of the common law, and the general rules as to adverse possession which have always obtained are in the main adopted by all the courts in construing and applying the statutes of their respective States. We shall confine ourselves, therefore, to the consideration of these general principles, without attempting to further notice the distinctions between, or the special provisions of, the various statutes as enacted by the several States.²

¹ See §§ 753a–753f.

§ 726. Theory of prescription and limitations.—As has been stated, the theory of prescription, and of the title thereby acquired, rests upon the presumption of a past grant inferred from and evidenced by an adverse enjoyment for a period fixed by law. A title to an incorporeal hereditament is thus said to be acquired by prescription. The essence of this doctrine is the enjoyment of the right by the claimant, which enjoyment creates the title. The doctrine of limitations, on the other hand, rests upon no such presumption of a right or title in one other than the true owner of the land; on the contrary, it assumes the

¹ See New York Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 362-375, and the statutes of following States: South Carolina, Wisconsin, Florida, California, Nevada, and also Maine R. S. c. 147, § 11.

² Adverse possession superseded in England.—In Hanson v. Johnson, 62 Md. 25, 27, Robinson, J., said: "A great deal has been said as to what constitutes adverse possession, and it would be a wearisome task to examine at length the many cases in which this question has been considered. Prior to the statute of 3 & 4 Will. IV, ch. 27, it was an ever-recurring and troublesome question in England, but by that statute, passed in 1833, the doctrine of adverse possession was virtually abolished, and by it possession of any kind for twenty years was made a bar, unless there was either a payment of rent or an acknowledgment of some kind by the party in possession. The effect of the statute, says Lord Denman in Culley v. Doe d. Taylerson, 3 Per. & Dav. 539, is to put an end to all questions and discussions whether the possession of lands be adverse or not; and if one party has been in possession for twenty years, whether adversely or not, the claimant whose original right of entry occurred above twenty years before bringing the ejectment is barred." Citing Nepean v. Doe d. Knight, 2 M. & W. 911; Doe d. Pritchard v. Jauncey, 8 C. & P. 99. It is doubtful, however, whether the titles in this country are in such condition as to warrant this radical change in the law.

title to be in the latter, but refuses to allow him to assert it because of his want of possession. The essence of the doctrine of limitations is, technically, therefore, the non-possession of the true owner, not, as under the theory of prescription, the adverse enjoyment of some one else. Prescription is positive and creates; limitation is negative and destroys. The latter can properly be said to create only so far as it destroys a remedy, or, as is said in the leading case of Humbert v. Trinity Church:¹ "It is of the nature of the statute of limitations . . . to mature a wrong into a right by cutting off the remedy." Adverse possession makes a title in that it deprives the real owner of the power of asserting the true title against the adverse occupant.²

§ 727. Purpose and policy of statutes of limitations.—Statutes of limitations applicable to actions for the recovery of land, like all statutes of limitations, are founded upon considerations of public policy;³ "to promote the peace and good order of society, by quieting possessions and estates, and avoiding litigation."⁴ Such statutes are for this reason characterized as statutes of "repose,"⁵ and, with respect to land, are founded upon the additional consideration, that it is contrary to the interests of the State that lands should lie uncultivated during the litigation over the title to them, and that, therefore, a limitation should be put upon such litigation.⁶ It has been said that "The statute protects the occupant, not for his merit, for he has none, but for the demerit of his antagonist in delaying the contest beyond the period assigned for it, when papers may be lost, facts forgotten, or witnesses dead."⁷

¹ 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 587. See Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. v. McFarlan, 43 N. J. Law, 606.

² See § 727.

³ Elder v. Bradley, 2 Sneed (Tenn.), 253; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312.

⁴ Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 614. The statute of limitations is said, by Story, to be one "of repose to quiet titles, to suppress frauds, and to supply the deficiency of proofs arising from the ambiguity and obscurity, or the antiquity of transactions." Story's Conflict of Laws, § 576.

⁵ Bledsoe v. Little, 5 Miss. 24. "It operates as a statute of absolute repose." Barrett v. Allegheny Nat. Bank, 6 Mo. App. 319.

⁶ Angell on Limitations (6th ed.), p. 6.

⁷ Gibson, C. J., in Sailor v. Hertzogg, 2 Penn. St. 182.

The policy upon which the statute of limitations, for the recovery of land in Texas, is also stated to rest is that "of compelling those who had a right of entry under title, to take actual possession of their lands, and have the country settled, at the peril of being ousted by those who would settle the lands and improve the country."¹ But whatever the theory of limitations may be, as distinguished from prescription, and whether the title resulting from adverse possession be considered as created or transferred by the statute,² or as founded upon a presumed grant,³ or as conveyed to the adverse possessor by the possession itself for the required time,⁴ and though the prime object of these statutes may be the destruction of the right of re-entry, the necessary result and legal effect⁵ is the establishment of the exclusive adverse rights of him through whose possession the right to assert a paramount title has been extinguished, and the vesting in him of the only title to the land.⁶

The title thus perfected cannot be taken away by legislation;⁷ it is a title to land which a purchaser at a judicial sale may not refuse,⁸ but it must be positively and not conjecturally shown.⁹ The occupant may actually assert it with as much effect as if it had been acquired by deed.¹⁰

¹ Kinney v. Vinson, 32 Tex. 128.

² Jones v. Jones, 18 Ala. 253.

³ Davis v. McArthur, 78 N. C. 357; Melvin v. Waddell, 75 N. C. 361.

⁴ Winthrop v. Auburn, 31 Me. 465.

⁵ Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 550.

⁶ Langford v. Poppe, 56 Cal. 75. The use of such terms as "prescriptive title," or "title by prescription," which the Code and Courts of Georgia seem to have exclusively adopted, to designate a title acquired by adverse possession, is objectionable in connection with land itself, as distinguished from easements or incorporeal interests, as a confusing and improper use of terms. For illustrations of the use of the terms "prescriptive title" and "titles by prescription," see Jones v. Bivins, 56 Ga. 538; Castleberry v. Black, 58 Ga. 386; Ford v. Holmes, 61 Ga. 419; Farrow v. Bullock, 63 Ga. 360. Defeating the true owner in ejectment by setting up adverse possession, is sometimes characterized as "stealing title."

⁷ Sharp v. Blankenship, 59 Cal. 288. See Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 605; Langford v. Poppe, 56 Cal. 73; Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 540; School District of Winthrop v. Benson, 31 Me. 384; Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 381.

⁸ Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575; Seymour v. De Lancey, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 436. See Methodist Epis. Church Home v. Thompson, 52 N. Y. Superior, 321.

⁹ Grosholz v. Newman, 21 Wall. 481.

¹⁰ Jacks v. Chaffin, 34 Ark. 538. Adverse possession arms the holder "with all the powers of offense and defense, which an unbroken chain of title confers." Barclay v. Smith, 66 Ala. 232.

§ 728. General principles of possession, seizin and ouster.—It is a familiar rule of law that there can be but one actual seizin of an estate; that possession follows the title¹ in the absence of any possession adverse to it, and as a result of these two principles, that the rightful owner of land is deemed to have the possession² until he is ousted from it³ or disseized,⁴ and also, in the absence of limitations, that he is restored to possession when the hostile possession or disseizin ceases. Want of possession, therefore, in the true owner, necessarily implies an ouster of him by another through an entry and hostile possession. Hence, the ultimate test of the want of possession of the true owner, and his neglect to assert his right to the possession, upon which the statutes of limitation rest, is the existence of an adverse possession of another denying the true owner's right. What constitutes, then, such an adverse possession of land as, under the statutes of limitation, will bar the right of the true owner to recover it?

§ 729. What constitutes adverse possession in general.—It may be laid down as an indisputable general rule of law, that to constitute an effectual adverse possession two things must concur: first, an ouster of the real owner followed by an actual possession by the adverse claimant; and, second, an intention on the part of the latter to so oust the owner and possess for himself;⁵ or, as it is sometimes called, there must be a "claim of right" or "title" in himself adverse to the true owner.⁶ The assertion has been made that the possession, to be adverse, must be

¹ Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 40.

² Murphy v. Welder, 58 Tex. 241.

³ Toomey v. Kay, 62 Wis. 104.

⁴ Miller, J., said, in Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 349. "There must be title somewhere to all land in this country, either in the Government or in some one deriving title from the Government, State or National. Any one in possession, with no claim to the land whatever, must in presumption of law be in possession in amity with and in subservience to that title."

⁵ Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 765.

⁶ What constitutes adverse possession is for the courts to determine, but the facts which indicate its existence are to be found by the jury. Macklot v. Dubreuil, 9 Mo. 473; Baker v. Swan, 32 Md. 355; Boogher v. Neece, 75 Mo. 384, and the question of the character of the possession is generally submitted to them. Gross v. Welwood, 90 N. Y. 638. Whether or not parties have acquired an easement by prescription is a mixed question of law and fact. Taylor v. Gerrish, 59 N. H. 571.

under "claim or color of title," and even that the possession must have commenced under "color and claim of title."¹ The latter statement is certainly inaccurate; for the books are replete with cases where a tortious entry upon and possession of lands, without any pretense of paper title or rightful claim, have ripened into a title by adverse possession. The statement that there must be "claim or color of title" is also, strictly speaking, inaccurate; for it would imply that there might be an effectual adverse possession under color of title without any claim of title. We shall see hereafter that "color of title" is, in its very essence, a claim of title, and is chiefly important in the subject under discussion as an assertion of title, and as defining its extent.² There can be no effectual color of title without a claim of title, whereas there can well be a claim of title or right adverse to the owner's without any color of title whatever. To repeat, then, two ingredients are essential to constitute adverse possession: the factum, possession, and the hostile intention. Thus it is said that "the whole inquiry is reduced to the fact of entering and the intention to usurp possession."³ Mere possession alone would be neither the foundation of a legal right, nor a bar to the assertion of the owner's title.⁴ In the absence of evidence to the contrary, if there be possession of land by another than the true owner, the presumption of law is, that such possession is in accord with, or in subservience to, the true title and the legal possession of the owner.⁵ Permissive possession is never a basis for the statute of limitations.⁶ On the other hand, a mere claim or assertion of title to land, unaccompanied by possession, would neither benefit the claimant or affect the rights of the owner.⁷

¹ Tyler on Ejectment and Adverse Possession, p. 859.

² See infra, Chap. XXX.

³ Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. 439; S. P. Pickett v. Doe d. Pope, 74 Ala. 131.

⁴ Jones v. Hockman, 12 Iowa, 107.

⁵ Jackson v. Thomas, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 293.

⁶ Pulaski Co. v. State, 42 Ark. 120; Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. 1; Ellsworth v. Hale, 33 Ark. 633; Chance v. Branch, 58 Tex. 493; Burbank v. Fay, 65 N. Y. 65; Colvin v. Burnet, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 564.

⁷ Magee v. Magee, 37 Miss. 138.

§ 730. Effect and requisites of entry and ouster.—It is axiomatic that the possession which follows the title to land must cease before a hostile possession can commence. There cannot be two possessions, actual or constructive, of the same land at the same time. There must, therefore, be an ouster of the true owner and an entry by another before an adverse possession is established. The Supreme Court of Missouri say: “The requisites in order to constitute an actual possession are that there should be made an entry, so that there may be an ouster effected and an adverse possession begun.”¹ The true owner being “in possession, by force of his title, he so remains until dis-seized or ousted by some one who enters with a claim of adverse possession. When this ouster takes place, the limitation of the statute begins to run.”² Bearing in mind at the outset that the object of the statute is to cut off and defeat the claim or rights of the true owner, we arrive at the general principle that the criterion of the time when the statute begins to run is the ouster of the true owner and his consequent right to be reinstated in the possession, and that it is not in theory the entry of the adverse claimant. To determine then the character and sufficiency of an entry, as the foundation of an adverse possession, we inquire whether it is sufficient to constitute an ouster of the one entitled to the possession. An entry by an adverse claimant, as the first act of adverse possession, must be characterized, as we shall see, by most of the same elements as are essentials in such possession. What will constitute an entry sufficient to oust the one entitled to possession will, like the adverse possession which follows it, depend upon a variety of considerations, such as the character of the land and the uses to which it may be naturally put; the previous relation of the parties, whether strangers or in some privity with one another; whether the owner be in actual possession, or simply in the constructive possession which his title gives him; and whether the entry be made under some color of title, or a naked claim. Entry and ouster, as well as possession, may be either actual or constructive. Thus the entry and ouster may be a physical invasion of the land, and an actual forcible ejectment of the possessor, or the adverse claimant being already in possession under, for example, a lease or agreement with the owner, and the owner out of the actual possession, the entry and ouster may be constructively accomplished by a hostile act on the part of the tenant equivalent in its legal effect to an actual invasion and ejectment.¹ It becomes important here to call attention to the two leading requisites in an entry sufficient to set in motion the statute of limitations, which are, first, that the entry must be sufficiently notorious and open to give the true owner notice of the hostile claim and possession begun; and, second, that it must be hostile. The facts should be such that the owner must have known, or with diligence could have gained knowledge of the adverse entry. Hence, the statement: "Such knowledge, or the means by which such knowledge may be attained, must be brought home to the person who was seized or possessed of the land; because the statute proceeds on the ground that he, knowing that a cause of action exists in his favor for the intrusion, yet acquiesces in it, and does not attempt to regain the possession of his land in the mode provided by law. A clandestine entry or possession will not set the statute in motion, because the owner of the land cannot be said to have acquiesced in the wrongful entry or possession. The owner will not be condemned to lose his land because he has failed to sue for its recovery, when he had no notice that it was held or claimed adversely; but the statute cuts off his remedy only when he has neglected to commence his action beyond the period assigned for it."² So an entry, to work

¹ Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 41. See Thomas v. Marshfield, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 250.

² Robinson v. Lake, 14 Iowa, 421, 424. See Bliss v. Johnson, 94 N. Y. 242.

¹ It is not an easy task for a tenant to inaugurate an adverse possession unless there has been a surrender of the possession which the landlord conferred. Whiting v. Edmunds, 94 N. Y. 314. See § 751; also Chap. XII.

² Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508. "The claim of title which must enter into and is the characteristic of an adverse possession, has in it no element of stealthiness." Potts v. Coleman, 67 Ala. 228. "The statute was not made to serve the purposes of artifice and trick." Sailor v. Hertzogg 2 Pa. St. 185. See Bracken v. Jones, 63 Tex. 186.

an interruption of the possession, "must be made under such circumstances as to enable the party in possession, by the use of reasonable diligence, to ascertain the right and claim of the party making the entry."¹ Without such an entry, or hostile acts from which the jury may find the fact of notice to the true owner, it has been held there can be no ouster, and the entry would be a mere act of trespass.² Thus a survey of land has been held to be "not such a distinct and notorious act of possession as will justify the reasonable presumption of an ouster, or that the party went upon the land with a palpable intent to claim the possession as his own."³

In the second place the entry, or the first act of possession on the part of the claimant, must be hostile. The presumption of law, according to a familiar rule, is in favor of regularity as against irregularity; of what is lawful as against what is unlawful. An entry upon the land of another will, therefore, by presumption of law, be deemed permissive in accord with, and not in defiance of, the owner's right.⁴ Thus we find the rule stated: "Every presumption is in favor of possession in subordination to the title of the true owner. An entry adverse to the lawful owner is not to be presumed, but must be proved."⁵ Hence the mere entering upon and taking possession of land, however notorious, is not sufficient, unaccompanied by acts or declarations, or both, which rebut the presumption that it is in subservience to the rights of the owner, and which leave no doubt of its hostile character. The evidence necessary to establish the hostility of the acts necessary to set in motion the statute of limitations on the part of a stranger taking actual possession, and that required on the part of such persons as stand in some relation of privity with the true owner, and who may be already in possession of the land, we shall further discuss

¹ See Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182; Soule v. Barlow, 49 Vt. 329.

² Pray v. Pierce, 7 Mass. 383. See Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 534; Carrol v. Gillion, 33 Ga. 539, 548.

³ Beatty v. Mason, 30 Md. 414.

⁴ See Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 349.

⁵ Hart v. Bostwick, 14 Fla. 178, and cases cited.

in considering the various requisites of adverse possession.¹

§ 731. Requisites of adverse possession in general.—The owner of the land, or the one entitled to the possession, having been ousted by the entry of an adverse claimant, the adverse possession of the latter being thus established and the statute being set in motion, there remain to be considered the character and requisites of the possession which, continued for the time prescribed by the statute, will both bar the right of recovery of the owner, and will confer upon the adverse possessor the only title to the land. We shall consider this subject under two heads: first, naked possession, where the rights of the adverse occupant depend upon possession alone, and, second, possession under color of title, where, in addition to an actual occupation of the land or some part of it, the adverse occupant claims the right to so occupy under some deed, writing or paper title to the same. Under the latter head, to which alone it belongs, we shall consider the subject of “constructive” adverse possession.² In general, it may be stated that, whether the adverse claimant bases his rights under the statute upon mere naked possession, or, in addition to the latter, upon some color of title, some actual adverse possession is necessary, and though the rule as to the sufficiency of the actual possession may in some cases be somewhat relaxed when the possession is accompanied with color of title, yet, in the main in both cases, the requisites of the actual adverse possession are the same. Though we find a great variety of terms in use in the authorities on this subject defining adverse possession, its requisites may be reduced to the following: the possession under consideration must be actual, open, continuous, hostile, and exclusive.³ That such possession shall ultimately establish the adverse rights of the possessor, it must be accompanied by the intention, on his part, to claim adversely, or a “claim of right,” as it is called, in himself.

¹ See post, § 751.

² See infra, Chap. XXX.

³ See Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586; Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 Mich. 63.

§ 732. Possession must be "actual ;" what constitutes.—It is impossible to lay down a general rule as to what constitutes an effectual actual adverse possession of lands and what falls short of it.¹ It is necessarily a question governed more or less by the facts of each case,² and particularly by the character and situation of the land in question, and the uses to which it would naturally be put.³ In Ford v. Wilson, above cited, it is stated as the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States, that it suffices that "visible and notorious acts of ownership are exercised over the premises," etc. Then, in a recent case in the Supreme Court of Illinois, it is held that actual residence is not indispensable, but that "if there is continuous dominion manifested by continuous acts of ownership, it is sufficient."⁴ On the other hand the limitation act of Texas, which conferred upon a "naked possessor" the title to the land after a certain period, is construed as requiring actual residence thereon, though the act requires in terms only "peaceable possession and cultivation, use or enjoyment."⁵ It is held in Ohio that the naked possessor "must show a substantial inclosure, an actual occupancy, a pedis possessio, which is definite, positive, and notorious."⁶ In Illinois, on the other hand, it is considered unnecessary to inclose all the land by a fence, and the court say that as a general rule it is sufficient if the land is appropriated to individual use in such a way as to apprise all persons in the vicinity as to who has the exclusive use and enjoyment.⁷ Mr. Justice Story, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in Ellicott v. Pearl, stated that no authority was necessary for so plain a proposition as that "to constitute actual possession, it is not necessary that there should be any fence or inclosure of the land," for the reason that the

¹ Ford v. Wilson, 35 Miss. 505.

² Leeper v. Baker, 68 Mo. 405 ; Turner v. Hall, 60 Mo. 275.

³ See infra, § 733.

⁴ Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 189. Contra, under act of 1835, Martin v. Judd, 81 Ill. 488.

⁵ Sloan v. Martin, 33 Tex. 418.

⁶ Humphries v. Huffman, 33 Ohio St. 403 ; Bristol v. Carroll Co. 95 Ill. 93. See Dothard v. Denson, 75 Ala. 482.

⁷ Kerr v. Hitt, 75 Ill. 51.

erection of a fence is only an act presumptive of an intention to assert an ownership, and that there are many other acts equally evincive of such an intention.¹ In a late case in the Supreme Court of Missouri, it is said that "a fence, building or other improvement, is not essential to constitute an adverse possession. Acts of ownership, under a claim of right, visible, are sufficient to authorize the court to find such possession."² So in a case in Alabama, the language used is that "the inclosure is but one act indicating possession and claim of ownership. There are many other acts equally indicative of possession," etc.³ The court in North Carolina said: "The leading idea is, that there shall be notice to the world," and it was accordingly held that "building a shed, quarrying rock, erecting a lime-kiln, cutting wood," etc., were sufficient acts of ownership, because they were "of a nature calculated to attract more than ordinary notice."⁴ On the other hand, in a case in New York, where the claimants under a tax deed caused some surveying to be done on the land, and paid some taxes thereon, it was held that "such acts have never been held to show a possession for any purpose."⁵ To the same effect as in the cases above quoted is the language of the Supreme Court of Arkansas: "It is not the particular use made of the land, or whether built upon and used as a residence, or cleared and cultivated as a farm, but the exclusive use and adverse possession may be proven as well by other acts and declarations, which show a visible, open and exclusive possession and use of the land."⁶ So held where a plot of ground was used as a family burial ground; the adverse possession being established by such a use, but being confined to the parts of the land actually covered with graves.⁷

¹ Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 441, 442. See Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. 41. Compare Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671.

² Leeper v. Baker, 68 Mo. 400, 407. See Turner v. Hall, 60 Mo. 275, 277.

³ Bell v. Denson, 56 Ala. 448.

⁴ Moore v. Thompson, 69 N. C. 120. Compare Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671, in which the fundamental principles of adverse possession are exhaustively and ably discussed.

⁵ Thompson v. Burhans, 61 N. Y. 70; s. p. Pike v. Robertson, 79 Mo. 615.

⁶ Mooney v. Cooledge, 30 Ark. 655. See McCreery v. Everding, 44 Cal. 246; Brown v. Rose, 48 Iowa, 233.

⁷ That naked possession cannot be extended by construction beyond the limits

§ 733. Requisites of possession as affected by nature of the land.—In determining the sufficiency of an adverse possession, as already stated,¹ much depends upon the character and situation of the land in question. Thus, in a recent case in the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, the court said: "What is an adverse and exclusive possession, . . . depends very much upon the character of the land, and the purposes to which it is adapted, and for which it is used."² Again we find it stated: "So much depends on the nature and situation of the property, the uses to which it can be applied, or to which the owner or claimant may choose to apply it; that it is difficult to lay down any precise rule adapted to all cases;"³ and also "the jury may take into consideration the nature and situation of the land;"⁴ and, "the possession must be by acts suitable to the character of the land."⁵ So in the case of Draper v. Shoot,⁶ cited in Leeper v. Baker, it is said: "It is no easy matter to say what is an adverse possession. It is a question compounded of law and fact, and every case in which it is involved must be determined by its own circumstances. What is adverse possession is one thing in a populous country, another thing in a sparsely settled one, and still a different thing in a town or village." And in a case in California it has been decided that "the acts of ownership and dominion over land, which may be sufficient to constitute an actual possession, vary according to the condition, size and locality of the tract."⁷ Again, "the rule of law is very well settled that, where a person claiming land exercises acts of ownership of it, by the use of it for the of the actual occupation, see Ferguson v. Peden, 33 Ark. 150; Peterson v. McCullough, 50 Ind. 35; Wilson v. McEwan, 7 Oreg. 87; Wells v. Iron Co., 48 N. H. 491; Ege v. Medlar, 82 Pa. St. 86; Hawkins v. Hudson, 45 Ala. 482; Clarke v. Wagner, 74 N. C. 791; Humphries v. Huffman, 33 Ohio St. 395.

¹ See § 730.

² Bowen v. Guild, 130 Mass. 123. See Dorr v. School District, 40 Ark. 243; Mooney v. Cooledge, 30 Ark. 655.

³ Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. 53.

⁴ Turner v. Hall, 60 Mo. 271.

⁵ Bell v. Denson, 56 Ala. 449.

⁶ 25 Mo. 203. See Leeper v. Baker, 68 Mo. 407.

⁷ Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24. See also Creech v. Jones, 5 Sneed (Tenn.), 631, 635.

purposes to which it is adapted, he is in such actual occupancy of it as will even bar an action after the lapse of the statutory time. Such possession is as actual as that by inclosure."¹ So held in respect to uninclosed timber land on which the adverse claimant had cut wood and timber. It may be doubted whether the mere cutting of timber would generally be held to be sufficient evidence of actual adverse possession. In the case last cited the defendant held under color of title, and it is probable, from the statement of the facts in the case, that the land in dispute was used as a timber lot in connection with other land owned by the defendant or his grantor. A distinction based upon the latter circumstance, i. e., that the land was used in connection with other land as a timber wood-lot, is well drawn in the case of Miller v. Long Island R. R. Co.,² in the New York Court of Appeals, where it is made the ground of distinguishing the case of Machin v. Geortner,³ in the same State. The same distinction is made in the case of Beaupland v. McKeen,⁴ in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, where it is held as follows: "If the fact be that those in possession of the Patterson tract, at Bear Creek, made such use of the interference as owners ordinarily make of their adjacent timber lands—taking firewood, fence rails, or lumber from it, for the use of their mill, . . . this would be possession. . . . Such acts as I have enumerated have repeatedly been held to constitute actual possession. . . . But, if this was mere marauders' ground—if anybody who wanted to get lumber manufactured at the Bear Creek mill went upon the interference to take timber without regard to the Patterson title—if, in a word, the only acts of possession were occasional entries for lumbering purposes, they would not constitute the possession essential to title."⁵ In a case in the Supreme Court of Illinois, the court say: "When a party has title, or color of title, to woodland, and uses the land for the

¹ Clement v. Perry, 34 Iowa, 567.

² 71 N. Y. 383.

³ 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 239.

⁴ 28 Penn. St. 134.

⁵ See also Williams v. Wallace, 78 N. C. 354; Austin v. Holt, 32 Wis. 478.

purpose of obtaining wood for fuel, or fencing for a farm in the neighborhood, under a claim of ownership, such facts have been held, under a number of decisions of this court, to constitute possession.”¹ But non constat, that if there had been no color of title in the claimant, such occupation or use of woodland for a farm in the neighborhood—in this case half a mile distant—would have been held sufficient actual adverse possession. We shall see, later, that when an adverse possession is coupled with “color of title,” oftentimes less positive actual and notorious acts of ownership over the land are required.² In a recent case in Tennessee, where the land in dispute was uninclosed and unimproved timber land, and where the testimony did not “show absolutely that the land was not susceptible of cultivation or residence,” but had been used by defendant simply for the purpose of cutting timber, and was situated about three-fourths of a mile from land on which the defendant resided, it was held that the possession was insufficient to defeat ejectment by the owner, and the rule was reiterated that, in general, nothing short of actual inclosure will be regarded as sufficient evidence. Some exceptions were recognized to this rule, as, for example, where the property consisted of an ore bank, a sand pit, stone quarry, or the like.³ So, in a case in the Supreme Court of Minnesota, it is held that the mere cutting of timber from wild lands without actual occupancy or cultivation, or inclosure of the land or some part of it, when it is adapted to and capable of such improvement, will not constitute adverse possession sufficient to maintain an action of replevin for logs cut and carried away.⁴ In Alabama, however, it is said that “cutting timber on land fit for no other purpose might be adverse possession, but if the land were suitable for other purposes such mere acts of occupation would not be sufficient.”⁵ In the case of

¹ Scott v. Delany, 87 Ill. 148; citing Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 199; Austin v. Rust, 73 Ill. 491.

² See infra, Chap. XXX.

³ Pullen v. Hopkins, 1 Lea (Tenn.), 741.

⁴ Washburn v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 361. See Carrol v. Gillion, 33 Ga. 539.

⁵ Rivers v. Thompson, 46 Ala. 338. See Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. 53.

Adverse possession of mines.—The principle that the possession which will ripen

Leeper v. Baker,¹ cited above, where some swamp land, mostly unfit for cultivation, and incapable of being fenced without a risk of the fences being washed away by high water, and of such nature that it would not have paid the plaintiff to have improved the few acres susceptible of cultivation, had been used as incident to other land of the plaintiff, and adjoining it, to obtain wood, etc., from, that circumstance, in connection with payment of taxes, and a survey on record, etc., was held sufficient evidence of adverse possession.

§ 734. What is a sufficient actual possession.—It is sometimes said or implied² that one criterion to determine whether the acts of possession of the claimant are sufficient to constitute adverse possession, is the inquiry—what would be the character of the real owner's possession, or treatment of the particular land in question? In many cases this would be a proper test; but in the class of cases just discussed such a criterion would be a very unreliable one. In the case of remote and wild lands, for example, an owner would usually be content with the constructive possession of the land which his title would give him, and with, it may be, the payment of taxes. Improvements, fencing and the like would, for years perhaps, be out of the question.³ Should, however, an adverse claimant, by asserting color of title by a deed on record and by paying taxes, thus show a treatment, in such a case, in all respects such as the real owner would give into a title must be indicated by such acts as are sufficient to notify mankind that the party in possession is claiming the land as his own applies to mining interests. The discovery and working of a lime quarry constitutes adverse possession. Moore v. Thompson, 69 N. C. 120. The acts claimed to constitute adverse possession must be performed with reference to the mines as such. Caldwell v. Copeland, 37 Pa. St. 427. Leasing a quarry, and taking stone and timber from the land for the statutory period, accompanied by payment of taxes, amounts to adverse possession. Colvin v. McCune, 39 Iowa, 502. The rules applicable to real property apply to public mineral lands. Harris v. Equator Mining & Smelting Co., 8 Fed. Rep. 863. Mere digging of coal in winter upon property which is abandoned during the rest of the year is not sufficient adverse possession. Jackson v. Stoetzel, 87 Pa. St. 302; s. c. 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 228.

¹ 68 Mo. 407.

² See Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. 53; Beaupland v. McKeen, 28 Penn. St. 134.

³ Possibly title by adverse possession may be gained by flowing the land with water and other incidental use of it. See Eastern Railroad v. Allen, 135 Mass. 13; Tufts v. Charlestown, 117 Mass. 401. But compare § 149.

the land, that would alone be clearly insufficient to establish any adverse title.¹ However, in view of the main object of the requirements of the statutes of limitation as to the character of the adverse possession which will bar the owner's right being notice to the owner of the adverse claim, and such acts of ownership therefore being required as are presumed of themselves to give such notice—actual or constructive—it would seem, that, if it were proved that the owner of the land had actual notice of the adverse claim, and of some acts of ownership thereunder, it might be sufficient to bar the owner under the statute, though in the absence of actual notice, such acts of ownership of the adverse claimant would not be held sufficient to constitute an adverse possession. Accordingly such acts as putting deeds on record, passing over the tract, employment of an agent living near by to look after the land, and the payment of taxes, were held insufficient to constitute adverse possession, unless such acts were known to the party holding the legal title, and they were done under claim of adverse title.² In view of what has been already said we can lay down only the very general rule that, to constitute the actual possession required by the statute, there must be some tangible positive acts of ownership upon, and some actual use or appropriation of the locus in quo; and that the nature of such acts, use or appropriation is determined in large measure by the character and location of the land, and the uses to which it would naturally be put.³

§ 735. Possession must be "open" and "notorious."—The next requisite of adverse possession which we shall consider is that it must be "open," or, as it is sometimes called, "visible" and "notorious." A person who would claim title by reason of his adverse possession must, in the language of the cases, "keep his flag flying."⁴ The main

¹ Brown v. Rose, 48 Iowa, 233; Turner v. Hall, 60 Mo. 271.

² Turner v. Hall, 60 Mo. 271. Compare Clark v. Gilbert, 39 Conn. 97. Also § 736.

³ See cases cited above, especially § 733. As to the statutory regulations in respect to what constitutes adverse possession in several of the States, see supra, §§ 729-731.

⁴ Wood v. Drouthett, 44 Tex. 370. "An adverse possession ought to be such as to challenge the right of all the world; but when an occupant evacuates the place reason for the requirements of the law respecting the character of the adverse possession which will set in motion the statute, and will ultimately bar the rights of the true owner of land is, that the possession shall be of such a character as in itself will notify the owner of the land of the adverse claim,¹ and force him to protect his rights, or by acquiescing in the adverse claim for a certain period, lose them altogether. "The ground upon which the junior claimant acquires title by adversary possession, is the supposed laches of the owner. The latter sees his boundaries invaded by an adverse claimant asserting title, and, if he remains passive under such circumstances a sufficient length of time, he is held to acquiesce in the adverse claim." So the adverse possession, like the original entry,² "must be such as to notify the real owner, at least as against him, of the possession and claim."³ "Notoriety is only important when the adverse character of the possession is to be brought home to the owner by presumption;"⁴ "because it gives the owner notice that his seizure is interrupted, and that his title may be endangered."⁵ Moreover, "acquiescence," upon which the whole doctrine of adverse possession rests, "cannot be presumed unless the owner has, or may be presumed to have, notice of the possession." It is said, "The law designs that the owner shall have ample knowledge of the subject, and a full opportunity to assert his claim, but if he sleeps upon his rights for a period of fifteen years he is presumed to have acquiesced in the claim of another."⁶ So we have seen that a "clandestine entry" is insufficient to set the statute in motion,⁷ because the owner must have "knowledge or means of knowledge." So "a silent possession, accompanied by no act which can amount to an ouster or give notice to his co-tenant of his intention to exclude him, and suffers it to go to wreck, he hauls down his colors, and his challenge is withdrawn." Stephens v. Leach, 19 Penn. St. 265.

¹ Turpin v. Saunders, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 27.

² Soule v. Barlow, 49 Vt. 329; Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

³ Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 447.

⁴ Clark v. Gilbert, 39 Conn. 97.

⁵ Cook v. Babcock, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 210.

⁶ School District v. Lynch, 33 Conn. 334.

⁷ Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508.

will not make a possession adverse.”¹ “Secret possession will not do, as publicity and notoriety are necessary as evidence of notice and to put those claiming an adverse interest upon inquiry.”²

§ 736. Notice to the owner, actual or constructive.—The test therefore as to whether acts of ownership or possession are sufficiently open and notorious, is whether they are sufficient in themselves to notify the owner of the possession and its hostile character.³ Hence it is not necessary to prove actual knowledge on the part of the owner. The court say: “All that is necessary to constitute disseizin is actual, adverse and exclusive possession, so open and notorious that it may be presumed to have been known to the rightful owner.”⁴ And whether the notoriety is such as to raise such presumption of knowledge is for the jury to determine. Thus, “where an inclosure, consisting partly of natural and partly of artificial obstructions, is relied upon as, in itself, establishing a possessio pedis, it is the province of the jury, upon all the proofs, and considering the quantity, locality and character of the land,⁵ to decide whether or not the artificial barriers were sufficient to notify the public that the land was appropriated, and to impart to the claim of appropriation the notoriety and indicia of ownership which constitutes so important an element in a possessio pedis.”⁶ But the following language in a charge to the jury, “that any acts done on the premises indicating an intention to hold the land,” is considered “altogether too loose.”⁷ In view of the reason for the rule requiring notoriety of possession, namely, that notice may be given to the owner, and according to the case of Clark v. Gilbert above quoted from,

¹ Abercrombie v. Baldwin, 15 Ala. 370. See McClung v. Ross, 5 Wheat. 116; Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 51; Turpin v. Saunders, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 34.

² Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 145.

³ Moore v. Thompson, 69 N. C. 121. See a recent case in the Court of Errors and Appeals of the State of New Jersey, in which the subject of the requisites of adverse possession is admirably treated by Depue, J. Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527.

⁴ Samuels v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 210. See Alexander v. Polk, 39 Miss. 755.

⁵ See supra, § 733.

⁶ Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 50.

⁷ Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 370.

it would seem that if the owner had already actual knowledge of the adverse possession and claim, then, as it is expressed in the case just cited, "openness and notoriety are unimportant."¹

When the possession is taken under a deed which is placed on record, it has been held that there is a constructive notice to the owner² of the claim and its extent. Any such effect, however, given to a deed on record, would not relieve the adverse claimant from proving an "actual" and "open" possession of some part of the locus in quo, in accordance with principles already stated; the effect of the recorded deed would, no doubt, as regards notice to the owner, be confined to that part of the land outside the actual possession of the claimant,³ and claimed only by a constructive possession.

§ 737. Possession must be "continuous."—The one entitled to the possession of land being ousted by the entry of an adverse claimant, and the adverse possession of the latter being begun by actual and open acts of ownership upon the land, in order that the owner shall be barred of his right of re-entry and recovery of the land, such adverse possession must continue uninterruptedly for the period of time limited by the statute. This period, as we have remarked, varies in the different States of the Union; and in the same State there are often different limitations, depending upon different conditions, such, for example, as whether the possession be accompanied with color of title—so-called—or with payment of taxes, or has been begun in good faith, and the like. As a rule, we find, on examination of the statutes, that, in the older and more settled portions of the country, where the conditions of property of all kinds are more stable, the periods prescribed by the statute are longer than in the more recently settled communities, where land, as well as property of all kinds, is constantly changing hands, and varying in value.

¹ Clark v. Gilbert, 39 Conn. 97. Compare Turner v. Hall, 60 Mo. 271. See § 734.

² Forest v. Jackson, 56 N. H. 357.

³ As to this and kindred subjects, see post, Chapter XXX.

In the latter case too, it is the policy of the State that the lands should be quickly settled, as is stated in a Texas case cited above;¹ and every encouragement therefore is given to "enter and take the land." While in New York the period of limitation for the recovery of real property is twenty years, in California, which in other respects has adopted the New York statute, the period is but five years. As already shown, the time when the statute begins to run is when the party entitled to the possession is disseized, or, in other words, when his right of action for the recovery of the possession accrues. As the possession by presumption of law follows the title, except in the case of an adverse possession,² it follows that the adverse possession ceasing, either by the abandonment of the disseizor or by the re-entry of the true owner before the adverse possession has ripened into title, the true owner is restored to the possession.³ The adverse possession must, therefore, continue as it has begun, in order to work ultimately a forfeiture of the right of the owner. To determine then, in this respect, the sufficiency of the adverse possession, we inquire whether the adverse claimant has ever within the period abandoned the possession, or ceased to exercise the acts of dominion which we have found are necessary to constitute adverse possession, or whether, meanwhile, the true owner has been restored to the possession, either by his re-entry and ouster of the occupant, or by any other interruption of the latter's possession. In connection with this subject, we shall also consider how far the periods of time, during which different occupants have held possession of the land, may be joined or "tacked" together to constitute one continuous possession.⁴

¹ See supra, § 727.

² Ruggles v. Sands, 40 Mich. 559; Williams v. Wallace, 78 N. C. 354. See § 730.

³ Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 120; Potts v. Gilbert, 3 Wash. C. C. 479; Holdfast v. Shepard, 6 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 364. See Smith v. Chapin, 31 Conn. 531, where it is said: "Doubtless the possessions must be connected and continuous, so that the possession of the true owner shall not constructively intervene between them."

⁴ See infra, especially § 746.

§ 738. It is hardly necessary to cite authorities, in addition to those already given, on the requisites of adverse possession, to support the general proposition that the adverse possession must be continuous.¹ Moreover, the "continuity" of the adverse possession is the very essence of the doctrine and policy of the statutes of limitation. As the court say in Groft v. Weakland,² "If there be one element more distinctly material than another in conferring title, where all requisites are so, it is the existence of a continuous adverse possession," etc. In the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Justice Clifford says: "Continuity of possession is also one of the essential requisites to constitute such an adverse possession as will be of efficacy under the statute of limitations. Whenever a party quits the possession the seizin of the true owner is restored, and a subsequent wrongful entry by another constitutes a new disseizin, and it is equally well settled that if the continuity of possession is broken before the expiration of the period of time prescribed by the statute of limitations, an entry within that time destroys the efficacy of all prior possession, so that to gain a title under the statute a new adverse possession for the time limited must be taken for that purpose."³ In other words, the underlying reason for requiring continuity of possession is the principle of law that an adverse possession ceasing or being interrupted for any cause, the possession of the true owner is restored, and the latter, having actually or constructively re-entered, the statute limiting his right of re-entry of course stops running, to be set in motion again only by a new entry, ouster, and hostile possession. As is said in Olevine v. Holman,⁴ in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, "If the continuity of the possession be broken for a single day before the twenty-one years have elapsed, the previous possession goes for nothing, and the wrongdoer must commence de novo." As to the general neces-

¹ See Satterwhite v. Rosser, 61 Tex. 171.

² 34 Penn. St. 308. See Bell v. Denson, 56 Ala. 449; Riggs v. Fuller, 54 Ala. 141; Malloy v. Bruden, 86 N. C. 251; Ringo v. Woodruff, 43 Ark. 487.

³ Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 146.

⁴ 23 Penn. St. 284. See Brolaskey v. McClain, 61 Penn. St. 166.

sity of continuity in adverse possession, we shall, in addition, quote from only a few authorities on the subject, as it is one that hardly demands or admits of further discussion.

§ 739. Requisites of continuity in possession.—The Supreme Court of California say: “The statute protects only such adverse possession as has been continuous in fact, both as to time and interest, during the prescribed period.”¹ The jury “must find that such possession was continuous as well as adverse, and if they further find that there was a break in such possession, or that said premises were not in the possession of any one for one or more years during that time, that the same was not continuous.”² “Such a temporary occupancy for such an important purpose, really nothing but trespasses repeated from year to year, can confer no title by adverse possession.”³ So held when the adverse possession sought to be established consisted in entries upon the land once a year for over twenty years, and in the cutting and removal of grass. Such acts are plainly separate acts of trespass and not such a constant and continuous possession as is required to ripen into title.⁴ So the adverse claimant “must also continue in possession for seven years. Occasional entries upon the land will not serve, for they may either be not observed, or if observed, may not be considered as the assertion of rights.”⁵ But it is said: “To constitute a continuous possession it is not necessary that the occupant should be actually upon the premises continually. The mere fact that time intervenes between successive acts of occupancy does not necessarily destroy the continuity of the possession.”⁶ Moreover, “his possession must not only have been adverse . . . but he must also have claimed the

¹ San Francisco v. Fulde, 37 Cal. 353.

² Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 365.

³ Wheeler v. Spinola, 54 N. Y. 387.

⁴ White v. Reid, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) 535. See Ward v. Herrin, 4 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 25; Austin v. Holt, 32 Wis. 478; Gudger v. Hensley, 82 N. C. 481, 483.

⁵ Williams v. Wallace, 78 N. C. 356, 357, and cases cited. See McCullough v. Wall, 4 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 81; Washabaugh v. Entriken, 34 Penn. St. 74.

⁶ Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 473.

title . . . during the entire statutory period.”¹ So “the adverse enjoyment must have been continuous, and to the full extent for the whole of the time. . . . It is not sufficient that a person entering upon lands has entered more than twenty years ago if there have been one or two years in which he has had no possession within the twenty years.”² “To make the bar of twenty years’ possession operative and effectual to destroy a right of entry, it is necessary that the possession claimed as adverse should be shown to be continued and uninterrupted,”³ and the ground of this requirement as stated in the case cited is, that there must be at any period of the twenty years some occupant against whom the owner might bring an action of ejectment in order that the latter should be barred by the statute. Or, as it is elsewhere expressed, the occupation must be such “as to shew an uninterrupted exercise of ownership, or continued assertion of right, and liability at all times to the possessory action of the owner.”⁴ So it is stated, as another reason for requiring the tenant to “remain permanently upon the land,” that the possession should be such “as to leave no doubt on the mind of the true owner, not only who the adverse claimant was, but that it was his purpose to keep him out of his land.”⁵ Or, as it is expressed in cases above cited, the tenant must “keep his flag flying.”⁶ On the principle that the constructive possession of the owner revives when the land ceases to be actually adversely possessed by another, the continuous possession required must be, so to speak, stationary. As it is said in Potts v. Gilbert,⁷ above cited: “The adverse possession before mentioned, must not only continue, but it must continue the same, in point of locality. . . . A roving possession

¹ Lovell v. Frost, 44 Cal. 475.

² Carlisle v. Cooper, 19 N. J. Eq. 259.

³ Trotter v. Cassady, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 366.

⁴ Holdfast v. Shepard, 6 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 365. See Moss v. Scott, 2 Dana (Ky.), 274.

⁵ Denham v. Hollman, 26 Ga. 191.

⁶ See supra, §§ 737, 738, 739; Cook v. Dennis, 61 Tex. 248; Medlin v. Wilkins, 60 Tex. 409.

⁷ 3 Wash. C. C. 478.

from one part of a tract of land to another, cannot bar the right of entry of the owner upon any part of the land which had not been held adversely for twenty-one years, although the different periods of possession of the separate parcels should amount, in the whole, to that number of years."

§ 740. Interruption of the possession.—The requirement of continuity implies that the possession shall not have been interrupted, either by the act of the owner, or the interference of another adverse occupant, or by the abandonment of the adverse claimant himself. In either case, as we have seen, the constructive if not the actual possession of the owner revives,¹ a new entry on the part of the adverse claimant becomes necessary, and a new adverse possession must be inaugurated, which his previous possession can in no respect assist.² The important question, therefore, in this subject, is, what amounts to an interruption of an existing adverse possession sufficient to stop the running of the statute, and render the previous possession of no avail as against the true owner; in other words, to restore the latter to the possession from which he had been ousted? As is said in the case of San Francisco v. Fulde,³ above cited, "it makes no difference by whom, or in what manner, the continuity of the adverse possession is broken, so only that it is broken."

§ 741. By re-entry of the owner.—If the theory of limitations rests upon the neglect and acquiescence of the owner of the land it naturally follows that, should he re-assert his rights as owner, by again exercising acts of dominion over his land, hostile to any pretended adverse right, the adverse possession will be defeated, and the running of the statute stopped.⁴ And such an entry "has the same effect in arresting the progress of the limitation as a suit."⁵ In other words, the re-entry of the owner ousts the former disseizor.

¹ Mally v. Bruden, 86 N. C. 259. See §§ 730, 737.

² Jackson v. Leonard, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 653; Melvin v. Proprietors of Locks, etc. 5 Metc. (Mass.) 32; Allen v. Holton, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 465.

³ 37 Cal. 353.

⁴ Pederick v. Searle, 5 S. & R. (Penn.) 239.

⁵ Henderson v. Griffin, 5 Pet. 158.

Moreover the adverse occupant need not be actually turned out of possession by the owner to defeat the statute, and that, too, on account of the same rule of law that makes it necessary, in order to establish an effectual adverse possession to the owner, that the latter should be actually ousted if in actual possession; namely, the principle that if two or more persons are in actual occupation of the land, the legal possession follows the title. But in most respects we find that the requisites for an effectual re-entry by the owner are the same as to establish an adverse possession in the case of an entry by a disseizor. That is to say the re-entry must be evidenced by distinct acts of ownership inconsistent with any adverse claim, and be made with the intent to claim the exclusive possession. As it is said by Gibson, C. J., in a leading case on this subject in Pennsylvania, "there must be an explicit declaration, or an act of notorious dominion, by which the claimant challenges the right of the occupant; or it cannot perhaps be better defined than by saying that the entry must bear, on the face of it, an unequivocal intent to resume the actual possession."¹ As to what acts by the owner will, in themselves, constitute an interruption of the adverse possession, it is impossible to lay down any rule. It has been considered a question for the jury, under proper instruction, to determine from the number, character and time of such entries by the owner, whether the possession of the owner was exclusive, and, in the case before the court, it was held improper for the trial judge to characterize the entries of the owner from time to time as trespasses, and say they were ineffectual to prevent the operation of the statute, unless accompanied by such an assertion of title as would be necessary to toll the statute in the case of an actual disseizin.¹ In the case of Holtzapple v. Phillibaum,² above cited, however, it is said, admitting that the animus with which the entry is made is to be decided by the jury, yet that "whether the entry was made in a legal form or not, is exclusively a question of law, when the fact is ascertained." But in a recent case in Massachusetts, where the entry was followed by no act of ownership, and was simply a passing over the land for the purpose of ascertaining its condition, to see whether any use had been made of it, or whether any buildings or structures had been erected upon it, etc., and "the presiding judge having ruled that this single fact . . . was in itself a matter of law, an interruption of the possession," it was held error,³ the court deciding, that, "although there may be cases in which the occupation by the true owner may be of such a nature, and so continued, that it would be the duty of the court, upon the truth of such facts being apparent, to rule, as matter of law, that the adverse possession had been interrupted, still the general principle is that it is a question for the jury to determine whether in fact the adverse possession has been continuous or has been interrupted."

¹ Altomas v. Campbell, 9 Watts (Penn.), 31. See, also, Holtzapple v. Phillibaum, 4 Wash. C. C. 356. Park, J., said: "When a party is once dispossessed it is not every entry upon the premises without permission that would disturb the adverse possession. He may tread upon his own soil and still be as much out of possession of it there as elsewhere. He must assert his claim to the land, perform some act that would reinstate him in possession, before he can regain what he has lost. It is evident therefore that an entry by stealth, under circumstances that go to show that the party claimed no right to enter, or an entry for other purposes than those connected with a right to enter, would not be sufficient to break the continuity of exclusive possession in another." Burrows v. Gallup, 32 Conn. 493, 498. See s. p. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

§ 742. Statutory regulations as to an effectual re-entry.—The rules of law just stated as to the effect of re-entry by the owner in interrupting the adverse possession and restoring his own, are those which obtain at common law. Many of the States, however, have enacted statutory regulations as to what is necessary to constitute an effectual entry upon land so as to defeat the operation of the statute. Generally in these States it is necessary, in addition to making an entry, either to bring an action within a certain period—usually one year—from the time of entry, or to maintain an open and peaceable possession for the same period.⁴ On this question the laws of each State must be

¹ O'Hara v. Richardson, 46 Penn. St. 385.

² 4 Wash. C. C. 370.

³ Rowen v. Guild, 130 Mass. 121, 124, and cases cited. Compare Ransom v. Lewis, 63 N. C. 45. But see O'Hara v. Richardson, 46 Penn. St. 385, 391.

⁴ See, for example, the laws of Massachusetts, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri and other States.

consulted. On the subject, too, of forcible entry and detainer, there are statutory regulations in some of the States which would materially modify, if not destroy, the common law rule as to the effect of a forcible entry by the owner.¹ In the absence of statutory regulations, however, it may be stated generally, that an unequivocal entry and assertion of ownership upon the land, evidenced by an open and hostile act of dominion, combined with an intention so to assert exclusive rights on the part of the owner, will effectually interrupt the adverse possession and defeat the statute of limitations.

§ 743. Effect of bringing an action or recovering a judgment in ejectment.—The main object of the statute of limitations being to bar an action by the true owner for the recovery of the land, it follows, of course, that if an action is instituted by the owner before the statutory period has elapsed, the running of the statute, and the adverse possession upon which it depends, are at least suspended, and the rights of the parties, according to the general rule, are to be determined as they existed at the time the action was brought.² If, then, at that time the statute had already run in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff must fail; but if at that time the statute had not run the plaintiff is entitled to recover, though the statutory period might elapse during the progress of the actions. These rules hardly admit of discussion. When, however, the plaintiff has recovered judgment in such a case the question arises whether it is necessary for him to follow up such recovery by an actual entry and taking possession, or whether the recovery of the judgment is itself an interruption of the adverse possession, rendering the former adverse possession entirely ineffectual, and necessitating a new adverse possession for the whole statutory period. In support of the latter view is the case of Bro-laskey v. McClain,³ in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania,

¹ For example, see Ferguson v. Bartholomew, 67 Mo. 219; Cary v. Edmonds, 71 Mo. 525.

² See Dunn v. Miller, 75 Mo. 260.

³ 61 Penn. St. 166. See, also, the case of Hood v. Palmer, 7 Rich. (S. C.) Law, 138, where it is held that the issuing of a writ of ejectment stops the running of in which it is said: "If Wester" (under whom the defendant in the ejectment claimed) "and his heirs had the continued and adverse possession of the lot during all this time, it would be sufficient to give them a title under the statute. But, as we have already seen, Richard Peters brought an action of ejectment against Henry Wester in 1818, and recovered a verdict and judgment therein in 1825. This recovery stopped the running of the statute, and even if the Westers held adverse possession of the lot thereafter until the house was torn down in 1838, they acquired no title under the statute of limitations." In an earlier case in the same court it is certainly implied, if not directly held, that something more than a mere recovery of judgment is needed to interrupt the course of the statute.¹ But in a recent case in Michigan, where a decree had been rendered requiring a prior occupant of the land to convey it to one standing in privity with the plaintiff in ejectment, this language is used: "Whatever may have been the true character of Mrs. Smith's possession . . . the decree made . . . which required her to convey . . . shifted her position and placed her in the same condition in regard to her possession as though she had then voluntarily made conveyance. . . . Her previous possession was of no avail any longer as a holding to help make out a continuous adverse possession. Her entire right was determined by a decree, and her possession thereafter, even when joined to that of her successors in the same right, appears to have been too short to give rise to a title under the mortgage, founded on adverse possession."² As opposed to this it is said in Alabama,³ that "the fact of a recovery in ejectment, without an entry under it, did not stop the statute of limitations," citing the New York case of Jackson v. Haviland.⁴ In the latter the statute, so that a subsequent possession cannot be joined with a prior occupation to make out the requisite period.

¹ See Groft v. Weakland, 34 Penn. St. 307, 308; Pederick v. Searle, 5 S. & R. (Penn.) 235, 239.

² Gower v. Quinlan, 40 Mich. 572, 575.

³ Doe d. Kennedy v. Reynolds, 27 Ala. 364, 377.

⁴ Jackson v. Haviland, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 229, 235; s. p. Carpenter v. Natoma W. & M. Co., 63 Cal. 616.

case when the plaintiff had failed to enter after recovering judgment in ejectment, the court say that "he now stands in the same relation to the defendant as if he had never attempted a legal remedy by the former suit." And in a case in the United States Supreme Court it was decided that the recovery of a judgment in ejectment did not, alone, suspend the statute, but that there must be also a change of possession.¹

§ 744. Possession lost or interrupted by abandonment.—If continuity is an essential element in adverse possession it is of course a truism to say that, should the adverse claimant abandon his possession before the period prescribed by the statute has run, no bar under the statute will have been created. What amounts to an abandonment² depends upon the principles which we have already considered; that is to say, when the possession ceases to be of a character required to destroy the actual and constructive possession of the true owner, i. e., ceases to be adverse, then the rights and possession of the true owner revive, provided he is not already barred by the statute. Therefore openness being required, should the possession of the claimant become secret and not such as continually to notify the owner of the adverse claim; or, actual residence, or cultivation being required, should the residence be given up, or the cultivation be abandoned, the possession of the owner would revive, and the statute cease running. Again, hostility to the true owner being the most essential requisite of adverse possession, should the tenant, by a distinct recognition of the title of the true owner, give up his hostile intent, the possession, though outwardly continuing the same in character, would cease to be adverse. So we find that if a party in possession of land offers to purchase it from the true owner, and this offer is made, not merely to buy an outstanding or adverse claim in order to quiet his possession, or protect himself from litigation, the offer is a recognition of the owner's title, and will stop the running of the statute.¹ Again, in reference to the effect of attornment, it was held, that "the surrender was equally involuntary, when the attornment is the alternative of actual ouster."² An agreement to submit a question of location of a boundary line to arbitration, is such an abandonment of the requisite hostile intent as to interrupt the adverse possession and the running of the statute.³ As already shown, the possession required in particular cases depends upon the character of the land, so that what would amount to abandonment in one case would be insufficient in another.⁴ So, also, it is said, "while an abandonment of the premises will so break the possession of him who has occupied, that the constructive possession of the true owner will again attach, and thus save his right of entry, every failure to cultivate the field for a season, or a delay in repairing the fences when destroyed, will not be held to be an abandonment if a sufficient reason appears."⁵

¹ Smith v. Trabue, 1 McL. 87. See Doe d. Bright v. Stevens, 1 Houst. (Del.) 240; Carpenter v. Natoma W. & M. Co., 63 Cal. 616. The statute is not suspended by an unsuccessful ejectment (Doe d. Kennedy v. Reynolds, 27 Ala. 364; Workman v. Guthrie, 29 Pa. St. 495), nor by a forcible entry, if the owner is evicted by forcible entry proceedings. Cary v. Edmonds, 71 Mo. 523; Ferguson v. Bartholomew, 67 Mo. 212.

² The question whether the occupant left the premises animo revertendi is one for the consideration of the jury. Wilson v. Glenn, 68 Ala. 386.

§ 745. Interruption by other adverse claimants.—As the adverse possession may be interrupted by the re-entry of the owner, or lost by the abandonment of the tenant, so it may be interrupted by the entry of a new adverse claimant, ousting the former tenant and establishing a new possession adverse to the true owner. We have seen that the constructive possession is restored the moment the adverse possession ceases; consequently, before a second adverse possession is inaugurated the true owner must be again disseized or ousted. The possessions of two successive adverse claimants not in privity are, therefore, distinct, and, as we shall presently see, the latter posses-

¹ Lovell v. Frost, 44 Cal. 471. Compare Bowen v. Guild, 130 Mass. 121. See § 753.

² Groft v. Weakland, 34 Penn. St. 308.

³ Hunt v. Guilford, 4 Ohio, 310. Compare Trustees of East Hampton v. Kirk, 84 N. Y. 215.

⁴ Nixon v. Porter, 38 Miss. 415. See cases cited in § 733.

⁵ Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 550. On the principle that an abandonment restores the possession of the true owner, see Sawyer v. Kendall, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 241.

sion must be judged by its own merits alone, in determining whether it has ripened into title. What hostile act of another adverse claimant will interrupt the possession of the first tenant, by establishing the former's possession, will, in general, be determined by the same requirements, as we have seen, belong to an entry sufficient to oust the owner in the first place; that is to say, it must be an open hostile act of ownership, coupled with the intention to hold the possession exclusively. Thus it is said in a recent case in Alabama¹: "The unknown intrusions of mere trespassers will not interrupt the continuity unless continued for such a length of time as to become assertions of adverse right." In a late case in Texas, where a few days after the occupant of land had gone into possession he was driven away by the Indians, but returned "as soon as it was safe for him to do so," but about a year after his expulsion, the court refused to reckon a part of the time of his absence to complete the bar of the statute, on the ground that he had not "such actual, continuous, adverse possession as was contemplated by the statute."² Mere loose verbal claims made by a third party will not effect an interruption.³

§ 746. Tacking.—Under the head of continuity as an essential ingredient in effectual adverse possession under the statute of limitations may be considered the subject of "tacking," as it is called, or in other words the joining together of the periods of time during which two or more successive occupants have had possession of the premises, with a view to form one continuous and complete adverse possession. Although the expression, "tacking of possessions," is frequently met with it is, strictly speaking, incorrect. It is not the case that different possessions are tacked, but rather the successive periods of time during which different occupants have held the same possession.

¹ Bell v. Denson, 56 Ala. 449. See Doe d. Farmer v. Eslava, 11 Ala. 1028.

² Fitch v. Boyer, 51 Tex. 349, 350. See especially Clark v. Potter, 32 O. S. 49; Smith v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 338. A mere survey of land for the purpose of ascertaining its locality is not such an entry as will interrupt the running of the statute. Hollinshead v. Nauman, 45 Pa. St. 141.

³ Robinson v. Phillips, 56 N. Y. 634.

There is but one possession. This, however, may be begun and continued by different occupants, or, as it is expressed, "it is immaterial whether the possession be held for the entire period by one party, or by several parties in succession, . . . provided the possession be continued and uninterrupted."¹ The very test of whether "tacking" may be permitted to make out the necessary statutory period for adverse possession is, whether the successive occupancy may be considered, so to speak, as forming a single uninterrupted possession, a "unity of possessions" as it is called,² or, in other words, one begun and continued in the same right.³ It may then be stated generally that tacking is permissible only when the successive occupants have held the possession in the same right; in other words, when there is a privity of estate between them.⁴ The Supreme Court of Alabama use this language:⁵ "Continuity is an indispensable element of an adverse possession. If several persons enter on lands at different times, and there is not a privity of estate between them, the several possessions cannot be tacked so as to make a continuity of possession on which the statute of limitations will operate. But if there is such privity of estate, or of title, as that the several possessions can and should be referred to the original entry, they are regarded as joined and continuous. The possession of a landlord and his tenant, of an ancestor and his heirs, of a vendor and his vendee, may be tacked to complete the bar of the statute of limitations. There is no break or interruption in the possession, each possessor is connected with his predecessor, and the whole is a continuous possession." But, on the other hand, we may add, unconnected possessions, though successive, cannot be tacked, for the reason that the moment that one posses-

¹ Benson v. Stewart, 30 Miss. 57; s. p. Olive v. Bevil, 55 Tex. 423.

² Schrack v. Zubler, 34 Pa. St. 41. See Kilburn v. Adams, 7 Met. (Mass.) 33.

³ Doswell v. De La Lanza, 20 How. 32; Wheeler v. Moody, 9 Tex. 372. Compare Leonard v. Leonard, 7 Allen (Mass.) 277; Kent v. Waite, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 138; Hill v. Crosby, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 466; Williams v. Nelson, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 142; DeMill v. Moffat, 49 Mich. 130, and cases cited.

⁴ See Haynes v. Boardman, 119 Mass. 415; Chandler v. Rushing, 38 Tex. 595; Shuffleton v. Nelson, 2 Sawyer, 540.

⁵ Riggs v. Fuller, 54 Ala. 146. Compare Clark v. Chase, 5 Sneed (Tenn.), 636. See Baker v. Hale, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 46; Jackson v. Leonard, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 653.

sion ceases, there is a break in the continuity, and, as we have already shown, in that moment the possession of the true owner is restored, and a new period under the statute must therefore begin with the new adverse possession, however immediately it may have succeeded its predecessor. In such a case, as it is expressed by the Supreme Court of California :¹ "The possession of each is distinct, and cannot constitute one adverse possession, for they are referable to different entries ; and because, as the defendant merely succeeds the former possessor, without privity, there may be an immediate succession of possessions, but not a continuity of possession." In Melvin v. Proprietors of Locks, etc.,² the Supreme Court of Massachusetts said : "It is a principle well established, that where several persons enter on land in succession, the several possessions cannot be tacked, so as to make a continuity of possession, unless there is a privity of estate, or the several titles are connected. Whenever one quits the possession, the seizin of the true owner is restored, and an entry afterward by another, wrongfully, constitutes a new disseizin."³ As it is expressed also by the Supreme Court of Connecticut : "The possessions must be connected and continuous, so that the possession of the true owner shall not constructively intervene between them."⁴ For the same reasons, two or more distinct possessions of the same occupant cannot be tacked to make out a sufficiently long adverse possession, for, as we have seen, in such a case the continuity has been interrupted.⁵ It was held in a case in the United States Supreme Court, that, though the actual possession of the claimants had never, in point of fact, been interrupted, yet the land in the meantime having been forfeited to the State for non-payment of taxes, the possession in law had been interrupted, and consequently the possession of the ¹ San Francisco v. Fulde, 37 Cal. 353, and cases cited. See Sargent v. Ballard, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 251 ; Okeson v. Patterson, 29 Pa. St. 22 ; Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 503.

² 5 Metc. (Mass.) 32.

³ See also Morrison v. Hays, 19 Ga. 294 ; Sawyer v. Kendall, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 244 ; Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 536.

⁴ Smith v. Chapin, 31 Conn. 531.

⁵ See Austin v. Bailey, 37 Vt. 219, 224.

same occupant prior and subsequent to the forfeiture could not be tacked.¹ The Supreme Court of Georgia, in which State the statutes of limitation were suspended from the 14th of December, 1861, to the 1st of January, 1863, decided that a possession enjoyed prior to December 14th, 1861, could be tacked to a possession subsequent to January 1st, 1863.²

§ 747. Privity, what constitutes for purposes of tacking.—The cases already referred to are sufficient to support the general principle that privity of some sort between successive occupants is essential to tacking their periods of possession so as to preserve the continuity;³ the main question remaining then is, what connection or relation between successive tenants will be held to constitute such privity? It is held by the Supreme Court of Missouri⁴ that “there must be a privity of grant or descent, or some judicial or other proceeding, that shall connect the possessions, so that the latter shall apparently hold by right of the former;” and the court add, “not even a writing is necessary, if it appear that the holding is continuous and under the first entry.” The ordinary relations of landlord and tenant, ancestor and heir, and vendor and vendee, specified in cases already cited,⁵ clearly constitute such a privity as that the “latter shall apparently hold by right of the former,” and that the possessions of both shall be “referable to the same entry,” and, consequently, tacking in such cases is clearly allowable. The test question as to whether the requisite privity exists between successive tenants is, whether the occupation of the subsequent tenant is referable to the same entry, and under the same “claim of right,” as it is called, as that of the prior occupant: in other words, whether the occupation of the one

¹ Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 121, 145, 146.

² Pollard v. Tait, 38 Ga. 443.

³ Though the principle stated in the text may be laid down as an indisputable rule of law, yet occasional dicta are to be met with holding the contrary doctrine, namely, that “no privity or connection among the successive tenants” is necessary. See Davis v. McArthur, 78 N. C. 359, and cases cited; Scales v. Cockrill, 3 Head (Tenn.), 432. But see Baker v. Hale, 6 Baxter (Tenn.), 46.

⁴ Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 549.

⁵ See Riggs v. Fuller, 54 Ala. 141; Sawyer v. Kendall, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 244.

constitutes but a continuation of the possession of the other. We need not inquire, in addition, whether the occupation of the subsequent tenant was derived directly from the prior tenant. It was decided, however, by the Supreme Court of Vermont,¹ that there was not the requisite privity between one in possession of land under a will under color of a life estate, and one in possession after the termination of the life estate, under the same will, claiming in remainder. But the contrary and it seems to us the better doctrine, is held in a later case in Massachusetts,² wherein the opinion of the court is thus expressed: "It is claimed that there is no such privity between the life tenant and the remainderman, because the latter in no sense claims under the former. But the answer is that both claim under the same will by one title. The disseizin, which was commenced by the testatrix, is continued by each in accordance with that title, and is referred by each only to the entry of the testatrix. There has been no loss of possession; no restoration of the seizin to the true owner; no new entry. The disseizin which commenced with the testatrix has been continuous in her devisees, and establishes her title by lapse of time. It is plainly distinguished from a case of successive entries and new disseizins by different and independent parties. . . . The test of title is that there has been no interruption of possession, and no new entry required."

§ 748. In the following cases, which we cite as illustrations, it has been held that the relation between the successive tenants constituted such a privity that their possessions could be tacked: between a purchaser of land at a sale by an administrator of a prior occupant and the latter;³ a husband, possessing land in the right of his wife during his life, and the widow continuing the possession in her own right;⁴ officers and members of an unincorpo-

¹ Austin v. Rutland R. R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

² Haynes v. Boardman, 119 Mass. 415.

³ Cochrane v. Faris, 18 Tex. 850.

⁴ Holton v. Whitney, 30 Vt. 405. On the other hand it has been held that a wife has no such privity of estate with her husband, in land of which he died in possession adverse to the real owner, that her continued possession after his decease can be tacked to his occupancy. Sawyer v. Kendall, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 241.

rated society occupying land, and the society after its incorporation continuing the possession;¹ the vendor and vendee of land, where no deed has been given of the premises in question, and the transfer of possession is shown only by parol.² This question of whether a deed or writing effectual to pass title is necessary, in order to connect the occupancy of a transferee of the possession with that of the prior occupant, has often arisen, but there is no doubt that, where the question only of an actual in distinction from a constructive possession arises, no necessity for such written evidence of transfer exists in order to show a continued possession. The Supreme Court of Ohio remarked:³ "The mode adopted for the transfer of the possession may give rise to questions between the parties to the transfer; but, as respects the right of third persons against whom the possession is held adversely, it seems to us to be immaterial, if successive transfers of possession were in fact made, whether such transfers were effected by will, by deed, or by mere agreement, either written or verbal." In such a case, too, as far as the actual possession transferred is concerned, it makes no difference if one of the occupants had color of title and the other had not. The actual possession of the prior will avail the subsequent occupant.⁴ But when it is attempted to apply the doctrine of privity of possession to a constructive as well as an actual possession, claimed to be continued in the subsequent occupant, the possession of the latter must be under either the same "color of title" or written instrument under which the prior occupant claims, as, for example, a will; or under such an instrument derived from the prior occupant,⁵ as, for example, a deed. As we shall presently see, a deed void upon its face cannot constitute "color of title;" and so it has been held in the Supreme Court of

¹ Reformed Church v. Schoolcraft, 65 N. Y. 134.

² Weber v. Anderson, 73 Ill. 439.

³ McNeely v. Langan, 22 Ohio St. 32. See Weber v. Anderson, 73 Ill. 444; citing Smith v. Chapin, 31 Conn. 531; Menkens v. Blumenthal, 27 Mo. 203; Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 544.

⁴ Day v. Wilder, 47 Vt. 583. See Howland v. Newark Association, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 366.

⁵ Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 549. See Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 431.

New York, that such a deed from one possessor to another will not preserve the continuity of a constructive possession.¹

§ 749. Possession must be "hostile."—It is, of course, tautology to say that adverse possession must be "hostile," and, on the general principle that possession, to be an effectual defense under the plea of the statute of limitations, must be "in derogation of," and not "in conformity with," the rights of the true owner,² it is hardly necessary to cite any further authorities. We repeat, that the whole doctrine of the bar of the statute is based upon the acquiescence of the owner in the hostile acts and claim of the adverse possessor, and the invasion of the rights of the true owner. As will appear hereafter, there must exist in the occupant an hostile intent or a claim inconsistent with any right of the owner; and, as already shown, such intent or claim must be manifested by acts of possession sufficiently actual, open, and continuous. To say that the possession must be hostile, is, in effect, to say that it must not be with the permission or in subserviency to the rights of the true owner. Where, therefore, there is already existing any relation or agreement between the owner and the occupant, in pursuance of which the latter is in possession of the land, as where the occupant has merely been in possession by sufferance, and without any intent to appropriate the land for himself, though such possession may have been in fact exclusive³—there can be no question of adverse possession. It may be here remarked that there are two presumptions of law always entertained; first, that every possessor is presumed to hold in accordance with right,⁴ i. e., with the title of the owner, or

¹ Simpson v. Downing, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 316, 320.

² Compare Farish v. Coon, 40 Cal. 33; Williams v. Higgins, 69 Ala. 523; Pulaski Co. v. State, 42 Ark. 118, 121.

³ Russell v. Davis, 38 Conn. 562.

⁴ Alexander v. Polk, 39 Miss. 738; Alexander v. Stewart, 50 Vt. 87; Parker v. Banks, 79 N. C. 480; Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671. The New York Court of Appeals uses the following language: "Possession alone, unexplained by collateral circumstances, evidences no more than that the occupation is rightful." Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 50. So the possession of a judgment debtor holding over after a sale of the land under execution is presumed to be held by the indulgence of the purchaser at such sale. Cook v. Travis, 20 N. Y. 403.

the converse that no entry or possession is presumed to be adverse to the lawful owner ;¹ and, secondly, that a condition or relation, shown once to exist, is presumed to continue till facts are proved to overcome such a presumption. Hence, to establish that a possession has been adverse, acts must be shown by the possessor which negative the presumption that it has been in subserviency to the rights of the owner ;² and where a relation, such as, for example, that of owner and tenant at will, has been shown once to exist between the owner and the occupant, the adverse character of the latter's possession can be established only by proof of acts on his part sufficient to rebut the presumption that such relation has continued.³

§ 750. Where the possession is begun in subserviency to the owner's title.—The question as between tenants in common.—It may be generally stated, that when a relationship which is not only consistent with, but is, in itself, a recognition by the occupant, of either the paramount right of the owner, as in the case of an owner and a tenant at will, or the equal rights of another, as in the case of cotenants in common, has been shown to exist, the acts of hostility, sufficient to manifest an exclusive claim on the part of the occupant, must be of a more unequivocal character than when no such relation has existed. Thus it is held in a late leading case in New Jersey, as follows : “ In the acquisition of title by adverse possession the distinction between strangers and tenants in common relates to the character of the evidence necessary to prove that the possession was adverse. . . . If the parties are strangers in title, possession and the exercise of rights of ownership are in themselves, in the absence of explanatory evidence, proof of an ouster of the true owner ; whereas, in cases of privity of title, such as subsist between tenants in common, the acts of possession of one tenant will, in the absence of satisfactory evidence to the contrary, be referred to the community of title, and there must be clearer and more decisive evidence of an ouster by one tenant in common of his associate than is necessary to prove that a person having no right to possession has ousted an owner in severalty."¹ To the same effect it is held by the Supreme Court of Illinois, in respect to the claim of adverse possession by one tenant in common against his co-tenants, as follows: "When one tenant in common is in possession of land, it requires clear and satisfactory proof of a subsequent disseizin of a co-tenant to characterize his possession as being adverse, so as by lapse of time to bar a right of entry. It is not sufficient that he continues to occupy the premises and appropriates to himself the exclusive rents and profits, makes slight improvements on the land and pays the taxes. To constitute a disseizin there must be outward acts of exclusive ownership of an unequivocal character, overt and notorious, and of such a nature as, by their own import, to impart information and give notice to the co-tenant that an adverse possession and an actual disseizin are intended to be asserted against him."² So it is held in New York that full possession by a tenant in common for many years will not, per se, constitute adverse possession. There must be an open claim of exclusive right, a refusal to account, or a denial of title to constitute ouster. So again, ouster will not be presumed from a sole possession, unless accompanied with some notorious act or claim sufficient to give character to the possession; as if the tenant purchase his co-tenant's interest at a sheriff's sale.³ Where, however, one of the tenants had been guilty of fraud, though he had procured a tax deed of the property which had been on record for five years, it was held that the statutes meanwhile had not been set in motion against his co-tenants in common.⁴ So it was decided in a case in Vermont that nothing short of an ouster of his co-tenants in common ¹ Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 538. Compare Sherman v. Kane, 86 N. Y. 68, 69; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 296; Union Savings Bank v. Taber, 13 R. I. 690; Harral v. Levery, 59 Conn. 46. See §§ 278, 280.

¹ Hart v. Bostwick, 14 Fla. 162; Brandt v. Ogden, 1 Johns. (N.Y.) 156; Jackson v. Vredenburg, 1 Johns. (N.Y.) 159-163; Jackson v. Parker, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 124.

² Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671.

³ Buchanan v. King, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 414.

² Busch v. Huston, 75 Ill. 343. See Lapeyre v. Paul, 47 Mo. 586.

³ Kathan v. Rockwell, 16 Hun (N. Y.), 90. See Millard v. McMullin, 68 N. Y. 352; Culver v. Rhodes, 13 N. Y. Weekly Dig. 563; s. p. McQuiddy v. Ware, 67 Mo. 74.

⁴ Austin v. Barrett, 44 Iowa, 488. Where one heir took exclusive possession of the land and improved it for more than twenty-five years, it was held that ejectment can establish an adverse possession in favor of one co-tenant.¹ Although the general rule is as stated, that, as between co-tenants, some unequivocal act of ouster, sufficient to indicate the adverse claim, must be shown,² yet, in a recent case in New York, it was held that the jury might presume an ouster from the fact of an exclusive occupation by one co-tenant for forty years, he having, during that time, conveyed in his own name portions of the land by deeds on record, and otherwise ignored the rights of his co-tenant.³ In a case in the same court already quoted,⁴ where an undivided portion of land had been sold by one tenant without objection by his co-tenant, and the purchaser—a school district—had erected a school-house upon the land, which had been standing for forty years, it was held that this was insufficient to raise the presumption of ouster and adverse possession by the district, as against the co-tenant, but that the purchase of the undivided portion was a recognition of the co-tenancy rather than an act in derogation of it. Had one of the co-tenants attempted to convey the whole land, and the district had occupied under such a conveyance, the court considered that an adverse possession would have been inaugurated.⁵ It would also seem, for the same reasons, that had a portion of the land been conveyed by one tenant, by metes and bounds—not an undivided portion—the grantee would have held possession adverse to the co-tenant. So we find it generally stated, that a conveyance by one tenant in common to a third person works, in favor of the latter, a disseizin of the co-tenant;⁶ though it may well be doubted whether such a conveyance would alone be sufficient notice to effect an ouster of a co-tenant.⁷ It is a familiar would not lie against him by the other heirs. Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274. Similarly in respect to tenants in common. See Lapeyre v. Paul, 47 Mo. 586.

¹ Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 534.

² See Chap. IX, especially §§ 276–287.

³ Woolsey v. Morss, 19 Hun (N. Y.), 273. See § 289.

⁴ Kathan v. Rockwell, 16 Hun (N. Y.), 90.

⁵ Citing Florence v. Hopkins, 46 N. Y. 182.

⁶ Riggs v. Fuller, 54 Ala. 141; Horne v. Howell, 46 Ga. 9; Kinney v. Slattery, 51 Iowa, 354; Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527.

⁷ Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 531; Culver v. Rhodes, 13 N. Y. Weekly Dig. 563; Buchanan v. King, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 414. See §§ 283, 287, 288.

principle, as we have seen, that the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of his co-tenants.¹ So long, therefore, as the relation of co-tenancy continues, one tenant cannot possess the land exclusively for himself, and thus establish a possession adverse to his co-tenants; the acts of hostility required of one tenant in common, sufficient to oust his co-tenant, must, for that reason, be such as amount to a renouncing of the co-tenancy, and put an end to the relation previously existing.

§ 751. The rule applied generally where there is a privity of possession or title.—As in the case of co-tenancy so in general it is true, that whenever such a relation, or trust, or privity of estate exists between the actual occupant of the land and another, that, in respect to the possession, there is between them an identity or subordination of interests, then the possession of one—the occupant—becomes, as in the case of co-tenancy, the possession of the other, through the principle of agency or trust. For instance, the possession of a tenant is the possession of his landlord,² and, it may be added, as it is expressed by the New York Court of Appeals, “a tenant for years is possessed, not properly of the land, but of the term for years.”³ Moreover, while such tenancy continues, and until the expiration of the term, the statute will not run against the landlord or reversioner, for the reason that he is not entitled to the immediate actual possession.⁴ Such relation, privity, or trust must be explicitly renounced or disclaimed by declarations or acts unmistakably hostile to it,⁵ and an exclusive adverse claim asserted, before the possession of the occupant can be considered

¹ Kinney v. Slattery, 51 Iowa, 354; Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527. See also Lapeyre v. Paul, 47 Mo. 586; Neely v. Neely, 79 N. C. 478. See § 276.

² See Chap. XII.

³ See Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 49.

⁴ See Sands v. Hughes, 53 N. Y. 294; or, in other words, “no possession can be deemed adverse to a party who has not, at the time, the right of entry and possession.” Devyr v. Schaefer, 55 N. Y. 446. See § 753g.

⁵ The presumption that the possession of a tenant continues in subordination to the title of his landlord, may be rebutted, but to do so effectively and initiate an adverse holding, the tenant must surrender the possession to the landlord, or do some equivalent act and bring home to the landlord, knowledge of the adverse claim. Whiting v. Edmunds, 94 N. Y. 314.

adverse.¹ In other words, there must be a concurrence of two things: a repudiation of the previously existing relation, and an assertion of an appropriation² by the occupant for himself, accompanied by an actual exclusive occupation.³ As a rule, both these essentials are manifested by the same acts, which at once amount both to a repudiation of any pre-existing relation of privity or trust, and to an assertion of an exclusive adverse claim. Thus, where land had been conveyed by a plaintiff, a religious society, to a town, in trust for the use and support of ministers of the gospel, it was held that the application by the town of the rents to municipal purposes, with the knowledge of the plaintiff, was a repudiation of the trust by the town, and an assertion of such adverse claim as, after a long period of time, vested an absolute title in the town.⁴ So an agency may be renounced by the "hostile attitude" of the agent, manifesting an intent to hold for himself and not for his principal;⁵ and so may a tenancy, it seems, by an open and notorious act of appropriation, inconsistent with the rights of the landlord and the continuance of the tenancy.⁶ Authorities are numerous, to the effect that a tenant for years cannot possess adversely to his landlord nor impeach his landlord's title. This general rule rests, for the most part, upon the principle of estoppel. There can be no doubt that, so long as the tenancy continues, the possession of the tenant cannot be adverse; but, unless it can be main-

¹ Estes v. Long, 71 Mo. 605; Long v. Mast, 11 Penn. St. 189; Hall v. Stevens, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 418; Day v. Cochran, 24 Miss. 261; Clarke v. McClure, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 305; Criswell v. Altemus, 7 Watts (Penn.). 581; Harrison v. Pool, 16 Ala. 167; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289; Williams v. Cash, 27 Ga. 507; Hamilton v. Boggess, 63 Mo. 233; Burnans v. Van Zandt, 7 N. Y. 527; Bazemore v. Davis, 48 Ga. 341; Catlin v. Decker, 38 Conn. 262.

² As to the necessity for an intent to appropriate for himself on the part of the claimant, see post, Chap. XXIX.

³ Ousted in Whittington v. Flint, 43 Ark. 518.

⁴ Congregational Society v. Newington, 53 N. H. 595. Compare Catlin v. Decker, 38 Conn. 262.

⁵ Whiting v. Taylor, 7 Dana (Ky.), 403. The agent must openly disclaim the title under which he entered, and assert a hostile right. Baucum v. George, 65 Ala. 260.

⁶ Sharpe v. Kelly, 5 Denio (N. Y.), 431; Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 534. See Sherman v. Kane, 86 N. Y. 68, citing Jackson v. Burton, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 341. See, also, Chap. XII.

tained that a tenant cannot, by any act, renounce his tenancy and thus put an end to the privity before existing between him and his landlord, and the consequences of it, and thus assume the position of a stranger to the title and possession, it would seem that a tenant, like any other person in privity with, or occupying a position of trust toward, the owner of the land, might originate an adverse possession.¹ In New York, it is held that possession under a deed from a tenant is subordinate to the tenancy, and hence cannot be adverse,² though it is also held that such a rule applies only to the "conventional" relation of landlord and tenant, and not to a holding under an assessment lease.³ Following the rule, that so long as such a relation or privity exists as that discussed in the text, the possession (of a tenant, for example) cannot be adverse, it is held in North Carolina, that the possession of a tenant of the widow of the deceased owner of the premises under a lease, which the widow had no authority to make, could not be adverse to the heirs of the deceased owner.⁴ A trustee's possession of land purchased with trust funds, though in his individual name, is the possession of the beneficiaries, until he does some "unequivocal act denying their right,"⁵ when the statute would begin to run. In a recent case in the New York Court of Appeals,⁶ the doctrine is reiterated, that a grantor, even with warranty, may originate a possession adverse

¹ See Sherman v. Champlain Trans. Co. 31 Vt. 162.

² See Christie v. Gage, 71 N. Y. 189-193; Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 123.

³ See Sands v. Hughes, 53 N. Y. 287.

⁴ Melvin v. Waddell, 75 N. C. 361. Compare Kincaid v. Perkins, 63 N. C. 282. So the statute does not run against the reversioner until the termination of the life estate. Pinckney v. Burrage, 31 N. J. L. 21; McCorry v. King, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 267; Christie v. Gage, 71 N. Y. 189-193; Sutton v. Casseleggi, 77 Mo. 397; Keith v. Keith, 80 Mo. 125; Dewey v. McLain, 7 Kans. 126; Doe d. Parker v. Gregory, 2 Ad. & El. 14; Poor v. Larrabee, 58 Me. 543; Pickett v. Doe d. Pope, 74 Ala. 130; Gernet v. Lynn, 31 Pa. St. 94; Jones v. Freed, 42 Ark. 358. Nor against a judgment creditor until after he becomes a purchaser and has a right of entry. Pratt v. Pratt, 96 U. S. 704. And a secret trust to defraud creditors will not clothe the trustee who has failed to take possession with such ownership as will establish adverse possession against a creditor. Jones v. Wilson, 69 Ala. 400.

⁵ Butler v. Lawson, 72 Mo. 227, citing Norris' Appeal, 71 Penn. St. 106. See Paschall v. Hinderer, 28 Ohio St. 568; Ebbinghaus v. Killian, 1 Mackey (D. C.), 247. But see Bargamin v. Clarke, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 544.

⁶ Sherman v. Kane, 86 N. Y. 68, 69, and cases cited.

to his grantee. The court on this point say: "When there is a disclaimer by the grantor of the title of the grantee, subsequent to the delivery of the grant, an adverse possession may be acquired, and it is not necessary that such possession should be hostile in its inception." And in California it is held that a grantor of a quitclaim deed may remain in possession, and "assert an adverse possession," which will ultimately lead to title.¹ In Iowa, the possession of a grantee in possession, who has recovered judgment against his grantor on his covenant of title, is adverse only from the time of recovery of judgment.² So a possession commenced by a permissive entry may become adverse by a distinct disclaimer of the possession and title of the owner.³ In Iowa it is held that, in the case of a tenant at will, notice to quit to the latter is necessary before his possession can be adverse to the owner.⁴ And in Alabama, an "overt act of hostility" is required to set the statute in motion in favor of a mortgagor, or his vendee, against a mortgagee out of possession.⁵ On the other hand it is held, in Iowa, that in the case of a mortgagee in possession, the statute does not begin to run till the debt has been paid. After such an event the possession of the mortgagee would, if sufficiently open and accompanied by acts of ownership, be deemed adverse to the rights of the mortgagor.⁶ So, also, it is held in Mis-

¹ Dorland v. Magilton, 47 Cal. 485.

² Davenport v. Sebring, 52 Iowa, 364.

³ Hudson v. Putney, 14 W. Va. 561; Ford v. Holmes, 61 Ga. 419; s. p. Collins v. Johnson, 57 Ala. 304.

⁴ Austin v. Wilson, 46 Iowa, 362.

⁵ Boyd v. Beck, 29 Ala. 703. See Parker v. Banks, 79 N. C. 480.

⁶ Green v. Turner, 38 Iowa, 112. It must be borne in mind that the estate of the mortgagee in the mortgaged premises is somewhat different in Alabama from what it is in Iowa. See Barker v. Bell, 37 Ala. 358; Hall v. Savill, 3 Greene (Iowa), 37; Babcock v. Hoey, 11 Iowa, 377; and, in general, that on the question of adverse possession arising between mortgagor and mortgagee, much depends upon their respective interests in the land as they have been construed by the courts of the different States. For example, the question of adverse possession cannot arise at all in favor of a mortgagor in possession against a mortgagee, in those States where the latter's interest is considered a mere chattel interest and not an interest in the land. So also the question would be determined differently where a mortgage conveys an absolute estate. On this subject see, e. g., Poignand v. Smith, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 272; Sheafe v. Gerry, 18 N. H. 247; Foster v. Perkins, 42 Me. 168; Northy v. Northy, 45 N. H. 144; Johnson v. Phillips, 13 Gray (Mass.), 198; Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343; Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 26; Philips v. Bank of Lewistown, 18 Penn. St. 402. See §§ 327, 345.

issippi, that from the time of the forfeiture of the mortgagor's estate by a breach of condition, his possession is, as to the mortgagee, adverse,¹ though, in general, the statute will not run in favor of a mortgagor against an equitable mortgagee.²

When there is a contract of purchase or agreement to convey between the owner of the land and the occupant, the question often arises as to when the possession of the latter can become adverse. In general, it may be said that such possession is deemed subordinate to the rights of the owner,³ till the conditions entitling the possessor to a conveyance have been fully performed, when the possession will become adverse.⁴ Thus in Hart v. Bostwick,⁵ cited above, it is held that when one under an agreement to buy land pays the consideration money, and enters with the owner's consent, the statute begins to run in favor of the purchaser. In the same case it is said (obiter) that if a purchaser enters under a contract for a deed with one, but subsequently takes a deed from another, the possession thereupon becomes adverse to the first party, but we doubt whether the mere taking of a deed from another would be a sufficient "repudiation" of the contract under which he entered. If an entry is made under a bond for a deed, the possession prior to the time of payment of the purchase money, cannot be adverse,⁶ and the same may be said of an entry and possession under an executory contract to convey.⁷

¹ Wilkinson v. Flowers, 37 Miss. 579, 585. But see Seeley v. Manning, 37 Wis. 574.

² Green v. Mizelle, 54 Miss. 220.

³ See Hart v. Bostwick, 14 Fla. 162, where it is held that if an entry merely be made under a contract to purchase, the statute will not run till the contract is repudiated. See Fulkerson v. Brownlee, 69 Mo. 372; also Chap. X, § 305.

⁴ Matter of Department of Parks, 73 N. Y. 560; Fulkerson v. Brownlee, 69 Mo. 372. In an earlier case, in New York, it was held that in an action of ejectment, where the defendant had occupied the premises more than twenty years under a contract of purchase, the purchase money not being paid, the statute of limitations would be a defense to the payment of the purchase money, but not a defense to uphold an equitable title in the defendant through the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of time. See Lawrence v. Ball, 14 N. Y. 477.

⁵ 14 Fla. 162. See cases cited.

⁶ Ormond v. Martin, 37 Ala. 604. But see Outcalt v. Ludlow, 32 N. J. Law, 239.

⁷ Brown v. Supervisors, 54 Miss. 230; Nowlin v. Reynolds, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 137; Benson v. Stewart, 30 Miss. 49.

§ 752. Possession must be "exclusive."—That possession to be adverse must be in exclusion of the rightful owner¹ is a self evident corollary of the principles already stated. There can be no such thing as a conflict of actual possession of the same premises between the owner and another; the owner's seizin continues till he is disseized. The hostile act of an adverse claimant sufficient to establish an adverse possession will at the same time oust or disseize the owner; any hostile act of less effect will at most amount to a mere trespass, sufficient to disturb, perhaps, but not to destroy the owner's possession. But the claimant's possession, whenever once established, must be exclusive of all others,² as well as of the owner, to be effectually adverse against the latter. The reason for this rule is obvious when we consider the general principle that the moment the possession of an adverse occupant ceases the seizin or possession of the owner is constructively, at least, restored. In the case, therefore, of several adverse occupants who, at the same time, or successively, occupy the locus in quo, and between whom there is no privity, as the adverse possession of each ceases, so often is the owner restored to his rightful possession;³ therefore, in such a case, there can be no effectual continuous adverse possession.

§ 753. Conflicting possessions, general principles regulating.—But there may be an apparent conflict of possession between two or more occupants of the same land, each of whom claims adversely to the true owner, when the question will arise as to which possession shall be effectual, both as against the other adverse claim and as against the owner. For example, one adverse claimant may have an actual possession of a part of a tract of land, of which another part may be in the actual possession of another

¹ A husband cannot hold adversely to his wife premises which they jointly occupy. Hendricks v. Rasson, 53 Mich. 575.

² Boulo v. New Orleans M. & T. R. R. Co., 55 Ala. 480; Thomas v. Marshfield, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 250.

³ Compare supra, §§ 738, 739, 740, 741, 744, and Smith v. Chapin, 31 Conn. 531.

claimant, who at the same time has "color of title" to the whole tract. In such a case it has been claimed that the actual partial possession of the former should yield to the possession under color of title, even though the latter is subsequent in time to the former.¹ For the solution of such questions, the following rules, which we consider consistent both with the principle and authority governing this subject, are deemed adequate: First, there cannot be two actual possessions of the same identical land at the same time. What may appear to be such are either possessions of different parts of the same tract, or are alternately possessions of the whole. In the former case, each adverse possession depends upon its own merits alone; in the latter, neither is effectual against the true owner, unless one is continued exclusively for the statutory period. Second, where one of the adverse occupants has, besides a partial actual possession, color of title to the whole tract, and thereby claims constructive possession of the remainder, such circumstance is as ineffectual against an actual possession of a part of the same by another adverse claimant as would be the constructive possession of the true owner against an actual ouster from a part of his land. Third, where two or more claimants are in possession of land, each actually occupying a part of the same, and each having color of title to the whole, the junior must yield to the senior possession or title,² as to the part claimed by both through constructive possession under color of title, on the same principle that the possession of an adverse claimant must be confined to what he actually occupies, though he have color of title to the whole tract, if the rightful owner be still in the actual possession of any part of the same,³ or recovers possession of some part of it.⁴ So, also, it may be added, that in all cases of conflict of possessions, or of possession under different claims of right, or of "lapping," or interfering conveyances, where

¹ Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 249.

² Where, however, the junior claimant has an actual possession, there can be no question of conflict. See McAllister v. Devane, 76 N. C. 57.

³ Armstrong v. Risteau, 5 Md. 256.

⁴ Semple v. Cook, 50 Cal. 26.

a constructive possession is called in question, such possession follows the title,¹ or the better right,² or the older color of title,³ as the case may be.⁴

§ 753a. Exceptions.—No adverse possession against the State or Government.—Municipal corporations.—There are various exceptions to the rule as to acquiring title by adverse possession. Upon universally recognized considerations of public policy, there can be no adverse possession against the commonwealth.⁵ A State statute cannot bar the United States,⁶ and laches cannot be imputed to the government.⁷ The rule of nullum tempus occurrit regi has existed as an element of the English law from a very early period,⁸ and has come down to the present time. It is said in California that possession of government lands, though admitted to be subordinate to the title of the government, may, nevertheless, be adverse to every one not holding under the government.⁹ The existence of war suspends the statute of limitations as between citizens of the adverse belligerent powers, but not as between citizens of the same power.¹⁰

¹ Kitchen v. Wilson, 80 N. C. 191; Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat. 213; Smith v. Burtis, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 218; Codman v. Winslow, 10 Mass. 146, 151; Whittington v. Wright, 9 Ga. 23; Brimmer v. Proprietors of Long Wharf, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 131; Stevens v. Hollister, 18 Vt. 294; Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 536; Semple v. Cook, 50 Cal. 26.

² Hunt v. Wickliffe, 2 Pet. 201. s. p. Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 33. Compare Martin v. Bonsack, 61 Mo. 556; McAllister v. Devane, 76 N. C. 57.

³ Borrets v. Turner, 2 Hayw. (N. C.) 113. Compare Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 344; Ballance v. Flood, 52 Ill. 49.

⁴ See especially Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 368; Bellis v. Bellis, 122 Mass. 417; Cline's Heirs v. Catron, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 378; Frisby v. Withers, 61 Tex. 143; Renneker v. Warren, 17 S. C. 139; Gadsby v. Dyer, 91 N. C. 312; Alston v. Collins, 2 Spears' (S. C.) Law, 459; Evitts v. Roth, 61 Tex. 84; Sims v. Meacham, 2 Bailey's (S. C.) Law, 101.

⁵ Cary v. Whitney, 48 Me. 516; Koiner v. Rankin, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 420; City of Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co., 12 Ill. 38; Walls v. McGee, 4 Harr. (Del.) 108; Serrano v. United States, 5 Wall. 451; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 15 Pet. 233; Burbank v. Fay, 65 N. Y. 57; United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 488; Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 145; St. Vincent Orphan Asylum v. City of Troy, 76 N. Y. 108; Swann v. Lindsey, 70 Ala. 507; United States v. Spiel, 3 McCra. 107; Hoey v. Furman, 1 Pa. St. 295.

⁶ United States v. Hoar, 2 Mason, 311; United States v. Williams, 5 McL. 133; United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 489.

⁷ Stoughton v. Baker, 4 Mass. 521; United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. 720; United States v. City of Alexandria, 4 Hughes, 545.

⁸ United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 489.

⁹ Lord v. Sawyer, 57 Cal. 65. See McManus v. O'Sullivan, 48 Cal. 7.

¹⁰ Cross v. Sabin, 13 Fed. Rep. 308. See Ryan v. Kilpatrick, 66 Ala. 332; Morgan v. Casey, 73 Ala. 223.

While municipal corporations may acquire title by adverse possession,¹ it does not necessarily follow that there can be adverse possession against municipal corporations, or public authorities, as regards streets, squares, or places held for the public benefit or dedicated to public use.² It would seem to be clear, that title by prescription affecting such interests cannot be gained against the public, for, as we have seen, this species of title, in the case of incorporeal hereditaments, is founded upon the presumption of a grant. The theory of the law is, that no grant can be presumed against the public.³ Conferring title by prescription, under such circumstances, would, in effect, legalize a public nuisance. But the authorities, even upon these points, are not uniform, and cases may be found where titles were gained against municipal and public authorities, both by prescription and adverse possession.⁴ Where the land is taken and held solely for public purposes, we do not think the negligence of public officers or agents to evict occupants or intruders should affect or bar the public right. Where, however, the title is held by a municipal body, practically in the capacity of private owner, no good reason is known why the title might not be lost by adverse possession, or affected by prescription.

The fee in a highway, even while the public easement exists, is as much the subject of prescription, or of the operation of the statute of limitations, as it would be if

¹ Sherman v. Kane, 86 N. Y. 57.

² Grogan v. Town of Hayward, 4 Fed. Rep. 165; Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265; People v. Pope, 53 Cal. 437; McFarlane v. Kerr, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 249; Vicksburg v. Marshall, 59 Miss. 571.

³ Burbank v. Fay, 65 N. Y. 57, and cases reviewed in the able opinion of Dwight, C.; Thomas v. Marshfield, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 240; Gloucester Parish v. Beach, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 60, note; Staffordshire & W. Canal Nav. v. Birmingham Canal Nav., L. R. 1 E. & I. App. 254; Rochdale Canal Co. v. Radcliffe, 18 Q. B. 287; Elwell v. Birmingham Canal Nav., 3 H. L. Cas. 812; Grand Surrey Canal Co. v. Hall, 1 M. & G. 392; Gerring v. Barfield, 16 C. B. (N. S.) 597; Morton v. Moore, 15 Gray (Mass.), 573; Commonwealth v. Alburger, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 486; Penny Pot Landing Case, 16 Penn. St. 94; Commonwealth v. McDonald, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 395; Kung v. Shoneberger, 2 Watts (Pa.), 23; Gray v. Bartlett, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 186.

⁴ See Dillon's Mun. Corp. § 668; Lane v. Kennedy, 13 O. S. 42; City of Burlington v. B. & M. Railroad Co. 41 Iowa, 134; City of St. Louis v. Newman, 45 Mo. 138; Simplot v. City of Dubuque, 49 Iowa, 630; Beardslee v. French, 7 Conn. 125; School Directors of St. Charles v. Goerges, 50 Mo. 194; Kennebunkport v. Smith, 22 Me. 445; Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92; Knight v. Heaton, 22 Vt. 480; Evans v. Erie Co., 66 Pa. St. 222.

there were no highway. The only difference consists in the difficulty of establishing and maintaining adverse user against the adjoining proprietors, while the public are using the highway.¹

§ 753b. Disabilities.—Infancy.—The statute of limitations will not operate to bar a minor of his action for the recovery of realty.² This is the most common illustration of a disability, and will be found embodied in the statutes of the various States. The infant's rights in other respects affecting realty have already been noticed.³

§ 753c. Co-existing disabilities.—It is an acknowledged rule, that when there are two or more co-existing disabilities in the same person, when his right of action accrues, he is not obliged to act until the last is removed.⁴

§ 753d. Subsequent disabilities.—Tacking.—The disabilities must exist, however, at the time the cause of action accrues; no subsequent disabilities possessing the power to arrest the running of the statute.⁵ In other words the statute overrides all subsequent disabilities.⁶

§ 753e. Suspension by agreement.—The running of the statute of limitations may be suspended by the mutual agreement of the parties.⁷ So an agreement not to plead the statute of limitations is binding.⁸ Thus, adverse possession, as we have seen, loses its character when the occupant agrees with the true owner that suit for possession shall not be brought during their respective lives,⁹ or until the encroaching building the subject of dispute is removed

¹ Cady v. Fitzsimmons, 50 Conn. 214.

² Lloyd v. Bunce, 41 Iowa, 660; Clayton v. Rose, 87 N. C. 107; Crosby v. Dowd, 61 Cal. 557.

³ See §§ 196, 198, 254.

⁴ Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 310; Mercer v. Selden, 1 How. 37.

⁵ Mercer v. Selden, 1 How. 52; Thorp v. Raymond, 16 How. 247.

⁶ Hogan v. Kartz, 94 U. S. 773; Currier v. Gale, 3 Allen (Mass.), 328; Dobson v. Dickson, 8 Ala. 252; Mitchell v. Berry, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 602; Tyson v. Britton, 6 Tex. 222; Smilie v. Biffle, 2 Pa. St. 52.

⁷ Dietrick v. Noel, 42 O. S. 21. See Webber v. Williams College, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 302; Rowe v. Thompson, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 377; Holladay v. Littlepage, 2 Munf. (Va.) 316; Ball v. Wyeth, 8 Allen (Mass.), 275.

⁸ Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 652; Gaylord v. Van Loan, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 308.

⁹ Dietrick v. Noel, 42 O. S. 18.

or destroyed.¹ In Lovell v. Frost,² the party in possession inquired of the true owner "whether he would not rent or sell the land if it should be allotted to him" (the true owner) in a partition proceeding then pending, and the California Supreme Court held that if a party in possession of land offers to purchase it from the true owner, and this offer is made, not merely to buy an outstanding or adverse claim in order to quiet his possession or protect himself from litigation, the offer is a recognition of the owner's title, and will stop the running of the statute.³ It is said on the other hand, in a recent case in Maine, that a disseizin begun as a trespass is an incipient and not a completed title, and hence, until the end of the twenty years, there must remain an interest in the proprietor, an acknowledgment of which can, in no way, affect the fact of disseizin.⁴

§ 753f. Disabilities of co-tenants.—The disability of one co-tenant, as we have seen, does not save the others, for each may sue.⁵

¹ Devyr v. Schaefer, 55 N. Y. 451.

² 44 Cal. 471.

³ S. P. Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Mead, 63 Cal. 112.

⁴ Bean v. Bachelder, 74 Me. 206; Blanchard v. Chapman, 7 Me. 122.

⁵ Moore v. Armstrong, 10 Ohio, 11; Carpenter v. Schermerhorn, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 314; Peters v. Jones, 35 Iowa, 512; Jackson v. Bradt, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 169; Wheeler v. Ladd, 40 Ark. 108; Bronson v. Adams, 10 Ohio, 135. See § 276.

CHAPTER XXIX.

INTENTION.—CLAIM OF RIGHT.

| | |
|---|--|
| § 754. Possession must be accompanied by an adverse intent. | § 757. Good faith in assertion of adverse claim. |
| 755. Intent the essence of adverse possession. | 758. Acts and declarations of the occupant indicating intent. |
| 756. Variously designated.—“Claim of ownership” necessary. | 759. Possession under a mistake. |
| | 760. Boundary lines erroneously located between adjoining proprietors. |

§ 754. Possession must be accompanied by an adverse intent.
—We come now to consider the second essential of an effectual adverse possession under the statute of limitations. The possession of the adverse claimant must not only be actual, open, hostile and continuous, but it must be accompanied by an intention on his part to hold the land so possessed for himself, and as the owner of it; or, in other words, such possession must be under a claim of title¹ or ownership. There must concur at the same time the factum,—possession, and the intentio,—a claim of ownership; as it is said: “The fact of possession, and the intention with which it was commenced and held, are the only tests” of whether a possession be adverse.² In other words, no matter how exclusive and hostile to the real owner a possession may be in fact and in appearance, it cannot be effectually adverse unless accompanied by the intent on the part of the tenant to make it so, or, as it is expressed: “The possession of no person can be adverse to the title of the true owner, unless the person intends it to be adverse to that title.”³ Adverse possession must be, therefore, so to speak, subjectively as well as objectively

¹ Wilder v. Wheeldon, 56 Vt. 344.

² Davenport v. Sebring, 52 Iowa, 366. See Jackson v. Wheat, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 44; La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 609, 613, 617; Grant v. Fowler, 39 N. H. 104; Root v. McFerrin, 37 Miss. 51; Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671; Larwell v. Stevens, 2 McCra. 311.

³ Stamper v. Griffin, 20 Ga. 321.

- hostile, though, of course, in the absence of express declarations of the claimant, his intent is to be proved, often-times, merely by the character of his acts of possession.

§ 755. Intent the essence of adverse possession.—The claim by the tenant, “in opposition to the title to which his possession is alleged to be adverse,” has been called “the very essence of an adverse possession.”¹ And it has been said, that if there be “a naked possession, not accompanied with any claim of right, it will never constitute a bar, but will inure to the advantage of the real owner.”² It is the intention which “fixes the character of the original entry,” and determines whether it be an ouster or a mere trespass,³ or whether the possession established be in subordination or in hostility to the real owner.⁴ Thus it is said, that “he who sets up the title must go upon the lands with a palpable intent to claim the possession as his own. The intent to claim and possess the land is one of the qualities necessary to constitute a disseizin and to hold under an adverse possession;”⁵ and also that “the intention of the possessor to claim adversely, is an essential ingredient;”⁶ and “The statute of limitations runs only in favor of parties in possession claiming title adversely to the whole world.”⁷

§ 756. Variouly designated.—“Claim of ownership” necessary.—This adverse intention on the part of the claimant has been called by a variety of names, such as “claim of right,” “claim of title,” “claim of ownership,” and “claim of appropriation.”⁸ Of these expressions the last is perhaps the most accurate, for, except in the case of a bona fide

¹ Farish v. Coon, 40 Cal. 57.

² Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 597.

³ Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Peters, 41; Wiggins v. Holley, 11 Ind. 2; Austin v. Holt, 32 Wis. 490.

⁴ Society, &c. v. Town of Pawlet, 4 Pet. 506, 507; Clarke v. McClure, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 305; Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 46.

⁵ Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 41.

⁶ See Washburn v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 368; Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 538; French v. Pearce, 8 Conn. 445. See Grube v. Wells, 34 Iowa, 149, 150; McNamee v. Moreland, 26 Iowa, 109.

⁷ McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 635.

⁸ See g. g. Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24.

claimant, who actually believes that he is the rightful owner, there cannot be strictly, at the inception of an adverse possession, and at least until it has continued for the statutory period, any claim of title, or right or ownership in the premises, but only an intention to appropriate and hold the same as owner, and to the exclusion, rightfully or wrongfully, of every one else.¹

The intention of the tenant must be not only to hold the land exclusively and adversely, but to hold it for himself, and as the owner. Thus, it is held in New York,² that possession to be adverse, so as to ripen into a title, must be accompanied by a claim of title in fee. "The quality and extent of the right (the court say) depends upon the claim which goes with it;" and it was accordingly held that possession under a claim for an unexpired term could not be adverse and ripen into title, because it was not a "claim to the entire title." It has been decided that entry under a deed which admits title in another than the grantor, could not, in the absence of any disclaimer on the part of the grantee, be under the requisite "claim of title exclusive of any other right."³ Again it is said that a "claim of ownership" is necessary.⁴ Therefore, a claim having been made to the "ownership of the improvements," such fact was held evidence of the absence of the requisite "claim of title and right to the land," upon which to base adverse possession.⁵ So it was decided that acts of ownership upon the land, should be such as to indicate a notorious "claim of property in it."⁶ In a case in the Supreme Court of Indiana, where it was contended that, by a "constant and exclusive" occupancy and use of a part of a street by a railroad company, "as and for the right of way," the company became the owners of the part so occupied, the court held that such use could not ripen into an "absolute ownership of the part of the

¹ See infra, § 758, and note.

² Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 49, 50.

³ Furlong v. Garrett, 44 Wis. 111.

⁴ Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 407.

⁵ Davenport v. Sebring, 52 Iowa, 367, 368.

⁶ Ford v. Wilson, 35 Miss. 505. See the leading case of Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671.

street." This language is employed: "It is not alleged that the use was under a claim of ownership of the soil, nor is it claimed or averred that the use was adverse to the right of the public to use the place as part of the street."¹ In a case in the Supreme Court of Connecticut,² a charge that "it is essential that the possessor should hold the land, claiming it as his own, and denying the right of everybody else," was held to be erroneous; and in an earlier case in the same court,³ it was said that, "to make a disseizin, it is not necessary that the disseizor should claim title to the lands taken by him. It is not necessary that he should deny or disclaim the title of the legal proprietor," but, the court added, "It is necessary only, that he should enter into and take the possession of the lands, as if they were his own." These cases are perfectly consistent with the principle laid down on this subject in all the cases above cited, to the effect that, to constitute a disseizin of the true owner, there must be, on the part of the adverse occupant, an intention to appropriate the land as his own; the cases differ only in respect to the language used to express such an intention. As we have remarked above, the expressions "claim of title," or "right," or "ownership" are, in connection with a naked adverse possession, inaccurate, for they imply a belief in the validity of the claim, or good faith on the part of the claimant. This leads us to the subject of good faith in connection with an adverse possession.

§ 757. Good faith in assertion of adverse claim.—As we shall see hereafter, the question of good faith is important only in connection with a constructive possession⁴ through the instrumentality of a deed or other instrument, giving the claimant under it "color of title" to land, of a part of which he is in actual possession. In connection with the subject of naked actual adverse possession good faith has now no place. The whole theory as to the necessity for an "intention to appropriate," as we prefer to call it, and

¹ Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Ross, 47 Ind. 30.

² Johnson v. Gorham, 38 Conn. 520, 521, and cases cited and discussed.

³ Bryan v. Atwater, 5 Day (Conn.), 181.

⁴ See § 775.

as to the further necessity for good faith in such an appropriation, when a constructive possession is claimed under color of title, may be summed up as follows: "It is the possession that bars the owner of a recovery," as the court say in a case in Illinois,¹ that is, the possession of an adverse claimant. No such possession is acquired without a disseizin of the true owner; for otherwise the owner's possession, constructively or otherwise, continues, and the occupation of any one else is permissive and not adverse, but no one can be a disseizor without the intention to disseize, or to possess for himself, which is equivalent to it. Hence, in all cases of adverse possession, there must be present the intention to appropriate. But the appropriation once made, the possession begun, the presence or absence of good faith in the possessor is immaterial. It is the possession that bars the owner, and this is true whether the possession be actual or constructive, a naked one or accompanied by color of title. The necessity for good faith in claiming under color of title applies only so far as the possession claimed is derived from and depends upon the instrument constituting the color of title, i. e., it applies only to the constructive possession which such an instrument gives the claimant under it. Should such an instrument (assumed to be defective because it is only color of title) be entirely annulled or invalidated by the fraud of the claimant, it can no longer create any constructive possession or perform any other office for such claimant. Hence, as soon as bad faith in the claimant, or a want of belief in the genuineness of his title has vitiated the instrument constituting his color of title, so soon does the constructive adverse possession which it creates cease to exist, though his actual adverse possession may continue. This subject has been much discussed in the books, though the distinction which we make between actual and constructive possession through some written instrument, has been often overlooked in considering the necessity for good faith. Thus, in the case of Livingston v. Peru Iron Co.,²

¹ Weber v. Anderson, 73 Ill. 442.

² 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 511. The ruling in this case, in spite of what seems unequivocal and general language, on the essentials of adverse possession, has been treated in the Court of Errors of New York, it was held, that a deed fraudulently obtained was not available as the foundation of an adverse possession, and in general, that, to constitute a possession adverse, the adverse claimant must act bona fide, and must believe the land to be his. It is no longer a question that, in claiming title to land under the statute of limitations, through a naked or actual adverse possession simply, accompanied by the necessary adverse intention, the good or bad faith of the adverse possessor, in acquiring or in continuing the possession, is of no importance. "The statute of limitations . . . does not involve the question of good faith in the naked possessor" as the court say in a case in Texas,¹ or "if the possession of the intruder has in fact been adverse, and has been asserted by such open and notorious acts of ownership as are essential in the acquisition of title by adverse possession," as is held by the Court of Errors of New Jersey.² So, in the Connecticut case above cited, it is said: "If the property be so taken and so used by any one, though he claims no title, but avows himself to be a wrong-doer, yet, by such act, the legal proprietor is disseized."³

§ 758. Acts and declarations of the occupant indicating intent.—The adverse intention of the tenant, in the absence of proof of his own admissions to the contrary, or other proof that his possession was only permissive, or, in fact, without hostile intent, may be generally evidenced by the character of his possession and acts of ownership. If these in subsequent cases in the same State, to have applied only to an adverse possession in reference to the Champerty Act. Furthermore, the apparent ruling, that good faith is necessary in acquiring adverse possession, has been overruled in the same court, in the case of Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 587. where, in equally general language, it is held that the question of good faith in the adverse claimant is immaterial. The distinction between claiming by actual possession and by constructive possession, is, in the latter case, also ignored. For a further discussion of this subject, see infra, Chap. XXX.

¹ Kinney v. Vinson, 32 Tex. 125.

² Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 541.

³ Bryan v. Atwater, 5 Day (Conn.), 189. In a later case in the same State, it is said: "Into the recesses of his (the possessor's) mind, his motives or purposes, his guilt or innocence, no inquiry is made. It is for this obvious reason; that it is the visible and adverse possession, with an intention to possess, that constitutes its adverse character, and not the remote views or belief of the possessor." French v. Pearce, 8 Conn. 443. See Smith v. Roberts, 62 Ala. 83; Munro v. Merchant, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 383, 402.

are sufficiently definite, open and exclusive, it will be presumed that they are done with the intent to appropriate the land. By such acts, it is said, the party proclaims to the public that he asserts an exclusive ownership over the land.¹ Thus, it is said that an assertion of such intention, other than by acts, is unnecessary, and that the mere fact of possession would, in general, indicate that the possession was adverse.² So it has been held competent in proving the occupant's "claim of ownership," to show that "while he occupied he asserted ownership by bringing his suit of trespass against others who attempted to enjoy the premises."³ A mere hostile assertion of ownership is of no consequence, unaccompanied by acts of appropriation or ownership:⁴ to establish, therefore, the requisite adverse intent of the claimant, his "actions speak louder than words." To disprove such intent, on the other hand, the declarations or admissions of the tenant, showing an absence of an intent to appropriate, or a purpose on his part, in acquiring or retaining the possession, consistent with the rights of the true owner of the land, are competent evidence to show the character of the possession, and that it lacks the essential element of being hostile.⁵ Thus it is held that it is clearly competent to show by the declarations of the occupant that he did not hold adversely,⁶ for "it is enough," as is elsewhere held, to show the absence of an hostile intent, "that he does not himself consider it to be adverse."⁷ So it has been decided that evidence of acts and declarations made after the statute was claimed to have run, "which had a tendency to show the motives and views" of the occupants before the statute had run, was proper "to show the nature of the occupancy."⁸

Admissions of this kind by the claimant are competent

¹ Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 46. See Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671.

² Johnson v. Gorham, 38 Conn. 522.

³ Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 407.

⁴ Pitts v. Wilder, 1 N. Y. 527, 528.

⁵ Pitts v. Wilder, 1 N. Y. 525, 526.

⁶ McNamee v. Moreland, 26 Iowa, 109.

⁷ Sailor v. Hertzogg, 2 Penn. St. 184, 185. See Day v. Wilder, 47 Vt. 593, 594; Brolaskey v. McClain, 61 Penn. St. 167.

⁸ Church v. Burghardt, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 327, 328.

evidence against him on general principles of the law of evidence, but there seems to be a disposition to go farther and to admit as evidence declarations either of the tenant or his grantor to establish the adverse character of a possession, or by such declarations to show its extent.¹

§ 759. Possession under a mistake.—Assuming that possession must be accompanied by an intent to appropriate, in order to be adverse, the question arises, whether a possession acquired and held under a mistake of fact—a misapprehension, for example, as to the true boundary of a piece of land—can be strictly adverse as to the part erroneously occupied. On the one hand it may be said that, in such a case, the intention, upon taking possession, was to occupy a part only, perhaps, of the land actually occupied, and that as to the excess, the necessary intent or adverse claim is lacking, and that consequently as to such excess, the possession is more accidental than strictly adverse. To corroborate this view, it is said that “a disseizin cannot be committed by mistake, because the intention . . . is an essential ingredient in a disseizin.”² Opposed to this it may be contended that the intention in such a case is two-fold: first, to take possession in accordance with some extrinsic plan or ulterior facts, such as the description in a deed; and second, the intention as manifested by the very fact of taking possession, to possess the particular piece of land actually occupied, without regard to the original motive or purpose of the possessor; that such intention, in the latter aspect, though it might not have been carried out were the possessor not laboring under a mistake, exists none the less, and that it is an intention to appropriate that particular land, and that consequently the possession is in fact adverse, whatever the original purpose of the possessor may have been. Hence it may be said that such a possession can be called unintentional only in the same sense in which the possession of any honest man can be called unintentional, who, in good faith, perhaps under color of title, occupies land, supposing it is his own, and who thus acquires title to it under the statute, on the ground that had he known that he had no right on the land, he would not have begun or continued a possession which infringed on the rights of the true owner. Would the possession of a man who entered upon and held land under a mistake, supposing that it was his own, be the less a possession with intent to appropriate because the occupant had no tortious hostile intent against the true owner, but simply the purpose to appropriate what he supposed was his own? In a case in the Supreme Court of Missouri, it is said: "Honest men always inclose land not their own by mistake, or with the consent of the owner, and if the law on this subject were not as this court has held, the statute of limitations in such cases would never run in favor of an honest man, because he would never avow his purpose to have been to take the land of another."¹ Whether, in general, the mistake or ignorance of the occupant in taking and keeping possession of land will be held fatal to the existence of the necessary hostile intent, is a question which has received, unfortunately, too little judicial discussion, and respecting which the decisions are in conflict. Thus, in a case in the Supreme Court of Iowa,² where the defendant's grantor had, by mistake, inclosed more land than he was entitled to, and possession had been continued for twenty-five years, it was held that something more was necessary than the mere belief on the part of the defendant and her grantor, that they were entitled to the land in dispute, though accompanying the actual possession of it; that there was needed an "active assertion of right," and that such a right is not "asserted by the possession;" or, in other words, that "simple belief on the part of defendant of her right to the land . . . is not equivalent to . . . the claim required by the law, and . . . possession will not establish the quo animo." It would seem, from the reasoning of this case, that if the "belief" of the defendant had been wanting, and she had tortiously continued the possession of what she knew did not belong to her, there would then have existed the necessary adverse claim and "active assertion" of right. In other words, bad faith in the occupant is more profitable in such a case than an honest mistake. Directly opposed to the case last cited is that of French v. Pearce, in the Court of Errors of Connecticut,¹ where it is held that though "the intention of the possessor to claim adversely is an essential ingredient," yet that "the person who enters on land believing and claiming it to be his own," though under a mistake, "does thus enter and possess. The very nature of the act is an assertion of his own title and the denial of the title of all others." The court say further that "it is as certain that a disseizin may be committed by mistake, as that a man may, by mistake, take possession of land, claiming title, and believing it to be his own." And further: "Adopt the rule, that an entry and possession under a claim of right, if through mistake, does not constitute an adverse possession, and a new principle is substituted. The inquiry no longer is, whether visible possession, with the intent to possess, under a claim of right, and to use and enjoy as one's own, is a disseizin; but from this plain and easy standard of proof we are to depart, and the invisible motives of the mind are to be explained; and the inquiry is to be had whether the possessor of land acted in conformity² with his best knowledge and belief." We may add that the protection of a possession taken under a mistake accords certainly with the policy of the law in imposing limitations to actions for the recovery of real property, as well as the upholding, through such limitations, of a possession tortiously taken and continued for the requisite period with full knowledge, on the part of the occupant, of the rights of the true owner.

¹ See, on this subject, Abeel v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513; Swettenham v. Leary, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 285, 286; Harnage v. Berry, 43 Tex. 567, 570; Hannibal & St. J. R. R. Co. v. Clark, 68 Mo. 374.

² Ross v. Gould, 5 Me. 212.

¹ Cole v. Parker, 70 Mo. 580.

² Grube v. Wells, 34 Iowa, 150, 151, and cases cited. Compare S. P. Skinner v. Crawford, 54 Iowa, 119; Thomas v. Babb, 45 Mo. 384, and cases cited; Gates v. Butler, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 447. But see Cole v. Parker, 70 Mo. 380; Howard v. Reedy, 29 Ga. 152; Worcester v. Lord, 56 Me. 265; Brown v. Cockerell, 33 Ala. 45.

¹ 8 Conn. 439, 445. See Metcalf v. McCutchen, 60 Miss. 154.

² Compare, s. p., Schneider v. Botsch, 90 Ill. 577; Swettenham v. Leary, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 284; Grimm v. Curley, 43 Cal. 250; Cole v. Parker, 70 Mo. 372.

§ 760. Boundary lines erroneously located between adjoining proprietors.—The question which we have been considering usually arises in connection with the possession of adjoining proprietors, according to a boundary line between them which has been erroneously supposed to be the true line. It oftens happens that the actual and visible boundary between adjoining lands, such as a fence, hedge or wall, is not identical in location with the line defined by the respective muniments of title. So, also, by agreements between adjoining proprietors, a line may be fixed as the true line, though in fact it is not, or a temporary boundary may be agreed upon, till the true line be ascertained. In such cases, where the possession has continued for the statutory period, though the courts are, at least apparently, in some conflict, and the decision of each case depends, in some measure, upon its peculiar circumstances, the question whether there has been an effectual adverse possession depends upon well settled principles which we have already discussed. Hence, in disputes arising from the wrong location of the actual dividing line, whether the possession of the encroaching proprietor, assuming that it has been notorious, continuous, etc., has been adverse in its character is, as in other cases, to be determined by his intent. Therefore such possession must not be permissive; hence, if the evidence show that there was a mutual understanding or agreement that the visible boundary was not the real one, the necessary hostile intent is lacking, and the mere occupation up to the visible boundary cannot affect the title to the part beyond the true line. So it is held¹ that, under such an agreement, a temporary boundary line being fixed till the true line should be ascertained, the possession of neither proprietor could be adverse till such agreement is repudiated. As the court say: "Each party entered upon the portion of land which was outside his true line, in subordination to the title of the party upon whom he encroached, . . . and he held the possession by the license or permission of the owner of the adjoining land."² So, in a case where there was doubt as to whether adjoining buildings were located correctly, and their respective owners agreed in writing that neither would disturb the other in the occupation of his building, it was held that such agreement was a recognition, by each, of the other's title to the true line, and inconsistent with an adverse claim to any land beyond it so long as the agreement was in force.¹ In such cases the principle laid down can admit of no doubt; the chief difficulties and the conflict of the authorities in this class of cases, are to be met with when there is no agreement to consider the boundary line fixed upon as one for convenience only, the true line being in doubt, or till the true line be discovered. The difficulty arises from the notion that possession, under a mistake as to the extent of the possessor's rights, cannot be under the necessary adverse claim. As we have seen, the views of the courts are directly opposed on this general subject, and we find the same conflict where coterminous possessions are held under a mistake as to the true boundary. Thus it was held by the Supreme Court of Maine, where two adjoining proprietors had occupied lots divided by a fence placed upon a wrong divisional line by mistake, which the parties erroneously supposed was substantially upon the true line, and had occupied according to the fence only because they supposed it was on the true divisional line, that there was no adverse possession of the portion beyond the lines described in the deed under which the land was occupied.² On the other hand, the Supreme Court of Alabama³ decided that, where two adjoining owners unconditionally established a dividing line by consent and occupied up to it, the possession of each was adverse. The court say: "In such a case, there would be a clear assertion that such was the dividing line, and that each claimed title up to it." Should, however, the dividing line be placed beyond the true line, it is added "through mere inadvertence, or ignorance, or from convenience, and with no intention to claim it; in such a case the possession, up to the dividing fence, would not be adverse." But in a case in Missouri, already cited,¹ it was held, that though the claimant intended to claim only to the true line, "still, if he inclose to a certain line, claiming it to be the true one, and that the land to that line is his, his possession is adverse." And again in an earlier case² in the same court, it was held of coterminous proprietors that, if they fix upon a division line, and each holds possession to such line, claiming it to be the true one, the possession is adverse. The court use this language: "The mere fact that he claims that line to be the true one cannot negative the intention and make him hold, if mistaken, under the opposing claimant." On the other hand, it seems to be held, in a recent case in Iowa,³ that, in the absence of a presumption that the claimant intended to disregard the true line, his possession of the part erroneously occupied would not be deemed adverse. Much of the conflict in the rulings of the courts on this subject, arise from the different presumptions which they entertain at the beginning of their reasoning. Thus, on the one hand, the actual possession alone raises the presumption of an intent to claim,⁴ which must be rebutted by the true owner, by showing, for example, that the boundary line fixed upon, and the possession taken were temporary or conditional. On the other hand, the presumption omnia rite acta esse, and hence, that the intention to claim extends only to the true line, places the burden upon the claimant of showing that he had an actual adverse intent in taking possession beyond the true line, and that there was an actual disregard of the true boundary.⁵ With regard to these presumptions, it should be observed that the first is only the ordinary inference of a particular in-

¹ Irvine v. Adler, 44 Cal. 559. See Cole v. Parker, 70 Mo. 372, 380.

² Irvine v. Adler, 44 Cal. 559.

¹ Devyr v. Schaefer, 55 N. Y. 446, 451. Compare Corning v. Troy Iron, &c. Factory, 44 N. Y. 577; Reed v. McCourt, 41 N. Y. 435; Dietrick v. Noel, 42 O. S. 20.

² Dow v. McKenney, 64 Me. 138.

³ Brown v. Cockerell, 33 Ala. 38; s. p. Smith v. McKay, 30 Ohio St. 409, 418; Foulke v. Stockdale, 40 Iowa, 99; Hiatt v. Kirkpatrick, 48 Iowa, 78.

¹ Cole v. Parker, 70 Mo. 380.

² Tamm v. Kellogg, 49 Mo. 123. But see Knowlton v. Smith, 36 Mo. 507. Contra, Smith v. McKay, 30 Ohio St. 418. Compare also Houx v. Batteen, 68 Mo. 84; Walbrunn v. Ballen, 68 Mo. 164; Bader v. Zeise, 44 Wis. 96.

³ Hiatt v. Kirkpatrick, 48 Iowa, 78. See Main v. Killinger, 90 Ind. 165; Brown v. Anderson, 90 Ind. 93.

⁴ See French v. Pearce, 8 Conn. 439.

⁵ See e. g., Brown v. Cockereli, 33 Ala. 45, 46.

tention from facts which are shown by common experience to warrant it; the second, on the other hand, seems to us to confuse a simple question of evidence by the unnecessary introduction of a vague maxim, which certainly ought not to affect the burden of proof. In a leading case in New York,¹ the general doctrine as to actual possession taken under a deed by mistake is thus summed up: "Where a grantee, in taking possession under his deed, goes unintentionally and by mistake beyond his proper boundaries, and enters upon and actually occupies and improves land not included in the deed, claiming and supposing it to be his, this occupation is to be deemed adverse within the meaning of the statute of limitations." And it is added: "It cannot be denied that this doctrine is in accordance with the strict letter of the statute; and it may perhaps be equally within its spirit and intent."

¹ Crary v. Goodman, 22 N. Y. 175, and cases cited. See Pope v. Hanmer, 74 N. Y. 245. In Seymour v. Creswell, 18 Fla. 35, the court said: "The rule as to such possession, when considered with reference to the right of the true owner, is that where a grantee in taking possession under his deed goes unintentionally and by mistake beyond his proper boundaries, and enters upon and actually occupies and improves land not included in the deed, claiming and supposing it to be his, this occupation is to be deemed adverse within the meaning of the statute of limitations, . . . and if continued the requisite length of time will bar the right of the true owner." See Crary v. Goodman, 22 N. Y. 170. But compare Hale v. Glidden, 10 N. H. 397; M'Kinny v. Kenny, 1 A. K. Mar. (Ky.) 460; Smith v. Morrow, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 210. In Seymour v. Carli, 31 Minn. 81, 84, after conceding that the parties, when possession was taken, made a mistake as to their boundaries, the court said: "The object of the statute is to quiet titles and end disputes. If the plaintiffs have a cause of action in ejectment, there would seem to be no good reason why the statute should not run against it, as in other cases where the possession of land is withheld. It is the policy of the law that parties should assert their claims to the possession of land, and rectify their boundaries, within the statutory term." See S. P. Swettenham v. Leary, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 284. See Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 44 N. Y. 577; Jones v. Smith, 64 N. Y. 184; Smith v. McAllister, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 434; McCormick v. Barnum, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 104; Knowles v. Toothaker, 58 Me. 172; Yetzer v. Thoman, 17 O. S. 130; McAfferty v. Conover, 7 O. S. 99; Trussel v. Lewis, 13 Neb. 415; Burdick v. Heivly, 23 Iowa, 515; Joyce v. Williams, 26 Mich. 332; Lavery v. Moore, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 347; Hitchings v. Morrison, 72 Me. 331; Brown v. Leete, 6 Sawyer, 332; Johnson v. Brown, 63 Cal. 392; Wingler v. Simpson, 93 Ind. 203; Tracy v. Newton, 57 Iowa, 210. A fence erected merely for convenience in working a farm, and not for the purpose of marking the boundaries according to the title or of indicating a purpose of inclosing the land in dispute, has been considered as of no weight in determining acts of possession. Soule v. Barlow, 48 Vt. 132; s. c. again, 49 Vt. 329. Compare Allen v. Holton, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 458.

CHAPTER XXX.

COLOR OF TITLE.

- | | |
|--|--|
| § 761. General character of adverse possession with color of title.—Principal effect of color of title. 762. Color of title.—Definition. 763. Distinction between "claim" and "color of title."—Color of title as showing the character and extent of the possession. 764. Misapplication of the term color of title.—Color and claim of title confounded. 765. Instrument insufficient as color of title may be evidence of a claim of title. 766. Color of title as creating a constructive possession. 767. Color of title must describe and define the land. 768. Constructive possession limited to amount described. 769. No constructive possession without written instrument. 770. Some actual possession necessary upon which to base constructive possession. | § 771. Character of such actual possession. 772. The underlying principles of color of title and constructive possession summed up. 773. Certain exceptions noticed. 774. Qualifications of the general rule of constructive possession.—Extent of a constructive possession limited. 775. Good faith as an ingredient in constructive possession. 776. The New York doctrine on the subject. 777. Statement of the prevailing rule.—Doctrine of the New Jersey Court of Errors. 778. Good faith expressly required by statute in some States. 778a. The requirement of good faith. 779. Difficulty of laying down a general definition of color of title. 780. Instances of what held to be color of title. 781. What held insufficient to constitute color of title. |
|--|--|

§ 761. General character of adverse possession with color of title.—Principal effect of color of title.—One of the most frequent expressions, in connection with the subject of adverse possession, to be met with in the books, is that "possession, to be adverse, must be under claim or color of title." The expression would be, perhaps, more accurate and clear if it were that possession, either with or without color of title, to be adverse must be under a claim of right. The existence of a color of title in the claimant does not dispense with the necessity for an hostile claim on his part; every adverse possession must be under a claim or assertion of ownership whether with or without color of title; in fact the color of title is itself an assertion or at least evidence of such a claim.¹ The possession of a deed or

¹ See Jackson v. Woodruff, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 285, where it is said: "There is no doubt that actual occupancy, and a claim of title, whether such claim be by deed or other written muniment of title does not dispense with an occupation of at least some part of the premises ; whether the adverse claimant has color of title or not, he must, except perhaps in exceptional cases provided by statute, have some actual possession of the locus in quo. It is "the possession that bars the owner of a recovery," as the court observe in Weber v. Anderson,¹ and not any "deed or instrument of title." Thus it is said : "The muniment is but one circumstance by which to make out an adverse possession."² And also, "it is the possession under claim of right to which the law attaches most significance, and if such possession commenced under a written instrument of any kind, . . . it may be looked to for the purpose of showing the character and extent of the possession and claim, and the intent with which the entry was made." We have heretofore considered the requisites of such actual possession ; these in general apply as well to possession with color of title as without it.³ Hence, we conclude, an adverse claimant having color of title to land, must have been in actual possession of at least some part of the land, with an intent to appropriate the same, and such possession must also have been hostile, open, exclusive and continuous, in order to bar the true owner's right of entry. It may be stated generally that the only exclusive effect of what is called "color of title," in connection with adverse possession, is to define the extent of the possession claimed,⁴ and by creating a constructive possession, beyond the actual possession, or pedis possessio, of the claimant, to ultimately shut out the owner of the land from a much larger tract than in the case of an adverse claimant relying simply upon his naked possession. The subject of color of title, therefore, becomes one of very great importance.

§ 762. Color of title.—Definition.—The Supreme Court of otherwise, constitute a valid adverse possession," etc. See Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 557.

¹ 73 Ill. 442.

² Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 604. See Mead v. Leffingwell, 83 Penn. St. 191.

³ But see § 771.

⁴ Creekmur v. Creekmur, 75 Va. 438 ; Baucum v. George, 65 Ala. 259.

the United States said, in Wright v. Mattison: "The courts have concurred, it is believed without an exception, in defining 'color of title' to be that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title."¹ In a later case the same court use this language: "Whenever an instrument, by apt words of transfer from grantor to grantee,—whether such grantor act under the authority of judicial proceedings or otherwise,—in form passes what purports to be the title, it gives color of title."² The Supreme Court of California add: "It is that which the law will consider prima facie a good title, but which, by reason of some defect, not appearing on its face, does not in fact amount to title."³ Hence, in New York, color of title has been defined to be that which "the law will, prima facie, consider a good title;"⁴ and in the case of a deed relied upon as color of title, "it must be such an one as might be valid."⁵ On the other hand, the Supreme Court of Indiana said that the New York doctrine, that "color of title is that which appears prima facie to be a 'good title,' is without reason and is being abandoned."⁶ It is certain that the benefits of the doctrine of color of title have been extended to instruments which would not be considered prima facie valid.⁷ In Maryland it is held that "the paper title, to give color, must be so far prima facie good in appearance as to be consistent with the idea of good faith, etc."⁸ And in Illinois the instrument relied upon "must profess to convey a title to the grantee,"⁹ or "must purport, on its face, to convey title."¹⁰ In an earlier case, however, in the same court, it is said, in a very loose way: "Color of title may be made through conveyances, or bonds and contracts,

¹ Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. 56, and cases cited. See also Edgerton v. Bird, 6 Wis. 527; Baker v. Swan, 32 Md. 355; especially Jackson v. Frost, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 346; La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589.

² Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 466.

³ Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 676. See Veal v. Robinson, 70 Ga. 816.

⁴ Jackson v. Frost, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 351.

⁵ Livingston v. Peru Iron Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 522.

⁶ Bell v. Longworth, 6 Ind. 277.

⁷ See § 780.

⁸ Baker v. Swan, 32 Md. 355.

⁹ Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 190.

¹⁰ Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 240; Keener v. Goodson, 89 N. C. 273.

or bare possession, under parol agreements.”¹ So, in Massachusetts, an entry under a parol gift was designated as an entry under color of title.² In South Carolina, however, color of title was very loosely defined to be “any semblance of title by which the extent of a man’s possession can be ascertained.”³ By the Supreme Court of Georgia color of title is defined to be a “writing, upon its face, professing to pass title, but which does not do it, either from a want of title in the person making it, or from the defective conveyance that is used ; a title that is imperfect, but not so obviously so that it would be apparent to one not skilled in the law.”⁴ And subsequently by the same court color of title is loosely defined to be anything in writing, connected with title to land, which seems to define the limits of the claim ;⁵ but in a later case the same court say that “color of title cannot rest in parol ; there must be a document of some sort.”⁶ And in Vermont color of title is defined to be a “deed or survey of the land, placed upon the public records of land titles, whereby notice is given to the true owner and all the world that the occupant claims the title.” As opposed to this, it is held in Missouri that “it does not always require a written instrument to constitute color of title, but there must be some visible acts, signs or indications, which are apparent to all, showing the extent of the boundaries of the land claimed, to amount to color of title.”⁷ Color of title has been defined in Tennessee to be “where the possessor has a conveyance of some sort, by deed or will or inheritance, which he may believe to be a title.”⁸ So in Iowa, it is held that if an adverse possessor die the possession de-

¹ Woodward v. Blanchard, 16 Ill. 430. Quoted from at length in Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. 58.

² Sumner v. Stevens, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 338.

³ Turpin v. Brannon, 3 McC. (S. C.) 261.

⁴ Gittens v. Lowry, 15 Ga. 338. See Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 443.

⁵ Walls v. Smith, 19 Ga. 8.

⁶ Roe v. Kerssey, 32 Ga. 155. As to necessity for a writing, see also Tate v. Southard, 3 Hawks (N. C.), 121.

⁷ Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 431. See Hughes v. Israel, 73 Mo. 547 ; Rannels v. Rannels, 52 Mo. 108.

⁸ Wilson v. Kilcannon, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 185. See also Darby v. McCarrol, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 286.

volves upon his heirs, and the possession of the latter is under color of title.¹ In a case in Pennsylvania, Gibson, C. J., said: "The words (color of title) do not necessarily import the accompaniment of the usual documentary evidences; for though one entering upon a title depending on a void deed, would certainly be in by color of title, it would be strange if another, entering under an erroneous belief that he is the legitimate heir of the person last seized, should be deemed otherwise. . . . To give color of title, therefore, would seem not to require the aid of a written conveyance, or a recovery by process and judgment, for the latter would require it to be the better title. I would say that an entry is by color of title when it is made under a bona fide and not pretended claim to a title existing in another."² In Oregon it is held that "if from the face of the deed compared with the law regulating the subject, he (the grantee) might have had title," such conveyance gives color of title to possession taken under it.³ In Alabama it is held that "he who holds under a paper title, which apparently gives him a right to the land, which would lead an honest mind to the conclusion that the right to the land passed by the deed . . . must be considered as holding under color of title."⁴ And in North Carolina it is said that to constitute color of title there must be "some written document of title, professing to pass the land, and one not so obviously defective that it could not have misled a man of ordinary capacity."⁵

¹ Teabout v. Daniels, 38 Iowa, 161. In an earlier case in Iowa, it is said that to constitute color of title, "he (the claimant) must have a paper title." Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa, 486.

² McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts (Penn.), 72. See Abercrombie v. Baldwin, 15 Ala. 372, where color of title is regarded as a "synonym of a bona fide claim of title." See also Herbert v. Hanrick, 16 Ala. 595, where it is said by the court: "He must have color of title, in other words, some deed or written evidence of title." That to constitute color of title there must be some document. See also Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa, 486.

³ Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawyer, 20.

⁴ Saltmarsh v. Crommelin, 24 Ala. 352.

⁵ Dobson v. Murphy, 1 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 586. See McConnell v. McConnell, 64 N. C. 342. It has been said that "color of title differs from title only in externals. The substance of both is the same." Thompson v. Cragg, 24 Tex. 597. In Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 394, the court said: "Any instrument having a grantor and a grantee, and containing a description of the lands intended to be conveyed, and apt words for their conveyance, gives color of title to the lands de-

§ 763. Distinction between "claim" and "color of title."
—Color of title as showing the character and extent of the possession.—From the above quotations it will sufficiently appear that considerable diversity of opinion exists on the subject of color of title, inasmuch as the very definitions of the term are so various and irreconcilable. Hence, too, it is impossible to lay down any definition of color of title which will not conflict with many to be found in the books. Much of the confusion on this subject arises undoubtedly from confounding color of title with claim of title, which, as we have already seen, are by no means identical expressions.¹ This confusion is evident from the argument in the Pennsylvania case quoted in the preceding section, where, as in other cases already cited, the courts have lost sight of the technical sense of the term color of title.

The possession of color of title by an adverse claimant to land is important for two things: first, as showing the animus of his possession and its character, i. e., that he lays claim to the possession as the owner; and, second, as defining the amount of his possession and extending it by means of a constructive possession.² As is said in a case in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, "It is not to be forgotten that mere color of title is valuable only so far as it indicates the extent of the disseizor's claim;"³ and in the Supreme Court of Minnesota; "The effect of color of title . . . is to define the extent of the possession claimed."⁴ Regarded as showing the animus of the possessor, or his claim of exclusive ownership, color of title is scribed. Such an instrument purports to be a conveyance of the title, and because it does not, for some reason, have that effect, it passes only color or the semblance of a title. It makes no difference whether the instrument fails to pass an absolute title, because the grantor had none to convey, or had no authority in law or in fact to convey one, or whether such want of authority appears on the face of the instrument or aliunde." "Color of title to an office is analogous to color of title to land. The latter does not mean a good title or even a defective conveyance from one having title, but only the appearance of title; that is, a deed to the premises in due form of law." In re Ah Lee, 5 Fed. Rep. 913. Citing Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawy. 20.

¹ That "color" and "claim" of title are not synonymous terms, see the case of Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa, 486, where it is said: "The defendant may rely upon either a color of title or a claim of title. To constitute the former, he must have a paper title, but the latter may exist wholly by parol."

² Welborn v. Anderson, 37 Miss. 155.

³ Ege v. Medlar, 82 Penn. St. 99.

⁴ Washburn v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 369. See Brady v. Huff, 75 Ala. 83.

merely a piece of evidence, like any hostile act or assertion of ownership by the claimant, which establishes the necessary adverse character of the possession, or as has been already quoted: "The muniment is but one circumstance by which to make out an adverse possession."¹

§ 764. Misapplication of the term color of title.—Color and claim of title confounded.—It is when so regarded, i. e., as showing the intent of the claimant, that the term "color of title" has been so often misapplied and wrongly defined. For example, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in the case of Edgerton v. Bird,² held that though color of title be "that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title," and though the tax deed under which the defendant went into possession was "void upon its face," yet that such a deed was admissible in evidence to show "colorable title" in the defendant, and the "character of the possession," and that the possession was "adverse." In this case there seemed to be no question of constructive possession through color of title involved, but simply whether the possession in its inception could be "adverse," or in other words under a claim of ownership, in the face of the presumption of law (arising from the fact that the deed was void on its face) that the claimant knew that the deed "was not adequate to carry the true title;" though the fact was, as the court say, that the defendant "undoubtedly supposed that the tax deed was good." The question was therefore as to the character of the defendant's claim, not whether the deed in question amounted to color of title in its proper sense. It may be remarked, moreover, that so far as this case implies that good faith is necessary in order to give an actual adverse possession the benefit of the statute of limitations, it is at variance with the great weight of authority on this subject.³ As another example of the same misuse of the term "color of title," we may cite the opinion of Chancellor Jones, in the case of La Frombois v. Jackson, in the Court of Errors in New York.⁴

¹ Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 604.

² 6 Wis. 527.

³ See post, § 775 et seq.

⁴ 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589.

The Chancellor says: "His (the grantor) assuming to be entitled, and contracting to convey, gave to the purchaser under him a color of title, which would characterize the possession of such purchaser under such contract as adverse against all other claimants." Though literally this is holding that an executory contract to convey may be color of title, it is apparent from the rest of the Chancellor's opinion, and from the other opinions in the case, that the only question of importance in the case was, as the Chancellor says: "Whether this documentary evidence (the document being admitted to be void on its face) . . . is not sufficient to give a character of adverse possession to the occupancy" of the defendant in ejectment, and "to rescue him from the reputation of being a mere trespasser." That is whether the possession of the defendant under this document did not give his claim the character of a claim of ownership, and thus render his possession adverse. So in all the opinions in this case the possession of the void written contract was treated as evidencing the intention or adverse claim of the defendant, which could have been evidenced as well by other things. So it is said by one of the senators in his opinion: "This possession, accompanied by claim of title, was good without the paper." There was evidently no question of constructive possession under color of title.

§ 765. Instrument insufficient as color of title may be evidence of a claim of title.—It may be stated generally that a deed or other similar document may be introduced to show the character of the claim of the possessor under it, though such writing would be insufficient to constitute color of title, and thereby create a constructive possession. As it is held in a case in the Supreme Court of the United States:¹ "Color of title, even under a void and worthless deed, has always been received as evidence that the person in possession claims for himself, and, of course, adversely to the world." Then in the great case of Humbert v. Trinity Church, in the New York Court of Errors,² the court say: "It was very properly conceded, . . .

¹ Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 477.

² 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 604.

that a claim of title, even under a paper altogether void and inoperative as a deed, will yet characterize a possession as adverse within the statute of limitations." So in the High Court of Errors and Appeals of Mississippi it is held, that "under the plea of the statute of limitations generally, a void deed, record, or proceeding may be introduced to show the fact of possession held under it, and the quo animo with which such possession was taken."¹ Under the ruling of the Supreme Court of Vermont, the record of a survey of lands does not "constitute color of title; but might be evidence tending to show that he (defendant) was claiming title."² Hence an entry under a recorded deed may be shown, as is said, not to "prove notice, as such, but to show the claim of title under which he held possession."³ § 766. Color of title as creating a constructive possession.—By far the most important effect of color of title is the creation of a constructive possession, or, as it is defined, "a possession in law, without possession in fact,"⁴ by extending, as the court say in Chapman v. Templeton, the possession of a part of a tract of land so as to include the whole tract.⁵ Just as the true owner of land is deemed by presumption of law to be in possession of it through his deed, and without any physical occupation of the land, so the law gives the adverse claimant constructive possession of all to which he has color of title. Or, as it is held, his possession is "co-extensive with the boundaries defined thereby"⁶ (i. e., by what constitutes his color of title); and, if he holds under a deed, "the deed gives him constructive possession of all the land embraced in the deed;"⁷ and "where one is in actual possession of a part of a tract of land, and holding the whole under

¹ Root v. McFerrin, 37 Miss. 51. See Welborn v. Anderson, 37 Miss. 161.

² Atkinson v. Patterson, 46 Vt. 765. See, also, Wing v. Hall, 44 Vt. 122.

³ Stevens v. Brooks, 24 Wis. 330. See Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 543, 544.

⁴ Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 344. See Buck v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 504.

⁵ Chapman v. Templeton, 53 Mo. 465. See Washburn v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 361.

⁶ Wilson v. Williams, 52 Miss. 493. See Cunningham v. Frandtzen, 26 Tex. 38; Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 544.

⁷ Chandler v. Rushing, 38 Tex. 596.

claim and color of title, he will in law be held to be in possession of the remainder;"¹ and "such possession would be a disseizin of the true owner of the whole tract described in the deed;"² and "he is presumed to enter according to his title;"³ and "where one enters upon land under a recorded deed, his entry and claim are referred to that deed, and measured by it."⁴ The only difference between the case of the true owner and one claiming under color of title is, that in the latter case there must be some actual or corporeal possession of the locus in quo, whereas in the case of the true owner no such possession is necessary. In Fugate v. Pierce the Missouri Supreme Court said: "The doctrine of constructive possession, which follows the title, when there is no adverse possession, is applied to one who takes actual or corporeal adverse possession under color of title, and he is held to be possessed of the contiguous land covered by the instrument under which he enters, and which he claims by virtue of such instrument."⁵

§ 767. Color of title must describe and define the land.—It is held in a recent case in Ohio: "That one in possession, claiming to metes and bounds under a paper title, and openly and notoriously exercising control and dominion on the land, is presumed to be doing so to the extent of his claim. Where, however, his paper claim is void for want of any description of the land, or anything to define its extent, his acts and dominion can create no such presumption. The occupancy must be such as to give notice to the real owner of the extent of the adverse claim. Hence

¹ Powell v. Davis, 54 Mo. 318.

² Putnam Free School v. Fisher, 34 Me. 177.

³ Bailey v. Carleton, 12 N. H. 15. See Brackett v. Persons Unknown, 53 Me. 228; Wells v. Iron Co., 48 N. H. 530; Phillippi v. Thompson, 8 Ore. 436; Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 188; Barger v. Hobbs, 67 Ill. 592.

⁴ Stevens v. Brooks, 24 Wis. 329. In Watts v. Owens, 62 Wis. 522, the court after saying that the character of the occupant's possession will be referred to the conveyance under which he entered, and will be determined by it, add: "He cannot now be heard to say that he entered under another or paramount title, unless he has been legally evicted and taken possession under such other or paramount title. If he would hold under title other than that under which he entered, he must do something tantamount to a re-entry under such other title." See Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226; Quinn v. Quinn, 27 Wis. 168.

⁵ 49 Mo. 447.

it is that occupancy, without a deed defining the land, is only notice to the boundaries actually inclosed or improved."¹ And it is said, a deed "which describes with precision the boundaries of the land" shall be "a substitute for a substantial and permanent fence around the whole."² And it is also held in the case of Ege v. Medlar, cited above, that a disseizor holds constructive possession of the whole tract only when his entry was under "color of title by specific boundaries to the whole tract."³ The first requisite of such color of title as will give constructive possession to the claimant is, therefore, some definite description showing the extent of the claim which, as to the part constructively possessed, may be said to perform the same office as acts of ownership upon the parts in actual possession.⁴ In the case of Livingston v. Peru Iron Company,⁵ in the Court of Errors in New York, it is said: "Without the paper title the possession is limited by the pedis possessio," and, "it is immaterial whether the deed conveys a good title;" . . . "if no lands are described in it nothing can pass, the deed is a nullity and lays no foundation for a claim beyond the actual policy. It would be easy to multiply cases to the same effect, that an adverse possession, without paper title, is good only to the extent of actual inclosure, and no further."

§ 768. Constructive possession limited to amount described. So, also, the extent of the adverse constructive possession will be limited to the amount described or defined by whatever constitutes the claimant's color of title. There

¹ Humphries v. Huffman, 33 Ohio St. 404.

² Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 405. So it is held that possession under a deed on record is itself a constructive notice of the adverse claim. Forest v. Jackson, 56 N. H. 357. See Thompson v. Burhans, 79 N. Y. 99, 100; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 442. In the latter case, the court say: "The law construes the entry to be co-extensive with the grant to the party, upon the ground that it is his clear intention to assert such possession."

³ Ege v. Medlar, 82 Penn. St. 87.

⁴ See Henley v. Wilson, 81 N. C. 405, where it is held that a description by metes and bounds is not necessary where the premises are well known by name, as, for example, "McClenahan Mills." A deed for a given number of acres out of a certain tract of land, without specifying the particular part, is void for uncertainty, as the land cannot be located by the description, and hence such a deed cannot be good color of title. Shackleford v. Bailey, 55 Ill. 387. See § 461.

⁵ 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 517. See, also, Kent v. Harcourt, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 498.

can be no adverse possession, whether actual or constructive, where there has been no definite claim to it. The deed, or whatever writing constitutes the color of title, must, at least, "purport to include" the land claimed, "upon the general principle that a deed cannot operate as color of title so as to have effect beyond the estate which it professes to pass."¹ If the land actually occupied is a tract or lot altogether different from the one which the deed describes, under which the occupant claims, there will be no constructive possession created, but the claimant will be limited to his actual possession.² As is said by Chief Justice Church in a case in the New York Court of Appeals,³ when construing the New York statute on this subject: "Where premises are included in the instrument under which the title is claimed, constructive possession, as provided by section 83, is sufficient, while to the land not included in the instrument, the possession must be actual, as required by section 85;" and, elsewhere in the same opinion, "it seems to me incongruous to say that a person claims title under a written instrument to land not included in the instrument."

§ 769. No constructive possession without written instrument.—As the amount of land which can be claimed by constructive possession is limited by the terms of some written instrument, so, it can be stated generally, that there can be no constructive adverse possession which is not based upon a claim under some written instrument constituting in form a paper title.⁴ In a recent case in the New York Court of Appeals, the court say: "Constructive possession is based upon a written title, which may be valid or invalid."⁵ In Jackson v. Woodruff,⁶ cited above, it is said: "But when a party claims to hold, adversely, a

¹ McEvoy v. Loyd, 31 Wis. 147, and cases cited.

² Crary v. Goodman, 22 N. Y. 173, and cases cited. See Swettenham v. Leary, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 286.

³ Pope v. Hanmer, 74 N. Y. 244.

⁴ Brady v. Huff, 75 Ala. 83; Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa, 480; McClellan v. Kellogg, 17 Ill. 501.

⁵ Thompson v. Burhans, 79 N. Y. 99.

⁶ 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 285.

lot of land by proving actual occupancy of a part only, his claim must be under a deed or paper title." So it is said in a case in the Supreme Court of New Hampshire,¹ that "there can be no constructive possession of land without color of title." And in Missouri,² it was held that "such possession is never based upon a claim merely," but "there must be a deed purporting to convey the whole, or some proceeding or instrument giving color and defining boundaries, as well as actual possession of a part;" and again, "having no color of title, his possession could not extend beyond the limits of his actual occupation." In Humbert v. Trinity Church,³ it is said that to warrant the application of the statute of limitations in ejectment, "the books require color of title, by deed or other documental semblance of right in the defendant, only when the defense is founded on a constructive adverse possession."⁴

§ 770. Some actual possession necessary upon which to base constructive possession.—It is hardly necessary to repeat what has already been instanced as a further essential to the existence of a constructive adverse possession, that it should be based, not only upon some written instrument, but upon an actual though only partial, possession of the locus in quo. The necessity for some such corporeal possession will be readily seen if we revert to the general rule of law that, until disseized by an actual adverse entry, the true owner is at least in the constructive possession of his land, and, in the case of an apparent conflict of constructive possessions, that the possession is deemed to follow the true title.⁵ An actual entry and disseizin of the true owner by the adverse claimant under a paper title is, therefore, necessary for the latter to acquire any constructive possession under it.⁶ Hence it is

¹ Wells v. Iron Company, 48 N. H. 530.

² Long v. Higginbotham, 56 Mo. 251. But see Hughes v. Israel, 73 Mo. 547; Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 441; Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 544; S. P. Scales v. Cockrill, 3 Head (Tenn.), 436.

³ 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 604. See Brady v. Huff, 75 Ala. 83.

⁴ "Color of title is anything in writing which serves to define the extent and character of the claim to the land." Burdell v. Blain, 66 Ga. 169.

⁵ Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. 353, 354.

⁶ Moingona Coal Co. v. Blair, 51 Iowa, 448. See also Thayer v. McLellan, 23 said: "The constructive is dependent upon the actual possession, and must continue or fall with it."¹ Consequently, when an adverse possessor sells or parts with "that over which he had actual possession," he "loses his constructive possession of the remainder."²

§ 771. Character of such actual possession.—Though some corporeal possession be necessary as a foundation for a constructive possession, yet it may be doubted whether the same strictness would be required in determining the sufficiency of hostile acts to constitute "actual" possession, as would be in the absence of a paper title, when the adverse possession is based merely upon a naked claim of ownership. Thus it is held that in respect to such acts of ownership, less notoriety will be required when the possession and claim are under color of title.³ Though as a rule, if there be a sufficient actual possession of a part, no acts of ownership need be shown upon the remainder of the land (when claimed under color of title), yet, in Missouri, the statute expressly requires the exercise of the "usual acts of ownership over the whole tract so claimed."⁴ And in a recent case in the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey,⁵ where the general subject of adverse possession is most ably and elaborately discussed, it is distinctly held, that "the rule of law, that possession by one having paper title will be presumed to be co-extensive with the boundaries of the title deeds, applies only to the owner of the legal title," and that, conse-

Me. 419, where it is held that the owner of the land will not become disseized by a survey allotment and conveyance thereof, and by recording the deed, but that an open occupation of some part of the premises purported to be conveyed by the deed is necessary. So in connection with an adverse claim to land under color of title, "the entry and possession must be proved by acts sufficient in law to constitute such adverse entry and possession." Washburn v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 369. See Baker v. Swan, 32 Md. 355. The existence of color of title alone is, like that of any bare claim to land without some actual occupation of the land under it, of no avail to the claimant, for, as is held in the case of Walls v. Smith, 19 Ga. 8, color of title can be of service only in aid of possession.

¹ Cunningham v. Frandtzen, 26 Tex. 38.

² Chandler v. Rushing, 38 Tex. 597.

³ Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327. See Parker v. Prop'rs of Locks, &c., 3 Metc. (Mass.) 99, 102.

⁴ See Norfleet v. Hutchins, 68 Mo. 599.

⁵ Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 547. To same effect, see Den d. Saxton v. Hunt, 20 N. J. L. 492.

quently, though "color of title, and actual occupation by residence, cultivation or inclosure of part of the tract . . . may serve to give character to his (the dis-seizor's) acts of possession over the residue," yet it "will not relieve him from the obligation of satisfying a jury that his possession has been of such a character as, under the circumstances, may reasonably be expected to have informed the true owner of the nature of the possession and the extent of the title proposed to be acquired under it." And elsewhere in the same opinion, it is implied that "a substantial holding, co-extensive with the boundaries in the deed," must be established. So in New York, not only is the constructive possession given by a paper title limited in amount to a tract of land "of suitable size," for example, "to be kept for the balance of a farm," but it is intimated, at least, that the land not under actual cultivation or possession, must be used in some way habitually—not merely occasionally—in connection with the land actually cultivated.¹

§ 772. The underlying principles of color of title and constructive possession summed up.—The cases cited in the preceding sections, which embody the generally accepted and best views on the subject of color of title and constructive possession, in connection with the statute of limitations, are undoubtedly based upon the following principles: First, that color of title is important in creating a constructive possession beyond the limits of the actual possession; Second, that such constructive possession is confined to cases where the adverse claimant is in possession under some documentary evidence of title; Third, and this is a necessary deduction from the first two, that color of title must necessarily consist in some written instrument describing the locus in quo.

§ 773. Certain exceptions noticed.—We have dwelt upon this subject somewhat at length in view of the misconception of the meaning and effect of color of title, and the irreconcilable definitions of the term to be met with to which we have already referred. For example, the rule that color of title must consist in some written instrument upon which alone constructive possession can depend, has been frequently questioned. Thus in the case of Rannels v. Rannels,¹ it is distinctly held that it is not necessary that color of title "should be created by deed or other instrument of writing," but that "it may be created by an act in pais without writing." The cases cited and quoted by the court only partially support this proposition. The opinion of Judge Gibson in the case of McCall v. Neely,² quoted from, the same court had already refused to follow in a case,³ also cited in Rannels v. Rannels, which does not by any means go so far as to hold that no writing is necessary to constitute color of title. Then also the two Massachusetts cases cited,⁴ do not at all support such a proposition, but merely lay down the principle that a claim of title can be adverse as well without as with a deed. In fact the very citation of these two Massachusetts cases, in support of the proposition attempted to be laid down in Rannels v. Rannels, is but another instance of the disposition above commented upon,⁵ to confound "color" with "claim" of title. Notwithstanding the general language in Rannels v. Rannels, the court, in view of the circumstances of the case, decided only that the defendant, to whom the plaintiff had made a verbal gift of the premises, and had "put her (defendant) into possession under this survey (made by plaintiff) and the description in his (plaintiff's) own deed," was in possession under "color of title." In one sense, therefore, there was a written instrument describing the locus in quo, i. e., the plaintiff's own deed, which may well be considered as constituting for the purposes of constructive possession the defendant's color of title, since it performed its prime office—that of defining

¹ Miller v. Long Island R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 384.

¹ 52 Mo. 112.

² 3 Watts (Penn.), 69. See above, § 762.

³ City of St. Louis v. Gorman, 29 Mo. 593. See Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 547.

⁴ Ashley v. Ashley, 4 Gray (Mass.), 197; Sumner v. Stevens, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 337.

⁵ See supra, § 764.

the extent of the occupant's claim.¹ Furthermore the case of Rannels v. Rannels, though cited with approval in a later case² in the same court, is certainly inconsistent in its language with the two Missouri cases above cited,³ which confine the doctrine of constructive possession to possession under some written instrument.

The decisions of the Supreme Court of Vermont seem to form an exception to the rules above stated. For example, the case of Hodges v. Eddy,⁴ already referred to, although stating the general rule that to constitute color of title there must be some written instrument, yet declares the law in Vermont, in distinction from "many of the other States," to be "settled, that where a person without title, or color of title, enters upon a vacant lot, and actually occupies a portion of it, and the lot has a definite boundary marked upon the land, such person by claiming to be the owner to the boundary lines of the lot, has a constructive possession of the whole." Then in an earlier case it is held, "if one's fence is in such a form, as to clearly indicate that, when completed, it will include a portion of woodland, which the party now only uses for making sugar or cutting wood, the person must be regarded as in the constructive possession of the whole lot, although there be no paper claim or color of title."⁵ In Hodges v. Eddy, however, the language last quoted was construed to mean "no more than this, that such claim of ownership and dominion as the fence indicated, in connection with his acts done upon it, gave him a sufficient actual possession."⁶ But, query, whether the same construction cannot be put upon the language used in Hodges v. Eddy, above quoted? If, in the case of Buck v. Squiers, the facts as stated are held to give the claimant actual and not constructive possession, why should not the entry upon a lot with a "definite ¹ This view seems to be taken in a later case in the same court. See Hughes v. Israel, 73 Mo. 547.

² Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 431.

³ Long v. Higginbotham, 56 Mo. 245; Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 441. See supra, § 769.

⁴ 38 Vt. 327.

⁵ Buck v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 503.

⁶ Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 345.

boundary marked upon the land," and an actual occupation of a portion of it by a person "claiming to be the owner to the boundary lines," be deemed to give an actual rather than a constructive possession? So that, after all, the decisions of the Vermont court may not be so much an exception to the rule of the constructive possession being confined to cases of possession under a written instrument, as they are authorities on the subject of what constitutes a sufficient actual possession.¹ Certainly, in the absence of such circumstances or acts as indicate with sufficient clearness the extent of the claim, some deed or written instrument is held necessary, even in Vermont, to extend a "possession constructively beyond the limits of the land actually occupied."² Similarly in Indiana it is held that, though an adverse possessor "must be limited to that portion over which he exercises palpable and continuous acts of ownership, . . . there being no other evidence, in such a case, to enable us to determine the quantity," yet, "where a party is in possession under and pursuant to a state of facts which, of themselves, show the character and extent of his entry and claim," such facts "perform sufficiently the office of color of title," by evidencing the character of the entry and extent of the claim,"³ and hence give constructive possession. As in the Vermont cases, however, it may be questioned whether this is not rather an authority on what may constitute actual possession, than an exception to the rule that a purely constructive possession is limited to cases where partial possession is accompanied with color of title. In California the ordinary rule limiting constructive possession to cases where some actual possession is held under a "paper title" is not applied in the case of mining claims. On this subject the court say: "But we think, where a claim is distinctly defined by physical marks, that possession taken for mining purposes embraces the whole claim thus characterized, though the actual occupancy or work done be only on, or of a part, and though the party does not enter in accordance with mining rules, or under a paper title. The rule which applies to agricultural land, and holds to a more strict interpretation of a possessio pedis, does not apply to such a case.”¹

¹ See Beach v. Sutton, 5 Vt. 209.

² Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 216.

³ Bell v. Longworth, 6 Ind. 277. In a recent case in North Carolina it is held that "The existence of visible and definite boundary marks is required to enlarge a possession beyond the limits of actual occupancy or a possessio pedis." Scott v. Elkins, 83 N. C. 427.

§ 774. Qualifications of the general rule of constructive possession.—Extent of a constructive possession limited.—There is an important qualification of the general rule that the adverse claimant under a paper title has constructive possession of all which the deed or other written instrument calls for, and in which possession the statute of limitations will protect him. In the case of Thompson v. Burhans,² above cited, the court, after affirming the general rule of constructive possession under a paper title, as above stated, qualifies it as follows: “The part not actually possessed must be for use with or subservient to that actually possessed, and have some necessary connection therewith.” And again, “such constructive possession will extend only to such land as is used in connection with the improved land actually possessed, and to only so much as is reasonable and proper for that purpose, according to the custom of the country.” Accordingly, the plaintiff claiming title under a void tax deed, to some 6,000 acres of wild land, but having sufficient actual possession of less than a quarter of an acre, it was held that he had no constructive possession of the land not actually possessed. It may also be remarked that the court held in this case that evidence, to the effect that the plaintiff had paid taxes on the lands, and caused them to be surveyed, and had at times cut logs and roads upon them, was insufficient to establish the necessary actual possession required by the ¹ English v. Johnson, 17 Cal. 116. See, also, Attwood v. Fricot, 17 Cal. 43. For an application of the general rule of constructive possession of the whole through a partial actual possession under a paper title, see Donahue v. Gallavan, 43 Cal. 575. See, further, Finlay v. Cook, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Scott v. Delany, 87 Ill. 146; Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 360; Welborn v. Anderson, 37 Miss. 155; Chandler v. Rushing, 38 Tex. 591; Texas Land Co. v. Williams, 51 Tex. 51; Den d. Saxton v. Hunt, 20 N. J. L. 487; Hannibal & St. J. R. R. Co. v. Clark, 68 Mo. 371, 378; Wells v. Iron Co., 47 N. H. 253, and cases cited; Turney v. Chamberlain, 15 Ill. 271.

² 79 N. Y. 100.

statute. On the other hand, the earlier case of Munro v. Merchant,¹ in the same court, which case, as is said by one of the Commissioners of Appeals, in Thompson v. Burhans,² "carried the rule farther than any other," held that when about 300 acres out of 1,500 or 1,600 acres had been cleared, and the uncleared portion had been used extensively for cutting timber trees, to be drawn and manufactured into lumber upon the cleared portion and elsewhere, and for fencing timber and firewood, the claimants under a deed were in possession of the whole tract. This case in its facts differs from Thompson v. Burhans, not only in respect to the proportion which the land claimed bore to that actually occupied, but in respect to the relation and connection between the two tracts—that actually possessed and that claimed by constructive possession. The reason of the rule affirmed in Thompson v. Burhans, as is said by Commissioner Earl,³ "is well stated by Judge Woodworth in Jackson v. Woodruff,⁴ as follows: "Possessions thus taken under a claim of title, are generally for the purpose of cultivation and permanent improvement. It is generally necessary to reserve a part for woodland. Good husbandry forbids the actual improvement of the whole. The possessions are usually in the neighborhood of others; the boundaries are marked and defined. Frequent acts of ownership in parts not cultivated give notoriety to the possession. Under such circumstances there is but little danger that a possession of twenty years will be matured against the right owner; if it occasionally happens, it will arise from a want of vigilance and care in him who has title. It is believed that no well-founded complaint can be urged against the operation of the principle; but the attempt to apply the same rule to cases where a large tract is conveyed, would be mischievous indeed.'" The case last quoted from is cited with approval in a case in the Supreme Court of Vermont,⁵ where the court also say:

¹ 28 N. Y. 9.

² 61 N. Y. 69.

³ 61 N. Y. 69. See also Miller v. Long Island R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 380, 384.

⁴ 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 276.

⁵ Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 406.

"It is, doubtless, impracticable to specify any precise quantity of land, that ought to be considered so far appendant to an actual improvement, as to be the proper subject of a constructive possession ;" and, "it is not intended to say that any quantity of land, which may reasonably be supposed to have been purchased and entered upon for purposes of cultivation, and for use as a wood or timber lot, might not be protected by such a possession." And, in a case in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin,¹ the court, in construing the statute governing the subject of constructive adverse possession, held, first, where the premises were divided into known lots, that "actual use on one lot cannot carry with it constructive use on another lot of the same piece of timber ;"² and secondly, that "the extent of land so used must bear a reasonable proportion to the rest ; must not be positively greater than is reasonably sufficient for fuel and fencing, in the circumstances of each case," and that, "what is a reasonable quantity, in each case, is . . . a question for the jury."

From the cases quoted in this and the preceding sections, it will be seen that the courts, in some States at least, are disposed to hold, that, as to the part claimed by constructive possession, something more is necessary than the mere possession of a deed including it, and that there must be some use made of the land in connection with the part actually occupied or improved. The effect, therefore, of having color of title to land would be, as to the part beyond the actual occupation or improvement, not to dispense with any acts of possession, but to relieve the claimant from such distinct and continuous acts of appropriation as would otherwise be required. In connection with the general rule of constructive possession it may also be remarked, that the actual partial possession and the claim under the instrument constituting the color of title, must be co-existing, i. e., the constructive possession given by the instrument cannot relate back to the time when actual possession commenced, but before color of title was acquired. In other words the statute begins to run in favor of the adverse constructive possession, only from the time when both actual possession and color of title concur.¹ Then it must be borne in mind that where the legal owner takes actual possession of the premises, or a part of them, the constructive possession of the former adverse claimant is destroyed, and the latter will thereafter be confined to his possessio pedis.² This is on the well-recognized principle that, in the case of a conflict of possession, the constructive possession always follows the true or better title.

¹ Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 538, 550.

² On the other hand, it was decided in a case in Georgia, that possession of part of one lot embraced in the same deed with other lots will not be extended by construction to the other lots unless the deed be on record. If the deed is on record, however, it will give constructive possession of the other lots, for the reason, as stated, that the record of the deed being notice to the owner, is equivalent to the visible possession of the lot by an actual occupancy. Tritt v. Roberts, 64 Ga. 156. See, also, Janes v. Patterson, 62 Ga. 527. In a case already referred to in Missouri (Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 447), the adverse possessor under color of title "is held to be possessed of the contiguous land covered by the instrument." This ruling, however, seems inconsistent with the language in a subsequent case in the same court, where it is said that actual possession, accompanied with color of title, carried the possession to the whole tract, though the part in controversy was a lot of timber land, and "situated some distance from plaintiff's other land." See Powell v. Davis, 54 Mo. 315, 319. Compare Scott v. Delany, 87 Ill. 148.

§ 775. Good faith as an ingredient in constructive possession.—A very important qualification or condition in the law of constructive adverse possession frequently met with in the books is the presence of good faith in the claimant.³ It may be here stated generally that, when the adverse claim under the statute of limitations extends simply to the land actually occupied by the adverse claimant—his possessio pedis—the question of good or bad faith on the part of the claimant does not arise.⁴ Under the plea of the statute of limitations in such a case, the only inquiry is, has the actual possession been sufficiently open, hostile, etc., and continued for the time required by the statute. Or, in such a case, as the court say in Smith v. Roberts: “It is the actual claim of ownership, not the bona fides which is the test.”⁵ When, how-

¹ Watson v. Tindal, 24 Ga. 494. See Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 420.

² Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 33. See Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 207; Brimmer v. Proprs. of Long Wharf, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 131.

³ See Brady v. Huff, 75 Ala. 83.

⁴ See § 757.

⁵ Smith v. Roberts, 62 Ala. 86.

ever, the adverse claim is made under color of title, and, consequently, extends beyond the possessio pedis of the claimant to the limits of the instrument constituting the color of title, by means of the constructive possession created by it,—in such a case, the bona fides of the claimant may become an important element. The necessity of good faith in the claimant under color of title is often taken for granted by the courts, though the subject, it must be admitted, is far from having been satisfactorily adjudicated upon. Thus, in a case in the Supreme Court of the United States,¹ Mr. Justice McLean, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "Upon their face, the deeds purport to convey a title in fee; and having been accepted in good faith, . . . they show the nature and extent of the claim to the premises;" the clear implication of the opinion is, therefore, that the absence of good faith would have been fatal to the adverse possession claimed under the deeds. So, in a case in the highest court of Mississippi, the court say: "It is well settled that when a party enters into possession under a colorable title and holds adversely, that his possession is construed to be co-extensive with the premises, as described in the deed or will under which he claims, and which he believes gives him a sound title."² In a recent case in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania,³ the court say: "If, however, it was known, or ought to have been known, that that sale did not in fact embrace the Moses Foulke tract, then the purchaser acquired no color of title; for, as it is said by Gibson, C. J., in McCall v. Neely,⁴ 'An entry is by color of title when it is made under a bona fide, and not pretended, claim of title existing in another.'" And also, in a case in California, the court say: "If a party enters bona fide under color of a title, . . . the possession of a part . . . is the possession of the entire claim described by the paper."⁵

¹ Gregg v. Sayre, 8 Pet. 253.

² Welborn v. Anderson, 37 Miss. 163.

³ Ege v. Medlar, 82 Penn. St. 98, 99.

⁴ 3 Watts (Penn.), 72. See supra, § 762.

⁵ Attwood v. Fricot, 17 Cal. 43. See, also, Buckley v. Taggart, 62 Ind. 238; Miss. & Tenn. R. R. Co. v. Devaney, 42 Miss. 555.

In some cases, however, the necessity for good faith under the circumstances in question is distinctly held. Thus, in a case in the Supreme Court of Missouri, it is said that, "In addition to the actual occupancy of a part . . . there must be a claim on the whole . . . and such claim must be bona fide and evidenced by some paper," etc.¹ And in another case in the same court, it is observed, "Good faith may become an important element . . . in reference to defining the limits of the possession."² So in a case in the Supreme Court of Iowa, the court, in reference to a claim under color of title, say : "Of course he (the claimant) must make the claim in good faith, and not in wantonness."³ In a recent case in Texas, it is held that, "It is unquestionably a well established general rule, that where entry is made upon land under color of title, . . . the party entering acquires constructive possession . . . to the extent of the boundaries in the title under which he enters. The extent of possession acquired by entry does not depend upon the character of the title, . . . but whether it is bona fide and under such color of right as that other parties can ascertain its character and extent."⁴ That here the necessity for good faith is confined to a claim to constructive possession under color of title is shown by another case in the same court, where it is held, that "the statute of limitations does not involve the question of good faith in the naked possessor."⁵ In a case in California, it is said by Field, C. J., in his opinion, that the claim, "when founded upon a written instrument, . . . must be asserted by the occupant in good faith, in the belief that he has good ¹ Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 544. See, also, Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 447.

² Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 41. See, also, Chapman v. Templeton, 53 Mo. 465 ; Hannibal & St. J. R. R. Co. v. Clark, 68 Mo. 371. Bona fides will be presumed until the contrary appears. Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 394 ; Hardin v. Gouveneur, 69 Ill. 140 ; McMullin v. Erwin, 58 Ga. 427.

³ Close v. Samm, 27 Iowa, 510. In McMullin v. Erwin, 58 Ga. 429, Bleckley, J., said : "If a man takes a color of title, whether bond or deed, from one whom he knows has no right to make it, he cannot use it as the basis of prescription, for to do so would be a fraud on the true owner. To deprive the owner of his property by such means would be to steal it. The law has better morality than to sanction that sort of a transaction."

⁴ Texas Land Co. v. Williams, 51 Tex. 62.

⁵ Kinney v. Vinson, 32 Tex. 128.

right to the premises.”¹ And in a leading case in the Supreme Court of New Jersey,² the court say: “A party who sets up an adverse possession under color of title must act bona fide, or, in other words, he must be honest. He must believe his deed to be valid in law, and that it conveys to him a good title to the land.” This doctrine has been recently followed in an important case in the Court of Errors and Appeals of the same State, which we have already cited, and to which we shall presently recur.³

The cases above cited, it is believed, reflect the prevailing opinion on this question of bona fides in claiming title to land by a constructive adverse possession through color of title, though it is to be regretted that the subject has not received more general judicial investigation and adjudication. On the other hand, however, there are decisions apparently directly opposed to the opinions above quoted. In a case in the Supreme Court of Tennessee,⁴ where the defendant in ejectment claimed under a void tax deed and pleaded the statute of limitations, and where, the “defendant, having been particeps to the pretended purchase for taxes,” it was contended that his possession was not adverse, the court held that such an objection was untenable, for in such a case, “the jury would try the defendant rather than his title;” and so it was held as the head note reads, that “the act of limitations will prove a bar to an action of ejectment, although the defendant, when he received his deed, knew that the person conveying to him had no title.” But here there was no question of a constructive possession under the deed beyond the limits of the actual possession of the adverse claimant. The ques-

¹ McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 636.

² Den d. Saxton v. Hunt, 20 N. J. L. 493. So also the “paper title” must warrant, by its appearance, good faith on the part of the person entering under it. See Baker v. Swan, 32 Md. 355.

³ See supra, § 771, and infra, § 777. In Watts v. Owens, 62 Wis. 520, the court say: “The defendant could not have entered under that deed, believing that he had even color of title, for he knew, or was bound to know, that the pretended conveyance from his brother and sister was absolutely void at common law. In my opinion, the animus or intent with which the entry is made must be bona fide.”

⁴ Love v. Shields, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 405. See contra, Definition of Color of Title, above quoted; Wilson v. Kilcannon, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 182; Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.), 407.

tion simply was, "could an actual hostile possession, accompanied by a deed known to the claimant to be void, be strictly adverse?" and the ruling of the court to the effect that such possession can be adverse, no matter how tortiously obtained or how groundless the occupant may know his claim to be, will not be questioned by any one.

§ 776. The New York doctrine on the subject.—The most serious dissent from what we deem the prevailing and the better rule, as to the necessity for bona fides in one claiming constructive adverse possession through color of title, is to be found in New York, though the earlier cases in that State would seem to require good faith, not only in connection with a claim founded upon a written instrument constituting color of title, but also when the adverse possession is based upon a mere claim of title. Thus, in the case of Clapp v. Bromagham, in the Court of Errors,¹ the Chancellor says, in reference to the contention that the purchase and possession of the adverse claimant were fraudulent, "if that objection to the title was well-founded, it might be fatal; for fraud vitiates whatever it touches." But the court held that fraud could not be imputed to the purchaser, through his negligence in not inquiring as to the validity of the title acquired, implying therefore, that actual fraud or knowledge of the defects of his title must be proved.² It may be remarked that this case has frequently been cited by the New York Courts, to the effect that constructive notice of defects in a title, arising out of neglect in the purchaser to investigate, is not applicable on the question of adverse possession,³ but the decision, in respect to the language of the Chancellor above quoted, has never, so far as we are aware, been distinctly overruled. So in a late case in that court, the same doctrine as to the necessity of good faith in every adverse claim of title, whether founded upon a written instrument or not, is affirmed. The Chief Justice says: "The animo, then, or intent with which an entry is made

¹ 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 557.

² See also Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 543.

³ See for example Sands v. Hughes, 53 N. Y. 297.

must be bona fide, an entry believing in good faith that the land is his, and that he has title."¹ The doctrine of the earlier cases in New York has been discarded in the leading case, already frequently cited, of Humbert v. Trinity Church, in the Court of Errors,² where it is held that, "neither fraud in obtaining or continuing the possession, or knowledge on the part of the tenant that his claim is unfounded, wrongful and fraudulent, will excuse the negligence of the owner in not bringing his action within the prescribed period." In reference to the language in Livingston v. Peru Iron Co., above quoted, the court say: "The question is on the quo animo, the intent, not, I take it, as was suggested in Livingston v. The Peru Iron Co., the intent to claim honestly, but the intent to claim at all, right or wrong, with or without knowledge that another has title." The general language of the Chief Justice in the Livingston case is overruled, or at any rate is confined in its application to the case of an adverse possession, not under the statute of limitations, but under that against champerty and maintenance.³ The language used in the several opinions delivered in the case of Humbert v. Trinity Church, on the subject of bona fides, is certainly general enough to warrant its application to all cases of adverse possession under the statute of limitations, whether such possession be founded upon a mere claim or upon color of title, and whether the possession claimed be simply a possessio pedis, or, in addition, a constructive possession to the extent called for by a written instrument. We find, therefore, that the doctrine apparently laid down in Humbert v. Trinity Church, that bona fides is never necessary in adverse possession, is, on the authority of that case, applied to cases, where, in fact, the adverse claim extended to land not actually possessed, but claimed by constructive possession under a deed or the like.⁴ In a later case in the New York

¹ Livingston v. Peru Iron Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 518. See Howard v. Howard, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 667, 668.

² 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 587.

³ See Crary v. Goodman, 22 N. Y. 177.

⁴ See Munro v. Merchant, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 401, 402; Howland v. Newark Association, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 367. Under the title "adverse possession," and the sub-

Court of Appeals,¹ however, we find the court basing the distinction between the cases of Livingston v. Peru Iron Co. and Humbert v. Trinity Church, upon the difference between the champerty act and the statute of limitations in that State. After drawing this distinction, the court say: "A deed fraudulently obtained is a nullity, and gives to the fraudulent grantee not even a colorable title. Hence, in the former of these cases (the Livingston case), which depended upon the champerty act, it was held that the possession of the grantee, under such a deed, was not such an adverse possession as would avoid a subsequent deed from the true owner. The other case (the Humbert case) turned upon the statute of limitations, and under that statute, as we have seen, the thing contemplated was a mere naked possession, irrespective of any right or color of right. Therefore the court held that even fraud in obtaining or continuing the possession would not excuse the negligence of the owner in not bringing his action within the prescribed period." The clear implication, at least, of this language is, that if "the thing contemplated" were a constructive possession through a deed fraudulently obtained, the fraud in obtaining such a deed—not in obtaining actual possession—would defeat the adverse claim to a constructive possession under it. This would, therefore, restrict the ruling in the Humbert case, that fraud is immaterial as an objection to the defense of the statute of limitations, to cases involving naked possession only, and would harmonize the New York rule on this subject with what we deem to be the prevailing opinion. But in a later case, in the same Court of Appeals,² it seems to be doubted whether this restriction of the language of the Humbert case, or the distinction attempted to be drawn, is warranted, though the reason for the doubt is not stated by the court.

§ 777. Statement of the prevailing rule.—Doctrine of the heading "The claim must be under color of title," in Abbott's New York Digest, vol. I (p. 43), we find the following: "Whether defendant entered into possession in good faith, believing he had a good title, or not, is no longer material."

¹ Crary v. Goodman, 22 N. Y. 177.

² Sands v. Hughes, 53 N. Y. 296.

New Jersey Court of Errors.—Notwithstanding the New York cases above cited, we think the better and the prevailing opinion to be in effect, that fraud in acquiring an actual naked possession—whether accompanied by a deed or not—will not, on that account, render the possession less adverse, and will be no objection to the plea of the statute of limitations on the part of the disseizor or adverse claimant; but that no constructive possession can be acquired through a written instrument obtained through fraud, or with actual knowledge of its invalidity to convey a good title; in other words, that such a written instrument cannot perform the office of color of title. This rule and the reasons underlying it are well stated in a recent important case in New Jersey,¹ as follows: “The general doctrine of the law is that fraud in obtaining or continuing possession, or knowledge that the party’s claim of ownership is unfounded and wrongful, will not deprive him of his title by adverse possession, or relieve the true owner of the consequences of the bar of the statute of limitations, if the possession of the intruder has in fact been adverse, and has been asserted by such open and notorious acts of ownership as are essential in the acquisition of title by adverse possession (citing Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. 587). . . . The statute of limitations establishes a peremptory and inflexible rule of law, which terminates the rights of the legal owner, and protects the disseizor in his possession, not out of regard to the merits of the latter’s title, but for the reason that the real owner has acquiesced in a possession which was adverse for such a length of time that the statute has deprived him of all remedy for the enforcement of his legal title. Possession clandestinely taken and held for the purpose of fraudulently concealing from the real owner knowledge of the acts of ownership over his property, in virtue of which title is endeavored to be obtained, will defeat the effort to acquire title by such means, not on any general doctrine of fraud, but for the reason that possession under such circumstances would be devoid of that notoriety of the possession, and of the adverse claim which is necessary to perfect title by adverse possession. . . . This is the doctrine of the law in all cases where the adverse possession commences with an actual disseizin. But a disseizin may be effected by an entry under a deed or a feoffment, which is void in the sense that no title is actually conveyed thereby, and where a party claims a disseizin by virtue of an entry under such a muniment of title, he is claiming the advantage of color of title. In such a case the rule above mentioned is not applied in all its strictness. A party cannot have the advantage of an entry under color of title unless his deed, which gives the colorable title, was obtained bona fide. If obtained by fraud, or with knowledge that the grantor had no title to convey, the deed will avail the grantee nothing. But a grantee will not be deprived of the legal advantages of an entry under color of title, unless it be for actual fraud on his part."

¹ Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 541.

§ 778. Good faith expressly required by statute in some States.—The necessity for good faith in one claiming under color of title, has been expressly recognized by the statutes on this subject in several of the States, which, however, from our view, are merely declaratory of the true common law rule on the subject, so far, at least, as it is applied to constructive possession.¹

§ 778a. The requirement of good faith.—The rule once obtained quite generally that only occupants in good faith could acquire title by actual adverse possession. This resulted in a judicial inquiry into the secret motives and hidden intentions of the possessor, and rendered title by adverse possession very insecure and unsatisfactory, there being no guide or test by which to approximate the verdict, and it being possible that though the evidence of exclusive possession for the statutory period might be complete, the caprice of the jury would overturn the possessor's title. The law was gradually changed, and actual hostile occupation, whatever the character of the intent, and even though

¹ See, for example, Georgia Code, 1873, § 2683; Revised Statutes of Illinois, 1874, c. 83, §§ 6, 7. See also Castleberry v. Black, 58 Ga. 386; McCamy v. Higdon, 50 Ga. 629; Brown v. Wells, 44 Ga. 573; Garrett v. Adrain, 44 Ga. 274; Stubblefield v. Borders, 92 Ill. 279; Russell v. Mandell, 73 Ill. 136.

held in bad faith, will now, as we have seen, bar the entry of the true owner. The present rule, as applied to actual possession, is to be commended, the theory being that the laches, neglect and indifference of the true owner lose him the land to an actual occupant whose possession and assertion of right is notorious, and sufficient to attract the attention of, and to constitute notice to, the true owner and all the world. It has been mistakenly argued that the same test should, in the nature of things, be applied in determining whether the occupant has acquired adverse possession under color of title to land only constructively possessed; that the only test should be, is the instrument in form a conveyance, and did the claimant occupy a part of the land under it claiming the whole? We conceive that the better doctrine, both from a practical and moral point of view, is, that good faith should be exacted in conferring title by adverse possession to lands not actually used and occupied. There is a wide difference between the two cases. Constructive possession, as a matter of fact is no possession at all; it is a fiction; the claimant is often said to be in possession by the magic of an act of parliament. Considering how rigid the requirements of law are as to the notorious character of the actual adverse possession that destroys the title of the true owner, and that the law favors the occupant who improves the land, it is important to observe that the same safeguard as to notice, and the same public considerations as to the possessor's rights, do not exist where constructive possession only is being considered. The elements of notice to, and laches and neglect on the part of, the true owner, are not so conspicuous, for the color of title need not, as a rule, be recorded; in fact it is often concealed while the statute is running, and such naturally would be the device of an occupant who held in bad faith. The only notice to the true owner is the actual possession perhaps of an obscure corner or very small portion of the land, and this in a new country, where boundaries are not clearly defined, would often constitute no actual notice of a disseizin whatever.

§ 779. Difficulty of laying down a general definition of color of title.—As we have seen, it is by no means easy to lay down a satisfactory definition, which shall accord with the various opinions in the books, as to what, in general, constitutes color of title. It is no easier to so define the term as to include every instance of what may be held to be color of title, and to exclude all that has been or may be discarded as such. Each case must be decided in respect to its own circumstances and ingredients, controlled by the general principles which we have above attempted to deduce from the authorities. It may, however, be advantageous to enumerate some of the instances of color of title held to be such by the courts, as well as some of those deemed insufficient for such purpose.

§ 780. Instances of what held to be color of title.—The following have been held sufficient to constitute color of title: A tax deed made under a sale of swamp land, which was exempt from taxation as belonging to a county, as well as the deed from the purchaser;¹ a tax deed of an auditor, regular on its face, “without regard to the constitutionality of the laws under which it was devised;”² a sheriff’s deed of land not in his own county;³ a deed made by an administrator with the will annexed, though no power of sale was given by the will, and no sale had been ordered by the court;⁴ a deed of a grantor, purporting to convey as an administrator, under a special act of the legislature, which act was unconstitutional and void;⁵ so also a conveyance by a guardian made in pursuance of a void decree of a probate court;⁶ a paper writing purporting to be a will, proved before the proper tribunal by the oath of one witness only,⁷ though contra, had the writing never been proved as a will.⁸ A claim to land through condemnation proceedings subsequently adjudged void,

¹ County of Piatt v. Goodell, 97 Ill. 84.

² Woodward v. Blanchard, 16 Ill. 424. See, also, Stubblefield v. Borders, 92 Ill. 280.

³ Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 440.

⁴ Riggs v. Fuller, 54 Ala. 141.

⁵ Fagan v. Rosier, 68 Ill. 84.

⁶ Molton v. Henderson, 62 Ala. 426.

⁷ McConnell v. McConnell, 64 N. C. 342.

⁸ Callender v. Sherman, 5 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 711.

was held to be under color of title;¹ and so of a tax title subsequently invalidated through individual or judicial action.² It has been held that color of title and possession under it were not disturbed by a mere judgment in ejectment against the claimant, the plaintiff's title having been bought in by the claimant.³ Other instances are: an imperfect or invalid title bond;⁴ a deed under a decree of a court void for want of jurisdiction, if the deed purports to convey title;⁵ a tax deed regular on its face;⁶ a tax deed void upon its face;⁷ a comptroller's deed executed without authority;⁸ a deed by an attorney in fact without proof of his authority,⁹ and a deed by a person representing himself to have a written authority from the owner, the deed being made by the assumed agent in his own name without mention of the principal;¹⁰ a deed made without authority by the clerk of the board of bounty commissioners of land sold for taxes;¹¹ a tax deed of land against which no judgment had in fact been obtained;¹² a sheriff's deed without a seal but otherwise formal;¹³ and a deed of a purchaser at a master's sale, where a proper party had been omitted as defendant in the foreclosure.¹⁴ Where lands were sold for delinquent taxes under a judgment, and the sale was made at a day later than that fixed by law, and this appeared from the recitals in the deed which purported to convey the land, such a deed was held

¹ Miss. & Tenn. R. R. Co. v. Devaney, 42 Miss. 555.

² Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa, 490.

³ O'Neal v. Boone, 53 Ill. 35. See § 743.

⁴ Bell v. Coats, 56 Miss. 776, 781.

⁵ Huls v. Buntin, 47 Ill. 396; s. p. Welborn v. Anderson, 37 Miss. 162.

⁶ Stubblefield v. Borders, 92 Ill. 284; Woodward v. Blanchard, 16 Ill. 433; s. p. Dawley v. Van Court, 21 Ill. 460.

⁷ Colvin v. McCune, 39 Iowa, 502; Douglass v. Tullock, 34 Iowa, 262; Pugh v. Youngblood, 69 Ala. 296. "That a void deed may be good as color of title can scarcely be said to admit of question." Allen v. Kellam, 69 Ala. 447.

⁸ Thompson v. Burhans, 61 N. Y. 60; s. p. Finlay v. Cook, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 9. See also Ladd v. Dubroca, 61 Ala. 28; Washburn v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 361.

⁹ Munro v. Merchant, 28 N. Y. 41. So a deed of a tax collector without proof of his authority. Ladd v. Dubroca, 61 Ala. 25.

¹⁰ Payne v. Blackshear, 52 Ga. 637.

¹¹ Edgerton v. Bird, 6 Wis. 527.

¹² Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 190.

¹³ Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 233.

¹⁴ Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200.

to be color of title.¹ A deed with a defective acknowledgment;² and a paper purporting to be a deed, but without a seal, though held not to be valid for the purpose of conveying title, is yet admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing the extent of the possession of the claimant under it, and hence fills the office of color of title.³ So, also, a deed attested by the seal of a court stamped upon the paper, instead of wax or a wafer, was held to be admissible to show color of title, and is evidence of the adverse possession of the claimant under it.⁴ Written memoranda by a sheriff, regularly made in a book for that purpose, of a sale of land, the sheriff being dead, have been held admissible as evidence to show color of title in a purchaser at such a sale.⁵ Though a deed void for want of a description cannot constitute color of title,⁶ yet a tax deed which designated the proper sections, townships and ranges, but not the county or State in which the land lay, has been held good color of title;⁷ so if a "bond for titles" received in good faith,⁸ even though the bond were forged,⁹ if it appear that the purchase-money had been paid.¹⁰ A void patent may be used to give color of title and fix the limits of possession;¹¹ and a certificate of entry obtained in good faith, upon the payment of the entrance money from an officer having the right to make sales of public land,¹² though such certificate be subsequently cancelled, but without the knowledge of the claimant. An invalid tax deed without attesting witnesses;¹³ a quitclaim deed from one having no interest;¹⁴ a deed from the husband of a life tenant after

¹ Hardin v. Crate, 60 Ill. 215.

² Dalton v. Bank of St. Louis, 54 Mo. 105.

³ Barger v. Hobbs, 67 Ill. 592.

⁴ Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 472, 477.

⁵ Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239, 242.

⁶ See supra, § 767.

⁷ Hanna v. Renfro, 32 Miss. 128.

⁸ Garrett v. Adrain, 44 Ga. 274.

⁹ Griffin v. Stamper, 17 Ga. 108.

¹⁰ Stamper v. Griffin, 20 Ga. 312, 322. See, also, s. p. McQueen v. Ivey, 36 Ala. 308.

¹¹ Logan v. Jelks, 34 Ark. 547, 549.

¹² Hannibal & St. J. R. R. Co. v. Clark, 68 Mo. 371, 377.

¹³ Dillingham v. Brown, 38 Ala. 311.

¹⁴ Wells v. Iron Company, 47 N. H. 253; s. p. Castleberry v. Black, 58 Ga. 386, and cases cited; Cowly v. Monson, 10 Biss. 182. See, also, McCamy v. Higdon, the latter's death, the former being simply in possession, and without any title to the land conveyed;¹ a deed of a wife's land, made by a husband and wife, but void as to the latter through want of her private examination;² a deed founded upon a verdict or voidable decree in chancery;³ an unregistered deed;⁴ a written agreement to divide lands owned or claimed in common, though made by the administrator of one of the tenants in common without an order from the court for the partition thereof;⁵ a forged writing believed to be genuine;⁶ and a deed which had been cancelled⁷ may all serve as color of title.

§ 781. What held insufficient to constitute color of title.—The following have been held insufficient to constitute color of title: A sheriff's deed void because of its execution before the expiration of the time given by law for redemption;⁸ a tax deed of 100 acres of land of a survey containing 600 acres, and without specifying what particular portion;⁹ an unprobated will, where there was "nothing to show that it had ever been regarded and acted on as conferring any right;"¹⁰ a guardian's deed where the sale is not confirmed by the court as required;¹¹ a tax certificate;¹² and a bond, showing upon its face that the 50 Ga. 629. But see Brown v. Wells, 44 Ga. 573, where it is held that if defendant knew he was only purchasing a mere squatter's title, he stands in no better condition than the original squatter.

¹ Forest v. Jackson, 56 N. H. 357.

² Ferguson v. Kennedy, Peck (Tenn.), 321.

³ Whiteside v. Singleton, Meigs (Tenn.), 207.

⁴ Lea v. Polk County Copper Co., 21 How. 493; Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200; Chastien v. Philips, 11 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 255; Davis v. Higgins, 91 N. C. 382; Hardin v. Barrett, 6 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 159; Minot v. Brooks, 16 N. H. 374; Belows v. Jewell, 60 N. H. 420; Newmarket Mfg. Co. v. Pendergast, 24 N. H. 63.

⁵ Shiels v. Lamar, 58 Ga. 590.

⁶ Stamper v. Griffin, 20 Ga. 312.

⁷ Hughes v. Israel, 73 Mo. 547.

⁸ Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 668, 676. Compare Annan v. Baker, 49 N. H. 161. But see cases cited above, § 780; and especially Hardin v. Crate, 60 Ill. 215.

⁹ Humphries v. Huffman, 33 Ohio St. 395, and cases cited; s. p. Shackleford v. Bailey, 35 Ill. 387. The deeds in these cases being void for uncertainty, they did not on their face "purport to convey any title to a particular tract of land." See, also, s. p. Fraser v. Hunter, 5 Cranch's C. C. 470; Wray v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co., 86 Ill. 425; Shiels v. Lamar, 58 Ga. 590.

¹⁰ Rothschild v. Hatch, 54 Miss. 554, 558. See, also, supra, McConnell v. McConnell, 64 N. C. 342.

¹¹ Rawlings v. Bailey, 15 Ill. 178. Compare Molton v. Henderson, 62 Ala. 426.

¹² McKeighan v. Hopkins, 14 Neb. 361.

obligor claimed no title, but admitted it to be in another.¹ It has been held in Illinois that a bond for a deed, upon condition of a compliance with its terms in future, will not constitute color of title, inasmuch as it does not on its face "in terms purport to convey the title;"² and, for the same reason, that a "certificate of purchase at a tax sale," and "certificate of a land officer, showing that, at one time, a party was entitled to a pre-emption," did not constitute color of title.³ But in Alabama, it has been held that, though the vendor's bond conditioned to make title when the purchase-money is paid, cannot be color of title so long as the purchase-money remains unpaid, yet it becomes such after the payment is made.⁴ The same distinction is taken in New York.⁵ A record of a survey of lands has been held insufficient to constitute color of title, though it may be evidence of a claim of title and of the character of the actual possession.⁶ So also, as shown above, an indefinite description in a deed renders it insufficient to perform the office of color of title.⁷ In the same way the deed must cover, in its description, a tract of land of which that in actual possession is a component part.⁸

¹ Simmons v. Lane, 25 Ga. 181.

² Rigor v. Frye, 62 Ill. 508, 509, and cases cited.

³ Bride v. Watt, 23 Ill. 507; Spellman v. Curtenius, 12 Ill. 409.

⁴ See supra, McQueen v. Ivey, 36 Ala. 308; s. p. Stamper v. Griffin, 20 Ga. 322. See, also, Bell v. Coats, 56 Miss. 776.

⁵ Briggs v. Prosser, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 227. In this case, however, the contract to convey seems to have been by parol, and the main question presented was, whether, though the contract price had been paid, a claimant under such an executory contract could hold possession adversely, which the court decided in the affirmative, because as the court say, "there is nothing in the character of it (such holding) inconsistent with the idea of an adverse possession." This case, however, so far as it decides that a parol agreement to convey, where the purchase-money has been paid, can be technically color of title, seems to us misleading. Were the executory contract in writing, the consideration-money being paid, there seems to be no doubt that possession thereunder would be strictly speaking under color of title. See for example, Jackson v. Foster, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 488; La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589; s. p. Furlong v. Garrett, 44 Wis. 111. See § 305.

⁶ See supra, § 765; Atkinson v. Patterson, 46 Vt. 750. See, also, Oatman v. Fowler, 43 Vt. 462.

⁷ See supra, § 767; Wray v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co., 86 Ill. 425. See, also, Henley v. Wilson, 81 N. C. 405.

⁸ Stephenson v. Doe d. Wait, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 508. Hence if the part claimed by constructive possession, be a tract distinct from the part actually occupied, the deed, though covering both tracts, cannot perform the office of color of title for the former; in such a case there would have to be, in addition, some actual possession of the former tract.

CHAPTER XXXI.

PLAINTIFF'S TITLE AND EVIDENCE.

- | | |
|--|--|
| § 782. Limits of the treatise. 783. Sources of title. 784. Divesting the Government of title. 785. Patents.—Highest evidence of title. 786. Presumption of a grant. 787. No fixed rule as to length of time. 788. Difference between presumption and prescription. 789. Missing links. 790. Legal and equitable titles. 791. Strength of plaintiff's title. 792. Facts entitling plaintiff to recover. 793. Title by execution. 794. Title by judicial record. 795. Title by relation. 796. Ejectment founded on a forfeiture. 797. Title by part performance.—Statute of frauds. 798. Title by parol gift. 798a. Title by estoppel. 799. Order of proof. 800. Burden of proof. 801. Right to begin and reply. 802. Production of title papers. 803. Common source of title. 804. Evidence of reputation. 805. Reputation as to private boundaries. | § 806. Conclusions from the cases. 807. Particular facts. 808. Declaration of deceased owner as to boundary. 809. Statements of deceased grantor. 810. Statements qualifying possession.—Res gesta. 811. Declarations as part of the res gesta. 812. Pedigree and family facts. 813. Ante litem motam. 814. Declarant's relationship must be established by other testimony. 815. Pedigree. 816. Age. 817. Presumption of death. 818. Ancient deeds and wills. 819. Ancient surveys and maps. 820. Lost deeds. 821. Office copies of deeds. 822. Delivery of deed. 823. Recitals in deeds. 824. Parol evidence to vary written instrument. 825. Transactions with deceased persons. 826. Seals. 827. Abstracts. 828. Unofficial records. |
|--|--|

§ 782. Limits of the treatise.—The general rules governing the relevancy, admissibility and probative force of evidence apply to all species of actions, and for a consideration of these rules the reader must be referred to other treatises. There are, however, many questions more or less peculiar to actions to try title, or of frequent recurrence in them, especially such as either cannot, or rarely do, arise in any other proceedings, which may properly be considered in this volume. It should be observed in advance that in all the forms of remedy now in use throughout the United States for the trial of title to land, the essential principles of evidence are the same.¹

¹ 2 Greenl. Ev. § 303; see § 92.

§ 783. Sources of title.—The European powers laid claim to the title to the lands of the American continent by right of prior discovery. A disposition prevailed on the part of some of the powers to negotiate for the purchase of lands. Yet, as was said by Chief Justice Marshall:¹ “While the different nations of Europe respected the right of the natives, as occupants, they asserted the ultimate dominion to be in themselves, and claimed and exercised, as a consequence of this ultimate dominion, a power to grant the soil, while yet in possession of the natives.”² These grants have been understood by all, to convey a title to the grantees, subject only to the Indian right of occupancy.”³ The English rule declared that the king was the original proprietor of all lands in the kingdom, and the true and only source of title. This principle has been adopted in this country, and, as Kent says: “It is a settled and fundamental doctrine with us, that all valid individual title to land within the United States is derived from the grant of our own local governments, or from that of the United States, or from the crown, or royal chartered governments established here prior to the Revolution.”⁴

§ 784. Divesting the government of title.—There is no way in which the United States can be divested of title except in pursuance of some of its laws, and as no limitation runs against the government,⁵ occupancy and possession alone, even for a great length of time, will not ripen into title against the United States.⁶ Since, as we have seen, all titles are derived from the government, the existing possession of a private owner presupposes a grant from the sovereign power.⁷ It is seldom necessary, however, in actual litigation, to invoke this presumption in this country, at the present day, “except in cases of very ancient possessions

¹ Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 543, 574.

² S. P. Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S. 517, 525, and cases cited; United States v. Cook, 19 Wall. 591.

³ See § 194. Commonwealth v. City of Roxbury, 9 Gray (Mass.), 478.

⁴ 3 Kent's Com. 378.

⁵ See § 753a.

⁶ Drew v. Valentine, 18 Fed. Rep. 712; see § 717 n.

⁷ Ante, § 192; People v. Trinity Church, 22 N. Y. 47; Gamble v. Horr, 40 Mich. 565.

running back to colonial days, as, since the commencement of the present century, a record has been preserved of all grants of the government, and of the various preliminary steps up to their issue; and provision is made by law for the introduction of copies of the record when the originals are lost."¹

§ 785. Patents.—Highest evidence of title.—It is frequently said that a patent from the government is the highest or best evidence of title. By this is meant merely that, since all titles come from the government, a chain of title derived in due course from that source, accompanied by possession, is perfect. But any kind of governmental grant is of equal validity with a patent. An act of Congress, for instance, is of the same rank as evidence, though, as an instrument of quiet and security, a patent is preferable to all other species of grants.² Some general rules of evidence affecting titles derived from patents are discussed in a later chapter.³

§ 786. Presumption of a grant.—In actions for the trial of title to land, a presumption of lawful origin of title by proper instruments of conveyance, arises in favor of any one shown to have been for a long period of time in enjoyment of possession. This presumption is said to be founded on the principle that the exercise of possessory rights might and naturally would have been prevented by those adversely interested if such possession was without lawful origin.

§ 787. No fixed rule as to length of time.—The length of time which will warrant such a presumption must be determined by the circumstances of each particular case. Notoriety of possession, such as arises in cities and all densely populated localities, furnishes the most abundant opportunities for the assertion of any adverse interest, and is on this account, perhaps, the most important circumstance to be considered.⁴ Although some doubt has been expressed

¹ Field, J., in Oaksmith v. Johnston, 92 U. S. 345.

² Morrow v. Whitney, 95 U. S. 551; Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 78.

³ See Chap. XXXIV.

⁴ Wilson v. Stoner, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 39; Mather v. Ministers of Trinity Church, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 509; University of Vermont v. Reynolds, 3 Vt. 542.

as to whether this presumption is conclusive may be rebutted, the cases, we believe, show cannot disregard the direction of the court's opinion that the fact of possession is clear in undoubtedly cases where the question must be left to the jury, as where there are facts tending to show possession was doubtful, or was consistent with its origin, or where the question at issue is the existence of an ancient muniment of title; but in a total absence of evidence, except of uninterrupted possession, then there is nothing for the court to consider, and the court should direct it to be granted.¹

§ 788. Difference between presumption and prescription. This presumption should be carefully distinguished from the presumption of a grant in the case of acquisition by prescription. In these latter cases, as seen,² the periods of the statutes of limitation govern. The easement is gained by adverse use, and any fact, must be proved to the satisfaction of the court. The presumption of a lost deed or other muniment will not ordinarily be allowed without a much longer period of time. In almost all cases when the title to hereditaments is involved the statutes of limitation obviate the necessity of the presumption of a grant, when these statutes do not apply, as in case of exemption from their provisions,³ or when the doctrine is concerned,⁴ this doctrine may become of great importance. Such presumptions can never arise where all the circumstances are perfectly consistent with the nature of the grant.⁵

¹ University of Vermont v. Reynolds, 3 Vt. 542; Kingston v. ... (Pa.) 383. Compare Carter v. Robinett, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 429.

² See §§ 724, 726.

³ University of Vermont v. Reynolds, 3 Vt. 542.

⁴ Goodtitle d. Parker v. Baldwin, 11 East, 488. See, further, Casloes, 1 Gill (Md.) 430; Balto. Chem. Mfg. Co. v. Dobbin, 23 Md. Wilson, 30 Md. 536; Campbell v. Smith, 8 N. J. Law, 140; Fitzh. J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 429; Million v. Riley, 1 Dana (Ky.), 359; Vale Pick. (Mass.) 85.

⁵ Arnold v. Stevens, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 106, and cases cited.

§ 789. Missing links.—The general rule is that in seeking to make out proof of record title the plaintiff must go back to the original source, and show a grant either from the State or the United States, and then, should there be a hiatus in the chain of title as shown, twenty years possession in conformity with the deeds will raise a presumption of the existence of the missing links.¹

§ 790. Legal and equitable titles.—Under the reformed procedure, as we have already seen,² equitable defenses may be interposed in the action of ejectment, and, where it is possible, the defendant should ask for affirmative relief, so that all questions relating to title and possession may be disposed of in the same action. The converse of this proposition, however, is by no means generally true. In some States the statutes or codes permit the plaintiff to recover in ejectment on an equitable title.³ But generally the rule is admitted to be that an equitable title will not support ejectment.⁴ The late Professor Pomeroy, in his learned work on Remedies and Remedial Rights,⁵ contends with great force that, on principle, the holder of a purely equitable primary right, or the holder of a purely equitable estate or interest in land, carrying with it the right to immediate possession, should be able to maintain an ejectment as well as to defend one by asserting such an interest, but he admits that the judicial decisions have not yet satisfactorily established any such position. In Missouri the cases have turned upon the question of the relief to be granted and the mode of trial, and it is held that the plaintiff is not entitled to a recovery of possession on an equitable title, chiefly because the defendant in a dispute about the possession is constitutionally entitled to a trial by jury.⁶ The

¹ Anderson v. Smith, 2 Mack. (D. C.) 280.

² Ante, § 485 et seq.

³ Murray v. Blackledge, 71 N. C. 492; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. McBratney, 12 Kan. 9.

⁴ See §§ 58, 184a.

⁵ 2d ed., Boston, 1883, § 98 et seq.

⁶ Curd v. Lackland, 43 Mo. 139; Wynn v. Cory, 43 Mo. 301; Gray v. Payne, 43 Mo. 203; Bobb v. Woodward, 42 Mo. 482; Peyton v. Rose, 41 Mo. 257; Magwire v. Tyler, 47 Mo. 115; Eaton v. Smith, 19 Wis. 537; Gillett v. Treganza, 13 Wis. 472; Henderson v. Dickey, 50 Mo. 161; Emeric v. Penniman, 26 Cal. 119; case of Phillips v. Gorham, in the New York Court of Appeals,¹ does not appear to us, as Professor Pomeroy seems to think, to be in conflict with the decisions cited above. It merely decides that, in an action to recover possession, the plaintiff may attack a deed under which the defendant claims title, both on legal and equitable grounds. The parties were not deprived of a trial by jury. This case was followed and approved by the New York Court of Appeals in the subsequent cases of Lattin v. McCarty,² and Sheehan v. Hamilton.³ It is difficult to understand why, when an equitable defense is interposed to an action of ejectment, the plaintiff is not as much entitled to this right of trial by jury as the defendant is when the plaintiff attempts to recover on an equitable title. We have already seen that the defendant cannot change the nature of the plaintiff's cause of action by interposing an equitable defense.⁴

On the whole it would seem as if when the plaintiff, as in the case of Phillips v. Gorham,⁵ could have his equities adjusted and his legal rights passed upon in the same suit, the fact of his being clothed at the commencement of the proceeding with a merely equitable title, is no objection to his ultimate recovery in ejectment; but even here the defendant is entitled to a jury trial of all issues properly legal, and hence issues of this character must be sent to a jury. In some cases it may be impossible to try in one suit all the questions involved. Thus the holder of an equitable title may have the right to a patent from the government, or to a deed from his vendor. These rights, generally speaking, he can only enforce by a direct proceeding instituted for the purpose of clothing himself with the legal title. He cannot maintain ejectment against one holding the patent title, or to secure a deed from his vendor, perhaps because his right to a patent or deed cannot be

Clark v. Lockwood, 21 Cal. 222; Hartley v. Brown, 46 Cal. 201; Buhne v. Chism, 48 Cal. 467; Suttle v. R. F. & P. R. R. Co., 76 Va. 284.

¹ 17 N. Y. 270.

² 41 N. Y. 107.

³ 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 211.

⁴ See § 488.

⁵ 17 N. Y. 270.

established collaterally. Further than this, without the right to immediate possession, no action of ejectment can ever be maintained, and possession is the usual incident of the legal title. Thus, where the title is in trustees, the inability of the cestui que trust to maintain the action is very often independent of the question of procedure.

§ 791. Strength of plaintiff's title.—There is no rule more frequently invoked and applied in cases involving land titles, than that the plaintiff must recover in ejectment upon the strength of his own title.¹ The petitioner or plaintiff in a petitory action² or a writ of entry³ is governed by the same rule. This rule is a canon of the common law which has never been questioned, however much its meaning may have been misunderstood. The application of the principle is not to be understood as requiring the plaintiff at the outset, in making out his title, to trace the chain back to the first grantor, but only that so much of his title shall be exhibited as will put the defendant to proof of a title superior to a mere naked possession.⁴ Thus the possession of the ancestor at the time of his death, under color of title, is sufficient evidence, prima facie, to support ejectment by the heir.⁵ The rule in ejectment that the plaintiff must recover if at all on the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of that of his adversary, is held not to apply to possessory actions for mining claims, where neither party has, strictly speaking, any legal title, and where the prior possession of plaintiff is pitted against the present possession of the defendant.⁶ Practically the real question involved in all such cases is ; which, as against the other, has the better right to mine the land in question ?⁷

¹ Wallace v. Swinton, 64 N. Y. 188, 192 ; Roe v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2484, 2487, per Lord Mansfield ; Hurley v. Street, 29 Iowa, 429 ; Bradley v. Ewart, 18 W. Va. 598 ; Becker v. Howard, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 423.

² Winchester v. Cain, 1 Rob. (La.) 421 ; Gilmer v. Poindexter, 10 How. 257, 267.

³ Miller v. Ewer, 27 Me. 509.

⁴ Hartley v. Ferrell, 9 Fla. 375.

⁵ Wheeler v. Ladd, 40 Ark. 108.

⁶ Strepy v. Stark, 7 Col. 614, 621.

⁷ Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 339.

§ 792. Facts entitling plaintiff to recovery.—In order to maintain an action of ejectment the plaintiff must first prove title in himself, or the right to immediate possession at the time of commencing the suit. This right must exist at the time the suit is instituted; a right of possession prior or subsequent to that time will not avail. Plaintiff must then prove that possession was unlawfully withheld at the time. A failure to prove either of these essential elements will defeat the action.¹ If the plaintiff derives title from the State, inasmuch as the possession of the State is always held to accompany its title, it is not necessary for him to show any actual possession until some adverse title is shown. But in every other case the plaintiff must show an actual possession in himself, or in some person under whom he claims; otherwise he cannot maintain the action, and the defendant will be entitled to a nonsuit or verdict as the practice of the court may require.² A deed is not in itself evidence of title. As the execution and delivery of a deed is no proof of title in the grantor, the claimant of title can never rest upon the mere production of a deed.³ There must be evidence of the grantor's possession.⁴ It is also to be observed that while the plaintiff may, if he please, prove a mere prima facie title, or a very low degree of title, he must introduce his whole evidence under it; for it is only when the defendant has offered evidence in disproof of this title that the claimant can give evidence in reply. The most common instance of a plaintiff being allowed to recover on a very low degree of title is that of a possessor obtaining a verdict against an intruder. There the plaintiff may rest without tracing title to any acknowledged source.⁵

¹ Ante, § 236, and cases cited; Herbert v. King, 1 Mont. 475; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 303.

² Graves v. Amoskeag Co., 44 N. H. 462; Clarke v. Diggs, 6 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 159.

³ Smith v. Lawrence, 12 Mich. 431.

⁴ Miller v. Downing, 54 N. Y. 631; see Chap. XXVII.

⁵ Cole on Ejectment, 213, 300; Burt v. Panjaud, 99 U. S. 180. See Chap. XXVII. It has been held in Tennessee, that a sheriff's deed, sustained by judgment, execution and sale will authorize a verdict against the execution debtor in possession. This is founded on the presumption that the debtor had a legal estate subject to levy and sale. Consequently in such a case, the plaintiff would only have to show the § 793. Title by execution.—If the plaintiff relies on title derived from a sheriff's sale, two classes of cases are mentioned in the books; first, those in which he brings ejectment against the execution defendant; and second, those in which the action is against a stranger to the judicial proceedings under which the title is derived. In the former case, although there are authorities holding the contrary, it is enough for the plaintiff to show the execution and proceedings under it;¹ but if the defendant is not a party or privy to these proceedings, a valid judgment must be proved.² In a controversy between a purchaser and the execution debtor, it is not necessary to show title in the debtor at the time of the sale, but this is not the rule as against a person other than the execution debtor.³ Thus, when the plaintiff as purchaser under the execution sale brings ejectment against one claiming under the execution defendant, on the ground that the defendant's title is void as against creditors, the judgment on which the execution issued is not conclusive evidence that the plaintiff was a creditor as against the defendant, the latter not having had any notice of it, and not being privy to it.⁴ The cases on this subject are not harmonious, and the limits of our space forbid us to do more than to briefly refer to a few of them. With regard to the burden of proof, it has been held that where a party relies on a sheriff's deed, it is only necessary to prove the execution sale and the deed, and either establish title in the defendant, or possession subsequent to the rendition of the judgment; and the burden of proof is thereby cast upon the opposite party.⁵ In North Carolina it is said to be the rule that when the purchaser at the sheriff's sale is the plaintiff in the execution, in an action by him to recover the land purchased, it is incumbent upon him to show both a judgment and execution, but if debtor's possession and the subsequent proceedings to divest his title. Kimbrough v. Benton, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 129.

¹ 2 Greenl. Ev. § 316, and cases cited; Rutherford v. Raburn, 10 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 144; McKee v. Lineberger, 87 N. C. 181.

² Tebbets v. Estes, 52 Me. 566; Cauly v. Blue, 62 Ala. 77.

³ Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 181; Roper on Jud. Sales, § 1078 et seq.

⁴ Inman v. Mead, 97 Mass. 310.

⁵ Hartley v. Ferrell, 9 Fla. 374; Whatley v. Newsom, 10 Ga. 74.

the purchaser is not the plaintiff in the execution he need only prove the execution.¹ It was argued in the case of Cooper v. Galbraith,² that the defendant might controvert the execution title by showing that it was, at the time of the sale, of an equitable character and that he relinquished the possession and afterwards re-entered. This was on the ground that the decisions holding that such a title could not be controverted by the judgment debtor or those claiming under him, rested on the theory that the relations of the parties were similar to those of a landlord and a tenant holding over, and that relinquishment and subsequent re-entry would destroy the privity between them. But it was held that he could not relieve himself of the estoppel by any such device. The case of *Carson v. Boudinot*³ was distinguished by the court from the case at bar, as that was ejectment brought by the purchaser of a mere equity, not against the debtor but against the owner of the legal estate under whom the debtor claimed an equitable title. A number of cases with regard to making title under execution are collected below; and it may be advisable to add that the force and effect of the muniments of title in these cases is frequently regulated by statute.⁴

§ 794. Title by judicial record.—When the title rests upon a judgment or decree the rules governing the admissibility of such records in other actions control. It is usually necessary to prove the whole record, but this is by no means always essential.⁵ In the recent case of Wilson v. Spring,⁶ the Supreme Court of Arkansas had occasion

¹ McKee v. Lineberger, 87 N. C. 181.

² 3 Wash. 546.

³ 2 Wash. 33.

⁴ Splahn v. Gillespie, 48 Ind. 397; Carpenter v. Doe, 2 Ind. 465; White v. Cronkhite, 35 Ind. 483; Mercer v. Doe, 6 Ind. 80; Lewis v. Phillips, 17 Ind. 108; Evans v. Ashby, 22 Ind. 15; Comparet v. Hanna, 34 Ind. 74; Armstrong v. Jackson, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 210; Frakes v. Brown, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 295; Burke v. Tregre, 22 La. Ann. 629; Davis v. Wilcoxon, 5 La. Ann. 583; Mithoff v. Dewees, 9 La. Ann. 550; Miller v. Wilson, 32 Md. 297; Matter of Smith, 4 Nev. 254; Lenox v. Clarke, 52 Mo. 115; Hughes v. Watt, 26 Ark. 228; Fischer v. Eslaman, 68 Ill. 78; Boatright v. Porter's Heirs, 32 Ga. 130. As to the effect of the recitals in a sheriff's deed, see Rorer on Jud. Sales (2d ed.), §§ 1011 et seq.

⁵ 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 510, 511.

⁶ 38 Ark. 181.

to consider this subject. The plaintiff's title rested on a decree in chancery, of which a certified copy was produced. All the original records in the case had been destroyed by fire. The court held that the certified copy was admissible on this ground, but added: "A decree which proprio vigore vests title, seems, in our State, to stand in the place of a deed from one party to the other, or of a commissioner's deed on a sale duly confirmed. It operates in rem, as it were, upon property within its jurisdiction. It cannot be collaterally attacked for irregularity in the proceedings, if it be in a case where jurisdiction has attached to the property, and the persons to be affected. The recitals in it, of notice to the person, are evidence of the fact, and the court has general jurisdiction of all the lands in the county. The decree itself is a muniment of title, and may be recorded as such in the Recorder's office, without the accompanying proceedings.¹ The rule requiring the introduction of whole records, where jurisdiction has been established, seems, from the reasons usually given, to have been directed to cases in which a judgment was offered as an estoppel as to some facts or conditions necessary to be established in order to sustain it, and was for the purpose of showing by the pleadings and proceedings what facts were really in issue. It can have no reasonable application to a case where a decree proprio vigore establishes the status of property, as to ownership, and binds all parties to the suit in that regard, wholly regardless of what the previous proceedings may have been. That is the case now in judgment. What good purpose could the rest of the record serve? The decree is, in any case, admissible to show that it was rendered, and the law gives it effect until reversed or shown to be void. Its recitals show prima facie that there was jurisdiction, and it can only be voidable. Its effects, until reversed, are the same, whether the proceedings were regular or irregular, whatever may have been the course of pleading or the nature of proof. Why, then, in such cases, impose upon the litigant the expense of procuring a voluminous record? or upon the court the trouble and delay of examining it, when in any event the effect of the decree in divesting and investing title would be the same?"¹

¹ Citing Gantt's Digest, Laws of Ark. § 3642.

§ 795. Title by relation.—Whenever in actions to try title it becomes necessary to advance the ends of justice to treat a title as vesting at some date different from the time when it vested by operation of law, this is said to be accomplished by relation. The doctrine of relation is a fiction of law adopted solely for the purpose of furthering the ends of justice, and is only applied for the security and protection of persons who stand in privity with the person who initiated proceedings for the land, and acquired the equitable claim or title.² The limitation of its operation is that it shall do no wrong to strangers,³ and in Florida, and probably wherever ejectment cannot be brought except upon a legal title vested at the time of commencing the suit, the plaintiff cannot by relation avail himself of an after-acquired title.⁴

§ 796. Ejectment founded on a forfeiture.—When ejectment is founded on an alleged forfeiture of an estate, for breach of condition, or otherwise, the general rule is, that clauses of re-entry are to be construed strictly.⁵ It has been said in England that clauses of re-entry in leases, however, should be construed like ordinary contracts,⁶ and that the distinction between freeholds and chattel interests, with respect to the effect of conditions, is that the freeholds can only be determined by the entry of the lessor on the condition broken, but that the breaking of the condition determines the chattel interest. There is no doubt that in such cases the onus probandi is thrown upon the landlord to establish a breach of condition, be-

¹ Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 181, 187.

² Spratt v. Rice, 18 Fla. 289, 310; citing Lynch v. Bernal, 9 Wall. 315; Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 230; Heath v. Ross, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 140.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Paul v. Fries, 18 Fla. 573. See §§ 454c, 495, 541. By the doctrine of relation an escheat grant relates back to the original grant. Casey's Lessee v. Inloes, 1 Gill (Md.), 430, 507.

⁵ Doe d. Palk v. Marchetti, 1 B. & Adol. 715, 720. See §§ 367, 368.

⁶ Doe d. Davis v. Elsam, Moody and M. 189.

fore the defendant need show performance.¹ A forfeiture of any kind must be established by a direct proceeding. Thus, in an action of ejectment, the plaintiff, a corporation, made out an unquestioned prima facie title and continued occupation for twenty years prior to the defendant's entry. Defendant claimed under a tax title. It appeared that the property of the company was by law exempted from taxation, and it was argued for the defendant that the company had forfeited its title for non-user, thus making the sale and tax title good. But the Supreme Court held that such a forfeiture could only be established by a direct proceeding on the part of the public authorities, and could not be brought up collaterally in this action.²

§ 797. Title by part performance.—Statute of frauds.—Although, as a general rule, under the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, contracts for the sale of interests in land must be in writing, in case of part performance under an oral contract, and a fortiori of a full performance, a right to an interest in land may be acquired without any written evidence whatever.³ The title thus acquired is an equitable one, resting, as has been variously held, on fraud, estoppel, and the impossibility of restoring the parties to their original position. Being equitable in its nature, it is ordinarily not sufficient to support ejectment, though it may be interposed as a defense. In Pennsylvania, where equitable ejectment by the vendee is allowed, and where an action of ejectment upon an equitable title is a substitute for a bill in equity for specific performance, the verdict and judgment have all the conclusive effect of a decree in chancery. In a recent leading case in that State this principle was applied in the case of a title by part performance, and it was held that one action, where the defense consisted of such a title, was conclusive.⁴ As between the

¹ Doe d. Palk v. Marchetti, 1 B. & Adol. 720; Doe v. Robson, 2 C. & P. 245. Compare Woolley v. Newcombe, 87 N. Y. 605.

² Mackall v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co., 94 U. S. 308. See § 184*a*.

³ See § 321*a*; Reed on the Statute of Frauds, Chaps. XXIV–XXX; Eberly v. Lehman, 100 Pa. St. 542; Miller v. Ball, 64 N. Y. 286.

⁴ Winpenny v. Winpenny, 92 Pa. St. 441; s. c. 7 W. N. C. (Pa.) 112, 114.

parties, title by part performance vests from the time of the contract and not from the performance of those acts which remove the bar created by the statute.¹

§ 798. Title by parol gift.—Under the same head as the foregoing fall what are commonly called gifts—oral transfers of land. The evidence of such contracts, especially between parent and child, generally requires close scrutiny, for it is by no means uncommon to place children in possession of land without any intention of effecting a change of title.² In Moore v. Small,³ it is said that such contracts are not, properly speaking, gifts, because, as in the case of all other agreements, there must be a consideration, and that a chancellor would treat evidence of “parol gift” as “rubbish.” The learned court added: “It is true, the consideration may be in a prejudice to the vendee, as well as in a benefit to the vendor. And if it be said that a son, who goes upon land under a promise of a conveyance from his father, and expends his labor and money in making valuable improvements which cannot be reasonably compensated, is entitled to a decree of conveyance, it is because he is a purchaser for a valuable consideration.” But this appears to be merely another way of saying that if it would be an injustice to the donee not to uphold the transfer, the conveyance will be excepted from the statute.

§ 798a. Title by estoppel.—Ejectment may even be maintained on a title by estoppel. Thus, in Stoddard v. Chambers,⁴ the Supreme Court of the United States supported an action where the plaintiff’s claim was derived from a conveyance made when the grantor had not the legal title. He afterwards acquired this title, which inured to those claiming under him by way of estoppel, and the court laid it down that “on a title by estoppel, an action of ejectment may be maintained.” This is probably to be confined, however, to cases when the estoppel is by deed or record.

¹ Mactier v. Frith, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 112.

² Shellhammer v. Ashbaugh, 83 Pa. St. 28; Edwards v. Morgan, 100 Pa. St. 330; Willis v. Matthews, 46 Tex. 482; Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34.

³ 19 Pa. St. 461, 469.

⁴ 2 How. 284, 317.

It is difficult to see how ejectment could be supported resting solely on a mere equitable estoppel in pais.¹

§ 799. Order of proof.—Where the real question in controversy appears to be in regard to the title solely, the onus of establishing a good title rests upon the plaintiff, and he may usually commence with any part of his evidence, and is not compelled to pursue any particular order of proof in tracing his title.² But the testimony as proposed must appear to be pertinent to the matter in controversy, or be accompanied by an offer to show its relevancy in the progress of the cause.³ And this privilege of the plaintiff is always exercised subject to the discretion of the court.⁴

§ 800. Burden of proof.—It is necessary for the plaintiff to deduce title from some source before he can recover, and until he shows a paramount title the defendant is entitled to a verdict, and this without producing the evidence on which his right is based.⁵ Possession is always either regarded as prima facie evidence of title or as a species of title itself, and a party cannot be deprived of possession by any one but the lawful owner. This is but another way of stating that the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title and not upon the weakness of that of his adversary.⁶ Even against a mere trespasser the plaintiff must show prior possession.⁷ In a suit by the State or government the same rule prevails. In a leading New York case, in which the subject was carefully considered,⁸ it was insisted, as we have already shown,⁹ that the people were presumptively owners of all the lands in the State, and that, therefore, in an action of ejectment, they were entitled to a verdict on showing the defendant in posses-

¹ See Big. on Estoppel, 328. See, also, Chap. XXXII.

² Langley v. Jones, 26 Md. 462. See Caton v. Carter, 9 G. & J. (Md.) 476.

³ Warner v. Hardy, 6 Md. 538.

⁴ McKee v. Lineberger, 87 N. C. 181.

⁵ Henry v. Reichert, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 394; Cobb v. Lavalle, 89 Ill. 331; Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 168.

⁶ Boylan ads. Meeker, 28 N. J. Law, 297; Love v. Simms, 9 Wheat. 515; Jackson v. Harrington, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 86; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 331.

⁷ See § 718.

⁸ People v. Trinity Church, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 537; s. c. on appeal, 22 N. Y. 44.

⁹ See § 192.

sion, or, in other words, that in such a suit the burden of proof was always on the defendant. But the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals both decided that there was no such presumption in favor of the people until it was shown that possession had been vacant within the statutory period.

§ 801. Right to begin and reply.—The right to begin and reply depends upon the question of the burden of proof, and as to this, the general rule is that the burden lies at first on the party against whom the judgment of the court would be given if no evidence were introduced on either side.¹ In ejectment the plaintiff is generally entitled to begin, because the onus lies on him to prove his title. But the defendant will be allowed to begin upon admitting the whole of the plaintiff's case, and relying upon a totally distinct title.² The admission must not stop short of this point. Thus, when plaintiff claims under a will and the defendant under another will of later date, the plaintiff is still entitled to begin, because an admission of the will under which the plaintiff claims, without admitting it to be the testator's last will, is insufficient.³ As a general rule, the right to reply is incident to the right to begin; but this general rule is subject to exceptions; thus, where in ejectment the lessor, claiming as heir-at-law, proved his pedigree and stopped, and the defendant, claiming as devisee, set up a new case, which the lessor of the plaintiff answered by evidence, it was held that the defendant was entitled to the general reply.⁴

§ 802. Production of title papers.—While there is no rule or practice in the common law action of ejectment, which would authorize the court to compel counsel for plaintiff to produce his client's title papers to enable defendant to make out his defense,⁵ yet where the object of the request for a production of a title deed is to enable a party to show

¹ 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; Stephen's Dig. Ev. Art. 95; Younge v. Guilbeau, 3 Wall. 636; Cox v. Cock, 59 Tex. 521; Smith v. Hutchinson, 108 Ill. 662.

² Cole on Eject. p. 284, and cases cited.

³ Doe d. Bather v. Brayne, 5 C. B. 655.

⁴ Goodtitle v. Braham, 4 T. R. 497.

⁵ Davis v. Davis, 47 Ga. 81.

it to be a forgery, the rule is otherwise.¹ This matter is sometimes provided for by statute.

§ 803. Common source of title.—Both at law and in equity the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title, but this does not mean that he must show a good title against all the world. It is enough that he shows a right to recover against the defendant. Thus, whenever plaintiff and defendant both derive title from the same source, the plaintiff usually need not go behind this source to prove his title.² Some doubt exists as to how far this rule extends. It is obviously sufficient, in order to make a prima facie case, to prove derivation of title from the common source;³ but it may be essential to go behind the common source. Hence, it is held that the rule is not strictly an estoppel, though often spoken of as such, but a rule of justice and convenience adopted by the courts to relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of going behind the common source.⁴ Where the defendant can show a better title outstanding, and has acquired it, the rule ceases to apply.⁵ When the defendant is allowed to impeach the common source of title he must establish that he himself has acquired a superior title, and except to this extent he is not permitted to invoke the rule that the defendant can defeat the plaintiff by showing a better title in a third person.⁶ But it is held in New York that, if the defendant's

¹ Faircloth v. Jordan, 15 Ga. 511.

² Gaines v. New Orleans, 6 Wall. 642, 715, and cases cited; Garrett v. Lyle, 27 Ala. 589; Mickey v. Stratton, 5 Sawyer, 475; Brown v. Brown, 45 Mo. 414; Fellows v. Wise, 49 Mo. 350; Butcher v. Rogers, 60 Mo. 140; Eagle Woolen Mills Co. v. Monteith, 2 Oregon, 282; Ames v. Beckley, 48 Vt. 395; Hecht v. Boughton, 2 Wyoming, 368; 2 Greenleaf's Ev. § 307; Barton v. Erickson, 14 Neb. 164; Gilliam v. Bird, 8 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 280; Ives v. Sawyer, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 51; Copeland v. Sauls, 1 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 70; Thomas v. Kelly, 1 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 375; Feimster v. McRorie, 1 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 547; Henry v. Reichert, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 394; Bigelow on Estoppel, 283; Roosevelt v. Hungate (Supr. Ct. of Ill.), 6 Legal Adviser, 48; Wolfe v. Doe d. Dowell, 21 Miss. 103; Whissenhunt v. Jones, 78 N. C. 361.

³ Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381; Miller v. Hardin, 64 Mo. 545; Brown v. Brown, 45 Mo. 412; Doe v. Pritchard, 19 Miss. 327; Ketchum v. Schicketanz, 73 Ind. 137; Riddle v. Murphy, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 230, 235; Barton v. Erickson, 14 Neb. 164; Conger v. Converse, 9 Iowa, 554.

⁴ Johnson v. Watts, 1 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 228; Frey v. Ramsour, 66 N. C. 466; Christenbury v. King, 85 N. C. 229.

⁵ Christenbury v. King, 85 N. C. 229; Caldwell v. Neely, 81 N. C. 114; Copeland v. Sauls, 1 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 70; Johnson v. Watts, 1 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 228.

⁶ Thomas v. Kelly, 1 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 375; Feimster v. McRorie, 1 Jones' evidence shows that the common grantor had no title whatever, this is fatal to plaintiff's recovery.¹ And where the plaintiff unnecessarily goes behind the common grantor, and some link in the previous chain of title is defective, this is immaterial.² The rule in ejectment holds good in the ordinary action of trespass.³ The rule, that neither party can deny the title of him under whom they both claim, extends to a defendant who claims as a purchaser at a judicial sale, and is said to apply even when the plaintiff himself shows title in a third person.⁴ Where the plaintiff is himself the common source, it has been held that the burden of proof devolves upon the defendant at once.⁵

§ 804. Evidence of reputation.—Speaking generally, as to all such public matters as the boundaries of manors, counties, municipalities, rights of common, and public highways, the declarations of deceased persons are admissible, while as to matters of private interest they are not competent. This is on the ground that a trustworthy reputation may arise from the discussions, conversations and disputes of many parties unconnected with each other, all having a common interest in the subject, while as to private matters no such reputation is likely to arise.⁶ Thus in Morewood v. Wood,⁷ Lord Kenyon said: "Evidence of reputation upon general points is receivable, because all mankind being interested therein, it is natural to suppose that they may be conversant with the subjects, and that they should discourse together about them, having all the same means

(N. C.) Law, 547; Barwick v. Wood, 3 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 306; Brown v. Smith, 8 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 331; Love v. Gates, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 363; Norwood v. Marrow, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Law, 442. See Moseley v. Moseley, 15 N. Y. 334.

¹ Henry v. Reichert, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 394.

² Merchants Bank of St. L. v. Harrison, 39 Mo. 433.

³ McBurney v. Cutler, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 203, 207.

⁴ Feinster v. McRorie, 1 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 547; Gilliam v. Bird, 8 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 280; Murphy v. Barnett, 2 Murph. (N. C.) 251.

⁵ Brown v. Brown, 45 Mo. 413.

⁶ Reg. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535; Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 919; Butler v. Mountgarret, 7 H. L. Cas. 633; Boardman v. Reed, 6 Pet. 328; 1 Whart. Ev., § 185; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 412; Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. 151; Toole v. Peterson, 9 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 180; Shook v. Pate, 50 Ala. 91; Cox v. State, 41 Tex. 1; Child v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 47.

⁷ 14 East, 329.

of information. But how can this apply to private titles? . . . How is it possible for strangers to know anything of what concerns only these private titles?"

§ 805. Reputation as to private boundaries.—In many of the United States the rule that evidence of reputation must relate to matters of public or common interest is said to have been departed from by admitting the same evidence as to private boundaries.¹ Thus, in Sasser v. Herring,² the Supreme Court of North Carolina says: "We have, in questions of boundary, given to the single declarations of a deceased individual, as to a line or corner, the weight of common reputation." Evidently this is not, properly speaking, evidence of reputation at all, and the language with regard to such evidence used by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hunnicut v. Peyton, is peculiarly appropriate. "They [the declarations] are not to be confounded with proof of reputation,—proof of what the community thought, believed or said. As repeated by the witness, they were mere hearsay, the unsworn declarations of a deceased person respecting a particular fact not of a public nature. We do not question that such declarations of reputation respecting ancient public boundaries are admissible, and they have sometimes been admitted in controversies respecting private boundaries. But they are admissible in only a limited class of cases,—a class much more limited than that in which such evidence is offered to prove reputation of public boundaries. Proof of reputation is open to rebuttal by witnesses. Not so with declarations of a particular fact respecting a private boundary. They are, therefore, receivable only when made coincidently with pointing out the boundaries and generally as part of the res gestæ."³ Referring to the apparently conflicting decisions the court lays down the following as to the general

¹ Hunnicut v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333; Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 649, 666; Hurt v. Evans, 49 Tex. 311; Sasser v. Herring, 3 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 340; Kinney v. Farnsworth, 17 Conn. 355. See a number of other cases cited in 1 Greenl. Ev., § 145.

² 3 Dev. (N. C.) Law, 340, 342.

³ Hunnicut v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 363.

conclusion to which they point: "In questions of private boundary, declarations of particular facts, as distinguished from reputation, made by deceased persons, are not admissible unless they were made by persons who, it is shown, had knowledge of that whereof they spoke, and who were on the land, or in possession of it when the declarations were made;" i. e., "they must have been made when the declarant was pointing out or marking the boundaries or discharging some duties relating thereto." And the court declares the decisions of the Supreme Court of Texas, from which the case came up, not to be in conflict with this rule. It seems in many cases to have been overlooked, that the common law rule restricting evidence of reputation to matters of public interest, i. e., to matters in which a considerable number of people have a direct interest, is not an arbitrary one, for about a really private matter there can hardly be evidence of reputation at all. Boundaries in the United States being generally run under public surveys, must often come within the spirit if not the letter of the common law rule, and in a newly settled country, as has been said by some of the courts, there was, of necessity, a certain relaxation of the old rule. Again in England, the absence of recording acts, and the fact that title deeds are not accessible to strangers, and that the boundaries of private lands are generally not dependent upon public surveys laying down lines and corners in which large numbers of people have a common interest, make evidence of reputation as to a private boundary out of the question. In Massachusetts, where the subject has received a good deal of attention, the rule has been laid down that evidence of reputation as to private boundaries in which no considerable number of persons have any legal interest cannot be received. Declarations as to boundaries constituting part of the res gestæ stand, in that State as elsewhere, on an entirely different footing.¹

¹ Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483; Hall v. Mayo, 97 Mass. 416; Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 80; Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray (Mass.), 174; Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 414. See these cases considered by Mr. S. G. Croswell, the editor of the 14th edition of Greenleaf. 1 Greenl. Ev., 194, note a.

§ 806. Conclusions from the cases.—After examining a great number of cases on this point, we are inclined to believe that the following general conclusions may be relied upon :

First. Many American cases will be found in which it is said, that evidence of reputation is admissible to establish private boundaries. In most of these the remarks of the court are obiter, and the cases were actually rested on different grounds.¹

Second. In a multitude of cases the evidence has been rejected by the courts, and in these, of course, the general language on the subject is of little weight.

Third. The courts have frequently failed to discriminate carefully between declarations which were part of the res gestæ or declarations against interest, and evidence of reputation.

Fourth. Inasmuch as there can be no evidence of reputation, except where a considerable number of persons are at least cognizant of the subject-matter of the dispute, the true rule would seem to be that laid down by the Massachusetts Supreme Court already referred to.²

Fifth. Owing to the peculiar land system of this country, in all the new States and territories, the lines and corners of public surveys, are actually matters in which large numbers of people have a common interest, and in which, on principle, evidence of reputation, where these lines and corners serve as private boundaries, ought to be admitted.³

§ 807. Particular facts.—It is frequently said that evidence of reputation is not admissible as to particular facts of a private nature,⁴ but this seems to be merely a different way of expressing the general rule. If the fact relates to matters in which a large number of persons have a pecuniary interest or stake, a true reputation may grow up con-

¹ E. g., see the New Hampshire cases, Shepherd v. Thompson, 4 N. H. 213 ; Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412, 437 ; Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 230, 237.

² Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483.

³ A strictly private question may be so involved with a public one, however, that it is impossible to sever them, and in this case the evidence cannot be excluded. Reg. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535.

⁴ Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. 151.

cerning it; otherwise not.¹ All evidence, even that of reputation, must relate to particular facts. The question as to a boundary, or as to the lines and corners and monuments which make up a boundary, must relate to particular facts. In Shutte v. Thompson,² the court refused to admit evidence respecting the reputation in a neighborhood as to a "poplar corner," unless it was derived from ancient sources, and traditionary in its character. This ruling was sustained by the Supreme Court, but the fact that it related to a particular tree could not have been a reason for excluding it. Evidence of reputation as to particular trees or stumps being the corners called for seems to be regarded as admissible.³ In Fraser v. Hunter,⁴ the court permitted a witness to be asked whether "Hall's Spring" was generally called "The Head of Long Branch," this being one of the calls of a patent, while refusing to permit her to be asked whether the spring was one generally reported to be on land of the plaintiff's, and at the same time permitting the question to be put: "Do you know, by general reputation, any of the lines or boundaries or corners of Mr. Walter Alexander's land?"

§ 808. Declaration of deceased owner as to boundary.—In a recent case⁵ the Court of Appeals of West Virginia has examined the question of the admissibility of declarations of deceased owners of lands as to boundaries, and reached the conclusion, on a review of several cases,⁶ that such declarations stand on the footing of any others, and that if the owner had no interest to misrepresent they are admissible, otherwise not. Declarations by a party in possession that he has paid for the land, or that the title has been vested in him by deed, are not admissible,⁷ and the cases may perhaps be reconciled by the following con-

¹ 1 Greenl. Ev., § 138.

² 15 Wall. 151.

³ Murray v. Spencer, 88 N. C. 357; Icehour v. Rives, 10 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 256.

⁴ 5 Cranch's C. C. 470.

⁵ Corbleys v. Ripley, 22 W. Va. 154.

⁶ Chapman v. Edmands, 3 Allen (Mass.), 512; Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 414; Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412; Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 230; Caufman v. Cong. of Cedar Spring, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 59.

⁷ Feig v. Meyers, 102 Penn. St. 10.

sideration, viz.: that declarations regarding the character and extent of possession (boundaries) are frequently against interest, or at least unbiassed, while declarations of the other species are manifestly in the nature of interested assertions.¹ A recent New Hampshire case illustrates the difference between declarations by a deceased owner in his own favor and those against his interest.² It was held that declarations made after the execution of a deed, and not part of the res gestæ, were inadmissible if tending to impeach the title created by the deed, but admissible if tending to support it.

§ 809. Statements of deceased grantor—A deceased person's statements are not admissible in favor of the heir or executor, unless some rule of evidence would admit them in favor of the decedent if living, as for instance the rule of res gestæ.³

§ 810. Statements qualifying possession.—Res gestæ.—In Tennessee it is said that if a party make a deed, and retain possession inconsistently with its terms, his statements in explanation of his possession may be received as part of the res gestæ; but that it is otherwise where his possession is consistent with the terms of the deed.⁴

§ 811. Declarations as part of the res gestæ.—Professor Greenleaf in his Treatise on Evidence suggests that there is no reason why every declaration accompanying the acts of possession, whether in disparagement of the claimant's title or otherwise qualifying his possession, if made in good faith, should not be received as part of the res gestæ, leaving its effect to be governed by other rules of evidence.⁵ Such, we believe, to be the general tendency of the somewhat divergent rules laid down in the different States on this subject. Thus it is said in Massachusetts, that the declarations of "ancient persons" deceased at the time of trial, made while in possession of land owned by

¹ See further, Quinn v. Eagleston, 108 Ill. 248.

² Perkins v. Towle, 59 N. H. 583.

³ Kenney v. Phillipy, 91 Ind. 511.

⁴ Williamson v. Williams, 11 Lea (Tenn.), 355.

⁵ 1 Greenl. Ev. § 109.

them, pointing out the boundaries on the land itself are admissible, where nothing appears to show that they were interested to misrepresent in thus pointing out their boundaries; and it need not appear affirmatively that the declarations were made against interest.¹ And the rule, as suggested by Greenleaf, seems to prevail in Pennsylvania and New York.²

§ 812. Pedigree and family facts.—Questions relating to pedigree, and what are called family facts, of necessity, frequently arise in actions to try title, and it is well settled that such matters may be proved by declarations, both of general facts and of reputation.³ The rules governing the introduction of such evidence is, however, substantially the same in all classes of cases. We may suggest that what we have already said with regard to evidence of particular facts in boundary cases is applicable here.⁴ The general fact to be established in the one case is the boundary line; in the other that of a line of succession. Reputation as to the line itself, its corners, angles, distances, etc., in the one case bears an analogy to reputation as to birth, death or marriage in the other, and the distinction sometimes made that “particular facts,” though not admissible to prove a boundary, are admissible to prove pedigree,⁵ seems without foundation. The evidence admitted as to family facts may rest on a variety of grounds. It may consist of declarations of deceased persons as to reputation in the family; it may consist of declarations against interest, it may come in as part of the res gestæ. It is generally difficult and often impossible to discriminate between these, one ground of admission being usually complicated with another. Sir James Stephen, in his Digest of the Law of Evidence, gives three cases in which declarations as to pedigree are inad-

¹ Wood v. Foster, 8 Allen (Mass.), 24; Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 414.

² Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Penn. St. 333; Abeel v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513; Swettenham v. Leary, 18 Hun (N. Y.), 284.

³ Cuddy v. Brown, 78 Ill. 415; 1 Greenl. Ev. 103 et seq.; 1 Wharton's Ev. 201 et seq.

⁴ Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Campb. 415, Mansfield, J.

⁵ 1 Whart. Ev. § 209.

missible. First, they are not admissible unless the pedigree is itself in issue; second, they are not admissible if the declarant is neither a blood relation to the person whom they concern, nor the husband or wife of such a relation; third, they must be made before the question in relation to which they are to be proved has arisen (though not considered irrelevant because made for the purpose of preventing the question from arising).¹

Sir James Stephen supports the first of these exceptions by a reference only to the nisi prius case of Whittuck v. Waters.² The report does not show anything more than that a witness was not allowed to prove a death by testifying that he "had heard in the family that the person was dead"—evidence manifestly inadmissible. On the other hand, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided, after full consideration, that no such rule exists as that suggested by Sir James Stephen. In Inhabitants of North Brookfield v. Inhabitants of Warren,³ the issue was the settlement of a pauper. The legitimacy of the father of the pauper became a material fact, and to prove this the date of the death of a certain person became important. The court admitted a family document and inscription as on a tombstone (this stands on the same footing with declarations) to prove this fact, and used the following language: "It is not denied that this evidence would have been competent, if it had been introduced to prove a fact directly in issue, such, for instance, as the date of the pauper's birth; but it is contended that it was inadmissible to establish a fact collateral in its nature, from which the main fact in issue was to be deduced by inference. But we know of no such distinction in the rules of evidence. The competency of proof cannot be made to depend on the inference or conclusion which is ¹ Declarations as to age, residence, or place of birth, are not properly declarations as to pedigree. In a case involving a question of pedigree, these would be inadmissible under the rules as to particular facts suggested in the case of boundaries. Adams v. Swansea, 116 Mass. 591; Wilmington v. Burlington, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 174; Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 416; Roe v. Doe d. Neal, Dudley (Ga.), 168; Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 216, 229, and numerous cases cited.

² 4 C. & P. 475.

³ 16 Gray (Mass.), 171.

sought to be drawn from it. If it is competent to prove a particular fact in controversy when it is directly in issue, it is equally competent when the same fact is to be established in order to form the ground of an inference or presumption from which the material subject of inquiry can be deduced. The true test is, to inquire whether the evidence is admissible to prove the fact which it is offered to establish, and not whether such fact is directly or only collaterally in issue." It may be added to this that the question of pedigree is almost always collateral to the issue in ejectment, and probably in most other cases. The reasoning of the Massachusetts court seems to leave the first exception wholly without support. The second exception states the English rule. In this country the limits of the rule are not well defined. It seems that the declarations of strangers, persons not related by blood or marriage, are considered by the Supreme Court of the United States inadmissible.¹ In Tennessee it is said that hearsay from others than members of the family, and public repute in the community, are admissible.²

§ 813. Ante litem motam.—The third exception states a rule which applies to all declarations (though consisting of hearsay), on the ground that they must be made by persons occupying an unbiassed attitude. The declaration must have been made before the matter reached the stage of controversy. This does not mean before suit brought, but refers to the commencement of a controversy preparatory to suit actually commenced.³ Declarations made post litem motam are not admissible, even though it can be proved that the existence of the controversy was not known to the declarant.⁴ Probably the question as to the precise time at which the objection of lis mota arises, is one dependent on the circumstances of each particular case, and no general rule can be laid down.

§ 814. Declarant's relationship must be established by other

¹ Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schwenk, 94 U. S. 593.

² Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 216, 228.

³ 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.) § 131.

⁴ 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.) § 133; Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Campb. 401.

testimony.—It is well settled that before the declarations can be admitted the relationship of the declarant to the family must be established by other testimony.¹ The declarations themselves cannot be relied upon for this purpose. In the first of the cases cited, the question related to the family of one Dr. Crawford. The defendants in error claimed to belong to the family, and to be his nephews and nieces. To prove this relationship, it was held competent for them to give in evidence the declarations of that family, but the declarations of a person belonging to another family—such person claiming to be connected with such family only by the intermarriage of a member of each family—was held by the Supreme Court of the United States not to be such evidence as the law requires.²

§ 815. Pedigree.—General reputation in the family as to the birth of issue alive is admissible,³ and the time of birth may be proved by hearsay or reputation.⁴ The testimony must in all cases concern the repute in the family, and not relate to isolated statements of members of it.⁵

§ 816. Age.—The declarations, and, a fortiori, the sworn declarations of a deceased person as to the date of his birth, are admissible.⁶ Any person may testify to his own age, which it is said he is presumed to know as he does any matter of custom or prescription.⁷

§ 817. Presumption of death.—The question sometimes arises whether, in the absence of any evidence, there can be a presumption as to death, marriage, or the birth of children. The Supreme Court of New Hampshire after a full consideration of the cases, reached the conclusion that there is no presumption in such cases. The ordinary presumption of the cessation of life after seven years must ¹ Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 175; Thompson v. Woolf, 8 Ore. 454.

² The declarant, it is perhaps unnecessary to remind the reader, must be dead. Greenleaf v. Dubuque & S. C. R. R. Co., 30 Iowa, 301; Mooers v. Bunker, 29 N. H. 420.

³ Doe d. Cannon v. Killen, 5 Houst. (Del.) 14.

⁴ Swink v. French, 11 Lea (Tenn.), 78.

⁵ Harland v. Eastman, 107 Ill. 535.

⁶ 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 125, 555; Greenfield v. Camden, 74 Me. 56.

⁷ Cherry v. State, 68 Ala. 29.

not be considered as a contradiction of this conclusion, as that never arises except on proof that the person whom it affects has not been heard from by those who, in the ordinary course of events, would have heard from him.¹ It has been said in Indiana, that, in the absence of evidence, a person is presumed to be an adult, but the dictum rests on no satisfactory grounds, as will be seen by an examination of the cases.²

§ 818. Ancient deeds and wills.—It is frequently said that a deed or will thirty years old proves itself. The period has been fixed at thirty years, because there is said to be a presumption, that in that time the subscribing witnesses are dead. Such a presumption is, of course, not absolute; it depends upon the circumstances of the case whether it will be indulged. If possession has accompanied the deed, and it has been in the proper custody, or there are other circumstances tending to show its genuineness, this will be enough.³ It is not absolutely necessary that possession should be shown.⁴ In *Willson v. Betts*⁵ it is said that the mere efflux of time, unaccompanied by other circumstances, will not of itself be enough.

An instrument is entitled to be proved as ancient, if thirty years old when offered in evidence, without regard to its age when the suit was begun.⁶ The presumption of possession is not an absolute presumption of law, but is so ¹ Emerson v. White, 29 N. H. 482; Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 314; People v. Fulton Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 205; Fosgate v. Herkimer Mfg. & Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 352; Sandys v. Sandys, 1 Q. B. 316, note; Doe d. Oldham v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22; Doe d. Lloyd v. Deakin, 4 B. & Ald. 433; Doe v. Jesson, 6 East, 80; King v. Fowler, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 302; McComb v. Wright, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 263; Crouch v. Eveleth, 15 Mass. 305; Clark v. Trinity Church, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 266; Wilson v. Hodges, 2 East, 312; Doe v. Griffin, 15 East, 293; Richards v. Richards, 15 East, 294 n.

² Garber v. State, 94 Ind. 219; citing Palmer v. Wright, 58 Ind. 486.

³ Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 292; Hewlett v. Cock, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 371; Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 127; Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 277; Enders v. Sternbergh, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 264; Clark v. Owens, 18 N. Y. 434; Carter v. Doe d. Chaudron, 21 Ala. 72; Doe v. Roe, 31 Ga. 593; Hedger v. Ward, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 106; Crane v. Marshall, 16 Me. 27; Stockbridge v. West Stockbridge, 14 Mass. 257; Roberts v. Stanton, 2 Munf. (Va.) 129.

⁴ Ensign v. McKinney, 12 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 463; Johnson v. Timmons, 50 Tex. 521; Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 680; Harlan v. Howard, 79 Ky. 373.

⁵ 4 Denio (N. Y.), 201. See Jackson v. Luquere, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 221.

⁶ Bass v. Sevier, 58 Tex. 567.

far binding on the jury as to make a prima facie case upon which they should find possession, unless the same is satisfactorily rebutted, and for a disregard of this presumption the court is authorized to set the verdict aside.¹ In most cases when a deed would be admissible in evidence as an ancient deed, the power under which it purports to be executed will be presumed.² In Florida it is said that in the case of an ancient deed, if it appears that the name of a party, who could not write, is in the handwriting of a third person present, but not a party to the deed or in interest, and there is no suspicion of fraud, the presumption is that the signature was made by virtue of an oral direction duly given.³

§ 819. Ancient surveys and maps.—Ancient surveys, field-books, plans, maps, and surveyors' certificates, are admissible in evidence, on much the same principle as governs in the case of ancient deeds,⁴ and a survey made under an order in the cause by a surveyor who afterwards dies, is still admissible.⁵ It is said in a recent Massachusetts case,⁶ that plottings for plans and field-notes are inadmissible, because they are mere memoranda which may never have been acted on; but there was another ground for the decision. The court below found that the plans and field-notes did not appear to have been made by authority of the parties from whom title was derived.

§ 820. Lost deeds.—It is the general rule that every document of a public nature which there would be an inconvenience in removing, and which the party has a right to inspect, may be proved by a duly authenticated copy. This applies, under the recording system of the United States, to patents, deeds, wills and all other muniments of

¹ Johnson v. Timmons, 50 Tex. 521.

² Ensign v. McKinney, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 249; Johnson v. Timmons, 50 Tex. 521; Watrous v. McGrew, 16 Tex. 513; Storey v. Flanagan, 57 Tex. 649, and cases cited.

³ Hogans v. Carruth, 19 Fla. 84.

⁴ Morse v. Emery, 49 N. H. 239, note; Casey's Lessee v. Inloes, 1 Gill (Md.), 430, 492; McCausland v. Fleming, 63 Pa. St. 36.

⁵ Cline's Heirs v. Catron, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 378.

⁶ Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483.

title.¹ Where the original deed is proved, if the witnesses are shown to be dead, the execution may be established by proof of the handwriting of the witnesses; and proof of the handwriting of a single witness is sufficient.² Where the deed is lost or destroyed, the contents may be proved by parol testimony if no copy exists, and its execution established by proof of handwriting of the witnesses.³ The production of the copy does not prove the execution of the original, and whatever proof of execution would be needed if the original were produced, is also required in case a copy is used.⁴ In Riggs v. Tayloe,⁵ the United States Supreme Court said: "The general rule of evidence is, if a party intend to use a deed, or any other instrument, in evidence, he ought to produce the original, if he has it in his possession; . . . or if the original is lost or destroyed, secondary evidence, which is the best that the nature of the case allows, will in that case be admitted." Secondary evidence of the contents of a written instrument when allowed does not obviate the necessity of proving the genuineness of the instrument, but renders it more imperative.⁶ On the other hand, it is said that if secondary evidence is admissible, it requires no more evidence to establish a fact than though the best evidence were offered.⁷ Finally we may notice a principle frequently invoked and of considerable practical importance in the case of lost deeds—that registration raises a presumption of delivery.⁸

¹ Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 50. Compare Mason v. Libbey, 90 N. Y. 683.

² Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. 319; Cooke v. Woodrow, 5 Cranch, 13; Adam v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360.

³ Earley v. Euwer, 102 Pa. St. 338; Vandergriff v. Piercy, 59 Tex. 371; Ortiz v. De Benavides, 61 Tex. 60; Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32.

⁴ Wells v. Iron Co., 48 N. H. 491, 535.

⁵ 9 Wheat. 486.

⁶ Nichols v. Kingdom Iron Ore Co., 56 N. Y. 618.

⁷ Silver Mining Co. v. Fall, 6 Nev. 116; s. c. 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 283.

⁸ Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 680. The courts have power to restore lost records and papers. Bowman v. McLaughlin, 45 Miss. 461; Hale v. Hord, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 232; Jackson v. Hammond, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 496; Jackson d. Kemp v. Parker, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 385; People v. Burdock, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 104; Cook v. Wood, 1 McCord's (S. C.) Law, 139; Walker v. Greenlee, 3 Hawks (N. C.), 281; Lowry v. Cady, 4 Vt. 504; Inhabs. of Stockbridge v. Inhabs. of West Stockbridge, 12 Mass. 399; Lyons v. Gregory, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 237. See Robinson v. Ferguson, 78 Ill. 538; Hord v. Baugh, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 576. But equity cannot restore the lost records of another court. Keen v. Jordan, 13 Fla. 327. When records have been destroyed by fire, an exemplified copy may be read in evidence. Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 181.

§ 821. Office copies of deeds.—It is said to be well settled in the United States, that after proof of the original deed to himself, or of his title by descent or devise, a party may use an office copy of a deed to which he is not a party, but which constitutes part of his chain of title, as prima facie evidence, without showing the loss of the original, and without proof of execution and delivery. But the party can only use office-copies in this way in the proof of his own title; not in proof of that of his adversary or of a third person.¹ If he desires to prove deeds, showing title in his adversary, or in a third person, he can only resort to secondary evidence and must do it after notice, in accordance with the ordinary rules. In Woodman v. Coolbroth,² the origin of the American practice was thus explained by Paris, J.: “It is true that, according to the English practice, office copies are inadmissible, and the party attempting to support title must do it by producing the original title-deeds, not only to himself, but to those under whom he claims. This he is supposed to be able to do without inconvenience, as this evidence uniformly accompanies the title. It is not unfrequently the case that the owner in fee is possessed of all the original title-deeds to his estate to a very remote period. But such is not our practice. Hence has arisen the rule that office copies may be used in tracing title, until we come to the party himself, who, being presumed to be in possession of the original evidence of his own title, must produce it.”³

§ 822. Delivery of deed.—Under ordinary circumstances, no other evidence of the delivery of a deed is required than the possession of it by the person claiming under it.⁴

¹ Wells v. Iron Co., 48 N. H. 491, 535; Harvey v. Mitchell, 31 N. H. 575, 582; Homer v. Cilley, 14 N. H. 85; Farrar v. Fessenden, 39 N. H. 269; Forsaith v. Clark, 21 N. H. 409; Stevens v. Reed, 37 N. H. 49, 54; Woodman v. Coolbroth, 7 Me. 181; Scanlan v. Wright, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 523; Pollard v. Melvin, 10 N. H. 554.

² 7 Me. 181, 185.

³ A copy of a deed not certified or recorded according to law, is inadmissible, though between the parties the instrument may be valid. Raines v. Walker, 77 Va. 92.

⁴ Games v. Stiles, 14 Pet. 322; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 489; Rhine v. Robinson, 27 Pa. St. 30; Story v. Bishop, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 423; Carnes v. Platt, 9 J. & S. (N. Y.) 435.

So the recording of a deed in the absence of opposing evidence justifies a presumption of delivery.¹ But the presumption is one which may always be overcome by direct negative proof.² The grantor in such cases cannot affirm or recognize the grantee's possession of the instrument as valid for some purposes, and disclaim it as being nugatory for all others.³ Again, a deed not delivered, or a deed fraudulently obtained by the grantee, is void for want of delivery, and will convey no title even to an innocent purchaser.⁴ The same is true of a stolen deed.⁵

§ 823. Recitals in deeds.—Recitals in ancient deeds appear to be governed by the same rules as declarations. They may be admissible as against interest, as part of the res gestæ, as made by persons in a position to know the facts, and having no interest to distort the truth. They are also subject to the rule of post litem motam.⁶ The general rule in the United States is, that all recitals in deeds are received as primary evidence of the facts contained in them against the parties, and also against privies in blood, estate and law. And this applies to a recital of a deed in another deed.⁷ But such recitals do not bind strangers, or those claiming by title paramount.⁸ The recital in an ancient deed of the residence of the grantor is competent evidence as ante litem motam, and a part of the res gestæ.⁹ Recitals in deeds are not evidence of a valuable consideration as against antecedent creditors.¹⁰

§ 824. Parol evidence to vary written instrument.—The general rule that parol evidence, though admissible for the purpose of explaining, cannot be received to control or vary a written instrument, is of special importance in cases involving title to land, the evidence of which gen-

¹ Younge v. Guilbeau, 3 Wall. 636; Jackson v. Perkins, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 308; Rigler v. Cloud, 14 Pa. St. 361; Kille v. Ege, 79 Pa. St. 15; Otis v. Spencer, 102 Ill. 624; Himes v. Keighlingher, 14 Ill. 469.

² Metcalf v. Brandon, 60 Miss. 685.

³ Cotton v. Gregory, 10 Neb. 129.

⁴ Taylor v. Davis, 72 Mo. 291.

⁵ Tisher v. Beckwith, 30 Wis. 55. The delivery of a deed is a question for the jury. Galbraith v. Zimmerman, 100 Pa. St. 374.

⁶ Greenfield v. Camden, 74 Me. 56.

⁷ Ellen v. Ellen, 18 S. C. 489.

⁸ Greenfield v. Camden, 74 Me. 56.

⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰ Tutwiler v. Munford, 68 Ala. 124.

erally consists exclusively of written instruments. It may be useful to refer to a few recent cases. In Alabama it has been held, that where a deed reserved title in the vendor till the performance of certain conditions, a contemporaneous parol agreement was not admissible to show that the vendor was to be estopped to assert its title on the performance of only one of the conditions.¹ So in Iowa, it has been decided that covenants of general warranty cannot be contradicted by evidence of a contemporaneous parol agreement that a certain mortgage was to be excepted from their operation.² And a description clearly given cannot be varied by parol.³ Though parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict a will or deed, it may be introduced to explain the terms used. Land inadequately described may be thus identified.⁴

§ 825. Transactions with deceased persons.—The statutes of the various States provide, where parties are allowed to testify in their own behalf, that this shall not extend to cases where the parties adversely interested are dead. Thus, in ejectment, where plaintiff and defendant claimed under the same person, deceased, the plaintiff as heir, and the defendant under a contract, the defendant was not allowed to testify to a parol agreement made and carried out by such deceased person to convey the premises in controversy to defendant.⁵ And where the grantee in a deed absolute on its face, is dead, the grantor cannot show that it was intended as a conveyance in trust for himself.⁶

§ 826. Seals.—In the absence of testimony to impeach such a document, it is not necessary to prove by parol

¹ Tennessee & Coosa R. R. Co. v. East Ala. Ry. Co., 73 Ala. 426.

² Johnson v. Walter, 60 Iowa, 315.

³ Gillespie v. Sawyer, 15 Neb. 536; Stowell v. Buswell, 135 Mass. 340.

⁴ Chambers v. Watson, 60 Iowa, 339; Griscom v. Evens, 40 N. J. Law, 402; Waldron v. Waldron, 45 Mich. 350; Jones v. Dove, 7 Ore. 467; Cleverly v. Cleverly, 124 Mass. 314; Peters v. Porter, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 422; Allen v. Bowen, 105 Ill. 361; Pickering v. Pickering, 50 N. H. 349; Aldrich v. Aldrich, 135 Mass. 153.

⁵ Pember v. Congdon, 55 Vt. 58.

⁶ Murray v. N. Y. L. & W. R. R. Co., 103 Pa. St. 37. And see further, Sanford v. Ellithorp, 95 N. Y. 48; Harding v. Elzey, 83 Ind. 321; Wright v. Jackson, 59 Wis. 569; Oram v. Rothermel, 98 Pa. St. 300; Ewing v. Ewing, 96 Pa. St. 381; Pope v. Allen, 90 N. Y. 298; Cantey v. Whitaker, 17 S. C. 527; McLaurin v. Wilson, 16 S. C. 402.

testimony, that a will upon which a seal appears had the seal upon it at the time of the alleged execution. The presumption is that it was properly placed there, and it is proper to instruct the jury that the fact that there was a seal upon the will was evidence from which they might find that the will was properly sealed. No doubt the same rule applies in the case of any sealed instrument.¹ In many of the western States scrolls are used instead of seals, in accordance with statutory provisions. The decisions generally turn upon the language of the statute.² If it appears affirmatively by a copy of a grant from the recording officer, that it was issued under the seal of the State, it is no objection to the document that no scroll or imitation of the form of the seal appears on the copy.³

§ 827. Abstracts.—As a general rule abstracts of instruments in a chain of title are not evidence; but under special circumstances they may be. Thus, in North Carolina, abstracts of grants from the Crown and from the State, have been kept as records, and these, when properly authenticated, are admissible.⁴ In Illinois, in cases of certain records destroyed by fire, abstracts of title made in the ordinary course of business are, by statute, made competent evidence of title.⁵

§ 828. Unofficial records.—In deducing title from the United States, or, indeed, from any other source, the rules governing the introduction of records of entries, patents, deeds, etc., are prescribed by statutes, either of the United States or of the State in which the land lies, and records not required to be kept by law, or made evidence, such as copies of entries from the United States Land Office, or a volume purporting to contain township plots, even though produced from the Register's office, are not admissible.⁶

¹ Fogg v. Moulton, 59 N. H. 499.

² See Dickens v. Miller, 12 Mo. App. 408; Benefiel v. Aughe, 93 Ind. 401.

³ Aycock v. Railroad, 89 N. C. 321.

⁴ Strickland v. Draughan, 88 N. C. 315; Tolson v. Mainor, 85 N. C. 235; McLenan v. Chisholm, 64 N. C. 323; Clarke v. Diggs, 6 Ired. (N. C.) Law, 159.

⁵ Compton v. Randolph, 104 Ill. 555.

⁶ Smith v. Lawrence, 12 Mich. 431; Newell v. McLarney, 49 Mich. 232.

CHAPTER XXXII.

DEFENSES.

- | | |
|--|--|
| § 829. Defenses in general. 830. Defendant may set up several defenses. 831. Outstanding title. 832. Possession acquired by fraud. 833. Defective condemnation of lands. 834. License to use lands by railroad. 835. Possession by execution defendant. 836. Defeating tax title. 837. Advancement. 838. Concealment of will.—Effect of after probate. 839. Equitable defenses. 840. Injunction against ejectment. 841. Defective, doubtful or unmarketable titles. 842. Estoppel. | § 843. Equitable estoppel or estoppel by conduct. 844. Different classes of cases. 845. Fraud in the estoppel. 846. The statute of frauds. 847. Brant v. Virginia Coal & Iron Co. 848. Distinction between right and remedy in equity. 849. Is equitable estoppel available at law? 850. Estoppel by deed.—Warranty.—After-acquired title. 851. No estoppel through void or illegal contract. 852. Estoppel must be direct. 853. No estoppel against grantee. 854. Estoppel against a State. 855. Pleading estoppel. |
|--|--|

§ 829. Defenses in general.—Since the introduction of equitable defenses in the reformed procedure in some of our States,¹ and recoveries upon equitable titles in actions in the nature of ejectment, the great field of equity jurisprudence is open to the litigants. Manifestly, only such prominent features of this important jurisdiction as arise incidentally in land cases can be considered in this treatise. It has been shown that when equitable defenses are interposed in these actions, the rights of the parties are adjudicated upon and protected in substantially the same manner as though an independent bill in chancery had been filed.² But we will first glance at defenses that are legal in character.

The necessity of pleading the statute of limitations,³ and the elements of this highly important defense, have already been discussed at length.⁴ Incidentally the de-

¹ See §§ 485-488.

² See § 482.

³ See Chaps. XVIII, XXXI.

⁴ See Chaps. XXVIII, XXIX, XXX

fenses available between landlord and tenant,¹ mortgagee and mortgagor,² vendor and vendee,³ and co-tenants⁴ have been considered, and the general subject of defenses has received passing attention in treating of the answer,⁵ parties defendant,⁶ possession,⁷ interests for which ejectment will not lie,⁸ and plaintiff's title and evidence.⁹

Ejectment proceeds for the possession of the premises, claiming that they have been unlawfully entered into and unjustly withheld, and facts which go to disprove these assertions make a legal defense.¹⁰ It is not necessary, as we have seen, for the adverse party to produce evidence to defeat the demandant's title, when by his own showing he has no title.¹¹ In other words, until the plaintiff in ejectment has shown some right to disturb the defendant's possession, the latter need not show title in himself.¹² But the plaintiff having put the defendant to his proofs, the latter is bound to bring forward all matters of a strictly defensive character, or be precluded from subsequently litigating such questions; but this does not extend to other matters constituting a cause of action in his favor.¹³

§ 830. Defendant may set up several defenses.—A defendant, as we have seen, is not confined to a single defense,¹⁴ or title, but may set up several titles,¹⁵ or, under the reformed procedure, as many defenses as he has,¹⁶ provided

¹ See Chap. XII.

² See Chap. XI.

³ See Chap. X.

⁴ See Chap. IX.

⁵ See Chap. XVIII.

⁶ See Chap. VII.

⁷ See Chap. XXVII.

⁸ See Chap. IV.

⁹ See Chap. XXXI.

¹⁰ St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. R. Co. v. Karnes, 101 Ill. 402; Stow v. Russell, 36 Ill. 18, 36.

¹¹ Allen v. Morse, 72 Me. 502, 504.

¹² Henry v. Reichert, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 394.

¹³ Ayres v. Bensley, 32 Cal. 620.

It is not generally advisable to rely on a mere prima facie case of possession where a good title could be proved by conclusive evidence, unless there be some special reason for so doing, e. g., the difficulty of proof, the great expense and the poverty of the defendant, or the wish to avoid disclosing the real title, and the contents of the deeds, etc., or the impossibility of the defendant rebutting a prima facie case by evidence on his behalf. Cole on Ejectment, p. 213.

¹⁴ See § 478.

¹⁵ Kahn v. Old Telegraph M. Co. 2 Utah, 174.

¹⁶ Crary v. Goodman, 12 N. Y. 266; Penny v. Cook, 19 Iowa, 538.

they are not inconsistent,¹ and even inconsistent defenses have been allowed under some of the codes. It has been decided in Texas that when the defendant, who is permitted to plead the general issue, but instead of or besides so doing pleads specially, and sets out a title in himself, he is confined in his defense to the title set up ;² but this rule, according to a recent decision of the United States Circuit Court, does not apply in case the claim of title specially pleaded is under the statute of limitations, for that defense or title is required by law to be so pleaded.³

§ 831. Outstanding title.—A most common defense in ejectment is an outstanding title.⁴ This is but another means of stating the rule that the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title, and of course he has no title when it is shown to be vested in another.⁵ The defense of an outstanding title is not favored in our courts. To defeat an action of ejectment at law, the outstanding title must be a present, subsisting, operative and available title ; such an one as the owner could recover on, and not one reverted, barred or abandoned.⁶ A deed delivered in escrow is not an outstanding title ;⁷ nor is a sheriff's certificate upon which no deed has been executed ;⁸ nor an outstanding equity, unless the defendant is connected with it ;⁹ and the outstanding title will defeat the plaintiff only to its extent ;¹⁰ and it is competent for the plaintiff to rebut such a defense by

¹ Yocum v. Morice, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 106.

² Rivers v. Foote, 11 Tex. 662, 670.

³ Sheirburn v. Hunter, 3 Woods, 281.

⁴ Trenouth v. Gordon, 63 Cal. 379.

⁵ Hallett v. Eslava, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 115 ; King v. Stevens, 18 Ala. 475 ; Brumbalo v. Baxter, 33 Ga. 81 ; Jones v. Sullivan, 33 Ga. 486. See also § 791.

⁶ Howard v. Massengale, 13 Lea (Tenn.), 577, 585 ; Peck v. Carmichael, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 325 ; Jackson v. Hudson, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 375 ; Hunter v. Cochran, 3 Pa. St. 105 ; Bennett v. Horr, 47 Mich. 223 ; McDonald v. Schneider, 27 Mo. 405 ; Masterson v. Cheek, 23 Ill. 72 ; Sutton v. McLeod, 29 Ga. 589 ; Atkins v. Lewis, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 30 ; Lee v. Cook, 2 Wyoming, 305 ; Humble v. Spears, 8 Baxter (Tenn.), 156.

⁷ Lloyd v. Giddings, 7 Ohio, 375.

⁸ Cruger v. Dougherty, 43 N. Y. 107.

⁹ Johnson v. Timmons, 50 Tex. 521 ; Shields v. Hunt, 45 Tex. 424, 428.

¹⁰ Riddle v. Bickerstaff, 50 Tex. 155.

introducing a conveyance of such outstanding title made to him since the commencement of the action.¹ The rule that an outstanding title will defeat a recovery does not apply where both parties claim by mere possession.² In the case cited, Sanderson, C. J., said: "Only a question of possession is involved. The naked prior possession of the plaintiff is pitted against the naked present possession of the defendants. Strict title is not involved. The doctrine that the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title is applied to cases where the strict legal title in contradistinction from a mere possession is involved. In such a case the defendant may defeat the legal title relied upon by the plaintiff, by showing the true legal title to be in a third person. But where mere prior possession is relied on, and the defendant is a mere intruder, he cannot justify his act by showing the true title to be outstanding. Ejectments for mining claims, where neither party has, strictly speaking, any legal title, but both, in strict law, are intruders upon what belongs to another, are mere contests for possession, and their solution is only embarrassed by an attempt to adhere to language only adapted to cases where the strict legal title to land is involved. Such ejectments might be more properly called actions to determine the right to mine in a certain locality."

§ 832. Possession acquired by fraud.—It has been expressly decided that a party who has a present right of entry upon lands, and who has entered by force or fraud, cannot be turned out of possession by an action of ejectment. The right of entry of the true owner is not impaired or affected by any fraud, false representation, or collusion practiced by him upon one having no right of possession. The plaintiff must rest his case solely upon his legal title to the possession; evidence of the fraudulent acts of the defendant in acquiring the possession will not strengthen the case, and are wholly immaterial in an action devised to try title.³ An ousted tenant in common is justified in regaining possession by stealth if accomplished without breach of the peace.¹

¹ Ballard v. Perry, 28 Tex. 347.

² Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 339; s. c. 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 11.

³ Depuy v. Williams, 26 Cal. 309, 314.

§ 833. Defective condemnation of lands.—The pendency of condemnation proceedings is not a valid defense in ejectment.² Hence, a corporation that has condemned land, but not paid the damages, may be evicted in ejectment;³ and the same rule appertains where the condemnation is defective and void for want of proper notice.⁴

§ 834. License to use lands by railroad.—In Pryzbylowicz v. Missouri River R. R. Co.,⁵ it was held that if an owner gives a license, either express or fairly implied; if he expressly consents or with full knowledge of the possession makes no objection, but permits a public corporation to enter upon his land and expend money, and carry into operation the purposes for which such land is ordinarily taken; he will not be permitted to eject the parties for want of payment of the compensation. Ordinarily a mere parol license to use land cannot work a transfer of title, and in cases of this kind the estoppel must rest on the great inconvenience that would follow if railroads, once established, could be evicted like ordinary trespassers. Of the existence of the rule there can be no doubt. Slight acts of acquiescence on the part of an owner in permitting a corporation to take possession will estop him from interfering with the running of a railroad, though he will not be deprived of the right to enforce payment of his claim for damages. If there has been a waiver, either express or implied, by acquiescence in the proceedings of the company to the extent of not insisting upon pre-payment as a condition precedent, but consenting to let the damages be and remain a mere debt, it is impossible to regard the corporation "in any sense in the light of a trespasser or liable in ejectment."⁶

¹ Wood v. Phillips, 43 N. Y. 152.

² Coburn v. Pacific L. and M. Co., 46 Cal. 31.

³ Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. Knox College, 34 Ill. 195.

⁴ Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 78 Ill. 96; Smith v. Chicago, A. & St. L. R. R. Co., 67 Ill. 191.

⁵ 3 McCra. 586.

⁶ Provolt v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. R. Co., 57 Mo. 256; McAulay v. Western Vt.

§ 835. Possession by execution defendant.—When the defendant in the judgment is in possession at the time of the levy and sale, he can make no defense against the execution purchaser, for the latter acquires at least a right to the debtor's possession.¹ The books are full of cases holding that the execution defendant, when sued in ejectment by the execution purchaser, cannot dispute the latter's title.² If the debtor gives up the possession and re-acquires it from a third party claiming under an entirely independent title, he will then be permitted to interpose this outstanding title as a defense.³

§ 836. Defeating tax title.—An owner of the fee in possession may defend against a defective tax title.⁴

§ 837. Advancement.—An advancement by a father to his son may constitute a good ground of defense in ejectment,⁵ and may be established by parol. Controversies of this kind may arise where the advancement to the son was intended to be in full for his share as heir, and he subsequently attempts to recover a full share of the estate without regard to the advancement.

§ 838. Concealment of will.—Effect of after probate.—In an instructive case recently before the New York Court of Appeals, it appeared that plaintiff's ancestor died in 1836, leaving a will which was clandestinely taken from the widow in 1841, by, and concealed about the person of, one of the plaintiffs until 1855, when it was probated. In 1841 the real estate in question, the property of the ancestor or

R. R. Co., 33 Vt. 311. See Smart v. Portsmouth and C. R. R., 20 N. H. 233; Harrison, N. T. & C. Turnpike Co. v. Roberts, 33 Ind. 246. It is no defense to a writ of entry that a tenant owns a building erected on the land by consent of the landlord, for the tenant would have a reasonable time after judgment to remove it. Bullen v. Arnold, 31 Me. 583.

¹ Bunker v. Rand, 19 Wis. 253; s. p. Addison v. Crow, 5 Dana (Ky.), 271; Locke v. Coleman, 4 Mon. (Ky.) 315; Ferguson v. Miles, 8 Ill. 358.

² Hayes v. Bernard, 38 Ill. 297; Ferguson v. Miles, 8 Ill. 358; Sherry v. Denn, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 552; Jackson v. Graham, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 188.

³ Hayes v. Bernard, 38 Ill. 297.

⁴ Lockridge v. Daggett, 54 Iowa, 332; Chandler v. Keeler, 46 Iowa, 596; Tully v. Bauer, 52 Cal. 487.

⁵ Parker v. McCluer, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 301; s. c. 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 97; Smith v. Smith, 59 Me. 214. Compare Deweese's Estate, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 314.

testator, was sold in chancery, in proceedings to sell infant's real estate, to a party who purchased in good faith and from whom the defendant claimed. The proceedings were very informal. Yet the court held that the probate of the will did not affect the title of the purchaser in these proceedings, and that a case of concealment within the meaning of the statute of New York,¹ was not made out when it was shown that one of the devisees had knowledge of the existence of the will.

§ 839. Equitable defenses.—The subject of equitable defenses, heretofore discussed,² presents many novel questions which, as we have seen, could not, under the early practice, arise in the class of remedies for the recovery of real property which we are considering. Thus, in a case in Georgia, where it appeared that the defendant had made advances for the plaintiff's benefit, and had purchased the land in question at trustee's sale, by order of the chancellor, the court decided that, though the chancellor had no authority at chambers to appoint the trustee and order the sale, yet the defendant having purchased the property in good faith under color of legal proceedings, might set up the facts in an equitable plea and claim to be reimbursed before a recovery could be had.³

§ 840. Injunction against ejectment.—The remedy by injunction against an ejectment is not so frequently resorted to in the modern procedure as formerly, because in many States equitable defenses may be interposed in the action at law.⁴ Manifestly the owner of the legal title cannot obtain an injunction against an ejectment, because he has a perfect defense at law.⁵ Thus, a purchaser from a judgment debtor, prior to the lien of a judgment, cannot have an injunction to prevent a sale of the land under execution upon such judgment, as the sale would not dispossess him

¹ 1 R. S. 749, § 3 ; Cole v. Gourlay, 79 N. Y. 527.

² See §§ 485-488, 790.

³ Askew v. Patterson, 53 Ga. 209.

⁴ See §§ 485-489.

⁵ Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige (N. Y.), 170.

or deprive him of any of his legal rights or remedies.¹ The general rule that courts of equity will not enjoin a judgment at law, unless the complainant has an equitable defense to the cause of action of which he could not avail himself at law, because it did not amount to a legal defense,² is applicable to ejectments.³ By coming into equity seeking an injunction, the complainant concedes that he has no defense which he can make effectual at law.⁴ The remedy by injunction is an extraordinary one, to be resorted to, as a general rule, only where an injury, without adequate redress, may result if the writ be not employed.⁵ It will be found, upon examination, that only exceptional circumstances and equitable considerations have moved the courts in cases where chancery has interposed by injunction against ejectment.⁶

§ 841. Defective, doubtful or unmarketable titles.—Though not strictly defensive matter in ejectment, the rules governing the question of defective or unmarketable titles, which a vendee or purchaser will not be compelled to accept, may be briefly stated. A court of equity will not compel a purchaser to take a doubtful title. If there is such an element of uncertainty about a title as to affect its marketable value, even though the court might consider it good, still a decree of specific performance will not be granted.⁷ There must, however, be some debatable ground upon which the doubt can be justified.⁸ A rational doubt may be said to exist where a court of law would not feel called upon to instruct a jury to find that

¹ Whitman v. Willis, 51 Tex. 429. See Henderson v. Morrill, 12 Tex. 1.

² Crim v. Handley, 94 U. S. 653; Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 17 How. 443.

³ See Savage v. Allen, 54 N. Y. 458.

⁴ Trousdale v. Maxwell, 6 Lea (Tenn.), 161, 164.

⁵ Savage v. Allen, 54 N. Y. 463.

⁶ See Big Mountain Imp. Co.'s Appeal, 54 Pa. St. 361; Thornton v. Ramsden, 4 Giff. 519; Ferguson v. Bobo, 54 Miss. 121; Hill v. Billingsly, 53 Miss. 111; Parrill v. McKinley, 6 W. Va. 67; Reavis v. Reavis, 50 Ala. 60; Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Brown, 37 Mich. 533; High on Inj., Ch. VI.

⁷ Vreeland v. Blauvelt, 23 N. J. Eq. 483; Emery v. Grocock, Mad. & Geld. 54; Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575, 584.

⁸ Vreeland v. Blauvelt, 23 N. J. Eq. 483; Hellreigel v. Manning, 97 N. Y. 56.

the facts existed on which the vendor's title depended.¹ In the case of The Brooklyn Park Comm'rs v. Armstrong,² the court said: "When it is ascertained that there is an existing defect in the title, the purchaser will not be compelled to perform on the allegation that it is doubtful whether the defect will ever incommode him. If there be any reasonable chance that some third person may raise a question against the owner of the estate after the completion of the contract, the court considers this a circumstance which renders the bargain a hard one for the purchaser, and one which it will not, in the exercise of its discretion, compel him to execute."³ Folger, Ch. J., said in Shriver v. Shriver:⁴ "As a general rule, a title which is open to judicial doubt is not a marketable title." The learned court in the course of the opinion observes that what constitutes sufficient ground for judicial doubt cannot be conclusively reduced to fixed and determinate principles, for it depends in some degree upon the discretion of the court.⁵ A purchaser will not be required to take property which he can only reduce to possession by litigation and judicial decision,⁶ which is considered equivalent to saying that he cannot be compelled to take a title, the possession of which he must thus defend, as where the title depends upon a matter of fact, which is not capable of satisfactory proof,⁷ or facts capable of proof, yet not proved.⁸

§ 842. Estoppel.—Estoppels are treated by Greenleaf and other writers as a branch of the law of evidence.⁹ But since they constitute good defenses or good grounds

¹ Emery v. Grocock, Mad. & Geld. 54; Chase v. Chase, 95 N. Y. 373; Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 584.

² 45 N. Y. 234, 248.

³ Citing Seaman v. Vawdrey, 16 Ves. 390. It is not necessary that a vendor should furnish a perfect paper title. Defects in a paper title may be cured or removed by parol evidence. Hellreigel v. Manning, 97 N. Y. 56.

⁴ 86 N. Y. 584.

⁵ Citing White v. Damon, 7 Ves. 35.

⁶ Price v. Strange, Mad. & Geld. 159.

⁷ Lowes v. Lush, 14 Ves. 548.

⁸ Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371. In case of an executory contract of sale of land, the vendor impliedly warrants that he has good title. Burwell v. Jackson, 9 N. Y. 535; Wheeler v. Tracy, 49 N. Y. Superior, 208.

⁹ 1 Greenl. Ev., § 22; Stephens' Dig. Ev., §§ 102-105.

for claiming title,¹ as the case may be, and since they frequently operate, as we shall see, to transfer or bar title with the same full effect that a conveyance or statutory adverse possession would have, the better opinion now is, that they determine primary rights of property, and not the mode or means by which such rights are proved.² They are here considered under the head of defenses, chiefly because they are introduced in litigation to defeat a legal title on one side or the other, not because they naturally form part of a defendant's rather than a plaintiff's case. Our space forbids us, in the present edition, to enter upon the subject as fully as we should like, and we can do little more than discuss a few of its more important aspects, referring the reader elsewhere for fuller discussions.³

§ 843. Equitable estoppel or estoppel by conduct.—Estoppel by matter in pais, as is evident from the term itself, is not properly the equivalent of equitable estoppel, though frequently used in that sense. Strict legal estoppels may be in pais as well as by record or deed, and at common law there seem to have been several varieties of such legal estoppels, as by livery, acceptance of rent, etc.⁴ In modern times, however, strict legal estoppel by matter in pais is not common, and this explains why equitable estoppel is so frequently spoken of as if co-extensive with estoppel in pais.⁵ Equitable estoppel or estoppel by conduct so far as it relates to trial of title to land is a doctrine by which a party is prevented from setting up his legal title, because he has, through his acts, words or

¹ Stoddard v. Chambers, 2 How. 284.

² 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 801.

³ See especially Bigelow on Estoppel; 3 Washburn's Real Property, Ch. II, § 6; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 801 et seq.; 1 Greenl. Ev., § 22 et seq.; Rawle on Covenants, Ch. XI; 2 Smith's Lea. Cas. (8th ed.) 784. We have already considered the subject of estoppel between vendee and vendor (ante, §§ 316-318); the effect of judgments in actions to try title, operating by way of estoppel (ante, Ch. XX); estoppel between landlord and tenant (ante, §§ 351, 361, 751); and between co-tenants (§ 291 et seq.).

⁴ Co. Litt. 352 a; Bigelow on Estoppel, 350.

⁵ The main estoppel arising from a lease, is of the same force and effect, whether it arises in pais (from the mere transfer of the possession) or under a written lease. Mr. Bigelow treats all such estoppels as in pais. They are, of course, legal in character. Big. on Estop., p. lviii (outline).

silence, led another to take a position in which the assertion of the legal title would be contrary to equity and good conscience.¹

§ 844. Different classes of cases.—Thus, if one having title to land, intentionally induces another to purchase from one who has no title, a court of equity will not permit him to assert his title and defeat the purchaser.² And it has been held that the same consequence follows even if he only stands by in silence at a public auction sale, when he has an unrecorded title in his possession.³ But when the superior title is recorded, mere silence will not create an estoppel, and it has even been held that, in such a case, active intervention will not produce an estoppel, for the record is notice.⁴ The estoppel may take the form of a promise or assurance.⁵ Thus, where the holder of an equity of redemption assures an intending purchaser of the fee that he will not redeem, thus inducing him to purchase, he will be estopped afterwards to redeem.⁶

§ 845. Fraud in the estoppel.—The question to which courts and text writers have, perhaps, devoted most attention in connection with estoppel by conduct is, when and how far actual fraud, or intent to deceive, or such gross negligence as may in law be considered its equivalent, is essential to an estoppel. Mr. Bigelow⁷ seems to regard fraud or gross negligence as essential. The late Prof. Pomeroy, on the other hand, insisted⁸ that fraudulent intent is not essential, and that the word fraud is continually introduced in the cases simply as signifying that the repudiation of the conduct which constitutes the estoppel would be a fraud upon the rights of the person benefited by the estoppel. But Mr. Pomeroy himself lays it down

¹ Horn v. Cole, 51 N. H. 287.

² Sherrill v. Sherrill, 73 N. C. 8.

³ Saunderson v. Ballance, 2 Jones' Eq. (N. C.) 322.

⁴ Sulphine v. Dunbar, 55 Miss. 255; Staton v. Bryant, 55 Miss. 261.

⁵ Perry v. Hall, 75 Mo. 503.

⁶ Fay v. Valentine, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 40; Chapman v. Pingree, 67 Me. 198; Southard v. Sutton, 68 Me. 575.

⁷ Big. on Estoppel, 484.

⁸ 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 805.

that cases affecting legal title to land constitute an exceptional class, and that in them a fraudulent intent is necessary, chiefly on the ground¹ that such estoppels are opposed to the statute of frauds, and that it would greatly tend to the insecurity of titles if they were allowed to be affected by evidence of a light or doubtful character. If this view be correct, we have two species of estoppels by conduct, one affecting title to land, in which there must be an actual fraudulent intent (or its equivalent degree of negligence); another affecting title to personal property and contracts, which is much broader, and may be resolved, as Mr. Pomeroy clearly shows, into the still more general principle, that where one of two innocent persons, that is, persons each guiltless of an intentional, moral wrong, must suffer a loss, it must be borne by that one of them who, by his conduct, acts or omissions, has rendered the injury possible.² With great diffidence we venture to suggest that his distinction, though apparently having abundant support in the cases, is not sound; that cases affecting title to land must rest on the same general principle with all other cases, and that fraudulent intent is not essential in any case.

§ 846. The statute of frauds.—In the first place the question as to what facts are necessary to take a case out of the statute of frauds, is purely one of public policy. Courts of equity originally resorted to fraud as a ground for upsetting the statute, probably because fraud was one of their jurisdictional grounds of interference; but it must be remembered that every equitable estoppel prevents the operation of a rule of strict law, and is resorted to for that very purpose. Now, is the strict law contained in a statute, such as the statute of frauds, of such superior sanctity to that contained in ordinary common law rules that equity will violate the one and respect the other? If so, why? The answer must be that real estate titles are involved in one and not in the other. There is, then, only one case in which this sanctity of the statute will not be respected, and that is intentional deceit. But if Mr. Pomeroy's view, that the whole law of estoppel is referable to the general principle that where one of two innocent parties must suffer, he through whom the loss occurs must bear it, we are led to the curious result that in estoppels affecting real estate the exact opposite of this principle prevails, and here, in case both parties are innocent, he must suffer through whom the loss did not occur. But we do not think that the distinction is borne out by the cases. Here, as elsewhere in the law of estoppel, the word fraud is very loosely used, and sometimes is referred to the intention, and sometimes merely to the consequences, as explained above. But cases holding that acts not amounting to deceit will estop are numerous,¹ while cases cited in support of the proposition that fraud is essential do not always bear out this interpretation. The subject is so important that a brief consideration of the most recent case in the Supreme Court of the United States² seems necessary.

¹ See Storrs v. Barker, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 166.

² 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 803.

§ 847. Brant v. Virginia Coal & Iron Co.—This case, like that of Boggs v. Merced Mining Co.,³ is frequently cited in support of the proposition that fraudulent intent is necessary. Mr. Justice Field, in deciding the former case, used the following language: "For the application of that doctrine [estoppel] there must generally be some intended deception in the conduct or declarations of the party to be estopped, or such gross negligence on his part as to amount to constructive fraud, by which another has been misled to his injury. 'In all this class of cases,' says Story, 'the doctrine proceeds upon the ground of construc-

¹ Timon v. Whitehead, 58 Tex. 290; Wendell v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 344; Storrs v. Barker, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 166; Trenton Banking Co. v. Duncan, 86 N. Y. 221. The case of Bloomstein v. Clees, 3 Tenn. Ch. 433, speaks of "fraud" as essential, but it is clear from the context that the court meant not fraud in its legal sense, but such circumstances as would make refusal to abide by what had been done a fraud. Spencer v. Carr, 45 N. Y. 406, which was the case of an infant of sixteen being held not to be estopped, cannot be considered as opposed to the above case, as she was held to have had no legal or actual knowledge of the nature of the acts on which it was attempted to rest the estoppel. Hart v. Giles, 67 Mo. 175, and cases cited; Breeding v. Stamper, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 175. In Hill v. Epley, 31 Pa. St. 331, the court speaks of the doctrine as resting on fraud, yet it defines the equitable principle as being that "when a loss must befall one of two innocent persons, that one must bear it through whose act it was occasioned."

² Brant v. Va. Coal & Iron Co., 93 U. S. 326.

³ 14 Cal. 279. The opinions in both cases were by the same eminent judge.

tive fraud or of gross negligence, which in effect implies fraud. And, therefore, when the circumstances of the case repel any such inference, although there may be some degree of negligence, yet courts of equity will not grant relief. It has, accordingly, been laid down by a very learned judge, that the cases on this subject go to this result only, that there must be positive fraud, or concealment, or negligence, so gross as to amount to constructive fraud.¹ To the same purport is the language of the adjudged cases. Thus it is said, by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, that 'the primary ground of the doctrine is, that it would be a fraud in a party to assert what his previous conduct had denied, when on the faith of that denial others have acted. The element of fraud is essential, either in the intention of the party estopped, or in the effect of the evidence which he attempts to set up.'² And it would seem that to the enforcement of an estoppel of this character with respect to the title of property, such as will prevent a party from asserting his legal rights, and the effect of which will be to transfer the enjoyment of the property to another, the intention to deceive and mislead, or negligence so gross as to be culpable, should be clearly established. There are undoubtedly cases where a party may be concluded from asserting his original rights to property in consequence of his acts or conduct, in which the presence of fraud, actual or constructive, is wanting; as, where one of two innocent parties must suffer from the negligence of another, he through whose agency the negligence was occasioned will be held to bear the loss; and where one has received the fruits of a transaction, he is not permitted to deny its validity whilst retaining its benefits. But such cases are generally referable to other principles than that of equitable estoppel, although the same result is produced; thus, the first case here mentioned is the affixing of liability upon the party who from negligence indirectly occasioned the injury, and the second is the application of the doctrine of ratification or election. Be this as it may, the general ground of the application of the principle of equitable estoppel is as we have stated. It is also essential for its application with respect to the title of real property that the party claiming to have been influenced by the conduct or declarations of another to his injury was himself not only destitute of knowledge of the true state of the title, but also of any convenient and available means of acquiring such knowledge. Where the condition of the title is known to both parties, or both have the same means of ascertaining the truth, there can be no estoppel."¹ Now, the facts on which this case turned were that both parties knew, or had ample means of knowing, the title, and there was no misrepresentation in fact. Hence the court itself says: "It is difficult to see where the doctrine of equitable estoppel comes in here," and all the remarks of the court about an intent to deceive are clearly obiter. In this discussion it should be noticed that in cases in which both parties know the title, or are held chargeable with knowledge (as by the recording acts), estoppel by deceit cannot arise. And generally the principle of estoppel cannot be invoked by one who was acquainted with the character of his title, or the fact that he had none.² To sustain an estoppel because of an omission to speak, there must be both the specific opportunity and the apparent duty to speak; the party maintaining silence must have known that some one was relying thereon, and was either acting or about to act, as he would not have done had the truth been told, and so when a proper search in the records would have disclosed the defect in the title, mere silence will not work an estoppel.³

¹ See 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 391.

² See Hill v. Epley, 31 Pa. St. 334. See, also, Henshaw v. Bissell, 18 Wall. 271; Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 368; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23; Commonwealth v. Moltz, 10 Pa. St. 531; Copeland v. Copeland, 28 Me. 539; Delaplaine v. Hitchcock, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 16; Hawes v. Marchant, 1 Curt. C. C. 136; Zuchtman v. Roberts, 109 Mass. 53.

§ 848. Distinction between right and remedy in equity.—It must be carefully noted that there is here a distinction often overlooked by the courts between the right to set up an equitable estoppel in cases falling short of fraud, and the question as to whether the equitable estoppel, admitting one to exist, is available in suits at law. The first question, which we have just been considering, whether an estoppel exists, may be determined either way without affecting the second, which is solely one of procedure. In a recent leading case in Michigan,¹ which contains a very full collection of authorities, the real question at issue was the right of a plaintiff to recover on an equitable estoppel in an action of ejectment. But the case is discussed by the learned court, as if the question had been whether the doctrines of estoppel were different (as suggested above) in the case of real and personal estates.

¹ Brant v. Va. Coal & Iron Co., 93 U. S. 326, 335. Citing Crest v. Jack, 3 Watts (Pa.), 240; Knouff v. Thompson, 16 Pa. St. 361.

² Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 447; Neal v. Gregory, 19 Fla. 356.

³ Viele v. Judson, 82 N. Y. 32.

§ 849. Is equitable estoppel available at law?—It has been held in many cases that estoppel by conduct is not available at law,² but the Supreme Court of the United States in two recent cases,³ and the State courts in many instances,⁴ have held that such estoppel constitutes a good defense to a common law action of ejectment. Of course the authority of the Federal courts in this matter must be considered conclusive, as the equitable jurisdiction in these tribunals is still sharply distinguished from the legal.⁵ In Hayes v. Livingston,⁶ as we have seen, the Supreme Court of Michigan, in a learned opinion (delivered by Cooley, C. J.), examined the question whether ejectment could be maintained on the strength of an estoppel in pais, and held that it could not. In another chapter⁷ it is suggested that equitable issues like this ought to be kept sharply discriminated from legal issues, triable by a jury, and this matter is adverted to by the Supreme Court of Michigan. The ground taken by the Michigan court is consistent with the general principles which govern trials of title. The

¹ Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384.

² Wimmer v. Ficklin, 14 Bush (Ky.), 193; Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384; Bigelow on Estoppel, 596, and cases cited; Winslow v. Cooper, 104 Ill. 235; Kelly v. Hendricks, 57 Ala. 193; Hendricks v. Kelly, 64 Ala. 388; Allen v. Kellam, 69 Ala. 442.

³ Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 68; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578.

⁴ Big. on Est., 599, and cases cited.

⁵ See post, Ch. XXXIV.

⁶ 34 Mich. 384.

⁷ See Chapter XXXI.

point of difficulty now is to determine how equitable matters in an action at law which cannot be introduced by the plaintiff, may still be made available by way of defense. The point seems to call for further elucidation by the courts.¹

§ 850. Estoppel by deed.—Warranty.—After-acquired title.—The question with regard to estoppel by deed which has in modern times caused most controversy is, whether the estoppel effected by a warranty in the case of an after-acquired title, actually passes the estate to the grantor, or merely precludes the grantor from setting it up. The question is of great importance as it affects innocent purchasers. If the estoppel actually conveys the title, it cuts off the innocent purchaser who had bought an apparently valid title, and protects the purchaser who has bought when there was no title. Thus, where A., having no title, sells to B. with warranty; and subsequently acquiring title, to C., if the estoppel passes title, the estate inures to the benefit of B. This doctrine, under the registry acts, leads to the practical inconvenience that purchasers of estates have no certain way of protecting themselves against losing their property by estoppel. In the case supposed, C., having searched the records, and found that at a given time A. had title, considers himself safe in taking title from him. But if the estoppel has the effect suggested he would not be safe unless he were to search the records during the entire lifetime of A. to see that he had not at some time when he had no title, conveyed it to a third person with warranty, and so, also, in the case of every successive holder. The subject, and the cases have been learnedly examined by several writers.² In Massachusetts it is settled that the title actually passes by means of the estoppel, so as to cut off innocent purchasers.³ In Virginia, on the other hand, the opposite conclusion has been reached.⁴ Full collections of all the authorities are to be

¹ See this case followed, Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45; DeMill v. Moffat, 49 Mich. 125.

² Bigelow on Estoppel, 348-381; Rawle on Covenants for Title, Ch. XI; 2 Smith's Lea. Cas. (8th Am. ed.) 838 et seq.

³ Knight v. Thayer, 125 Mass. 25.

⁴ Burners v. Keran, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 42.

found in the works already quoted, and we cannot do more here than to express the opinion that the arguments against the transfer of the title by virtue of the estoppel, when the question is open, seem to be conclusive. It should be observed that many decisions speak of the estoppel passing the estate, when the question merely affects the grantor and his heirs (who, as they take without consideration, stand equitably in his place) or where, at any rate, no innocent third person is affected. These cases can hardly be considered of binding force where the question is between an innocent assignee of the grantor, after title acquired, and the grantee claiming by virtue of the estoppel.¹

¹ Mickles v. Townsend, 18 N. Y. 575; Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336; Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 39; Boston & W. R. R. Co. v. Sparhawk, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 469; Massie v. Sebastian, 4 Bibb (Ky.), 436; Logan v. Steele, 4 Mon. (Ky.) 430; Logan v. Moore, 7 Dana (Ky.), 76; Philly v. Sanders, 11 Ohio St. 490; Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 60; Rigg v. Cook, 9 Ill. 348; Robertson v. Gaines, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 383; Kennedy v. McCartney, 4 Port. (Ala.) 159; Jackson v. Hubble, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 613; Jackson v. Winslow, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 18; Jackson v. Bradford, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 619; Pelletreau v. Jackson, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 119; Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 178; Kellogg v. Wood, 4 Paige (N. Y.), 578; Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 528, 567; Funk v. Newcomer, 10 Md. 301; Packard v. Agawam Mut. F. I. Co., 2 Gray (Mass.), 334; Skinner v. Starner, 24 Pa. St. 123; Washabaugh v. Entriaken, 34 Pa. St. 74; Bush v. Marshall, 6 How. 291; Hoyt v. Dimon, 5 Day (Conn.), 479; Dart v. Dart, 7 Conn. 250; Fox v. Widgey, 4 Me. 214; Lawry v. Williams, 13 Me. 282; Ham v. Ham, 14 Me. 351; Pike v. Galvin, 29 Me. 185; Kimball v. Blaisdell, 5 N. H. 535; Morrison v. Underwood, 20 N. H. 369; Kimball v. Schoff, 40 N. H. 196; Robertson v. Wilson, 38 N. H. 48; Hayes v. Tabor, 41 N. H. 521; Ross v. Adams, 28 N. J. Law, 160; Hassell v. Walker, 5 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 270; Jewell v. Porter, 31 N. H. 34; Benick v. Bowman, 3 Jones' (N. C.) Eq. 314; Mays v. Lewis, 4 Tex. 38; Wade v. Lindsey, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 407; Gough v. Bell, 21 N. J. Law, 165; Moore v. Rake, 26 N. J. Law, 574; Brundred v. Walker, 12 N. J. Eq., 140; Douglass v. Scott, 5 Ohio, 194; Barton v. Morris, 15 Ohio, 408; Doswell v. Buchanan, 3 Leigh (Va.), 376; Drake v. Root, 2 Col. 685; Pratt v. Pratt, 96 Ill. 184; People v. Herbel, 96 Ill. 384; Dugan v. Follett, 100 Ill. 581; Scoffins v. Grandstaff, 12 Kan. 467; Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223; House v. McCormick, 57 N. Y. 310; Broadwell v. Phillips, 30 Ohio St. 255; Wilson v. McEwan, 7 Ore. 87; Bailey v. Hoppin, 12 R. I. 560; Robertson v. Sharpton, 17 S. C. 592; Cross v. Martin, 46 Vt. 14; Prouty v. Mather, 49 Vt. 415; Burtner v. Keran, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 42; Mann v. Young, 1 Wash. Ter. (N. S.) 454; North v. Henneberry, 44 Wis. 306; McCarthy v. Mann, 19 Wall. 20; White v. Patten, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 324; Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 612; Bush v. Cooper, 18 How. 82; aff'g s. c. 26 Miss. 599; Boone v. Armstrong, 87 Ind. 168; Gotham v. Gotham, 55 N. H. 440; DeWolf v. Haydn, 24 Ill. 525; Hill v. West, 8 Ohio, 226; Nash v. Spofford, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 192; Wellborn v. Finley, 7 Jones' (N. C.) Law, 228; King v. Rea, 56 Ind. 1; Rawle on Covenants for Title (3d ed.), 433; Jackson v. Vanderheyden, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 167; Martin v. Dwelly, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 9; Wight v. Shaw, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 56; Den d. Hopper v. Demarest, 21 N. J. Law, 541; Preston v. Evans, 56 Md. 476; Bank of America v. Banks, 101 U. S. 240; Sheffield v. Griffin, 21 Kan. 417; Hannah v. Collins, 94 Ind. 201; Sherman v. Kane, 46 N. Y. Superior Ct. 325; s. c. on appeal, 86 N. Y. 68; Bixby v. Bent, 59 Cal. 522; Norcum v. Gaty, 19 Mo. 65; Teff v. Munson, 57 N. Y. 97.

§ 851. No estoppel through void or illegal contract.—To work an estoppel, the contract between the parties must be valid. And therefore in the case of an illegal, fraudulent, or void deed, no estoppel can arise.¹ Thus, between landlord and tenant, where the land leased is reserved by the Government, and its occupation is contrary to law, the estoppel cannot be set up, and the courts will take judicial notice of the fact that the land is so reserved.²

§ 852. Estoppel must be direct.—Again, a party to such an instrument is not estopped in an action not founded on the deed, but collateral to it. In such cases the recitals may be evidence, but are not conclusive.³

§ 853. No estoppel against grantee.—It is settled that between grantor and grantee there is no estoppel or other principle which prevents the grantee setting up a paramount title. The estoppel exists only where there is an obligation, express or implied, that the occupant will at some time, or in some event, surrender the possession.⁴ And the rule applies with equal force to a grantee of an estate for life as to a grantee in fee.⁵ But the rule that the vendee is not estopped to deny the vendor's title is not applicable to a case in which the only title asserted or claimed by the grantee is the precise title he acquired from the grantor.⁶

§ 854. Estoppel against a State.—Title may be acquired against a State by estoppel in pais.⁷

¹ Big. on Estoppel, 286, and cases cited.

² Dupas v. Wassell, 1 Dill. 213; Uhlig v. Garrison, 2 Dak. 71, 99 (see Appellant's brief for full collection of authorities); French v. Lancaster, 2 Dak. 346. See § 358.

³ Big. on Estoppel, 290.

⁴ Blight v. Rochester, 7 Wheaton, 535; Grosholz v. Newman, 21 Wall. 481; Bigelow v. Finch, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 498; Averill v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 180; Sparrow v. Kingman, 1 N. Y. 242; Henry v. Reichert, 22 Hun (N. Y.), 394; Bigelow on Estoppel, 283, 377, and cases cited.

⁵ Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 608. Compare Traver v. Baker, 8 Sawy. 535, where a quitclaim deed was held to estop the grantor because it warranted the possession.

⁶ Wilcoxon v. Osborn, 77 Mo. 621.

⁷ State of Indiana v. Milk, 11 Biss. 197; citing Commonwealth v. Andre, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 224; Commonwealth v. Pejepsut Prop'rs, 10 Mass. 155; People v. Society, &c., 2 Paine, 545; State v. Bailey, 19 Ind. 452; People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463; Cahn v. Barnes, 7 Sawy. 48. See Bigelow on Estoppel, 278.

§ 855. Pleading estoppel. — The opinion in the case of *Raynor v. Timerson*¹ has been cited as tending to hold that evidence of an estoppel against the plaintiff is admissible under a general denial, but the point was not involved in the case, and it is not an authority for that proposition. The question was incidentally noticed in Creque v. Sears,² where it is said that the essence of an action of ejectment is the right to the possession ; a denial of such right controverts a fact essential to plaintiff's recovery, and hence any evidence showing that he never had any right of recovery against the defendant is admissible under the general issue. The subject is not free from doubt. An equitable estoppel may be proved under the plea of "not guilty" in trespass to try title in Texas.³ The rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States on this subject is that if a party has an opportunity to plead an estoppel and voluntarily omits to do so, he waives the estoppel ; but if he have not the opportunity to show the estoppel by pleading, he may exhibit the matter in evidence.⁴ It is said by Mr. Bigelow⁵ that it is well settled at common law that an estoppel need not be pleaded, but that this rule has been changed by statute in some of the States. This statement does not seem to be accurate. At common law the rule just cited from the decision of the Supreme Court is probably the correct one ; while the only change introduced by statute is that, under the modern system of code pleading, the rule that affirmative defenses must be set out would seem to reinforce the rule that estoppel should be pleaded when it is possible. And this applies to both sides. Thus matter of estoppel may be relied on as evidence by plaintiff where the only defense is the general issue, because the estoppel in such case cannot be pleaded ; but when the matter out of which the estoppel arises is specially pleaded,

¹ 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 518. See Phillips v. Blair, 38 Iowa, 649.

² 17 Hun (N. Y.), 124. Compare Suttle v. Richmond F. & P. R. R. Co., 76 Va. 291.

³ Mayer v. Ramsey, 46 Tex. 371. But see Wood v. Ostram, 29 Ind. 177; Etcheborne v. Auzerais, 45 Cal. 121; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23; Clarke v. Huber, 25 Cal. 593.

⁴ Phila. W. & B. R. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. 307, 335.

⁵ Big. on Estoppel, 585.

then the estoppel must be specially replied.¹ But cases often arise where an estoppel appears in the case whether the parties plead it or omit to do so. Thus in *Brown v. Bowen*² the New York Court of Appeals affirmed a judgment of the court below on the strength of an estoppel to which "the attention of neither court nor counsel was drawn on the trial." It was said that it was useless to grant a new trial because the facts constituting the estoppel were conclusive.³

¹ Hayes v. Mutual Prot. Assn., 76 Va. 225; and see Knight v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 14 Phila. (Pa.) 187; Bray v. Marshall, 75 Mo. 327; Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Harris, 8 Neb. 140; Coleman v. Pearce, 26 Minn. 123; Turnipseed v. Hudson, 50 Miss. 429; Mayer v. Ramsey, 46 Tex. 371; Wood v. Ostram, 29 Ind. 177; Ransom v. Stanberry, 22 Iowa, 334; Phillips v. Van Schaick, 37 Iowa, 229; Dale v. Turner, 34 Mich. 405; Warder v. Baldwin, 51 Wis. 450. In Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 483, it is said that estoppel in pass cannot be pleaded, but the remark is obiter, and must not be relied upon as stating a true rule of law. Pleas of estoppel must always be precise and certain, leaving nothing to intendment. Stewart v. Beck, 90 Ind. 458.

² 30 N. Y. 519.

³ Ib. 541, 542.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

BOUNDARIES.

| | |
|--|--|
| § 856. Construction of grants. | § 863. Destruction of monuments. |
| 857. Land bounded on a street or river. | 864. Monuments erected under deed. |
| 858. Leading cases. | 865. Remedies.—Equitable jurisdiction. |
| 859. Particular words and phrases. | 866. Statutory remedies. |
| 860. Grants on the sea-shore. | 867. Agreements as to boundaries. |
| 861. General rules. | 868. Estoppel. |
| 862. Natural and ascertained objects govern course and distance. | 869. Conclusions. |

§ 856. Construction of grants.—The principle of most common application in the determination of boundaries, or the extent of grants, is that the intention of the parties as expressed in the deeds which establish them must furnish the guide of construction; but this is a principle of equal importance in all contracts, and is very general in its nature. The secondary rules elaborated by the courts in various classes of cases are so numerous that it is impossible to give them all, and we shall confine ourselves to a few of the most important.

§ 857. Land bounded on a street or river.—"It may be considered," says Chancellor Kent, "as the general rule, that a grant of land bounded upon a highway or river carries the fee in the highway or river to the centre of it, provided the grantor at the time owned to the centre and there be no words or specific description as to show a contrary intent."¹ This, so far as a way is concerned, is on the ground that, as the public has what is practically a perpetual easement² in the road, the grantor can have no object in retaining any interest, and must, therefore, have intended to convey all that he had. The case of a river, in which there is very often no public easement at all, is generally treated as similar to that of the road. It is manifest, however, that land under water, in the case of great rivers used for commerce and such as flow by densely populated districts, may become, and continually does become, of immense value; and a great deal of confusion would be removed from the cases if this distinction of fact were more frequently kept in view. It is also clear from the early cases cited by Kent,¹ and from the qualifications incorporated in the rule itself, that it is not strictly a matter of law, but a mere inference from general experience. From this and similar inferences of fact, the courts have endeavored to evolve rules of construction, of which the most comprehensive is the following, laid down by Gray, J., in City of Boston v. Richardson.² "Whenever land is described as bounded by other land, or by a building or structure, the name of which, according to its legal and ordinary meaning, includes the title in the land of which it has been made part, as a house, a mill, a wharf, or the like, the side of the land or structure referred to as a boundary is the limit of the grant; but when the boundary line is simply by an object, whether natural or artificial, the name of which is used in ordinary speech as defining a boundary, and not as describing a title in fee, and which does not in its description or nature include the earth as far down as the grantor owns, and yet which has width, as in the case of a way, a river, a ditch, a wall, a fence, a tree, or a stake and stones, then the centre of the thing so running over or standing on the land is the boundary of the lot granted."

¹ 3 Kent's Com. 433, 434.

² See § 753a; also Chap. VIII.

§ 858. Leading cases.—If we examine a few of the important cases, we shall find that the courts have generally been governed by the rule of intention as far as it could be drawn from the deeds or circumstances of possession. In Child v. Starr,³ it was held by the New York Court of Errors, that a description of a lot running eastwardly to the Genesee river, and thence along the shore of said river, excluded the bed of the stream, the use of the word

¹ Stevens v. Whistler, 11 East, 51; Headlam v. Hedley, Holt's N. P. 463; Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & Stu. 190.

² 13 Allen (Mass.), 146, 154.

³ 4 Hill (N. Y.), 369.

"shore" making it clear that the grantor had not meant to go beyond it. In The City of Boston v. Richardson,¹ an ancient record showed possession of a house and lot "bounded with the street." It was held that this carried the grant to the center, and that the jury should have been so positively instructed. In Kings County Fire Ins. Co. v. Stevens,² the description began "at a point on the southerly side of the Wallabout Bridge road," adjoining land of S., thence by certain courses and distances "to the Wallabout Bridge road," thence "along said road to the place of beginning." The court held the road-bed excluded. On the other hand, a description beginning "on the northerly side" of a road, and thence running "by said road," has been held by the Supreme Court of Maine, not to be sufficient to overcome the ordinary presumption.³

§ 859. Particular words and phrases.—It is idle to attempt to collect all the cases of descriptions of boundaries to be met with in the books. An examination of the cases will show that the general rule of intention is always held in view by the courts; but judges do not in all cases take the same view of the effect of the same words.

§ 860. Grants on the sea-shore.—The construction of grants, bounding on the sea, is governed by the same general principles. In Massachusetts, when an abutter on the shore owns the flats, his intention to retain or convey the flats is to be gathered from the words employed,⁴ and the general principle is said to be that a boundary by the tide water passes the flats, while a boundary by the land under the water excludes them. Thus, a grant bounded "by the harbor;"⁵ "or the sea or salt water;"⁶ or "the

¹ 13 Allen (Mass.), 146.

² 87 N. Y. 287.

³ Cottle v. Young, 59 Me. 110.

⁴ 2 Dane's Abr. 691, 699; Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 85, 94; Drake v. Curtis, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 395, 413. Doubtful words are to be taken most strongly against a private grantor. Adams v. Frothingham, 3 Mass. 352, 361; Saltonstall v. Prop'rs of Long Wharf, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 195, 201; Winslow v. Patten, 34 Me. 25. Otherwise as to public grants. Commonwealth v. City of Roxbury, 9 Gray (Mass.), 451; Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. 367, 411.

⁵ Mayhew v. Norton, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 357, 359.

⁶ Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 71, 77.

sea;"¹ by "the creek;"² on the "stream;"³ or "river;"⁴ or "bay,"⁵ carries the flats; while the flats are excluded by such words as "by the shore;"⁶ or "beach;"⁷ or "flats;"⁸ a boundary "by a way;"⁹ "by the marsh;"¹⁰ or "by a cliff,"¹¹ excludes the flats; while a private grant "on the sea or flats," being ambiguous, passes them.¹²

§ 861. General rules.—From the general principle that the intention of the parties, as expressed in the deed, governs, the courts have evolved numerous rules of construction, which are not to be taken as invariable tests, but

¹ Jackson v. Boston & W. R. R. Co. 1 Cush. (Mass.) 578; Saltonstall v. Prop'rs of Long Wharf, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 195, 200.

² Harlow v. Fisk, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 302.

³ Lapish v. Bangor Bank, 8 Me. 85, 92, 93.

⁴ Moore v. Griffin, 22 Me. 350.

⁵ Partridge v. Luce, 36 Me. 19.

⁶ Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 439.

⁷ Niles v. Patch, 13 Gray (Mass.), 254, 257.

⁸ Parsons, C. J., in Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 439; Fletcher, J., in Saltonstall v. Prop'rs of Long Wharf, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 195, 200.

⁹ Codman v. Winslow, 10 Mass. 146, 149.

¹⁰ Rust v. Boston Mill Corporation, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 158, 166.

¹¹ Barker v. Bates, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 256, 261.

¹² Saltonstall v. Prop'rs of Long Wharf, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 195. These cases may be found cited in the learned note of the reporter in the case of Commonwealth v. City of Roxbury, 9 Gray (Mass.), 451, 525. See, also, Sibley v. Holden, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 249; Tyler v. Hammond, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 193; Phillips v. Bowers, 7 Gray (Mass.), 21; Smith v. Slocomb, 9 Gray (Mass.), 36; s. c. 11 Gray (Mass.), 280; Revere v. Leonard, 1 Mass. 91; Oxton v. Groves, 68 Me. 371; Cottle v. Young, 59 Me. 105; Perkins v. Oxford, 66 Me. 545; Johnson v. Anderson, 18 Me. 76; Pike v. Munroe, 36 Me. 309; Robinson v. White, 42 Me. 209, 218; Cold Spring Iron Works v. Inhabitants of Tolland, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 495, 496; Bucknam v. Bucknam, 12 Me. 465; Newhall v. Ireson, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 598; Canal Appraisers v. People, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 590; Comm'rs of Canal Fund v. Kempshall, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 454; Warner v. Southworth, 6 Conn. 471, 474; Fisher v. Smith, 9 Gray (Mass.), 444; Hollenbeck v. Rowley, 8 Allen (Mass.), 473; Rice v. County of Worcester, 11 Gray (Mass.), 283, note; Banks v. Ogden, 2 Wall. 68; Bissell v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 23 N. Y. 61; Marsh v. Burt, 34 Vt. 289; Berridge v. Ward, 10 C. B. [N. S.] 400; Reg. v. Board of Works, 4 B. & S. 548, 553; Webber v. Eastern R. R. Co., 2 Metc. (Mass.) 151; Codman v. Evans, 1 Allen (Mass.), 446; Brainard v. Boston & N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.), 407; Winslow v. King, 14 Gray (Mass.), 321; Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. v. Chandler, 9 Allen (Mass.), 159; Berry & Goodman's Case, 2 Leon. 147, 148; Holmes v. Bellingham, 7 C. B. [N. S.] 329; Jones v. Soulard, 24 How. 41; Lunt v. Holland, 14 Mass. 149; Hatch v. Dwight, 17 Mass. 289; Bradford v. Cressey, 45 Me. 9; Phinney v. Watts, 9 Gray (Mass.), 269; Harlow v. Fisk, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 304; Chapman v. Edmands, 3 Allen (Mass.), 512; Dunlap v. Stetson, 4 Mason, 366; Thomas v. Hatch, 3 Sumner, 178, 179; Moore v. Griffin, 22 Me. 350; Ipswich Petitioners, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 431; State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195; Lord v. Comrs. of Sydney, 12 Moore's P. C. 473; Halsey v. McCormick, 13 N. Y. 296; Seneca Nation v. Knight, 23 N. Y. 498; English v. Brennan, 60 N. Y. 609; White's Bank v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 65; Dunham v. Williams, 37 N. Y. 251.

should always be applied in the light of the general principle from which they spring. It must be observed that under our system of law such rules are of vastly more importance than they can be under systems derived from the Roman law, inasmuch as contradictions or misapplications of them, by the court, constitute misdirections to the jury, and are cause for a reversal of the judgment.¹

§ 862. Natural and ascertained objects govern course and distance.—This rule is not an arbitrary one, but is derived from experience of the fact that in describing boundaries, visible objects, standing or erected on the ground, are less likely to be mistaken than direction and distance, which are very often matters of inference or conjecture. Consequently, whenever known monuments are referred to as boundaries, they must govern, though neither courses, distances, nor contents correspond.²

But in many cases courses and distances, consisting for instance, as in the newer States and Territories, of lines established by government surveys, may be more certain than monuments, and in a recent case in North Carolina³ it has been said that it has never been decided in that State which should control, a marked tree or the line of another tract, when both are called for and found to be inconsistent. "Much," the Supreme Court of that State says, "it would seem in such a case, should depend upon the character of the line called for, its age, certainty, and length, and stability of its reputation." The cardinal test is, of course, in all such cases certainty, and monuments

¹ As in City of Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen (Mass.), 146, 161.

² Land Co. v. Saunders, 103 U. S. 316; Preston v. Bowmar, 6 Wheat. 580; Newsom v. Pryor, 7 Wheat. 7; Johnson v. McMillan, 1 Strob. (S. C.) Law, 143; Bruckner v. Lawrence, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 19; Wendell v. People, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 183; Seaman v. Hogeboom, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 398; Pollard v. Shively, 5 Col. 309; Ayers v. Watson, 113 U. S. 594, 605; Stafford v. King, 30 Tex. 257; Haynes v. Young, 36 Me. 557; Beal v. Gordon, 55 Me. 482; Oxton v. Groves, 68 Me. 371; Cudney v. Early, 4 Paige (N. Y.), 209; Jackson v. Widger, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 723; White v. Williams, 48 N. Y. 347; Jones v. Smith, 73 N. Y. 205; Graybeal v. Powers, 76 N. C. 66; Nash v. Wilmington & W. R. R. Co., 67 N. C. 413; McEowen v. Lewis, 26 N. J. Law, 451; Keenan v. Cavanaugh, 44 Vt. 268; Kellogg v. Mullen, 45 Mo. 571; Nivin v. Stevens, 5 Harr. (Del.) 272; Piercy v. Crandall, 34 Cal. 334; Lodge v. Barnett, 46 Pa. St. 477; Lewis v. Lewis, 4 Oregon, 177; Adams v. Alkire, 20 W. Va. 480; Dogan v. Seekright, 4 H. & M. (Va.) 125.

³ Murray v. Spencer, 88 N. C. 357.

are preferred to courses and distances only because and only when they are more certain.¹

§ 863. Destruction of monuments.—It frequently happens that in the lapse of time monuments originally fixed are obliterated or destroyed. In such cases parol evidence is admissible to show where they stood at the time the description was inserted in the deed.²

§ 864. Monuments erected under deed.—Another rule of construction is that where monuments are referred to in a deed, which at the time do not exist but which are afterwards established by the parties under and in accordance with the deed, these will be taken to be the monuments intended, and the facts may be proved by parol.³

§ 865. Remedies.—Equitable jurisdiction.—The ordinary remedy to settle questions of disputed boundary is ejectment, or the statutory substitutes for it. As the line of demarcation between estates determines the extent of the possession on either side, and the right to possession is a legal right, a contest about the line necessitates a trial by jury, and equity cannot be resorted to in such cases.⁴ Never-

¹ Higinbotham v. Stoddard, 72 N. Y. 94; White v. Luning, 93 U. S. 514; Jones v. Burgett, 46 Tex. 284; Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. R. Co. v. Stigeler, 61 N. Y. 348; Miller v. Bryan, 86 N. C. 167.

² Robinson v. Kime, 70 N. Y. 147, 154, and cases cited.

³ Makepeace v. Bancroft, 12 Mass. 469; Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 261, 267. Among the numerous rules of construction resorted to by the courts for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, we may notice the following: A particular description will control a general description: Herrick v. Hopkins, 23 Me. 217; Nutting v. Herbert, 35 N. H. 120; McEowen v. Lewis, 26 N. J. L. 457. The whole instrument is to be looked at, and mistakes and misdescriptions rejected. Abbott v. Abbott, 53 Me. 356, 361; Drew v. Drew, 28 N. H. 489; Berry v. Wright, 14 Tex. 270; Raymond v. Coffey, 5 Oregon, 132; Seaman v. Hogeboom, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 398; Johnson v. Simpson, 36 N. H. 91; Shewalter v. Pirner, 55 Mo. 218; Beal v. Gordon, 55 Me. 482; Gibson v. Bogy, 28 Mo. 478; Mizell v. Simmons, 79 N. C. 182. In the absence of monuments the general rule is, that courses and distances control quantity. Seaman v. Hogeboom, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 398; Opdyke v. Stephens, 28 N. J. L. 83; Drew v. Swift, 46 N. Y. 204; Bagley v. Morrill, 46 Vt. 94. It is sometimes said that distance must yield to course. Hoffman v. Riehl, 27 Mo. 554; Wilson v. Inloes, 6 Gill (Md.), 121. Quantity is usually regarded as the least important particular in a description (Petts v. Gaw, 15 Pa. St. 218; Doe d. Phillips v. Porter, 3 Ark. 18), and yields to monuments, courses and distances. Nichols v. Turney, 15 Conn. 101; Campbell v. Johnson, 44 Mo. 247; Chandler v. McCard, 38 Me. 564; Fuller v. Carr, 33 N. J. Law, 157. It will be seen that all these rules are but variations of the general rule that the less certain description must yield to the more certain, a principle not peculiar to deeds, but applicable to all contracts.

⁴ Wolcott v. Robbins, 26 Conn. 236; Norris' Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 275; Wetherbee v. Dunn, 36 Cal. 249; Hale v. Darter, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 79; Haskell v. Allen, 23

theless, from very early times, the jurisdiction of chancery to fix disputed boundaries, where these have become obscure, has been recognized by the courts, but only in cases in which some special equity attaches and there is no adequate relief at law. If these circumstances do not exist, the attempt to obtain equitable relief is regarded as a mere ejectment bill, which, as we have already seen, will never lie.¹ Among the grounds of equitable interference may be mentioned multiplicity of suits, irreparable mischief not easily measured by damages, fraud or mistake.²

§ 866. Statutory remedies.—In many of the States laws have been passed establishing a jurisdiction to settle boundaries by commission; and in these cases the question has arisen whether these statutes merely establish, in a new way, the old equitable jurisdiction, or add something to it, and if so, what? The cases on this point are by no means harmonious.³ The view taken in Pennsylvania is, that the statute of that State does not increase the equitable jurisdiction. In Connecticut the cases do not seem to be reconcilable with each other.⁴ In Rhode Island the view taken seems to be that the object of the statute is to enable the court simply to restore lost bounds, where there are no special matters of equitable cognizance. This would leave the old equitable jurisdiction still in existence with a new jurisdiction added, which the court says, “in no way interferes with common law remedies” (i. e., as to title and possession).⁵ The great question as to all these statutes is whether the intention is to dispose in an equitable procedure of matters properly triable only at law. This the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania declares in the cases above cited, is a vi-

Me. 448; Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 59; Fraleigh v. Peters, 12 Bush (Ky.), 469; Doggett v. Hart, 5 Fla. 215; Wolfe v. Scarborough, 2 Ohio St. 361.

¹ Tillmes v. Marsh, 67 Pa. St. 507; ante, § 169.

² Boyd v. Dowie, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 237; Deveney v. Gallagher, 20 N. J. Eq. 33; Stockham v. Browning, 18 N. J. Eq. 390; Merriman v. Russell, 2 Jones' Eq. (N. C.) 470; O'Donnell v. Kelsey, 10 N. Y. 412, 415; Aborn v. Smith, 11 R. I. 594; Thornton v. Grant, 10 R. I. 477.

³ Norris' Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 275; Tillmes v. Marsh, 67 Pa. St. 507.

⁴ Perry v. Pratt, 31 Conn. 433; West Hartford Eccles. Soc. v. First Bap. Church, 35 Conn. 117.

⁵ Washington Co. v. Matteson, 11 R. I. 550, 555.

olation of the constitutional right of the citizen, and cannot be done.

§ 867. Agreements as to boundaries.—We have already considered the question of possession under a mistake,¹ and the effect of erroneously located boundary lines,² as applied to adverse possession. (The subject is not free from doubt, but we believe the better rule to be that an agreement by adjoining owners as to a boundary line, followed by the usual acts which are ordinarily evidence of adverse possession, up to such line, will confer a complete title upon the occupant although the location of the line was erroneous. /

§ 868. Estoppel.—To establish an equitable estoppel, or estoppel by conduct, it is frequently said, as we have seen, that fraud is essential, and that the representation on which the estoppel rests must have been made with knowledge of the truth to one ignorant of it.³ This principle has been applied to questions of boundary in a number of cases which hold that where an incorrect line is established there must be knowledge of the true boundary by one party and ignorance of it by the other, to create an estoppel within the period of limitation.⁴ Other decisions, however, hold that an agreement as to a disputed boundary line, followed by improvements made by the defendant on the faith of the agreement, or, according to some of the authorities, by acquiescence, will estop the claimant from asserting that the line is in fact erroneous.⁵ If the agreement, however, is one to establish

¹ See § 759.

² See § 760.

³ Bigelow on Estoppel, 519.

⁴ Proprs. of Liverpool Wharf v. Prescott, 7 Allen (Mass.), 494; Thayer v. Bacon, 3 Allen (Mass.), 163; Boston & W. R. R. Co. v. Sparkhawk, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 469; Brewer v. Boston & W. R. R. Co., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 478; Big. on Estoppel, 524; Rutherford v. Tracy, 48 Mo. 325; Davenport v. Turpin, 43 Cal. 597; Kincaid v. Dornmey, 51 Mo. 552; Louks v. Kenniston, 50 Vt. 116; Spiller v. Scribner, 36 Vt. 245.

⁵ Vosburgh v. Teator, 32 N. Y. 563; Corkhill v. Landers, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 218; Lavery v. Moore, 33 N. Y. 658; Dewey v. Bordwell, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 66; Reed v. McCourt, 41 N. Y. 435; Baldwin v. Brown, 16 N. Y. 359; Jordan v. Deaton, 23 Ark. 704; Reed v. Farr, 35 N. Y. 113; Stanwood v. McLellan, 48 Me. 275; Combs v. Cooper, 5 Minn. 254; McArthur v. Henry, 35 Texas, 801; Kellogg v. Smith, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 375; Dolde v. Vodicka, 49 Mo. 98. See Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381, 384; Stewart v. Carleton, 31 Mich. 270; Joyce v. Williams, 26 Mich. 332; Ratcliffe v. Cary, 4 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 8; Hagey v. Detweiler, 35 Pa. St. 409; Hefner v. Downing, 57 Tex. 576; Cooper v. Austin, 58 Tex. 494; Medlin v. Wilkins, a new line by parol where the boundary was not indefinite or uncertain, then it would probably be void by the statute of frauds. But when a disputed line is fixed and adopted by a parol agreement of the parties, it binds them, as we have said, not by way of transfer of title, but by estoppel.¹ The law favors agreements to settle controversies of this character. Such an agreement is binding, though the period necessary to confer title by adverse possession has not expired,² for title by adverse possession is not the question considered; and, when followed by the acts and course of conduct indicated, is not considered to be within the statute of frauds.³

§ 869. Conclusions.—It is not altogether possible to reconcile these decisions. Mr. Bigelow, in his work on Estoppel, suggests that the doctrine of the Massachusetts cases above cited should be followed. But the weight of authority seems to be against these cases. The following are the conclusions to which the current of decision seems to point: First. In cases where there is ignorance on one side, and knowledge and misrepresentation on the other, the strict doctrine of estoppel applies. Second. Where there is the establishment of a disputed boundary line, followed by actual improvements, the change of situation is held, in most States, to work an estoppel. Third. Where there is simply a parol settlement of a disputed boundary, followed by occupation without improvements, it does not seem to be clear whether or not this works an estoppel.⁴

60 Tex. 409; Davis v. Smith, 61 Tex. 18; Kinsey v. Satterthwaite, 88 Ind. 342; Main v. Killinger, 90 Ind. 165; Hartung v. Witte, 59 Wis. 285; Johnson v. Brown, 63 Cal. 391; Pritchard v. Young, 74 Me. 419; Trussel v. Lewis, 13 Neb. 415; Hass v. Plautz, 56 Wis. 105; Cooper v. Vierra, 59 Cal. 283; Pangburn v. Miles, 10 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 42; Parkinson v. McQuaid, 54 Wis. 473.

¹ Vosburgh v. Teator, 32 N. Y. 561.

² Smith v. Hamilton, 20 Mich. 433.

³ Kellum v. Smith, 65 Pa. St. 86. See Jordan v. Deaton, 23 Ark. 704; Orr v. Hadley, 36 N. H. 575; Palmer v. Anderson, 63 N. C. 365; Acton v. Dooley, 74 Mo. 63; Davis v. Townsend, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 333; Jamison v. Petit, 6 Bush (Ky.), 669. See § 760.

⁴ See Bramble v. Kingsbury, 39 Ark. 131, where the controversy was over a strip of land on which a house had been erected, and it was held that the estoppel barred disturbance of the possession, although the plaintiff was allowed to prevail in the ejectment. This is not in accordance with the principles governing in such actions; and the case may probably be better supported on another ground mentioned by the court, that the right to maintain the house on the strip constituted an easement appurtenant.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

EJECTMENT IN FEDERAL COURTS.

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 870. State law binding in Federal Courts. 871. Exceptions to the rule. 872. State rules of evidence. 873. Rules of pleading and practice. 874. Amendments. 875. Jurisdiction in equity. 876. Ejectment not maintainable on equitable title. 877. Examples. 878. Equitable title no defence. 879. State statutes recognizing equitable title. 880. Robinson v. Campbell. 881. Rule not affected by the practice act. 882. Rule different in Pennsylvania. 883. Cases in conflict with the rule. 884. Exceptional cases.—Equitable estoppel. 885. Equitable relief not granted where relief at law is adequate. 886. Ejectment bill not allowable in Federal Courts. 887. Conclusiveness of a patent. 888. Wirth v. Branson. 889. Doctrine of relation.—Conflicting patents. 890. Title under United States not determined by State laws. 891. Possessory title of no avail against patent title. 892. Practice where equitable relief necessary. | § 893. Jurisdiction of Federal Courts. 894. Original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. 895. Inter-state boundaries. 896. Question of State title to lands. 897. Intervention by United States. 898. Practice. 899. Controversies between citizens of same State.—Original act and changes. 900. New theory of the jurisdiction. 901. Pecuniary limit. 902. Appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.—Federal question. 903. Title under treaty. 904. Appeals from Circuit Courts. 905. Territorial mining claim. 906. Original jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts. 907. Jurisdictional amount. 908. Different parcels. 909. Recovery of less than claim. 910. Change of residence. 911. Collusive transfers. 912. The removal statutes. 913. Ejectment for land confiscated during rebellion. 914. Title by act of Congress. 915. Ejectment on Indian title. 916. Venue. 917. Statutes of limitations in equity. 918. Pleading citizenship of parties. 919. Mandamus to compel issue of patent. |
|--|---|

§ 870. State law binding in Federal Courts.—Under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and the Acts of Congress conferring jurisdiction upon the Federal tribunals, questions relating to the title to land may come before these courts, either by virtue of their original jurisdiction, or by removal or appeal from the State courts. The most general, and perhaps the most important rule affecting all such cases, is that the State laws, and decisions of the highest State tribunals, construing the laws of the State, relating to titles and real property, are, by the Statutes of the United States, and the decisions of its courts, binding in the Federal courts.¹ Section 721 of the Revised Statutes,² provides that "the laws of the several States, except where the Constitution, treaties or statutes of the United States otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law, in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply." This is substantially the language used on the same subject by the Judiciary Act of 1789. Under this section, the United States Supreme Court has always held that local laws constituting rules of property, and especially those respecting titles, are rules of decision in the Federal courts; consequently, as we have seen,³ a State statute allowing a defendant in an ejectment action a new trial upon payment of costs, commonly called a statutory new trial, is binding in the Federal courts.⁴ The courts of the United States in the absence of legislation by Congress, recognize the statutes of limitations of the several States, and construe them in accordance with the construction given by the local tribunals. They are a rule of decision under the 34th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789. The construction given to a local statute by the highest State court is as binding upon the Federal courts as the text itself, and if the highest judicial tribunal of a State adopts new views of the proper construction of a statute, and reverses its former decision, the latest settled adjudications must ¹ 1 Stat. at Large, 92; U. S. R. S., § 721; Jackson v. Chew, 12 Wheat. 153; Henderson v. Griffin, 5 Pet. 150; Polk v. Wendal, 9 Cranch, 87; Shipp v. Miller, 2 Wheat. 316; Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. 58; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 291; Thatcher v. Powell, 6 Wheat. 119; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. 361; Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall. 35; Blanchard v. Brown, 3 Wall. 245; Sturdy v. Jackaway, 4 Wall. 174; Christy v. Pridgeon, 4 Wall. 203; League v. Egery, 24 How. 266; Tioga R. R. v. Blossburg & C. R. R., 20 Wall. 137; Kibbe v. Ditto, 93 U. S. 674; Fairfield v. County of Gallatin, 100 U. S. 47; Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 773; Barrows v. Kindred, 4 Wall. 399; United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 320; Williams v. Kirtland, 13 Wall. 306; Cowell v. Springs Co., 100 U. S. 55; Whiting v. Wellington, 10 Fed. Rep. 810 (C. C. Dist. Mass.); Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20.

² 1 Stat. L. 92, 24 Sept., 1789, Ch. XX, § 34.

³ See § 607.

⁴ Hiller v. Shattuck, 1 Flippin, 272; Equator Co. v. Hall, 106 U. S. 86; ante, § 607.

be followed.¹ But whether this is so in a case decided the other way in the Federal court, before the decision of the State court, is not entirely clear.² State laws abolishing fictions are regarded as rules of property which the Federal courts must follow.³

§ 871. Exceptions to the rule.—The general rule is subject, however, to an important exception. The Constitution confers upon the courts of the United States equity jurisdiction, which is uniform throughout the United States, and does not vary according to the local State law.⁴ Hence the Federal courts in matters of equitable cognizance, are not always controlled by State laws. Thus, although, as a general rule, State statutes of limitations are followed in the Federal courts, they may, if necessary, be disregarded in equity.⁵ So in Steinkuhl v. York,⁶ it was said to be doubtful whether the Federal courts would follow the Tennessee rule, that an adverse claimant of land, though out of possession, and though entitled to bring ejectment, might file a bill to remove the deeds standing as a cloud on his title, and in such a proceeding be put in possession.

§ 872. State rules of evidence.—As a general thing, the rules of evidence are held to be covered by the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States,⁷ and consequently the laws of the States are the laws of the courts of the United States, except so far as they have been modified by Acts of Congress, or by rules of courts adopted under them.⁸

§ 873. Rules of pleading and practice.—By section 914 of the ¹ Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599, and cases cited.

² Moores v. National Bank, 104 U. S. 625; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 291; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20.

³ Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 773; Barrows v. Kindred, 4 Wall. 399. It was contended in Hogan v. Kurtz, that the change converted ejectment into a writ of right, so as to extend the period of limitation to the same term as is by law allowed for remedies in that form of proceeding. But the Supreme Court held otherwise. See § 518.

⁴ Neves v. Scott, 13 How. 268; Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. 212; Strettell v. Ballou, 3 McCra. 46.

⁵ Tice v. School Dist. No. 18, 17 Fed. Rep. 283.

⁶ 2 Flipp. 376.

⁷ U. S. R. S. § 721.

⁸ Curtis' Jurisd. U. S. Cts. 227; Ryan v. Bindley, 1 Wall. 66.

Revised Statutes, "the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding in civil causes, other than equity and admiralty causes, in the circuit and district courts, shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the State within which such circuit or district courts are held, any rule of court to the contrary notwithstanding." Under this act it is believed that the general practice in ejectment suits in the Federal courts conforms to that of the State courts, notwithstanding the words "as near as may be" give the court an apparent discretion.¹ In Indianapolis & St. Louis R. R. Co. v. Horst,² Mr. Justice Swayne, referring to this section, said: "While the act of Congress is to a large extent mandatory, it is also to some extent only directory and advisory." But with regard to actions involving title to land, it is reinforced by the general principle, that remedies, with respect to real estate, are to be pursued according to the law of the place where the land is situate.³ An earlier act of Congress⁴ provided that the "forms and modes of proceeding" in the Federal courts in suits at common law, in the States admitted since 1789, should be the same with those of the highest State court of original jurisdiction. The State of Alabama, having passed an act to abolish fictitious proceedings in ejectment, and to substitute in their place the action of trespass to try title, it was held by the Supreme Court of the United States that a judgment of a circuit court, dismissing an action of trespass so brought, upon the ground that the law of the State was not in force in the circuit court, was erroneous.⁵ This was a decision under the act, but we have already seen that State laws, abolishing fictions, are now regarded in the Federal courts as rules of property, and as such binding in all cases.⁶

¹ Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 426; Indianapolis & St. L. R. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291.

² 93 U. S. 301.

³ Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. 212. See § 467*a*.

⁴ 4 Stat. L. 278 (1828).

⁵ Sears v. Eastburn, 10 How. 187.

⁶ Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 773; Barrows v. Kindred, 4 Wall. 399.

§ 874. Amendments.—The Federal courts, under the old as well as the new practice, have always been liberal in allowing amendments.¹ Thus, under the old practice, where various demises had been laid, but verdict and judgment were entered on one only, it was contended that a new trial should have been ordered; but the Supreme Court held that if this objection had been made in the circuit court on a motion in arrest, the plaintiff would have been permitted to strike out all the other demises; that the error was nothing more than an error of form, and under the Act of Congress of 1789 must be disregarded.²

875. Jurisdiction in equity.—The jurisdiction of the Federal courts in equity differs essentially from that which they exercise as courts of law. Under section 913 of the Revised Statutes, declaring that the modes of proceeding in equity causes shall be according to the principles which belong to courts of equity, remedies in equity are administered, not according to the State practice, but according to the practice of courts of equity in the parent country.³

§ 876. Ejectment not maintainable on equitable title.—As we have already seen, ejectment cannot be maintained upon an equitable title. This principle is of especial importance in the Federal tribunals, owing to the preservation in those courts of the distinction between law and equity jurisdiction. In *Watkins v. Holman*⁴ the Supreme Court of the United States made an examination of some early cases in apparent conflict with this rule. In that case the defendants relied on a title-bond, and insisted that a court of law would give effect to the trust resulting therefrom (the purchase-money having been paid), at least so far

¹ Wright v. Hollingsworth, 1 Pet. 165; Ledgerwood v. Pickett, 1 McL. 143; Pickett v. Legerwood, 7 Pet. 144; Gilleland v. Martin, 3 McL. 490.

² Van Ness v. Bank of the U. S., 13 Pet. 17.

³ Boyle v. Zacharie, 6 Pet. 648, 658; Strettell v. Ballou, 3 McCra. 46; United States v. Howland, 4 Wheat. 108, 115; Neves v. Scott, 13 How. 271; Noonan v. Lee, 2 Black, 499. The recent leading case of Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 114, contains an important note by the Supreme Court, pointing out that the 1st edition of Daniell's Chancery Practice (1837) and the 2d edition of Smith's Practice (1837) are the most authoritative works for determining the English chancery practice, which was adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1842 as the standard of equity practice for the Federal courts when their own rules do not apply.

⁴ 16 Pet. 25.

as to prevent the trustees from recovering against the cestui que trust. The Supreme Court said: "This doctrine seems to have been sanctioned to some extent in New York, in the cases of Foote v. Jackson;³ Jackson v. Morse.⁴ These cases have been influenced somewhat by the statutes in that State, which subjects the estate of the cestui que trust to execution. In one of the cases, giving the opinion of the court, says: 'In aid of the statute, I consider James Little advanced the purchase-money, as having an interest to be sold on execution.'⁵ In the case of Leggett,⁶ the court remark: 'The legal title prevails. The only exception to the rule is in the case of a resulting trust; in such case the trust is created by parol, and the estate of the cestui que trust is sold on execution, and has been so far considered as the property of the cestui que trust, as to be the subject of an action of ejectment.' This was the doctrine of Mansfield, in the case of Armstrong ex dem Peirse.⁷ In Doe on the demise of Bristol,⁸ he lays down the broad doctrine, that a trust never be set up against him for whom the trust was intended; and the other judges concurred. It is probable that that great judge had a strong leaning towards the principles of equity in trials at common law. Lord Kenyon seemed to be under a different influence; although he had been Master of the Rolls for some years. The doctrine in a court of law was overruled in the case of Staple.⁹ Lord Kenyon says: 'Is it possible for a court of law to enter into the discussion of such nice points? We have no such authority. Sitting in this court, I will look at the record, and see whether a legal title exists in the party claiming under these instruments; and if it is no color for saying that these give any legal title, I will not give it.'

³ 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 216.

⁴ 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 197.

⁵ Foote v. Colvin, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 222.

⁶ 3 Burr. 1899.

⁷ 2 T. R. 684, 695.

⁸ 11 Jol.

⁹ 7 We.

¹ 1 T.

out deciding, or presuming to think what a court of equity would do in this case, it is enough for me to say that we are to decide a legal question, and cannot enter into such an entangled equity.' The other judges, except Buller, concurred with the Chief Justice. In Doe on the demise of Shewen v. Wroot,¹ Lord Ellenborough said: 'We can only look to the legal estate, and that is clearly not in the devisees, but in the heir at law of the surrenderor; and if the devisees have an equitable interest, they must claim it elsewhere, and not in a court of law. For as to the doctrine that the legal estate cannot be set up at law by a trustee against his cestui que trust, that has been long repudiated.' And this is the settled doctrine in England on this subject; and, with few exceptions, in this country. In the States where no courts of chancery are established, courts of law, in giving relief, of necessity, trench upon an equitable jurisdiction. It is not perceived why a court of law should regard a resulting trust more than other equitable rights; and any attempt to give effect to these rights at law, through the instrumentality of a jury, must lead to confusion and uncertainty. Equitable and legal jurisdictions have been wisely separated; and the soundest maxims of jurisprudence require each to be exercised in its appropriate sphere. We are clearly of the opinion that the title-bond in question constituted no defence in the above action."² And the general rule that equitable titles cannot be relied upon to support ejectment suits in the Federal courts has been repeatedly laid down.³

§ 877. Examples.—Thus, where, under a mechanics' lien law, the sheriff sells the right and title of one who has by a building contract an equitable title to the premises, the purchaser cannot maintain ejectment against the legal owner.⁴ And so a defendant in ejectment cannot protect himself by setting up a record in a prior chancery suit to

¹ 5 East, 132.

² Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. 25, 57.

³ Bayard v. Colefax, 4 Wash. 38; Hall v. Austin, Deady, 104; Delacroix v. Chamberlain, 12 Wheat. 599; Singleton v. Touchard, 1 Black, 342; Larriviere v. Madegan, 1 Dill. 455; Gilmer v. Poindexter, 10 How. 257; Clagett v. Kilbourne, 1 Black, 346; Young v. Dunn, 10 Fed. Rep. 717; Greer v. Mezes, 24 How. 268. See §§ 168-171.

⁴ Carson v. Boudinot, 2 Wash. C. C. 33.

quiet the title between the same parties plaintiff has been ordered to convey his defendant in ejectment, no such conveyance made, in consequence of the party not being in jurisdiction, although the chancery court had decreed by issuing a habere facias (under which writ the defendant in ejectment in action was put). On this point the Supreme Court of the United States said: "To enable the defendants in this case to maintain their possession successfully, upon their title must be shown to be a good and subsisting title, and superior in law to that set up by the plaintiff. If it does, and otherwise it does not, in law, it will oppose no legal bar to the recovery of ejectment. And conceding, what was conceded, that the decree and possession by writ of habere facias, is equivalent to a judgment, followed by like possession, it would be a bar to the defendants nothing in this case, because such judgment and possession are no bar to another action for the same premises. The defendant in this case never defend his possession against the plaintiff's title in himself, by which he could not recover possession, if he were out, and the plaintiff's title would be reversed. Reversing the positions of the parties in this case, the defendants, if plaintiffs, recover the land, and the plaintiff's title is reversed. The plaintiff's title is reversed upon this decree and evidence of possession. The plaintiff's title is reversed against the title of the plaintiffs? We have said that the plaintiff's title is reversed in saying they could not, and, therefore, the plaintiff's title is reversed, founded upon a valid equitable title, would be a bar to the action of the plaintiffs."¹ And a conveyance of land will not serve as a defense in an action of ejectment.² In Smith v. McCann,³ the Supreme Court of the United States held that where the title to land was conveyed to a debtor, in trust, which conveyed legal title, he took no beneficial interest therein, and levied upon and sold on execution; and that such a sale could not maintain ejectment, strengthen his case by evidence showing that the deed was fraudulent, and taken by the debtor in this way to hinder and defraud his creditors.

¹ Hickey v. Stewart, 3 How. 750.

² Agricultural Bank v. Rice, 4 How. 224; Watkins v. Holm.

³ 24 How. 398.

§ 878. Equitable title no defence.—As ejectment cannot be maintained on an equitable title, neither will an equitable title serve as a defence. Thus the defendant cannot introduce in evidence an agreement signed by the plaintiff for the sale and conveyance of the land to him.¹ The court in deciding this case distinguished it from Sims v. Irvine,² in which it was laid down that a warrant, survey and payment of purchase-money gave a legal right of entry.

§ 879. State statutes recognizing equitable title.—A practice has prevailed in some of the new States of the Union of permitting the action of ejectment to be brought on warrants for land, entries made with the register and receiver of the land office, and other titles, not complete and legal in character. "It is, however, well known," said Mr. Justice Miller, in delivering a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States,³ "that early purchasers of the public lands were careless about their patents. But, as a reason for this, they attached primary importance to the paper issued when a sale was made, and delivered to the purchaser by the register and receiver of the land-office, called a certificate of entry. This is a paper in two parts, the first of which is signed by the register, giving a description of the land, the amount paid for it, the name of the purchaser, and a statement that on its presentation at the General Land-Office a patent would be issued to the purchaser. The second, signed by the receiver, is a simple receipt for the payment of the price, and a description of the land for which it was paid. The statutes of almost every State and Territory in which the public lands have been sold provide for the registration of this instrument, and in all actions concerning title or possession, declare it to be prima facie evidence of title. . . . In the estimation of the people generally, and in the practice of the courts, it became the efficient substitute or equivalent of the patent, and in regard to millions of acres of land the patent either was never issued, or if issued never delivered, but remains in the local or the general land-office, subject to the call of the owner." Many decisions have been rendered to the effect that in the Federal courts such statutes are of no binding effect. Thus, in Fenn v. Holme,¹ a case which arose in the United States Circuit Court, for the District of Missouri, the defendant in error, a citizen of the State of Illinois, instituted an action of ejectment against the plaintiff in error, and obtained a verdict and judgment against him. Both parties derived title through mesne conveyances from the settlement claim of one O'Carroll, located by virtue of a Spanish certificate. No title derived from the United States was shown. The Supreme Court on this state of facts said that the judgment could not stand. The plaintiff must, in ejectment, always recover on the strength of his legal title, and by the Constitution of the United States,² the distinction between common law and equity jurisdiction has been carefully defined and established. The plaintiff in the case at bar, having shown an equitable and not a legal title, could not recover upon it. So when an ejectment was brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas, founded upon an entry made in a United States land-office, and this was the only title produced by the plaintiff on the trial, but it appeared that a statute of Arkansas provided that an action of ejectment might be maintained where the plaintiff claimed possession by virtue of an entry made with the register and receiver of the proper land-office, it was held that no action of ejectment would lie on such an equitable title.³ The distinction maintained in these cases between legal and equitable titles constitutes an important qualification of the general principle that the State law is followed in the Federal tribunals whenever it constitutes a rule of property. In cases where the legal title derived from the patent is in one person, who is in possession, but another has superior equities, it would seem from these cases that in the State courts he might proceed in ejectment and recover possession, while in the Federal courts he would be obliged to resort to a bill in equity to compel a conveyance of the legal title.¹

¹ Willink v. Miles, Pet. C. C. 429.

² 3 Dall. 425.

³ Simmons v. Ogle, 105 U. S. 271, 274.

¹ 21 How. 481.

² Const. U. S., Art. III, § 2.

³ Hooper v. Scheimer, 23 How. 235; and so held in Sheirburn v. Cordova, 24 How. 423; Young v. Dunn (Circ. Ct. E. D. Tex.), 10 Fed. Rep. 717; Swayze v. Burke, 12 Pet. 11; Foster v. Mora, 98 U. S. 425; Simmons v. Ogle, 105 U. S. 271; Clagett v. Kilbourne, 1 Black, 346.

§ 880. Robinson v. Campbell.—In Robinson v. Campbell,² a somewhat peculiar question as to land titles was considered by the United States Supreme Court. By a settlement of the boundary lines between Virginia and North Carolina made in 1802, and certain legislation thereunder, it was provided that all land claims and titles derived from Virginia, North Carolina or Tennessee, should remain as secure as if derived from the government, within whose lines they had fallen. In the case at bar, both plaintiff's and defendant's titles to lands falling within the limits of Tennessee, were derived under grants from Virginia. The plaintiff's title was a prior grant, founded on a junior entry; the defendant offered evidence of a junior grant founded on a prior entry. It appeared that by the law of Tennessee, the priority of entries was examinable at law, and that in an action of ejectment the junior patent founded on a prior entry, though of course a title equitable in its nature, must prevail. The Supreme Court held, however, that the case was governed by the law of Virginia, and that the equitable title could not be asserted. It is remarked in this case,³ that, "consistently with this construction, it may be admitted that where, by the statutes of a State, a title, which would otherwise be deemed merely equitable, is recognized as a legal title, or a title which would be good at law, is under circumstances of an equitable nature declared by such statutes to be void, the rights of the parties in such case may be as fully considered in a suit at law in the courts of the United States, as they would be in any State court."⁴

¹ See Simmons v. Ogle, 105 U. S. 271.

² 3 Wheat. 212.

³ Ibid. p. 223.

⁴ In Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. 763, the Supreme Court refused to express an opinion on this point.

§ 881. Rule not affected by the practice act.—The Practice Act of 1872¹ conforming “the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceedings” in other than equity and admiralty causes, in the Federal courts, to those in existence in like cases in the State courts, does not impair or affect in any way the rule that ejectment cannot be maintained or defended on an equitable title, even when this is allowed by the State court.²

§ 882. Rule different in Pennsylvania.—In Pennsylvania, a warrant and legal survey accompanied by payment of the consideration, gives a legal right of entry and confers a sufficient title to maintain ejectment,³ and this rule was adopted in 1799, by the Supreme Court of the United States, as the local rule of property.⁴ But a warrant alone without survey or payment of the purchase-money is insufficient.⁵ It should be noticed that in this State plaintiff may recover, and defendant defend on any title good in equity.⁶ It was said by Washington, J., in the course of his charge to the jury in Holtzapple v. Phillibaum,⁷ that in the case of an elder equitable title, opposed to a junior equitable title, clothed, however, with an elder legal title, the equities in Pennsylvania, and consequently in the Federal court, could be considered in ejectment actions. This, he added, he “was ashamed to say,” because the question presented by such a case was properly cognizable only on the equity side of the court. In Swayze v. Burke,⁸ too, the Supreme Court says that it is not the practice in the courts of the United States, to allow ejectment on an equitable title even on cases arising in Pennsylvania. This broad statement is subject to the limitation expressed in the above rule as to ejectment founded on warrants and legal surveys, accompanied by payment of the consideration-money.

¹ U. S. R. S., § 914.

² Butler v. Young, 1 Flipp. 276

³ Penn v. Klyne, 4 Dall. 402; s. c. Pet. C. C. 497, note; Copley v. Riddle, 2 Wash. 354; Dubois v. Newman, 4 Wash. 74.

⁴ Sims v. Irwine, 3 Dall. 425, 465.

⁵ Vanhorn v. Chesnut, 2 Wash. 160.

⁶ Edwards v. Morgan, 100 Pa. St. 330.

⁷ 4 Wash. 356, 365.

⁸ 12 Pet. 11.

§ 883. Cases in conflict with the rule.—There are, too, several cases holding that wherever the courts of law of a State in an action of ejectment look beyond the grant, or strict legal title, and examine into the equities, and this has become established as a rule of property, the courts of the United States will follow the State practice.¹

§ 884. Exceptional cases.—Equitable estoppel.—The Supreme Court of the United States, in two recent decisions,² has held that a party entitled to set up an equitable estoppel may avail himself of it as a defense to a common law ejectment. In the first of these actions the plaintiff claimed title by virtue of a quitclaim deed from a tenant in common who had by a letter relating to the land disclaimed all interest in it, and lulled the defendant's grantor into security, so that the latter had taken no steps to perfect his title. It was held that the letter constituted an estoppel in pais, and was an available defense to the action; that the plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser, was not entitled to possession, and could not maintain the action. In the second case the plaintiff knew that the defendants claimed the property under a sale made in an equity suit to which he was a party. Instead of repudiating the sale, he, with a knowledge of all the facts, indicated by his conduct generally his intention not to raise any question with regard to the proceedings in the suit, and allowed defendants to expend large sums of money in improvements. This was held to estop him from bringing ejectment. It seems to be well settled in the Federal courts, that cases of equitable estoppel, or estoppel in pais, constitute an exception to the general rule that in ejectment equitable defenses are not allowed.³ The reason for this exception is thus stated by Mr. Bigelow in his learned work on Estoppel: "The ground upon which equity treats

¹ Ross v. Doe & Barland, 1 Pet. 655; French v. Spencer, 21 How. 228, 239, citing Smith v. Mosier, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 51; Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. 212, 223, and dissenting opinions in Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436, 451.

² Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578; Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 68. See this case followed, Gillespie v. Sawyer, 15 Neb. 536.

³ It should be noticed that this is very different from the rule laid down in Stoddard v. Chambers, 2 How. 284, 317, that ejectment may be maintained on a title by estoppel, the reference there being to legal estoppel.

the case as out of the Statute of Frauds, to wit, the fraud of the person to be estopped, should be sufficient to justify a court of law in acting. The ground of estoppel by conduct in any case is fraud; and it cannot be that a statute made to prevent the accomplishment of fraud should stand in the way of preventing such a result in any court."¹ It sometimes happens that the plaintiff has apparently a legal title, but cannot recover because of some fact in pais which shows that he is not the real owner. Thus, in the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois, in the case of Henry v. Henry,² plaintiff claimed under a warranty deed from defendant, but it appeared that the deed had been delivered under an agreement by which a life-lease was to be executed back. On a motion to exclude all testimony relating to the conditions on which the deed was executed, Davis, J., held that the question of the intention of the parties was one of fact for the jury, and that if the execution of the lease and deed were intended to be simultaneous acts the plaintiff could not recover, and subsequently under a charge, given in accordance with this decision, the jury returned a verdict for the defendant. Again, in Melenthin v. Keith,³ it was held by Miller, J., at circuit, that one who has paid part of the purchase-money of land, and has actually gone into possession under an agreement with the holder of the legal title, with a right to a deed on payment of the balance, may maintain ejectment, and that this is not in contravention of the general rule. This is on the same principle that a mortgagee who has acquired the right to possession by agreement with the mortgagor can, if disturbed, maintain ejectment, though the mortgagor has not parted with the legal title.⁴ In *Dolton v. Cain*⁵ the Supreme Court had under consideration an Illinois limitation law providing that adverse possession for seven years, ¹ Bigelow on Estoppel (3d ed.), 600. See Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578; Wirth v. Branson, 98 U. S. 118; Branson v. Wirth, 17 Wall. 32; Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 68. On this point St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Green, 13 Fed. Rep. 208, seems not to be law.

² 4 Biss. 354.

³ 17 Fed. Rep. 583 (C. C. Dist. Minn.).

⁴ Chapman v. Delaware, L. & W. R. R. Co., 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 261.

⁵ 14 Wall. 473.

accompanied by "a connected title in law or equity, deducible of record from the State or the United States," should constitute a defense in ejectment. The plaintiff derived title from the United States, and his chain of proof included a deed of the land in trust, the death of the trustee and cestui qui trust, and a conveyance to him by the heirs of both trustee and cestui qui trust. The defendant relied on a sale by the cestui qui trust to him, followed by adverse possession. It was held that this constituted a good defense. So, notwithstanding a patent title is generally the best title, this is not always the case. Thus, in Simmons v. Wagner,¹ the defendant claimed under a certificate of a register of the land-office, which showed that full payment had been made for the lands, thus entitling him to a patent, though none had ever been issued. The plaintiff claimed under a junior patent regular on its face. It was held that after the issue of the certificate the lands were no longer a part of the public domain, and that the plaintiff could not recover.²

§ 885. Equitable relief not granted where relief at law is adequate.—Not only is the equitable jurisdiction of the Federal courts entirely distinct from their common law jurisdiction, but the Revised Statutes expressly provide that "suits in equity shall not be sustained in either of the courts of the United States in any case where a plain, adequate and complete remedy may be had at law."³ In Steam Stone Cutter Co. v. Jones,⁴ a bill in equity was filed

¹ 101 U. S. 260.

² In Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet. 498, the action was virtually against the United States; no patent had been issued; the attempt of the plaintiff was to maintain his title by virtue of a statute of Illinois, declaring that a certificate of entry should be deemed evidence of title. The Supreme Court said that the effect of allowing this State statute to govern would be to make the laws of Illinois paramount to those of Congress. Distinguishing the case of Ross v. Doe d. Barland, 1 Pet. 655, they proceeded to lay down the general rule as follows: "Whenever the question in any court, State or Federal, is, whether a title to land which had once been the property of the United States has passed, that question must be resolved by the laws of the United States;" but "whenever, according to those laws, the title shall have passed, then that property, like all other property in the State, is subject to State legislation; so far as that legislation is consistent with the admission that the title passed and vested according to the laws of the United States." 1 Pet. 517. This case, therefore, is not in conflict with Ross v. Doe d. Barland.

³ U. S. R. S. § 723.

⁴ 13 Fed. Rep. 567 (C. C. Dist. Vt.). See, also, Ward v. Chamberlain, 2 Black, 430.

to remove a cloud on title. The complainant was adjudged to be entitled to the equitable relief, but the court held that, as to obtaining damages and possession of the premises, there was a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law, and hence a suit in equity could not extend to such relief. Blatchford, J., said: "An ejectment suit might have been brought first, and the title tried, and possession and damages obtained, without the equitable relief here asked; but the fact that the equity suit was first brought does not authorize the overriding of the plain provision of section 723, or warrant the giving in the equity suit of the purely legal relief asked for."

§ 886. Ejectment bill not allowable in Federal Courts.—As we have already seen, it is a principle generally recognized, that the relief peculiar to ejectment cannot be obtained by means of a bill in equity.¹ In the Federal courts, the sharp distinction between law and equity makes this rule of special importance. Thus, in Ellis v. Davis,² where an heir-at-law brought a bill to set aside the probate of a will, to recover possession of real estate, and to obtain an accounting of rents and profits from an adverse party in possession, claiming under the will, it was recently held, on demurrer, by the Supreme Court of the United States, that the bill was bad, the plaintiff having a complete remedy at law. And so, on the other hand, there cannot be a union of legal and equitable causes in one suit, although this practice obtains in the State courts.³

§ 887. Conclusiveness of a patent.—This subject is closely connected with that of the effect and force of a patent or other title derived from the United States. It has been repeatedly decided⁴ by the United States courts, that a patent or grant is the highest evidence of title, and conclusive at law so long as it remains in force against the government, and all claiming under junior patents, and that it can only be attacked for fraud or mistake by a bill in

¹ Ante, § 169.

² 109 U. S. 489; following Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 271.

³ Hurt v. Hollingsworth, 100 U. S. 100. See Chap. XXIV.

⁴ See § 785.

equity.¹ The theory of the law is that the land department acts judicially in issuing a patent, that the officers charged with this duty exercise a judicial function, and that their judgment as to matters of fact properly determinable by them, is conclusive when brought in question in a collateral proceeding. The patent, duly signed and sealed, does not merely pass title, but is an official declaration by the government that all the requirements preliminary to its issue have been complied with. If this were not so, the patent, instead of being a source of security, would depend for its efficacy upon the fluctuating opinions of juries. The doctrine stated is, however, subject to certain limitations. If the department had no jurisdiction, e. g., if the lands were not public property, or not subject to sale, the conveyance would be void, and evidence as to such matters may be given and considered in an action of ejectment in which the patent title is involved. On the other hand, where the jurisdiction or authority to issue depends upon the existence of particular facts, and it is the duty of the land department to ascertain whether the facts exist, its determination is conclusive of the existence of the authority.²

§ 888. Wirth v. Branson.—A recent important decision of the Supreme Court seems to be in conflict with the doctrine of the conclusiveness of the patent title in legal ¹ Stoddard v. Chambers, 2 How. 284, 317; Easton v. Salisbury, 21 How. 426; United States v. Stone, 2 Wall. 528, 535; Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436; Hooper v. Scheimer, 23 How. 235; Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636; Pacific Coast Mining & Milling Co. v. Spargo, 16 Fed. Rep. 348; Doe v. Wilson, 23 How. 457; Crews v. Burcham, 1 Black, 352; Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 U. S. 473; Witherinton v. McDonald, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 306; Stringer v. Young, 3 Pet. 320; Jackson v. Lawton, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 23; Cooper v. Roberts, 6 McL. 93; Norvell v. Camm, 6 Munf. (Va.) 233; Klein v. Argenbright, 26 Iowa, 493; Carter v. Spencer, 5 Miss. 42; Simmons v. Ogle, 105 U. S. 271; Burgess v. Gray, 16 How. 48; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330.

² Polk v. Wendal, 9 Cranch, 87, 99; Patterson v. Winn, 11 Wheat. 380; Hoofnagle v. Anderson, 7 Wheat. 212; Boardman v. Reed, 6 Pet. 328, 342; Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436; Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530; Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636; People v. Livingston, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 253; Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279, 361; Robbins v. Bunn, 54 Ill. 48, and cases cited; Dixon, Doe d. v. Porter, 23 Miss. 84; Hit-tuk-ho-mi v. Watts, 15 Miss. 363; Parkison v. Bracken, 1 Pinney (Wis.), 174; Boatner v. Ventress, 8 Martin, N. S. (La.) 644; Patterson v. Tatum, 3 Sawy. 164; Morton v. Nebraska, 21 Wall. 660; Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478, 492; State v. Bachelder, 5 Minn. 223; Sherman v. Buick, 93 U. S. 209; Best v. Polk, 18 Wall. 112.

actions. On January 10, 1818, the government patented the northeast quarter of a section of land in pursuance of a warrant and location bounty land warrant. The patent was written on the margin of the exemplified copy of the original patent was a memorandum (by whom made) setting forth that the patent was issued for the southeast quarter and not the northeast as it appeared that on January 7, 1818, the government issued a patent to one Durney for this southeast quarter. By mesne conveyances, land described as the northeast quarter was transferred to Shaw, and in 1868 an act of Congress was passed authorizing the landowners of Egerton to take out another quarter section "previously patented to Durney;" and this Shaw proceeded to develop the northeast quarter was sold under the law of 1868, taxes, and bought by defendant. In 1868 the land was patented by the United States to the defendant, brought ejectment. On this state of facts the Supreme Court of the United States,¹ that the title was created by the deeds from Egerton or under him, nor by the private act of the plaintiff, nor by the selection of a new lot, which prevented the defendants from showing that their patent was for the southeast quarter; that the memorandum could not contradict the record, and that according to the law the court instructed the jury that the defendants had no outstanding title in the northeast quarter. The plaintiff, in addition to the other evidence, introduced the original patent to Egerton, which appeared to be for the southeast quarter. The court below instructed the jury that as the land warrant had been dated 1818 upon the northeast quarter, the subsequent patent in 1868 was of no validity, and a verdict was given to the defendants, and this judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court.² Bradley, J., said, the opinion of the court: "The rule is w a long course of decisions, that when public lands have been surveyed and placed in the market, or otherwise opened to private acquisition, a person who complies with all the requisites necessary to entitle him to a patent in a particular lot or tract, is to be regarded as the equitable owner thereof, and the land is no longer open to location. The public faith has become pledged to him, and any subsequent grant of the same land to another party is void, unless the first location or entry be vacated and set aside. This was laid down as a principle in the case of Lytle v. The State of Arkansas,¹ and has ever since been adhered to.² Subsequent cases, which have seemed to be in conflict with these, have been distinguished from them by the fact that something remained to be done by the claimant to entitle him to a patent: such as the payment of the price, the payment of the fees of surveying, or the like. The proper distinctions on the subject are so fully stated in the case of Stark v. Starrs,³ Frisbie v. Whitney,⁴ The Yosemite Valley Case,⁵ Railway Company v. McShane,⁶ and Shepley v. Cowan,⁷ that it would be supererogation to go over the subject again."⁸ This case was followed in a later case,⁹ in which it was held by the Supreme Court that a party in possession of lands, holding an uncanceled certificate of the register of the land-office, showing a vested right to a patent, may successfully defend an ejectment suit against the holder of a subsequent patent title. In this case the court said: "The question is not whether Wagner, if he was out of possession, could recover in ejectment upon the certificate, but whether Simmons can recover as against him. He is in a situation to avail himself of the weakness of the title of his adversary, and need not assert his own." But in Barney v. Dolph,¹ it seemed to have been decided that ejectment may be maintained as well as defended under such circumstances.

¹ Branson v. Wirth, 17 Wall. 32.

² Wirth v. Branson, 17 Wall. 32.

¹ 9 How. 314.² 6 Wall. 402.⁴ 9 Wall. 187.⁶ 22 Wall. 444.³ See Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 402.⁵ 15 Wall. 77.⁷ 91 U. S. 330.

⁸ Wirth v. Branson, 98 U. S. 118, 121. An examination of the cases on which this decision is rested will show that they hardly warrant the universal application of the above rule in ejectment suits: Lytle v. The State of Arkansas, was a bill in equity to enforce a pre-emption right; Stark v. Starrs was a bill to quiet title; Frisbie v. Whitney, was an equitable proceeding to compel the conveyance of the legal title; in the Yosemite Valley Case no patent title was involved, and the prevailing party was the holder of the legal title under Act of Congress; Railway Company v. McShane, was a bill to enjoin the collection of taxes; Shepley v. Cowan, was an equitable proceeding to settle the conflicting claims of the parties arising from their respective patents.

⁹ Simmons v. Wagner, 101 U. S. 260.

§ 889. Doctrine of relation.—Conflicting patents.—In many cases both parties claim under different patents or grants, or under the same patent from the State or the United States. In such cases the doctrine of relation prevails, i. e., that all the acts and ceremonies necessary to a complete conveyance must be taken together as one act, and operate from the substantial part by relation.² The younger patent may be founded on the best right in equity, and the equities may be tried in the action of ejectment. But in such cases the patent does not aid the equitable title; the decision of the action depends upon the equities, and hence if the earlier claim had no standing in a court of law or equity up to the date of its confirmation, and depended upon the political power, this is a fatal objection to it.³

§ 890. Title under United States not determined by State laws.—Of course, the question whether a title to land which has been the property of the United States, has passed, must be determined by the laws of the United States, and hence a State cannot declare by law that a title derived from the United States, which by their laws is only inchoate and imperfect, shall be deemed as perfect a title as if a patent had issued.⁴

§ 891. Possessory title of no avail against patent title.—As the patent is the highest evidence of title, and possession

¹ 97 U. S. 652.

² See the doctrine clearly stated in Landes v. Brant, 10 How. 348, 372; Pacific Coast Min. & Co. v. Spargo, 16 Fed. Rep. 348.

³ Chouteau v. Eckhart, 2 How. 344; Les Bois v. Bramell, 4 How. 449; citing, Ross v. Doe d. Barland, 1 Pet. 655; Bissell v. Penrose, 8 How. 317; Stoddard v. Chambers, 2 How. 285; Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436, 451; Kissell v. St. Louis Public Schools, 18 How. 19; French v. Spencer, 21 How. 228.

⁴ Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet. 498. The case of Bryan v. Forsyth, 19 How. 334, is not in conflict with this rule, as there the junior patent was taken out expressly subject to earlier rights.

is of no avail against the government, no adverse occupation, however long, will enable a party to maintain a suit at law against one who derives title from the United States.¹

§ 892. Practice where equitable relief necessary.—In general where the legal title is in one, and the equitable title in another, a bill in chancery to compel a conveyance of the legal title is a proper remedy,² and courts of equity will grant an injunction at the instance of the holder of the equitable title to restrain ejectment.³ So a court of equity will set aside and decree the surrender of a patent of the United States obtained from its officers by mistake or inadvertence, on an information in the nature of a bill in equity.⁴

§ 893. Jurisdiction of Federal Courts.—Having now stated the general rules governing the Federal courts in actions to try title, we proceed to examine the various classes of cases in which these tribunals may obtain jurisdiction of such suits. Such jurisdiction may be obtained, either originally or by removal in a proper case from the State courts, or by appeal from such courts.

§ 894. Original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.—The Constitution of the United States⁵ vests the judicial power of the United States in “one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish.” By the second section of the same article, it is provided that this judicial power shall extend to “controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State,” and “between a State or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens or subjects.” It is also provided that, in cases “in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction.” Under these clauses, a peculiar equitable jurisdiction has been exercised by the Supreme Court

¹ Burgess v. Gray, 16 How. 48; Oaksmith v. Johnston, 92 U. S. 343.

² Simmons v. Ogle, 105 U. S. 271.

³ Apgar v. Christophers, 10 Fed. Rep. 857.

⁴ Hughes v. United States, 4 Wall. 232.

⁵ Const. Art. III, § 1.

for the purpose of ascertaining and determining the boundaries between two States.¹

§ 895. Inter-state boundaries.—In cases concerning disputed boundaries between States, it is important to notice that the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court cannot be invoked unless a State is actually a party. It will often happen that an ordinary ejectment suit may bring up the question of State boundaries. Thus in Fowler v. Lindsey, and Fowler v. Miller,² ejectments were brought in the Circuit Court for the District of Connecticut, for lands over which both New York and Connecticut claimed jurisdiction. The defendants insisted that they were inhabitants of New York, and obtained a rule to show cause why the actions should not be removed by certiorari into the Supreme Court, as exclusively belonging to that jurisdiction. But the rule was discharged, Washington, J., saying: "It is not contended that the States are nominally the parties; nor do I think that they can be regarded as substantially the parties to the suits; nay, it appears to me, that they are not even interested or affected. They have a right either to the soil or to the jurisdiction. If they have the right of soil they may contest it, at any time, in this court, notwithstanding a decision in the present suits; and though they may have parted with the right of soil, still the right of jurisdiction is unimpaired. A decision as to the former object, between individual citizens, can never affect the right of the State as to the latter object; it is res inter alios acta. For, suppose the jury in some case should find in favor of the title under New York, and in others they should find in favor of the title under Connecticut, how would this decide the right of jurisdiction? And on what principle can private citizens, in the litigation of their private claims, be competent to investigate, determine, and fix the important rights of sovereignty?"³ The learned judge then went on to suggest, that to determine the question of jurisdiction, there being no adequate remedy at law, the State of New York might file a bill against the State of Connecticut praying to be quieted as to the boundaries of the disputed territory. In consequence of the rejection of this motion for a certiorari, the State of New York filed a bill against the State of Connecticut, setting forth the title of New York to the lands in dispute, an agreement between the two States on this subject, and praying discovery, relief and an injunction to stay the proceedings in the Circuit Court. The injunction was refused, on the ground that the State of New York was not a party to the ejectments.¹

¹ State of New Jersey v. State of New York, 5 Pet. 284; Missouri v. Iowa, 7 How. 660; Florida v. Georgia, 17 How. 478; State of Alabama v. State of Georgia, 23 How. 505; State of Rhode Island v. State of Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657; Virginia v. West Virginia, 11 Wall. 39.

² 3 Dall. 411.

³ 3 Dall. 413.

§ 896. Question of State title to lands.—This equitable jurisdiction need not necessarily raise any question of title in the State, being merely invoked to determine the boundary line between it and an adjoining sovereignty. In case the actual dominion and ownership of the soil were contended for by two States, an ejectment suit would seem to be the appropriate legal remedy; but this case, barely suggested by Washington, J., in the extract above given, seems never to have arisen.

§ 897. Intervention by United States.—In the case of Florida v. Georgia,² the question arose whether, if the interests of the United States were involved in a boundary dispute between two States, there was any way by which the government might come into court and introduce proofs and claim the right to a hearing; and it was held by a divided court (McLean, Daniel, Curtis, and Campbell, JJ., dissenting) that the Attorney-General might intervene for these purposes, without the United States becoming a party to the suit in the technical meaning of the term.

§ 898. Practice.—The practice of the court requires that in all cases under the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court leave must be obtained before a bill is filed,³ and no step can be taken in any suit pending on the "original"

¹ State of New York v. State of Connecticut, 4 Dall. 1, 3, 6.

² 17 How. 478. The cases involving the right of the United States to intervene in ejectment actions in order to protect its title to lands, have been considered in Chap. VII.

³ State of Georgia v. Grant, 6 Wall. 241.

docket of the Supreme Court without a special order obtained, of course, on motion. Process in suits in which a State is defendant is served upon the governor or chief executive magistrate, and attorney-general of such State.¹ If a State fails to appear in obedience to the summons, no compulsory process is resorted to, but the suit proceeds ex parte.²

§ 899. Controversies between citizens of same State.—Original act and changes.—The judicial power of the United States extends to controversies “between citizens of the same State, claiming lands under grants of different States.”³ The Judiciary Act of 1789 did not give the circuit courts original jurisdiction of controversies of this character ; but merely provided for their removal from the State courts. By Section 12 of the act : “If in any action commenced in a State court, the title of land be concerned, and the parties are citizens of the same State, and the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, the sum or value being made to appear to the satisfaction of the court, either party, before the trial, shall state to the court and make affidavit if they require it, that he claims and shall rely upon a right or title to the land, under a grant from a State other than that in which the suit is pending, and produce the original grant or an exemplification of it, except where the loss of public records shall put it out of his power, and shall move that the adverse party inform the court, whether he claims a right or title to the land under a grant from the State in which the suit is pending ; the said adverse [party] shall give such information, or otherwise not be allowed to plead such grant, or give it in evidence upon the trial, and if he informs that he does claim under such grant, the party claiming under the grant first mentioned may then, on motion, remove the cause for trial to the next circuit court to be held in such district, . . . but if he is the defendant, shall do it under the same regulations as in the before-mentioned case of the removal of a cause into such court by an alien ; and neither party removing the cause shall be allowed to plead or give evidence of any other title than that by him stated as aforesaid as the ground of his claim."¹ This provision is retained in the Revised Statutes in essentially the same language.² The Act of March 3, 1875,³ however, gives the circuit courts original cognizance of all such controversies. The language of the provision relating to removal is also somewhat changed, so as to make the case removable at the option of "one or more of the plaintiffs or defendants," and whether the removing party claims under a grant from the State "other than that in which the suit is pending," or not. The language of the act is that if the moving party rely on "a grant from a State," he may require that "any one or more of the adverse party" inform the court whether he or they claim title to the land under "a grant from some other State."

¹ S. C. Rules, No. 5.

² Curtis' U. S. Cts. 22, 23, and cases cited.

³ Const. U. S. Art. III, § 2.

§ 900. New theory of the jurisdiction.—This enlargement of the jurisdiction can readily be understood by reference to the case of Shepherd v. Young,⁴ decided in 1824, when the original removal act was in force. In this case it was decided by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, that the act did not authorize the party claiming under a grant from the State where the suit was pending, to remove the cause on the ground that his adversary claimed under a grant from another State. The language of the statute plainly forbidding such a construction is thus criticised by the court : "The provision (that the reliance must be upon a grant from a State other than that in which the suit is pending) is evidently founded upon the jealousy entertained of State tribunals, that they might be partial to the grants of their own State." Hence there was no reason to take from the State tribunals the right to proceed in cases where the applicant claims under a grant from the same State. The legislation of 1875 is, however, founded on the general theory that controversies of this character present a Federal question, which either party may remove into the

¹ 1 Stat. L. 80.

² 18 Stat. L. 470, § 3.

³ U. S. R. S. sec. 647.

⁴ 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 203.

Federal tribunals. The new act therefore disposes of the question raised in Shepherd v. Young. In the case of the Town of Pawlet v. Clark,¹ the Supreme Court of the United States had before it a controversy in which one party claimed under a grant made by the State of New Hampshire before the formation of the State of Vermont out of a part of its territory, the other claiming under a grant by the latter State. It was argued that the grant under which the defendant claimed was not a grant of a different State within the meaning of the Constitution, because Vermont, at the time of its emanation, was not a distinct government, but was included in the same sovereignty as New Hampshire. The Supreme Court, however, decided that there was nothing in the objection; and so in Colson v. Lewis,² where both parties claimed under grants, the one issued by the State of Kentucky and the other by the State of Virginia, but upon warrants issued by Virginia, and location founded thereon, prior to the separation of Kentucky from Virginia, the same court held the case removable. On the other hand it seems essential to give jurisdiction in these cases, that the grant should come from the State in its sovereign capacity. In Thompson v. Kendrick,³ the applicant claimed under a grant from North Carolina, and the other party under a grant from Tennessee, but it appeared that Tennessee acted only by virtue of a power delegated by North Carolina to perfect titles which before the separation of the two were imperfect and inaccurate, and the court decided that the grants in question might therefore be held to be grants of the same State.

§ 901. Pecuniary limit.—In the same case the question arose whether the pecuniary limit of jurisdiction ($500) applies to the whole locus, or only to the lands claimed by the applicant for removal. The court say “it would prove more reasonable and agreeable to the words of the law to let the removal depend on the value of the land claimed by the party praying the removal than on the title set up by his antagonist." In the same case it was held that there was no error in calling witnesses to ascertain the value of the land.

¹ 9 Cranch, 292.

² 2 Wheat. 377.

³ 5 Hayw. (Tenn.), 113.

§ 902. Appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.—Federal question.—Besides the branches of jurisdiction already considered, suits involving title to land may come into the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal from a State court of last resort, when what is commonly called a Federal question is involved. By the provisions of the Judiciary Act as modified and embodied in the Revised Statutes, the Supreme Court may review a final judgment or decree of the highest court of a State, 1st, where the validity of a treaty or statute of, or authority exercised under, the United States is involved, and the decision is against their validity; 2d, where the validity of a statute of or authority under any State is drawn in question, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; 3d, where any right, title, privilege or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against the right, title, privilege or immunity, specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission or authority.¹

§ 903. Title under treaty.—The general rule that a defendant may rely on an outstanding title in a third person to defeat the plaintiff's suit is, as we have seen, recognized in the Federal courts.² The twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act³ giving a right of appeal to the Federal courts from the State courts of last resort, whenever the validity of a United States treaty is drawn in question, and the decision of the State court is against the treaty, has given rise to a curious question in the Supreme Court of the United States. In Henderson v. Tennessee,⁴ it was

¹ 1 U. S. R. S. § 709.

² Marsh v. Brooks, 8 How. 223; Love v. Simms, 9 Wheat. 515; ante, §§ 57, 831

³ U. S. R. S. § 709.

⁴ 10 How. 311. A decision by the highest court of a State, that a United States held, by a bare majority of that court, that when in an ejectment the defendant claimed the land under a treaty title, and the State court decides against it, the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to review the decision; but that if the defendant merely sets up the treaty title as outstanding for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff without connecting himself with it, and the State court then decides against him, the Supreme Court has no appellate jurisdiction. To give jurisdiction the party must rely on the title, not as outstanding in a third person, but as in himself.

§ 904. Appeals from Circuit Courts.—The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over the circuit courts was limited by the Judiciary Act of 1789, to writs of error founded upon “final judgments and decrees.” The pecuniary limit of appeal was originally $2,000, but by the act of Feb. 16, 1875,¹ this has been raised to $5,000. In determining whether the pecuniary value of the matter in dispute is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, it should be noticed that the collateral effect of the judgment in subsequent suits will not be considered or allowed to weigh.² This rule has been applied to actions relating to the trial of title to land. We have already seen³ that the courts exercise a species of equitable jurisdiction over the execution of the writ of possession, and sometimes award a writ of restitution where the judgment has been reversed, or the defendant, or even a stranger, has been wrongfully evicted under the writ. *Grant v. McKee*⁴ was a writ of error from a judgment of a circuit court of the United States awarding restitution of a parcel of land. The defendant in error moved to quash the writ because the matter in controversy was not of the value of $2,000. The patent for land is void, is appealable. Reichart v. Felps, 6 Wall. 160. For other cases under this section see Miller v. Lancaster Bank, 106 U. S. 542; Chouteau v. Gibson, 111 U. S. 200; McStay v. Friedman, 92 U. S. 723; Romie v. Casanova, 91 U. S. 379; Poppe v. Langford, 104 U. S. 770; Semple v. Hagar, 4 Wall. 431; Ross v. Doe d. Barland, 1 Pet. 655; Baldwin v. Stark, 107 U. S. 463.

¹ 18 Stat. L. 316.

² Grant v. McKee, 1 Pet. 248; Stinson v. Dousman, 20 How. 461; Gray v. Blanchard, 97 U. S. 564; Tintzman v. Nat. Bank, 100 U. S. 6; Russell v. Stansell, 105 U. S. 303; Elgin v. Marshall, 106 U. S. 578.

³ Ante, §§ 60, 568, 575.

⁴ 1 Pet. 248.

motion was resisted on the ground that the whole property, which was recovered in the ejectment, might be considered as involved in this motion. The court (Marshall, C. J.) held, however, that the motion involved only the lot to which the party prayed to be restored, and dismissed the writ of error. In *Smith v. Trabue's Heirs*¹ it was decided, moreover, by Chief Justice Marshall, that a writ of restitution was not a final judgment in a civil action, nor a decree in a court of equity, and nothing more than an act within the discretion of the court issuing it, and that, therefore, the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction to review it under any circumstances. The act regulating the right of appeal to the Supreme Court provides that appeals may be taken only when the "matter in dispute," "exclusive of costs," exceeds the sum or value of $5,000.² In actions for the trial of title to land, it may be that no damages are demanded, and the record will not usually show the value of the land. The practice of the Supreme Court in such cases is thus described by the late learned Judge Curtis in his invaluable handbook on the jurisdiction of the United States courts:³ "An allegation in such a case, as, for instance, in a real action, that the land demanded was of greater value than two thousand dollars, would be an appropriate allegation for the purpose of laying the foundation for an appeal. It is not a necessary foundation; the Supreme Court, if the amount in controversy is questioned, will receive affidavits in that court of what the value is, provided they are seasonably made."⁴ It must be noticed also that when the value is stated in the pleadings or proceedings of the court below, affidavits are not received by the Supreme Court to vary or enhance it in order to give jurisdiction.⁵ In the Federal courts the value of the land may be and usually is proved at the trial.⁶ We have already seen⁷ that, under the modern

¹ 9 Pet. 4.

² U. S. R. S. § 691; amended by Act of Feb. 16, 1875, § 3 (18 Stat. L. 316).

³ Jurisdiction, Practice and Peculiar Jurisprudence of the Courts of the United States. By Benjamin Robbins Curtis, LL.D. Boston. Little, Brown & Co. 1880.

⁴ Curtis' Jur. U. S. Courts, 69, citing Richmond v. City of Milwaukee, 21 How. 391.

⁵ Richmond v. City of Milwaukee, 21 How. 391.

⁶ Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478, 494.

⁷ Ante, § 460.

practice, the general rule is that the plaintiff may unite in the same action his claim for a recovery of possession, and for damages and mesne profits. Hence, the matter in dispute may be either land, the value of which would be ascertained as above stated, or money, or both. From this double aspect of the matter in dispute, peculiar questions of jurisdiction may arise. In Beard v. Federy, just cited, which arose when the jurisdictional limit was $2,000, the plaintiff demanded judgment for possession of several parcels of land, for mesne profits stated to be $5,000 a year, and for costs and damages alleged to be $1,000. On the trial the claim for mesne profits was stricken out; but it was then mutually admitted that the value of one of the parcels was $2,500. The plaintiff recovered judgment for this parcel. On appeal it was contended that by striking out from the complaint the claim for the rents and profits, the court had lost jurisdiction of the case on the ground that the facts necessary to give jurisdiction must appear affirmatively from the pleadings; that the money demands having been struck out, left the court under the pleadings without jurisdiction, and that this defect could not be supplied by proof or admissions made on the trial. The court held, however, and it is hard to see how, under the general rule given above, any other conclusion could have been reached, that the admission on the trial was sufficient proof of value.¹ Neither interest on the judgment below, nor costs of suit, can enter into the computation of the pecuniary value of the matter in dispute.² As a general rule, the pecuniary limit is determined up to the time of final judgment by the amount claimed in the declaration, or pleaded as a set-off or counter-claim. But after judgment the right of appeal is governed by a different rule. Suppose that in the declaration five thousand dollars is demanded, but a verdict is rendered for only one thousand. The only matter in dispute now is, so far as the defendant is concerned, whether he must pay one thousand dollars, or whether some error has been committed which would relieve him from this payment. But the pecuniary limit of jurisdiction forbids the Supreme Court to review the record. On the other hand, the plaintiff demanded five thousand dollars, and if in the course of the trial he has taken proper exceptions to the proceedings by which his claim has been reduced, then he may have these questions re-examined, because, so far as he is concerned, the matter in dispute is still five thousand dollars.¹ When an appeal has been allowed after a contest as to the value of the matter in dispute, and there is evidence in the record which sustains the jurisdiction, the Supreme Court will not dismiss the appeal simply because, upon examination of all the affidavits, it may be of the opinion that the estimates acted upon below were possibly too high.²

¹ Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478. This case is not very clearly reported.

² Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 93 U. S. 565.

§ 905. Territorial mining claim.—In Lownsdale v. Parrish,³ the Supreme Court held, that an obstruction to the enjoyment of land claimed under a law or regulation of a convention in the territory of Oregon, held without the sanction of the United States, and during the joint occupancy of that country by Great Britain and the United States, was not an injury capable of being so valued as to give jurisdiction; but this was upon special grounds, and in general a mining claim like any other may be found to be of sufficient value, though the land in which the mine exists has never been surveyed or brought into market.⁴

§ 906. Original jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts.—By far the most common source of jurisdiction in the Federal courts, in the class of cases under consideration, is the provision of the Revised Statutes authorizing them to entertain suits when there is a controversy between citizens of different States, and the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds the sum or value of five hundred dollars.⁵

¹ Curtis' Jur. U. S. Courts, 67; Gray v. Blanchard, 97 U. S. 564.

² Gage v. Pumpelly, 108 U. S. 164.

³ 21 How. 290.

⁴ Sparrow v. Strong, 3 Wall. 97. It should be noticed that in appeals from Territorial courts, there is a pecuniary limit, as in the case of appeals from the Circuit Courts. U. S. R. S., § 702.

⁵ U. S. R. S. § 629 (Act of March 3, 1875).

§ 907. Jurisdictional amount.—In Den v. Wright,¹ a case in which the value of the premises were stated in the declaration, but the jury had not found the value in their verdict, Washington, J., said, on a motion in arrest of judgment, that it was enough that the value had been proved, and that it would be sufficient to fix the jurisdiction if the value were proved, after trial, by witnesses or by affidavit. In Lanning v. Dolph,² decided in 1826, it was held by the same judge to be absolutely essential to state in the declaration the value of the land in controversy, and this, notwithstanding it had been the uniform practice of the bar of the District of Pennsylvania, to omit any such allegations. With regard to the contention that the damages in this case, being laid at $3,000, amply supported the jurisdiction, he said: "It would, at this day, be a waste of words and of time to attempt to prove what is so well settled, that the right to the premises mentioned in the declaration is the sole matter in controversy, and that the damages claimed and recovered are merely nominal." Notwithstanding this early decision, the rule is now well settled that the value may be shown at the trial, and that it is not necessary to state it in the declaration.³

§ 908. Different parcels.—Where the lands consist of different parcels, and the complaint alleges a joint entry and ouster, and the answer does not set up separate claims to distinct parcels of the land by the several defendants, it is enough if the value of all the land together reaches the jurisdictional amount.⁴ But where there is no joint ownership or possession in the defendants, but each claims separately, the value of the separate parcels cannot be united so as to give jurisdiction.⁵

§ 909. Recovery of less than claim.—As a general rule, wherever in the Federal tribunals the jurisdictional amount

¹ Pet. C. C. 64.

² 4 Wash. C. C. 624.

³ Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634, 647; Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478; Crawford v. Burnham, 1 Flipp. 116.

⁴ Friend v. Wise, 111 U. S. 797.

⁵ Tupper v. Wise, 110 U. S. 398; Lynch v. Bailey, 110 U. S. 400, n.

is demanded in the declaration, it is said that the jurisdiction is not defeated by the recovery of a less amount.¹

§ 910. Change of residence.—The citizenship sufficient to give the Federal court jurisdiction may be acquired by a bona fide change of residence, even though it appear that one of the motives of the party in removing, or indeed his only motive, was to enable him to bring suit in a Federal court, sitting in the State from which he had removed.² On the other hand, "it is well settled," says the court in Hatfield v. Bushnell,³ "that if the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court be once vested in a suit between citizens of different States, a subsequent change of domicile of the parties pendente lite, either by the defendant removing into the State where the plaintiff resided, or by the plaintiff removing into the State where the defendant resided and the suit was brought, will not divest the jurisdiction."⁴ Applying this principle to an action of ejectment, where the plaintiff having died before judgment, his administrator was, under the 31st section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, allowed to prosecute the action, the court held that the fact that the administrator was a citizen of the same State with the defendant was immaterial.

§ 911. Collusive transfers.—Collusive or fraudulent transfers of the land, during the pendency of an ejectment suit, will not be allowed to defeat the ends of justice, or to affect the jurisdiction of the Federal tribunal, if it has once attached. Thus in Thomas v. Newton,⁵ a case decided in the District of Pennsylvania under the old practice, while the ejectment suit was going on, the land in dispute was sold under a judgment on a mortgage. The purchaser paid the defendant in the ejectment suit a sum of money, and thus obtained possession. After this the defendant confessed judgment, upon which a habere facias issued in favor

¹ Curtis' Jurisd. U. S. Courts, 124; Hulsecamp v. Teel, 2 Dall. 358; Green v. Lister, 8 Cr. 229; Martin v. Taylor, 1 Wash. 1; Sherman v. Clark, 3 McL. 91; Judson v. Macon Co., 2 Dill. 213.

² Cooper v. Galbraith, 3 Wash. C. C. 546, 554, charge of Washington, J.

³ 1 Blatchf. 393.

⁴ Citing Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. 290; Cameron v. McRoberts, 3 Wheat. 591; Thomas v. Newton, Pet. C. C. 444; Dunn v. Clarke, 8 Pet. 1.

⁵ Pet. C. C. 444.

of the plaintiff. Upon an order to show cause why the judgment and subsequent proceedings should not be set aside and the purchaser be admitted as defendant, it appeared that the purchaser was a citizen of Pennsylvania. Had he been made defendant the court would have been ousted of its jurisdiction, and it was therefore ordered that the judgment and execution should be set aside, and the original defendant should still remain as the nominal defendant, and that the purchaser should indemnify him against further costs.

In *Hoyt v. Wright*¹ it was held in the Circuit Court for the District of Colorado, that while a bonâ fide transfer of property to one qualified by citizenship to sue in a Federal court will confer jurisdiction; if the transfer is purely colorable, that is, if the grantor retains his interest, the proceeding would be collusive, and the objection might be raised by a plea to the jurisdiction, and the case, if originally removed from a State court, might be remanded. The rule that a sham conveyance of this sort is of no validity for the purpose of bringing the case within the province of the Federal courts, was early laid down in Maxwell v. Levy,² and was followed recently in Greenwalt v. Tucker,³ in the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.

In DeLaveaga v. Williams,⁴ in the Circuit Court for the District of California, Mr. Justice Field held that a plea in abatement founded on such a transfer was bad, and that it was only where the conveyance was "accompanied with an agreement to re-transfer the property at the request of the grantor upon the termination of the litigation that the proceeding will be treated as a fraud upon the court." This decision was followed in Marion v. Ellis.⁵ In *Barney v. Baltimore City*⁶ it was said by the Supreme Court of the United States, that a transfer, though made for the avowed purpose of conferring jurisdiction, will accomplish that purpose;⁷ but it was held that where it was made without

¹ 4 Fed. Rep. 168.

² 3 McCra. 450.

³ 10 Fed. Rep. 410 (C. C. E. D. of Louisiana).

⁴ 6 Wall. 280, 288.

⁵ Citing McDonald v. Smalley, 1 Pet. 620.

⁶ 2 Dall. 381.

⁷ 5 Sawyer, 573.

consideration, and "with a distinct understanding that the grantors retained all their real interests," jurisdiction would be denied. In *Smith v. Kernochen*¹ it was said by the Supreme Court, that the true and only grounds of objection in all these cases is that the grantor is the real party, the plaintiff on the record being only a nominal party, and that the suit is in fact, notwithstanding the conveyance, a controversy between the former and the defendants.

§ 912. The removal statutes.—The statutes authorizing the removal of suits from the State to the Federal tribunals, apply to actions for the trial of title to land. For the principles governing such removals, it is not possible to do much more here than to refer to the statutes themselves,² and the treatises which discuss the decisions under them.³ The right of removal depends either upon the subject-matter of the suit, or upon the citizenship of the parties.⁴

§ 913. Ejectment for land confiscated during rebellion.—By the act of July 17, 1862,⁵ Congress authorized the seizure and sale of the estate and property of persons engaging in rebellion against the United States. The Constitution provides⁶ that "no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted." By a joint resolution explanatory of this Confiscation Act, passed on the same day,⁷ Congress declared that no punishment or proceedings under it should be "so construed as to work a forfeiture of the real estate of the offender beyond his natural life." By act of March 3, 1863,⁸ the defendant was authorized, in ¹ 7 How. 198, 216; and in Hurst v. McNeil, 1 Wash. C. C. 70. See, also, Boyreau v. Campbell, McAll. 119, 128; Briggs v. French, 2 Sumn. 251.

² U. S. R. S., § 639 et seq.

³ Especially Judge Dillon's learned work on "Removal of Causes."

⁴ Ex parte Girard, 3 Wall. Jr. 263; Beardsley v. Torrey, 4 Wash. C. C. 286; Ex parte Turner, 3 Wall. Jr. 258; Allin v. Robinson, 1 Dill. 119; Chapman v. Barger, 4 Dill. 557; Hoadley v. San Francisco, 94 U. S. 4; Steinkuhl v. York, 2 Flipp. 376; Field v. Lownsdale, Deady, 288; Johnson v. Monell, 1 Woolw. 390; Fields v. Lamb, Deady, 430; Railway Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270; Sands v. Smith, 1 Dill. 290.

⁵ 12 Stat. L. 589.

⁶ Art. III, § 3.

⁷ 12 Stat. L. 627.

⁸ 12 Stat. L. 755.

case of a proceeding in a State court founded on wrongs and trespasses committed during the rebellion, under color of authority from the President or Congress, to remove the case into the United States courts. In Bigelow v. Forrest,¹ it appeared that one Forrest had been divested of his title to lands in Virginia under the confiscation act; that he had subsequently died, leaving the plaintiff as his sole heir. The latter brought ejectment for the land, and the defendant attempted to remove under the act of March 3, 1863. The Supreme Court held, however, that this statute did not apply to ejectment cases; that the estate sold was only a life interest, and that the plaintiff, on the death of the original owner, was entitled to recover. The court notices the anomalies presented by this case—a forfeiture of lands of which the offender was seized in fee, yet for life only and no longer, and this without corruption of heritable blood; and a descent cast upon an heir, although the ancestor had no seizin at his death.² The case can hardly be a precedent except for decisions under the same peculiar statute. In Kirk v. Lynd,³ it was held that under the act of August 6, 1861, passed to confiscate property, used for insurrectionary purposes, the purchaser of lands seized and condemned took an estate in fee. The distinction between the two acts is held, in the latter case, to be that one is punitive, while the other provided merely for the condemnation of property used by a public enemy in warfare.

§ 914. Title by Act of Congress.—Titles under the United States may rest upon a statute as well as a patent. Such a statute is a grant.⁴ In Hogan v. Page,⁵ it appeared that after the Louisiana cession in 1803, an Act of Congress was passed to settle imperfect French and Spanish claims. The Act provided for a confirmation of title to any one who had for ten consecutive years been in possession of a tract of land not owned by any other person. In 1808 one

¹ 9 Wall. 339.

² Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. 339.

⁴ Sirother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 410, 454.

³ 106 U. S. 315.

⁵ 2 Wall. 605.

Lamondo presented a claim for a tract "formerly the property of Auguste Condi." The Board of Commissioners granted it to "the representatives of Auguste Condi," and their minutes showed that they had before them the original French concession to Condi. The title was made absolute by Act of Congress in 1814. In ejectment by one claiming under Lamondo, it was contended that the confirmation enured to the benefit, not of the original assignee of Condi, but of his heirs. The Supreme Court, however, held that this was a question of fact, which should have been submitted to the jury. Mr. Justice Nelson gave the following explanation of the somewhat peculiar character of grants of this description: "A difficulty had occurred at the Land-Office at an early day, in respect to the form of patent certificates and of patents, arising out of applications to have them issued in the name of the assignee or present claimant, thereby imposing upon the office the burden of inquiring into the derivative title presented by the applicant. This difficulty, also, existed in respect to the Boards of Commissioners under the Acts of Congress for the settlement of French and Spanish claims. The result seems to have been, after consulting the Attorney-General, that the Commissioner of the Land-Office recommended a formula that has since been very generally observed, namely, the issuing of the patent certificate, and even the patent, to the original grantee, or his legal representatives, and the same has been adopted by the several boards of commissioners. This formula, 'or his legal representatives,' embrace representatives of the original grantee in the land, by contract, such as assignees or grantees, as well as by operation of law, and leaves the question open to inquiry in a court of justice, as to the party to whom the certificate, patent or confirmation should enure."

§ 915. Ejectment on Indian title.—Ejectment may be maintained on an Indian right to occupancy and use secured by treaty with the United States,¹ though not on a title resting on a private Indian grant; at least not if in conflict with the title derived from the United States.¹ The reason for the distinction seems to be, that the only Indian right recognized by our courts is that of occupancy. The right to the soil rests on discovery and conquest, and the Indian tribes cannot of themselves dispose of the lands occupied by them in severalty in any way, so as to defeat the right of sovereignty originally residing in the English Crown or its grantees or successors.² In the Federal tribunals the general rule is, that when the same land has been granted twice, the elder patent may be set up as an outstanding title, even by a trespasser, when sued by a claimant under the younger grant, without inquiring as to who is the actual owner of the land at the time of the trial. Thus, in Marsh v. Brooks,³ an Indian title consisting of the usufruct and right of occupancy and enjoyment, was set up successfully as an outstanding title against those claiming the land by patent subsequent to the ratification of the treaty. It is said, in Jackson ex dem. Sparkman v. Porter,⁴ that a purchaser from the Indians holds the title according to their laws, and if they choose to resume it the courts cannot protect the right. "The purchaser incorporates himself with the Indians, and the purchase is to be considered in the same light as if the grant had been made to an Indian; and might be resumed by the tribe, and granted over again at their pleasure," e. g., by a subsequent treaty with the Crown.⁵ Such a treaty would make the possession of the occupant under the Indian grant a mere tenant at will of the Crown, and his holding not being adverse no length of possession would ripen it into a title.⁶

¹ Marsh v. Brooks, 8 How. 223, 232; Cornet v. Winton, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 143; ante, §§ 194, 228.

§ 916. Venue.—In suits of a local nature it is provided, by the Revised Statutes,⁷ that when the defendant resides

¹ Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 543.

² Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 543, 586.

³ 8 How. 223.

⁵ Ib. 476.

⁷ §§ 740, 741. See Chap. XVII, and § 475.

⁴ 1 Paine, 457, 472.

⁶ Ib. 477.

in a different district in the same State from that in which the suit is brought, the plaintiff may have original and final process against him, directed to the marshal of the district in which he resides; and that any suit of a local nature when the land or other subject-matter lies partly in one district and partly in another, within the same State, may be brought in either district.

§ 917. Statutes of limitations in equity.—As a general rule the Federal courts in equity apply the principles of the statutes of limitations, and, therefore, an adverse possession sufficient to bar an ejectment is also an equitable bar.¹ In equity the Federal courts hold that the statute runs against equitable titles and operates as a bar, by analogy, as in the case of a legal title.²

§ 918. Pleading citizenship of parties.—In the recent case of Wythe v. Myers,³ it appeared that the practice of the State courts furnished no guide as to whether a defense based on citizenship should be made by plea in abatement or by simple denial of the allegation in the complaint. Under these circumstances the court thought the rule laid down by the Supreme Court prior to the enactment of section 914 of the Revised Statutes,⁴ must be followed, and that the objection must be taken by plea in abatement.

§ 919. Mandamus to compel issue of patent.—It is a rule underlying the jurisdiction of the courts to issue writs of mandamus, that where the exercise of discretion and judgment on the part of the officer is required mandamus will not lie.⁵ Thus mandamus will not lie against the Commissioner of the Land-Office to issue a patent where there are conflicting claims to the land, the determination of which depends on facts and circumstances resting in parol, and requiring judicial action. The proper remedy in such a

¹ Hunt v. Wickliffe, 2 Pet. 201; Bisbee v. Evans, 17 Fed. Rep. 474.

² Miller v. McIntyre, 6 Pet. 61; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. 168.

³ 3 Sawy. 595.

⁴ Citing Jones v. League, 18 How. 81.

⁵ High on Extraordinary Legal Remedies, § 42, and cases cited.

case is by bill in equity.¹ On the other hand, when a patent has been regularly signed, sealed, countersigned and recorded, the patentee may compel its delivery by mandamus, the duty of issuing it being merely ministerial, and the writ will lie against the Secretary of State.² So, relief by mandamus may be had against a State land commissioner,³ and, in those States in which the writ is held to lie against the Chief Executive, against the Governor.⁴

¹ United States v. The Commissioner, 5 Wall. 563; Secretary v. McGarahan, 9 Wall. 298.

² United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378.

³ Houghton Co. v. Commrs. of State Land-Office, 23 Mich. 270.

⁴ Middleton v. Low, 30 Cal. 596.

INDEX.

[References are to sections.]

- ABANDONMENT of possession, effect of, 232. ejectment will not lie subsequent to, 232.
relieves from liability for subsequent mesne profits, 680.
possession lost or interrupted by, 744.
effect of, on adverse possession, 740, 744.
restores possession of true owner, 744, n.
- ABATEMENT, early practice as to, in ejectment, 49.
death of plaintiff did not abate the action, 49.
contempt to assign as error death of plaintiff, 49.
action for mesne profits formerly died with the person, 648.
modern practice, 661-689.
upon death of defendant, heirs may be substituted, 658-689.
ancient demesne good plea in, 26, n.
of nuisance, 156, 156, n.
- ABSOLUTE DEED, proved a mortgage, 837. accounting concerning, 837.
- ABSTRACTS as evidence, 827.
rule in North Carolina, 827.
in Illinois, 827.
- ABUTTER may bring ejectment for abandoned road-bed, 188.
ejectment by, for lands put to unauthorized use, 133, 135, 161.
cannot recover where fee is taken for public use, 188.
right of, to bring trespass, 134.
remedies of, 269.
injunction or damages, 269.
conveyance by, 860.
- ACCEPTANCE of rent after condition broken, 371.
waives right to enforce forfeiture, 371.
- ACCOUNT rendered will not lie for mesne profits, 632.
- ACCRETION defined, 125.
land formed by, recoverable in ejectment, 125.
title to islands formed by, 124.
claimant must establish title to shore, 125.
- ACQUESCENCE by silence not waiver of forfeiture, 371, n.
- ACT OF CONGRESS, as source of title, 785, 914.

- ACTIONS. See EJECTMENT; REAL ACTIONS; TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE. affecting realty are local, 465.
to which statutory new trials apply, 585.
for construction of will cannot be substituted for ejectment, 168.
ejectment converted into action to redeem, 180.
which are not substitutes for ejectment reviewed, 162, 184.
ejectment, 1, 63, 162. See EJECTMENT. real actions, 2, 3, 5, 8, 64-66, 79. See REAL ACTIONS. for value of land, 177*a*.
to quiet title, judgment in, 582*c*.
new trials in suits to quiet title, 586.
- ACTOR, defendant need not become, 488.
may show as defense facts warranting equitable relief, 488.
affirmative judgment need not be pronounced, 488. practice in California, 487.
in New York, 487, 488.
See ANSWER.
- ACTUAL adverse possession, what constitutes, 731, 732, 734, 771.
ouster not necessary to sustain ejectment in early practice, 29.
entry not required, 205, 206.
ouster must be shown between tenants in common, 277, 278, 283, 750.
between joint tenants, 295.
between coparceners, 295.
See TENANTS IN COMMON; OUSTER.
- ACTUAL POSSESSION, meaning of, 231. same as pedis possessio, 231.
- ACTUAL SETTLERS, possessory rights of, 717, n.
- ADAMS ON EJECTMENT, 8, n. views of, as to fictions, 63*a*.
- ADDITION to house, an improvement, 699.
- ADMEASUREMENT OF DOWER, not conclusive in ejectment, 129.
- ADMINISTRATOR. See EXECUTOR; PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.
summary proceedings by, not proper when title is in issue, 164.
cannot usually bring ejectment, 207-209.
cum testamento annexo may bring ejectment in Pennsylvania, 208.
rights of, in New York, 210, n.
may recover in ejectment estates for years, 208.
not freehold terms or leases, 209.
may recover land acquired by foreclosure, 210.
statutory changes, 211.
de facto, appointment not questioned in ejectment, 184*a*.
- ADMISSION of parties to defend, 39, 259, 265, 658.
landlord, 39, 264-266.
joint owners, 259.
claimant under title paramount to both litigants, 260.
parties claiming against defendant, 261.

ADMISSION—continued.

mortgagee, 262.
purchaser pendente lite, 263.
of possession, 236.

ADVANCEMENT, as defence in ejectment, 837.
may be shown by parol, 837.

ADVERSE POSSESSION, under statutes of limitations, 724, 753, 754, 760, 761, 781. See COLOR OF TITLE; CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION.

limitations and prescription historically considered, 724.

Statute of Merton, 724.

limitations fixed by the writ, 724.

theory and object of statutes of limitations governing real actions, 725-727.

rule as to pleading, 482, 483.

nature of adverse possession discussed, 482.

adverse possession and possession sufficient to support ejectment distinguished, 723.

character of possession to render deed champertous, 190, 776.

by corporation incapable of acquiring title, 251.

superseded in England, 725, n.

how title is made, 726.

is a perfect title, 727.

purchaser compelled to take, 727.

legislation cannot affect, when acquired, 727.

not acquired by stealth, 730, n.

by flowing lands, 149, 734, n.

- (1.) Distinction between limitations and prescription, 724, 726, 727, 727, n.
prescription "creates," 724. limitation "destroys," 724.

- (2.) Possession follows title, 728, 737.
but one actual seizin of an estate, 728.
rightful owner deemed possessed until ousted, 728.
cannot be two possessions of same land, 730.

- (3.) What constitutes adverse possession.
two things must concur, 729.
duties of court and of jury, 729, n.
actual possession by an adverse claimant, 729. intention to oust, 729, 754.
mere possession insufficient, 729.
permissive possession not the basis of adverse possession, 729.
entry and ouster, effect and requisites of, 730.
entry must be notorious and open, 730.
must be hostile, 730.

- (4.) Must be actual, open, continuous, hostile and exclusive.
what constitutes actual possession, 732-734.
fence or inclosure not required, 732.
rule as to adjacent timber land, 733.

ADVERSE POSSESSION—continued.

effect of cutting timber, 733.

requisites of possession as affected by nature of the land, 733.

the cases reviewed, 733.

(5.) Open and notorious, 735.

claimant must "keep his flag flying," 735.

reason for the requirement, 735, 736.

to give notice to the owner, 736.

secret or silent possession insufficient, 735, 777.

(6.) Continuous possession, 737, 738, 740.

must be no interruption during statutory period, 737.

continuity of possession the essence of the doctrine and policy of the statutes, 738.

requisites of, 739.

occasional entries insufficient, 739.

possession must be stationary, 739.

roving possession will not suffice, 739.

possession of true owner must not intervene, 737, n.

(7.) Interruption of the possession, 740-745.

stops the statute, 740.

by re-entry of the owner, 741.

by unsuccessful ejectment, 743, n.

by forcible entry, 743, n.

has same effect as a suit, 741.

by other adverse claimants, 745.

statutory regulations as to effectual re-entry, 742.

effect of bringing ejectment or recovering a judgment, 743.

must be followed by change of possession, 743.

abandonment of possession, 744.

(8.) Tacking, 746-748.

the term "tacking of possessions" criticised, 746.

possession must be continued in the same right, 746.

unconnected possessions cannot be tacked, 746.

what possessions tacked, 747.

landlord and tenant, 747.

vendor and vendee, 747.

ancestor and heir, 747.

the test stated, 747.

various illustrations, 748.

(9.) Hostile possession, 749.

must be in derogation of rights of true owner, 749.

without permission and not in subserviency to him, 749.

presumption that possession is rightful, 372, 749.

(10.) Possession begun in subserviency to owner's title, 750. See OUSTER.

between tenants in common, 750.

exclusive claim must be more unequivocal than between strangers, 278, 280, 750.

ADVERSE POSSESSION—continued.

- possession by one tenant in common not per se adverse, 750.
- possession of one possession of all, 276, 750.
- presumption of ouster from lapse of time, 289, 750.
- (11.) Privity of title or possession, 751.
 - rule as to co-tenants applied generally where privity exists, 751.
 - between landlord and tenant, 730, n., 751, 751, n.
 - how inaugurated, 751, n.
 - trustee and beneficiary, 751.
 - grantor and grantee, 751.
 - mortgagor and mortgagee, 751.
 - vendor and vendee, 305, 751.
 - agent, 751, 751, n.
- (12.) Possession must be exclusive, 752.
 - of the owner and all others, 752.
 - reason of the rule, 752.
- (13.) Conflicting possessions, 753.
 - general principles regulating, 753.
 - the rule stated, 753.
 - cannot be two actual possessions at same time, 753.
 - possession follows the title, 728, 737, 753.
 - or better right, 753.
 - or older color of title, 753.
- (14.) Intention, claim of right, 754–760.
 - possession must be accompanied by adverse intent, 729, 754.
 - no adverse possession without intention, 754.
 - intent the essence of adverse possession, 755.
 - fixes the character of the original entry, 755.
 - claim of ownership necessary, 756.
 - the rule stated, 756.
 - occupant must claim the fee, 756.
 - good faith in assertion of adverse claim, 757.
 - important only in connection with constructive possession, 757.
 - acts and declarations of the occupant indicating intent, 758.
 - possession under mistake, 759.
 - disputed boundary lines erroneously located, 760, 867.
- (15.) Constructive possession, 761, 781.
 - See* CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION; COLOR OF TITLE; INTENTION; DISABILITIES.
- (16.) Disabilities and exceptions, 753a–753f.
 - no adverse possession against State, 753a.
 - municipal corporations, 753a.
 - infants, 753b.
 - co-existing disabilities, 753c.
 - subsequent disabilities, 753d.
 - suspension by agreement, 753e.
 - rule as to co-tenants, 276, 753f.

ADVERSE POSSESSION—continued.

- (17.) Adverse possession of mines, 733, n. discovery and working, 733, n.
nature of the acts, 733, n.
when digging coal is not, 733, n.

ADVERSE POSSESSION TO AVOID DEED, 190.

- character of, to render deed champertous, 190, 776.
must be under claim of specific title, 190.
general assertion of ownership insufficient, 190.
must be actual as distinguished from constructive possession, 190.

ADVERSE TITLE, claim of, 235.

- forfeits right to notice to quit, 389.
something more than idle declaration required, 235.

ADVOWSON, not recoverable in ejectment, 148.AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF, 483, 485, 487, 488. *See ANSWER.AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE, judgment not conclusive upon, 541.

- effect of estoppel, 850.
supplemental complaint, 454c.

AGE, evidence as to, 816.

- presumption of death, 817.
person may testify as to, 816.

AGENT of corporation may give notice to quit, 407.

- authority of general agent to bring ejectment, 418.
adverse possession by, 751, 751, n.
disclaimer by, 751, n.
may commit an ouster, 277.
sheriff may take possession of land as agent, 557.
of government as defendant in ejectment, 244-249.
judgment against, not binding on government, 540.

AGREEMENT, for a lease held tantamount to a lease, 51.

- to attorn does not create new tenancy, 354.
when champertous, 421a.
not in writing, 321a.
to suspend statute of limitations, 753a.
as to boundaries, 760, 867, 868.

AID, praying for, 6, n.ALABAMA, two remedies for trial of title given, 90.

- fictions retained in ejectment, 90.
fictitious form of action not common, 90.
trespass to try title, 88.
principles regulating ejectment applied to trespass to try title, 88-92.
statutory changes, 89.
trespass to try title abolished, 89.
statute of limitations need not be pleaded, 482.
executor or administrator may bring ejectment, 211.
requisites of complaint in ejectment, 439.

ALABAMA—continued.

plea of not guilty and denial of possession incompatible, 480.
description of the lands, 554.
rule as to abatement, 689.

ALIAS WRITS of possession, 552. See WRIT OF POSSESSION.

ALIEN, cannot usually maintain a real action, 226.

by statute may recover in ejectment until office found, 226.

title of, can only be assailed by the State, 226.

may acquire title by purchase, 226.

gift of income to valid, 206, n.

alien friends may bring ejectment, 195.

as defendant, 253*a*.

title of, by adverse possession, 253*a*.

alien enemy may be sued, 253*a*.

receiver against, 614, n.

ALIENATION pending suit, 187, 454*c*, 495.

ALLEY, right to use not recoverable in ejectment, 102, n., 148, 527.

ALLOWANCE FOR IMPROVEMENTS, 690, 691. See IMPROVEMENTS.

ALLUVION, defined, 125.

ALTERNATIVE, notice to quit, 401. See NOTICE TO QUIT.

AMELIORATIONS, 690, 716. See IMPROVEMENTS.

AMENDMENT, power to grant limited in early times, 8.

at common law very little room for amendments, 8.

enlarging term of the fictitious lease favored, 53, 424.

of descriptions, 464. See DESCRIPTION.

of description after close of evidence, 464.

of complaint, 436, 454*b*, 464. See COMPLAINT.

illustrations, 454*b*.

of writ of entry, 436.

striking out unnecessary plaintiffs, 187, 189.

striking out unnecessary defendants, 240.

from equitable action to ejectment not allowed, 179.

nor from legal to equitable title, 437.

from ejectment to suit in equity inadmissible, 182.

from ejectment to action to redeem permitted, 180.

action to determine conflicting claims changed to ejectment, 181.

individual plaintiff may amend to recover as administrator, 211.

from fee to life estate, 436.

of award in ejectment, 501.

of verdict, 498, 503.

of judgment, 525.

in trespass to try title, 91.

supplemental complaint, 454*c*.

in Federal courts, 874.

AMERICAN LAWYERS, familiarity with real writs, 75, n.

ANCESTOR, ejectment by heir or devisee for land of, 205, 206.

actual entry not necessary, 205.

ANCESTOR—continued.

- dying out of possession, heir may sue, 205.
- rule of pleading by heir, 442.
- and heir tacking possessions of, 747.
- tort of, cannot be predicated of heir, 658.

ANCESTRAL DROITURAL writs, 65.ANCIENT demesne, plea of in ejectione firmæ, 26, n.
lease, 27, 28, 34, 35.*ANCIENT DEEDS AND WILLS, proof of, 818.

- thirty years of age, 818.
- surveys and maps, 819.
- possessions, presumption of grant, 784, 786.

ANCILLARY relief, 610, 632. See PROVISIONAL REMEDIES.ANIMO REVERTENDI, question for jury, 744, n.*ANIMUS of entry under color of title, 775, 778a.

- of adverse possession, 754, 755.

ANNEXATION TO THE SOIL, not a sure test as to right to bring ejectment, 108.ANNUAL RENTAL VALUE, measure of damages, 62, 665, 666.*ANNUITY, acceptance of, waives right to claim forfeiture, 371.*ANSWER, 476-495. See COMPLAINT; PLEADING.

- early practice, 476, 477.
- the general issue—"not guilty," 476, 484.
- plea of non-tenure, 480a.
- setting up forfeiture, 486.
- advantages of the plea to defendant, 476.
- plaintiff liable to be surprised, 476.
- tendency to favor the plea, 476.

(1.) Evidence admissible under general issue, 476, 477, 488.

- all defenses admissible thereunder in Indiana, 477.
- defendant need not plead title in California, 477.
- coverture shown under, in Pennsylvania, 477.
- homestead right provable under, in Illinois, 477.
- outstanding title may be shown under, 477.
- exception as to trespassers and intruders, 477.
- principle underlying the cases, 477.
- answer of tenant must set up fraud, 355.
- failing so to do, proof of fraud not received, 355.
- setting up title dispenses with proof of ouster, 290, 291.

(2.) Denial of title in plaintiff, 478.

- general denial ordinarily sufficient, 478.
- what may be shown under, 476-478.
- denial of unlawful withholding insufficient, 478.

(3.) Effect of general issue on question of possession, 479, 480.

- authorities not uniform, 479.
- general rule that denial by defendant admits possession, 479.
- special plea usually necessary to controvert possession, 479.

ANSWER—continued.

- general denial equivalent to consent rule, 480.
- special plea is not abandonment of general denial in Texas, 481.
- (4.) Pleading statute of limitations, 482, 483.
 - subject regulated by statute, 482.
 - sufficiency of plea, 482.
 - practice in Wisconsin, Mississippi, Alabama, Illinois, North Carolina, Florida, California and New York, 482.
 - adverse possession under general issue, 482.
 - rule in the United States Supreme Court, 482.
 - theory of adverse possession explained, 482.
 - the better rule, 482.
- (5.) Practice in Texas, 488.
 - plea of "not guilty," 488.
 - lets in all defenses except statute of limitations, 488.
 - puts in issue question of possession, 488.
 - defendant may even show a deed or mortgage without special plea, 488.
 - legal or equitable defense, by way of estoppel, may be shown under this plea, 488.
 - affirmative equitable relief must be prayed for, and the facts pleaded, 488.
- (6.) Equitable defenses and affirmative relief, 488, 485-488.
 - rule in early practice, 485.
 - legal titles only considered, 485.
 - equitable title established in chancery, 485.
 - injunctions granted to restrain ejectments pending chancery proceedings, 485.
 - modern changes, 485.
 - equitable titles or defenses may now be interposed, 485-487.
 - same rule applies as if proceeding was in equity, 485.
 - equitable defenses must be distinctly pleaded and proved, 486, 487.
 - rule in New York, 486, 488.
 - facts which constitute ground of relief in equity may be set up as a defense, 486.
 - elements of an equitable defense, 487.
 - is in the nature of cross-bill, 487.
 - must contain all the elements of bill in chancery, 487.
 - must ordinarily ask affirmative relief, 487.
 - formerly held that defendant must become an actor, 487.
 - not the rule in New York, 488.
 - no affirmative judgment need be pronounced in that State, 488.
 - reply to affirmative defense, 493.
- (7.) Pleading special title, 492.
 - effect of pleading a special title, 492.
 - defense confined to title as pleaded, 492.
 - defense of not guilty usually waived, 492.

ANSWER—continued.

- pleading determines relevancy of testimony offered, 492.
- in Oregon defendant must disclose his title, 492.
- defendant concluded by answer setting up particular title, 492.

(8.) Supplemental answer, 495.

- matters occurring after suit brought, how availed of, 495.
- by amended or supplemental pleading, 495.
- plea puis darrein continuance, 495.
- reasons for the practice, 495.

ANTE LITEM MOTAM, 818.

- meaning of the rule, 818.
- declarations post litem motam, 818.
- as to deeds, 828.

APPEALS from Circuit Courts, 904.

- pecuniary limit, 904.

APPEARANCE of attorney, effect of, 415, 421. See ATTORNEY'S AUTHORITY TO BRING EJECTMENT.

- adverse party may rely upon, 415.
- judgment entered on, 415.
- of landlord who held to be, 39, 264-266.
- impeaching, 415.
- forged notice of, 415.

APPORTIONMENT of mesne profits, 685.

- of improvements, 707.

APPURTENANT RIGHTS, in ejectment, 102, 102, n.

- what passes as, 102.
- conveyance of, not champertous, 190.

ARBITRATION, effect of, on adverse possession, 744.

- considered abandonment of hostile intent, 744.
- ejectment submitted to, 179*b*.
- boundaries determined by, 179*b*.
- validity of submission to, 179*b*.
- prohibited in New York, 179*b*.

ARKANSAS, mortgagee may bring ejectment, 388.

- statute as to disclosing chain of title, 444, n.

ARLINGTON case discussed, 248, 249. See UNITED STATES.ARREST, right of, in ejectment, 630.

- not generally allowed, 630.
- policy of New York, 630.
- rule in Wisconsin, 630.

ARTIFICE, no adverse possession by, 730, n.ASCERTAINED OBJECTS, govern course and distance, 862.ASSAULT AND BATTERY, joinder of, with ejectment, 505.

- misjoinder cured by verdict, 505.
- right of property does not justify, 94.

ASSENT to use of land does not carry title, 250.

- to create tenancy at sufferance, 885.

- ASSESSMENT, allowance for, to disseizor, 688.
 lease not basis of title by adverse possession, 697, 756.
 lease basis of allowance for improvements, 697.
 of damages down to day of trial, 664, 670.
- ASSIGNEE of bankrupt or insolvent, right of, to bring ejectment, 225.
 of rent charge may support the action, 230.
 provisional assignee, 225.
 of claim for mesne profits may sue for, 656.
- ASSIGNMENT of claim for mesne profits, 656. of set-off for improvements, 706.
- ASSISTANCE, writ of, 548.
 resembles writ of possession, 548.
- ASSUMPSIT, influence of, in the early practice in ejectment, 11.
 title to land cannot be tried in, 176.
 tort cannot be waived to test the title to realty, 176.
 will not lie for mesne profits, 652.
 rule of damages applicable to, governs in mesne profits, 666.
 mesne profits treated as action of assumpsit, in Illinois, 649.
- ATTAINED FELON, 229. See FELONS.
- ATTORNEY'S AGREEMENT AS TO FEES, 421*a*.
 when champertous, 421*a*.
 to be paid in land, 421*a*.
- ATTORNEY'S AUTHORITY TO BRING EJECTMENT, effect of appearance of an attorney in an action, 415.
 adverse party may rely upon it as authentic, 415.
 power of the courts to compel production of authority, 415.
 power not ordinarily exercised, 415.
 not against reputable attorney, 415.
 nor in the preliminary stages of an action, 415.
 presumption that attorney had authority to prosecute, indulged, 415.
 rule in real actions more strict, 416. rights of occupant of land favored, 416.
 statute of New York, 416-420.
 written evidence of authority must be produced, 416.
 court has no discretion, 416.
 early practice in Virginia, 417. authority to prosecute writ of right, 417.
 practice in Pennsylvania, 417.
 attorney required to file warrant of attorney, 417.
 authority of general agent to bring ejectment, 418.
 rule in New York, 418.
 authority from co-tenants, 419.
 from joint owners, 419.
 rule in cases of outstanding title, 420.
 grantee suing in grantor's name for lands held adversely, 420.
 may use grantor's name without his consent, 190, 420, 421.

ATTORNEY'S AUTHORITY TO BRING EJECTMENT—continued.

must indemnify grantor against costs, 420.

grantor liable to defendant for costs, 421.

attorney not allowed to be lessee in early practice, 37, n.

production of title papers by, 802.

ATTORNMENT does not create new tenancy, 354.

is continuation of old tenancy, 354.

operative as to tenant—void as to landlord, 354.

void for fraud, 355.

tenant may repudiate, 357.

by tenant to purchaser at foreclosure, 360.

to work a forfeiture, 388.

AUTHORITY of attorney to bring ejectment, 415–421. See ATTORNEY'S AUTHORITY TO BRING EJECTMENT.

of grantee to use grantor's name, 190, 420, 421.

AVAILABLE AT LAW, equitable defense is, 485, 339.

equitable estoppel is, 849.

AVERSION to ejectments, 78.

to real writs, 86.

AWARD in ejectment, amendment of description, 501. See ARBITRATION, 179*b*.BAD FAITH, affecting color of title, 775–778*a*.

defeats improvement claim, 692, 694, 695.

BAILIFF to the freeholder—tenant for years regarded as, 13.BANKRUPT, assignee of, right to bring ejectment, 225.BANKRUPTCY not a defense to claim for mesne profits, 665, 681.

reason for the rule, 681.

BASIS OF VALUATION of improvements, 707.

should be co-extensive with estimate of rents and profits, 707.

BATTLE, trial by, 2 n.

abolished in England and New York, 2, n.

among the Germans, 2, n.

BEACH, ejectment for, 128.BED OF STREAM, when conveyed, 857.

title of ocean bed, 121.

of tide waters, 121.

BEGIN, right to, 801.

depends on burden of proof, 801.

BENTHAM, hostility of, to fictions, 63*a*.BETTERMENTS, ALLOWANCE FOR, 694. See IMPROVEMENTS.*BILL IN EQUITY, to recover land claimed under legal title not allowed, 168.

ejectment not maintainable in form of, 166, 169–172.

jurisdiction in equity when remedy at law is incomplete, 173, 174.

mesne profits allowed, 687.

improvements set off, 693.

- BILL OF EXCEPTIONS presents question of title more effectually than appeal in equity, 170.
- BILL OF PARTICULARS in ejectment, 464*a*. allowed in New York, 464*a*. in what actions granted, 464*a*, 464*b*. order for, does not stay proceedings, 464*a*. furnishing map, 464*a*. rule as to producing documents, 464*a*.
of breaches, 464*b*.
inspection of lease ordered, 464*b*.
- BLACKSTONE, ejectione firmæ defined by, 21. objection of, to fictitious parties, 37.
views on right of the king to bring ejectment, 191.
- BLAST FURNACE, condition against erection of, upheld, 218.
- BOILERY OF SALT, ejectment for, 126.
- BONA FIDE OCCUPANT. See IMPROVEMENTS. allowed for improvements, 690, 691, 694, 696.
character of, defined, 694, 696.
under color of title, 697, 775.
good faith presumed, 775, n.
basis of valuation of improvements, 707.
- BOND FOR TITLES, notice to quit in ejectment by obligor, 895.
- BOOTH, comments by, on real writs, 45.
- BOUNDARIES, disputed, statutory new trial in case of, 591. reputation as to, 805, 806.
erroneously located, effect of, on adverse possession, 760. See DESCRIPTION.
on sea-shore, 122.
private reputation as to, 805, 806. rules as to, 856-869. construction of grants, 856.
land bounded on a street or river, 857.
leading cases, 858.
particular words and phrases, 859.
grants on the sea-shore, 860.
general rules, 861.
natural and ascertained objects govern course and distance, 862.
destruction of monuments, 868.
monuments erected under deed, 864.
remedies, equitable jurisdiction, 865.
statutory remedies, 866.
inter-state, rule as to, 895. declaration as to, 808.
agreement as to, 867.
estoppel, 760, 868.
conclusions, 869.
arbitration, 179*b*.

- BRANCHES OF TREES overhanging land may be cut off, 156.
- BRANT v. VIRGINIA COAL & IRON CO., 847. rule of, as to estoppel, quoted, 847.
- BREACH OF CONDITIONS, 212, 213. construction of conditions, 367, 368.
subsequent, 212, 213.
who may take advantage of, 212.
particulars of, 464a.
- BREACH OF COVENANT OF SEIZIN, burden of proof, 447, n.
- BROWNE (IRVING), rules as to possession formulated by, 717, n.
- BUILDING, ejectment lies for portion of, 105, 155.
encroachment of, when not the basis of ejectment, 156, 157.
- BURDEN OF PROOF as to ouster, 282.
as to breach of covenant, 447, n.
generally in ejectment, 800.
rule as to, explained, 800.
when the people sue, 192, 800.
right to begin depends on, 801.
- BUTCHER, covenant not to carry on trade of, 365.
- CALIFORNIA, complaint in ejectment must aver seizin, 446.
technically have no action of ejectment, 79.
allegation that plaintiff claims the premises in fee simple sufficient, 495.
precision in pleading, 447.
right of possession need not be alleged, 446.
effect of judgment in ejectment, 538, 544.
form of judgment, 544.
when judgment conclusive upon landlord, 538.
ejectment on deed intended as a mortgage, 338.
title of defendant need not be pleaded, 477.
statute of limitations must be pleaded, 482.
what a sufficient plea of, 482.
equitable defense in ejectment must contain averments similar to bill in equity, 487.
equitable defense first passed upon by the court, 487, 496.
when title is admitted by answer, 490.
wife claiming title cannot be evicted under writ against her husband, 560. appointment of receiver, 621.
application for is a proceeding in the action of ejectment, 621.
injunction restraining waste, 624, 626.
title cannot be tried in condemnation proceedings, 177.
trespassers not entitled to notice to quit, 877.
bed of the ocean vested in the State, 121.
may be recovered in ejectment, 121.
rule as to prior and adverse possession, 728.
one tenant in common may eject trespasser, 800.

- CANONRY, or ecclesiastical office, not the subject of an ejectment, 148.
- CASUAL EJECTOR, 27, 31, 37, 38. character of, in early practice, 31, 37.
judgment for damages against, 647.
servant a sufficient ejector, 30.
or person entering by chance, 30.
abuses under the practice, 31.
notice to tenant in possession, 32.
judgment against, 39.
- CENTRE, of river or street, conveyance to, 857, 858.
- CESTUIS QUE TRUSTENT, right of, to bring ejectment, 223.
may maintain suit for construction of a will, 163.
title of, is equitable, 222, 223.
ejectment for lands of, must usually be brought by trustee, 222.
ejectment by trustee against, 222.
wrongdoer or stranger cannot set up title against, 222, 223.
may recover mesne profits, 656.
- CHAIN OF TITLE, effect of pleading it, 443, 444, 444, n.
evidence confined to title as alleged, 443.
muniments of title should not be set forth, 444.
statute and rules in Arkansas and Missouri, 444, n. motion to strike out portion of complaint setting forth chain of title granted, 444.
evidence of title not to be pleaded, 445.
facts, not evidence of facts, to be stated, 445.
- CHAMBER or room, ejectment for, 105, 155.
- CHAMPERTOUS agreement, what is, 190, 421a. is not a defense, 421a.
- CHAMPERTY STATUTES, repeal of, recommended, 190.
no longer of practical value, 190.
view of Federal courts, 190, n. nature of the possession sufficient to render deed champertous, 190, 776.
must be under claim of specific title, 190.
grantee suing in grantor's name, 190, 421.
statutes not applicable to rights appurtenant, 190.
nor to licenses or confirmatory deeds, 190.
statute and rule in New York, 190.
- CHANCERY. See EQUITY.
guardian, right of to lease ward's estate, 199.
- CHANGE from ejectment to real writs, 8. causes of, 12.
of county lines, 473, 474.
in action for mesne profits, 648.
of residence, 910.
- CHANGE OF VENUE, 471. See VENUE.

- CHARACTER and scope of ejectment, 162. of possession with color of title, 771.
- CHARACTERISTICS of real actions, 66.
- CHATTEL INTEREST, mortgage is, 331. term for years regarded as, 13.
- CHIEF JUSTICE ROLLE, practice introduced by, in ejectment, 35.
- CHURCH PROPERTY, the early practice, 144. ejectment for church ground upheld, 144, 271.
action should be brought against corporation and not its trustees, 250.
- CIRCUIT COURTS, appeals from, 904.
original jurisdiction of, 906.
- CITIZENSHIP in Federal courts, 899, 910.
- CITY, ejectment by, 267, 275. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
vested with the fee, 267.
vested with public easement, 268.
conflict of the cases, 271-273, 275.
ejectment against, for wrongfully converting land to a street, 161, 252.
may defend suit against its tenant, 252.
may gain title by adverse possession, 753a.
adverse possession against, 753a.
- CIVIL LAW, allowance for improvements, 601. allowance for incumbrances, 704.
- CLAIM FOR IMPROVEMENTS, 690, 716. See IMPROVEMENTS. not the subject of an ejectment, 159, 713.
- CLAIM OF TITLE by defendant to warrant ejectment, 93, 161, 235.
must be of such character that, if reduced to possession, would constitute actual occupation, 161.
assertion of adverse title, 235.
of ownership necessary to establish adverse possession, 756.
more than idle declaration required, 235.
simple trespass insufficient, 93.
distinguished from color of title, 763, 764.
- CLANDESTINE entry not the basis of adverse possession, 730.
- CLASSES of ejectment, 349.
of estoppel, 844.
- CLASSES OF INJURIES affecting realty, 80. distinction between a trespass and a disseizin, 80, 93.
- CLASSIFICATION of real actions, 65.
- CLAY BED, trespass affecting, 105, n.
- CLERGYMEN not amenable as defendants in ejectment, 243.
- CLOUD ON TITLE, character of, 154, 154, n., 179.
must purport to create or convey paramount estate, 179.
or to constitute prior incumbrance, 179.
action to remove cannot be substituted for ejectment, 179.
cannot be cleared or foreclosed in ejectment, 154.
bill in nature of quia timet, 154, n.

CLOUD ON TITLE—continued.

character of, explained, 154, n.
must be valid on its face, 154, n.
test to determine existence of, 154, n.
void deed not canceled, 154, n.
forged deed canceled, 154, n. jurisdiction of the suit, 154, n.

COAL MINES, ejectment maintainable for, 109, 118, 114.

not considered a profit a prendre, 109.

CO-EXISTING DISABILITIES, 758c.

subsequent disabilities, 758d.

COKE, opposition of, to introduction of ejectment, 45.COLLUSIVE TRANSFERS, effect of, 910.COLONIAL TIMES, equity jurisprudence in, 74.

real writs imperfectly known, 75.
objections to real actions, 75.
their adoption in New England, 76.
writs of entry in Massachusetts, 70. • changes effected in, 75, 77, 79.
ejectment in New England, 78.
unpopularity of the remedy, 74.

COLORADO, title by occupancy in, 296, 717.

judgment for want of replication, 580.

COLOR OF TITLE, 761, 781. See ADVERSE POSSESSION; CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION.

general character of adverse possession with, 761.
is a substitute for a fence, 767.
of service only in aid of possession, 770, n.
does not dispense with necessity for hostile claim, 761.
important as establishing constructive possession, 761.
color of title, definition of, 762, 772, 779.
views of the different courts, 697, 762.
to be effectual must concur with actual possession, 774.
distinction between claim of title and color of title, 763, 764.
color of title important as showing the character and extent of the possession, 763.
misapplication of the term color of title, 764.
color and claim of title confounded, 764. instrument insufficient as color of title may evidence claim of title, 765.
color of title as creating a constructive possession, 766.
must describe and define the lands, 767.
constructive possession limited to land described, 768.
no constructive possession without written instrument, 769.
some actual possession necessary upon which to base constructive possession, 770.

COLOR OF TITLE—continued.

- character of such possession, 771.
- underlying principles of color of title and constructive possession summed up, 772.
- certain exceptions noticed, 773.
- extent of construction possession limited, 774.
- good faith as an ingredient in constructive possession, 775, 778a.
- the New York doctrine on the subject, 776.
- statement of the prevailing rule, 777.
- doctrine of New Jersey Court of Errors, 777.
- good faith required by statute in some States, 778.
- the true distinction, 778a.
- difficulties of defining color of title, 779.
- instances of what is held to be color of title, 780.
- what held insufficient to constitute color of title, 781.
- as the basis of a claim for improvements, 697.

COMITY, corporations may bring ejectment by, in foreign States, 195.
unless prohibited by statute, 195.

same rules as to alien friends, 195, 226.

COMMISSIONS, mortgagee possibly entitled to, 341.

COMMITTEE OF LUNATIC cannot bring ejectment, 203.

legal character of, 203, 204.

not vested with title to the estate, 203.

not trustee of an express trust, 203.

powers and duties of, 204.

resemble those of general guardian, 204.

may bring equitable action, 204.

rule as to joinder of committee and lunatic, 204.

COMMON appendant and appurtenant, ejectment for, 145.

COMMON LAW, new trials at, 577. See NEW TRIALS.

new trials at, not counted in estimating statutory new trials, 596.

statutes granting statutory new trials in effect restrictive of common law rights, 580.

rights of mortgagee, 380.

ejectment at, 1, 68.

COMMON PLEAS, English court of, had exclusive jurisdiction of real actions, 12.

concurrent jurisdiction in ejectment, 12.

effect of, upon ejectment, 12.

COMMON REPUTATION as to boundaries, 804-806.

COMMON, RIGHT OF, not recoverable in ejectment, 148.

COMMON SOURCE OF TITLE, 803.

meaning of the rule, 803.

not an estoppel, 803.

when rule does not apply, 803.

applies in trespass, 803.

COMPENSATION, of attorney, 421a.

champertous agreement as to, 421a.

lien for, 421a, n.

COMPLAINT. See DECLARATION; DESCRIPTION; VENUE; PARTIES; PLAINTIFF; DEFENDANT; PLEADING.

- (1.) The early practice, 5, 27, 28, 84, 35, 87, 56, 422-424.
 - parties formerly fictitious, 35, 37, 422.
 - declaration formerly the process of the court, 422.
 - fictitious lease, how set forth, 37-39, 423.
 - demise, though a fiction, required to be consistent, 28, 424.
 - liberality in granting amendments, 53, 424.
- (2.) Modern pleading, 56, 425, 431, 454.
 - fictitious parties and lease obsolete, 55, 425.
 - real parties in interest are now nominal parties, 425.
 - names of the parties, 426.
 - initials, or middle names, not recognized, 426.
 - senior and junior no part of name, 426.
 - when fictitious names are used record should so state, 426.
 - written pleadings required, 427.
 - hostile claimants cannot join, 188, 450.
 - prayer for relief, 454a.
- (3.) Construction of pleadings.
 - doubtful phraseology taken against pleader, 428.
 - liberal construction of pleadings, 428.
 - uncertainty in pleading reached by motion, 428.
 - precision in pleading in modern practice, 447.
- (4.) Pleadings in real actions, 2, 3, 5, 429, 654.
 - strictness in early times, 3, 5.
 - demandant must aver seizin, 429, 439, 440.
 - and allege taking of esplees or profits, 429.
 - writ of entry in Maine, 430.
 - requisites of the declaration, 430.
- (5.) Modern complaint, allegations of, 56, 425, 431, 454.
 - regulated by statute, 431.
 - essential allegations the same in the several States, 431.
 - must allege possession by defendant, 231, 236, 432, 433.
 - rule the same where possession is not actual, 432.
 - allegation of possession of part of premises sufficient, 432.
 - objection as to absence of allegation of possession cured by verdict, 432.
- (6.) Must allege wrongful or unlawful withholding of possession, 433.
 - defendant must be put in the wrong by the pleadings, 433.
 - omission of allegation of unlawful withholding of possession fatal, 433, 439.
 - must allege that plaintiff is entitled to the possession, 433.

COMPLAINT—continued.

- (7.) Allegation of title and seizin, 429, 430, 434, 446, 448.
in New York seizin must be alleged, 434.
so in California, 446.
seizin is an issuable fact, 446.
right of possession follows, 446.
need not be alleged, 446.
estate must generally be specified, 434–436.
defective pleading of estate ground of demurrer, 434.
claimant must allege title at commencement of action, 435, 448.
allegation that plaintiff “claims” the premises “in fee simple absolute,” sufficient in California, 435.
- (8.) Variance, 436, 437.
under claim of fee simple life estate not recoverable, 436.
real writ for fee simple not maintainable on proof of fee tail, 436.
complaint on legal title—equitable title cannot be shown, 437.
equitable relief not usually given under complaint in ejectment, 182.
practice in New York as to joinder of legal and equitable relief, 184, 639.
joint demise supported only by proof of joint title, 187, 189, 449.
suing in representative capacity, recovery on individual interest, 211.
- (9.) Nature of estates, how set forth, 438–442.
general form and character of estate must be averred, 439.
details of the facts or evidence need not be alleged, 439.
seizin of some certain estate must be averred, 429, 439, 446.
rule as to allegations of quantity or amount of the interest, 438.
amendment to conform pleading to proof, 438.
- (10.) Fee simple, how pleaded, 440, 442. sufficient to declare on an estate in fee, 440, 442.
or that demandant is seized in fee, 440.
claim or title under which defendant entered need not be specified, 440.
estate in fee simple may be pleaded in general terms, 440.
origin of the estate need not be traced, 440.
not necessary for heirs to plead that they claim by inheritance, 442.
- (11.) Particular estates, 441.
commencement of particular estates must be shown, 441.
must be traced from last seizin in fee, 441.
origin of the distinction in the nature of the estates, 441.
general allegation of seizin traversable, 441.
allegation of seizin of particular estate combines law and fact, 441.
hence not traversable, 441.
strictness of the rules impaired, 441.
- (12.) Specific chain of title, 443, 444.
evidence will be confined to title as alleged, 443.

COMPLAINT—continued.

- not necessary to aver evidence of title, 443, 445.
- if alleged, substantial elements of title must be stated, 443.
- (13.) Muniments of title, 444, 445.
 - muniments should not be set forth, 443-445.
 - motion granted striking out chain of title, 444.
 - deeds should not be set out in extenso, 444.
 - exhibit, not a part of a pleading, how stated, 444.
 - See CHAIN OF TITLE.
- (14.) Evidence of title, 444, 445.
 - rules and customs of mining on which title depends need not be pleaded, 445.
 - evidence of title not to be disclosed, 445.
 - facts, not evidence of facts, must be stated, 445.
- (15.) Joint title, 187, 189, 449.
 - must be truly stated, 449.
 - only supported by showing title in each to demise the whole, 449.
 - if one plaintiff has no title, or title is several, action fails, 187, 449.
 - joint demise by husband and wife not sustained on proof of title in husband, 449.
- (16.) Co-tenants, pleading between, 276, 453.
 - complaint must aver actual ouster, 453.
 - or act amounting to total denial of plaintiff's right, 453.
- (17.) Several defendants, one declaration will lie against several defendants, 452.
 - one declaration sufficient against occupants of different stories of a house, 452.
- (18.) Joinder of actions, ejectment and claim for damages, 454, 650, 651.
 - objections to the practice, 651.
- (19.) Amendments, enlarging term of fictitious lease, 53, 424.
 - to conform pleading to proof, 438.
 - of the description, 464.
 - striking out unnecessary plaintiffs, 187, 189.
 - from equitable action to ejectment not allowed, 179.
 - from ejectment to suit in equity inadmissible, 182.
 - from ejectment to action to redeem permitted, 180.
 - from action to determine conflicting claims to ejectment, 181.
 - from claim of fee to life estate, 436.
 - from title in fee to mortgagee in possession, 436.
 - liberally allowed, 454b.
 - supplemental complaint, 454c.
 - individual plaintiff may amend to recover as administrator, 211.
 - forcible entry proceedings changed to ejectment, 183.

See DESCRIPTION; VENUE; PARTIES; PLEADING; ANSWER.

CONCEALMENT OF WILL, effect of after probate, 838.

CONCLUSIVENESS of a patent, 184a, 887.

- CONCURRENT REMEDIES, ejectment and bill to foreclose, 880.
 vendor and vendee, 807.
- CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS, trial of title in, 177. rule in California, 177.
 change of venue in, 471.
 judgment in, 582*b*.
 when defective, 838.
 pendency of, 838.
 license to use land, 884.
- CONDITIONAL FEE, owner of, may bring ejectment, 280.
- CONDITIONS, severance of, in a lease, 366. construction of, 367, 368.
- CONDITIONS SUBSEQUENT, breach of, 212, 213. rule as to pleading breach, 447.
 who may take advantage of, 212.
 against selling liquor, valid, 218.
 so of conditions against a school-house, distillery, blast furnace, livery stable, machine shop, powder magazine, hospital, or cemetery, 213.
- CONDUCT, estoppel by, 843, 884.
- CONFESSION, effect of judgment by, 532. of lease, entry, and ouster, 85-89.
- CONFISCATION, title by, 913.
- CONFLICTING CLAIMS, action to determine, changed to ejectment, 181.
 statutory new trial in actions of this class, 592.
 injunction in, 622.
- CONFLICTING PATENTS, doctrine of relation, 889.
- CONFLICTING POSSESSIONS, general principles regulating, 753.
- CONGRESS, Act of, as source of title, 785, 914.
- CONNECTICUT, conditional verdict in ejectment, 503. rights of riparian proprietors to land under water, 119.
 may be vindicated in ejectment, 119.
 judgment in action of disseizin, 513.
- CONSENT, judgment rendered upon, binding, 581.
- CONSENT RULE, 36, 38.
 special rule applicable to co-tenants, 277.
 ouster not confessed, 277.
 signed for purpose of testing title, 61, 647.
 framed so as to require plaintiff's lessor to pay costs, 36, 87.
- CONSIDERATION, tendering back by infant, 198.
 as affecting parol gift, 486, 798.
- CONSOLIDATION OF EJECTMENTS, 638.
 the early practice stated, 638.
 objections to the practice, 638.
 of partitions, 638, n.

- CONSTITUTIONALITY of improvement statutes, 692, 712.
views of Cooley, J., 712, n.
of statutes prohibiting ejectment by mortgagees, 334.
- CONSTRUCTION. See PLEADINGS. of pleadings, 428, 428, n.
doubtful phraseology taken against pleader, 428.
rule in Texas, 428.
uncertainty must be reached by motion, 428.
of verdict, 498.
of covenants against waste, 365.
of contracts, 321.
of grants, intention governs, 856.
of public and private grants, 860, n.
of conditions in lease, 867.
rule in New York, 867.
liberal construction of Lord Tenterden, 868.
of statutes granting new trials, 584.
of statutes—circumstances leading to the enactment of, considered, 193.
- CONSTRUCTION OF WILL, action for, cannot be substituted for ejectment, 163. questions of trust must arise to uphold the action, 163.
court must be moved on behalf of executor, trustee, or cestui que trust, 163.
- CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE, defined, 723*a*, n. character of, 723*a*, n.
must be distinct, 723*a*, n.
not notice of possessor's rights, 723*a*.
in law of improvements, 696.
- CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION. See ADVERSE POSSESSION; COLOR OF TITLE. follows the better title, 753, 774.
no constructive possession without written instrument, 769.
color of title as creating constructive possession, 766.
limited to amount described in color of title, 768.
some actual possession necessary on which to base constructive possession, 770.
character of such possession, 771.
occupant parting with actual, loses constructive possession, 770.
underlying principles of color of title and constructive possession, 772.
extent of the constructive possession limited, 774.
good faith as an ingredient in constructive possession, 775.
New York doctrine on the subject, 776.
statement of the prevailing rule, 777.
good faith required by statute in some States, 778.
difficulty of laying down a general definition of color of title, 779.
what held to be color of title, 780.

CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION—continued.

what held insufficient, 781.

constructive possession of mining claims, 778.

CONTEMPT, disobeying order for restitution punishable as, 575.

for releasing costs under early practice, 49.

to sue a receiver without permission, 252*a*.

CONTINGENT INTERESTS, provision for, in partition, 582*a*, n.CONTINUENDO, ejectment not laid with, 25, n.CONTINUOUS, adverse possession must be, 781, 787, 788. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

continuity the essence of the doctrine and policy of the statute of limitations, 788.

CONTROVERSIES between citizens of same State, 899.CONVENIENCE, fence erected for, 760, 760, n.CONVEYANCE of entire estate by mortgagor to mortgagee, how regarded, 844.

sustained only when bona fide and fair, 844.

of entire estate is an ouster between tenants in common, 287, 750.

exceptions noticed, 288.

COOLEY, J., views of, as to improvements, 712, n.

as to ouster, 289, n.

COPARCENERS. See Co-TENANTS.

ejectment by, 803.

joinder of, 803.

each may recover moiety, 803.

ejectment between—actual ouster must be shown, 295.

CORNICES projecting over land, remedy for, 156.

gutters or eaves overhanging, not ground of ejectment, 98, 156.

CORPORATIONS, ejectment by, 195.

foreign corporations may bring ejectment by comity, 195.

vested with power to hold land may bring ejectment, 195.

right of, to hold land usually limited, 195.

corporations as defendants, 250.

in forcible entry proceedings, 94.

claim of easement by, 161.

ejectment against, for using land as a street, 132, 135, 140, 158, 161.

agent of corporation may give notice to quit, 407.

authority under seal not necessary, 407.

ejectment by municipal corporations vested with fee, 267.

vested with public easement, 139, 140, 161, 268.

theory of the decisions, 269.

right to bring ejectment founded on public necessity, 270.

ejectment for streets and public places, 271, 275.

exceptions to the rule, 272-274.

may recover mesne profits, 656.

liable for mesne profits, 658.

right to hold real estate, how determined, 184*a*.

CORPORATIONS—continued.

may gain title by adverse possession, 250, 753a.

forfeiture established by direct proceeding, 184a, 796.

CORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS, ejectment will lie for, 95, 97, 98, 101, 127, 146, 162, 185.

consist of permanent and substantial objects, 95.

CORPUS of railroad, what is, 690, n.COSTS, infant plaintiff must give security for, 197.

of tenant applying to defend, security for, 32.

staying new ejectment until paid, 51, 197, n.

liability of landlord for, 537.

condition of granting new trial, 584, 598, 602.

recoverable in action for mesne profits, 679.

but not counsel fees, 679.

releasing costs contempt of court under early practice, 49.

fictitious parties not favored because costs could not be collected, 37.

objection obviated by form of consent rule, 37.

CO-TENANTS, 276, 303.

See TENANTS IN COMMON; COPARCENERS; JOINT TENANTS; COMPLAINT; OUSTER; VERDICT; WRIT OF POSSESSION; TITLE.

ejectment between, 276, 295.

actual ouster must be shown, 277, 295, 453, 660, 750.

special rule in case of, 277.

ouster a question of fact, 281, 504.

joinder of, against third parties, 297, 299, 302, 303.

of tenants in common, 205, 206, 297-299.

of joint tenants, 302.

of coparceners, 303.

verdict between co-tenants, 504.

writ of possession as to, 570.

mesne profits between, 660.

distinctions in the cases, 660.

allowance for improvements, 711.

receiver of, 631a.

disabilities, 276, 753f.

COUNSEL FEES, 679. See COSTS.COUNTER-CLAIM for rents, 489.

cannot be interposed in action for dower, 489.

COUNTY, 465, 468, 469, 471, 473. See VENUE.

ejectment must be instituted in county where land lies, 465.

ejectment for lands in several counties, 468.

change in boundaries of counties, 473, 474.

rule in Federal courts, 473.

ejectment may be brought against, 251.

is a quasi corporation, 251.

- COURSE yields to monuments, 862. distance yields to, 864, n.
- COURT, must determine what constitutes adverse possession, 729, n.
- COVENANT against waste, construction of, 365.
once waived is waived forever, 371, n. action of, not maintainable, when, 806.
writ of, in early times, 14.
- COVERTURE may be shown under general issue in Pennsylvania, 477.
See MARRIED WOMEN.
- CREDITORS may reach widow's dower, 129.
recover debtor's improvements, 709, n.
statute of limitations against, 751, n.
adverse possession against, 751, n.
- CROPS pass by recovery in ejectment, 568, 683. severed from the land and harvested do not pass, 683.
rule in New York, 683.
title to, 683.
- CROWN, petition of right for lands in possession of, 244.
See UNITED STATES.
- CUMULATIVE, statutory remedies are, 186.
- CURTESY, tenant by, may bring ejectment, 219.
- CUSTOMS AND RULES OF MINING, when title depends upon, 445. need not be pleaded, 445.
- DAMAGES, 61, 454, 646, 689. See MESNE PROFITS AND DAMAGES. originally the only recovery in ejectment, 1, 23, 61, 510, 546, 647. reasons for extending recovery to include the term, 9, 23, 546.
usually nominal after introduction of fictions, 61, 656.
judgment for, in name of nominal plaintiff, 61, 656.
distinction between claim for damages and for mesne profits, 658.
measure of, 664-666. payment of, does not pass title, 177.
by abutting owner, 269.
of vendee not restricted to purchase-money, 319.
exemplary, 668a.
for waste and trespass, 668.
after judgment, 669.
only redress of landlord having no right of re-entry, 160, 350.
claim for and ejectment joined, 61, 454, 650, 651.
objections to the practice, 651.
plaintiff may proceed for, though term has expired, 657.
not allowed when not claimed in pleading, 655.
- DAY of ouster, need not be stated, 53.
in court, parties entitled to, 281.
- DEATH, 49, 648, 658, 661, 689. See ABATEMENT. of widow, heirs may recover lands assigned as dower, 205.

DEATH—continued.

of ancestor, heirs or devisees may recover lands, 205, 206.
of plaintiff in early practice did not abate action, 49.
presumption of, 817.

DEBATABLE TITLE, may be rejected, 841.

DEBTOR, improvements made by, reached, 709, n.

DECEASED GRANTOR, statements of, 809.

admissible as res gesta, 809.

DECEASED PERSONS, transactions with, 825.

DECLARATION, 422, 454. See COMPLAINT ; DESCRIPTION.

the fictitious lease, 87, 422.

how set forth, 423.

demise, though a fiction, required to be consistent, 28, 424.

writ of entry in Maine, 430.

declaration and notice served on tenant in possession, 31, 37, 423.

service of, resemble service of writ, 32.

modern complaint in ejectment, 425, 427, 431-433, 435.

for mesne profits, 654, 655.

DECLARATIONS of deceased party, 808, 809.

as to boundary, 808.

as part of the res gesta, 811.

as to age, 816.

as to family facts, 812.

in deeds, 823.

DECREE, 506-545. See JUDGMENT.

only binding on parties, 231.

DEED, tender of, by vendor, 313.

evidence when lost, 820.

office copies of, 821.

not evidence in itself, 792.

vendee must point out defects, 313.

when tender not necessary, 314.

may be proved a mortgage, 337, 433.

delivery of, 822.

recitals in, 823.

evidence to vary, 824.

estoppel by, 850.

ejectment on deed intended as a mortgage, 333.

disaffirmance of, by infant, 198.

disaffirmance should be set forth in complaint, 451.

deed should not be set out in extenso in pleading, 444.

pleading and deed governed by same rule of interpretation, 458.

ancient, how proved, 818.

presumption as to, 818.

monuments erected under, 864.

DEFAULT, judgment by, 530.

when conclusive in New York, 530.

in Colorado and Pennsylvania, 530.

DEFEATING TAX TITLE, by owner of fee, 836.DEFECTIVE CONDEMNATION of lands, 833.DEFECTIVE TITLE, surrender of possession, 323.

lien for improvements, 323.

lien for unrefunded purchase-money, 323.

descriptions, 463.

when rejected, 841.

what considered, 841.

DEFENDANTS, 231-266. See PARTIES.

in ejectment, 231, 266.

all tenants should be, 238.

need not become an actor, 488.

in writs of entry, 233.

in action for mesne profits, 658.

plaintiff may dismiss as to some, 238.

relief between, 266a.

(1.) Party in possession, 231.

tenant or actual occupant must be defendant, 231.

all possessors should be summoned, 231.

what is meant by party in possession, 231.

effect of abandonment of possession, 232.

unoccupied lands, 234.

what is sufficient claim of adverse title, 235.

proof of possession, 236, 432.

service of writ prima facie evidence of possession, 236.

possession of part of the land, 237.

character of possession, 133, 161, 235.

(2.) Joinder of defendants, of landlord with tenant, 238.

of husband and wife, 238, 255.

wife, when improperly joined, 255.

when liable to ejectment, 255.

mortgagee with party in possession, 238.

joint occupants, 238.

effect of joint denial, 238.

claiming distinct parcels, 239.

claiming under distinct titles, 240.

squatters, 241.

(3.) Parties defendant, servants or employees not liable to ejectment, 242, 242, n., 243.

clergymen or trustees of religious corporations not liable, 243.

trustee may defend legal title, 222.

federal officers, 244-249, 249, n. See UNITED STATES.

corporations liable to ejectment, 250.

DEFENDANTS—continued.

city, 252.
county, 251.
aliens, 253*a*.
insolvents, 253.
receivers, 252*a*.
infants as defendants, 254.
must be represented by guardian, 254.
may come in to defend, 254.
can defend by guardian as landlord, 254.
husband and wife, 255.
widow, 256.
tenant at will, 258.
holder of tax title, 257.

(4.) Who may come in and defend, joint owners may, 259.

infant, 254.
holder of paramount title cannot, 260.
nor can parties claiming in opposition to defendant's title, 261.
purchaser pendente lite not admitted, 263.
mortgagee, 262.
landlord as defendant, 264.
third party claiming as landlord, 265, 266.
relief between, 266*a*.

DEFENSES, 829-855.

defenses in general, 829.
defendant may set up several defenses, 830.
outstanding title, 831.
possession acquired by fraud, 832.
defective condemnation of lands, 833.
license to use lands by railroad, 834.
possession by execution defendant, 835.
defeating tax title, 836.
advancement, 837.
concealment of will, effect of after probate, 838.
equitable defenses, 839, 878.
injunction against ejectment, 840.
defective, doubtful or unmarketable titles, 841.
estoppel, 842.
equitable estoppel or estoppel by conduct, 843.
different classes of cases, 844.
fraud in the estoppel, 845.
the statute of frauds, 846.
Brant v. Virginia Coal & Iron Co., 847.
distinction between right and remedy in equity, 848.
is equitable estoppel available at law? 849.
estoppel by deed, warranty, after-acquired title, 850.

DEFENSES—continued.

- no estoppel through void or illegal contract, 851.
- estoppel must be direct, 852.
- no estoppel against grantee, 853.
- estoppel against a State, 854.
- pleading estoppel, 855.
- bankruptcy not a defense to claim for mesne profits, 681.
- equitable, allowed in modern practice, 485, 487. See ANSWER.
- elements of equitable defense, 487.
- easement of drainage no defense, 100, n.
- to partition suits, 167.
- must be pleaded, 486.
- outstanding title, 57, 194, 222, 339, 477.
- statute of limitations, 482, 727.

DEFINITION of disseizin, 80.

- of ouster, 276.
- of notice to quit, 373.
- of color of title, 762.
- of estoppel, 848.

DELIVERY of deeds, 822.

- record, proof of, 820, 822.
- when no delivery, 822.

DEMAND OF POSSESSION, 810, 372, 384, 391, 414. See NOTICE TO QUIT.

- between vendor and vendee, 310, 394.
- not generally necessary after default, 394.
- English rule different, 394.
- followed in Virginia, 394.
- between tenants in common, 283, 391.
- rule where defendant relies on adverse title, 391.
- or sets up title by answer, 290, 391.
- in case of tenant at will, 394.

DEMAND OF RENT, necessity of, 370.

- is waiver of forfeiture, 371.

DEMISE, though a fiction, required to be consistent, 28, 424.DEMURRER, uncertainty in pleading not reached by, 428.

- defective pleading of estate is ground for, 494.
- for misjoinder, 494a.
- to answer, 494.
- may be interposed to ejectment bill, 169.

DERAIGNING title in trespass to try title, 91.DESCRIPTION OF THE LANDS. See VERDICT.

- description under the early practice, 54, 56, 455.
- general and imperfect description sufficient, 54, 455.
- no greater certainty required than in an action of trespass, 54.
- strict rules governing real actions relaxed in ejectment, 455, 457.
- peculiarities of a personal action retained, 455.
- rule that sheriff must find the land without assistance relaxed, 455.

DESCRIPTION OF THE LANDS—continued.

- Lord Mansfield's statement of requisites of description, 455.
insufficient description ground of attacking verdict, 497.
not varied by parol, 824.
inadequately described land identified, 824.
- (1.) Early practice, examples under, 54, 56, 456.
vague and imperfect descriptions allowed, 456.
ejectment sustained for "five acres of alder car," 456.
for a beast gate or cattle gates, 456.
for messuage or tenement called Black Swan, 456.
for corn mills, stable, and passage room, 456.
room, "part of a house in A," and place called a vestry, 456.
"ten acres of pease," 456.
- (2.) Modern practice, 457, 458, 534.
regulated by statute, 56, 458.
State or country must be stated, 457, 467.
county must be named, 457.
town or city given, 457.
section or subdivision of county added, 457.
allegations as to geographical position of lands jurisdictional, 457.
description of tin bound, 110.
- (3.) General and particular descriptions, 458.
more particular description controls words of general description, 458.
deed and pleading governed by same rule, 458.
plaintiff setting forth general description may be required to furnish detailed description, 458.
objects of particularity of description, 459.
reasonable certainty only required, 459.
descriptions considered sufficient, 462a.
defective description, 463.
- (4.) Street numbers, 460.
"No. 136 South Third Street, in the city of Philadelphia," sufficient description, 460. object of giving metes and bounds, 460.
necessary only to identify the property, 460.
- (5.) Reputed name, 461.
examples of descriptions held sufficient, 461.
name sometimes overrides mistake in description, 461.
not necessary to describe land by abutments, 461.
- (6.) Sections of townships, 462.
designation of land by number of government survey, 462.
example of description held bad, 462.
- (7.) Amendment of description.
description in writ may be amended, 458, 464.
not to affect statute of limitations, 464.
amendment embracing new and different piece of ground inadmissible, 464.

DESCRIPTION OF THE LANDS—continued.

- admissible to render description furnished more certain, 464.
- in Texas new land may be included by amendment, 464.
- amendment of description at the trial, 464.
- amendment after close of evidence, 464.

DESTRUCTION OF MONUMENTS, 863.

- parol evidence in case of, 863.

DETERMINATION OF CONFLICTING CLAIMS, possession to support, 723b.

- new trial in, 592.
- injunction in, 622.
- changed to ejectment, 181.

DEVISEES may maintain ejectment, 206.

- have seizin to support writ of entry, 206.
- actual entry unnecessary, 206.
- cannot join in ejectment with executor, 189.
- cannot bring suit to construe will, when, 163.

DIFFERENT PARCELS of land, jurisdiction, 908.DISABILITIES under statute of limitations, 725, 753a-753f.

- statutes vary as to, 725.
- no adverse possession against government, 753a.
- rule as to municipal corporations, 758a.
- infancy, 753b.
- co-existing disabilities, 753c.
- subsequent disabilities, 753d.
- of co-tenants, 276, 753f.
- suspension by agreement, 753e.

DISAFFIRMANCE of infant's deed, 198, 451.

- of lunatic's deed, 203, n.
- must be by notorious act or actual entry, 198.
- notice of election to repudiate must be given, 198.
- disaffirmance must be averred in complaint, 451.

DISCLAIMER, 91, 369, 387, 390.

- verbal, does not forfeit estate for years, 369.
- dispenses with service of notice to quit, 369, 387.
- by tenant of landlord's title, 360.
- will never be implied, 360.
- must be direct repudiation of landlord's title, 390.
- is question of fact for jury, 388.
- what amounts to, 388.
- effect of attornment, 388.
- disclaimer and denial inconsistent, 480.
- plea of non-tenure, 480a.

DISCLOSING CLAIM OF TITLE, 444, 444, n.DISCOVERY OF WILL, conveyance by heir before, 305.*DISSEIZIN. See OUSTER; TENANTS IN COMMON.

- distinction between, and trespass, 80, 93.

DISSEIZIN—continued.

- attended with amotion from possession, 80.
- ejectment the remedy for, 93.
- disseizin between tenants in common, 157, 238, 750. See OUSTER.
- examples, 284, 287, 289.
- declaration in writ of entry must show, 480.
- complaint must put defendant in the wrong, 482, 488.
- by mistake, 759.

DISSEIZOR is a trespasser, 176.

- cannot be treated as a tenant, 176.

DISTANCE, monuments control course and, 862, 864, n.DISTILLERY, condition against, in deed valid, 218.*DISTINCT PARCELS, or tracts of land, 128, 239, 240.

- several tracts recovered in one action, when claimant disseized by same defendant, 128.
- defendants claiming distinct parcels, 239.
- holding under distinct claims of title, 240.
- suit to abate nuisance, 187, n.
- joinder of defendants, 238, 240.

DISTINCTION between real writs and personal actions, 64a.

- between ejectment and forcible entry, 94, 94, n.
- between title and color of title, 762, n.
- between presumption and prescription, 788.

DISTURBANCE of adverse possessor, 740-744.DIVESTING government of title, 784.*DIVORCE, title of receiver in, to sequester rents, 327.

- when reply ordered, 493.
- second trial of title in action concerning, 597, n.

DOCTRINE OF RELATION, conflicting grants, 889.DOCUMENTS, production of, not enforced, 464a.*DOUBTFUL TITLE, ground for rejecting, 841.*DOUBTFUL WORDS, taken against grantor, 860, n.*DOWER, recoverable in ejectment, 129.

- not before admeasurement, 129.
- in partnership lands, 129, 221.
- widow's grantee cannot recover before admeasurement, 129.
- validity of widow's claim may be contested notwithstanding admeasurement, 129.
- lost by husband's breach of condition subsequent, 212.
- not subject to set-off, 489.
- receiver in action of, 614, n.
- lands assigned as, may be recovered by heirs after widow's death, 205.

DRAINAGE, easement of, no defense, 100, n.DROITURAL ACTIONS, 65.

- subdivisions of, 65.

DRUNKARD, not an insane man, 204.

proofs to avoid acts of, 204.

DWELLING, separate owners of stories in, 105, n.

EASEMENT, "lyeth in grant and not in livery," 146.

is not an estate in lands, 147.

distinguished from license, 98, n., 147, n.

ejectment will not lie for, 95, 97, 102, 146, 161.

nor will writ of entry, 146.

remedies for interruption of, 147.

effect of grant of, 102.

ownership of land and right to easement independent, 132, 147.

public and private, attempted distinction between, 140, 161.

public easement will support ejectment, 139, 161, 267-269, 271, 275.

municipal corporation vested with, may bring real action, 161, 267, 268, 275.

right not fully recognized, 272-274.

title to, by prescription, 724, 726.

right to, a mixed question of law and fact, 729, n.

public easement will not support ejectment in Kentucky, 273.

claim of easement not generally sufficient to uphold ejectment, 161.

land subject to easement recoverable in ejectment, 130, 132, 141, 158, 526, 571.

plea of, no defense, 492a.

subject to ferry right, 132.

eviction from, as defense, 485.

passage-way, 132.

homestead right, 141.

party wall, 158.

passes by tax title, 102, n.

judgment for land subject to, 526.

writ of possession for land subject to, 571.

implication that title is free from, 311, n.

EAVES, projecting over land, remedy for, 156.

encroachment will not sustain ejectment, 98, 156.

ECCLESIASTICAL OFFICE not recoverable in ejectment, 148.

EJECTIONE FIRMÆ, sketch of, 12, 19, 647. See EJECTMENT.

not of any great antiquity, 12.

originally a writ of trespass, 19.

its requisites, 20.

defined by Blackstone, 21.

when it issued, 22.

recovery in, 23.

term not recoverable in early practice, 24.

extension of recovery to the term, 25.

EJECTMENT. See COMPLAINT; PLAINTIFFS; DEFENDANTS; VENUE; DESCRIPTION; ANSWER; VERDICT; JUDGMENT; WRIT OF POSSESSION; FEDERAL COURTS.

history of, 1, 12, 19, 63, 510, 546.

origin and nature of, 1, 10, 12, 16, 20, 25.

character and scope of the action, 162.

right of possession involved in, 94.

two classes of, 349.

originally a simple action of trespass, 1, 510, 546.

damages the exclusive recovery, 1, 23, 96, 647.

advantages of personal actions, 7, 10.

objections to real writs, 2, 3, 5, 6, 75.

their abandonment, 8, 26, 78.

influences leading to the change, 7, 9-11.

effect of forcible entry statutes, 4.

influence of practice in trover and assumpsit, 11.

ejectment in New England, 73.

unpopularity of the remedy, 74.

- (1.) Ejectione firmæ, sketch of, 12, 19. See EJECTIONE FIRMÆ. ejectment derived from, 12.

its requisites, 20.

only damages at first recovered, 23, 24, 546, 647.

the relief inadequate, 23, 510.

extension of recovery to the term, 25, 546.

freehold estates in feudal times, 13.

imperfect remedies of tenants for years, 14.

- (2.) Early practice in ejectment, 27, 28.

a valid lease necessary, 28.

actual ouster not required, 29.

abuses in early practice, 30, 31.

notice to tenant in possession, 32.

tenant admitted to defend, 32.

inconvenience attending the formalities, 33.

what plaintiff was required to show, 34.

title, lease, entry and ouster, 34.

- (3.) Consent rule, introduced by Chief Justice Rolle, 85, 86.
when invented, 86.

condition of permitting tenant to defend, 86.

- (4.) Fictitious parties, introduction of, reprobated by Blackstone, 37.
basis of the objection, 37.

- (5.) The practice stated, 37.

form of declaration and notice, 37.

non-suit, 38.

judgment by default, 39.

who admitted to defend, 39.

writ habere facias possessionem, 40, 546.

See WRIT OF POSSESSION.

EJECTMENT—continued.

- (6.) Judgment, effect of, 41.
 - possession, but not seizin, recovered, 41.
 - claimant possessed "according to his right," 41, 510.
 - judgment not conclusive, 42-44, 511, 513, 524. See JUDGMENT.
 - policy in America, 43, 44, 524.
 - abolition of fictions renders judgment conclusive, 43, 515-517, 524.
 - injunctions against further ejectments, 46, 47, 840.
 - rule as to injunction stated, 840.
 - is an extraordinary remedy, 840.
- (7.) Method of regulating ejectment, 48-50.
 - confusion resulting from caprice of judges, 50.
 - theory of the decisions, 50.
 - introduction of equitable principles, 51.
 - influence of Lord Mansfield, 51.
 - Lord Kenyon's views, 52.
 - Coke's opposition to ejectments, 45, 67.
 - liberal views of fictions by the courts, 53, 424.
 - rules governing personal actions retained, 54.
 - legislative changes, 55.
 - who may maintain ejectment, 185, 230. See PLAINTIFFS.
- (8.) For what ejectment lies, 95, 145.
 - for corporeal hereditaments only, 95, 146, 148.
 - nature of the interest sought to be recovered, 97.
 - must be visible and tangible, 97.
 - capable of livery of seizin, 97.
 - something of which possession can be delivered by the sheriff, 97, 101.
 - true test as to when ejectment lies, 101.
 - rights and privileges appurtenant, 102.
 - test of annexation to the soil, 103.
 - fixtures, 104, 115.
 - ejectment for room, chamber, or portion of building, 105, 155.
 - theory of the decisions, 106.
 - vaults, 107.
 - salt boilery, 126.
 - inaccessible lands, 127.
 - dower, 129.
 - fishery, 142.
 - pasturage and herbage, 143.
 - church property, 144.
- (9.) Mining rights and interests, 108, 150.
 - coal mine, 109.
 - tin bound, 110.
 - quarry, 111.
 - oil wells, 112-114.
 - conflict of the cases, 112.

EJECTMENT—continued.

- right or privilege of boring for oil, 118.
- oil regarded as a mineral, 114.
- vein or lode, 115.
- possessory mining claims, 116.
- (10.) Land under water, 117.
 - made lands, 118.
 - land under water granted by land office, 119.
 - rivulet or pool, 120.
 - bed of the ocean, 121.
 - tide lands, 122.
 - land swallowed by the sea, 123.
 - new islands, 124.
 - accretions, 125.
- (11.) Land subject to easement, servitude or public use, 130, 132, 141, 526, 571.
 - See EASEMENT.*
 - land may be recovered subject to the servitude, 130.
 - subject to passage-way, 132.
 - to ferry right, 132.
 - homestead right, 141.
 - party wall, 158.
 - Cincinnati v. White* discussed, 181.
 - ownership of land and right to an easement independent, 132, 147.
 - rights of owner of the fee, 134.
 - lands applied to unauthorized use, 135.
 - distinction between public and private easements, 140, 161.
- (12.) Interests or wrongs for which ejectment will not lie, 146, 161.
 - not for a trespass, 93.
 - not for interference with property in possession, 93.
 - not for incorporeal hereditaments, 146.
 - the reason stated, 146.
 - easement not an estate in land, 147.
 - not maintainable for profit a prendre, 148.
 - nor for pannage, 148.
 - nor privilege for a landing place, 148.
 - right to an alley, a way, or a road, 148.
 - glebe, advowson, canonry, and right of common, 148.
 - free warren, 148.
 - rule as to water-courses and overflowed lands, 149.
 - mining privileges, 108, 113, 114, 150.
 - settle shore lines, 151.
 - ferry right or franchise, 152.
 - wharfage, 153.
 - remove cloud on title, 154.
 - for room or chamber, 105, 106, 155.
 - projecting eaves, 156.
 - projecting foundations, 157.

EJECTMENT—continued.

party walls, 158.

claim for improvements, 159.

rent reserved without right of re-entry, 160, 350.

claim of easement, 161.

(13.) Relief peculiar to ejectment not to be had in other actions, 162–184.

when action to construe will cannot be substituted for, 163.

summary proceedings, when not proper, 164.

when specific performance not maintainable, 165.

partition not a substitute for ejectment, 166, 167.

ejectment bills not maintainable, 168–171.

jurisdiction in equity when remedy at law is incomplete, 173.

injunction not granted where remedy by ejectment is adequate, 174.

when mandamus not allowed in aid of judgment in ejectment, 175.

title not tried in assumpsit, 176.

title in condemnation proceedings, 177.

reasons for mistakes in selecting remedies, 184.

changes in forms of action, 180–183.

distinction between ejectment and trespass, 80, 93, 641.

between ejectment and forcible entry, 94.

ejectment and covenant, or specific performance, 306.

(14.) Issues not determinable in ejectment, 184a.

right of corporation to hold land, 184a.

validity of a patent, 184a.

equitable title, 184a.

irregularity in foreclosure, 184a.

de jure officers of corporations, 184a.

tax title in New Jersey, 184a.

EJECTMENT BILLS defined, 169.

not maintainable, 169, 885, 886.

demurrer may be interposed to, 169.

EJECTOR, casual, 27, 30, 31, 37, 38, See CASUAL EJECTOR.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES by vendor, 307.

may rescind or sue for damages, 307.

EMPLOYEES AND SERVANTS, as defendants, 242, 243.

ENGLAND, real actions extinct in, 72.

feeling with reference to, 78.

aversion to ejectments, 78.

real property commissioners, report of, on ejectments, 78.

origin and growth of ejectment in, 1, 54.

change of venue in ejectment, 471.

adverse possession superseded, 725, n.

ENTIRETY, tenancy by, in New York, 295, n.

ENTRY, right of, essential to support ejectment, 99–101.

right of, must exist, whatever the character of the title, 100.

and ouster, requisites of, in adverse possession, 730.

must be notorious, open, and hostile, 730.

ENTRY, WRITS OF. See WRITS OF ENTRY.

EQUITABLE title will not support ejectment bill, 171.

writ of entry, 70.

relief not usually awarded in ejectment, 154, 162.

interference, when justified, 622, n.

relief not granted when relief at law is adequate, 885.

estoppel, 843, 884.

estoppel, defense in Federal courts, 884.

relief, when awarded, 169, 173.

action cannot be changed to ejectment, 179.

defenses must be pleaded, 483, 485, 486.

defenses, elements of, 487.

title, no defense in Federal courts, 878.

See ANSWER.

principles, introduction of, by Lord Mansfield, 51.

principles govern in cases of mortgages, 329.

rights, vendee may assert, 322.

title must be pleaded, 437.

jurisdiction as to boundaries, 865.

EQUITABLE DEFENSES in ejectment, 485, 889.

EQUITABLE TITLE will not support writ of entry, 70, 169.

nor ejectment, 169, 184a, 790.

in Federal courts, 876.

supports trespass to try title, 91.

party claiming may defend, 259.

nature of, to be a defense, 485.

and legal title, 790.

State statutes recognizing, 879.

EQUITIES equal, possession prevails, 717.

EQUITY, mesne profits in, 687.

improvements allowed in, 693.

receiver in, 615.

shore line divisions must be determined in, 151.

legal estate cannot be asserted in, 172.

jurisdiction of, when remedy at law is incomplete, 173.

relief in, and at law in same action, 169, 639.

of redemption, mortgagee may purchase, 343, 344.

court of, may compel conveyance of land in foreign state, 542.

rights of widow in, 169.

jurisdiction to restrain trespass, 174, n.

will not set aside probate of will, 205, n.

nor review errors at law, 507, n.

when judgment set aside for fraud, 507, n.

jurisdiction as to boundaries, 865.

practice in Federal courts, 875.

statute of limitations in, 917.

- ERROR, WRIT OF, effect of pendency of, on statutory new trial, 605.
to United States Supreme Court, 175.
defendants may unite in, 175.
may separately apply for stay, 175.
furnish separate bonds, 175.
- ESCHEAT, title by, State may recover upon, 192.
conveyance before entry, 192, n.
- ESTATE FOR YEARS, will support ejectment, 216.
verbal disclaimer does not forfeit, 369.
nature of estate must be specified in pleading, 56, 480.
how pleaded, 489.
character of, to support ejectment, 185.
regulated by statute, 185.
- ESTOPPEL, between vendor and vendee, 318. See JUDGMENT.
vendee in default cannot impeach vendor's title, 317.
avoidance of, 539.
between landlord and tenant, 351. See LANDLORD AND TENANT. must be mutual, 351.
when landlord is estopped, 351.
tenant cannot dispute landlord's title, 351, 751.
reason of the rule, 352.
ejectment on, 798a.
when estoppel ceases, 353.
what titles applicable to, 353.
between co-tenants, 291, 361.
purchase of outstanding title, 291.
no estoppel against infant, 198.
as a defense, 842, 884.
equitable or by conduct, 843.
different classes of cases, 844.
promise or assurance, basis of, 844.
fraud in connection with, 845.
statute of frauds, 846.
distinction between right and remedy in equity, 848.
equitable estoppel available at law, 849.
by deed, warranty, 850.
after-acquired title, 850. illegal contract, 351, 358.
must be direct, 352.
not against grantee, 353.
against the State, 854.
in Federal courts, 884.
pleading, 855.
as to boundaries, 760, 868.
- EUROPEAN POWERS, claim of title by, 783.
- EVENT, when it determines tenancy without notice, 381.

EVIDENCE of title not to be pleaded, 445, 492*b*. See PLAINTIFF'S TITLE AND EVIDENCE, 782-828.

may be stricken out, 492*b*.

rules of, similar in the various actions, 92, 782.

parol, admissible to show deed a mortgage, 337.

admissible under general issue, 477.

and title of plaintiff, 782-828.

patents, 785.

presumption of grant, 786.

missing links, 789.

title by execution, 798.

judicial record, 794.

relation, 795, 889.

parol gifts, 798.

estoppel, 798*a*, 842.

reputation, 804, 805.

declarations, 808-810.

pedigree, 812-815.

as to meane profita, 674.

of service of notice to quit, 414.

of defendant's possession, 236.

of ouster between co-tenants, 277, 295, 308.

when proof of, unnecessary, 290.

of possession, 717, 719.

as to improvements, 698, 714.

in Federal courts, 872.

EXCEPTIONS to statutes of limitation, 753*a*-753*f*.

no adverse possession against State, 753*a*.

no statute against the government, 753*a*, 784.

as to infants, 755*b*.

co-existing disabilities, 753*c*, 753*d*.

disabilities of co-tenants, 753*f*.

suspension by agreement, 753*a*.

EXCLUSIVE, adverse possession must be, 781, 752. .

EXECUTION against the person, 680. See PROVISIONAL REMEDIES.

not generally given, 680.

rule in New York, 680.

in Wisconsin allowed, 680.

title by, 798.

the classes of cases, 798.

what evidence required, 798.

EXECUTION PURCHASER, ejectment by, 385, 798.

of equity of redemption, 348.

EXECUTOR. See ADMINISTRATOR; PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

right of, to maintain ejectment, 207-210.

usually vested with no power over realty, 208.

EXECUTOR—continued.

authorized by will to enter on land, may support ejectment, 210.
may recover term for years, 208.
not freehold terms or leases, 209.
cannot join with devisees, 189.
right of, to obtain construction of will, 163.
title of, to mesne profits, 661.
devise to, for aliens, valid, 206, n.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES, 668*a*.

Mr. Sedgwick's rule, 668*a*.
the cases considered, 668*a*. allowed for willful trespass, 668*a*. argument for, 668*a*. scarcity of cases, 668*a*. difficulties of securing, 668*a*.

EXHIBITS properly constitute no part of pleading, 444.

rule as to pleading, 444.

FACTS, to be pleaded, 425, 425, n.

entitling plaintiff to recover, 792. particular, evidence of, 807, 812.

FAMILY FACTS, questions of pedigree, 812.

analogy to particular facts, 812.
declarant's relationship, how proved, 814.

FEDERAL COURTS, statutes granting new trials controlling in, 607, 870.

local laws constituting rules of property binding in, 607.
State judgment a bar, 79, 638.
former action pending, 633. .
State law binding in, 870.
exceptions to the rule, 871.
State rules of evidence in, 872. rules of pleading and practice, 873.
amendments, 874.
jurisdiction in equity, 875.
ejectment not maintainable on equitable title, 876.
examples from the cases, 877.
equitable title no defense, 878.
State statutes recognizing equitable title, 879.
rule not affected by the practice act, 881.
rule different in Pennsylvania, 882.
cases in conflict with the rule, 883.
exceptional cases, equitable estoppel, 884.
equitable relief not granted where relief at law is adequate, 885.
ejectment bill not allowed in, 886.
conclusiveness of a patent, 887.
doctrine of relation, conflicting patents, 889.
title under United States not determined by State laws, 890.

FEDERAL COURTS—continued.

possessory title of no avail against patent title, 891.
practice where equitable relief is necessary, 892.
jurisdiction of, 893.
original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, 894.
inter-state boundaries, 895.
question of State title to lands, 896. intervention by United States, 897.
practice in, 898.
controversies between citizens of same State, original act and changes, 899.
new theory of the jurisdiction, 900.
pecuniary limit, 901.
appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.—Federal question, 902.
title under treaty, 903.
appeals from circuit courts, 904.
territorial mining claim, 905.
original jurisdiction of the circuit courts, 906.
jurisdictional amount, 907.
different parcels, 908.
recovery of less than claim, 909. change of residence, 910.
collusive transfers, 911.
the removal statutes, 912.
ejectment for land confiscated during Rebellion, 913.
title by act of Congress, 785, 914.
ejectment on Indian title, 783, 915.
venue, 475, 916.
statute of limitations in equity, 917.
pleading citizenship of parties, 918.
mandamus to compel issue of patent, 919.

FEDERAL OFFICERS, ejectment against, 244, 249.

See UNITED STATES.

FEDERAL QUESTIONS involved in ejectment, 903.FEE SIMPLE, how pleaded, 440.

may be pleaded in general terms, 440.
right of owner of, where land is subject to public use, 184.
rule as to ejectment by abutter where fee is granted for public use, 138.
abutter cannot maintain ejectment in such case, 138.
must wait until title reverts, 138.
under claim of fee simple life estate not recoverable, 436.
nor estate in fee tail, 436. amendment to life estate, 436, 454b.
claim of, as the basis of adverse possession, 697, 756.

FEE TAIL, recovery of, not allowed under claim of fee simple, 436.FELON, right of, to bring ejectment before office found, 329.

- FENCE, not necessary to establish adverse possession, 782.
when not an improvement, 699.
- FERRY RIGHT, nature of, 152. is a continuation of a road, 152.
is not tangible property, 152.
not the subject of ejectment, 152.
nor of a forcible entry proceeding, 152.
land subject to, recoverable in ejectment, 182.
rule as to meane profits of, 676.
- FICTIONS, the fictitious lease, 35-37, 39, 422-424.
practice invented by Rolle, 36, 37.
consent rule, 36.
introduction of imaginary parties, 37.
method of procedure, 37-39.
judgment inconclusive by reason of the fictions, 42, 43, 513.
liberal view of, by the courts, 53, 424.
fictions now abolished, 43, 55, 425.
abolition of, renders judgment conclusive, 43, 515-517, 524.
utility of fictions, 63a.
benefits conferred on ejectment by, 63a.
retained in Delaware and Alabama, 90.
rule as to, in Federal courts, 873.
- FIELD, J., views of as to estoppel, 847.
- FIRE, destruction of building by, terminates tenant's interest, 155. effect of, generally, 155.
- FISHERY, ejectment for, 142.
confusion in the cases, 142.
right of, gives no right to adjoining lands, 142, n.
in America, ejectment cannot be maintained for, 142.
trespass for injury to, 142.
independent of the soil, 142, n.
State may regulate, 142, n.
- FIXTURES, ejectment for, 103, 104.
and improvements, pass to plaintiff by recovery in ejectment, 563, 684, 690.
recovery of vein or lode, surface fixtures do not pass, 115.
as between hostile claimants, 684.
- "FLAG FLYING," adverse possessor must keep, 733, 735, n.
- FLORIDA, rights of mortgagee in, 832.
pleading statute of limitations, 482.
example of plea held insufficient, 482.
receiver in ejectment after judgment, 619.
- FLOWING LAND, adverse possession by, 734, n.
not usually considered an ouster, 149.
- FORCE, owner entering by, cannot be evicted by ejectment, 94, 94a.

- FORCIBLE ENTRY statutes, influence of, upon ejectment, 4. statutes, new trial in actions under, 594.
idea of giving ejectment effect of real action, derived from, 4.
- FORCIBLE ENTRY PROCEEDING, distinguished from ejectment, 94.
title cannot be tried in, 94, 94, n, 164, 471.
designed to protect actual possession, whether rightful or wrongful, 94, 94, n.
recovery opposed to legal possession, 94, 94, n. incorporeal hereditaments not recoverable under, 152.
proceeding for ferry right, 152.
proceeding changed to ejectment, 188.
not maintained by intruder, 94.
general purposes of, 94, n. against whom it lies, 94, 94, n.
when an exclusive remedy, 164.
does not suspend statute of limitations, 743, n.
- FORECLOSURE, common remedy of mortgagee, 329.
more effectual than ejectment, 329.
no trial of title in, 179a.
second mortgagee may intervene, 179a. judgment creditors may attack mortgage, 179a.
ejectment converted into, 190.
impeachment of, title in, 184a.
- FOREIGN JUDGMENT cannot affect or pass title to land, 465, 467, 542.
court of equity may compel conveyance of land in foreign State, 542.
- FOREIGN LANDS, judgments do not affect, 467a, 542.
ejectment local action, 465, 542.
lex loci rei sita, 467a, 542.
- FOREIGN STATES, corporation and aliens by comity may bring ejectment in, 195. judgment in, does not affect realty, 465, 467, 542.
- FORFEITURE, ejectment for breach of covenant against waste, 862.
ejectment founded on, 796.
test of waste, 863.
waste by tenant at will, 863.
construction of covenants, 865.
covenant against trade of a butcher, 865. to repair, 865.
against trade or business, 865.
no severance of conditions in case of forfeiture, 866.
construction of conditions, 867, 796.
covenants or conditions, matters strictissimi juris, 867.
forfeiture never favored or implied, 867.
liberal construction by Lord Tenterden, 868.
verbal disclaimer is not, 869.
waiver of right to enforce forfeiture, 866, 871.
effect of acceptance of rent, 871.

FORFEITURE—continued.

- or of annuity, 371.
- acknowledgment of subsisting tenancy, 371.
- of life estate, 214.
- waste by life tenant, not ground of, 214.
- nor claim of the fee, 214.
- nor conveyance of entire estate, 214.
- the English doctrine, 214.
- pleading a forfeiture, 447.
- setting up in answer, 486.
- not established in collateral proceeding, 184*a*, 797
- of corporation, 184*a*, 797.

FORGED, deed canceled as a cloud, 154, n., 171, n. appearance by attorney, 415.

FORM of notice to quit, 401. See NOTICE TO QUIT.
must be free from ambiguity, 401.
notices held good, 403.
mistakes in notices, 403.
effect of misdescription, 401.
of writ of possession, 550.
of provisional relief, 612.
of ancient real writs not regarded, 75.

FORMEDON, abuses in writs of, 45.
nature of, 71.

FORMER ACTION PENDING, 633–637.
rule in Federal courts, 633.

FOUNDATION, projecting, remedy for, 157.
of real action, 64.

FRANCHISE of ferry, not subject to ejectment, 152.

FRAUD, of landlord, to be availed of by tenant, must be pleaded, 355.
on vendee, election of remedies, 307. to set aside judgment, 507, n. possession acquired by, 532.
in estoppel, 845, 846.
possession acquired by, as a defense, 832.

FRAUDS, STATUTES OF, lease void as to, 379. conveyance void as to, 844.
statute of, part performance, 331*a*, 797.
as affecting estoppel, 845.

contract void as to, will not sustain claim for improvements, 708.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE, what recovered in suit to cancel, 181.
when adverse possession does not run, 751, n.

FREEHOLD ESTATES, in early times the only acknowledged title, 13.
estates for years unknown, 13.
writs to determine rights of property in, 2.
personal representatives cannot recover, 209.

GARNISHMENT, process of, upheld on count for mesne profits, 617.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION, controlled by particular, 458, 864, n.

GENERAL ISSUE in ejectment, 476. See ANSWER.

“not guilty,” 476.

the plea favored, 476.

defenses admissible under, 477, 483.

advantage of the plea to the defendant, 476.

effect of, on question of possession, 479, 480.

in trespass to realty, 484.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES governing ejectment, 57.

same in the various actions, 92.

GENERAL REPUTATION, as to birth of issue, 815.

as to boundaries, 804-806.

as to particular facts, 807.

as to pedigree, 812, 815.

GEORGIA, mortgagee cannot bring ejectment, 332, 338.

ejectment on deed intended as a mortgage, 338.

when receiver will not be appointed in ejectment, 617, 619.

process of garnishment allowed in claim for mesne profits, 617.

when trustee may bring ejectment, 222.

joinder of defendants, 240.

right to bring ejectment remains in vendor, 308.

GERMANS, land holding among, 724, n.

GIFT, title by parol, 321a, 798.

plea of, must allege improvements, 486.

evidence must be clear, 798.

consideration, 798.

GILBERT, views of, as to ejectment, 12, n., 14, n., 25, n., 28, n.

GLEBE, after sequestration, not recoverable in ejectment, 148.

GOLD MINE, is real estate, 108, n.

GOOD FAITH, occupant in, allowed for improvements, 63, 690, 694.

See IMPROVEMENTS.

rule of the civil law, 691.

question of good faith for jury, 694.

who is bona fide occupant, 694-696.

“notice” and “good faith,” how interpreted, 696.

in assertion of adverse possession, 759.

only important in connection with color of title, 757, 775, 778a.

GOVERNMENT, divesting title from, 784.

possession of lands of, 717, n.

statutes run against, when, 717, n., 753a.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS, judgment against, 245, 540.

not conclusive on government, 245.

judgment negatives presumption of privity of contract, 540.

ejectment against, 244, 249.

See UNITED STATES.

GRADES of real actions, 66.

GRANT, presumption of, as applied to incorporeal hereditaments, 724, 726.
 presumption of, against the government, 717, 784.
 ejectment not maintainable for interests which lie in, 146.
 theory of presumption, 786, 787.
 presumption of, when not necessary, 784. construction of, intention governs, 856, 858, 860, 860, n. on the sea shore, 860.

GRANTEE, suing in grantor's name, 190, 420.
 may use grantor's name against his will, 190, 420, 421.
 liability of grantor for costs, 421.
 of deed with warranty may recover against grantor, 230.
 of quitclaim deed may bring ejectment, 230.
 may recover for improvements made by grantor or warrantor, 706.
 no estoppel against, 858.

GRANTOR, right of grantee to use name of, 190, 420. liability for costs, 421.
 or warrantor, improvements made by, 706.
 may bring ejectment after breach of condition subsequent, 212.
 deceased, statements of, 809.

GRASS, 143. See PASTURAGE AND HERBAGE.

GRAY, J., rule stated by, as to conveyance to center, 857.

GROUND RENT, in mitigation, 682.

GROWING CROPS. See CROPS.

pass to disseizee, 563, 688.
 commencement of ejectment equivalent to re-entry, 683.

GUARDIAN, general, powers and duties of, 202. tendency of modern legislation, 202.
 guardian in socage may bring ejectment, 199. has an interest in the estate, 199. who may be guardian in socage, 199.
 may bring trespass, 199.
 right of, to lease ward's estate, 200.
 when not allowed for improvements, 694.
 guardian for nurture or by nature, 200. cannot support ejectment, 200.
 ejectment by both infant and guardian, 196, 201.
 conflict of the cases, 196, 201.
 general guardian, ejectment by, 196, 199.
 usually has no power to convey realty, 114, 202. chancery guardian, rights of, 199.
 guardian ad litem for infant parties, 196, 254.
 cannot grant incorporeal hereditament, 202.
ad litem, appointment not effectual until jurisdiction is acquired, 254, n.
 guardian cannot buy up adverse title, 292, n.

GUTTER, overhanging, not ground of ejectment, 93, 156.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM, 23, 40, 82, 510, 546.

See WRIT OF POSSESSION.

origin of the writ, 23, 546.

granted by analogy with equity procedure, 546.

effect of the execution of the writ, 41, 510, 748.

form and contents, 550, 551.

alias writs, 552.

allowed in trespass to try title, 82.

plaintiff may take possession at his peril, 455, 554, 564.

peaceable possession without a writ, 549.

HABERE FACIAS SEISINAM. See WRIT OF POSSESSION.

final writ in system of real actions, 548.

awarded seizin of land recovered, 548.

effect of execution of, 548.

distinction between, and habere facias possessionem, 42, 510, 548.

HEARSAY EVIDENCE excluded, 805.HEIRS AT LAW, may bring ejectment, 205.

may recover lands belonging to ancestor, 205.

may convey without awaiting discovery of will, 205.

may support an action, though the ancestor died out of possession, 205.

or was holding by adverse possession, 205.

of trustee, rights of, 205.

after death of widow heirs may recover lands assigned as dower, 205.

of rent charge with condition of re-entry, 205.

hold as tenants in common, 205.

possession of, is under color of title, 762.

one of several may recover in ejectment, 205.

cannot maintain action to construe will, 163.

ejectment by, against widow, 256.

may be let in to defend with widow, 256.

cannot join with her, 189.

writ of possession on behalf of, 578.

pleading by, 442.

as parties in action of dower, 129, n.

HERBAGE AND PASTURAGE, ejectment for, 143.

the English cases, 143.

rule in America, 143.

HEREDITAMENTS corporeal, ejectment will lie for, 95, 97, 98, 101, 127, 146, 185.

consist of permanent and substantial objects, 95.

See EJECTMENT.

HIGHEST EVIDENCE of title, patent is, 785.

meaning of, 785.

HIGHWAY, land subject to right of, recoverable in ejectment, 130, 132, 145, 526, 571.

HIGHWAY—continued.

- rights of the owner of the fee in, 184.
- may use and enjoy the same without interfering with public right, 184.
- entitled to mines and profits, 184, 140.
- adverse possession against fee of, 758*a*.
- when conveyed by deed, 857, 858.

HISTORY of ejectment, 1, 63, 510, 546, 647. See EJECTMENT. of real actions, 1-3, 5, 6, 8, 64, 80. See REAL ACTIONS.
of limitations and prescription, 724.

HOMESTEAD RIGHT, land subject to, recoverable in ejectment, 141. qualified judgment for land subject to, 141.
decisions not uniform, 141.
rule in Illinois, 141.
evidence of, admissible under general issue, 477.
married woman may sue for, 320.
ejectment by insolvent for, 224.
judgment for land subject to, 526.
person asserting, not entitled to notice to quit, 386.

HORIZONTAL DIVISIONS of land, 105, n., 106*a*.

HOSPITAL, condition against, valid, 213.

HOSTILE CLAIMANTS cannot join in ejectment, 188, 450.

See COMPLAINT.

- joint complaint by, 450.
- fixtures between, 684.
- entry necessary to acquire title under statute of limitations, 730, 749.
- possession necessary to constitute adverse possession, 749.

HOUSE, ejectment lies for part of, 105, 106, 155.
portion of, may be delivered in execution, 105.

HUNTER, has no possession, 719, 722, n.

HUSBAND AND WIFE, joinder of, as defendants, 255.

- rule at common law, 255.
- husband cannot hold adversely to wife, 752, n.
- overt act of wife must be shown, 255.
- joinder of, as plaintiffs, 219, 220.
- joint demise not sustained on proof of title in husband, 449.
- husband not entitled to notice to quit from wife, 876.
- improvement by husband on wife's lands, 709.
- ejectment by husband, 219.
- ejectment by wife, 220.

ILLEGAL CONTRACT, no estoppel, 858, 851.

ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN, cannot inherit, 205, n.

ILLINOIS, owner of equity of redemption cannot bring ejectment, 230.

- mortgagee owns the fee, 833.
- may bring ejectment, 833.
- married woman may recover homestead, 220.

ILLINOIS—continued.

judgment in ejectment must specify particular estate, 535.
same rule as to verdict, 500.
judgment against vendee not binding on vendor, 586.
land subject to homestead right not recoverable, 141.
rule as to appointment of receiver in ejectment, 618, 632.
public authorities may authorize railway in a street, 137.
disclaimer by tenant dispenses with notice to quit, 899.
rule as to change of venue, 471.
when change of venue is a matter of right, 471.
imposing terms, 471.
homestead may be shown under general issue, 477.
statute of limitations need not be pleaded, 482.
liberal interpretation of statutes granting new trial, 584.
abstracts as evidence, 837.

IMPLIED license of vendee to enter, 804.

IMPLICATION of no incumbrances, 811, n.

IMPROVEMENTS, 68, 690, 716.

- (1.) Claim for improvements, what embraced in, 600.
 - policy of the common law, 690.
 - in ejectment, 68, 690.
 - in trespass to try title, 91.
 - aversion to granting allowance for improvements, 690.
 - rule of the civil law, 691.
 - distinction between bona fidei and mala fidei, 691.
 - bona fide* occupant allowed for improvements, 691, 694.
 - improvements allowed in equity, 693.
 - effect of, upon actions at law, 693.
 - improvements in excess of mesne profits, 698.
 - set-off, when not allowed, 699.
 - constitutionality of improvements acts, 692, 698, 712.
 - views of Cooley, J., 712, n.
 - improvements made by grantor or warrantor, 706.
 - basis of the valuation, 707.
 - not allowed against lunatic, 699.
 - as affected by public improvements, 705.
 - apportionment of improvements, 707.
 - betterments pass by recovery in ejectment, 563, 690.
 - on a railroad, 690, n.
 - on surface, do not pass by recovery of lode or vein, 115.
- (2.) Bona fide occupant under claim of title, 68, 694.
 - question of good faith for the jury, 694.
 - who is a bona fide possessor, 694, 695.
 - occupant under color of title, 694.
 - claimed by creditor, 709, n.
 - no presumption that possessor is a wrong-doer, 372, 694.
 - trustee and guardian, when not allowed for improvements, 694.

IMPROVEMENTS—continued.

- exceptions to the general rule, 695.
- rule in Texas considered, 695.
- heir as claimant, 706.
- (3.) Constructive notice of adverse title insufficient, 696, 705.
 - defect apparent of record, will not defeat claim for improvements, 696.
 - the true rule stated, 696.
 - "notice" and "good faith," how interpreted, 696.
- (4.) Claim and color of title, 697.
 - color of title usually required, 697.
 - occupant need not claim the fee, 697.
 - requisites of color of title, 697, 761, 781.
- (5.) What constitutes an improvement, 699-702.
 - must be annexed to the soil, 699.
 - must render the land more valuable, 699.
 - expenditures of no benefit to the owner disallowed, 699.
 - must be made upon the land, 700.
 - ornamental improvements not allowed, 701.
 - matters of taste, 701.
 - adaptability of the improvements the test, 701.
 - perishable improvements not regarded, 702.
 - expenditures in experimenting for profits disallowed, 703.
 - repairs not allowed, 699, 711.
 - expenditures by life tenant, 699.
 - ring-barking, 699.
 - addition to house, 699.
 - obstruction is not, 699.
 - payment of taxes and incumbrances, 688, 704.
 - incumbrances allowed in equity, 704.
- (6.) Improvements after suit brought, 705.
 - notice of title by bringing suit, fatal to the claim, 705.
 - the principle illustrated, 705.
- (7.) Titles which will support claim for improvements, 694, 708, 709, n.
 - improvements by life tenant not chargeable against remainderman, 708.
 - vendee in default cannot claim, 708.
 - vendee not in default, rule as to, 323.
 - tax title insufficient in Texas, 708.
 - quitclaim deed, 697.
 - improvements under contract void by statute of frauds disallowed, 708.
 - apparent chain of title from the government required in Texas, 708.
 - improvements by husband on wife's lands, 709.
 - by mortgagee in possession, 710.
 - by co-tenants, 711.
 - life tenant, 699.

IMPROVEMENTS—continued.

- (8.) Practice as to recovery of improvements, 713–716.
 - in what tribunals recoverable, 713.
 - practice in Virginia, 713.
 - claim cannot be made the subject of an independent suit, 159, 713.
- (9.) Pleading improvements, 714.
 - must usually be pleaded by way of set-off, 714.
 - possessor must state that he entered under claim of title, 714.
 - sufficiency of the plea, 714.
 - verdict for improvements, 715.
- (10.) Judgment for improvements, 716.
 - practice as to form of, 716.

INACCESSIBLE LANDS, recoverable in ejectment, 127.

- writ of possession for, 572.
- writ issued for lands covered with water, 572.

INCOME FROM IMPROVEMENTS, 678. See IMPROVEMENTS.

- not usually allowed as mesne profits, 678.

INCONSISTENT DEFENSES in ejectment, 830.INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS. See EJECTMENT.

- cannot be recovered in ejectment, 95, 101, 110, 146, 148, 152.
- defined, 146.
- effect of recital of, in judgment, 527.
- appurtenant to land may be recovered with it, 102, 102, n.
- income of, as mesne profits, 676.

INCUMBRANCES AND TAXES, payment of, by disseizor, 688, 704.

- rule as to allowance for, 688, 704.
- paid by one co-tenant, lien for, 291.
- implication that title is free of, 311, n.

INDEMNITY, officer executing writ of possession may require, 565, 566.INDIAN, right of, to bring ejectment, 328.INDIAN TITLE, outstanding, effect of, 194.

- nature of, 194.
- is an easement, 194.
- ejectment founded upon, 915.

INDIANA, all defenses admissible without special plea, 477.

- statutory new trials in actions to quiet titles, 586.
- damages for waste, not allowed as mesne profits, 668.
- owner of fee in street may eject wrongdoer, 269.

INFANT, may bring ejectment, 196. See GUARDIAN.

- security for costs by, 197.
- disaffirmance of deed, 198, 451.
- how pleaded, 451.
- tendering back consideration, 198.
- as plaintiff, notice to quit by, 398.
- realty of, guardian cannot convey, 114, 202.
- may recover mesne profits, 656.
- disability, 758b.

INFANT—continued.

- as defendant, 254.
- must appear by guardian, 196, 254.
- cannot be estopped, 198.

INFERENCE against the government, from possession, 717, n.

INHERIT, illegitimate children cannot, 205, n.

INJUNCTION, 622, 632. See PROVISIONAL REMEDIES.

- against ejectments, 46, 47, 580, 608, 608, n., 840.
- rules as to granting, 840.
- changes as to, 840.
- not proper in order for restitution, 568, 575.
- against trespass or waste pending ejectment, 622, 624.
- failure to prosecute ejectment forfeits right to, 625.
- in suit to determine conflicting claims, 622.
- by mortgagee against mortgagor, 629.
- to prevent interference with easement, 147.
- to prevent disturbance of possession, 178.
- not granted when remedy by ejectment is adequate, 174.
- concerning working of mines, 626.
- avored as a form of provisional relief, 622.
- ordinary uses of land not restrained by, 625.
- mandatory to restore running water, 149.
- against cutting timber, 622, 628.
- malicious and destructive waste, 626.
- by abutter to restrain use of street, 269.
- when allowed in addition to usual relief in ejectment, 178, 639.
- vacated on sworn answer denying merits, 626.

IN PAIS, estoppel by matter, will not support ejectment, 798a.

- estoppel against the State, 854.
- estoppel by matter, not equivalent of equitable estoppel, 843.

INSOLVENT, right of, to bring ejectment, 224.

- to sue for homestead, 224.
- ejectment against, 253.
- when not let in to defend, 253.
- ejectment against wife of, 253.
- assignee of, may bring ejectment, 225.

INSPECTION of lease ordered, 464b.

INSTRUCTIONS of court may control jury, 496, n.

INTENTION, claim of right, 754-760.

- possession must be accompanied by adverse intent, 754.
- no adverse possession without intention, 754.
- intent the essence of adverse possession, 755.
- fixes the character of the original entry, 755.
- claim of ownership necessary, 756.
- the rule stated, 756.
- good faith in assertion of adverse claim, 757.
- acts and declarations of the occupant indicating intent, 758.

INTENTION—continued.

- possession under mistake, 759.
- disputed boundary lines erroneously located, 760, 867-869.
- governs, in construction of grants, 856, 858.

INTEREST on mesne profits, rule as to, 664, 670.

- generally allowed, 670.
- distinction between liquidated and unliquidated demands, 670, 670, n.

INTERESTS for which ejectment lies, 98-145. See EJECTMENT.

- for corporeal hereditaments only, 95, 146, 148.
- nature of the interest sought to be recovered, 97, 127.
- must be visible and tangible, 97.
- capable of livery of seizin, 97.
- something of which possession can be delivered by the sheriff, 97, 101.
- true test as to when ejectment lies, 101.
- rights and privileges appurtenant, 102.
- test of annexation to the soil, 103.
- rule as to fixtures, 104, 115.
- ejectment for room, chamber, or portion of a building, 105, 106, 155.
- theory of the decisions, 106.
- vaults, 107.
- inaccessible lands, 127, 572.
- mining rights, 108-111, 150.
- land under water, 117, 119, 122.
- land subject to easement, 180, 182, 141, 158, 526, 571.

INTERESTS OR WRONGS for which ejectment will not lie, 146-161.See EJECTMENT.

- not maintainable for a trespass, 98.
- nor for interference with property in possession, 98.
- nor for incorporeal hereditaments, 146.
- not maintainable for profit à prendre, 148.
- nor for right of way, 148.
- ferry right, 152.
- wharfage, 158.
- remove cloud on title, 154.
- room or chamber, 155.
- projecting eaves, 156.
- projecting foundations, 157.
- party walls, 158.
- claim for improvements, 159, 713.

INTERFERENCE with possession, no ground of ejectment, 98.INTERLOCUTORY ORDER, not conclusive as an adjudication, 508.INTERMEDDLING with property in litigation, 645, 645, n.INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES, rule as to, 198.See CONSTRUCTION.

- circumstances prompting enactment of, considered, 198.

INTERRUPTION OF ADVERSE POSSESSION, 740-744.

- by re-entry of the owner, 741.
- not by survey, 745, n.
- nor by unsuccessful ejectment, 748, n.
- by other adverse claimants, 745.
- effect of bringing ejectment, 748.
- by abandonment, 744.

INTER-STATE BOUNDARIES, rule as to, 895.

INTERVENTION by United States, 897.

INTOXICATION, effect of proof of, 204.

INTRUDERS, not entitled to notice to quit, 876, 877.

IOWA, pleadings liberally construed, 428.

doctrine of lis pendens, 645.

rule as to boundaries, 760.

ISLANDS, newly formed, title to, 124.

adverse possession of, 124.

ISSUE, substance of, must be found by verdict, 497.

of fact must be tried by jury, 170, 496. See JURY.

ISSUES not determinable in ejectment, 184a.

for the jury, 495.

as to adverse possession, 729n.

JEOPAILS, statute of, extended to writs of right, 498.

JOHNSON v. FULLERTON, criticised, 560.

JOINDER OF ACTIONS, 633-637, 650, n.

two actions for same cause not allowed, 633.

early practice in ejectment, 634.

how the objection is raised, 636.

same title involved in both actions, 638.

two actions on different titles for same land allowed, 635.

actions at law and suits in equity, 636, 637, 639.

misjoinder of actions, 640.

of ejectment and trespass quare clausum fregit, 641.

ejectment and claim for purchase-money, 642.

ejectment and claim for meane profits, 643, 650, 651.

objections to the practice considered, 651.

ejectment and bill to foreclose, 330.

practice as to joinder in North Carolina, 644.

JOINDER OF PARTIES. See PLAINTIFFS; DEFENDANTS; PARTIES.

of joint tenants, 302.

of coparceners, 303.

of tenants in common, 297-299.

of plaintiffs, 187-189.

of hostile claimants, 188, 450.

cases of misjoinder, 189.

executor cannot join with devisee, 189.

JOINDER OF PARTIES—continued.

widow cannot join with heirs, 189.
reversioners must all join, 189.
of defendants, 238-241.
of landlord with tenant, 238.
of husband with wife, 238, 255.
mortgagee with party in possession, 238.
joint occupants, 238.
squatters, 241.

JOINT DEMISE, title proved under, must be joint, otherwise action fails, 187.

by tenants in common, 297-299.

JOINT OWNERS may come in and defend, 259.JOINT TENANTS, joinder of, 302.

effect of severance, 302.
ejectment between, 295.
proof of ouster required, 295.
rule as to notice to quit by, 408.

JOINT TITLE, rule as to pleading, 449.

must be truly stated, 449.

failure of title in one plaintiff defeats the action, 187, 449.

JUDGMENT, 39, 41-44, 47, 67, 68, 506, 545, 574, 716.

judgment in personal actions conclusive, 68, 506, 517.
test of conclusiveness of a judgment, 507.
evidence which will sustain the two actions must be the same, 507, 508.
causes of actions must be identical, 507.
frauds sufficient to avoid, 507, n. conclusiveness of a judgment not affected by the form of the action, 507.
nor by fact that judgment was rendered upon erroneous grounds, 507.
what included within the estoppel, 508.
all matters which might have been adjudicated, 508.
interlocutory order or judgment not conclusive, 508.
effect of judgment on adverse possession, 743.

(1.) Judgment in real actions, 67, 69, 509, 522.

writs of different degree employed, 509.
judgments upon inferior writs not an estoppel as to superior writs, 509.
demandant proceeding by inferior writ could secure more than one trial, 509.

each writ conclusive for its own purpose, 67, 509.

judgment on writ of right conclusive, 69, 507.

trespass to try title, 82, 92.

(2.) Judgment in ejectment, 42-45, 506, 545.

review of the origin of ejectment, 1, 23-25, 27, 36, 37, 510-512, 576.
originally an action of trespass, 1, 510.

JUDGMENT—continued.

- damages formerly the only recovery, 1, 28, 510, 546.
- seizin not awarded by the judgment, 41, 510.
- plaintiff became possessed according to his right, 41, 510, 520.
- parol evidence admissible to show the exact title adjudicated, 523.
- as to after-acquired title, 541.
- (3.) Judgment inconclusive, 41-44, 511-515, 576.
 - reasons for this result, 42, 511, 513.
 - no privity between fictitious parties, 42.
 - each ejectment based upon a new lease, 42.
 - no seizin or estate awarded by the judgment, 511-514.
 - nothing remaining of record to show the title adjudicated, 513.
 - judgment established right of possession, 42, 513.
- (4.) Abolition of fictions rendered judgment conclusive, 43, 511, 513, 515-518, 521, 524.
 - exceptional cases considered, 514, 515, 518, 524.
 - United States Supreme Court decisions, 515, 516.
 - conflict of the cases, 517.
 - Missouri cases reviewed, 518, 519.
 - judgment not a source of title, 520.
 - does not transfer title, 520.
 - operates by way of estoppel, 520, 521.
- (5.) Distinction between reality and personality, 516, 521, 522.
 - rule as to judgments, 516, 521, 522.
 - no inherent difference, 522.
 - test as to conclusiveness, 506, 508.
 - result of the cases stated, 524.
- (6.) Requisites of the judgment, 525, 535.
 - must conform to complaint and verdict, 525.
 - as to description of lands, 525.
 - as to plaintiff's estate or interest, 525.
 - may be rendered for land subject to an easement, 130, 132, 135, 526.
 - and a homestead right, 526.
 - recitals of incorporeal hereditaments, 102, 527.
 - relief incident to interference with property in possession not awarded, 156, 157, 528.
 - against government officials, 540.
 - judgment by default, 530.
 - practice as to, in New York, 530.
 - judgment by consent binding, 531.
 - effect of judgment by confession, 532.
 - between vendor and vendee, 536.
 - judgment in California, 533, 544.
 - in Vermont, 534.
 - in Illinois, 535.
 - in Texas, writ of possession must conform to, 550.
 - form and effect of, the same in the various actions, 92.

JUDGMENT—continued.

- (7.) Landlord and tenant, 587, 588.
tenant usually a party defendant, 587.
judgment against tenant not binding upon the landlord, 587.
reason of the rule, 587.
not binding, though the tenant notified the landlord of the suit, 587.
when conclusive by way of estoppel, 588.
landlord may be joined with tenant in New York, 587.
liability of landlord for costs, 587.
- (8.) Judgment for possession and damages, 454, 545, 650, 651, 671.
conclusive as to mesne profits, 671.
exception to the rule, 678.
not conclusive as to length of defendant's occupancy, 672.
form of judgment for improvements, 716.
- (9.) Various other proceedings, 582*a*, 582*b*, 582*c*. judgments in partition, 582*a*. common law and chancery partition, 582*a*.
in condemnation proceedings, 582*b*. action to quiet title, 582*c*.
affecting contingent interests, 582*a*, n.

JUDGMENT CREDITORS, may attack mortgage, 179.

- reach improvements, 709, n.
statute of limitations against, 751, n.

JUDICIAL RECORD, title by, 794.

- entire record not essential as evidence, 794.

JURISDICTION, in equity to grant injunctions, 626, 840.

- in equity, when remedy at law is incomplete, 178.
in forcible entry proceedings, title cannot be tried, 94.
in ejectment over corporeal interests only, 95, 97, 146.
objection to, after plea to the merits, 470.
relief peculiar to ejectment not to be had in other actions, 162-194.
over lands in possession of Federal officers, 244-249.
of Federal courts, 898, 894, 900, 902, 904.
of equity as to boundaries, 865.
of equity in Federal courts, 875.

JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT in Federal courts, 901, 904, 906, 907.JURY, questions of fact to be tried by, 170, 496, 790.

- trial, matter of right in actions at law, 170.
must find actual ouster in ejectment between co-tenants, 281, 295.
disclaimer by tenant is question for, 388.
may allow interest as damages in actions ex delicto, 670.
may deal with entire tract in assessing mesne profits, 707.
good faith is question for, 694.
may review probate of will, 205, n.
presume a grant, 787.
may be controlled by instructions, 496, n.

JURY—continued.

courts should determine equitable questions, 496.

determines the facts which constitute adverse possession, 729, n.

KANSAS, statutory new trials, when not allowed, 592.

statutory new trial must be demanded in trial court, 608.

KEEPING ameliorations, 690, n.

KENTUCKY, public easement not the basis of an ejectment, 272.

mortgagee cannot bring ejectment in, 332.

KENYON, LORD, influence of, upon ejectment, 52.

KIMMEL v. BENNA criticised, 518.

KING, ejectment by the, 191.

not considered "consistent with royal prerogative," 191.

proprietor of all lands, 788.

title of, by discovery, 788.

cannot be disseized, 191.

rule applied only to the king, 191.

king's lessee could bring ejectment, 191.

ejectment by State or people, 192.

when the people cannot recover, 193, 194.

KNOWLEDGE of adverse title defeats claim for improvements, 694, 705.

LACHES in prosecuting ejectment, 625.

forfeits right to injunction, 625.

not imputed to the government, 753*a*.

right to improvements founded upon, 712.

LAND, what embraced in definition of, 102, n., 105, 115.

emerging from the sea, title to, 123.

under water, ejectment for, 117, 119.

subject to easement, recoverable in ejectment, 130, 132, 526, 571.

subject to homestead right, 141, 526.

private way, passage way, alley way, or ferry right, 132.

how described in ejectment, 455, 464.

reputed name of, description by, 461, 767, n.

LAND CERTIFICATES, not subject of pledge, 327, n.

LANDING PLACE, privilege of, not recoverable in ejectment, 148.

LANDLORD AND TENANT, ejectment between, 346-371.

prior to introduction of summary proceedings, 346.

objection to the remedy, 347.

title to land not usually involved, 349, 352.

statutory new trials in actions between, 598.

execution of writ of possession, 569.

(1.) Landlord, defined, 29, 265, 266.

what the landlord must prove in ejectment, 350.

must show present right of possession, 350.

forfeiture or expiration of term, 350.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—continued.

has no right of re-entry unless reserved, 160, redress is damages, 850.
 estoppel against the tenant, 851.
 tenant cannot assail landlord's title, 851.
 tenant cannot show outstanding title, 851.
 or title acquired during existence of tenancy,
 reason of the rule, 351, 352.
 founded on delivery of possession, 851.
 public policy, 852.
 estoppel cases upon re-delivery of possession, estoppel against tenant applies only to title u 358. estoppel not applicable in cases of fraud, 355.
 judgment against tenant not binding on landl fraud of landlord, 355.
 estoppel against landlord, 351.
 as defendant, 264.
 ejectment will lie against, on possession of ten party claiming as, 265.
 defending in tenant's place, 393.
 rule as to notice to quit, 393.

- (2.) Tenant may show that landlord's title has expire or that it has been extinguished or failed, 358.
 no estoppel where contract is void for usury, 3 may show that he has acquired landlord's title not estopped from claiming homestead by acce implied obligation as to use of property, 362.
 obligation results from the relationship, 362.
 must not unnecessarily injure property, 362.
 not bound to rebuild in case of fire, 362.
 interest of, ceases when buildings are destroyec
 test of waste, 363.
 waste can only be committed of thing demised waste by tenant at will, 364.
 disclaimer by, 388.
 tenant's notice to landlord, 400.

LAW of the place, governs real estate, 467*a*.
 and fact, right to easement, question of, 729, n.
 is equitable estoppel available at? 849.
 of State, binding in Federal courts, 870.
 and equity in Federal courts, 871, 879.

LEANING WALL, remedy for, 156.

LEASE, to bore for oil, ejectment based upon, 112-114.
 entry and ouster, 84.
 valid lease necessary under early practice, 28, 41 landlord has no right of re-entry during exister

LEASE—continued.

unless right is reserved, 160, 350, 370.

when forfeited, 362, 365, 369.

inspection of, ordered, 464*b*.

severance of conditions in, 366.

construction of conditions, 367.

waiver of forfeiture, 371, 371, n.

destruction of premises by fire, 155.

LEGAL TITLE generally prevails in ejectment, 58, 376.

bill in equity not maintained for lands claimed under, 168, 169, 386.

LEGAL AND EQUITABLE RIGHTS may be adjudicated in same forum, 169, 184, 639.

equitable case first heard, 406.

entire relief obtained in one action, 184, 639.

LEGAL AND EQUITABLE TITLE, party vested with, cannot proceed in equity, 172.

rules relating to discovery, 790.

confusion in the cases, 790.

LEGISLATION, cannot take away title by adverse possession, 727.

new trial, when not given by, 595.

interpretation of, 193.

LENGTH OF POSSESSION to presume a grant, 787.

LESSEE, rights of, cease on destruction of building by fire, 155.

not bound to rebuild in case of fire, 362.

LESSOR in early practice, 17, 28, 37.

LEX FORI, governs provisional remedies, 610, n.

LEX LOCI REI SITÆ, 467*a*, 542.

effect of foreign probate, 467*a*.

avoiding rule, 542.

LIBERAL view of fictions, 53.

LIBERTY or privilege to mine, not subject of ejectment, 150.

does not vest any interest or estate, 150.

differs from grant or demise of the metals, 150.

LICENSE to mine not the subject of ejectment, 150.

to use land, insufficient to support ejectment, 98.

distinguished from easement, 98, n.

to use land by railroad, 334.

LICENSEE, vendee holds as, 305.

implied right to enter, 304.

LIFE ESTATE, forfeiture of, in England, 214.

commission of waste does not forfeit, 214, 624.

effect of life tenant claiming the fee, 214.

basis of ejectment, 185, 215.

LIFE TENANT may bring ejectment, 185, 215.

permissive waste by, 624.

forfeiture of estate, 214.

should pay taxes, 214, n.

LIFE TENANT—continued.

proceedings to discover death of, 215, n. purchase of outstanding title by, 292, n. inures to remainderman, 292, n.
improvements by, 699.
claim of contribution, 699.
adverse possession, 751, n.

LIMITATION, statutes, of, historically considered, 724.

rule as to pleading, 482, 686.
purpose and policy of, 482, 727.
in mesne profits, 686.

See ADVERSE POSSESSION; COLOR OF TITLE; CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION.

LIS PENDENS, practice as to filing, 621*b*, 645.

effect of, in ejectment, 645, 678.
statutory policy in New York, 645.

LIVERY OF SEIZIN, subject-matter of ejectment must be capable of, 97, 146.LOCAL ACTIONS. See VENUE.

actions affecting realty are, 457, 465.
not maintainable in foreign jurisdiction, 467, 542. distinction between actions local by nature and by statute, 465, 470.
distinction not affected by form of remedy, 465.
ejectment is a local action, 249, 465.
geographical position of land must be stated, 457.

LODE or vein recoverable in ejectment, 115.

recovery of, gives no right to surface fixtures, 115.

LOMBARDS, prescriptive title recognized among, 724, n.LONGFIELD on Ejectment, 8, n.

rule formulated by, as to plaintiffs, 183.

LOST DEEDS, evidence, 820.

secondary evidence, 820, 821.

LUNATIC. See COMMITTEE OF LUNATIC.

may bring ejectment in Missouri, 208. committee of, cannot bring ejectment, 208.
committee may maintain equitable action, 204.
improvements as against, 699.

MADE LANDS, recoverable in ejectment, 118.MAINE, statutory real actions in, 79, 233, 480.

declaration in writ of entry in, 480.
must describe premises, 480.
specify estate claimed, 480.
allege seizin within twenty years, 480.
pleading fee simple, 440.
amendment embracing new land not admissible, 464.
rule as to notice to quit, 384.

MAINE—continued.

- writ of entry maintainable for land covered with party wall, 158.
- title to land cannot be tried in assumpsit in, 176.
- remedy of mortgagor against mortgagee, 845.

MAINE PROFESSOR, advocate of fictions, 68a.

MAINTENANCE, 190. See CHAMPERTY STATUTES.

- in early practice in ejectment, 28.

MALA FIDE, possessor, not entitled to improvements, 691, 694.
under color of title, 775-778a.

MANDAMUS not issued in aid of judgment in ejectment, 175.
to officer to execute writ of possession, 565.
to compel issue of patent, 919.

MANDATORY INJUNCTION, when allowed, 149. to restore running water, 149.

MANSFIELD, Lord, introduction of equitable principles by, in ejectment, 51.
observations of, as to ejectment, 5.

MAP, furnished with bill of particulars, 464a.
ancient, as evidence, 819.

MARKET GROUNDS, ejectment for, 271.

MARRIAGE, validity of, cannot be determined in summary proceedings, 164. determined in action for dower, 129.
by what law governed, 129, n. admeasurement proceedings not conclusive as to, 129.

MARRIED WOMEN, right of, to bring ejectment, 215, 220.
take their husband's name, 220.
may recover in ejectment against their husbands, 220.
may sue for homestead, 220.
can recover term for years, 220.
tenant cannot set up title of, in Massachusetts, 859.
improvements by husband on lands of, not allowed, 709.
may lose property by adverse possession, 220.

MARSHAL, duties of, in executing writ of possession, 555, 562, 566. See WRIT OF POSSESSION.

- may demand indemnity, 565, 566.
- has no judicial powers, 566.
- burden upon, to excuse non-execution of writ, 561.
- cannot file affidavit as to non-execution of writ, 567.

MARYLAND, right of alien to recover in ejectment, 226.
rule as to notice to quit, 882.
construction of verdict, 498.
rule as to improvements, 694.

MASSACHUSETTS, writs of entry in, 70, 73-75, 79.
land subject to homestead right, 141.
writ of entry by tenant in common, 187.
against tenant at will, 233.
remedy of mortgagor in, 345.
tenant cannot set up wife's title, 859.

MASSACHUSETTS—continued.

tenancy at will, how terminated, 402.

tenant pleading general issue, estopped to deny possession, 479.

commissioners, views of, as to real actions, 26.

real and personal actions in, 64a.

adjustment of mesne profits, 665.

MATTER OF LAW, not to be pleaded, 425, n.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES, 665, 666. See MESNE PROFITS AND DAMAGES.

MELIORATIONS, 690, 716. See IMPROVEMENTS.

MENTAL INCAPACITY, determinable in ejectment, 303, n.

MERTON, statute of, 724.

MESNE PROFITS AND DAMAGES, 61, 62, 454, 646-669.

damages originally the only recovery in ejectment, 61, 62, 546, 647.

origin of action for mesne profits, 647.

exemplary damages, 668a.

restitution, 669a.

nature of the action, 648, 649.

a bar to trespass quare clausum fregit, 668.

(1.) Damages in real actions.

in early practice no damages recoverable in real writs, 646.

recovery limited to a real thing, 646.

recovery of damages given by statute, 646.

in trespass to try title, 88.

(2.) Mesne profits in ejectment, 647.

mesne or intermediate profits defined, 647.

sketch of ejectiones firmae, 647. See EJECTIONES FIRMAE.

effect of the introduction of fictions upon the recovery of damages, 61, 647.

nature of the action, 648.

changes effected in modern practice, 648.

treated as an action of contract, 649, 674.

originally the cause of action died with the party, 648.

distinction between action for mesne profits and for use and occupation, 652.

between claim for damages and for mesne profits, 653.

recovery of nominal damages not a bar to mesne profits, 662.

damages after judgment, 669.

(3.) Joinder of ejectment and claim for mesne profits, 454, 650, 658.

objections to the practice considered, 651, 658.

(4.) Pleading damages in real actions, 654.

the legislative policy unsettled, 654.

(5.) In ejectment, 655, 668.

claim for mesne profits must be distinctly pleaded, 655.

requisites of a good plea, 655.

in New York claim should be stated in a separate count, 655.

judgment for damages erroneous where no damages are claimed, 655.

MESNE PROFITS AND DAMAGES—continued.

- (6.) Parties plaintiff, 656, 660, 661.
 - disseizee is the proper party plaintiff, 656.
 - right to damages and mesne profits assignable, 656.
 - plaintiff must actually acquire possession, 657.
 - co-tenants, 660.
 - distinction in the cases, 660.
 - executors, 661.
- (7.) Parties defendant, 658, 659.
 - disseizor or occupant the proper party, 658.
 - rule as to parties defendant, 658.
- (8.) Periods for which mesne profits are recoverable, 663-665.
 - for what defendant is liable, 663.
 - not accountable for profits prior to his entry, 663.
 - nor subsequent to abandonment, 680.
 - plaintiff only recovers from time his right to the possession accrued, 663.
 - damages assessed down to day of trial, 664.
- (9.) Measure of damages, 665-667.
 - uncertainty of the early rule, 665.
 - damages limited to compensation, 665.
 - distinction between realty and personalty, 665.
 - rule in New York, 666.
 - compensation adjusted upon footing of contract, 666.
 - interest on the value of the fee not the proper measure, 667.
- (10.) Damages for waste and trespass, 668.
 - may be recovered in action for mesne profits, 668.
 - damages to timber and crops allowed, 668.
 - rule otherwise in Indiana and Wisconsin, 668.
- (11.) Interest on mesne profits, 670.
 - interest not allowed on unliquidated demands, 670.
 - the rule not founded on principle, 670, n.
 - greatly modified in modern cases, 670.
 - interest generally allowed on rents and profits, 670.
- (12.) Evidence as to mesne profits, 674-677.
 - proof of amount and value of mesne profits must be furnished, 674.
 - verdict must conform to the testimony, 674.
 - income of saw mill and site, 675.
 - proceeds of a ferry, 676.
 - rules as to ore and mines, 677.
- (13.) Income from improvements, 678.
 - not generally allowed to disseizee, 678.
 - the rule in Iowa, 678.
 - practical objections to the policy, 678.
- (14.) Defenses, 680-682.
 - effect of release of one defendant, 680.
 - payment of rent to disseizor as landlord not a defense, 680.

MESNE PROFITS AND DAMAGES—continued.

- effect of bankruptcy, 681.
- inadequacy of purchase price does not mitigate damages, 682.
- apportionment of mesne profits, 685.
- statute of limitations, 686.
- payment of taxes and assessments, 688.
- (15.) Mesne profits in equity, 687.
 - the recovery not limited to actions at law, 687.
 - mesne profits recoverable in chancery, 687.
 - rules not always the same as at law, 687, n.

MICHIGAN, ejectment for streets, 273.

- public easement not a basis of the action, 273.
- ejectment against mortgagee in possession, 342.
- ejectment by guardian, 199.
- right of administrator to bring ejectment, 210, 211.
- mortgagee cannot have ejectment, 332, 334.
- joinder of husband and wife, 255.
- against several defendants—joint occupancy must be shown, 239.
- presumption of ouster between co-tenants, 289.
- ejectment on deed intended as a mortgage, 338.
- notice to quit—tenant at will, 384.
- tenant at sufferance, 385.
- statutory new trials in, 593, 593, 598.

MINE, may be recovered in ejectment, 108–111.

- defined, 111.
- may be delivered in execution, 108, 109.
- may be worked by owner of fee where land is subject to easement, 134, 140.
- distinction between, and quarry, 111.
- ejectment for possessory mining claim, 116.
- ejectment for patented mining claim, 116.
- as against intruder, 116.
- rule as to mesne profits of, 677.
- injunction against working, 626.
- the New York rule, 626.
- distinction between grant of minerals and liberty to prospect, 150.
- license to mine not basis of ejectment, 150.
- adverse possession of, 733, n.
- nature of the acts, 733, n.
- legal right to, not the basis of bill in equity, 169.

MINING CLAIM, territorial, 905. See MINE.MINNESOTA, administrator may bring ejectment, 211.

- joinder of defendants, 239.
- vendee may assert equitable rights, 322.
- rule as to equitable defenses in, 488.
- practice as to new trials, 602.

MISDEMEANOR, in New York, to convey lands in litigation, 190.

- MISJOINDER of parties plaintiff, 188, 189. amendments to avoid, 189.
 of parties defendant, 238, 240.
 objection, how taken, 494a.
 of actions, 640-642.
 partition and ejectment, 640.
 suit to foreclose and recover land, 640.
 oured by verdict, 505.
 how waived, 494a.
- MISSING LINKS, presumption of, 789.
 rule as to deducing title, 789.
- MISSISSIPPI, ejectment for lands subject to homestead right, 141. school trustee may bring ejectment, 230.
 vendor's interest regarded as a mortgage, 309.
 statute of limitations need not be pleaded, 483.
- MISSOURI, lunatic may bring ejectment, 208.
 executor cannot recover by virtue of individual interest, 211.
 rule as to recovery by tenants in common, 300.
 conveyance pending action, 645.
 no distinction between prior and adverse possession, 723.
 equitable defense, 488.
 judgment in ejectment not conclusive, 518, 519.
- MISTAKE, in notice to quit, 403. possession by, 759, 760.
- MITIGATION, matters in, 682.
- MIXED POSSESSIONS, general principles regulating, 753.
- MOIETY, undivided, recovered on claim of the whole, 488.
- MONTH TO MONTH, tenancies from, 383a. notice to quit, 383a.
- MONUMENTS, govern course, distance and contents, 862. destruction of, 863.
 erected under deed, 864.
 absence of, course and distance governs quantity, 864.
- MORTGAGEE AND MORTGAGOR, ejectment between, 327-345.
 the early practice, 327.
 mortgagee formerly vested with entire estate, 327.
 rights of, at common law, 330.
 disadvantages of ejectment between, 328.
 not a final remedy, 328.
 foreclosure more effectual relief, 329.
 modern practice, 331, 332.
 mortgagee cannot generally bring ejectment, 329, 331, 332.
 in what State the action allowed, 333.
 statutes prohibiting ejectment by mortgagees, when unconstitutional 334. ejectment by execution purchaser, 335.
 title after default, 336.

MORTGAGEE AND MORTGAGOR—continued.

deed absolute on its face may be shown to be a mortgage, 837.
ejectment upon deed intended as a mortgage, 338.
outstanding title, 339.
mortgagee may purchase equity at execution sale, 343.
statutory new trial by, 601.
may come in to defend, 262.
rule as to improvements, 710.
trial of title in foreclosure, 179a.

MORTGAGOR AGAINST MORTGAGEE, ejectment by, 340.

heirs of, 205, n.
remedy of, 345.
not maintainable until after accounting, 341.
and application of rents, 341.
rule in Michigan, 342.
right of possession, 331.
conveyance by mortgagor to mortgagee, 344.

MOTION, title not tried on, 164.

to affect pleadings, 428.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, ejectment by, 139, 267-275.

vested with the fee, 267.
with public easement, 268.
rights incident to, enlarged in the modern cases, 270.
right of, to bring ejectment, founded on public necessity, 270.
conflicting cases, 269, 271, 274.
ejectment by, for streets and public places, 271, 275.
when the action will not lie, 274.
may recover mesne profits, 656.
may set up public easement as a defense in ejectment, 268.
as defendant, 252.
may be let in to defend ejectment, 252.
title by adverse possession, 753a, 267.
generally acquire easement in streets, 267.
adverse possession and prescription against, 753a.
opposing cases, 753a.

MUNIMENTS OF TITLE not to be set forth in pleading, 444.NAKED POSSESSION, basis of adverse possession, 729.

cannot be extended by construction, 732, n.

NAME of place overrules mistaken description, 461.

of land, description by, 461.

of ejectment, confusion concerning, 76, 76, n.

NAMES of parties to actions, 426.

initials and middle names not recognized, 426.
senior and junior no part of a name, 426.
of married women, 220.

NAMES—continued.

- when fictitious, record should so state, 426.
- mistakes as to, in notice to quit, 401, 408.
- reputed, of property, description by, 461, 767, n.

NATURAL OBJECTS, govern course and distance, 862.

NATURE of ejectment, 1, 68.

- of action for mesne profits, 648, 649.

NATURE OF LAND, requisites of adverse possession as affected by, 733.

- as distinguished from personalty, 522, 665.

NEBRASKA, holders of tax deed not proper parties to foreclosure, 257.

NEVADA, tenant in common may oust intruder, 300.

NEW ENGLAND, ejectment in, 78.

- unpopularity of the remedy, 73, 74.
- reasons considered, 73, 74.
- real writs in, 70, 71, 75-77,
- objections to real actions, 75.
- changes effected, 75, 77.
- adoption of real actions, 76, 77.
- ancient forms little regarded, 75.
- modern changes, 79.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, statutory real actions in, 79.

- real action for wife's land, husband need not be joined, 255.
- remedy of mortgagor against mortgagee, 845.
- writs of formedon in, 71.

NEW ISLANDS, title to, 124, 124, n.

NEW JERSEY, shore line divisions must be settled in equity, 151.

- rule as to notice to quit, 374.
- tax title attacked by certiorari, 184a.

NEW THEORY of jurisdiction in Federal courts, 900.

NEW TRIALS, 576-609.

- early practice as to new trials in ejectment, 576.
- Lord Mansfield's views, 576.
- reason for allowing new trial, 576.

(1.) New trials at common law, 576, 577, 580, 581.

- any number of new trials granted for errors, 577.
- practice more liberal than in other actions, 577.
- not granted in aid of an outstanding title, 577.
- statutory and common law new trials independent, 581, 596.

(2.) Statutory new trials, 578, 608.

- prevail in many States, 578.
- policy of the law upon which the right is based, 578, 608.
- peculiar sanctity attending the tenure of real property, 578.
- reason for granting new trial to plaintiff, 579.
- successful plaintiff not allowed to discontinue ejectment to avoid second trial, 583.
- defeated defendant cannot become plaintiff in second action, 587, 598.

NEW TRIALS—continued.

- statutes restrictive of common law rights, 580.
 - avoiding statutory new trials by bringing trespass, 582.
 - (8.) Interpretation of the statutes, 584.
 - conflict of the cases, 584.
 - liberally construed in Illinois, 584.
 - strictly construed in Texas, 584.
 - the true rule of construction, 584.
 - (4.) Actions to which the statutes apply, 585, 593, 609.
 - to actions in the nature of ejectment, 609.
 - to ejectment where equitable relief is also asked, 585.
 - where damages are demanded, 585.
 - where equitable defenses are interposed, 585.
 - where judgment was rendered on demurrer, 585.
 - suits to quiet title in Indiana, 586.
 - actions to determine conflicting claims in New York, 592.
 - right not lost by defects in forms, 585, 588.
 - (5.) Actions not within the statutes, 585, 589, 591–593, 595, 609.
 - not applicable to equitable actions, 589, 609.
 - new trials granted in equity in analogy to the statute, 590.
 - new trial not granted in cases of non-suit, 585.
 - nor in cases of disputed boundaries in Texas, 591.
 - nor in actions to determine conflicting claims in Kansas, 592.
 - not generally applicable between landlord and tenant, 593.
 - apply to forcible entry proceedings in Minnesota, 594.
 - trespass not within the statutes, 595.
 - nor suits for specific performance, 595.
 - nor suits to set aside conveyances, 595.
 - (6.) Practice governing applications for new trials, 580, 584, 590, 596, 598, 602, 603.
 - common law new trials not counted, 596.
 - effect of entry of erroneous judgment, 588.
 - conditions of procuring the order, 598.
 - payment of costs required, 598–600.
 - practice in New York, 599, 600.
 - strangers to the record not entitled to new trial, 601.
 - practice in various States, 602, 603.
 - new trial waived by stipulation, 604.
 - second action must be brought in same court, 606.
 - new trial must be demanded in trial court, 603.
 - effect of pendency of writ of error or appeal, 605.
 - what title investigated on second trial, 597.
 - statutes controlling in Federal courts, 607.
 - abuses under the statutes, 582, 608, 609.
 - repeal of the statutes recommended, 608, 609.
- NEW YORK, real actions abolished, 79.
- statutory ejectment given, 79.

NEW YORK—continued.

- ejectment for land covered by party wall, 158.
 - infant may bring real action, 196.
 - committee of a lunatic cannot prosecute ejectment, 203.
 - is not a trustee of express trust, 203.
 - mortgagees cannot have ejectment, 381.
 - attorney's authority to proceed in ejectment, 416, 420.
 - written authority required, 416.
 - complaint in ejectment must allege unlawful withholding of possession, 438.
 - must claim a certain estate, 434, 438.
 - defect available by demurrer, 434.
 - under claim of fee simple may prove title as mortgagee in possession, 437.
 - questions of venue, how raised, 469.
 - rule as to trial of local actions, 472.
 - statutes of limitation must be pleaded, 482.
 - doctrine as to color of title, 776.
 - rule as to equitable defenses, 486-488.
 - vendee may assert equitable rights, 322.
 - rule as to notice to quit, 375, 376, 383, 384.
 - effect of pleading a particular title, 492.
 - judgment in ejectment, 529, 530, 537.
 - order of restitution, 568, 575.
 - statutory new trials, 589, 599, 600.
 - receiver not appointed before judgment, 615.
 - executions against the person and orders of arrest, 630.
 - practice as to joinder of actions, 636, 639-641.
 - pleading claim for mesne profits, 655.
 - rule as to damages, 666.
 - distinction between damages and mesne profits, 668.
 - construction of pleadings in, 428.
- NEXT FRIEND, ejectment by, 196, 199-201. See GUARDIAN.
- NOLLE PROSEQUI as to part of claim, 5.
- NOMINAL DAMAGES, recovery of, not a bar to actual damages, 662.
after introduction of fictions, 61, 647.
- NON-PAYMENT OF RENT, ejectment for, 160, 370. demand must be shown, 370.
- NON-SUIT under early practice, 38.
joinder of too many plaintiffs ground for, 187.
statutory new trial not granted in cases of, 585.
- NON-TENURE, plea of, 480*a*.
- NORTH CAROLINA, practice as to provisional relief, 623. defendant's right to a receiver, 620.
right of alien to bring ejectment, 226.
joint owner may come in to defend, 259.
mortgagee may bring ejectment, 383.

NORTH CAROLINA—continued.

statute of limitations need not be pleaded, 482.
practice as to joinder of actions, 644.
abstracts as evidence, 837.

NOT GUILTY. See ANSWER.

the general issue in ejectment, 476, 484.
advantages of the plea to the defendant, 476.
tendency to favor the plea, 476.
defenses admissible under, 477.
defendant may show deed a mortgage, 388.
waiver of the plea, 492.

NOTICE, constructive, what is, 723a, n.

defined by Supreme Court, 723a, n. possession as, 723a.

to defeat improvement claim, 694, 696.

NOTICE OF OUSTER, 280a.

necessity of actual notice, 280a.
open exercise of exclusive right, 280a.
of pendency of suit, 587, n.

NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF ACTION, 645. See LIS PENDENS.NOTICE TO QUIT, 372-414.

upon what the right is founded, 373.
definition of, 373.
no distinction between lands and houses, 373.
presumption that occupant's possession is rightful, 372.
privity of estate must exist to render notice necessary, 374, 375, 377.
notice not necessary when title is in issue, 374.
tenancy must be shown, 374, 375.
intruder not entitled to notice, 376.
husband not entitled to notice from wife, 376.
same rule as to trespassers, 377.
rule when term expires by provisions of lease, 378.
rule when lease is void by statute of frauds, 379.
monthly tenancies, 383a.
weekly tenancies, 383a.
tenant holding over, 380.
landlord's option in such cases, 380.
tenant cannot change the relationship, 380.
uncertain tenancies, 381.
constructively held to be tenancies from year to year, 382.
tenancy from year to year, 382.
either party may determine, 382.
reasonable notice, what considered, 383.
tenancy at will, notice in cases of, 384.
demand of possession necessary in England, 384.
tenant at sufferance, 385.
at common law not entitled to notice to quit, 385.

NOTICE TO QUIT—continued.

- exception to the rule in Michigan, 385.
- void homestead claim, possession under, 386.
- possessor not entitled to notice to quit, 386.
- adverse possession, no notice necessary, 387.
- disclaimer by tenant renders notice unnecessary, 387.
- tenant becomes trespasser, 387.
- disclaimer is a question of fact, 388, 389.
- examples of disclaimer, 388, 390.
- claim of adverse possession forfeits right to notice, 389.
- such claim inconsistent with a tenancy, 389.
- denial of landlord's title, 389.
- when refusal is not a disclaimer, 390.
- must be direct repudiation of landlord's title, 390.
- tenant of tenant in common, rule as to, 391, 392.
- parol notice, 404.
- tenant's notice to landlord, 400.
- rules governing same as landlord's notice to tenant, 400.
- (1.) Between vendor and vendee, 310, 394-396.
 - vendee cannot be ejected without demand and notice, 394.
 - may be after default, 394.
 - notice to quit not generally necessary, 310, 394.
 - practice is an exception to the general rule, 394.
 - different rule in England, 394.
- (2.) Between mortgagor and mortgagee, 397.
 - the early rule, 397.
 - notice not generally required, 397.
- (3.) Infant plaintiff must give, 398.
- (4.) Personal representatives, rule as to, 399.
- (5.) Form of notice, 401-403.
 - must be free from ambiguity, 401.
 - must not be optional, 401.
 - obvious mistake does not vitiate, 401.
 - misdescription not necessarily fatal, 401.
 - effect of mistake in name, 401, 403.
 - notices held good, 402.
- (6.) By whom given, 405-409.
 - by landlord, 405.
 - by authorized agent, 405.
 - by agent of corporation, 407.
 - should be in principal's name, 405.
 - owner of reversion, 405.
 - devisee, heir, or executor, 405.
 - receiver, with power to let, 405.
 - receiver, in chancery, 406.
 - rule in doubtful cases, 405.
 - joint tenants, 408.

NOTICE TO QUIT—continued.

- trustees, 408.
- tenants in common, 409.
- (7.) Who cannot give notice, 410.
 - vendee without title cannot, 410.
- (8.) Waiver of notice, 411.
 - objection must be taken at nisi prius, 411.
 - acceptance of subsequently accruing rent is waiver of, 411.
 - how disclaimer may be waived, 411.
 - effect of second notice, 411.
 - notice waived by stipulation in lease, 411.
 - by agreement, 411.
 - by admission in pleading, 411.
- (9.) Service of notice, 412–414.
 - delivery to wife or agent of tenant, 412.
 - notice to corporation, 412.
 - may be served upon officers, 412.
 - when tenant dead, may be served on administrator, 412.
 - service of tenant in common, 412.
 - on tenant's partner, 412.
- (10.) How served, 412, 413.
 - rule in New York, 413.
 - at dwelling-house, 413.
 - upon tenant's servant, 413.
 - leaving at tenant's place of business insufficient, 413.
- (11.) Service, how proved 414.
 - copy of notice competent evidence, 414.
 - proof of contents of notice, 414.
 - notice to produce, not necessary, 414.

NOTICE to tenant in possession, 37.

possession as notice of occupant's rights, 723a.

NOTORIETY of possession to presume a grant, 787.

adverse possession, 785, 786.

NUISANCE, action of, for interference with easement, 147.

leaning wall constitutes, 156.

overhanging cornice is, 156.

may be abated by action or act of the party, 156.

when abatement not justified, 156, n.

ejectment not proper remedy for, 156.

bill to abate is local, 465, 475, n.

joinder of plaintiffs in bill to suppress, 187, n., 298.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURIT REGI, 753a.

OBJECTIONS to real writs, 2, 3, 5, 6, 75.

to ejectment in New England, 73–75.

to a title, 311, n., 541.

implication of no incumbrances, 311, n.

- OBJECTS govern course and distance, 862.
- OBSTRUCTION, not an improvement, 699.
- OCCUPANT OF LAND must be made defendant, 281, 284, 286, 432, 659.
bona fide, recovers for improvements, 63, 694.
- OCCUPATION OF LAND, character of, to warrant ejectment, 183, 185, 186, 282-284.
to constitute adverse possession, 729, 731.
- OCEAN, bed of, recoverable in ejectment, 121.
title to, 121.
- OFFICE, color of title to, 762, n.
- OFFICE COPIES OF DEEDS, 821. admissibility of, 821.
- OFFICE FOUND, alien may recover in ejectment until after, 226.
felon before office found may convey land, 239.
- OHIO, religious society may bring ejectment by its trustees, 230.
practice as to statutory new trials, 602.
- OIL WELLS, ejectment for, 112-114.
leases of, 112.
receiver of, appointment vacated, 618a.
oil regarded as a mineral, 114, 202.
conflict in the cases, 112-114.
- OPEN AND NOTORIOUS, adverse possession must be, 735.
- ORAL PLEADINGS not allowed in real actions, 427.
written pleadings required in modern practice, 427.
- ORDER for restitution, 575.
not to contain injunction, 568, 575.
granting statutory new trials, conditions of procuring, 598.
of arrest in ejectment, 630.
- ORDER OF PROOF, rule as to, 799.
- ORE AND MINES, rule as to mesne profits, 677.
- OREGON, tide lands belong to the State, 122.
may be recovered in ejectment, 122.
tenant in common may oust intruder, 300.
chain of title must not be pleaded, 444.
- ORIGIN OF EJECTMENT, 1, 63.
trespass to try title, 81, 91.
statutory new trials, 578.
action for mesne profits, 647.
- ORIGINAL JURISDICTION of the Supreme Court, 894.
of the Circuit Courts, 706.
- ORNAMENTAL IMPROVEMENTS, cost of, disallowed, 701.
- OUSTER. See TENANTS IN COMMON; CO-TENANTS. what constitutes, is a question of fact, 281.
defined, 80, 93, 276.
early practice as to, 272.
must be shown between tenants in common, 277.
notice of, 280a.

OUSTER—continued.

- cases explained, 280*a*.
- between joint tenants and co-parceners, 295.
- differs in degree from ouster in other cases, 278, 290, 750.
- more difficult of proof, 278.
- burden of proof, 282.
- evidence of, must be positive, 281.
- must be found by jury, 281.
- forcible expulsion not necessary, 283.
- denial of title by answer is, 283.
- denial must be unequivocal, 284.
- claim of the fee is not, 284.
- nor cutting grass, 284.
- nor removing fixtures, 284.
- must be disturbance of possession, 284.
- conveyance of entire estate is, 287, 750.
- of wild lands, 285.
- to sustain trespass, 157, 286.
- defective pleading of ouster, 483.
- presumption of ouster from lapse of time, 289, 750.
- whether presumption of law or of fact, 289, 289, n.
- views of court in Dubois v. Campan, 289, n.

OUTSTANDING TITLE, defendant may show, 57, 477, 492*a*, 831.

- in Indians defeats recovery by the people, 194.
- wrong-doer cannot set up title of cestui que trust against trustee, 222.
- pleading, 492*a*.
- authority of claimant to invoke, 420.
- new trial not granted in aid of, 577.
- as between tenants in common, 292.
- tenant in common must permit co-tenant to share in, 292.
- qualifications of the doctrine, 292.
- mortgage, 339.
- is a common defense, 831.
- character of, to make a defense, 831.
- must be present, subsisting and available, 831.
- deed in escrow is not, 831.
- nor sheriff's certificate, 831.
- nor outstanding equity, 831.
- not applicable to possessory claims, 831.
- in Federal court, 903.

OVERFLOWED LANDS, sheriff must deliver possession of, under writ, 572. overflowing does not generally constitute an ouster, 149.OVERHANGING cornice, remedy for, 156.

- limbs of trees may be cut off, 156.

OWNERSHIP OF LAND, independent from right of easement, 132, 147.OYSTERS, considered fish, 142, n.

- parties, planting protected, 142, n.

- PACIFIC OCEAN, belongs to no nation, 121.
- PANNAGE, right to, not the basis of ejectment, 148.
- PAPER TITLE and possession, 723*d*. simple deed not evidence of title, 723*d*.
as color of title, 762, 772.
- PARCENERS. See COPARCENERS.
ejectment by, 808.
joinder of, 808.
ejectment between—ouster must be shown, 295.
- PAROL evidence admissible to show title adjudicated, 518, 523.
to vary a writing, 824.
when monument destroyed, 863.
may be given to prove deed a mortgage, 837.
gift, improvements under, 705.
gift, plea of, must allege improvements, 486.
gift, rule as to, 798.
gift, as color of title, 762, 778.
color of title cannot rest in, 762.
notice of pendency of suit, 587, n.
- PAROL DISCLAIMER, 869. See DISCLAIMER. does not forfeit estate for years, 869.
dispenses with notice to quit, 869, 887.
- PAROL NOTICE TO QUIT, 404. See NOTICE TO QUIT.
- PARSON, not liable to ejectment, 243.
- PARTICULAR ESTATES, how pleaded, 441. See COMPLAINT.
commencement of, must be shown, 441.
- PARTICULAR FACTS, reputation as to, 807.
the cases explained, 807, 812.
family facts, analogy to, 812.
- PARTICULAR words and phrases, in grants, 859.
description controls general, 458, 864, n.
- PARTICULARS, bill of, 464*a*. See BILL OF PARTICULARS OF BREACHES, 464*b*.
- PARTIES. See PLAINTIFFS; DEFENDANTS.
- (1.) Who may prosecute ejectment, 185–230. tenants in common inter sese, 276, 294.
tenants in common against third parties, 297–299.
joint tenants and coparceners inter sese, 295.
joinder of joint tenants against third parties, 302.
of coparceners, 303.
 - (2.) Vendor and vendee, 304, 326.
nature of vendor's interest, 309.
vendee against vendor, 319.
 - (3.) Mortgages and mortgagor, 327, 345.
mortgagee's rights at common law, 330.
ejectment by, prohibited, 331, 332.
in what States allowed, 333.

PARTIES—continued.

mortgagor against mortgagee in possession, 340-342, 345.

- (4.) Landlord and tenant, 346, 371, 372, 414. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; NOTICE TO QUIT.

- (5.) Parties defendant, 231, 266. See DEFENDANTS; UNITED STATES.

joinder of defendants, 238-241.

misjoinder, 188, 238, 494a.

- (6.) Means profits, parties plaintiff, 656.

plaintiff must acquire actual possession, 657.

parties defendant, 658, 659.

co-tenants, 660.

executors, 661.

PARTITION, action of, 166, 167.

consolidation, 638, n.

based on common and not disputed ownership, 166.

contingent interests in, 532a, n.

not a substitute for ejectment, 166.

title to land cannot be established in, 166.

statutory exceptions, 166, 532a.

reason one of policy, not want of power, 166.

adverse title must be disclosed to defeat, 167.

answers held bad, 167.

objection waived unless promptly urged, 166.

defective plea, 482.

possessory title will not support, 296, 717, n.

judgment in, 532a.

receiver in, 621a.

receiver cannot maintain, 227.

improvements awarded in, 711.

PARTITIONS, taking down is apparent waste, 363.PARTNERS, right of, to bring ejectment, 221, 303a.

usually hold as tenants in common, 221.

survivor may bring ejectment, 221.

cannot mortgage copartner's interest, 221.

real estate treated as personalty in equity, 221.

subject to partnership debts, 221, 303a.

PARTNERSHIP, real estate, 221, 303a. See PARTNERS.

dower in, 129.

PART PERFORMANCE, statute of frauds, 321a, 797.

as avoiding the statute, 321a, 797.

theory of the law, 797, 798.

rule governing, 321a.

PARTY WALLS, ejectment for lands covered by, 158.

maintainable in England, 158.

recovery not allowed in Pennsylvania, 158.

allowed in Maine, 158.

doubtful in New York, 158.

PARTY WALLS—continued.

practical objections to ejectment in such cases, 158.
removal of, by sheriff, 158.

PASSAGE ROOM, ejectment for, 106.

PASSAGE WAY, land recoverable subject to, 132.

PASTURAGE AND HERBAGE, ejectment for, 143.

the cases considered, 143.

PATENT, conclusive in ejectment, 184*a*, 887.

highest evidence of title, 785.

theory of the law, 887.

Wirth v. Branson, 888.

possessory title not available against, 891.

mandamus to compel issue of, 919.

PAYMENT OF TAXES and incumbrances, 688, 704.

PEACEABLE POSSESSION. See WRIT OF POSSESSION.

may be taken without writ of possession, 549, 657.

PECUNIARY LIMIT in Federal courts, 901.

appeals from Circuit Court, 904.

method of determining, 904.

jurisdictional amount, 907.

PEDIGREE and family facts, 812, 815.

general reputation as to, 815.

testimony as to, 812, 815.

PEDIS POSSESSIO, 732, 736. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

PENDENCY OF ACTION, 645. See LIS PENDENS.

parol notice of, 537, n.

PENDENTE LITE, rights of purchaser, 263.

buys at his peril, 263.

rule as to pleading, 495.

PENNSYLVANIA, ejectment for land covered with party wall not allowed, 158.

claim for improvements not the subject of ejectment, 159, 718.

guardian cannot sell ward's real estate, 114, 302.

executor with power of sale may bring ejectment, 210.

rule as to partnership real estate, 231.

ejectment by insolvent debtor, 224.

overseer of poor may bring ejectment, 230.

joinder of husband and wife as defendants, 255.

recovery by tenant in common, 300.

estoppel between vendor and vendee, 818.

attorney's authority to bring ejectment, 417.

coverture shown under general issue, 477.

practice as to verdicts, 499.

eviction of wife under writ against husband, 559, 560.

practice as to new trials, 602.

judgment by default, 530.

PENNSYLVANIA—continued.

when injunction will be granted, 628.
rule as to abatement, 689.

PEOPLE, ejectment by, 192, 800.

burden of proof, 800.
occupy advantageous position as plaintiffs, 193.
when they cannot recover, 193.
tenants cannot join with, 189.

PERISHABLE IMPROVEMENTS, cost of, not allowed, 702.PERMANENT ERECTIONS, pass with land, 106, 563, 690.PERMISSIVE POSSESSION not a basis for statute of limitations, 729.PERSONAL ACTIONS, advantages of, over real writs, 2, 7.

actions, judgments conclusive, 507.
rules governing, retained in ejectment, 54.
distinguished from real writs, 64a.

PERSONAL PROPERTY must be removed under writ of possession, 556, 557.

failure to remove does not invalidate execution of writ, 556.
partnership real estate treated as, 221.
probate conclusive as to, 205, n. tenancy in common of, 276, n.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES. See EXECUTOR; ADMINISTRATOR.

generally cannot recover land, 207.
nor freehold terms or leases, 209.
may recover estates for years, 208.
statutory changes, 210.
entitled to notice to quit, 399.

PETITION OF RIGHT, nature of, 244.

lies against the crown, 244.

PIER, is real estate, 101, n.PLACE OF TRIAL. See VENUE.

actions to recover realty are local, 465-475.
residence of the parties immaterial, 466.

PLAINTIFFS, 185-280. See PARTIES.

who may maintain ejectment, 185. difficulties of classification, 186.
statutory remedies cumulative, 186.

(1.) Joinder of plaintiffs.

right of possession must exist in all, 187.
effect of joinder of too many plaintiffs, 187.
rule in trespass by joint tenants, 187.
hostile claimants cannot join, 188.
executor cannot join with devisees under the will, 189.
widow cannot join with heirs in ejectment, 189.
widow, if joined, cannot recover alone, 189.
towns claiming as tenants cannot join in a writ of entry, 189.
the people and those claiming to be their tenants cannot unite to recover land, 189.

PLAINTIFFS—continued.

- reversioners must all join, 189, 212.
- remedy for misjoinder, 189.
- (2.) The sovereign.
 - ejectment by the king, 191.
 - analogy between State and king, 191.
 - ejectiones firmæ* in early times, 191.
 - right of a State to recover in ejectment, 192.
 - what the State must show, 192.
 - presumption as to ownership, 192.
 - when the people cannot recover, 193.
- (3.) Corporations may bring ejectment, 195.
 - may sue by comity in foreign States, 195.
 - ejectment by municipal corporations, 189, 267, 275.
- (4.) Infants as plaintiffs, 196.
 - ejectment by both infant and guardian, 196, 201.
 - security for costs, 197.
 - must disaffirm conveyance, 198, 451.
- (5.) Guardian.
 - in socage and general guardian may bring ejectment, 199.
 - may lease his ward's real estate, 199.
 - rule in Michigan, 199.
 - for nurture cannot maintain ejectment, 200.
 - by nature has no power to bring ejectment, 200.
 - ejectment by infant and guardian, 196, 201.
- (6.) Committee of a lunatic.
 - cannot maintain ejectment, 203.
 - not the trustee of an express trust, 203.
 - may maintain equitable action, 204.
- (7.) Heirs-at-law, ejectment by, 205.
 - heirs of trustee, 205.
 - hold as tenants in common, 205.
- (8.) Devisees, ejectment by, 206.
 - cannot join with executor, 189.
 - cannot bring suit to construe will, 168.
- (9.) Personal representatives.
 - cannot usually maintain ejectment, 207.
 - may recover estates for years, 208.
 - have no interest in freehold terms or leases, 209.
 - when they may sue, 211, 212.
- (10.) Reversioners, right to bring ejectment, 212-215.
 - may maintain ejectment after a breach of a condition subsequent, 212.
 - all the original grantors or their heirs must join, 212.
 - interest of, not a title, 212.
 - cannot eject life tenant for waste, 214.
 - nor for claiming the fee against the reversioner, 214.

PLAINTIFFS—continued.

nor for executing a deed purporting to convey the fee, 214.
English rule different, 214.

- (11.) Life tenant, may have ejectment, 215.
married woman may recover a life estate against her husband, 215.
tenant for years, right to maintain ejectment discussed, 216.
tenant at will, right to ejectment, 217.
tenant at sufferance cannot maintain ejectment, 218.
right to bring trespass, 218.
tenant by the curtesy may sue alone, 219.
- (12.) Married women, right of, to bring ejectment, 220.
may recover term for years, 220.
may sue for homestead, 220.
- (13.) Partners, in whose name ejectment should be brought, 221.
surviving partner may recover against one having no title, 221.
hold real property as tenants in common, 221.
- (14.) Trustees may recover in ejectment against cestuis que trustent, 222.
real actions in nature of ejectment must be brought in the name of, 222.
- (15.) Cestuis que trustent may maintain equitable title against stranger, 223.
remedy usually in equity, 223.
- (16.) Insolvents, right of, to bring ejectment, 224.
may sue for homestead, 224.
- (17.) Additional illustrations, 225-230.
- (18.) Co-tenants, 276, 296.

See CO-TENANTS; TENANTS IN COMMON; OUSTER.

actual ouster must be shown, 277.
tenants in common against third parties—joinder, 297-299.
joint tenants, proof of ouster required, 295.
joint tenants against third parties, 302.
coparceners inter sese, 295.
against third parties, 303.

- (19.) Vendor and vendee, 304, 326. See VENDOR AND VENDEE.
- (20.) Mortgagee and Mortgagor, 327, 345.
- (21.) Landlord and tenant, 346, 371.

PLAINTIFF'S TITLE, proof in trespass to try title, 82.

PLAINTIFF'S TITLE AND EVIDENCE, 782-828.

limits of the treatise, 782.
sources of title, 783.
divesting the government of title, 784.
patents—highest evidence of title, 785.
presumption of grant, 786.
no fixed rule as to length of time, 787.
difference between presumption and prescription, 788.
missing links, 789.
legal and equitable titles, 790.
strength of plaintiff's title, 791.

PLAINTIFF'S TITLE AND EVIDENCE—continued.

- facts entitling plaintiff to recover, 792.
- title by execution, 793.
- title by judicial record, 794.
- title by relation, 795.
- ejectment founded on a forfeiture, 796.
- title by part performance—statute of frauds, 797.
- title by parol gift, 798.
- title by estoppel, 798*a*.
- order of proof, 799.
- burden of proof, 800.
- right to begin and reply, 801.
- production of title papers, 802.
- common source of title, 803.
- evidence of reputation, 804.
- reputation as to private boundaries, 805.
- conclusions from the cases, 806.
- particular facts, 807.
- declaration of deceased owner as to boundary, 808.
- statements of deceased grantor, 809.
- statements qualifying possession—res gesta, 810.
- declarations as part of the res gesta, 811.
- pedigree and family facts, 812.
- ante litem motam*, 813.
- declarant's relationship must be established by other testimony, 814.
- pedigree, 815.
- age, 816.
- presumption of death, 817.
- ancient deeds and wills, 818.
- ancient surveys and maps, 819.
- lost deeds, 820.
- office copies of deeds, 821.
- delivery of deed, 822.
- recitals in deed, 823.
- parol evidence to vary written instrument, 824.
- transactions with deceased persons, 825.
- seals, 826.
- abstracts, 827.
- unofficial records, 828.

PLEA, 476, 495. See ANSWER; NOT GUILTY.

PLEADINGS. See COMPLAINT; ANSWER; CONSTRUCTION.

- strictness of, in early practice, 2, 3, 5.
- Sir Matthew Hale's views, 5.
- effect of strictness of pleading on real writs, 9.
- limitations, agreement as to, 753*a*.
- advantages of personal actions, 7, 9, 10.

PLEADINGS—continued.

- influence of practice in trover and assumpsit, 11.
 - early pleadings in ejectment, 37, 53, 56, 422-424.
 - (1.) Pleadings in real actions, 2, 3, 3, n., 5, 429, 430, 654.
 - seizin must be averred, 429.
 - declaration in writ of entry in Maine, 430.
 - claim for mesne profits, 654.
 - (2.) Modern complaint, 425, 431-454. See COMPLAINT.
 - name of the parties, 426.
 - written pleadings required, 427.
 - how construed, 428, 428, n.
 - facts to be pleaded, 425, 425, n.
 - form and substance of, 428.
 - in Federal courts, 873, 881.
 - pleadings alike in the various actions, 92.
 - complaint must aver possession by defendant, 231, 236, 432.
 - must charge wrongful and unlawful withholding of the lands, 433.
 - allegations of title and seizin, 429, 430, 434, 446, 448.
 - pleading tax title, 491.
 - pleading forfeiture, 447, 447, n.
 - rules as to variance, 436, 437.
 - prayer for relief, 454a.
 - amendments, 436, 454b.
 - (3.) Nature of estates, how set forth, 56, 438, 439.
 - general form and character of estate must be averred, 439.
 - evidence not to be alleged, 439, 444, 445.
 - pleading fee simple, 440, 442.
 - particular estates, 441.
 - claim for mesne profits, 654, 655.
 - improvement claim, 714.
 - estoppel, 855.
 - the rules discussed, 855.
 - specific chain of title, 443, 444.
 - muniment of title not to be pleaded, 444, 445.
 - effect of averment of possession, 435.
 - evidence not to be pleaded, 445, 492b.
 - joint title, 449.
 - (4.) Answer, 476, 495. See ANSWER.
 - equitable defenses, 485.
 - must be distinctly pleaded, 486, 487.
 - elements of, 487.
 - statute of limitations, 482.
 - pleading special title, 492.
- POMEROY (PROFESSOR), statement of, as to modern ejectment, 76, n.
- rule of pleading stated by, 425, n.
 - views of, as to legal and equitable titles, 790.
 - as to fraud in estoppel, 845.

POOL, ejectment for, 120.

POSSESSIO CONTRA OMNES VALET PRÆTER EUM CUI JUS SIT POSSESSIONIS, 717.

POSSESSION. See ADVERSE POSSESSION; COLOR OF TITLE; WRIT OF POSSESSION; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

right of, essential to support ejectment, 100, 185, 187, 712, 792.

interference with, no ground of ejectment, 98.

raises a presumption of right, 696, 717.

presumption may be rebutted, 717.

right of, must exist in all the plaintiffs, 187.

may be taken by co-tenant by stealth, 276.

judgment for, must conform to proof, 237, 525.

between vendor and vendee, 804-806.

vendee not entitled to, 804.

admitted by interposing general denial, 479.

when evidence of important, 717.

of part of the land, 237.

plaintiff must regain to claim mesne profits, 657.

not necessary to execute an habere, 549, 657.

of one co-tenant is possession of all, 276.

complaint must charge possession by defendant, 432.

party in possession must be defendant, 231, 234, 236, 432.

estoppel between landlord and tenant aimed at, 353.

right of, tried in ejectment, 94.

not tried in forcible entry proceedings, 94.

of tenant subordinate to landlord, 353.

inauguration of adverse possession, 353.

two possessions, 717.

equal equities, possession prevails, 717.

to sustain trespass, 720, n.

casual occupancy is not, 722, n.

of State accompanies title, 792.

declarations affecting, 808, 810, 811.

(1.) Possession as evidence of title, 717.

is a low degree of title, 717.

prima facie evidence of seizin in fee, 717.

effect of pleading, 435.

raises a presumption of fact which may be rebutted, 717.

possessor presumed to have acquired title of sovereign, 717.

tenancy in common of naked possession, 296.

(2.) Possession alone sufficient against trespassers or intruders, 718-720.

the rule applicable to writs of entry, trespass, ejectment and trespass to try title, 718.

good against all the world, 717.

(3.) Character of the possession, 718-720.

proofs sufficient and insufficient to constitute possession, 719, 720.

POSSESSION—continued.

- possession which will warrant ejectment against defendant not the test, 721.
- possession considered insufficient to support ejectment, 722.
- (4.) Distinction between prior possession and adverse possession, 719, 723.
 - the cases considered, 723.
 - distinction denied in Missouri, 723.
 - not recognized in California, 723.
- (5.) Possession as notice of possessor's rights, 723a.
 - character of such possession, 723a.
 - must be open and visible, 723a.
- (6.) Constructive possession, 723a, 723a, n.
 - not notice of possessor's rights, 723a.
 - defined, 723a, n.
 - must be distinct, 723a, n.
- (7.) Statutory suit to quiet title, 723c.
 - nature of possession to sustain, 723c.
 - must be actual, 723c.
- (8.) Possession and paper title, 723d.
 - rule of the cases, 723d.

POSSESSORY ACTION, ejectment is, 98, n., 100.

- title will not support partition, 296.
- title, not available against patent title, 891.

POST LITEM MOTAM, declarations inadmissible, 813.

- as to deeds, 823.

PRACTICE. See ATTORNEY'S AUTHORITY; PARTIES; COMPLAINT; ANSWER; VERDICT; JUDGMENT; WRIT OF POSSESSION; EJECTMENT; REAL ACTIONS; FEDERAL COURTS.

- early practice in ejectment, 27, 28, 31, 35, 37, 38.
- in real actions, 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, 73, 75, 77, 79.
- in Federal courts, 870-919.
- as to granting statutory new trials, 576, 609.
- introduced by Rolle, 35.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF, 454a.

- when not conclusive, 169, n.

PRECISION in pleading in real actions, 3.

- pleading forfeiture, 447.

PRE-EMPTOR of swamp lands, ejectment by, 230.PREMISES, how described in the complaint, 455, 464.PRESCRIPTION AND LIMITATIONS historically considered, 724.

- mixed question of law and fact, 729, n.
- theory of prescription, 726.
- distinction between, 726.
- right to fishery acquired by, 142, n.
- against the State, 753a.
- municipal corporations, 753a.
- disabilities, 753a-753f.

- PRESUMPTION of title in the State, 192. of title in occupant, 192, 717.
may be rebutted, 717, when not indulged, 787, 788.
that possessor holds by right, 91, 282, 372, 694, 749.
of a grant, 786.
of missing links, 789.
of grant not indulged in favor of squatter, 241.
of grant not conclusive, 787.
of ouster from lapse of time, 289, 750.
that tenant holds under landlord, 351, 352, 751, n.
how overcome, 751, n.
of law as to ouster not indulged, 289.
and prescription distinguished, 788.
that attorney had authority to bring ejectment, 415.
of grant of incorporeal right, 724, 726. of death, 817.
- PRIMA FACIE evidence of title, possession is, 717.
not a rule of pleading, 435.
- PRIOR POSSESSION, 717, 723. See POSSESSION. rules as to, 717, n.
distinguished from adverse possession, 723.
- PRIVATE BOUNDARIES, reputation as to, 805, 806. cases discussed, 805.
conclusions from, 806.
- PRIVATE WAY, land recoverable subject to, 132.
- PRIVILEGE of landing place not the basis of ejectment, 148.
appurtenant to land, recovered therewith, 102, 102, n., 527, 676.
- PRIVITY OF ESTATE required to render notice to quit necessary, 374, 375.
- PROBATE OF WILL, reviewed by jury, 205, n. conclusive as to personalty, 205, n.
equity will not set aside, 205, n.
in foreign state, 467a.
after concealment, 838.
- PROCEDURE in Federal courts, 870-919.
- PRODUCTION of title papers, 464b, 802.
when enforced, 802.
- PROFIT A PRENDRE not recoverable in ejectment, 148.
fishery is, 142.
coal mine not considered, 109.
- PROJECTING foundation, when it constitutes a disseizin, 157.
eaves or cornices not a disseizin, 156.
- PROMISE or assurance basis of estoppel, 844.
- PROOF, order of, 799.
discretionary, 799. burden of, 282, 447, n., 800.
- PROSPECT, right to, not sufficient to sustain ejectment, 150.

PROVISIONAL REMEDIES, 610-632.

- provisional relief at common law, 611.
- only obtainable by bill in chancery, 611.
- reforms effected in modern procedure, 611.
- forms of provisional relief, 612.
- governed by lex fori, 610, n.
- effect of lis pendens, 621b, 645.
- (1.) Receivers, 612-621.
 - appointment pendente lite rests in sound discretion of the court, 613.
 - reluctance of the courts to interfere, 614.
 - plain case must be presented, 613.
 - destructive and malicious waste, ground for, 616.
 - some equitable principle must be shown, 616, 618.
 - subject-matter must be in danger, 613.
 - rule in New York, 614, 615.
 - receiver not appointed before judgment, 615.
 - theory of the decisions, 614.
 - practice in Georgia, 617, 619.
 - practice in Illinois, 618.
 - in California, 621.
 - the cases criticised, 618, 632.
 - receiver after judgment, 619.
 - defendant's right to move for a receiver, 620.
- (2.) Injunctions against trespass or waste pending ejectment, 622, 632.
 - relief of this character more generally favored, 622.
 - the practice considered, 622, 627.
 - ordinary uses of the land not restrained, 625.
 - when an injunction will be allowed, 622-624, 628.
 - rule as to cutting timber, 622, 628.
 - malicious and destructive waste, 626.
 - practice in Pennsylvania, 628.
 - mortgages against mortgagor, 629.
- (3.) Executions against the person and orders of arrest, 630.
 - the early practice in New York, 630.
 - execution against the body for costs not granted, 630.
 - order of arrest upheld in statutory action for damages for trespass for forcible entry, 630.
 - relief of this character not generally given in ejectment, 630.
 - execution against the person allowed in Wisconsin, 630.
- (4.) Reasons for granting and withholding provisional relief considered, 631, 632.
 - objections to premature inspection of the title, 631.
 - hardships incident to withholding provisional relief, 632.
- (5.) Receivers for co-tenants, 621a.
 - when appointed, 621a.
 - English rule, 621a.
 - in partition, 621a.

- PUBLIC places, ejectment for, 267 275. squares, ejectment for, 271.
easement, ejectment based upon, 139, 267, 268, 270, 271. See EASEMENT; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. distinguished from private easement, 140, 161.
no adverse possession, 753*a*. generally acquire an easement, 267.
improvement, claim for improvements, 705.
and private boundaries, 804-806.
- PUBLIC DOCUMENTS, authenticated copies admissible, 820.
- PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE, 495. See ANSWER.
plea of, when allowed, 495.
- PURCHASE-MONEY, suit for, on rescission, 311:
when tender of, unnecessary, 314.
lien for, when unrefunded, 323.
- PURCHASER may defalk improvements, 706.
pendente lite, 263.
buys at his peril, 263.
not entitled to be made defendant, 263.
liability of, for mesne profits, 263, 658.
bound by the proceedings, 658.
rule as to pleading, 495.
of outstanding title, 291, 292.
taking title by adverse possession, 727.
- QUANTITY, least important element in description, 864, n.
yields to monuments, course and distance, 864, n.
- QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. See TRESPASS. ejectment cannot be substituted for, 93, n., 178.
cannot be united with ejectment, 93, n., 641.
for pasturage, 143.
- QUARE EJECIT INFRA TERMINUM, 15. provisions of the writ, 16.
against whom the writ lay, 17, 21, 22.
- QUARE IMPEDIT is a local action, 465.
- QUARRY defined, 111.
ejectment for, 111, 150.
adverse possession of, 733, n.
distinction between, and mine, 111.
right to work, belongs to owner of fee, 134.
- QUESTION OF FACT. See JURY. must be determined by jury, 170; 496.
ouster is, 281.
disclaimer is, 388.
- QUESTION OF STATE title to land, 896.
- QUIET TITLE, action to, 154.
nature of, explained, 46, n.

QUIET TITLE—continued.

- ejectment not a substitute for, 154.
- statutory new trial in Indiana, 586.
- judgment in, 582c.
- possession to sustain, 723c.
- specific performance converted into, 180.
- object of statute of limitations, 760, n.

QUITCLAIM DEED, grantee of, may bring ejectment, 280.
basis of improvement claim, 697.

QUO WARRANTO and not ejectment to establish title to office, 184a.

RAILS, are real estate, 101, n.

RAILWAY, injunction to stop running of train, when not allowed, 174.

- ejectment against, 135-137, 250.
- ejectment by, 271.
- wrongful use of lands by, not protected, 186.
- nature of, defined, 690, n.
- rule as to ameliorations, 690, n.
- license to use land by, 834.

REAL ACTIONS, 2, 3, 5, 8, 64-66, 79. See EJECTMENT.

- ancient real writs, 2, 64.
- foundation of, 64.
- only land recovered, 64, 646.
- difficulties of selecting proper writ, 2.
- strictness of pleading and practice, 3, 5.
- power of amendment reluctantly exercised, 3.
- influence upon, of forcible entry statutes, 4.
- effect of practice in trover and assumpsit, 11.
- abuses in early practice, 6.
- abandonment of real writs, 8.
- adoption of ejectment, 26.
- influences leading to the change, 9.

(1.) Classification, 65.

- actions droitural, 65.
- actions possessory, 65.
- writs ancestral droitural, 65.

(2.) Characteristics, 66.

- writs of different grades, 66.
- inferior writs not an estoppel upon writs of higher degree, 66, 67, 509.
- each writ final for its own purpose, 67.

(3.) Writs of right, 69.

- most important of the real writs, 69.
- resorted to by the Saxons, 69.
- only lie for freehold, 69.
- not for incorporeal hereditaments, 69.
- judgment final, 67, 69, 509.

REMEDIES—continued.

- legal remedy cannot be changed by amendment to equitable, 182.
- equitable actions cannot be transformed to ejectment, 179.
- actions to determine conflicting claims changed to ejectment, 181.
- writs of entry and forcible entry changed to ejectment, 188.
- legal and equitable relief in same action, 169, 639.
- election of remedies, 307.
- to establish boundaries, 865.
- statutory, as to boundaries, 865, 866.
- equitable, as affecting boundaries, 865.

REMOVAL STATUTES, State to Federal courts, 912.

- apply to ejectment cases, 912.

RENT, basis of mesne profits, 665, 666.

- as between co-tenants, 621*a*, 660.

RENTAL VALUE, mesne profits measured by, 62, 665, 666.RENT RESERVED, not the basis of ejectment, 370.

- unless right of re-entry is reserved, 180, 370.
- receipt of, without knowledge of forfeiture, not a waiver, 371.
- judgment against government agent negatives implied promise to pay, 540.
- demand of, 371.

REPAIRS, not improvements in Massachusetts, 699.

- liability between co-tenants, 711.

REPLEVIN, in the cepit, 683.

- only maintainable when trespass would lie, 683.
- title to land held adversely not tested in, 683.
- mesne profits proper action, 683.

REPLY to affirmative defense, 493.

- right to, 801.
- incident to right to begin, 801.

REPOSE OF TITLE, limitations intended to accomplish, 727, 727, n.REPUTATION, evidence of, 804–806.

- as to public matters, 804.
- excluded as to private matters, 804.
- as to private boundaries, 805.
- conclusions from the cases, 806.

REQUIREMENT of good faith, 778*a*.

- as to adverse possession, 775–778*a*.
- as to infringements, 694.

RES ADJUDICATA, 506–545, 638–639. See JUDGMENT.

- judgment in trespass binding in ejectment, 582.

RESCISSION OF CONTRACT must be in toto, 311.

- cannot be repudiated and enforced, 311.
- offer of title at trial good defense to bill to rescind, 311.
- notice of, when necessary, 312.

RESERVATION IN DEED OF RIGHT OF ENTRY, 99.

- will support ejectment, 99.

- RES GESTÆ, declarations as part of, 811, 812.
statements of deceased grantor, 809.
statements qualifying possession, 810.
recitals in deeds, 828.
- RESIDENCE OF THE PARTIES, not material in ejectment, 466. change of, in Federal courts, 910.
- RESTITUTION, writ or order of, 60, 568, 575. See WRIT OF POSSESSION.
when allowed, 60, 575. order for, in New York, 568, 575.
of mesne profits, 689a.
injunction in order for, not proper, 568.
applicant must make clear case, 575.
by infant, 198.
- RESTRICTIONS AND EASEMENTS, not recoverable in writ of entry, 102, n.
- RETURN DAY of writ of possession, 551.
not usually required in the writ, 551.
writ may be executed after, 551.
- REVERSION, ejectment by assignee of, 212.
- REVERSIONERS, right to bring ejectment, 212-215. cannot have partition, 532a, n.
all original grantors or heirs must join, 189, 212.
interest of, is not a title, 212.
remedy for waste, 363, n. cannot eject life tenant for waste, or claiming the fee, 214.
statute does not run against, 751, n.
- REVIEWING STATE JUDGMENT, Federal question, 902.
- RHODE ISLAND, mortgagor regarded as tenant at sufferance, 335.
ejectment by execution purchaser, 335.
- RIGHT OF WAY not the basis of ejectment, 148.
to a road not recoverable, 148. effect of transfer of, 132, n.
- RIGHT TO BEGIN and reply, 801.
- RIGHT, WRIT OF, 67, 69, 509. See REAL ACTIONS; WRIT OF RIGHT.
most important of the real writs, 69.
evidence in, 69.
judgment final, 69, 509.
- RIGHTS APPURTENANT TO LAND recoverable in ejectment, 102, 102, n., 527, 676.
- RINGBARKING is an improvement, 699.
- RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS, ejectment by, 119.
- RIVER, island in thread of, 124, n.
land bounded by, 857.
when bed of stream is conveyed, 857.
- RIVULET OR POOL, ejectment for, 120, 149.
- ROAD, land not touching upon, recovered in ejectment, 127, 572.
land bounded by, 857, 858.

ROAD—continued.

land subject to right to maintain, recovered in ejectment, 181, 182.
abandoned road-bed, recovered by owner, 188.

ROLLE, CHIEF JUSTICE, practice introduced by, in ejectment, 35.

ROOM, ejectment for, 105, 155.

when identity of is lost, not recoverable, 155.

recoverable without grant of the land, 105.

ROSS, History by, land owning among the Germans, 724, n.

ROVING POSSESSION, is not adverse possession, 739.

RULE OF PROPERTY in Federal courts, 870.

RULES OF PLEADING AND PRACTICE in Federal courts, 873.

RUNNING WATER, restraining interference with, 149.

restored by mandatory injunction, 149.

SALT BOILERY, ejectment for, 126.

grant of, passes the soil, 126.

SAW MILL AND SITE, 675.

income of, included in mesne profits, 675.

SCHOOL HOUSE, condition against, valid, 213.

SCROLLS used as seals by statute, 826.

SEA, land swallowed by, title to, 123.

bed of, 121, 122.

shifting interest in, 123.

shore, grants on, 860.

SEALS, effect of, 826.

presumption as to, 826.

scrolls used as, 826.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE, as to deeds, 820, 821.

unofficial records, 828.

SECOND TRIALS, 576-609. See STATUTORY NEW TRIALS.

what title tried on, 597.

must be in same court, 606.

SECRET POSSESSION not the basis of adverse possession, 735.

SECTIONS OF TOWNSHIP, lands described by, 462.

SECURITY FOR COSTS, by infant, 197.

non-resident lessor, 197.

SEIZIN. See COMPLAINT.

right of possession follows, 446.

but one actual seizin of an estate, 728.

not usually awarded by judgment in ejectment, 510.

rule as to pleading, 429, 439, 446.

incorporeal hereditaments not capable of, 146.

SELECTION OF REMEDIES, 162.

reasons for mistakes, 184.

the cases reviewed, 162-184.

SEQUESTRATION OF RENTS, title of receiver, 227.

- SERVANTS OR EMPLOYEES not liable to ejectment, 242.
act in another's right, 242.
rule in New York, 242, n.
of corporations, entry by, 94.
- SERVICE of notice to quit, 412. See NOTICE TO QUIT.
how served, 413.
how proved, 414.
- SET OFF, widow's dower not subject to, 489.
improvements against mesne profits, 690, 691.
between vendee and vendor, 322.
- SEVERAL DEFENSES may be set up, 830.
- SHERIFF. See WRIT OF POSSESSION, duties of, in executing writ of possession, 158, 555, 557, 561, 565-567.
has no judicial powers, 566.
responsibility of, 158, 565.
may exact bond of indemnity, 565, 566.
burden upon, to excuse non-execution of writ, 561, 567.
must act on his own responsibility, 158.
- SHORE of river, as boundary, 858. of sea, grants on, 860.
- SHORE LINE divisions must be settled in equity in New Jersey, 151.
- SOLVENT defendant, receiver denied, 615.
- SOURCES OF TITLE, 783.
right of discovery, 783.
Indian rights, 783.
title in the King, 783.
titles in United States, 783.
- SOUTH CAROLINA, introduction of trespass to try title in, 81.
reasons for the change, 85.
aversion to real actions, 86.
trespass to try title abolished in, 87.
statutory real actions substituted, 87.
- SPECIAL PLEA, necessary to deny possession, 479.
may be interposed, though defenses were available under general issue, 492.
- SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, when not maintainable, 165, 306.
statutory new trial not granted in, 595.
vendee may require, as to part, 321.
changed to action to quiet title, 180.
defense of unmarketable title, 841.
- SQUATTERS, ejectment against, 241.
rule as to joinder of, 241.
possession of, not the basis to presume a grant, 241.
- STABLE, condition against, valid, 218.
- STANDING PLACE, right to, will not support ejectment, 98.
- STATE, ejectment by, 192.

STATE—continued.

- title to lands in another State, 192, n.
- trespass to try title by, 191.
- presumptively the owner of land within its borders, 192.
- statute recognizing equitable title, 879.
- no adverse possession against, 753*a*.
- owns beds of tide waters, 121.
- may regulate fishery, 142, n.
- convey escheated lands, 192, n.
- law of, governs real estate, 467*a*.
- law binding in Federal courts, 870.

STATEMENTS of deceased grantor, 809.

- qualifying possession, res gesta, 810.

STATIONARY, adverse possession must be, 739.

STATUE, when real estate, 101, n.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS, lease void as to, 879.

- conveyance void as to, 321*a*, 344.
- contract void as to, will not sustain claim for improvements, 708.
- part performance, 321*a*, 797.
- possession and improvements, 321*a*.
- sale of mining claim, 321*a*.
- and estoppel, 846.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. See ADVERSE POSSESSION; CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION; COLOR OF TITLE; ANSWER; DISABILITIES.

- rule as to pleading in ejectment, 482.
- the subject discussed, 482.
- in mesne profits, 686.
- in equity, 917.
- adverse possession under, 724, 753.
- historically considered, 724.
- as to co-tenants, 276, 753*f*.
- applicable to real actions, 725.
- theory of prescription and limitations, 726.
- purpose and policy of, 727.
- disabilities, 753*a*–753*f*.

STATUTORY NEW TRIALS, 576–609. See NEW TRIALS.

STATUTORY REMEDIES, cumulative, 186.

- as to boundaries, 866.
- nature of, 866.

STAY OF NEW TRIAL until payment of costs, 51, 197, n., 598, n.

STEALING TITLE, adverse possession is, 727, n.

STEALTH, adverse possession not acquired by, 730, n.

STIPULATION waiving statutory new trial valid, 604.

STORY, views of, as to statute of limitations, 727, n.

STRANGERS not entitled to statutory new trial, 601.

STREET NUMBERS, description by, 460.

STREETS, ejectment for, 161, 267, 271, 275.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

rights of the owner of the fee, 184.

occupied by railroad company recoverable in ejectment, 185.

adverse possession, 753*a*.

land bounded by, 857, 858.

STRENGTH OF PLAINTIFF'S TITLE, 791.

meaning of the rule, 791.

not applicable to possessory actions, 791.

SUBORDINATE TO LANDLORD, possession of tenant, 852, 853.

SUBROGATION, illustrations, 291, 688, 704.

SUBSEQUENT DISABILITIES, tacking, 753*d*.

SUCCEEDING TRUSTEES, substituted in ejectment, 223.

SUITS to quiet title explained, 46, n.

statutory new trials in, 586.

specific performance converted into, 180.

judgment in, 532*c*.

possession to sustain, 723*c*.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS, ejectment prior to introduction of, 346, 348.

title not involved in, 849.

statutes not considered, 849.

not given to purchaser at tax sale, 164.

by administrator, 164.

not proper when title is in issue, 164.

SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER, 495. See ANSWER.

SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT, 454*c*.

object of, 454*c*.

SUPREME COURT of the United States, practice as to writ of error, 175.

defendants may sue out writ of error together, 175.

defendants may separately apply for a stay, 175.

original jurisdiction of, 894.

SURVEY, ordered, in trespass to try title, 91.

ancient, as evidence, 819.

under order of the court, 819.

TACKING DISABILITIES, 753*d*.

TACKING POSSESSIONS, 746-748. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

term "tacking of possessions" criticised, 746.

possession must be continued in the same right, 746.

unconnected possessions cannot be tacked, 746.

what possessions tacked, 747.

landlord and tenant, 747.

ancestor and heir, 747.

the test stated, 747.

various illustrations, 748.

disabilities, 753*d*.

- TANGIBLE, subject-matter of ejectment must be, 97.
- TASTE, expenditures as matter of, 701.
- TAX DEED, grantees of, may be made defendant, 235, 257.
- TAXES AND ASSESSMENTS, payment of, by disseizor, 688.
rule as to allowance, 688.
should be paid by life tenant out of income, 214, n.
as to co-tenants, 291.
- TAX TITLE, rule as to pleading, 491.
not enforced in summary proceeding, 164.
will not support claim for improvements, 708.
owner of fee may defeat, 836.
mortgagee in possession cannot acquire, 843; n.
owner of fee may defeat, when irregular, 836.
- TELEGRAPH POLES, ejectment for maintaining, 138.
- TEMPORARY TRESPASS, not sufficient to maintain forcible entry, 94.
- TENANCY by the entirety in New York, 295, n.
- TENANT, 346, 371. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; NOTICE TO QUIT. cannot dispute landlord's title, 351, 352.
may show that landlord's title has expired, 358.
disclaimer by, 383.
holding over, entitled to notice to quit, 380.
notice to quit to landlord, 400. See NOTICE TO QUIT.
at sufferance, cannot bring ejectment, 218.
rule as to notice to quit, 384, 385.
not entitled to notice at common law, 385.
at will cannot bring ejectment, 217.
has no estate which he can convey, 217.
adverse possession by, 780, n., 751.
writ of entry against, 258.
by the curtesy, right of, to bring ejectment, 219.
for years, may bring ejectment, 216.
imperfect remedies of, in early times, 14, 18.
of the freehold, writ of entry against, 233.
all tenants should be defendants, 238.
- TENANT AT SUFFERANCE, notice to quit, 385.
- TENANT AT WILL, notice to quit, 384.
as defendant, 258.
waste by, 364.
constructively tenant from year to year, 384.
- TENANTS IN COMMON. See CO-TENANTS; OUSTER. of personal property, 276, n.
- (1.) Ejectment between co tenants, 276-296.
trespass between, 157, 286.
possession of one is possession of all, 276, 280.
actual ouster must be shown, 277, 286.
must be averred in complaint, 453.

TENANTS IN COMMON—continued.

- ouster the principal question, 276.
 - how distinguished from ouster in other cases, 278-280, 750.
 - more difficult of proof, 278.
 - burden of proof, 283.
 - evidence of ouster must be positive, 281.
 - ouster must be found by jury, 281.
 - forcible expulsion not necessary, 283.
 - effect of claim of the fee, 284.
 - denial must be unequivocal, 284.
 - denial of title by answer, 283.
 - presumption of ouster from lapse of time, 289, 750.
 - notice to quit, 409. See OUSTER.
 - (2.) Against third parties, 297-299, 301.
 - common law rule, 297.
 - not allowed to join, 297.
 - rule in America different, 297, 298.
 - towns claiming as, cannot join, 189.
 - one or all must sue in New York, 299.
 - authority of attorney to sue for, 419.
 - what interest recovered, 300, 301.
 - (3.) Title of co-tenants, 291-294.
 - sustain a relation of trust, 276.
 - cannot dispute common title, 291.
 - lien for incumbrances paid by one, 291.
 - outstanding title, purchase of, 292-294.
 - esteemed to be for the common benefit, 291-293.
 - limitations upon the rule, 292, 293.
 - limited in some cases to titles acquired under same instrument, 293.
 - the distinction considered, 293.
 - may assert adverse title, 292, 361.
 - (4.) Writ of possession.
 - execution of, between tenants in common, 570.
 - defendant not expelled, 570.
 - plaintiff put in possession with the defendant, 570.
 - (5.) Means profits.
 - rule between co-tenants, 660.
 - recovery limited to period of adverse occupancy, 660.
 - not for periods when possession was not adverse, 660.
 - (6.) Improvements.
 - rule as to, 711.
 - made without assent, 711.
 - imperfect statutory regulations, 711, 711, n.
- TENDER of deed by vendor, 318.
 - objections to form of deed, must be stated, 313.
 - when not necessary, 314.

TENDER—continued.

- of payment by vendee, when not necessary, 314, n.
- unnecessary when vendor has broken agreement, 314, n.

TENEMENT, signifies land as well as house, 104, n.TENNESSEE, executor with power of sale cannot sue for mesne profits, 210.

- school commissioners may bring ejectment, 230.
- ejectment for lands in several counties, 468.
- peculiar equity jurisdiction, 169.

TERRITORIAL MINING CLAIM, 905.TEST of waste, 368.TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, question of, raised in ejectment, 205, n.TEXAS, trespass to try title in, 91.

- exclusive remedy to test title in that State, 91.
- various proceedings in, 91.
- pleadings liberally construed, 428.
- general allegations of ownership sufficient, 442.
- plea to jurisdiction too late after plea to the merits, 470.
- special plea does not qualify general denial, 481.
- "not guilty" admits all defenses but the statute of limitations, 483.
- reply to affirmative defense, 498.
- foreign judgment, effect of, 542.
- form of judgment, 543.
- construction of statutes awarding new trials, 584.
- who considered bona fide occupant, 695.
- defendant may prove deed a mortgage, 338.
- when holder of paramount title may be brought in, 260.
- title remains in vendor until purchase-money is paid, 308.
- co-tenant may recover entire estate, 801.
- damages, 91.

TIDE LANDS may be recovered in ejectment, 122.

- are lands covered and uncovered by the tide, 122.
- State owns bed of tide waters, 121.

TIN BOUNDS, ejectment for, 110.

- description of, 110.
- not a mere easement, 110.
- not recoverable eo nomine, 110, 150.

TITHES, ejectment for, 145.TITLE, plaintiff must have present subsisting title, 95, 185.

- strength of, 791.
- mere license will not support ejectment, 98.
- right of possession must be of some duration and exclusive, 98.
- right to a standing place insufficient, 98.
- reservation of right of entry in deed will support ejectment, 99.
- owner of easement not vested with title to soil, 146.
- legal title usually prevails, 58.

See PLAINTIFF'S TITLE; EVIDENCE.

TITLE—continued.

rule the same in the various actions, 92.
claim of, to warrant ejectment, 161.
generally, 185-230.
cloud on, 154, 154, n.
lease, entry and ouster, 34.
investigated on second trial, 597.
defective, doubtful, or unmarketable, 841.
setting up several titles, 890.
in Federal courts, 870-919.
equitable title will not support ejectment bill, 168-171, 886.
conflicting titles not tried in assumpsit, 176.
trial of title in condemnation proceedings, 177.
title of receivers, 227. effect of payment of damages, 177.
title admitted by answer, 490.
which will support improvement claim, 708.
after-acquired title, judgment not conclusive upon, 541.
after-acquired, does not support ejectment, 185.
must be somewhere, 728, n.
by execution, 798.
by judicial record, 794.
by relation, 795, 889.
by act of Congress, 914.
by part performance, 321a, 797.
by parol gift, 798.
by estoppel, 798a, 842-855.
by patent, 887, 888.
under United States, 890.
under treaty, 908.
by confiscation, 913.

See OUTSTANDING TITLE.(1.) Of municipal corporations.

vested with fee, 267.
public easement, 267, 268.
rights incident to, enlarged in modern cases, 270.
have title to support ejectment for streets and public places, 271, 275.
adverse possession, 753a.

(2.) Tenants in common.

under the same instrument, 293, 294.
common title cannot be disputed, 291.

See TENANTS IN COMMON.(3.) Vendor and vendee.

title of vendor, 308, 309.
nature of the relationship, 315.
rules governing landlord and tenant not applicable, 816.

See VENDOR AND VENDEE.

TITLE—continued.(4.) Mortgages and mortgagor.

- mortgagee's interest at common law, 880.
- modern practice, 881.
- mortgage regarded as a lien, 881, 882.
- title after default, 886.

See MORTGAGEE AND MORTGAGOR.

(5.) Landlord and tenant.

- ejectment between, 846-871.
- landlord's proof, 850.
- estoppel against the tenant, 851.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

(6.) Possession.

- title by, 717.
- is low degree of title, 717.
- possession evidence of title, 717.
- prior possession sufficient against trespasser, 718.
- character of the possession, 719-722.
- distinguished from adverse possession, 728.

(7.) Adverse possession.

- general principles of possession, seizin and ouster, 728.
- is a perfect title, 727, 727, n.
- what constitutes adverse possession in general, 729-731.
- entry and ouster, effect and requisites of, 730.
- possession must be actual, 732.
- must be open and notorious, 735.
- continuous, 737-739.
- hostile, 749.
- exclusive, 752.
- must be accompanied with an adverse intent, 754.
- intent the essence of adverse possession, 755. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

(8.) Color of title.

- defined, 761.
- instances of what held to be color of title, 780.
- what held insufficient to constitute, 781. See COLOR OF TITLE.

(9.) Of Indians, mere right of occupancy, 194, 788.

- how vested in government, 194.
- how acquired by settlers, 788.

(10.) Plaintiff's title and evidence, 782-828.

- sources of title, 783.
- patents, 785, 887.
- presumption of grant, 786, 787.
- legal and equitable, 790.
- strength of plaintiff's title, 791.
- by execution, 793.
- judicial record, 794.

TITLE—continued.

relation, 795.
part performance, 797.
parol gift, 798.
estoppel, 798a.

TITLE PAPERS, production of, 464b, 802.

TORT cannot be waived to try title to land in assumpsit, 176.
actions of, joinder of too many plaintiffs ground for nonsuit, 187.
ejectment, being action of, lies against infant, 254.

TOWN COMMON, ejectment for, 271.

TRANSACTIONS with deceased persons, 825.

TRANSITORY ACTIONS. See VENUE.

local actions, 465, 475.

TREATY, lands reserved to Indians by, recoverable in ejectment, 228.
title under, 903.

TRESPASS on land insufficient to support ejectment, 80, 93, 178.
distinction between, and ejectment, 93, 178.
ejectment originally an action of, 1.
statutory new trial not granted in, 595.
cannot be substituted for ejectment, 93, n.
may be brought for land subject to public use, 134.
general issue in, 484.
is a local action, 465, 466, 475.
possession to sustain, 720, n.
common source of title, 808.
lies for interruption of an easement, 147.
for projecting eaves or gutters, 156.
between tenants in common, 157, 286.
actual ouster must be shown, 157, 286.
threatened commission of, may be restrained in equity, 173, 174, n. jurisdiction explained, 174, n. enjoined when it is a nuisance, 174, n.
all the plaintiffs must be competent to sue, 187.
guardian in socage may bring, 199.
judgment in res adjudicata in ejectment, 582.
only maintainable when possession is disturbed, 603.
trespass vi et armis for assault and battery, 649, n.
for injuries after verdict and before writ, 669.
action of, as assertion of ownership, 758.
to justify forcible entry, 94.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE, origin of, 88.
originally an action of trespass, 81, 83.
resemblance to ejectment, 82, 91.
no fictions employed, 81.
proof of disseizin not required, 82.
cutting or blazing a tree sufficient, 82.
introduction in South Carolina, 81.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE—continued.

- reasons for the change, 84, 85.
- abolished in South Carolina, 87.
- introduction in Alabama, 88.
- principles relating to ejectment applicable to, 88.
- mesne profits in action of, 83.
- statutory changes, 89.
- abolished in Alabama, 89.
- only action to try title in Texas, 91.
- proving title, 91.
- equitable title, 91.
- ejectment never adopted in that State, 91.
- indorsement of the writ, 91.
- general principles governing all the actions the same, 92.
- for street, by municipal corporation, 275.

TRESPASSER cannot show outstanding title, 58, 477, 718, 722.

- proof of prior possession sufficient against, 718.
- character of possession sufficient to recover against, 719, 720.
- rule as to joinder of, as defendants, 241.
- not entitled to notice to quit, 377.
- ejectment by vendor or vendee against, 820.
- not allowed for improvements, 694.

TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. See TRESPASS.TRIAL BY BATTLE ABOLISHED, 2, n.TRIAL OF TITLE in foreclosure, 179*a*.

- by arbitration, 179*b*.
- in condemnation proceedings, 177.
- in partition, 166, 167.
- in assumpsit, 176.
- in ejectment. See EJECTMENT IN REAL ACTIONS. See REAL ACTIONS.

TROVER, influence of practice in, upon ejectment, 11.TRUSTEE, ejectment by, 222.

- may recover in ejectment against cestui que trust, 222.
- heirs of, may bring ejectment, 205.
- action of, to construe will, 163.
- as defendant, 243.
- when not allowed for improvements, 694.
- succeeding trustee substituted, 222.
- pleading his title, 222, 449.

UNAUTHORIZED USE, ejectment for lands applied to, 135.UNCERTAIN TENANCIES, rule as to notice to quit, 381.

- constructively held to be tenancies from year to year, 381.

UNCERTAINTY IN PLEADINGS, must be reached by motion, 428.

- not by demurrer, 428.

- UNDIVIDED INTEREST, where entire interest is claimed, 454*b*. not recovered without amendment, 454*b*.
- UNMARKETABLE TITLE, may be rejected, 841. rule to determine, 841.
- UNITED STATES, ejectment against, 244-249.
petition of right against the crown in England, 244.
government cannot be sued, 244.
cannot be divested of property to which it has title, 244.
may consent to be sued, 245. cannot be sued indirectly, 245.
rule as to ejectment against officers and agents, 246, 247.
Supreme Court decisions, 246, 247.
Arlington case considered, 248, 249, 249*a*. jurisdiction through the instrumentality of the property or the agent, 249.
opposing cases in New York noticed, 249, n.
when vested with legal title bill in equity not maintainable against occupant, 171.
how divested of title, 784.
no limitations against, 758*a*, 784.
presumption of a grant, 784, 786-788.
courts, procedure in, 870-919.
title under, not determined by State laws, 890.
intervention by, 897.
- UNOCCUPIED LANDS, parties defendant in cases of, 234.
acts of trespass considered acts of possession, 234.
- UNOFFICIAL RECORDS, 828. copies not evidence, 828.
- UNSUCCESSFUL EJECTMENT, does not suspend statute, 748, n.
- USE AND OCCUPATION, action for, distinguished from mesne profits, 652.
- USQUE AD CÆLUM ET AD INFERNOS, 105, 115.
- UTILITY OF FICTIONS, 63*a*. views of Blackstone, 63*a*. of Professor Maine, 63*a*. of Mr. Adams, 63*a*.
- VARIANCE, rule in real actions, 3. See COMPLAINT.
under claim of fee simple, life estate not recoverable, 486.
nor fee tail, 486.
equitable title cannot be shown under complaint on legal title, 437.
avoidance of, by amendment, 187, 189, 240, 464.
from particulars of breaches, 464*b*.
- VAULTS, ejectment for, 107.
- VEIN, or lode, ejectment for, 115. recovery of, gives no right to surface improvements, 115.
- VENDOR AND VENDEE, 804-826.
ejectment between, 804.

VENDOR AND VENDEE—continued.

- nature of the relationship, 305, 315.
- not changed to landlord and tenant, 316.
- rules governing landlord and tenant not applicable, 316.
- right of possession remains in vendor, 304.
- vendee holds as licensee, 305, 394.
- vendee's possession not adverse, 305.
- not entitled to cut timber, 305.
- at least until purchase-money is paid, 305, 751.
- (1.) Remedies of vendor, election of, 307.
 - may sue for purchase-money, 307.
 - bring specific performance, 307.
 - or ejectment, 307.
 - ejectment in certain cases maintainable when covenant or specific performance cannot be brought, 306.
 - rule as to parties, 325.
 - waiver of forfeiture, 326.
- (2.) Nature of vendor's interest, in Georgia title remains in vendor until payment of purchase-money, 308.
 - rule in Texas, 308.
 - regarded as mortgage in Mississippi, 309.
 - in Alabama vendor is trustee for vendee, 309.
- (3.) Demand of possession and notice to quit, not generally necessary, 310, 394-396.
 - after default vendee's possession becomes tortious, 394.
 - immediate right of action against him, 394.
 - demand necessary in England, 394.
 - English rule adopted in Virginia, 394.
 - possession under void contract, 396.
- (4.) Rescission of contract, must be in toto, 311.
 - on bill to rescind, title offered at trial must be accepted, 311.
 - notice of rescission, 312.
- (5.) Tender of deed, objections to form of, must be stated, 313.
 - otherwise vendee is estopped, 313.
 - when tender not necessary, 314.
- (6.) Estoppel, vendee in default cannot dispute vendor's title, 317, 318.
 - basis of the estoppel, 317, 318.
- (7.) Vendee against vendor, in Georgia may bring ejectment after payment or tender, 319.
 - rule in Pennsylvania, 319.
 - general rule, 319.
 - vendee or vendor against trespasser, 320.
 - vendee may assert equitable rights, 322, 486.
 - rule as to, stated, 322.
 - may insist upon part performance and damages, 321.
 - asserting defective title must surrender possession, 323.
 - allowance for improvements in such cases, 323.

VENDOR AND VENDEE—continued.

must show title has failed, 324.

judgment against vendee not binding on vendor, 586.

VENUE—LOCAL AND TRANSITORY ACTIONS, actions for recovery of realty are local, 465.

must be brought in the county and State where the lands are situated, 465.

county and State must be disclosed, 467.

difference between local and transitory actions, 465, 470.

the distinction very ancient, 465.

illustrations, 465, n.

action to declare a deed a mortgage is local, 465, n.

so is action to compel conveyance, 465, n.

condemnation proceeding, 471.

so is action to restrain erection of a bridge, 465, n.

so is an action for nuisance, 475, n.

does not depend on difference between equitable and common law jurisdiction, 465.

rule is the same in real actions, 465.

also applies to mixed actions, 465.

lex loci rei sitæ, 467a.

ejectment a proceeding in rem, 249, 465.

residence of the parties need not be stated, 466.

distinction between actions local by nature and actions local by statute, 470.

(1.) Local actions not maintainable in foreign jurisdictions, 465, 467, 542.

no action maintainable for possession of lands in another county, 467.

no jurisdiction of local actions in foreign States, 467.

judgments in such cases nugatory, 467, 542.

(2.) Lands lying in several counties, 468.

the early practice, 468.

recovery extended to one county only, 468.

practice changed by statute, 468.

rule in Tennessee, 468.

(3.) Questions of venue, how raised, 469.

venue untrue on face of complaint, defendant may demur, 469.

objection available under general issue in Maine, 469.

venue must be proved in Tennessee, 469.

title papers considered sufficient proof, 469.

defendant cannot show that de jure the line of the county ought to be differently located, 469.

in Texas plea to jurisdiction too late after plea to the merits, 470.

(4.) Change of venue, 471–478.

great prejudice against the title not a ground for the change in forcible entry proceedings, 471.

fact that judge has given an opinion not sufficient ground, 471.

nor that the parties are influential citizens, 471.

VENUE—LOCAL AND TRANSITORY ACTIONS—continued.

- practice in Illinois, 471.
 - change of venue upon complying with statute a matter of right, 471.
 - terms may be imposed, 471.
 - practice in New Jersey, 472.
 - in England, 471.
 - exception to refusal to change venue not available in United States Supreme Court, 472.
 - reasons for change, 471.
 - (5.) Practice in New York, local actions cannot be adjourned to another county, 472.
 - must be tried in county where land lies, 472.
 - (6.) Changes in territorial limits of counties, 473.
 - effect of change in boundaries pending ejectment, 473.
 - venue should be altered to new county, 473.
 - power of the legislature to regulate the subject, 473.
 - rule different in chancery, 473.
 - practice in Maine and Wisconsin, 473.
 - venue changed by consent, 473.
 - (7.) Change in channel of stream, 474.
 - rule as to boundaries of counties and States, 474.
 - where change is gradual division line shifts with channel, 474.
 - rule as to violent or visible alteration, or "cut off," 474.
 - abandoned channel remains the boundary, 474.
 - (8.) Venue in Federal courts, in local actions, no jurisdiction attaches without the district, 475, 916.
 - trespass quare clausum fregit, not maintainable beyond district limits, 475.
 - action to abate nuisance is local, 475, n.
- VERBAL CLAIMS, do not effect an interruption of adverse possession, 745.
- VERBAL DISCLAIMER, 369. See DISCLAIMER.
- VERDICT, 238, 432, 496–505, 715. See DESCRIPTION.
- questions of fact to be tried by jury, 170, 496.
 - disinclination of the courts to adjudicate upon conflicting facts, 496.
 - defective allegations of possession cured by, 432, 505.
 - misjoinder cured by verdict, 505.
 - verdict for improvements, 715.
 - (1.) Requirements of verdict, general form usually prescribed by statute, 497.
 - setting aside verdict on questions of location, 497.
 - insufficiency of description favorite ground of attacking verdicts, 497.
 - verdict could relate only to lands described in the consent rule, 497.
 - limited to lands claimed in the declaration, 497.
 - must correspond with the evidence, 497.
 - must be rendered only for lands to which plaintiff proved title, 497.
 - verdict must comprehend the whole issue, 497.
 - substance of the issue must be found, 497, 498.
 - defective allegations of possession cured by, 432.

VERDICT—continued.

joint denial renders joint verdict proper, 238.

(2.) Liberally construed, 498, 501.

statute of jeofails extends to writs of right, 498.

illustrations, 498.

references in verdicts, 499.

certainity of verdict may be established by reference to deeds, diagrams, monuments, &c., 499.

verdict for "the land on which the defendant lives," held good, 499.

(3.) Sufficiency of verdict, 501, 502.

examples of verdicts considered sufficient, 500, 501.

"the old hedge row," certain enough for a boundary, 501.

"the farm as it stands in the writ," held good, 501.

verdicts considered insufficient, 502.

for "part of the premises in the declaration mentioned," too uncertain, 502.

"the middle of a stone wall," too indefinite a starting-point, 502.

condition in verdict reserving the right to remove improvements, 503.

(4.) Must usually specify nature of estate, 500.

failing to do so, may be treated as a nullity, 500.

in Illinois, jury failing to specify estate may be sent back, 500.

examples of sufficient and insufficient designation of estate, 500.

(5.) Between tenants in common, 504.

if verdict is special, actual ouster must be found, 283, 504.

ouster is a question of fact, 276, 277, 504.

finding of demand of possession and refusal not sufficient, 504.

VERMONT, town proprietors may recover in ejectment, 230.

tenant in common may oust intruder, 300.

mortgagee may bring ejectment, 333.

judgment in ejectment conclusive, 534.

injuries to premises allowed as damages, 668.

alienation pending suit, 187.

VIEW, what is, 6, n.

not granted unless absolutely necessary, 464a, n.

VIOLENCE, possession acquired by, not protected, 94, 94, n.VIRGINIA, real actions abolished, 79.

statutory ejectment retained, 79.

parties defendant in ejectment, 235.

demandant's authority to bring writ of right, 417.

oral pleading in writ of right not allowed, 427.

practice as to verdicts, 500.

rule as to notice to quit, 394.

VISIBLE OBJECTS, govern course and distance, 862.

VISIBLE AND TANGIBLE, thing sought to be recovered in ejectment must be, 97.

capable of livery of seizin, 97.

something upon which entry can be made, 97, 101.

capable of physical possession, 97.

of delivery by sheriff in execution, 97.

VOID DEED, not canceled as cloud, 154, n.

VOLUNTARY WASTE, defined, 362.

by tenant at will, 364.

VOUCHING OVER, explained, 6, n.

WAIVER of notice to quit, 411.

of forfeiture, 326, 371.

effect of acceptance of subsequently accruing rent, 371.

receipt of rent without knowledge of forfeiture is not, 371, n.

of defense of not guilty, 492.

WAR, suspends statute of limitations, 753a.

WARRANTOR, judgment when binding on, 537, n.

WARREN, not recoverable in ejectment, 148.

WASTE. See PROVISIONAL REMEDIES; INJUNCTION.

is a local action, 465, 542.

abuse or destructive use of property, 363.

tearing down partitions, 363.

test of, 363.

re-entry for, 363.

by tenant at will, 364.

construction of covenants against, 365.

voluntary waste, 362.

mortgagee liable for, 341.

non-interference in cases of, 624.

commission of, determines tenancy at will, 364, 384.

receiver appointed to prevent, 616, 621.

injunction granted to restrain, 622-624, 627, 628.

damages for, recoverable as mesne profits, 668.

practice not uniform, 668.

WATER, land under, recoverable in ejectment, 117, 119.

course, ejectment will not lie for diverting, 149.

mandatory injunction to restore, 149.

not recoverable eo nomine in ejectment, 149.

WEEKLY TENANCIES, notice to quit, 383a.

WEST VIRGINIA, real actions superseded in, 79.

statutory ejectment substituted, 79.

- WHARFAGE, right to collect not foundation of ejectment, 153.
right of, is incorporeal, 153.
right to, passes as an appurtenant, 102, n.
- WIDOW, cannot join with heirs in ejectment, 189.
ejectment against, in Pennsylvania, 256.
heirs must proceed under partition acts in that State, 256.
ejectment against, heirs admitted to defend, 256.
- WIFE, joinder of, with husband, 219, 220, 225. See MARRIED WOMEN;
HUSBAND AND WIFE.
may bring ejectment, 220.
- WILLFUL INJURY, damages for, 668, n., 668a.
- WILL, conveyance by heir before discovery of, 205.
probate of, reviewed in ejectment, 205, n.
probate conclusive as to personalty, 205, n.
equity will not set aside probate of, 205, n. tenant at, 384. See TENANT AT WILL.
foreign probate of, 467a.
ancient, as evidence, 818.
concealment of, effect of after probate, 838.
- WISCONSIN, pre-emptor of swamp lands may bring ejectment, 230.
grantee of tax deed may be made defendant in ejectment, 235.
mortgagee cannot bring ejectment, 332. complaint in ejectment must allege unlawful withholding of possession, 433.
must state that plaintiff is entitled to possession, 443.
change in boundary of county, 473.
ejectment must proceed in original county, 473.
statute of limitations must be pleaded, 432.
statutory new trials in, 602, 604.
injunction to restrain waste, 622.
executions against the person, 630.
injuries to freehold not recoverable in action for mesne profits, 668.
- WITNESSES, change of venue to convenience, 471.
- WORDS, not evidence of ouster, 93.
- WRIT, service of declaration resembled service of, 32.
of assistance, office of, 548.
- WRIT OF ENTRY. See REAL WRITS. most ancient of possessory actions, 70.
in Massachusetts, 70.
changes effected in, 70.
for land subject to an easement, 132, n.
will not lie for an easement, 146.
nor on an equitable estate, 70, 169.

WRIT OF ENTRY—continued.

- nor usually for estates less than a freehold, 183, 238.
- in Maine, 430.
- pleading in, 480a.
- requisites of declaration, 430.
- tenant pleading general issue estopped to deny possession, 479.
- amendment of, 436.
- changed by amendment to ejectment, 183.

WRIT OF ERROR, effect of pendency of, on statutory new trial, 605.

- to United States Supreme Court, 175.
- defendants may unite in, 175.
- may separately apply for stay, 175.
- furnish separate bonds to supersede execution of judgment, 175.

WRIT OF FORMEDON, 71.

- unsuited to try titles in America, 71.

WRIT OF POSSESSION, 40, 546-575.

- (1.) Origin and purpose of the writ, 40, 82, 546, 547.
 - the early practice, 23, 25, 546.
 - term not at first recoverable, 24.
 - importance and reason of the change, 25, 546, 547.
 - same in the various actions, 92, 548.
 - writ of assistance, 548.
- (2.) Habere facias seisinam, 548.
 - final writ in the system of real actions, 548.
 - awarded seizin of the lands recovered, 548.
 - effect of the execution of, 548.
 - distinction between, and habere facias possessionem, 510, 549.
- (3.) Habere facias possessionem, 23, 40, 82, 510, 546.
 - origin of the writ, 23, 546.
 - granted by analogy with equity procedure, 546.
 - allowed in trespass to try title, 82.
 - effect of the execution of the writ, 41, 510, 748.
 - plaintiff taking possession at his peril, 455, 554, 564.
- (4.) Peaceable possession without a writ, 549.
 - judgment in ejectment a protection against trespass, 549.
 - possession must be taken by consent of person holding, 549.
 - plaintiff may authorize sheriff, as his agent, to take possession, 549.
- (5.) Form and contents of the writ, 550, 551.
 - writ must follow the verdict, 550.
 - must conform to the judgment, 550.
 - describe the lands, 550.
 - be addressed to the sheriff of the county, 550.
 - usually no return day required, 551.
 - command to execute within a given time is directory, 551.

WRIT OF POSSESSION—continued.

execution of writ after return day, 551.

writ issued on behalf of heirs, 573.

(6.) Manner of executing the writ, 554, 555, 557, 559, 563.

officer must evict occupants, 555.

and all parties concluded by the judgment, 562.

defendant's family, servant and employees must be dispossessed, 558.

removal of wife under writ against husband, 559.

conflict of the cases, 559, 560.

personal property should be removed, 556, 557.

failure to remove does not invalidate execution of writ, 556, 557.

when execution considered complete, 556.

possession to be given of fixtures and improvements, 563, 684, 690.

of part of a house, 105, 155.

of coal mine, 109.

party wall, 158, 565.

plaintiff takes growing crops, 563, 683.

possession delivered subject to an easement, 571.

possession of inaccessible lands, 572.

(7.) Alias writ, 552.

when issued, 552.

may be granted before return day of the first writ, 552.

pluries writ, when allowed, 552, 556.

(8.) Officers' duties defined, 555-557, 561, 565-567.

marshal has no judicial powers, 566.

responsibility of, 158, 565.

may demand bond of indemnity, 565, 566.

burden upon officer to excuse non-execution of the writ, 561.

cannot receive and file affidavit to excuse non execution of the writ, 567.

(9.) Interference by the court, 564-566.

court may limit the plaintiff to particular lands, 564.

order or mandamus to officer to execute writ, 565.

particular persons may be excepted from the writ, 566.

when enforcement of writ will be stayed, 569.

(10.) Co-tenants, 570.

practice when undivided interest is recovered, 570.

plaintiff put into possession with defendant, 570.

(11.) Landlord and tenant, 569.

writ against landlord, 537, 569.

practice in Illinois, 569.

enforcement of writ stayed, 569.

WRIT OF RIGHT, 69. See REAL ACTIONS.

most important of the real writs, 69.

WRIT OF RIGHT—continued.

resorted to by the Saxons, 69.
not a remedy for incorporeal hereditaments, 69. authority to prosecute, 417.
declaration must allege seizin, 429.
judgment is final, 69, 509.
statute of jeofails extended to, 498.

WRITTEN INSTRUMENT, color of title must be, 762, 769.
parol evidence to vary, 824.

WRITTEN PLEADINGS, required in real actions, 427.

WRONG-DOER, any possession good against, 717, 718.

YEAR PRECEDING, evidence of rent of, 674.

YEAR TO YEAR, tenancies from, rule as to notice to quit, 382. reasonable notice, 383.

WHOLE NO. OF PAGES, 948.

3 22EST2 53 00H 7 BA

0017

1

18

DL ASI CRT
A treatise on the trial of tit
Stanford Law Library

3 6105 044 267 875